Mrs. Tinnell holds the B.S. and M.S. degrees from Radford College. She is the wife of a member of the natural sciences department, Mr.

Wayne H. Tinnell. Mrs. Tinnell said that she has had a favorable impression of both the faculty and the students. She has been out of teaching for a year during which time she had a baby and kept house. She doesn't anticipate any problems. She stated that she "feels at home at Longwood and is impressed with the caliber of the students." She was particularly impressed with the freshman orientation.

A Social Committee On Student Interest Appears On Campus

People all across the United States whether they reside in one of our large metropolitan areas or on one of the back roads of Prince Edward County, whether they have graduated to the "degenerate" over 30 age bracket or have been drawn into the ranks of the "effeminate corps of emasculated intellectuals" — are in the midst of experiencing a rude awakening. The celebrated vision of an "America the Beautiful" is being harshly replaced with the more realistic pictures of a nation pervaded with eye sores and gross human conditions.

The important thing is not, however, that an increasing number of people are reluctantly becoming aware of the current maladies, but that concerned individuals and groups are seeking constructive means of preserving and, in some cases reviving the beauty of America that has been traditionally revered.

A newly formed organization, comprised of students from Longwood and Hampden-Sydney have addressed themselves to specific problems in the Farmville and surrounding areas.

The Student Social Interest Action Committee has chosen to promote Community projects for the betterment of housing, public education, recreation, and for increasing voter registration.

Under the leadership of Danny Roberts, chairman of the committee, the campaign to increase voter registration in Prince Edward County has already gotten underway. Small groups of members have moved out into the community to find qualified voters who have not registered and to encourage these individuals to do so.

Completing the committee's slate of officers are "Randy Laird, Coordinator from Hampden-Sydney, Sue Wilkes, coordinator from Longwood, Mary Berlin, Secretary, Cookie Scott, Treasurer, and Mrs. Mary Ernouf and Dr. Clawer, Sponsors.

This enthusiastic group has established itself with worthy goals that it hopes will continue to arouse student interest and support. Working with the county's Human Relations Council, the Student Social Interest Action Committee hopes in the future to set up a tutoring system in the public schools, to set up a recreational program that community children can participate in each week and to assist in registering and cleaning up before it arrives throughout the community.

Warning Given To Students On Drug Usage On Campus

Dr. Willett held his first press conference of the 1970-71 school year on October 1 in the Gold Room. He welcomed a full crowd, explaining to new people that personalities are not involved in such conferences.

A great deal of the period was spent discussing narcotics. Dr. Willett was very firm on this stand about drugs. If at any time, there is suspicion of narcotics present in a girl's room, Dr. Willett or Dr. Blackwell can and will authorize a search of that room. There need be no advance warning of such a search, and the resident of the room need not be present. Using narcotics is a federal offense. The courts have given the college the privilege of handling its own cases. The school Judicial Board approaches all areas with the assumption that a student is innocent. In a suspension case, there is an automatic review by a faculty and student committee. A student may appeal her case.

When asked if narcotics was much of a problem at Longwood, Dr. Willett stated that there has been one case this year; the girl was suspended, but on the college's recommendation she was not prosecuted. Dr. Willett indicated that he is stressing this information as a warning.

On the question of prior notice to a demonstration, Dr. Willett replied that any event on campus must be registered on the college calendar and arrangement for facilities must be made. No disruptive event will be tolerated.

Dr. Land, director of the new campus school, has asked that student observers dress as they would for teaching. Pants suits are acceptable, if they are suitable for teachers.

Longwood Is Charged With Discrimination By H.E.W.

Is Longwood College in violation of the Civil Rights Act?

The Department of Health Education and Welfare in its proposed statewide college desegregation plan has attempted to prove that Longwood College is in violation of the Civil Rights Act. The irritated group, led by Dr. Eloise Severinson, the regional director of the Department of Health Education and Welfare has charged Longwood on three accounts.

The first issue deals with the fact that HEW has accused Longwood of not soliciting more applications from Negro students. Dr. Willett, the college president, says, however, "that the college is doing a number of things in regard to the recruiting of Negro students. Listed are: 1. the SCA and other conventions that are held every summer where Negroes all over the state come to Longwood, 2. recruiters from Longwood, including the current Negro students, meet with prospective black applicants who are interested in Longwood, 3. Dr. Willett and the Deans attempt to recruit Negro students by talking with guidance counselors about Longwood, 4. There is at this time a definite plan to bring additional guidance counselors to the school in order to show them the facilities and answer any questions.

HEW, however, is not satisfied with Longwood's activities in recruiting black students. The department seemed to overlook the fact that this is Prince Edward County has asked the college to lower admissions standards for the black student. Dr. Willett, on the other hand, is very adamant in saying that at Longwood "there will be only one standard of admission for both whites and blacks alike."

The second area of contention is over the use of placement facilities. HEW advocates that Longwood should require from any recruiting organization a record on file that proves that they are an equal opportunity employer. According to Dr. Willett, Longwood as a state agency can't deny any recruiting group. In answer to HEW then, President Willett, is not going to exclude any authorized group from recruiting on campus.

The third area of dissension and perhaps the most important is over the question of whether or not HEW has any legal jurisdiction over any activity of what is known as the Longwood College Foundation.

The foundation, which has no official connection with the college was begun in 1959, the same year the local public schools were closed and Prince Edward Academy was opened. The foundation was created mainly to support the college and to help in attracting the best faculty possible. In order to achieve this goal, the foundation, a private, nonprofit, chartered organization, was set up to provide scholarships in the name of faculty children. In further answering HEW accusations, Dr. Willett has pointed out that foundation grants are not restricted to faculty children alone, for it makes scholarship money available for needy blacks, as well as for white Longwood students. It should also be noted that the scholarships have not been limited only to Prince Edward Academy, but have helped elsewhere.

HEW then in its race across the state has attempted to find Longwood in violation of the Civil Rights Act. But, in demanding Longwood to explain the foundation's role, lower the admission for blacks, and use discriminatory practices herself, HEW is going to find it virtually impossible to find Longwood violating any act. In spite of Dr. Severinson's activities, Longwood will still be eligible to receive the approximate $100,000 a year in federal funds.

A Spirit Hits LC

Oktoberfest Nears

Geist Needs YOU

Oktoberfest is coming soon and Geist has been hard at work putting this year's festival together. Every Geist member is in charge of the special aspect of the weekend's activities. Sally Gill is this year's Chairman of Oktoberfest. The committees working on this year's festival are many and varied; they include: Usherettes - Andee Maddox; Clowns - Casey Wilkes; Concert - Joanne May; Publicity - Vicki Eyer; Judges - Nona Davis; Midway - Connie Williams; Parade - Jenene Wolf; Red and White skit advisors - Bonnie Bowers and Ginny Dowson, and Green and White skit advisors - Betty Johnson and Mary Lu Sowers. Helping with the midway - Brenda Southworth.

This weekend can be a lot of fun and we know it certainly will be, but it takes more than just these 13 people to make it a success. Everyone is requested to do their share by supporting the committees of Geist. Let's all combine our red and green spirit to make a great blue and white weekend.

Oktoberfest without Clowns?

LTJG Nikki L. Rosenthal, the Navy's Woman Officer Representative for this area, will be on campus October 20.

LTJG Rosenthal will have a display table in the snack bar. She will be available to answer questions and discuss the Woman Officer Program with interested students.

Rotunda Staff Finds Survival Improbable

In last week's issue of the Rotunda, there was an obviously overlooked "plea" for more help. Last Sunday night for over two hours there were three people present to do all the work. There is no way to describe the feeling of having an entire paper to lay out and at least four hours work to do except very, very weary - weary of lots of work and little praise and little help and lots of criticism.

Take us into consideration when you complain that some stories are dull and unimaginative, or that sentences aren't worded exactly right or that the grammar is inaccurate. One reason for this is that the same person has to write two and sometimes three stories, type them, and then write the headlines. If you have a complaint, gripe, or preferably, a suggestion then tell us. How can we possibly improve the paper if we don't get some opinions from other besides ourselves? We, more than anyone, know that the paper is not perfect, and that there are always improvements that could have been made on each paper. Each week we check over the paper for mistakes and think "Why didn't I word that differently?", or "I should have added this or that." But at the time the stories were written all we could see was blank spaces where stories should have been and a room that should have had more people in it.

We also compare our paper to those of other colleges, some are better and some worse. Increasingly, in schools which have journalism departments, the editors receive salaries for the work they do, and in many colleges students receive not money, but credits, which is sometimes more important than money. But no matter what basis a newspaper is handled under, each shares the problems of writing interesting stories, and keeping up with the news day after day, a problem not shared by most other types of publications.

On a newspaper, just like everything else, there has to be organization. On a newspaper this means assigning stories and newbeats, assigning some to draw pictures, some to take pictures, some to type, some to write headlines. What a relief, and how much easier it would be if each person did his job without delays, excuses or absences. But no matter what basis the sun rises and sets, we have a fair representation of each of the above.

The Rotunda is sadly understaffed, and the plain truth, with no sugar coating, or sickening sweetness, is that this is just not our paper alone. It belongs to everyone in this college. And so we keep on working, trying to put out a decent paper, and it is dumbly accepted as a regular part of each week, just like the schedule of events or the menu. But the thought keeps running through our heads, "How loudly would they yell if there were no Rotunda at all?" We hope we're never forced to find out.

BATH HOUSE
CLOSES

Bedford Building hosts an excellent showing of current art trends.

Art Exhibit In Bedford Continuing Until Nov. 1

At the Bedford Building an exhibition of art works by the Longwood Art Department is being shown. A special open house was given Sunday, Oct. 11, to introduce the local patrons of the arts to the college art faculty and to their works. Various styles were featured, running from modern wild-screens to more conventional wood-cuts. The emphasis however was on the modern, with acrylics replacing the conventional oil media and with a blending of what a few years ago would have been called poster art with the highly imaginative techniques of the annual Greenwich Village art show. There are a few examples of stereo-spatial art, though there were no kinetic displays.

Most conventional and yet perhaps most pleasing were the small block prints by Miss Annie Lee Ross, who also displayed a larger woodcut "Owlets," of such simple appeal and considerable charm. Featured by Paul Rouillard was "Jesus Murdered," an oil suggesting the treatment Time magazine would have given the death of Jesus, and Homer L. Springer's "Seated Figure" done in acrylics and ink provided a vivid and sensually attractive dash of color to the otherwise fairly monotone exhibit. Springer's work is that peculiar style which when imitated by a good commercial art student can come deceptively close to the original, but can never keep one's attention because without considerable talent being exercised in their use, bright colors can never be more than comic strip art. Mr. Springer's works, though bright and simple, have a balance that draws the viewer back. Miss Janice Lemon's "Fauvism," an epic work consisting of images of Venus De Milo against a mystic sky, was probably the most imaginative work shown and has much in common with psychedelic art. It is difficult to evaluate such work fairly without having had considerable experience with nonstandard art forms; I will only say that I was drawn back to it. Miss Barbara Bishop displayed various works among which was "Near Buckingham," a mixed media drawing which aroused much curiosity among visitors and is reminiscent of works shown at the Schwartz gallery in Brooklyn. All in all, the exhibit displayed a much wider variety of talent and styles than I had expected; apparently Longwood is not as provincial as some would have you believe.

Among the visitors was Gerard Maurice Doyon, Ph.D., Professor of Art History and Chairman of the Art Department and Director of the Dupont Gallery, of Washington and Lee University.

Weekend Open House At LC Stirs Up Liberalization Question

In recent years at Hampden-Sydney and Longwood there has been an increasing demand for liberalization of the social rules, a demand gaining its force from the desire of the overwhelming majority of students for such liberalization and from the fact that liberal social rules have become usual in most schools in the country. Hampden-Sydney and Longwood, being conservative schools in the most rural part of a conservative state, have of course lagged behind in adopting social rules that inferior schools such as Harvard and Yale have had in practice for a long time. The question has now arisen as to whether there should be open dorms at Longwood on weekend afternoons. This question, however, is not an isolated one but rather a part of the more general question of whether liberalization of social rules as a whole is to be allowed here, what can be said for and against such liberalization?

When I first attended H-SC six years ago, there were rules that Longwood students could not drink at H-SC, and that Longwood students could not enter a Hampden-Sydney student's dorm room. The purpose of the first rule was to prevent young ladies from drinking, considered unladylike conduct. The result was that they drank regardless, cursed those who had made the rule, and were occasionally caught and made examples of. The purpose of the second rule was to prevent the promiscuity which might arise if girls and their dates were allowed in the same bedroom. The result was simply that students and their dates drove to High Bridge, the orchard, the field, and other well known places and proceeded to do exactly what they wanted despite the rule. Unfortunately, while the students who wished to engage in immorality were not the least bit hampered by the rule, those who wanted to listen to music or simply talk in comfort and privacy were kept from doing so. The point is that with the degree of freedom allowed by automobiles, and with the desire of most students to take part in a certain kind of behavior, drinking for example, there is little to be gained by trying to legislate morality.

This argument was being made my freshman year at H-SC, and the administration replied that were students allowed to drink and visit in the dorms, the character and reputation of Hampden-Sydney would be destroyed. Today girls have grudgingly been admitted to dorm rooms and allowed to drink, yet Hampden-Sydney has not vanished in a cloud of brimstone nor become anymore a den of iniquity than it was.

Another argument made against liberalization in general, and open dorms in particular, is that it is "not proper" for young people to drink, be alone together, smoke, breathe, and so on. A prominent theologian at Hampden-Sydney once said that he simply couldn't imagine why any young man would want to entertain a young lady in his bedroom. The prominent the-

The Problem Of Awareness

Last year students rallied for peace, for a total evacuation of military troops in Vietnam, for an end to the draft, for mother goose and apple pie. And yet many of the students weren't aware of what the real issues were. In short they were just victims of the mass mob. Students were used, duped by those who knew how to gather and keep a crowd, those who were experts at creating havoc. It is evident now, that young people as a whole were not aware of the political hierarchy that organized the various rallies. With supreme indignation they marched and picketed, often in total ignorance of the prevailing issues. This problem can be alleviated, it is not insurmountable. For students here, the Longwood campus is an excellent start. For example, Dr. Helms the Republican candidate for the 4th district has spoken several times on campus and the attendance has been very sparse. Dr. Helms is trying to revamp the current administration, and few are interested. Carrying this idea a little further, Mr. Rogsdale his independent opponent spoke stating the major issues of his personal campaign and again the student response was poor. The argument, that many of Longwood students are not old enough to vote, and are therefore not interested in what goes on over "on the hill" is partly valid. But, it should be noted that many of these students were on Constitution Avenue last year with placards, protesting and being very democratic. Don't be a victimized student this year, even if you can't vote, be aware of the issues and know for sure what the surging crowds are advocating.

the rest of the student body would like to know.

This is a challenge to the honoraries to stand up and make themselves known to the student body.

Faulty Heating

To the Editor,

Why is it that nothing in the dorms (or anywhere else) works? Or, if something does work, why does it when you don't want it? My main gripe is in the fabulous heating system we have been blessed with. About two weeks ago workmen came around and took the radiators apart. Now that really excited us. The remembrance of last year's week without heat is still vivid. So we thought, "Aha! we will have heat this year?" However, the day came and went and the radiators were still spread throughout the room. The next day my roommate and I were sitting in the room talking when we were interrupted by a strange noise. We went to our suitcases' room and were greeted by a radiator valve merrily spurting rusty water all over the room. In a few minutes time we had a really nice puddle. Especially if you are crazy about the Dismal Swamp. The janitor and plumber were very nice and cleaned up quickly. But I shudder to think what the suite would have looked had all four of us been in class at the time. The water would have continued to fill the suite until it meandered into the hall and cascaded down the stairs. Probably somebody would have looked for the source before the possibility of drowning was imminent. But I wouldn't count on it. After that little episode our radiators were reassembled and we got heat. And we still have heat. As a matter of fact, we can't get rid of the heat. It's nice to have heat when it's cold, but who needs heat in 90 degree weather?

There are several other things around here which work almost as well as our radiators. The televisions are doing well if they bring in one channel. Try turning on a light. How many times do they go "bip" and leave you in total darkness? It's a groovy place, Longwood.

Pieter Laudon

The Liberalization Question

clodgion had probably never had to park at High Bridge in twenty degree weather because he had no other place to go after the movie ended. Yet if students are not allowed to use their dorm rooms for entertaining their dates, they will most certainly go parking which is hardly more "proper" though perhaps less conspicuous. Nobody ever came in at nine-thirty because the movie had ended. And what is proper? My grandparents thought that smoking was terrible and uncouth; my parents do it as a matter of course. A few years ago Hampden-Sydney thought of open dorms were improper and immoral; this year they are not. Might not the same be true at Longwood? Last year it was immoral at Hampden-Sydney to have girls in your dorm room after nine, thought it was moral until nine. As a result at nine the tape deck was turned off and we were told, this year you don't have to park.

If open dorms were some radical new concept untested and perhaps dangerous, it would probably be wise not to allow them to be initiated at Longwood until the idea had been tested elsewhere. The same is true of other changes of policy perhaps. Yet just as legal drinking and legal dorm visitation at Hampden-Sydney were not unheard of new departures, so open dorms at Longwood are not. Open dorms are the rule at many of the country's leading institutions. They have been around for many years now with no noticeable deteriorations in morals resulting.

Recent years have seen rapid changes in social rules at the two institutions, culminating in the new rules at Longwood allowing students to check out for unspecified destinations. The same is true on the walls, the schools are going to have a modern set of social rules within the next few years. Why must there be such agony involved in adjusting to the present, and why can't open dorms just be initiated now and forgotten?

Letters To The Editor

Magestic Powers Of Chi

To the Editor:

Since Chi has finally walked, I think it may be time for some of the meanings of Chi to be brought to light. Chi is supposed to represent leadership, scholarship, integrity and spirit.

It has come to my attention, however, that several orientation workers have given Chi a new and very unique meaning. I have noticed that freshmen, as usual, have been cautiously avoiding to step on the Chi symbols that have been placed on sidewalks around the campus. This process is not uncommon and has been passed down through the classes in genuine Longwood tradition. I found the reasoning behind this tradition was being explained in a slightly different way to the present freshman than it was explained to me as a freshman. They were told that if one stepped on a Chi symbol, she would become (of all things) pregnant!

I think this ludicrous notion of Chi and its meaning should strongly be refuted and the ideals associated with Chi be reaffirmed to the freshmen as well as to the orientation workers who gave this false and ridiculous power to Chi.

Lynda VanHorn

The Voice Of Academic Affairs

Longwood does have an Academic Affairs Committee and it seems to be a good time to make the comm. and its functions more known to the students here on campus.

The committee was formed in 1965 as a committee under Legislative Board with the purpose of bettering the relationship among the student body, the faculty and the administration in order to create a more academic atmosphere at Longwood. A few of the undertakings of this committee have been recognizing worthy faculty members, panel discussions of interesting topics with the faculty serving as members of the panels, investigating such ideas as the ten-day period before exams and the pass-fail system, and looking into the possibilities for bringing certain honor societies on this campus such as Alpha Lambda Delta. Also the committee is responsible for sending out the course evaluations which serve to keep the teaching standards as high as possible on our campus. The evaluations are sent out twice a year—before first semester exams and before second semester ends.

At this time the committee is presently in investigating a new method of offering seminars for credits and making out a course evaluation which could be useful in evaluating physical education classes.

In answer to the editorial in the paper on October 8, 1970, one of the committee's objectives is to evaluate specific courses in order to promote improved instruction and in order to increase student response. Thus we are truly interested in legitimate student complaints about faculty and do follow up these complaints with the hope of bringing about worthwhile improvements. A student can bring any complaint to any committee member and it will remain confidential to the comm. and our advisor.

Since we are here for an education, students should have a say in the procedures and instructional methods employed by our faculty with the results being the best education obtained that is possible on this campus. Students should be free to explore the facts and situations thus gaining the most from their learning experiences. When this freedom of actual learning is hindered by instructional procedures and method then the student has the right to complain and have something done about it. Our committee is here for the students to protect this academic atmosphere thus feel free to contact us.

In the future I will try and keep the students aware of our committee and what we are doing.

The committee is composed of the following members: Freda Lunsford, Chairman; Debbie Hyatt, Legislative Board Representative; Martha Marchese, and Becky Cole.

Hopeless Honoraries

Dear Editor,

What is the matter with the Honoraries at Longwood? How is it possible that some Honoraries can have as few as two members on campus and some never have meetings?

I do not think that this speaks very highly of the College. Something should be done to make our academic societies more active.

As a freshman, I have heard much about Geist but surely the other honoraries should be equally well known. Each honor society has two representatives to the Honors Council but when the clubs do not hold meetings of what use is the Honors Council.

It has been pointed out that lack of organization is a problem. Officers are elected, the honor of being in the honor society is put on your record, and that's the extent of it. Lack of organization can surely be no excuse for young women who have made it all the way to college. Or, if it is an excuse then it is an awfully poor one.

The Honors Council which represents all of the honoraries has been chosen to be more active than the honoraries themselves, excluding Geist. One member of an honorary when asked, "What do they do?" replies with "Well, what are they supposed to do? It is time that the honoraries found out, and when they do,

Black And The American Dream

By ETHEL REITER

"Both races as human beings have the obligation, the responsibility, of helping to correct America's human problems. . . In our mutual sincerity we might be able to show a road to the salvation of America's very soul."

— Malcolm X, shortly before his assassination, 1965

While America encounters the Vietnam War, student revolution, inflation, crime, escalation, the drug crisis, the Women's Liberation Movement, and ecumenism, the South still is the scene of the struggle between the races. More than a century after the Civil War and 116 years after the Supreme Court's School desegregation ruling, the black man has not achieved equality or justice in the South. Integration is a disgusting and repulsive concept, and thus, America is a socially diseased nation. The racial problem is our nation's biggest problem and its greatest shame. With a large-scale solution appearing improbable, the United States faces chaos and repression.

In our political, educational, economic and social systems racism is widespread and cancerous. What causes this racism? Fear, ignorance, and resentment. The white man fails to understand or try to understand the black man's struggle and demands. Middle class white America condemns black crime. What they fail to see though is the desperate poverty and social chaos that causes this crime. Black militancy and violent rhetoric ("get whitey" and "kill the pigs") are also opposed to the white man's beliefs. The black man, however, has lived a century of inferiority and injustice where peaceable methods are utterly hopeless. Black violence, as in most militant protest movements, is the work of a minority. Most blacks realize that militancy ultimately hurts the cause. Blacks desire the better things in life. The lustrous white middle class Americans have enjoyed for years and now take for granted. Blacks also have visions of the American Dream.

The black man wants his humanity. The only obstacle to this achievement is white oppression. If the South fails to recognize the black man's equality and role then it ignores America's original purpose and promise. In the face of continuing oppression the black man's role must then be to fight for his rightful citizenship and American heritage.

Hockey Team Wins Shows Teamwork Defeats ODU

ODU provided some tough competition for LC but our girls showed some spirit and skill and came out on top.

Spirited Competition Seen In Intramurals

Intramural Hockey has been very successful so far. Despite a few forfeited games, there has been some highly spirited competition. The tournament is based on double elimination. Even though a team may be in the loser's bracket they still have a chance to win. A few of the final games scheduled in the loser's column are Wheeler vs. Delta Zeta on October 13 at 5:00 on Iler, and Sigma Sigma vs. Alpha Phi on Barlow.

Swimmers Practice Prepare For Meets Encourage Support

By the end of this month the Longwood Swimming Team will be ready to enter their first meet with Westhampton. For the past few weeks their coach, Miss Bush, has been working the team hard all week. The team looks good and as one member put it, "They have a lot of potential and are trying real hard."

Few people know what happens at College swimming meets but with the competition that is developing, it is hoped that students will attend and support the team. The order of events in the meet will be as follows:

200 yd. Medley Relay
200 yd. Freestyle
50 yd. Freestyle
50 yd. Backstroke
50 yd. Breaststroke
100 yd. Individual Medley

Diving
50 yd. Butterfly
100 yd. Freestyle
100 yd. Backstroke
200 yd. Freestyle Relay
100 yd. Breaststroke

With the skill and spirit the Longwood College Swim Team has, they are sure, to come out winning.

Gymnastic Tryouts To Be Held Soon Meets Scheduled

The Varsity Gymnastics Team will hold tryouts on November 2. The coach, Miss Fath, has scheduled meets home and away with North Carolina and Virginia colleges. The meets will start in January. Until then practices are open for all students who are interested. This year competition will include routines on the horse, the uneven parallel bars, the balance beam, tumbling, and floor exercises. The trampoline is a new equipment addition to the Physical Education Department but will not be used in competition if other schools are not equipped.

In the winner's bracket, Alpha Gamma Delta plays the winner of Alpha Delta Phi vs. Curry on October 13 at 4:00 on Iler. Also in the winner's column North Cunningham plays the winner of Main Cunningham vs. Frazier. On October 15 at 4:00 on Iler the final game for the winner's bracket will be played. Come out and support your dorm or sorority and help them win.

Tidewater Team Plays Top English Players

The 1970 hockey season will be highlighted by a visit from the English Touring Team. They will play a match with a selected Tidewater Association Team on Wednesday, October 18, at Westhampton College. There will be an opening ceremony at 3:15 followed by the game at 3:30. Tickets may be bought from Miss Diane Davis in the Physical Education Department. Transportation will be provided by the school. There is a chance that some of our girls will be playing. The team chosen will be a combination of college and club players.

An added event in the season will be the Southeast Tournament in Townsend, Maryland on November 21 and 22. The best college teams and club teams will compete. The college teams will be chosen in a College Tournament at Old Dominion on November 6 and 7. The competition promises the games to be very exciting.

We usually came out ahead in "Chickenlights."

The fans who patiently waited were well rewarded Saturday afternoon. Although the game was scheduled for 2:00, the Old Dominion Team did not arrive until 3:00. The delay served only to heighten the enthusiasm of the Longwood Team, as they took the first game 2-0 and the second game 5-0.

Control was the key to both games. During the first game ODU seldom moved the ball to the striking circle. Whereas Longwood controlled the ball constantly in their attacking end of the field. The LC forward line pushed hard the whole first half, wearing down ODU's defense with Patti Coogan's hard shot into the goal, giving LC its first point.

The second goal came from Janet Ford during the second half. It was just a little push past the goalie to give LC added protection and with the defense backing up the good stickwork found on the forward line, ODU was kept scoreless.

The second team simply ran over ODU. Very seldom did ODU get the ball past their attacking 25 yard line. Longwood, however, ran rampant scoring four goals in the first half. Long hard shots and short passes in the goal area completely wrecked ODU's defense. Scoring twice in the first half was Barbara Chridlin. One point went to Brenda Price and the other went to Lucy Sale. Lucy also scored in the second half.

Monday, LC met VCU at 3:00 for another hard fought game. With the strong defensive units found in both games and a scrappy forward line both teams are on their way to successful seasons.

Physical Education Dept. Gets Five New Faces

Longwood College has five new faculty members in the Health and Physical Education Department. The new members are Miss Jean Smith, Miss Sara Smith, Miss Pamela Oliver, Miss Sandra Gustafson, and Miss Diane Davis. Miss Gustafson attended the University of North Carolina in Greensboro. There she obtained her B.S. and M.A. degrees. Miss Gustafson later studied at the Martha Graham School of Contemporary Dance in New York and the Ethel Butler School of Dance in Washington, D.C. She came to Longwood after teaching at Randolph-Macon Womens College and Towson State College.

Miss Jean Smith is a native of South Carolina. She holds the B.S. degree from East Carolina University and her Master's degree from Western Carolina University. She taught as Erskin College in South Carolina and is now the Longwood varsity basketball coach.

Miss Pamela Oliver holds the M.S. degree from the University of Tennessee. She has taught at Madison College in Harrisonburg. She is now Longwood's junior varsity basketball coach.

Miss Sarah Smith teaches archery here at Longwood. She has received the A.B. degree from Duke University and the M.S. degree from Indiana University.

Miss Diane Davis is a native of Annandale, Virginia. She was graduated from Longwood College and holds the M.S. degree from the University of Massachusetts. Miss Davis is now the coach of Longwood's varsity hockey team. About the college, Miss Davis says, "Longwood is a lot bigger than when I went here and they have made a great many changes."

There's been a change in the Athletic Association rules concerning participation in intramural sports. You may play for your dorm or for a sorority. Any extra players will be put in a pot and the names will be drawn to be put on a team that is short of players. This rule change will take effect starting with the volleyball season.

'Anne Of The Thousand Days' Rated Movie For Everyone

"Anne of the Thousand Days" is the latest of the English history movies that began with "Becket" and includes "A Man for All Seasons" and "A Lion in Winter." Each of the movies follows a predetermined plot, understandably so those movie-goers who know their history will know the movies' outcomes.

"Anne of the Thousand Days" portrays the doomed queen of Henry VIII in a sympathetic light. She is presented as a victim of the king's desire who had his love when she remained aloof, but lost it when she began to love him in return. It is interesting to note that in this movie, Anne is a clever, alert, and rather intelligent young woman, whereas most accounts of her show her to have been a typically unconcerned, unprincipled lady-in-waiting.

The Canadian actors, Genevieve Belfond, made a refreshing performance as Anne Boleyn. It was definitely her movie when her portrayal of Anne is compared with Richard Burton's role as Henry VIII. His acting was superb, as usual, but he also played his usual Tudor king act — which he and his audience should have "down pat" by now. Belfond's scene in the tower was far the best scene in the movie as well as the most moving.

"Anne of the Thousand Days" is worth seeing for those lovers of English history. For those who just like a well-done movie with a good story, there's a little education on the side. The movie is an interesting one — if just for its slant toward Anne Boleyn's point of view.

Preparations for Goodbye Charlie, continue as Play date approaches.

Reincarnation Of A Playboy Seen In "Goodbye Charlie"

When an amorous playboy is shot by a jealous husband and is then reincarnated as a luscious blonde, we have the setting for George Axelrod's whimsical comedy, "Goodbye Charlie," which will be presented October 22, 23, and 24 in Jarman Auditorium.

Under the talented direction of Mr. Harvey Sweldeman, the tale of Charlie's struggle to overcome his masculine bias, his scheme to blackmail former mistresses by posing as his own wife, and his unusual relationship with his best friend, takes shape as one of Longwood's most clever productions.

Miss Belina Brugh, a fine talent and veteran of Longwood's stage, takes the lead as Charlie. Charlie's best friend, George, will be portrayed by Brad White of Hampden-Sydney. Supporting roles include Darcy Morrison as the sexy, but not too bright, Rusty; William Bush as Mr. Shriver; I. B. Dent as Irving; Victor Augustine as Greg Morris; and Julie Sherrod as Frankie Saltzman.

The major problem of Ten Years After has been to record an album that reproduced the impact of their live performances. In Ssssh, Ten Years After has attempted to put together an album that compensates for the lack of physical and visual experiences presented by an album by adding extra sounds to the basic instrumentation. They've come a long way from their Stonedhenge album of 1967.

Ten Years After's musical genre could be basically classed as blues since it deals most frequently with topics associated with the blues sound. Two timing women, unreciprocated love, and general loneliness, Ten Years After has taken the blues rhythm and accentuated it with a heavy pulsing bass and clearly defined the lyric with a guitar lead that follows the singer's voice. Blues purists may find these additions and innovations an outrage but it has created a sound that does not become as monotonous as the basic blues. Ten Years After boasts a very competent instrumental section that allow the freaky crackling vocals of Alvin Lee to ranch and rheum freely.

The outstanding cut on the album is "Good Morning Little Schoolgirl" a blues classic, and the only cut on the album not written by Lee. Its theme deals primarily with sneaking into a girl's room and making love to her. Lee's guitar accentuates every leering lyric of the song. Ten Years After's to a tight sound vocally and instrumentally and Ssssh is both innovating and competent.

H-SC Frats Gain Freedom With Equal Female Visitation

A new amendment to Article II of the Interfraternity Council Constitution has been approved by the Executive Committee of the Faculty at Hampden-Sydney. The amendment, approved on September 23, 1970, will permit the residents of fraternity houses to enjoy the same privilege regarding female visitors as the dormitories now have. Phil Grabbil, president of IFC, stated that this amendment will add much freedom to fraternity life, but also bring about a greater responsibility to the fraternity system. Longwood Ladies should note this change in policy and respect its terms.

The following are the rules governing female visitation in fraternities houses. Lady guests may be admitted to fraternities only at the times designated below:

Social Area
9:00 a.m. — 1:30 a.m.	Fri.-Sat.
9:00 a.m. — 12:00 Midnight	Sun.
9:00 a.m. — 11:00 p.m.	Mon.-Thur.

Entire House (This privilege does not apply to freshmen. Also, only students who are residents of the fraternity house may exercise this privilege. A resident may entertain guests in his own room provided he is present and is acting as host.)

Social Area
12:00 Noon — 1:30 a.m.	Fri.-Sat.
12:00 Noon — 12:00 Midnight	Sun.

On other occasions specifically approved by the Dean of Students, ladies may be admitted within hours for that weekend or weekday, Section 2.

The privilege of visitation by ladies beyond the social area shall be extended to a fraternity following its acceptance of the rule and its compliance with IFC regulations, Section 3. Penalties (to be enforced by the IFC Judiciary Committee).

a. First offense: withdrawal of the privilege of female visitation for the remainder of the semester in which the infraction occurred plus the entire next semester. A student is considered to have received penalty A after the first offense. If a second violation occurs during the period in which the penalty is in effect, then the first offense stays on record, but the penalty of suspension is lifted for the second offense.

b. Second offense (other than that as described in (a) above): withdrawal of the privilege of female visitation for the remainder of the student's entire career at Hampden-Sydney. A student receiving this penalty is considered to have received Penalty B.

c. Third offense: suspension from the college, (Penalty D) Section 4. The fraternity as a whole, as well as individuals, will be held liable for any infractions of these rules and will be subject to punishment by the IFC Judiciary Board.

Don't let time "fly on you, respect the Hampden-Sydney visitation hours."

Coordinator Of The Virginians For The Constitution At LC

On Thursday, October 15, 1970, Longwood will host the area coordinator from the organization, Virginians for the Constitution. The area coordinator is Thomas A. "Tas" Schultz from Alexandria, Virginia. Mr. Schultz was born in Orange, California and is 26 years old. He was graduated from St. John's College High School in 1961. He received his B.S. in industrial engineering at V.P.I. in 1967. Mr. Schultz is presently a second-year law student at the University of Virginia School of Law. He is President of the Virginia Association of Student Governments; Vice-President of V.P.I. Student Government and President of Student Senate; Board of Directors, V.P.I. Athletic Association; Board of Directors of Y.M.C.A. at V.P.I.; and Chairman, VASG High School Orientation Committee. Besides these activities, Mr. Schultz has received further experience as staff member of two statewide political campaigns and as a U. S. Senate intern. Mr. Schultz will speak on constitutional revision.

It can be noted here that Casey Wilkes, President of Student Government, was present on the Constitutional Revision.

Dr. Land Announces Dress Code For Observing Students

Now that the John P. Wynne Campus School is open to college students for observation and for participation, a number of students have inquired about the appropriate dress for the campus school. It is our wish to consider you as members of our professional staff while you are observing and participating in our educational program. Consequently, it is recommended that college students wear dress that is acceptable for teachers in the public schools of Virginia. The college dress code for student teachers is an excellent guide.

Institute Explores Literature, History And Society Of Victorian Age

Margaret Blair

The Victorians Institute on October 24th is the result of a number of years of discussion and hard work among the faculty at Longwood who believe in the interdisciplinary approach to scholarship. It is a growing trend in education today to get away from the "box" approach to study—that is, studying a particular field exclusively under one title and one teacher. Lectures have been exchanged on an informal basis at Longwood among the music, science, English and history departments. The interdisciplinary approach has not always been convenient for the usual classroom; therefore, the Institute was planned as a special day directed toward a particular topic seen from different angles.

The morning session, from 10:00 A.M. to 12:30 P.M., will consist of a panel discussion exploring the literature, history, social history, and aesthetic theory of the Victorian Age. The faculty members that will present their papers are Richard T. Couture, assistant professor of history; William T. Duke, instructor in political science, and Dr. Rosemary Sprague, professor of English. Frank R. Southerington, Department of English, Mary Baldwin College, will serve as moderator. He is of British nationality and has written several books concerning Thomas Hardy and his works.

The morning session will prepare for the afternoon session beginning at 2:00 P.M. At this time the "star attraction," Dr. J. O. Bailey, professor of English, University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, will present his paper "Heredity as Villain in Poetry and Fiction of Thomas Hardy." Dr. Bailey is one of the most prominent scholars on Hardy in the United States.

As Miss Sprague explained, the Victorians Institute will illuminate the age as it really was. In 1970, we are sufficiently removed in time to look back, but present unbiased research and opinions. The Victorians weren't as smug and complacent as they usually are depicted, but they were concerned with their world. Progress was also their motto and they got just as frustrated as we do today if they couldn't find instant success.

Longwood is most fortunate to begin an Institute of this kind and scope and it has had the assistance of the college's president, Dr. Willett; the dean, Dr. Blackwell; and the chairman of the English department, Dr. Frank. Dr. Sprague, who has done much in organizing the Victorians Institute, hopes that possibly a "permanent organization will emerge from this beginning" as an annual event. Miss Sprague has said that "there has been tremendous interest expressed by other colleges in a 'rotating system,' with a different campus being host to it each year." Other institutes on different subjects might also evolve from this initiation.

The faculty and students are invited to attend both sessions of the Victorians Institute that will be held in Lankford Building. For those who want to stay for the luncheon, there will be a $2.00 registration fee to cover its cost.

Dr. Bailey grins in anticipation. His topic? "Heredity as Villain in Poetry and Fiction of Thomas Hardy."

New Plan By Car Committee Approved By President Willett

Ann Anthony

A new parking plan has been devised and approved by President Willett to provide reserved parking areas for the faculty, students, and staff members of Longwood College. Under the new plan all seniors are allowed to have motor vehicles on campus, and the requests of out-of-state juniors and of accelerated juniors within two semesters of graduation are considered by the Car Committee.

A study is now underway to determine if the increase in parking spaces this year is adequate to extend the privilege of having a car on campus to all juniors. After a poll has been taken to determine how many juniors would be involved, the Car Committee will study the situation and make a recommendation to President Willett. The final approval or rejection of this parking privilege extension will be the responsibility of the college Deans.

Among the areas available for student parking is the newly paved lot beside the Lankford Activities Building. With the exception of a limited number of state cars which are used by students to visit schools prior to their student teaching, this lot is totally reserved for student-registered cars.

In addition to three campus lots, sections on Ely, Race, Redford, and Spruce Streets are available for student parking. The streets are, however, under the control of the Farmville city system and are open to public use at any time.

The aim of Longwood's policy in permitting student cars on campus is that the student will be able to travel conveniently to and from the college. It does not provide, however for the daily operation of student cars on the campus streets.

Commenting on the campus parking situation and on the students' operation of motor vehicles while at Longwood, Colonel B. B. Abrams, Director of the Physical Plant, said, "We have had fine cooperation thus far, and with this cooperation we should continue to have adequate space for those students with authorized cars."

Mr. Frank Southerington, moderator of new Victorian Institute.

Longwood Student Describes Seven Wonderful Weeks Abroad

By CAROLYN LATHAM

With good-bys said and luggage weighed in, nine Longwood girls boarded an Air France 747 headed for Paris and Europe for a 7-week trip of touring, shopping and going to school. The group headed by Mr. Wayne Nunn and Mrs. Anita Ernouf left June 15 for a three week tour of Europe and four weeks of study at the Université de Poitiers, Institut de Touraine at Tours, France.

The nine girls who went on the seven week tour were: Anne Becht, Betty Ann Glasheen, Mary Lou Glasheen, Tricia Shaw, B. J. Rogers, Ruth Dozier, Terry Williams, Carolyn Latham, and Laura Patterson.

Their first stop was London where they witnessed the Changing of the Guard at Buckingham Palace and viewed other historical sites like: The Tower of London, Westminster Abbey, St. Paul's Cathedral, Piccadilly Circus, Parliament and Big Ben and the Crown Jewels. They closed out their stay in London by enjoying the English version of the Broadway musical performance of "Hair". From London they flew to Amsterdam where they saw some of Rembrandt's masterpieces, the famous Dutch canals, and a diamond factory. The most impressive aspect of Amsterdam was the friendliness of the people. In Germany they visited the cathedral in Cologne and enjoyed a boat ride down the Rhine River where they got a view of the real German country (Continued on Page 4)

Dress Code Violations Create Administration, Faculty Effect

By ETHEL REITER

An issue of current concern and rumor is Longwood's Dress Code. Most of the student body is aware of the administration, faculty, and Residence Board conference held last week to discuss the dress code situation. Though not present at this meeting, the Rotunda has attempted to find out what motivated this administrative unrest.

The "Longwood Lady" has evidently committed several crimes which could no longer be overlooked. The accused have abused a most modern and liberal rule (wearing pants). These students have violated the Southern (Longwood) code of polish, ornamentation, and prettiness, and they have impudently created their own comfortable, simple, and casual style. A second offense is the failure to read and obey the ten stipulations to the Clothing Commandment. Students must realize that ALL the rules are important as to know what type of clothes (Duke tee shirt, white crepe formal, Longwood blazer) can be worn at what times (between 7:00 and 7:15 a.m., at sunset, after 9:00 p.m.) in what areas of the campus and town (front, back, side, NW corner) on what occasions (Birthday Banquet, visits to administrative offices). Though unable to dictate on spiritual matters, the sinners should also be reminded that "Cleanliness is next to Godliness," and public sin should be followed by public penance.

Those who wish to be thought respectable must adhere to the regulations of a code. To illustrate this Victorian (Longwood) point I have created a fictitious situation. Annabelle and Joanne May in their crinolines and ringlets sit at their desks with an edition of "The Little Train That Could." A busted, high-bodied matron occasionally advises and counsels these young ladies. Other times these frail, fading, proper creatures tiptoe to classes to whisper sweet comments to impressed professors who delight at teaching these feminine joys, a truly ideal academic situation.

This obviously is quite exaggerated. But the administrative alarm is equally abated. We now have a semi-liberal dress code serving over 2000 students. It is ridiculous to expect a standard and becoming attire of each student. Most people over 18 years old know how to dress properly for the season, occasion, or job. Personal tastes and habits will not be altered by a rule.

Will The Class Of '72 Pass Their Swimming Test?

Mary Francis Baldwin

The ROTUNDA staff would like to bring a problem to the attention of all students at Longwood. This problem involves the Junior class and YOU, the student body.

Each year around April and May, the Junior class of Longwood College sponsors the only formal dance held all year long, namely the Ring Dance. It is a tradition and as in years past, the Class of '72 will present to the college a weekend of fun and excitement. This dance is different from other school ring dances in that the entire student body is invited to bring their best beau and join the Junior class in a "night on the town."

Well, so what's the big deal about Ring Dance? It's only October and the dance is months away. How could a dance possibly cause any problem? Last year and in years past, the Junior class has presented a concert plus a dance for the enjoyment of the students. Last year, the Class of '71 presented Glen Yarbrough in concert. Unfortunately, many people did not think Glen Yarbrough would be good in concert, and needless to say, the Junior class lost money in bringing him to our campus. The class

The State Of Dress

Fashion is always in a state of flux. One can never really be "in fashion" for the term is not a stationary one. The alternative is to move along with the fashion world, buying all the current trends and attempting to keep up, or buying economically and wearing what suits you and what is most comfortable for you. What is most important, however, is not what you have bought, but whether you know how to dress for the occasion. What seems to be the question here at Longwood is whether everyone agrees on the occasions. The dress code has been modified presumably so students can be more comfortable, remain warmer in winter, and for various other reasons. Slacks worn to classes and around the campus was a grateful improvement, and little was heard at that time of individuals mentioning that slacks worn to class was showing a distinct lack of respect towards the instructor. It is evident that students are willing to exert themselves in class, but they don't feel that the instructor needs or expects them in a dress. Now, murmurs can be heard, and not from those in the highest authority. It should be obvious that students do wear slacks to classes, (the rule was changed) but noted also that Longwood students are always aware of when to dress for social functions for example: Students do generally feel that if they have an appointment they should dress accordingly, unless they have been given very short notice. This is just a social courtesy of which Longwood girls are aware. One doesn't feel then that there is any real basis for the complaints of the dress code. Students here at Longwood know how to dress and they do dress accordingly.

Dress

Recently a friend of mine was reprimanded by one of the college administrators because of the way she was dressed. She was told that because of her disgraceful appearance—she had on a shirt with the tail out—she was showing lack of respect for the college and was not showing herself fit to represent the college in her capacity as a high officer in an important campus organization. She was also told that her sloppy dressing showed a lack of respect for her professors.

In rural colleges there is always considerable hassle between the older faculty and students concerning dress. The students want to dress comfortably, the faculty want them to dress prettily. The question is so old as to be too boring for discussion. But it would be interesting to talk to the professors allegedly insulted by the girl's appearance. Which impresses a professor more, a hard-working, highly-motivated student with her shirt-tail out, or an elegantly-dressed no-nonsense who does no more than she has to in order to get by?

In a college with substantial English, drama, and art departments it should be realized that quite often highly intelligent and very creative people are less concerned with dress than are administrators. It is not fair that when a superior student should be burdened with a thousand petty details of dress regulation and be told that she is an insult to her professors because her dress doesn't correspond to an administrator's idea of what is proper. After all, a college is an educational institution and not a finishing school for an elderly administrator's views as to what is proper. After all, is a college an educational institution or a finishing school?

I think that every generation, except for those members raised to tolerate people who dress and behave differently from themselves, tend to believe that the way they were raised is the only fit way to behave. My grandmother is horrified that my dates wear short skirts, and presumably

I will be horrified if my children don't, if they are male I will be horrified if they do. But if I am by chance a college executive I hope I will recognize that my students don't live in the world in which I was raised but in their own, and that I can't inflict my standards on them forever.

Rudeness

Dear Editor,

As a member of the ROTUNDA staff, I have tried for four days to get a story about Dr. Helms running for Congressman of the 4th district. I have made four trips to his campaign headquarters to get information regarding him. On the first trip I was told that the papers on Dr. Helms were all given away at the fair grounds, but if I returned in a half an hour I could use the master sheet for my information. I returned and the lady had been mistaken and did not have a master copy. One of the campaign workers took my name and promised to call me. Having received no call, I went back to the campaign office twice more still not getting my information and again being promised that I would be called.

Finally having no material on him, Dr. Helms is getting one short letter to the editor instead of a feature. If he wants to be elected, then Dr. Helms should see that information on himself is made available to the public.

We, the staff, would like to do a good job in covering the news; but without the cooperation of the people involved, it is impossible. We ask for support of the people in submitting articles and aiding the reporters in their coverage of the stories.

Sincerely,

Christine Sharpe

Demon Rum?

To the Editor:

As I near my twenty-first birthday I have been thinking over just what privileges and responsibilities now face me. The two new activities that I will be able to engage in are (1) voting and (2) buying liquor. At Longwood, however, one of these rights is denied me. There is no rule in the Handbook against students who are over 21 buying or consuming alcohol (providing their sobriety is not questionable). However, the fact that Longwood prohibits me from keeping alcohol in my room denies me of that right. I can't quite knock off a pint of Old Whiskey on my way back from the A.B.C. store. Besides, the State of Virginia prohibits consumption of alcohol in public. So if I want a drink my only resorts appear to be: (1) asking a guy out that I know has booze (I did try this), (2) leaving Farmville and its fifteen mile radius or so, (this isn't very easy to do), or (3) hiding behind a tree with a bottle.

Why, oh, why dear Alma Mater, can't we keep alcohol in the dorms? The question of minors having something more potent than 3.2 beer doesn't seem so big to me. If they are minors, how do they get the stuff? That problem is the responsibility of the people who sell it. I don't think that allowing us to have alcohol in the dorms will pave the way for a new generation of alcoholics. And I don't think that there will be much of an increase in one-night-stand drunks. What I mean by that is people are not going to get any more rowdy drinking in the dorms than they do when drinking elsewhere.

We do pay to live in the dorms for the better part of each year. The dorms are our homes. So why don't we have the same rights here that we do have at home? I realize that there are many people to consider, but nobody is going to force somebody to touch Demon Rum. I don't seriously think that somebody having a drink in one room would disturb another person in another room. Not anyone than if the first person was drinking a Coke.

In conclusion, I would like to thank Longwood for allowing me to exercise the first privilege; I'm planning to vote in the next election.

Thirty Longwood students have been named as recipients in the nationally recognized "Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges." Each girl is nominated on the basis of academic standing, service to the community leadership in extracurricular activities, and she must in addition have at least a 2.5 average. The students are nominated by Department Chairman, and the sponsors of Student Government. They are then voted on by the Committee of Administration which is headed by Mr. Dalton, and senior Geist members who have one vote a piece. All nominations are sent to Tuscaloosa, Alabama, where they are approved by the editors of the annual publication, "Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges."

One of the advantages of the Who's Who organization is that with the assistance of educational and business consultants, they maintain a student placement service that provides employment contacts for graduating students and prospective employers.

Those elected for the 1970-71 school year were: Bonnie Anne Bowers, elementary education major; Patricia Lynne Coleman, Physical education; Mary Curtis Conrad, Elementary education; Mary Alice Carmody, Art; Nona Louise Davis, History; Virginia Dare Dawson, elementary edu-

Dr. R. J. Havighurst To Speak At LC Tuesday, Oct. 27

Terri Gadsby

On Tuesday, October 27, 1970, Dr. Robert J. Havighurst, professor of education and human development at the University of Chicago, will be the guest speaker on education at Longwood College and Hampden-Sydney College. Dr. Havighurst is being sponsored by the University Center of Virginia to speak at various state colleges.

Dr. Havighurst received his A.B. from Ohio Wesleyan University in 1921, and in 1924 he was awarded his Ph.D. from Ohio State University. He is a former director of general education for the General Education Board of the Rockefeller Foundation, and was a Fulbright professor at the University of New Zealand in 1953, and at the University of Buenos Aires in 1961. Dr. Havighurst has been a member of the Executive Board of the National Society for the Study of Education since 1957 and has held his present position at the University of Chicago since 1944.

Dr. Havighurst will speak at Longwood on Tuesday, October 27, at 1:00 p.m., on "Education and Poverty." His lecture at Hampden-Sydney College on "College and the Open Mind" will be at 8:30 that night. Dr. Havighurst is a very interesting speaker and everyone is encouraged to attend his lectures.

Doctor, teacher, friend to the world . . . that is the mission of the S. S. HOPE. Founded in 1958 by Dr. William B. Walsh, a noted Washington, D. C. heart specialist, Project HOPE is an independent, non-profit corporation. Project HOPE recognizes that no country can grow strong without a healthy population and that no nation can attain leadership if its people die soon after reaching maturity of mind and body. It also recognizes that it cannot possible cure all the sick people in each nation it visits. Therefore, its mission is to teach medical, dental and paramedical personnel in each host country the latest techniques.

The S.S. HOPE is an example of the American system of free enterprise, kept afloat by the contributions and gifts of individuals and corporations across the U.S.A. Because of this generosity, HOPE has been able to train more than 4,000 physicians, treat more than 120,000 patients, and distribute more than 2 million cartons of milk to children who had never tasted it before.

HOPE is staffed by 125 physicians and dentists who volunteer to serve aboard the ship. HOPE goes to a country only by invitation from its government. Since its maiden voyage to Indonesia and Vietnam in 1960, it has visited Peru, Ecuador, Guinea, Nicaragua and Colombia, with the average visit lasting ten months. Land-based teams remain to follow up on work begun during this period, and are expected to stay three to five years. By leaving behind knowledge at the end of each visit, Project HOPE gives to developing nations something even time cannot eradicate. By sharing knowledge, HOPE is promoting good health and international understanding, and showing people in developing nations that Americans really care.

Project HOPE was adopted as Phi Mu Fraternity's National philanthropic project in 1964. Last year Phi Mu chapters across the Nation joined in raising $27,175.84 in support of Project HOPE. If you wish to contribute locally to this world wide endeavor, contact a member of Phi Mu Sorority at Longwood College.

'Rotunda Questions Duties Of Judicial, Residence Boards

As every Longwood student knows, the Student Government Association is divided into three branches—legislative, residence, and judicial. The Judicial Board handles all matters concerning the Honor Code. It also enforces social regulations as set up by Legislative Board. But are social regulations really the responsibility of the same body that deals with cheating, lying, and stealing? The ROTUNDA is suggesting not.

During an academic year, Judicial Board tries just as many cases concerning social offenses as those dealing with the Honor Code. Social conduct is mainly concerned with campus regulations and a student's observance of these regulations, particularly with those students in residence on campus. It would seem logical that Residence Board handle social regulations.

Social offense that a student might be tried for include possession and/or consumption of alcohol on campus, possession and/or consumption of narcotics, violation of dating rules, such as dating at Longwood Estates at night or having a date in your room, and having a car on campus without permission. These are social, not honor offenses, and occur on campus. Shouldn't Residence Board have jurisdiction over these matters involving campus residence?

Several ideas concerning the re-organizing of Judicial Board have been circulating around the college. One such idea has been particularly drawn to the ROTUNDA's attention. It would entail making the judicial branch of the Student Government Association strictly an honor branch. Residence Board would become a social branch, and Legislative Board would remain as it is.

With morality and campus regulations changing as swiftly as they are, many of the petty rules with which Residence Board is bogged down could be eliminated. It could then concern itself with more important social regulations. Bonnie Bowers, chairman of Judicial Board, stated that ideas such as this had been discussed informally. She pointed out the fact, however, that if such a proposal were adopted, two boards instead of one would have the power to recommend suspension. How do YOU feel about revising our present judicial and residence systems? Changes can only come about with the student body's interest and desire.

On the way to Switzerland they stopped at the Black Forest where they all bought cuckoo clocks. The Swiss Alps formed a beautiful backdrop for the storybook city of Lucerne. Here some of the group took a cable car ride up Mount Pilatus and they all enjoyed a typical Swiss Fondue dinner. On their way to the Olympic city of Innsbruck, Austria, they passed through the small principality of Liechtenstein where many met and conversed with the Baron.

Next stop was the "sinking city" of Venice where they had their first encounter with "friendly" Italians. Here they enjoyed the ancient sites of St. Mark's Square, St. Mark's Basilica and the Doges' Palace. Also, some enjoyed gondola rides on the world famous canals. The eternal city of Rome enchanted the group. Here they visited the Colosseum, the Roman Forum, the Pantheon, the Apian Way, the Vatican, and the Trevi Fountain where they threw a coin in hopes to return to Rome one day. Some went to the Pope's Mass in the Vatican on St. Peter's Day. Then to Florence where they viewed some of the masterpieces of of '72 has received many pleas from students to bring somebody good, somebody who's known, somebody who's had a hit, to present the concert during Ring Dance weekend. This is not as easy as it seems. There is always the money factor which usually crisscrosses everybody's plans. Even though Lankford Student Union goes in with the class on expenses, with the lack of turn out from the student body, and with some "not so good" concerts, the class usually goes in the hole.

The class of '72 is taking a risk and sticking their necks out for YOU, the students, to have a good Ring Dance. The '72s are putting out $4,000 for a good band. They are going to bring "The Friends of Distinction" to Longwood College. Toss, this seems like a lot of money to pay, but as in all other things, if you want something good, you have to pay dearly for it. Our question is—"Will the Class of '72 go in the hole because YOU, the student body, will not support them?"

We asked Junior Class President Nancy Fowlkes if many juniors had attended the meeting when a decision on the band was made. She stated that not as many had attended this meeting as they had the meeting concerning rings. When asked if she thought it was wise to go ahead with plans when only a hundred to a hundred and fifty had attended the meeting, she stated, "The vote was so overwhelmingly one-sided that I feel the entire class would have been swayed to that side and would have voted to get this band."

So, the Juniors are going on with their plans. It's not just a few who are behind this, but it's the entire class who are working to make this the greatest Ring Dance ever. But, why?

As we have said, in years past, junior classes have gone in the hole and some organization has had to help them out. If this year's Ring Dance is not a success, this could very possibly be the end of all Ring Dances at Longwood College. The '72s are trying their best to bring new ideas into reality. Not only are they bringing a known band, but the dance on Saturday night will be held in the dining hall and in the Rotunda area, something that has never been done before. Well, you've heard our story and now it's up to you. You will decide whether or not the Juniors sink or swim. Come Ring Dance time, make plans to support the Junior class, invite "your honey" up and have a good time.

The Junior class has confidence in you, so don't let them down. They sincerely believe they can make it. They've got a lot of intestinal fortitude (guts) to try something like this when they know the odds are against them.

All we can say is Good Luck '72s! We hope you pass your swimming test!

Students Describe Trip Abroad

Michelangelo and experienced bargaining in the Flea Market.

After a brief stop in Rapallo, Italy on the Italian Riviera they passed through Grace Kelly's Principality of Monaco and the famous gambling resort of Monte Carlo. Then they headed for Nice, France and an enjoyable leisurely day on the French Riviera. Here they were amazed to find the beaches were covered with pebbles and stones rather than sand. However, they made the best of the situation.

They sadly left the beautiful Riviera and headed for Lyon, France. Here the girls bid farewell to their friends on the tour who were going to Paris and then back to the U. S. The Longwood girls plus some other students from the tour headed for Tours to settle down to a month of study.

While at Tours they studied French grammar, conversation, history and geography under university professors who spoke only French. Here they met people from many parts of the world and enjoyed talking to them about their country and the "foreigners" were always interested in what the United States was like. The group also spent their week-end traveling and visiting the many beautiful chateaus along the Loire River valley. However, some learned more about France outside the classroom through shopping in downtown Tours, dining in French cafes, and visiting with friends from Tours.

On July 14, the group spent the week-end in Paris where they joined in and enjoyed the festivities of Bastille Day. While in Paris they saw the Eiffel Tower, the Arc de Triomphe, the American Embassy, Place de la Concorde, Champs Elysees, the Louvre, Versailles, and Notre Dame. Some had their portraits done by sidewalk artists, some attended the opera, some enjoyed a performance at the Comedie Francaise, and some visited a famous French nightclub during their stay in Paris. Before leaving Paris they watched the Bastille Parade and saw President Pompidou.

When time came for them to leave France and return to the United States many tears were shed but they were all glad to go home. The summer was a life-time experience for the whole group.

If anyone is interested in going on the trip this summer—get in touch with Mr. Nunn in the French Department or one of the above students.

Rhetoric By Frederick

At the recent Faculty-Student Retreat it was suggested by students that the present system of academic probation be abolished, and that students not be required to reach a 2.0 grade-point ratio until their senior year.

This is decidedly not a good idea. If such a policy were adopted, it would be possible for a student to remain at Longwood for long periods of time while making almost no academic progress at all. For example, if a student made a 0.0 for her first two years she presumably would be allowed to remain on the grounds and that it would still be possible for her to make a 4.0 for her remaining two years and still graduate with a 2.0 overall. There would no longer be any method of getting rid of those girls who come to college with the intention of doing no more work than necessary to allow them to stay in school. As a result, Longwood would become a refuge for the academically unfit. This lowering of the academic quality of the college would reduce the value of a Longwood diploma; make the school less attractive to prospective faculty members who want good students, and cause good students to apply elsewhere.

I know from my own experience that it is unpleasant to face "flunking out" or be constantly under threats of one kind or another due to poor grades. Yet, the fact remains that the purpose of a college is to provide a certain standard of education to those who have the ability and motivation necessary to master it. Different colleges may have different academic standards, yet once the standards have been chosen it is necessary to enforce them in some manner or else they will gradually be eroded by abuse to the lowest possible common denominator of education.

A system of academic probation is the best method of providing this necessary discipline, though of course, it should be wisely designed. Freshmen undoubtedly should be given a break as it takes a while to adjust to college and certainly an element of flexibility should be provided to allow for special situations. But no student should be allowed to remain who is obviously not willing or not able to do the work; every such student who remains is merely wasting tax money and taking up college space that might be more profitably given to a girl who would take advantage of it. Rather than allow this to happen it is better that the girl would be suspended for a semester and allowed to try again later if she feels that she will do better.

The idea is rampant in educational circles today that everybody who wants a college education should be allowed and have one and that nobody should be failed out because of possible damage to his self-respect. The practice of social passing in grade school is an example of this. It is an unfortunate fact, however, that not all people are capable of a college education; while the idea that everyone is more equal than everybody else may be acceptable in high school, it certainly is not in college. Colleges as they exist today are not egalitarian institutions; admission to college is competitive, grading is competitive, and jobs after college are granted on a competitive basis. It is no favor to a girl to allow her to obtain a degree when she hasn't met Longwood's standards, thus sending her into a competitive world without sufficient grounding. Nor is it a favor to her brighter or more motivated classmates who will later be judged partly by the performance of other Longwood students. It would also be a mark of irresponsibility on the part of the administration. If a girl is graduated without proper training, then the school hiring her on the basis of her Longwood diploma will be getting an inferior teacher. If this were a medical school the result would be a sloppy surgeon. A teacher's college has a responsibility to society to keep its standards up.

The Out-Of-Towners, Frantic, Funny Tale Of New York City

By SARAH FARRAR

"Ohhh, my Go-did! It is half-way between a squawk and a prayer and issues from the lips of the Ohio housewife (Sandy Dennis) on a pleasure trip in New York. Her husband George (Jack Lemmon) has come East to be interviewed because he has a chance to become a New York based vice-president, and he has brought her along to celebrate what he feels will be a sure thing. The Out-Of-Towners are out of luck!

Neil Simon, the Comedy King of Broadway, has written this hilarious adventure about the wilds of New York. In his first original script for the silver screen, he creates this Midwestern couple who are beset by strikes, violence in the streets, verbal abuse, and all the other delights of New York living as they decide whether or not to live there.

THE OUT-OF-TOWNERS is a lot of typical New York evenings rolled into one. For example, when the weary travelers finally get to Grand Central Station, they discover that the entire city transit system is on strike and that the garbage hasn't been collected for a week. Then they find out their reservation has not been held by the crowded hotel. Later they are robbed, left-jacked, and left to sleep exhausted in the rain in Central Park, where the Ohio housewife is accosted by a curious character in a black cape.

The movie is the latest version of man's crazy attempt to cope with his overmechanized and underhumanized world.

If you like frantic, funny tales that frazzle the nerve ends, THE OUT-OF-TOWNERS is for you. Simon manages to drag belly laughs from basically realistic—and therefore noticeable—situations. His light humor never becomes grotesque, even though it's a bit strained by the director's nerve-racking pace.

New Students At Longwood Faced With Many Problems

By SHARON SAPP

A new thing is happening at Longwood. New faces, are appearing, new black faces. This year there are six black students attending school here. Six girls out of two thousand—that's quite a minority. Why? Well, there seem to be a number of reasons as to why few Negroes decide to apply for admittance to Longwood.

In an interview with one of the black students, the question of applying was discussed. It seems the many black girls are afraid to submit an application here. Reason? They think they won't be accepted. Why? They're black. When a black girl was accepted last spring, she said she thought some sort of barrier had been over come. Now she feels more Negro students will apply and so be no negative about doing so.

It also seems that after a black student sets here she faces many more problems. Problems that take some adjusting. For example, how do you react when your classmates (probably all of them white) are overly-friendly to you because you're black? How do you act in class when you feel your teacher resents your presence? How do you act as yourself when everyone else has to "pretend" in order to make you feel like part of Longwood? And most importantly, how do you make friends with a white roommate?

It's hard being in college but even harder if the college is so unbalanced, racially. Longwood has been accused of discrimination and the controversy over the Prince Edward Academy has brought much attention to the school. What the outcome of the academy situation and the black-white ratio here will be is not yet known. It all comes down to one question, "Is a man different because of the color of his skin?"

Pop Singer Joni Mitchell Adds Piano To Her Songs

Donna Wadsworth

Joni Mitchell is, besides being a great guitarist, a rare vocal talent and a prolific composer, now a pianist. Joni sings her melodically intricate and lyrically sparse, poetically evocative songs with the pluck of a deflowered choirgirl. And how she accompanied herself on the piano as well as the six and twelve string guitar. The addition of the piano adds an impact to the songs: "Born Free," "Rainy Night House," "Willie" and "Blue Boy" that even an expert guitar accompaniment cannot equal.

"Ladies of the Canyon" is an album with a song for every mood of the mind. The songs range from "Big Yellow Taxi," an ecologist's plea with a moral attached, to "For Free" and "The Arrangement" that try to express some of the sadness of being successful, to "Willie," "Blue Boy" and "Conversation" which are all about a love affair that is failing for various reasons. The title song "Ladies of the Canyon" introduces the listener to Joni's friends at her Laurel Canyon retreat and urges you to simply enjoy being yourself.

The best songs on the album are two that have been popularized by singers other than Joni Mitchell herself, "The Circle Game" theorizes one goes through life and, "you can't return, you can only look back from where you came, and go round and round, in the circle game." "Woodstock" is included on this album in tribute to three days of love and understanding on Max Yasgur's farm. It is a gentle song and Joni sings it in a voice that is clear and full of faith, hope, and promise.

Golfers Bring Hard-Earned Fame To Longwood College

This fall the golf team participated in two tournaments. The first tournament was held at Mary Baldwin College on October 10. The team consisting of sophomores Louise Moss, Ann Santore, Debbie Brooks, freshman Becky Bailey, and their talented golf coach Dr. Barbara Smith, left Friday for Staunton to play a practice round. On Saturday, against twenty-seven other colleges and universities on the Ingleside Championship Golf Course, the team scored big with Ann, Debbie, and Becky winning their respective flights.

The second golf tournament was the West Virginia University Invitational on October 17, at Morgantown, West Virginia. To avoid having to make the whole trip in one day, Dr. Smith and the team left Wednesday afternoon and spent the night at Staunton. Leaving early Thursday morning, they drove up, down, and around mountains before reaching Morgantown that afternoon. Being prepared for beautiful weather, the five golfers were shocked to discover rain and cold weather upon reaching their destination. Determined to play a practice round, the team teed off and managed to play five holes before becoming frozen and walked back to the clubhouse. Leaving the course, the girls played for warmer weather for the tournament on Friday. However, on Friday, there was disappointment because the tournament was played in very cold low 40 degree weather with occasional sleet. But the team came through and again brought glory to Longwood. Debbie brought back a trophy for runner-up in the third flight while Louise received a trophy for being the first flight winner. Becky was the team's outstanding player by winning several events. She received a trophy for being the runner-up in the championship flight and also some golf socks, balls and golf head covers for hitting the longest drive on number ten and for low putts respectively. Immediately following the tournament, the team left on the long trip back to Longwood.

Deciding not to go through the mountains again, Dr. Smith headed north to Pennsylvania. After passing several patches of snow and driving through snow flurries, they turned south through Maryland. Here they encountered 36 degree weather and darkness, so they turned south toward Virginia. Being glad to be back to Virginia, they stayed on Interstate 81 to Staunton and finally arrived at Longwood late Friday night. The opinion of the group was expressed by Dr. Smith when she said, "It was a beautiful trip, but it sure is great to be back at Longwood." When asked about the next golf tournament, Dr. Smith said that it would be in the spring when golf season started. She continued to say, "The season would end with the first annual Virginia Intercollegiate Golf Tournament which will be held at Longwood." Longwood will also host the first annual interscholastic Golf Tournament in the spring.

Freeman Shoots A 748 Places Fourth In Match

Competing against archery champions from colleges on the East Coast, Longwood student, Georgia Freeman, placed fourth in a field of participants at the East Coast Intercollegiate Archery Tournament held on October 10 in Glassboro, New Jersey. The Longwood junior shot a score of 748 at the annual tournament. First place went to Bernadette Robinson of Glassboro State College with a score of 809. Second place was captured by Dorothy Yokum of East Stroudsburg College, New Jersey, shooting a score of 778 while third place fell to Karen Kelleher of Glassboro State with a score of 756.

Among the colleges represented were the University of Delaware, Madison College, Newark College and Cumberland College.

While no matches are scheduled for this winter, an intercollegiate state tournament will open competition this spring.

LC Defeats VCU

Westhampton Wins Worse Games Ahead

A win and a loss marked the past week for Longwood's first team. The win came early in the week as LC took Virginia Commonwealth University 4-0. Longwood controlled the ball for the most part of the game, but during the beginning of the second half LC's defense was tested—especially by VCU's left inner and center forward who showed good stickwork. But by the end of the game, Longwood was in complete control.

The first goal came from Diane Derrick, scoring her first of the season. She scored it by stopping a clear and flicking the ball past the goalie. Patty Coogan's goal brought the score to 2-0 at the end of the first half. Patty's score in the second half along with Janet Ford's goal gave LC her shut-out victory.

Westhampton handed Longwood her second defeat of the season. It was a long game, changing pace and sides of the field often. Westhampton scored in the first half and LC answered with a goal by the center half, Freda Lumsford, in the beginning of the second half. However, towards the end of the game, Westhampton was in the circle and suddenly swung the ball across to throw the defense off balance and to score the winning point. With the second team, however, it was another shut-out, 6-0. Apparently using the first half to warm up, LC scored five goals in the second half, three of which came from the center half-back, Margaret Lowery, Freshman, Lucy Sale, scored twice, once in the first half and once in the second half. Barbara Criddle, playing right inner, also scored in the second half. LC's endurance, speed, and determination left Westhampton's second team standing on the field.

This coming weekend brings the hardest stretch of the season, Friday the team journeys to Bridgewater and then plays an away game Saturday morning at Lynchburg. Then Tuesday afternoon comes one of the two biggest games of the season—Madison College!

Intramural Tennis is moving along quite rapidly and there have been some hard fought, well played games. On October 20, Barbara Hannin, who has won all her games so far, will play Charlotte Fugett. This will be the last freshman game in the winner's bracket. Lynn Hamilton has moved out in front on the loser's side and still has a good chance.

In the Sophomore class, Barbara Criddle will play the winner of the game between Doti Bohannon and Andy Lassiter in the winner's column while Linda Wall is out in front in the loser's column.

The Seniors have one last game to play, Ruth Holdren, winner in the loser's bracket competes against Janet Harpold, winner in the winner's bracket, to determine who plays in the final tournament for class points toward the color cup.

Casey Wilkes Student Government President, Reveals Questionnaire On 3.2 Beer Has Gone Before The President

by ETHEL REITER

Casey Wilkes, Student Government President, revealed Sunday night that a questionnaire concerning the possession of alcohol and the sale of 3.2 beer on the Longwood College campus has been given to President Willett for study. The questionnaire (Student Opinions on Alcohol) was written and submitted by the Legislative Board last week. The form went immediately to the President as he has the final say on any petition.

The proposed questionnaire consisted of 28 questions, and a note to President Willett which states: "At the beginning of the survey we would make a statement to the effect that this was only a questionnaire to see what the students were thinking along these lines, NOT a vote to be acted upon." The first 12 questions were devoted to "factual" information, such as: Do you drink? Have you ever been high? Do you get drunk often? Do you have liquor in your room now?

The second part was devoted to personal opinions. If you do not already drink, do you think you would start under the influence of those who would be drinking if this rule were passed? If liquor in the dorms were passed would your opinion of Longwood College change concerning its quality as an institution of higher learning? Do you think that allowing liquor in the dorms would lead to alcoholism on Longwood's campus? Would such a privilege instill a sense of fear or uneasiness in students? How do you think liquor in the dorms would affect the statewide image of the school?

Members of Legislative Board later went to the President's office to find out his opinion of the rough draft. He thought that it was "okay." However, President Willett did find it necessary to revise the Board's preliminary efforts. The questionnaire was too long and too opinionated, Dr. Willett, in agreement with these members of Legislative Board, arrived at what they felt was a more factual and concise opinion poll.

STUDENT OPINIONS OF ALCOHOL

1) Are you for or against changing our rules to give permission to possess and consume alcohol in the dormitories?

— For
— Against

If you voted against, would you consider transferring from Longwood if this rule is changed to permit alcohol in the dormitories?

— Yes
— No

If you voted for, would you be in favor of having permission granted for (1) all dormitories? (2) specified dormitories?

2) Are you against or for the serving of beer in the Snack Bar?

— For
— Against

3) Are you for or against the serving of beer in the Club House on the Golf Course?

— For
— Against

4) Do you think that allowing liquor in the dorms would have any effect on the prospective freshmen? If so, in a negative or positive manner?

5) Do you think Longwood students would abuse the privilege of having liquor in the dorms?
October 19, 1970

However, while all this governmental and presidential action is taking place some students have brought the matter into full view. On October 26 a student petition was circulated urging Legislative Board to take immediate action. The groups submitting the petition feel that the legislative board will ignore their efforts, and there will be some time before any action will be taken.

President Willett is going to Mary Washington to inspect their handling of the situation. Nothing can be done with these questionnaires until the legalities of the matter are known. Virginia State Law now requires that it is unlawful for any person under the age of 21 to purchase alcoholic beverages, or to possess any alcoholic beverages SO PURCHASED. In light of this new and ambiguous ruling, President Willett, Casey Wilkes, and Bonnie Bowers went to the City Attorney of Farmville for interpretation of this law. It was suggested that a letter be written to the State Attorney General for his legal opinion. The President has offered to write this letter and to let Miss Wilkes review it before sending it. When asked why the President agreed to write the letter rather than Miss Wilkes, she replied "He offered to write the letter, and he has the secretary to type it."

Other colleges including girls colleges, have already legalized the sale of alcoholic beverages. They are Sweet Briar, Hampden-Sydney, Washington and Lee, Virginia Commonwealth University, and Roanoke College.

Apparently the whole matter has been placed in the hands of President Willett. When asked about the question, Andee Maddox, Vice President of Legislative Board, said that "I don't know, I never talk to the President, Casey does." When Miss Wilkes was asked what was being done, she said, "I don't know what it's all about. President Willett has most of the information."

Oktoberfest, Longwood's German Holiday In The Making For The 1970-71 Season

Clowning on the lawn

Oktoberfest is here!

From the parade Friday afternoon until walk of Alumni Chl Saturday evening, Longwood's campus will be transformed into a gala German holiday. Oktoberfest originally began in Germany as a marriage celebration for Crown Prince Ludwig. The simple horse race he originally planned, grew in size and events until today it is one of the largest festivals in the world.

It begins in the second half of September with a procession of people in Bavaria costumes—women in dresses and men in embroidered leather shorts. At twelve noon on the opening day cannons are fired, the Lord Mayor of Munich draws the first litre of beer and the Oktoberfest begins.

Oktoberfest came to Longwood in 1968. Before that it had been called Geist and before that it was known as Circus. The idea of Oktoberfest was designed to carry out the idea of the German Oktoberfest in as many weekend activities as possible. In 1969 the Geistmeister, the head of spirit, was created to symbolize the blue and white Longwood spirit. The parade was added in 1968 as an official opening to the weekend. The Oktoberfest Cup bears a blue and white liner and is given to the winning class—each year the winning color and year are engraved on the back. Then in 1969 the Hex sign was added to the skit program as a method of recognizing the class festival chairmen and officially wishing the classes good luck from Geist.

Classes have elected their chairmen for this year's Oktoberfest. The Green and Whites are headed by Senator Lynne Coleman and Sophomore Shelly Clare, while the Red and Whites chairmen are Juniors Frankie Brown and Joan Putney and Freshman Marty Lewis.

On October 18 the clowns were chosen. They are Kathy Barclay, Nancy Daumer, Diane Derrick, Debbie Ellenbrand, Nancy Frost, Pam Harri-

This year's midway will be the largest ever. Thirty-nine booths will represent different campus organizations and everything you can possibly imagine will be sold. Another unique feature of this year's Oktoberfest will be that members of each class will be allowed to work in the parade, thus enabling each individual class to prove its spirit. Yes, Oktoberfest is here and it will be up to you to make it the best ever!

What's to do . . .

Walk around campus sometime and look for something to do. You don't see too much do you? Or maybe you could walk through a dorm looking for someone to talk to. Chances are, you'd be lucky to find someone on his way home for the weekend. Few stay around here on weekends; few care about anything other than their studies, and as a result campus activity has come to a virtual standstill.

What reasons can be offered for this seemingly disastrous phenomenon? It would be both concise and correct to maintain that there is little to do on campus. In years gone past a person could content herself with sports, studying, and a mixer. Who among this year's student body contents himself with these activities anymore?

Campus functions have not really changed too much over the years. It's still mixers, fraternity parties, football games, and big name concerts. What has changed is the average student. She has a stereo system which can make her ignore concerts, and beer parties or mixers are no longer in vogue. If she wants kicks she'll go off campus to get them. After booking diligently all week, who is going to stay around campus on weekends to study?

There doesn't seem to be any definite reason for staying on campus on weekends, and when the campus is inhabited, most of its denizens lounge about in opathy. This leaves our dear college a monument of inactivity. It has become decadent and languid. Sad, isn't it.

Reprinted from the Muhlenburg Weekly

EDITORS NOTE: The upcoming weekend, Oktoberfest will be an exception to what is otherwise known as the suitcase school. Visitors to the campus on weekends must wonder what has become of the enrolled 2,000. Is there a solution, or is it just too unpleasant to think about?

LC Campus Plan Does Not Include Students Privacy

By LYNNE WILSON

The proposed campus plan for Longwood College includes the use of the block between the high rise dorm and the music and art buildings for a gymnasium, parking lot, and tennis courts. The plan also calls for several dorms and academic buildings south of Redford Street. No mention has been made of any place where students can walk, talk, and think without being confronted by campus buildings.

A new gymnasium may be important, but so is the student's privacy and peace of mind. Perhaps, Longwood's administration and architect should consider building the new gym west of Ely Street, and converting the area across from Curry into a mall with trees, walks, and benches. The advantages of such a mall are impressive. First, the students would have a place away from their dorm rooms and classes where they could relax and forget college tensions for a while. Secondly, such a mall would certainly make Longwood's campus more attractive. This would be impressive to visitors from other colleges, guests of the administration, and most important, to prospective applicants.

Why not convert the area north of the present parking lot into a shaded mall? The trees that are there should remain, of course, and walks and benches should be installed. A creek bed runs through this land parallel to the high rises; why not put a wooden bridge across it. With adequate lighting, an area such as this would prove a long awaited haven away from it all.

A home — reportedly one of the oldest in Farmville — now stands on the south corner of Frazer. The future plans of the destruction of this house, but is it justifiable for Longwood College to have this building of apparent historical interest destroyed to make room for tennis courts? Why not place the courts and gym in another locale? The state appropriates money for our buildings, but it does not specify where the college is to locate them.

By restoring the home, Longwood would be doing a public service in the interest of preserving Farmville's historical past. Of course, we all recognize the fact that the college is continually in need of buildings. Why not use this lovely home as a place where students could have informal meetings, listen to records, or just sit in the warm comfort that only a home — not a dorm — can offer.

On today's campus, we find students beset by problems and tensions that are difficult to overcome in a dorm room. Ours is a world fast becoming more mechanized and more impersonal, and our campus is beginning to follow this trend. We can either sit back with our copy of THE HOBBIT and dismiss the problems around us, or we can confront them, voice our opinions, and work together for the benefit of today's coed and for the Longwood students of future generations.

The preservation of this land as a mall and of the home as a public monument is NOT an impossibility. If we, the students, make it known that we'd like a place where we can think our thoughts and sing our songs away from the madding crowd, perhaps, the administration can have the plan altered.

Now, as the administration gets new, tastefully decorated offices and new furniture, as the alumni house is redecorated, and the Longwood House is restored, why not consider using a block for the privacy and peace of mind of the students?

Letter To The Editor

To the Editor:

Thank you for fulfilling my request for a subscription to THE ROTUNDA. I am interested in keeping in touch with my alma-mater.

Congratulations for following the tradition you began last winter by making at least part of the paper a voice of the students. THE ROTUNDA has vastly improved since I first received a copy in the fall of 1966.

I was most intrigued by Ethel's article and Donna's cartoon. I cannot believe that once again the administration is harping on the question of dress. It seems such a trivial matter when considered in perspective with the problems facing today's college administrations. Attire has little to do with the quality of education. Clothing has nothing to do with a person's ability to learn unless, of course, she is uncomfortable in what she is wearing.

I am teaching government in a small, conservative, and rural Southern school, but apparently my high school students are treated with greater respect than the students at Longwood College. These high school students are considered mature enough to dress themselves. The administration concerns itself with providing a proper curriculum, not a proper attire. Admittedly some abuse the privilege, but these minority actions are not permitted to dictate rules for the majority — that would not be in the American tradition.

Finally I would remind everyone that. Petty rules breed petty concerns which breed petty differences which create petty people.

Sincerely,
Carolyn Cummins

God Decides

To the Editor:

There seems to be some question at the head table about what announcements should be made, and which ones should be what. The policy seems to have been so far that only those announcements pertaining to the whole student body would be made. The discrepancy here is that, the members of the head table feel that Lost and Found articles should not be announced. Granted a lost sweater, or a lost hat does not warrant an announcement. But, rings, glasses and other pieces of jewelry are important and should be announced, especially if a reward is offered.

The head table has also refused to announce these announcements pertaining to clubs and organizations who are recruiting prospective students. The response, "Tell them to read the wire" is not enough. I feel that the head table policy on announcements should be carefully reviewed. When it has been sufficiently talked about, then the policy finally decided upon should be announced to the entire student body.

A Question Of Balance

by DAVID C. VEST
Assistant Professor of English

I have often suspected that The Moody Blues were the best rock and roll band in the world, but their new album, "A Question of Balance," has left me with no doubt. All the potential one saw in their earlier experimental albums, such as "Days of Future Passed," has been realized. For those who do not know, "Days of Future Passed" was the first important fusion of rock and roll with symphonic music. It set The Moody Blues against a background provided by the London Festival Orchestra. Later, apparently finding the orchestra cumbersome (and perhaps afraid of being pompous), the group abandoned the idea of working with such a large ensemble and began playing all the instruments themselves. They went on to produce "In Search of the Lost Chord" and "To Our Children's Children's Children." All this time their following was growing, to the extent that their last album sold a million copies.

But their relative popularity is unimportant to me. What is important is the level of artistry they have attained in "A Question of Balance." It seems to me that only tone deaf men of stone could fail to respond to this music. Beyond its technical excellence, its superior musicianship, its sweeping chord effects, the album has a theme that it as well stated and developed as one could wish. The "question" in the music is this: "In a world of persecution, burning in its greed, filled with pointless fear and empty speech," what are the possibilities for significant hope? "I'm looking for a miracle in my life," says the same speaker who asks the questions. The answers can be nothing as superficial and naive as "Love is all we need" or "A better world is coming." Nor can they be presented here without being made to sound like useless proverbs. Suffice it to say that the "answers" are drawn from a vision of the "balance" or the order of creation, and that they seem strangely related to ancient concept of humility, understanding, and compassion.

To the Moody Blues even go so far as to attack the doctrine or progress: "Look at progress, then count the cost; we'll spoil the seas with the rivers we've lost." This is not to be confused with mere ecology; the difference is that scientists preserve nature in order to use it, whereas The Moody Blues would preserve it in order to understand it, to contemplate it and discover the order behind it.

But I do not want to exalt the "message" at the expense of the music. Nor do I think they can rightfully be discussed as though they could be separated. In fact, I will close by saying that I know of no other recording by a contemporary musical group that exhibits such a splendid fusion of theme and form. Am I saying that rock and roll can be art? "Listen, we're trying to find you," say the Moody Blues.

"Good bye Charlie"

Lynne Wilson

GOODBYE CHARLIE began the '70-'71 season with a bang. George Axelrod's comedy, directed by Mr. Harvey Sheldman, was performed for three highly successful nights in Jarman Auditorium.

The play deals with the story of Charlie Sorrell (Belinda Brugh), a playboy-writer who was shot by a jealous husband. Charlie, immediately reincarnated as a well-endowed blonde bomb shell, returns to his beach house to find his friend, George (Brad White), who is now hilariously entangled in the problems of Charlie's new role.

The two leads were both extremely competent, and each was strong enough to hold his own in this fast-paced production. Delightful in her role as Charlie, Belinda's robust, matter-of-factness combined with an occasional lapse into femininity, brought alive the unusual character of Charlie Sorrell. She managed to sustain the characterization throughout the play, and her performance was up to professional standards.

Brad White also carried off a fine performance as George Tracy, Charlie's best friend. By employing movement and expression as much as voice to the fullest, he and Belinda complemented one another in acting ability and skill to achieve a true dramatic level.

Darcy Morrison played Rusty, the girl Charlie died for. She was convincing as the rich and beautiful, but dumb, playgirl. Though her delivery was somewhat hurried, she was successful in the role.

Of the minor characters, Julie Sherrod is perhaps most noteworthy. She was delightful as the flighty, high voiced Frannie, and it was a pleasure to watch her.

The production also deserves praise for its technical achievements. Special mention is due to the sound and (Continued on Page 3)

Rhetoric By Frederick

It has become a social and economic necessity to have a degree. Thus people who have no real academic interest are forced to endure a miserable four-year grind studying things that mean nothing to them when instead of being allowed to concentrate on learning the trade that they plan to enter. Why should a physical education major be made to study the romantic poets when she neither wants nor needs to do so? Why should a girl who has no other interest than music have to study any-thing else? Why should a degree be required for advancement in professions like computer programming, when most by far of the subjects required in college have nothing to do with developing proficiency in the field? Why should a broad education be available for anybody who wants and can handle it, but a person who would rather be in a high-grade technical school should not be forced to spend four years in college merely because a misplaced egalitarianism which intended to allow people to have a college education now required them to.

Since everybody has a degree now, the BA is no longer of much value in getting a job. Consequently more and more an advanced degree is being required for employment, and the whole silly cycle is beginning to repeat itself. More and more people are going to grad school; grad school standards are being lowered — the easiest and most worthless course I have ever taken was being given for graduate credit — an increasing number of people are planning to do graduate work not because they want to but merely from economic necessity.

Would it not perhaps be a good idea to stop giving the degree a sanctity it does not merit, set up trade schools of high learning in commercial art, education, pottery-making, and other fields not requiring a liberal education, and base our hiring and firing solely on a person's worth in his job?

It might also be suggested that degrees ought to be awarded on knowledge, not on time-in-residence on campus. If a student can demonstrate at the end of his freshman year by a series of oral and written examinations that he has learned in class or on his own the things that compose a college education, then why should he not be given a diploma? In the present system superior students are often trapped in trivial work for years because they must spend four years and take so many hours of courses, to graduate, regardless of whether they already know the material.

Thus, the insistence that everybody go to college, has had the ironic effect of robbing a degree of the prestige it holds.

Freshmen - Good Grades Carry With It An Award

Class of 1974: Do good grades seem impossible to you because courses are difficult and because college life involves so much more than just studying? There are thirty-two members of the class of 1973 who can say from experience that, with little effort, good grades are not impossible. Because these girls had attained a 3.5 average or better at the end of the fall semester of their freshman year, or at least 3.5 cumulative average at the end of the spring semester, they were eligible for membership in the Longwood chapter of Alpha Lambda Delta, a national honorary society for freshman women.

The purpose of Alpha Lambda Delta is to encourage high scholastic achievement in freshmen. Membership in the society is an honor and a source of encouragement in itself, and it offers many opportunities. The National Council of Alpha Lambda Delta has set up a series of $2,000 graduate school fellowships for members of Alpha Lambda Delta who have maintained a 3.5

average throughout their four years of college. At Longwood, Alpha Lambda Delta presents awards to seniors who have maintained a 3.5 average at graduation. As a special encouragement to freshmen, the society presents a bonus to the freshmen student with the highest average at the end of fall semester. Also, the active members of Alpha Lambda Delta held a very successful bake sale for deserving students. For Oktoberfest, the Alpha Lambda Delta's are planning a very entertaining booth for the midway — so come and "Pitch and Win."

The girls who are members of Alpha Lambda Delta are proud of their honor and would like to encourage the members of the Class of 1974 to start now to meet the challenge that college offers. There is great satisfaction in doing something well, and good grades are the proof of this. So freshmen, let the goals of learning and membership in Alpha Lambda Delta be yours this fall.

Z Is Smooth, Clever, Provocative, It Is, In Essence, Very, Very Real

By CHARLOTTE S. HOOKER
Professor of English,
Longwood College

"Z" is powerful entertainment: excellent cinema plus the stark and frightening realities of political intrigue. Based on Vasiliko's novel, the film unravels part of the tangled web of circumstances preceding the 1967 coup d'état in Greece which resulted in the "government of the colonels," now headed by Premier Papadopoulos. The plot centers upon the assassination of Dr. Lambrakis, a deputy of the Union of the Democratic Left, at Salonika in 1963. Leaving a hall where he has just lectured to an assembly of the Friends of Peace, he is brutally struck down in the street by two men in a triporter, while a line of guardsmen stands by like wooden soldiers. "A regrettable traffic accident," says the press. "Murder," indicates the autopsy three days later. An official government investigation is ordered, and the pressure is on.

Anyone doubting the factual basis of the film need only visit Greece and attempt, as I did recently, to discuss it in public. One morning over coffee in an Athens hotel dining room, I broached the subject but was quickly warned by my companion, an American woman who has lived in Athens for the past six years, long enough to know when silence there is wise. Papadopoulos's feelings are sensitive; and so we circumspectly spoke of "that film" — of its having received the Academy Award for Best Foreign Film, etc., — and of "that most excellent music" which provides the stirring background. (The composer, of course, is Theodorakis, whose name and music are both taboo in Greece since his banishment by the colonels. A clerk in an Athens record shop offered very apologetically to sell me a record by Greece's "second-best" composer and had a tear in her eye when I mentioned my preference for the foremost one, whom I dared to call by name. But back to "Z.")

The star of the film is no single individual, for the outstanding cast, headed by Yves Montand as the martyred deputy, Irene Papas (the only Greek named in the cast), who plays his wife, and Jean-Louis Trintignant, as the investigating judge, all merge into the background and take their places in the scheme of things. (One even forgets that one is watching the two great romantics of the French cinema.) Rather, the star is the plot, which builds and builds with a crescendo of tension that takes one almost to the point of frustrated madness, wondering just what is going on, until bang-bang-bang, all the clay pigeons come tumbling down with rapid and intense iteration until nothing and no one — not even the judge — is left.

So intricate, in fact, is the entire scheme that as soon as one sees the climax, he will want to stay for the next showing, to review the antecedent details. The viewer be forewarned: watch those opening scenes with the utmost care; they are vital.

And, of course, one mustn't go with the expectation of getting some lovely views of Athens. (Need I say that the film could hardly have been made anywhere in Greece?) Instead, one will see Algiers, headquarters for director Costa-Gavras. But the simulation is very good, in fact, the airport is prettier, and the name of Greece's most popular native beverage, "Fix" is prominent in several shots to add authenticity. In all, "Z" is smooth, it is clever, it is provocative, and it is, in essence, very, very real. It is a film that the viewer won't forget.

lighting effects. Both were well-timed, imaginatively employed, and subtle symbolic. The set was beautifully designed, props adding considerably to the playboy bad motif. It lacked only in the choice of bed spreads, the sofa cover, and the absence of moldings. Although costumes for the minor characters and the male lead were adequate, those for Belinda and Darcy were poorly designed and constructed. Costumes deserves commendation, however, for remarkably quick changes between scenes.

Altogether, Mr. Sneiderman deserved our applause for another fine production. His imaginative blocking and unquestionable ability in directing comedy combined with the fine talents of his leads to provide a delightful evening's entertainment.

Dr. Helms Wants Strong Defense, Volunteer Army

Dr. James Helms, a professor of history and the social sciences at Longwood College, is running for Congressman of the Fourth District. As the Republican candidate, he is running against Watkins Abbott, the Democratic candidate, and Ben Ragsdale, an independent candidate.

When asked about Dr. Helms, Mrs. Carbone, one of his campaign workers, stated, "He's a great person. He could get the job done. He loves people. And anyone with a general concern in people, we need more of that in politics."

Dr. Helms takes a stand on many of the vital issues of today. In defense he would like to see a strong defense system, and he supports the all-volunteer army concept. Control of federal spending, reduction of the national debt, and an overhaul of our tax structure are just a few of his interests in the national economy. He would also work to develop the economy and raise the living standards in the Fourth District. He feels that more of the money spent on education should reach the classroom. Mr. Helms supports the Nixon administration concerning the control of crime. The federal government needs to play a major role in controlling pollution. He also wants Social Security to be made into a true insurance program to insure benefits to all over the age of 65. Mr. Helms commits himself to make drugs socially unacceptable.

A few of his political activities include: the Fourth District coordinator for the 1968 House Republican Campaign; five county coordinator for the 1968 Nixon Campaign; founder, Longwood College Young Republicans, and Secretary of the Fourth District Republican Party.

William & Mary Announces Pass-Fail Courses Approved

Juniors and seniors of William and Mary will be allowed to elect one pass-fail course per semester beginning next fall as the result of action Tuesday by the Faculty of Arts and Sciences.

The measure reads, "A student may arrange with the registrar, within the period allowed for course changes, to elect one course in each semester of the junior and senior years, to be graded on a pass-fail basis. Such courses may not be used to satisfy area or concentration requirements."

The faculty also ruled that January term courses will also be graded pass-fail.

Two proposals were defeated by the Faculty. One read, "A transcript should be considered a record of progress toward a degree and show only those courses which a student has satisfactorily completed."

Also rejected at the special meeting Tuesday was the recommendation that Freshman seminars be graded pass-fail.

All fall proposals are among those originating in the Report of the Ad Hoc Curriculum Committee and from the recommendations of the Standing Curriculum Committee.

Literary Talent Wanted

The Gyre, Longwood's literary magazine, is looking for creative talent, in the fields of poetry, short stories, reviews, play scripts, and art works. Any student who has been dabbling creatively in these areas is urged to submit her material for consideration.

Louise Dougherty, the editor of the Gyre, feels that many students are unjustly intimidated by the magazine's reviewing board, and refuse to turn in material. Louise has made it clear that all work turned in will be evaluated, without revealing the author. It is hoped that the Gyre will have a profitable year, with everyone supporting this publication.

Spectator's comment they like LC's second team because "the Longwood girls' sure are aggressive."

Fencing Clinic Held At Mary Baldwin

Misses Sally Bush, Jean Smith, and Anne Huffman, members of Longwood's Physical Education Department, recently attended a fencing clinic held at Mary Baldwin College in Staunton, Va. Denise O'Connor, fourth ranking woman's foil fencer for the United States, from New Jersey, was the guest instructor for the clinic. After a brief review of the basic techniques involved in fencing, Miss O'Connor then covered such things as compound parries, binds, envelopments, stop thrusts, time thrusts, second intention attacks and many other advanced skills. The clinic, which was primarily for fencing coaches throughout the state, was also designed to instruct coaches in the use of electrical fencing equipment.

Varsity Fencing Coach, Miss Bush said she had learned a lot of teaching techniques and some good pointers for team strategy and skills. She also announced that the Longwood Fencing Team will be getting electrical equipment which will be used at the intercollegiate Tournament to be held here in March.

Basketball Tryouts Underway New PE Teacher Will Coach

Attention, all girls interested in lending their spirit and skill to the varsity or junior varsity basketball teams. Tryouts were held on Wednesday, October 28, at 4 in French gymnasium. Those interested in playing, who could not attend, please see Miss Jean Smith in her office in Tabb basement. Competition will begin on January 8. The teams this year will compete against 10 college teams and will end the season with a tournament in Lynchburg.

Some of the away games include Sweet Briar, Eastern Mennonite, Virginia Commonwealth University, William and Mary College, Lynchburg College, and Old Dominion University.

With the new Physical Education teacher, Miss Jean Smith, coaching the teams we are sure to have some very exciting and competitive games. We urge everyone to attend all the home games and bring your spirit to help us win.

Longwood Hockey Team Meets Madison; Student Support Of Hockey Team Urged

Despite the freezing cold, rain, or hot sunny weather, the Varsity Hockey Squad is always working to improve their skill, speed, and endurance.

Since we don't have a football team, our girls' varsity sports represent our school in competition and should be considered as interesting and rated as highly as a football, basketball, or baseball team in a co-ed college. Our girls need the support of the entire student body because they work hard and want to know their work is appreciated. For those students who don't participate in a sport but do come out and back up the team, this article is to give you an idea of what you are supporting. For those students who don't participate in a sport and can't come out to watch, this article is to show you what the team does for you and asks for your support and spirit to help us win.

The team has a very interesting coach who really works for the team as much as she works the team. Miss Diane Davis who graduated from Longwood, was a captain of the hockey team when she attended LC and is now doing an excellent job at coaching. Her enthusiasm, spirit, and humor during practices and games encourages the team to work.

What does the squad do in a practice? On an average of three times a week, the Varsity Hockey Squad can be seen running, dribbling and warming up at 4:00. When Miss Davis arrives, the team goes through ten to fifteen minutes of exercises, sprints up and down the hockey field and ends up by running around the field backwards, forwards, or dribbling with just the left hand. Sometimes they work on skills for a while. Short and long corner plays are practiced, driving and dribbling, or stopping the ball and passing to a certain spot are all a part of a continued practice to make these plays automatic. The goalkeepers, too, are at work with the team using them to practice against. After skill exercises, a scrimmage is started to find out exactly what needs to be worked on in the next practice.

Practice is only half of what the team does. The games provide the other half. At home games, the support and spirit of the students is greatly appreciated and encouraging. At away games, the team provides their own cheerleaders and their spirit represents the spirit of LC. It's hard when you have to leave on a long bus trip to play two games and get back late. Then have to get up early the next morning to take another long bus trip and play two more games. Besides this a few players have to go to extra practices on Sundays and when a player spends over ten hours on a bus during the weekend and plays over four games, she can get pretty tired. But the team loves it and if they have a bad game on a weekend, they work hard in Monday's practice to make up for it.

The best game of the season was with Madison College this past Tuesday, October 27. The team had been working hard for this game all season since they knew Madison had a good team and would provide some exciting competition.

There are still games with the alumnae, William and Mary, and Mary Washington College. Also the Tidewater College Tournament, the Southeast Tournament, and the National Tournament will be played at the end of the season. It will take more than a good team to win these games. It will take student support and spirit.

First Team Loses To Lynchburg And BC, Second Team Successful

It was a hard weekend for LC's hockey team this past Friday and Saturday. Friday morning they left at 10:30 to play Bridgewater at 3:00 that afternoon. Hampered by many technical faults, Longwood lost 2-1.

First team had difficulties gaining their momentum. During the last part of the second half, they began to work the ball and keep possession in their attacking half. However, the clock ran out before they could add to the goal already scored by Freda Lumsford. The game as a whole was an open game with the ball swinging sides and moving up and down the field.

Second team met with success against Bridgewater. Although the game was not a fast-moving one, it was controlled by Longwood. Not more than four or five times did Bridgewater break through LC's defense to get to their striking circle. One of those times, however, proved to be a small disaster for center halfback Margaret Lowry. A forward line player on BC's left side was carrying the ball straight to the goal. Margaret lunged to stop the attack, but lost her stick in the process. Crashing against the ball, ground, and another stick was too much, and Margaret's stick splintered in two pieces. The play continued as Margaret stared bewildered at her broken stick. However, she was given another and LC went on to take Bridgewater 1-0 with a goal scored by Brenda Price.

Coming home at 10:00 Friday night from Bridgewater, LC's hockey team was told to be in bed by eleven for at 7:30 the next morning they were back on the bus, this time going to Lynchburg College. Once again LC's first team could not get the momentum. It needed and lost to Lynchburg 2-0. The defense did play a particularly strong game, holding back the center forward and right inner from Lynchburg who were highly skilled players. The game moved quickly, and in the beginning Longwood controlled the ball in their attacking half of the field. However, Lynchburg took the ball down to score midway in the first half, catching LC off balance and LC never really regained control

Second team's game also moved quickly. Scoring one in each half, the team remains undefeated and unscored on. As was against Bridgewater, Lynchburg's forward line seldom broke through the defense. Endurance was another key to second team's 2-0 victory. During second half Lynchburg's defense was tired and LC's forward line controlled the ball practically the entire second half. Brenda Price, center forward, is credited with one of LC's points while Barbara Criddle scored the other.

This coming week finds LC taking on Madison College Tuesday and the alumnae for Geist weekend. These are the last home games for the 1970 season.

The game with Lynchburg was filled with slides and somersaults on a wet field.

Appropriations Hesitantly Releases Figures

By JOAN FEATHERS
STAFF REPORTER

Two weeks ago the Rotunda began efforts to secure information concerning budget allotments to clubs and organizations. It was intended that there be a table showing the allotments given each club last year and this year.

The Appropriations Committee readily gave the information concerning this year's appropriations. However, when the subject of last year's appropriations was brought up it was disclosed that the committee had voted that no information from last year's appropriations be given out by the committee itself, that it is up to each club to decide if such information will be made public. In order to obtain the necessary information it was finally necessary to search through old issues of the Rotunda to find the story with last year's allotments—information which could have easily been supplied by the committee.

One reason given for this withholding of information concerning funds supplied by students is that this year's committee should not be held in any way responsible for actions taken by last year's committee nor be questioned in regard to anything done by that committee. Dean Holt expressed some concern that students would not be able to make accurate judgments in comparing the allotments for each year.

In reading the table it is important to keep in mind that there are many things which would cause the sums in each year to differ. Did the club have a balance at the end of the previous year? Were there any discrepancies in a club's budget the previous year that would affect the allotment for the coming year? Has there been an increase in student enrollment which would necessitate more funds, such as in the case of yearbooks? Has the club or organization added some new causes or projects to their agenda that would require more money?

The reason for emphasizing the necessity of making budget allotments public is that each year each student pays an activities fee. Without it, no club or organization at Longwood could exist, for it is from the activity fee that clubs get the money to operate each year. The money the clubs or organizations receive comes only from this fee, and no money is supplied from any other source. Each year the total activity fee money is given to the Appropriations Committee, which is a committee under, and responsible to Legislative Board. Various clubs submit their books and budgets from the previous year along with a projected budget and bid for the coming year. The books are then audited by Pi Omega Pi and returned to the committee, which decides how much money will be given to each club.

Basically, in appropriating the money, the committee has to take into consideration the entire picture—the number of clubs and their requests, versus the amount of money available. To be eligible for funds an organization must strive to benefit the campus as a whole and try to make a positive contribution to the student body.

In spite of the fact that clubs must follow certain procedures, it is up to each club to use the money as it sees fit—the Appropriations Committee makes no recommendations as to how the money should be handled except that it be spent to benefit the student

Dr. Lara Hoggard To Hold Concert At LC Nov. 8

By BELINDA BRUGH
STAFF REPORTER

Longwood College will be the host school this week end for the Virginia Inter-Collegiate Chorus. Participants in the three day weekend festival will be the various college chapters in Virginia of the Music Educator's National Conference.

Guest conductor for this festival will be Dr. Lara Hoggard who is currently Director of Choral Activities at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. Dr. Hoggard has not only gained a unique reputation as a musician of outstanding capabilities, but also as teacher, conductor, and writer. He has exerted an impressive and continuing influence in American music and education. In 1967, Dr. Hoggard was named William Rand Kenan Professor of Music, one of five endowed chairs at UNC.

The festival will end Sunday afternoon with a concert in Jordan Auditorium at 3:00 p.m.

The program will consist of such selections as Schubert's Mass in G; Orlandus Lassus's, My Heart Is Offered Still To You; Hugh Robertson's, O Lonely Heart; and Theron Kirk's, It Was A Lover and His Lass. Admission is free and the public is invited to attend.

Workers Finished Rotunda Reopened First Sing Held

Joan, back on the rightful spot, the Rotunda.

By MARY FRANCIS BALDWIN
STAFF REPORTER

A long awaited day at Longwood College finally arrived when the Rotunda was once again opened to students, faculty and visitors. It was officially opened last Wednesday when the Reds and Greens got together for a traditional Blue and White sing around Joan of Arc.

The Rotunda area, which use to house students, administrative offices, and classrooms, was closed last year for renovation. South Ruffner was the only section which was used again last year for a dormitory.

While closed, workmen spent hours building and remodeling offices. Many personnel offices, including the President's, have been relocated on different floors of Ruffner, but the offices of the Deans remain in the same location. Third floor Ruffner is now used by the Foreign Language Department. Beams were inserted to help support the dome of the Rotunda. Also, the Information office, with Mrs. Clark and Mrs. Orange as hostesses, has been moved from the Alumnae House back to its place of honor in the Rotunda.

Stamp Out Apathy,
Support Major
Elections

The 1970 Fall major elections are suffering greatly from lack of support. As of Friday, October 30, many of the offices were without running candidates. Debbie Remsburg, Elections Committee Chairman was forced to announce the lack of support, and had no choice but to extend the deadline for submitting petitions. Several petitions did go out over the weekend and by Sunday night response had increased somewhat.

This lack of student support although not officially causing the overall program to be changed has caused internal havoc. As the schedule stands, the first petitions were to go out Tuesday, October 27, and were to be posted by Sunday, November 1. Because of the lack of support, and extended deadline the petitions will now be posted and receive the required number of signatures before November 3rd in order to hold the scheduled conferences. This means that students had two days to see the major elections candidates on the elections board. It should also be noted here that if the applications for officers are not adequate, or the stipulation of an overall 2.5 grade average is not maintained, plans then will have to be delayed.

As the elections board stands now, the 10 major offices are being sought after by only 17 girls.

The response so far to the major elections campaign indicates that inbody.

The appropriations run from year to year, with the money being given at the start of each semester. The committee usually meets in the spring to begin planning for the coming year. However, this does not mean the committee is inaccessible during the rest of the year. If it should happen that a club doesn't get the money it feels is necessary, or is dissatisfied in any way, they can appeal to the committee for more funds and their request will be taken into consideration. As an added safety measure a contingency fund is kept for use in emergencies.

There has been one major adjustment recently made in the structure of the committee. In previous years the committee consisted of a few students with a majority of faculty members. It was brought to the attention of Legislative Board that students were in the minority in making decisions that involved student money and the structure was changed to allow students the majority voice.

The members of the committee include the class treasurers, the president and secretary of the student government, two rising sophomores, two rising juniors, and three faculty members. Currently serving on the committee are Brenda Southworth, Betsy Craig, Ann Ingram, Anne Becht, Casey Wilkes, Nan Sayles, Bonnie Moseley, Mary Adkinson, Kathy Bozard, Terry Jones, and Melinda Lewis, chairman. The three faculty members are Frank Williams, Assistant Business Manager, Tim Brown, Director of Student Activities, and Dean Holt.

terest in the student body is certainly lacking. For, as the table indicates, no more than two contestants are running for any position, and in some cases the one election has already been held as only one girl is running.

The interest factor here is a very important one, for if students are not satisfied with their present student Government, they are doing little to alleviate the problem for 1971-72 season. Major officers have begun to wonder if students who are not interested enough to run for the various offices, will be interested enough to even vote.

Students should be aware that the conferences will be held on Wednesday from 7:00 until 9:00 p.m. Each candidate will be given two minutes of speaking time and three minutes for questioning time. ## Is Competition Really That Important?

Geist, to many has always been a cherished weekend at Longwood College, in which the tradition of Blue and White spirit was carried out. But, it has become apparent, especially by the actions of both Reds and Greens this weekend, that the true sisterly spirit is dying.

Both Reds and Greens had worked hard to prepare their respective skits and had given up many long hours of studying time to present to the parents, friends, and students an enjoyable evening, and indeed it was.

However, it was fortunate that the visitors did not hear or see what was said and done after the winner was announced. Many Reds and Whites cried and expressed their feelings of defeat, meanwhile, the Green and Whites seemed to gloat with expressions of victory. Is this showing the Blue and White spirit? Is this upholding the traditional meaning of Geist? If so, our meaning of spirit and tradition needs to be revised.

Sure, the weekend was full of competition between the Reds and the Greens, but competition is not a new word to our vocabulary. It has been around since the colonists first settled this land. There was competition to see who could settle a colony first and there is competition in all businesses today to a certain extent, competition is good, for it makes people strive to do their best. But, it need not be carried to extremes.

A teacher once said to me that I should be mature enough to realize that I don't have to compete with anyone else. The only person I needed to compete with was myself. This should apply to the Reds and the Greens, too. They don't really need to compete with anyone but themselves, and in so doing strive to make everything they do their best.

Gloating about victory or crying over defeat is not expressing a mature college attitude. Both colors need to take a look at themselves and see if they are really trying to portray the true Blue and White spirit of Longwood. Ask yourselves this question, "Is competition really that important?"

— M. F. B.

Communication Blackout

If there is any idea emphasized on this campus, it is communication. Usually, the stress is placed on communication between the administration and the students, or between the faculty and the students. But maybe we're overlooking a more important problem: the lack of communication between students. One can look at Geist to see that the problem does indeed exist. Where was the co-operation when girls from SRO, Longwood's radio program, were trying to obtain information about Geist to broadcast? They were offering ten minutes of free radio time, but it seemed that no one was willing to share facts concerning the anticipated events. At the last minute one Geist member finally came through. With this information added to the girls' own past Geist experiences, an SRO program featuring Oktoberfest was pieced together. At the Senior Class meeting, it was reported that on alarmingly few seniors were participating in preparing for Geist. Where were the other seniors? Perhaps they were tired of having their ideas rejected because they weren't important enough. Before we can begin to exchange ideas and opinions with the administration and faculty, we have to share and co-operate among ourselves. That is what successful communication is all about.

The Board Responds

I would like to make some comments concerning the article in the last issue of the ROTUNDA. Upon being interviewed last Sunday night at 9 p.m., I will have to admit I was a little irate. Although treated courteously, I was made to feel that both Casey and I had been hiding some big secret concerning the questionaire and what the Legislative Board has been doing about the possibilities of having alcohol (not just beer, as the headline incorrectly states) on campus. If any student ever read the Legislative Board minutes, which have been posted in each dorm for the past three weeks, they would already know that the board has been working on the questionnaire and had presented a tentative one to Dr. Willett. They would know that we were discussing more specifically questions to be on due to the fact that the Physical Education Department is also doing a questionnaire in which factual information concerning drinking will be contained. Another reason we cut the questions down is we wanted to condense all the material into one page for brevity.

By writing such an incorrectly headlined article, I feel that the students have been made to think that the board has finally revealed some big secret which they have been hiding. This definitely is not the case! I would like to remind all students again that all our meetings are open and meeting times are announced ahead of time in the minutes of each week. We have nothing to hide — why should we? We are your representatives and are only trying to do the job you elected us to do. We are always welcome to your opinions and questions, but may be sometimes reluctant to answer questions concerning all the intricate details of a matter because we may not always have all the information at hand and do not want to say something which is untrue.

It is true that this board, as any other board, works closely with Dr. Willett, and this is as it should be. We are extremely lucky to have such an interested and capable President as he to help our Student Government to be the strong, efficient organization that it is. My quote, found in the last paragraph of the article, was taken out of the context in which it was found and I would like to explain it. Casey, as the board's representative, talks to Dr. Willett daily to keep up the communications between the two, and to inform the board about what is going on each week within the college. As vice-president, I naturally do not communicate with Dr. Willett as often as Casey because I receive my information from her.

I would like to add that I think the entire paragraph of the article should have been left out. Both Casey and I were very frustrated at the way we were interviewed without previous notice, the lateness of the hour, and the abruptness with which we were approached, besides the fact that we were supposed to be in a required meeting at the time. We both do know "exactly what's going on" concerning the questionnaire and now, so should all the students, the advisory board members, as well as the faculty, thanks to the article. And now that everyone is informed, I hope students will come to the next board meeting to see how steps will be taken next and to see how much such an article has set us back in our progress with either the Visiting Board members and/or students.

Thank you,
Andee Maddox
Vice-President of Student Government.

Day Students Upset

Dear Editor:

I would have thought that you, as an editor, would not let a sarcastic, untruthful insinuation of a minority group of fellow students be printed in our newspaper. The statement I'm referring to that contains this insinuation is in the third column of the front page of the issue dated October 8, 1970. The statement is the following: "In spite of being a day student, Martha has been extremely active in activities at Longwood."

With the phrase "in spite of being a day student" we have unjustly hurt the feelings of these students. First of all, I think you have no grounds on which to make such an insinuation that these particular students do not participate in activities or that they are inferior to the dorm students. If you took the percentage of the day students as compared to the percentage of the dorm students that participate in activities, you will most likely find that the percentage of participation for the day students to be higher than or close to that of the dorm students. This block, there are approximately eighteen hundred sixty dorm students as compared to eighty day students. Second of all, the day students are very ill informed as to the exact day, place, and time these activities are taking place. In fact, these students seem to be left out purposely.

As an editor, you owe these students a formal apology, especially to Martha. It's the least you can do.

Sincerely,
Sarah Andrews

False Accusation

In spite of everything else that I have been accused of in the past few weeks, I can certainly say at this time that I have not let "a sarcastic, untruthful insinuation of a minority group of fellow students be printed in the ROTUNDA, I am well aware of what was said about Martha, as I wrote the statement myself, in spite of being a day student, Martha has been extremely active in activities at Longwood."

With this statement, I have not insinuated that day students do not participate in activities, or that they are in any way inferior, or that they are said though is that I realize the problem that day students have in finding out just what is going on around campus, I have complemented Martha on the fact that she has shown outstanding activity, in spite of the communication factors that do exist between boarding and day students. Martha herself took the statement as a compliment, and not as an attack on inferiority. Therefore, day students you have not been abused, in fact, you have just brought more attention to yourself by your outstanding member, Martha, who has been commended for her outstanding efforts in trying to bridge the communication problems that do exist.

The Editor, L.W.

An Unwarranted Criticism

I would like to comment on the cartoon in the October 28 issue of the Rotunda. I feel that it was not in keeping with the true purpose of the Editorial Section. Instead of offering some form of constructive criticism, the cartoon was a direct SLAM towards the whole institution. It offers no specific criticism towards any aspect of Longwood. The cartoon reflects a feeling of spathy on the part of the cartoonist, who seeks to escape the "unbearable" situation here at Longwood, rather than offer some workable solution for her criticism. How can we the readers know what she is dissatisfied with, when she gives us no grounds to build on. We can only presume that she is discontent with the overall atmosphere at Longwood. Certainly Longwood is not the ideal college, but name one school that is. However, it is up to each student to strive to make Longwood the very best we can, and it is only through constructive criticism accompanied by ideas or suggestions that we can attain this goal. Longwood has much to offer and with the help of every student it will have more to offer. However, if any student is so completely dissatisfied with the overall college atmosphere here at Longwood, she should seek an institution which would better reflect her ideas. Thank you,

Debbie Hyatt

Cartoonist Responds

The cartoon was DIRECTLY related to the editorial opposite it, as has been the policy of the Rotunda. Apathy, I realize, is not a problem unique to Longwood. The cartoon was intended to stress the fact that Longwood is a full-case school. People do tend to vanish on Friday! Professional cartoons as a rule point out faults rather than offer a plan for "reconstruction." Perhaps if the cartoon offended some people it at least woke them up.

Vicious Rivalry

Last year a Longwood senior was ridiculed for comparing the Red and Green contesting to the "Cardinal and Bluebird rivalry" of a kindergarten class. I did not agree with her then, but I am inclined to now. I was backstage Saturday night after the Geist skit winners had been announced and I was appalled at the immaturity of some of my peers. Green and Whites were cruelly gloating over their victory and razzing the losers. And there were the Red and Whites who were crying and gnashing their teeth and planning revenge (physically and mentally). I thought Geist was supposed to promote unity in the school and not a division. Green and Red spirit seems to be annihilating Blue and White Spirit. Longwood needs unity to survive and unity seems to be missing from much of our activities.

A Vote Of Thanks

Oktoberfest has come and gone, and in my opinion it was a great success. Much of the success of the weekend was due to the valuable technical assistance of a Longwood alumna, Pat Quinn. She made the skits what they were. Pat was at dress rehearsal Thursday night and made several suggestions to both Green & Whites and Red & Whites. She spent the better part of Friday afternoon helping us to reset and hang more lights. Pat offered her assistance to both colors, and I, for one, gladly welcomed it. Her assistance gave the skits a professional quality, which has usually been absent. Thank you, Pat Quinn.

Players Announce

Tryouts for the Longwood Players—Hampton-Sydney Jongleurs' production of Eugene Ionesco's THE KING will be held Wednesday and Thursday, November 4 and 5 from 7:30 to 10:00 p.m. at the Jarman Studio Theatre. There are three female and three male roles in the play which will be presented December 10, 11, and 12, in Jarman Auditorium.

The play is one of Ionesco's most ambitious efforts, and it draws freely on the use of comedy and absurdism as well as tragedy in a sometimes bizarre mix of styles.

Scripts are now available for an advanced reading of the play and may be obtained from Douglas M. Young of the Speech and Dramatic Arts Department who will direct the play.

Support

The Rotunda wishes to thank all the interested students who have supported the Letters to the Editor column this week.

Students are reminded that Letters do not have to be any specific length, but that they do have to be signed. The Rotunda staff wishes to urge all students to support the newspaper, for it is in this way that we are able to find out what the general consensus of opinion is. We urge and welcome your support.

An Opinion On Student Activities

By ETHEL REITER
STAFF REPORTER

As a social institution, education is basically conservative. It has failed in a number of ways to meet effectively and adequately the changes confronting it in rapidly growing society. Therefore, student activities in concept and practice seldom progress to a point of value and significance. At Longwood students are treated as immature high school adolescents incapable of meeting their personal, social, and academic problems without the assistance of college personnel or an appropriate campus organization.

Such student activities have a few faults, in spite of the pleasures involved (clown for a week-end, secret sessions, or Maypole dancing) and the rewards gained (close friendly ties with administrative officials, group identification, or the reputation as a well-rounded individual). Although the catalogue statements of purposes are idealistic and inspirational, these organizations are scarcely worthy of such classification. In the first place, there is an over-emphasized concern with trivialities. Countless clubs are founded for no challenging reason, and consequently the code becomes one of proper attire, pleasant attitude, and Amy Vanderbilt etiquette. To add to the abhorrent state of affairs many administrators delight at such programs. Another example of concern with trivia is the organization and conduct of student government in general. This organization is overly obsessed with rules and regulations. Student government leaders are often so fearful of violating a rule of parliamentary procedure or an inside confidential agreement that they fail to present or expose crucial issues or problems. Student activities are extrinsic sentimental. Not to say that bouncing clowns, unknown ghostly singing spirits, or red and white hockey players are pointless, but they do tend to be quite emotional and anti-intellectual. Fortunately, these campus clubs do accomplish something. They provide a perfect escape from reality; unless, of course, one plans to join a circus or permanently reside in Never Never Land.

Higher education should provide students with the understanding they need to work toward a more effective democracy. Democracy requires persons who are skilled in human relations, experienced in working toward democratic ideals, and able to combine an intellectual and practical approach to social problems. There are a few campus organizations at this Southern college that meet up to these standards. The latest, The Student Social Interest Action Committee, though opposed, handicapped, and pressured has done a tremendous service to the Farmville community and will continue to do so. Why don't more students seek this type of realistic and admirable involvement?

Longwood Day Students Not Aware Of Campus Activities

By CHRISTINE SHARP
STAFF REPORTER

From hearing opinions around campus, it has almost become a consensus that the day students felt left out of extracurricular activities. Because announcements are made at mealtime, it is hard for day students to find out about meetings and other activities. In an effort to discover how day students really felt, a survey was run. The questions were as follows: What do you think of Longwood as a day student? Do you feel left out of extracurricular activities, and if you do, why?

The reactions to the survey were very good and also optimistic. Some of the comments were the following: A Junior, "Being a day student isn't so bad until someone finds it out." A sophomore commented, "Longwood is a great college so why shouldn't we take advantage of it." Another sophomore said, "One of our biggest problems is not being informed of dining hall announcements." One of the Freshmen said, "I feel it's what we make it." Other freshmen said, "I don't see a thing wrong with it." "Day students miss out on all the announcements that take place in the dining hall. We can't participate in activities until we get the word." "Being a day student is not the worst thing in the world. We enjoy each other very much and become close friends. Being a day student may have its disadvantages, but there are some rewards. I've been one for three years and I'm not any worse off for it." stated a Junior, Joyce Foster, a Senior, voiced her opinion, "It is harder for a day student to become involved in extracurricular activities. A day student really has to be interested in something to take all the extra effort to become involved. I don't feel discriminated against because of my being a day student. I have dormitory friends and feel accepted." From the comments it appears that most day students are not only satisfied with being a day student but really like it. The greatest problems with extracurricular activities seems to be with underclassmen who have not yet learned the schedule of activities.

Victorian Institute Is Longwood's First; Termed A Success

By MARGARET BLAIR
STAFF REPORTER

The Victorian Institute held on October 24, the first of its kind at Longwood, may become an annual event. The Institute is designed as a forum where scholars can present innovative theories concerning different aspects of the age.

Dr. J. O. Bailey, of the Department of English of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, was guest speaker at this year's Institute. He discussed heredity in the novels of Thomas Hardy. Papers were also presented by W.T. Duke, R.T. Couture, and Dr. Rosemary Sprague, of the Longwood College faculty. Not only were politics, history, and literature brought out in their papers, but the discussion afterwards was also ranged on topics concerning Darwin's Origin of Species, opera, art, and philosophy. The attendance at the institute showed that Longwood was well-represented by many departments: art, education, English, speech, and philosophy among them. Visiting faculty and students came from Staunton, Williamsburg, Hampden-Sydney, Clinch Valley College near Bristol, Virginia, and also from North Carolina. However, very few Longwood College students attended.

Progress On The Alcohol Question

Dear Mr. Broadbush:

Our Student Government Association has requested that we conduct a study of our current policies as they pertain to the consumption of alcohol on campus. We have reviewed Sections 4-62 and 4-73.2 of the Code of Virginia. After reviewing these sections, I would like to pose the question as to whether, from a legal standpoint, a change in our rules to permit alcohol in the dormitories would contribute to a violation of these sections of the Code. Any proposed change, of course, would incorporate the wording that possession in a dormitory room must be in compliance with all of the laws of Virginia, particularly that relating to age. Realistically speaking, however, it would appear to me to be extremely difficult to enforce rigidly the age requirement under conditions where those of age 21 might possess it in their rooms and those beneath that age could not. I would appreciate, therefore, any opinion which you could render as to whether or not such a change in policy would, from a legal standpoint, contribute to violations of the aforementioned sections of the Code.

Let me say again that we are looking forward to having you with us next month.

Sincerely,
Dr. Henry I. Willett, Jr.

EDITOR'S NOTE: The question of the legality of consuming alcoholic beverages on the Longwood campus was the subject of the above letter sent by President Henry I. Willett, Jr., to Mr. Broadbush, the Attorney General of Virginia. Dr. Willett sent this letter in behalf of the Student Government asking for an answer to the legal matters involved with the consumption of alcohol. No further action can be taken pending the reply from the Attorney General's office.

VOL. XLVI

Longwood College, Farmville, Va., November 6, 1970

No. 6

Major Elections Need Your Support Go To The Polls Nov. 9 And Vote

Legislature Chairman

"Each candidate here tonight has a philosophy on why are her reasons for running for the office for which she is a candidate. Mine are that there are four understandings that a person must have to successfully run for the office of president of student government, and I am chairman of legislative board. The first is an understanding of the purposes of student government and of its president. It's the student government's purpose to act as a reservoir of your ideas and your opinions and to develop them into a precise and a clear intent and then to take action on them. It is therefore the president's responsibility to see that these student opinions go through this process as effectively as possible. I mean to keep directly abreast of students' opinions and ideas and to provide for proper backing so that future advancements may go through this process as effectively as possible. The second is an understanding and interrelationship of the three boards. I feel that it is very important that we have a strong executive council so there may be a greater amount of cooperation between the three boards, and that their efforts may be coordinated. The third is an understanding of the interrelationship between Legislative Board and her committees, and also the committees of the faculty. It is important that the chairman be aware of the different means of changing ideas into action so that she may choose the most effective means. The final understanding is an understanding of how all this fits together and how it can be used. As chairman, it would be my responsibility to organize all matters pertaining to legislative board and also all relations on the inter-collegiate level, so that the legislative board itself may function with intelligence and effectively. In this past year working as an officer of Legislative Board I have worked directly with Casey and Dr. Willett and with members of the administration and the faculty and I feel that I have developed a background on which I can rely. These are what I stand on."

J. Macé

Legislative Chairman

My name is Frankie Brown, and I am running for chairman of Legislative Board. I have served on the board since second semester of my freshman year; and, I want to tell you, it's impossible, absolutely impossible, to sit in there two and a half hours a week and not become almost totally involved in most of the aspects that go on, if not all of the school. You are in a position in which you see everything going on at all times, and you really get in a position in which you can act on behalf of the student body as their representative. I do want to tell you now that I will do all that I can for you, the students at Longwood, to make it the most wonderful experience of your life and the easiest and the greatest time you could ever have. I know there are a lot of changes coming up, but you, the students, are going to have to endure them. You are going to have to live with them and you should have the most say so that's absolutely possible on what these changes will be. It's because of you that we have the three boards now, and this is going to lead to my next point, because I wonder how many of you know exactly what the three boards are. I know myself when I was a freshman I was totally confused. I headed these three boards, I didn't know which power went where and I just don't know where which board had the jurisdiction of what. But if you think of the name of the board and analyze it carefully, it's more evident exactly what the duties are. Legislative, which means law-making, will naturally make the student regulations and will also discuss the key problem of the student body's welfare. This is equivalent of a president of the student body or like in high school your SCA president except you have more power in the rules that govern you as a student individual of Longwood College. I feel with the help and the support of you as the students and the people we are most concerned about now that I will be qualified to serve as chairman and there is one thing that I would like to add: Legislative Boards are open they are not closed or concealed and there is nothing underground about them.

Judicial Chairman

I could stand here and make many promises and state my qualifications or simply ask you to vote for me, but instead I want to tell you why I am running for this office, what it will mean to me, and what I can do for you in hopes that you will place your confidence in me for this important position. My main interest is in you the student. You are the individual for whom the Judicial system is set up and you are the ones who make the system a success. Some type of judicial system or specified code of behavior is essential for any form of community living. In order to insure each individual protection of her rights, a disciplinary board is also essential because of the few who are ironically chosen to ignore standards set up to protect them. It is the responsibility of the chairman to see that all proceedings of the Judicial Board are carried out in the most fair and just way possible. I strongly feel that in order for fairness and justice to prevail, each board member must consider each case with an open mind. Unbiased, objective and willing to accept extenuating circumstances, should they be involved. Chairmanship requires much time and work and involves many responsibilities. These responsibilities include conducting preliminary investigations when a violation is reported and presenting the case for administrative view after the board has made its decision. I want to accept these responsibilities. I could offer the time needed to perform my duties well. Having served as secretary of Judicial Board for the past year I have found working with the board is truly a rewarding experience, as well as a learning experience. Our decisions and punishments are not to hurt but to simply impress upon the violator the importance of obeying rules and regulations and most of all the importance of honesty. Finally I want you to know that I will be willing and ready at any time to hear any suggestion that you might have on any phases of the Judicial system. I will weigh these suggestions carefully and I will present each of them to the board for consideration. There are two choices to be made now. My choice is to serve you and I hope that your choice will be to elect me as your chairman.

Judicial Chairman

"Honor is one of the most cherished principles at Longwood. Our honor code is effective because you want it to be. I am not pretending that every violation is reported but I do think that a good majority of them are. Having served as a class representative on Judicial Board since the second semester of my freshman year I feel that I know what you expect of the board and the honor code. This is why I am capable to serve as chairman. But before you place anyone in that position, you probably want to know their ideas on certain issues. As of now Judicial Board handles honor code violations and social code violations. Since residence board handles some social violations I think that they should handle all of them and Judicial Board should only deal with honor code violations. I feel that this will strengthen both boards. Of course this would call for a constitutional revision which can only be brought about by the student body. Another issue of major interest concerns alcohol in the dorms. I'll support whatever the majority wants, but I would like to see it limited to certain dorms so that students could have the right to choose whether or not they want to live in such a dorm. In conclusion I would just like to say that the judicial board is not out to get anyone. In all cases it considers the student first, the college second, and itself last. So whenever you elect give me and judicial board your full support."

J. Putney

Residence Chairman

"I'm really appreciative of the opportunity for me to present my views tonight and I'm glad so many of you turned out even though 600 of you, give or take a few, had a little outside influence in the matter. I have several major ideas how Residence Board can become a more effective governing body. First, advocate that all social rules and social cases now handled by the Judicial Board should be handled and taken over by Residence Board. This change would be a major change and it would require a revision of the constitution. However, I feel that this change would benefit both boards. It would strengthen Residence Board and be of benefit to Judicial Board as well. At the present time approximately one half of all cases tried by Judicial Board are social cases. By giving Residence Board the power to try these cases, Judicial Board would have more time to devote to honor code cases.

M. Webb

Secondly, I believe that all calls down should be abolished. Call downs are usually given for trivial things that they are not taken seriously and with good reason. In place of the call down I think a verbal warning given by either Residence Board or the dormitory council would be sufficient. Second offense or more serious offenses would result in days of plain campus. Concerning the dress code, I feel that each girl at Longwood is mature enough to dress in a manner that she thinks is proper. And I am definitely in favor of open dorms from 2-5 on Sunday.

These are not bold promises that I plan to keep. These are just ideas that I feel would strengthen Residence Board. I am willing to work as chairman of Residence Board and I am willing to represent you.

Residence Chairman

"My name is Mary Tabb Johnson and I am running for chairman of Residence Board. I am serving on the board this year as dorm president of Curry and I think I am aware of the problems that the board is facing. Longwood's campus is changing very rapidly and the major organizations on campus must keep up with these changes in the best interest of the student body. This can only be achieved through cooperation of the student body and the administration. Dorm life is one of the major aspects of our college careers and Residence Board, and it's the job of Residence Board to see that the students cooperate in making dorm conditions acceptable for the residents. The students themselves must voice an opinion before this can be carried out. No board can be effective without the cooperation of the students. I would also like to see Residence retain the respect that I feel it deserves as one of the major organizations on campus; especially in upholding the rules set by the college and during Residence board trials. As Residence board chairman I would try to keep the lines of communication open between the students and the administration."

"It is important that during Orientation Week, the growing spirit of Longwood is instilled in all new students. I would like to help Longwood with their task as they helped me when I came. I held several offices in high school even though I attended four different schools. I was active as a member of my Chapel in Germany while working and attending college. It was there that I helped organize many activities. Being Orientation Chairman will require much work, especially during the summer and early fall. I will be attending Longwood all summer and could work closely with administrators to prepare another successful Orientation week."

B. Aston

"Having thoroughly enjoyed working with orientation as a colleague and Student Assistant, I would very much like to serve on Legislative Board as Chairman of Orientation. Longwood means a great deal to me, for she has given me many opportunities to learn and grow. I would very much like to show my appreciation by serving her in this capacity."

An Open Letter:

Longwood is in a state of change. These conferences tonight and the elections to follow will specify what kind of changes you as a voter would like to see come about.

The conferences were specifically designed for those students who do not know these candidates or for what they stand. Your only association with the candidates may be the conferences tonight. From what you hear and learn you will be asked to go to the polls and vote.

We urge you to listen carefully, to ask questions and decide intelligently which candidate seems most acceptable to you to serve in the position in question. Although your vote counts only one half, you Freshmen are an important part of these elections. Your votes alone can be the deciding factor in the election results.

Remember, the student government is supposed to represent YOU! YOU are the ones who will decide the future of Longwood. Again we urge you to listen carefully and we cannot impress upon you strongly enough that your vote DOES count. Go to the polls on Nov. 9 and 11 and VOTE!

Rotunda Represents Longwood At Gov. Holton's Press Conference

By LINDA VANHORN
Staff Reporter

On Monday, November 9, Governor Linwood Holton held a press conference for the news media of Virginia four year and community colleges. Longwood's ROTUNDA was represented at the 2:30 conference by three of the members of the staff. This was the first press conference of its kind that Governor Holton has held for the student press. He expressed his desire for "open lines of communication" with the young people in Virginia and mentioned the fact that this was one of the points in his campaign platform of last November. He also stated the importance of having young people with young ideas on his staff, and noted that his staff is the youngest of all of the recent staffs with the average age in the thirties. With this introduction the governor opened the floor for questions and discussion.

Q — The students of UVA voted by referendum to repeal the code of conduct set up by the board of visitors. Do you support the students' actions?

A — Not completely. I don't feel in the position to tell college administrators how to deal with this type of situation. Students should have a voice in the making of the rules, but they should not have the full right to make the rules. Rules should be fair and representative.

Q — Virginia students helped campaign for the passage of the new constitution. How soon should higher education expect financial help from this?

A — The earliest results will come in the regular session of the Virginia Assembly in January, 1972.

Q — How does the Virginia Assembly justify subsidizing two four year colleges in Petersburg when colleges such as VCU are so desperately in need of funds?

A — This matter is not one subject to veto; therefore, I must refer you to the General Assembly with that question.

Q — What was your opinion of HEW's attack on Longwood's foundation set up to send faculty children to the private white academy?

A — I don't know the specifics of this question. I am opposed to any discrimination anywhere but if anyone wants to support such a foundation it is his constitutional right.

Q — The General Assembly reduced by three million dollars the appropriations at Old Dominion University. Can other schools expect similar cuts?

A — We didn't cut back on what Old Dominion was receiving. We were, however, unable to meet new requests especially in the area of graduate programs.

Q — What is or might be the effects of campus disturbance on funds appropriated by the General Assembly?

A — So far there has been no effect. There has been little damage to property and no one has been hurt so far. There has been some damage in animal funds being cut back because of campus disturbance.

Q — The Director of the Civil Rights Office has suggested changes in the admission requirements of colleges to include remedial programs or maybe five or six year college programs. How do you feel about this?

A — I am very much in agreement with the proposed programs. These programs would provide education to those who under other situations may not receive it.

Q — Do you feel students and faculty should be included on the board of visitors?

A — Students, yes, I have already appointed one former student to work on such a board. It is not feasible, however, to have faculty representation since they would in a sense be working for themselves.

Q — At Longwood, the board of visitors meetings are closed to the student press. What do you feel about this?

A — Some board of visitors' are open but I can't really comment on this. I encourage the boards to meet regularly with the students but this is a matter for the individual boards to decide.

After an hour of interesting discussion the governor left for another engagement and the conference was likewise brought to an end.

- 1) Opinion of the Attorney General clearing up legal complications.
- 2) Send out questionnaire.
- 3) Results of questionnaire.
- 4) Legislative Board works on ground rules after examining the results of the opinion poll.
- 5) The ground rules are presented to the student body for final opinion.
- 6) Receipt of recommendations from Legislative Board by the President.
- 7) Review of Legislative Board's proposal by the President who is authorized by the Board of Visitors to establish social rules of the College.
- 8) Recommendation by the President to the Board of Visitors.
- 9) Action by the Board of Visitors (As in all State institutions the authority to determine college policies and regulations is granted to the Board of Visitors by the General Assembly of Virginia as outlined in Section 23-188 in the Code of Virginia.

Legislative Announces Steps For Studying Alcohol Here

Legislative Board would like to make every effort to keep you informed on the points involved concerning the issue of alcohol on campus. Realizing that a change of this magnitude cannot be brought about overnight, the Legislative Board lists below the present suggested plan for studying the issue:

Please pay particular attention to the steps concerning the opinion poll, remembering that this is a chance for you to express yourselves concerning this issue. As in any rule change, it takes much deliberation among the 3 Boards to change a policy of this kind. Much consideration must be given to stating the rule, setting punishments for violations, etc. Therefore, these ground rules must be in exact form before they can be recommended to the President and eventually to the Board of Visitors for final approval.

Reminder: Make Schedule Changes Soon

Students are reminded that they must make any changes in their schedule for second semester before December 18. No schedule change will be allowed after that date until the regular drop-add period which begins February 2. There is no charge for changes made before December 18, however the regular drop-add charge of $5.00, plus $2.00 per charge will be in effect during the drop-add period beginning February 2.

A regular registration for freshmen, transfers and students not currently enrolled will be held on February 1 in the ABC Room of Lankford Building. Students registering for second semester on February 1 should see their advisers sometime during the week of January 4 to plan their second semester schedules.

Longwood's Board Of Visitors Appoints Woman Rector, Recognizes Students

The Longwood College Board of visitors accomplished a first for the state institution Friday by electing a woman as rector. Dr. Duval Ridge-way-Hull a native of Roanoke was elected. She becomes the first woman to hold such a post in Virginia and one of only five serving in that capacity in the United States.

Dr. Ridge-way-Hull was a 1933 graduate of Longwood College. She succeeds Mr. E. Angus Powell of Richmond, who has been rector since August 1967. Mr. Powell was at this time elected to the executive committee, which is composed of the Rector, the Vice Rector and a member at large.

In other actions, the board elected Mrs. Phillip A. Roberts of Staunton as its secretary. It further listened to Casey Wilkes, president of Student Government, and Pat Necessary report respectively on progress up to this point on the alcohol situation, and the student staff retreat.

The Board of Visitors accepted the report that Miss Wilkes presented, and were in agreement with the steps that were being taken. The Board further commended the student body for following the correct procedures. It was noted that no further ruling by the Board of Visitors on the alcohol question would be taken until the next board meeting, which is scheduled for February 5, 1971.

The Board of Visitors at this session recognized three individuals for outstanding service with engraved silver plates. Those recognized were: Dr. Brown for her outstanding service as Associate Dean; Miss Sally Gill, for her contribution to the college as Oktoberfest chairman; and Miss Patricia Necessary, for her entertaining of prospective freshmen in Roanoke the past two summers.

First Campus Fire Drill Alarming Defects, Faults

By VICKIE BOWLING
Staff Reporter

On Tuesday, November 3, at 7 p.m., Longwood's first campus-wide fire drill of the year took place. Afterwards, there was much discussion among the students concerning the handling of the drill. Fire Warden Lynn Woodfield and Mr. Leon Henderson, Superintendent of Buildings and Grounds, talked to the ROTUNDA about the drill.

Lynn reported that she, as fire warden, decides when we will have a fire drill, and she always tells Mr. Henderson. The main fire alarm is near his office in South Ruffner. It is his office that is called to report that a building has been cleared during a drill.

Lynn further explained that she appoints someone in each dorm to help her by pulling the alarm in that dorm and calling it when the dorm has been cleared. The dorm president is not always notified, nor are all of Residence Board or the Head Residents. This is to reduce the possibilities of leaks.

About the last fire drill, Lynn said that she had felt 7 p.m. was a convenient time to have it. No siren was pulled in the library on purpose. The main trigger was supposed to set off the alarm in Ruffner, Tabb, French, and Granger. For some reason, it was reported, no alarm sounded in Granger. Wheeler was rather late in participating in the drill. The appointed girl forgot to pull the alarm.

There were several leaks of the scheduled drill. One reason for this was that a few of the appointed girls who were being depended on turned out to be undependable. As a result, dorm presidents had to be called for at dinner, and the rumors started flying. Lynn said that they try to limit the number of girls they teach to sound the alarm to lessen the chances of a leak. Somehow, word seems to get out.

Mr. Henderson stated that during fire drills, it is usually four or five minutes before the "all clear" is sounded. However, last time the girls were slow in calling in. It would seem that either the students were lax about getting out, or the hall presidents were lax in checking their halls. Hall presidents are responsible for checking rooms and turning out lights. Lynn said that dorm presidents will have to work with hall presidents to make sure that this job is done. One slow dormitory slows up the entire drill.

Several students returned to their dorms before the "all clear" was sounded. This is strictly against regulations. Again, dorm presidents, even if they were not notified of the drill, and hall presidents, are responsible for keeping all girls out until the "all clear" has sounded.

Mr. Henderson said that if an alarm does not go off, it should be reported to his office. He also said that the situation in Granger would be investigated.

Concerning the fire drill, Lynn stated, "It was just a sleepy drill." She went on to say that, while there is no iron-clad rule for the frequency of drills, if the student body continues to treat them lightly and irresponsibly, there might be two or three a month. She reminds the students that fire drills are held for their protection.

Casey Wilkes and Dr. Ridge-way-Hull, the new rector for Longwood's Board of Visitors, congratulate Pat Necessary and Sally Gill for outstanding service.

Fred Wiseman's High School

By CHARLOTTE S. HOOKER
Professor of English
Longwood College

Once upon a time an Ivy League law professor and amateur filmmaker named Fred Wiseman came down to North East High School in Philadelphia. He secured the principal's permission to make a film of the excellent teaching being done in that school. After two days of filming, with his rented camera and camera man, he realized that his original plan would have to be scrapped. Instead - and without telling a soul of his change in plans - he continued filming for a month. When the takes were finished, edited, and screened, the sanctity of the American high school was forever shattered. Philadelphia banned the film, the students paraded new sweatshirts which read, "Thank you, Mr. Wiseman," and Mr. Wiseman became famous.

He is a man whose face resembles the MAD magazine kid's except for the eyes, a wise man's eyes, carefully recording everything they see. (The title I AM A CAMERA kept running through my mind as we talked last summer at the Hollins Film Conference.) Eyes which, through film, have seen beyond the hypocrisy, the ineptitude, the chaos, the waste of the modern high school.

An English teacher emotes "Casey at the Bat," suitable for fourth graders but hardly for a high school class. Another - younger, obviously trying to be "relevant" - attempts a serious poetic analysis of nothing more substantial than a Simon and Garfunkel record. A business teacher dictates a paragraph, enunciating each word and punctuation mark with the enthusiasm of a zombie. An overzealous gym teacher urges his class of rope swingers - girls - to hang on long enough to be accounted "Tarzans" or "Super-Tarzans," hardly complimentary to maturing young women.

One also sees the halls ("Why are you out here using the phone? Do you have a pass?") and the administrative offices (to a boy: "Don't 'yes-sir' me, you're being insincere!" and to a girl: "You've disgraced the whole school by wearing a short dress to the senior prom!"). The teachers and administrators are Boss; the students are the sheep who comply with scarcely a flicker of protest.

One mustn't conclude, however, that all the teachers and administrators seen through Mr. Wiseman's camera eye are bad. Most of them try or at least give the appearance that they try to do their jobs well. If they don't, it is themselves they delude - not the students, not the camera. Thus, the film may be viewed as an important lesson in how to teach, or not to teach, and counsel in high school. As a documentary it succeeds admirably in this respect.

But the film never criticizes the students. Undoubtedly, my misgivings about this arose from the circumstances in which I saw it. The audience that day were mostly young college students, not over-thirties like me. Throughout the screening they jeered at the teachers, shouted obscenities, and exclaimed, "By -! That's exactly like my high school!" But, I thought, suppose those teachers had had these rude bellions to cope with. Would we then be so critical? But they didn't have; they had sheep.

Suppose, though, that the camera had asked, What are those sheep contributing beyond compliance? Small wonder that the teachers don't reach them, whatever their methods. Then I remember the methods - and it was a vicious circle.

Provocative, then, the film certainly is, though not without technical flaws. I was constantly tense, straining to catch the words in classrooms and offices over the hubbub in the halls and the clanging bells. (Or was Mr. Wiseman saying that there is scarcely a serene moment all day long?) The zoom lens, effective in revealing nervous fingers and furtive mouths, was overused. (He used it less often in later films.) Visual tricks during a sex education lecture were funny but crude. Admittedly, these are minor faults considering the value of the film.

The finale shows the principal tearfully reading to the faculty a letter from an alumnus in Vietnam. With death threatening, he names the school his beneficiary. It's not much, he says, but all he has to show is his appreciation. Humbly, he reminds them that he's "just a body doing a job," which is precisely all that the school has taught him to be. At that point I hardly knew whether to laugh, and at whom, or to cry. And I was so glad that my high school back home had not been like that . . . Or had it?

Patton

By SARAH FARRAR
Staff Reporter

Why Patton? With Hollywood now catering to the young people, it seems there would be little potential audience behind the account of the bambombling, blood and guts World War II general, particularly when most people this side of thirty won't have heard of him, and if they have, it is only because he was the one who slapped a shell-shocked soldier. Obviously aware of this, 20th Century Fox is boosting Patton as a rebel in the American political for the film.

By skillfully sidestepping a recognizable point of view, PATTON inures itself of a reception from all shades of opinions. Patton, as he keeps reminding us, was a man fanatically obsessed by war, a crusader blitzing his way to glory with an unalterable belief in his rightful destiny. If he wants fine weather before a battle, he invokes divine intervention - and gets it. When he's finished mopping up the Hun, he's itching to kick those Russian "sons-of-bitches" back where they belong. Red-blooded Hawks will warn to him, and his words at the beginning about Americans hating to lose will obviously remind them of another war, Doves, on the other hand, will find him the model military maniac, a self-loving bully who believes in reincarnation, plans his campaigns with one eye on his previous experiences, and willfully sacrifices his soldiers in the cause of his own glorification. George S. Scott's brilliantly sustained, electrifying performance would doubtless earn the general's approval. Or he can steer a safe middle course, take the good with bad, and admit that if the war had to be fought, it needed a "crewwell old horse cavalryman" (his own words) like Patton.

The script is brilliant, bristling with ambiguity; but by playing Patton at his own game it allows the MAN, rather than a mere opinion of him, to make account of himself.

The film instills the audience with conflicting feelings of hate and love toward General Patton. Perhaps the key to this tantalizing effect comes at the beginning, when he is asked by the ruler of Morocco what he thinks of the county as he takes the salute at a desert calvary parade: "I love it, Excellency. It's a combination of the Bible and Hollywood."

A less obvious but no less effective factor in the film's seemingly noncommittal attitude to its subject is Franklin Schaffner's unrevealing low-key direction. The battles are there, of course, but only as a backdrop to the man in the spotlight. There's an extraordinary scene when Patton stands meditatively alone in a desert graveyard against an infinite landscape of silver-grey sand. Elsewhere, he frowns over men and machinery, his apparently superhuman authority caught, for instance, in a low-angle shot through his legs as he empties his revolver at a pair of German planes which have dared to bombard his desert headquarters.

"Sunday Promenade" Nov. 20-22 Reflects State Of Modern Man

By LYNNE WILSON
Staff Reporter

The Longwood Players and Hampden-Sydney Jongleurs are now in their last rehearsals for this season's second play, THE SUNDAY PROMENADE, to be presented next week, November 20, 21, and 22. Lars Forssell, previously known as a poet, won acclaim as a man of the theater in Europe with this play.

Forssell reflects upon the dehumanization of modern man and his struggle to rise above the realities of life. The play revolves about Justus Coriander, the poet, the imaginative individual who in an attempt to free himself from the boredom of Victorian Norway invents a dream-world where he can live in his imagination. Justus, however, is one who has lost his faith in man and who is incapable of loving another person. Thus we find his wife, Elsa, admiring Justus the poet, yet finding some comfort in the company of Rector Ruriksson, the man most victimized by Justus's games.

The play's central metaphor is the Sunday promenade around the table. This promenade becomes exotic voyages in the mind of Justus Coriander, and we find the others caught up in this dreadful game against reality. It is here that we see how Justus' own fantasy preys upon those around him.

The play is one of intense emotion and conflict between reality and fantasy, between love and intellect and between political or religious views. It is a play of today with a comment on today's individual.

The production is being directed by Dr. Patton Lockwood, chairman of Longwood's drama department, and Mr. David Vest has written the musical score. The cast includes Ed Kofenberger as Justus, Lynn Foreman as Elsa, Rick Vaughan as Ruriksson, and Vivian Vascott as Mrs. Coriander. Justus's children are played by F.M. Hite as Carl Michael, the Marxist; Larry Smith as the no-mind, Willy; Sue Lewis as deaf-mute Angelica; and Charlie Bishop as Abraham. Other cast members include Ken Schick, Wayne Hyatt, and Ellen Dixon.

Members of the cast of THE SUNDAY PROMENADE rehearse for play presentation November 20, 21 and 22.

At Phillips College in Borger, Texas, the student newspaper offered food for thought about the case of a youth arrested and convicted for the possession of marijuana, a felony; he received a suspended sentence, BUT

"He lost the opportunity of ever being a licensed doctor, dentist, CPA, engineer, lawyer, architect, realtor, osteopath, physical therapist, private detective, pharmacist, school teacher, barber, funeral director, masseur or stock broker."

"He can never get a job where he has to be bonded or licensed."

"He can't work for the city, county or federal government."

"He can enlist in the military service, but will not have a choice of service and will probably be assigned to a labor battalion."

No Opposition- Was That Your Excuse?

A Question Answered

EDITOR'S NOTE: Students have confronted us on the question of Elections Committee rejecting a late petition from a student wishing to run for President of YWCA. In carrying out the role of a newspaper to find out the facts and report back to the students, I would like to report to the students, my findings on this matter, after having talked with Lynne Coleman of the Elections Committee. The following are the questions which were asked and her replies.

Question 1. "Did the Elections Committee turn down a late petition for President of YWCA?"

Answer—"Yes."

Question 2. "Why did the committee reject it?"

Answer—"The original deadline was set for Thursday night, October 29. At that time there were offices in which no one was running, therefore we extended the deadline to Sunday night, which was announced. Then more people came and talked to us and we extended the deadline to Tuesday morning but no later, because each one (person running) has to have equal time on the board (in the Smoker). As it was, petitions were only up for one day. I had to plan conference time and check grades, and this could not be done in less than one day."

Question 3. "Did the Elections Committee feel this was the right thing to do since there had been problems in getting people to run?"

Answer—"The Election Committee felt that this was the proper thing to do since in its guidelines or constitution, it states that there must be equal time allotted to all candidates and a deadline must be set. This allows time for grades to be checked. The committee did not move on this action because of personal opinion, but acted upon it according to its constitution laws."

Question 4. "Lynne, did Brenda Moren confront you about this, and if so, what were her reasons for doing so?"

Answer—"When Brenda Moren confronted me, her basic reason was personal opinion because she had told the girl in question she would talk to me about accepting a late petition. However, she later stated it would give the student body a chance to have a choice in selecting the President of this body?"

Question 5. "If this had been a late petition from any other board, such as Legislative or Judicial, would you have rejected it also?"

Answer—"We would have followed our guidelines for any late petition which was submitted for any board office."

These are the answers to question brought to our staff. Who are we to say whether it was right or wrong? If you have any further questions or comments on this subject, please address them in the form of a letter to the editor.

Letters To The Editor

Oktoberfest Evaluated

Being a freshman this year, I awaited the Oktoberfest week end with much curiosity. This feeling was present for many various reasons.

On October 7th, I stood and watched a short segment of the Geist Assembly on Wheeler Mall. As I watched the tapping of the Usherettes and other week end personnel, I could not help but feel some sort of wonder. How was it possible to pick so few girls for their leadership qualities? The freshmen had only been on campus for 3 1/2 weeks.

My doubts and curiosity increased as I heard of several instances in which a very limited number of persons (one or two) were responsible for a booth to represent a whole club. Being involved in this situation, I was dismayed when only a friend and myself were to build a booth for two clubs combining for the week end. Continual pleas for help were made from Red and White leaders to get participation in the booth, skit, and float. Even still, participation was poor. Was it apathy, a lack of time, or an outdated tradition?

The planning done by those in charge — those few — was well done. I only wish to cite one which seems to need improvement. The Cor-kettes and H2O presented an excellent show, or so I've heard. It was rather unfortunate that they could not have publicized the additional performances and couldn't have sold a limited number of tickets for each performance. The money lost, in situations I'm familiar with, is of no importance. What is important is that many people, especially with children, had to wait in line (even on steps) in a hot, stuffy gymnasium.

Although the last point may not be too important to Geist, I believe the others are. It is now time to evaluate the true value of traditions such as Oktoberfest in the present times. Which is more important: studies or running to a 10:00 P.M. skit practice? Which will serve the future: education or tradition?

President Questioned

I'd like to congratulate the Rotunda staff for the marvelous work they've been doing this year. Each issue of the paper this year has been extremely stimulating reading. I'm especially pleased that a few people are speaking out against the sacred cows of Longwood (Red and Green spirit, Longwood ladyism). But getting to my main reason for this letter, I'd like to comment, a bit belatedly, on the article concerning Longwood and HEW. I was very surprised at some of Dr. Willett's remarks. Most administrators of colleges (Princeton University and the University of Virginia — two examples) have no reason to believe that they have an obligation to black students to help repair the damages done to them in their first twelve years of school. This means a realization that ETS scores are less accurate for many blacks than for middle class whites, that pre-college orientation programs, aimed at academic help and social adjustment, are necessary, and that blacks must have the dominant hand in running these programs. I'm sure Dr. Willett has never been stepped on in his life. Neither have I, but I believe that just because I have been so lucky, I shouldn't allow these injustices to continue. Perhaps if Dr. Willett got out of his comfortable, safe, Southern groove, we'd have more than five black students on this campus. Are you aware, Dr. Willett, that in 1970, colleges, even Southern colleges, have responsibilities to promote liberty and justice for all?

Student Newspaper

To the Editor:

One of the major issues on campus now is alcohol, but there is one aspect of our great campus life that has tended to fade — that is, the issue concerning a student newspaper. I'm tired of reading what the administration feels about campus activities; and when I do hear what the students themselves feel, I also hear how they get reprimanded by the administration.

Why can't we have a STUDENT newspaper? Let the administration print their own.

Sherry McKelvey

In Defense Of Geist

Dear Editor:

Although I disagree with the Rotunda's policy of presenting only subjective news, and I realize I am only contributing to their continually opinionated articles (I do understand they must fill up space with something), I would like to respond to several statements that were presented in their last issue. First, in regard to the articles concerning Green and Red competition and spirit in connection with the past Oktoberfest week end, I would like to say that these were unwarranted. As a member of Geist, I was on stage Saturday night following the announcement of the winners. I saw happiness among the Green and I saw sadness among the Reds. I also saw the Greens gloating among themselves, but did not see anyone flaunting their victory in the face of a member of the opposite class. Concerning the Reds, I saw expressions of regret, but I saw no one planning physical revenge on someone else. As far as this way of acting being childish, I must disagree. If you had worked as hard as these girls had for two months and longer, you would find it hard to hide your feelings of excitement or your sentiments of regret. There is one thing you cannot say, they were not apathetic. They were showing some type of emotion and were showing they did care about something, and isn't this what everyone is criticizing today? However, I guess this type of caring is wrong because it does not coincide with their critics' idea of what deserves devotion and what does not.

Next, relating to the article claiming that the clubs and organizations on the Longwood campus are useless, I must make several comments. First, there are several organizations on campus which are not only concerned with entertaining themselves but serve the community in several capacities such as offering their services in TB centers, churches, etc. This leads back to Oktoberfest again and its childish, unnecessary place on this campus. As yet no one has found a substitute which draws a greater crowd to the Longwood campus or the community. I really do not think the student who wrote the article realized how much business this particular week end brings to this area. Not only do all the organizations purchase materials from area merchants and not only do visitors provide business for other local facilities, but the entire affair is open to the public and offers a light form of entertainment for all. Also, this is one of the few events which keeps students here on week ends and which gives them something to do. So until a better alternative is found, I, for one, suggest that we continue the tradition.

Finally, membership and participation in any of these events or groups is not mandatory nor are you condemned for not sharing in either the responsibility or the activities. Therefore, why try to do away with something that does provide a lot of pleasure for so many.

Thank you,
Connie Williams
Class of 1971

An Explanation

I would first say that the "Rotunda" does not present "only subjective news." The articles referred to happen to be the editorial and a column. Even with a limited knowledge of journalism one would know that these articles are naturally opinionated. One can apparently overlooked the last paragraph of the article on Student Activities. It was noted that there are several worthy campus organizations. Finally, if the only defense for Oktoberfest is that the weekend offers a local business boom and keeps students on campus, purpose and value is definitely lacking.

Ethel Reiter

Article Praised

Dear Editor:

In reference to the article in the issue of November 4 concerning student activities, I wish to commend Ethel Reiter on her extraordinary courage in finally bringing to light the many fallacies of the organizations here on campus, but I have been very dismayed with the extremely rude reactions that Ethel has received since her article came out. The most noticeable aspect of these reactions has been their very defensive nature. Perhaps the fact that these girls are involved mainly in activities of only private rather than of social benefit is a little hard for them to accept.

Perhaps the fact that these girls are involved in activities of purely personal benefit rather of social benefit limits their perspective.

Sue Wilkes

Blue And White Victorious

In regard to the question asked in last week's Rotunda "Is competition really that important?" I would like to respond with a definite yes.

Competition between the red and the green has been a tradition at Longwood for many, many years. Just think for a moment — suppose there was no competition — would we have an Oktoberfest week end? would we have song contests? would we have the color cup? No! Competition is the basis for these and other cherished traditions at Longwood.

Now you have competition without a winner and a loser? How can you expect the winner not to react in a positive way and the loser not to be disappointed after working earnestly for many months? Suppose there was no reaction. Imagine this: The skits are over and the green and whites win but neither the reds nor the greens show any expression of victory or defeat. They may casually shake hands with one another but that is it. There is no real reaction at all. This would not show the true spirit of Longwood. The spirit was shown Oktoberfest week end — the signs of disappointment for defeat and signs of happiness for victory.

As a member of Geist, I was neither red nor green but blue. After the announcements had been made concerning the weekend I looked around to see the reactions. Of course the reds were crying and the greens smiling but they were smiling and crying together. I did not see the greens gloating or the reds scheming for revenge, but instead saw the reds and greens embrace with signs of compassion and happiness. This is what I call true blue and white spirit. Even after the reds had been so defeated they didn't run away and humiliate and sulk about the weekend. They were happy for the greens and whites and they showed it.

Suppose there were no reds or greens — there would be no blue and white. Yes, we are divided into two groups, who compete against each other, but together, we are all one. I feel that we have few traditions left at Longwood, but to keep the ones we do have, we need the Red and the Green and the competition, between the two to make the true Blue and White spirit.

Cactus Inn In Action Again

The Wesley Foundation will present its first "Cactus Inn Coffee House" of this school year on Friday, November 13, at the student center on High Street. The action will begin at 7:30 p.m., and continue until late Friday night.

The special guest for the evening will be: "The Wesley Singers," a fine group of people who sing religious, folk, and popular music. The 18-piece group is under the direction of Mrs. Wade Overby. Guitarists for the performance will be Miss Bonnie Harden and Mr. Piers Overby. The group is from Westover Hills United Methodist Church in Richmond, Virginia.

Also on the program of entertainment for the evening, will be students from Longwood presenting their talents. Ed Koffenburger of Hampden-Sydney will be Miss Bonnie Harden.

Come join in the fun of a coffee house. Everyone is welcome. Admission is free. Refreshments will be sold.

Longwood Goalies Six Other Players Make Team

This past week end sixteen members of the varsity hockey squad traveled to Tidewater Hockey Tournament. Each college team plays three games, and individuals are selected to compose Tidewater College Teams. Tidewater sends these two college teams along with two club teams to the Southeast Hockey Tournament (a regional tournament held this year in Towson, Maryland). Of the twenty-five girls selected (from eight college teams) eight of these girls were from Longwood. Among those selected were: Senior Jane McCaffrey as first team goalkeeper, Sophomore Jackie Santoro was selected as second team goalkeeper. It is truly unusual that one college should have the two best goal keepers in this section of the State. Selected from the Longwood defense was: Senior, Freda Lunsford, center halfback second team, Junior, Ellen Dunn, Left halfback, second team, Junior, Nancy Fowlkes, left fullback second team, Freshman, Beth Cobb right fullback second team, Freshman, Becky Burch, substitute halfback, Sophomore Debbie Page, honorable mention.

This was truly an outstanding representation. The college should be extremely proud of not only these girls but the entire hockey squad for the terrific job they have done representing the college.

Our very own Geist clown, Jackie Santoro, displays the form that won her a position on the second Tidewater College team.

Hockey Squad Loses To W&M Offense Unable To Score

Recently, the Varsity Hockey Squad traveled to Williamsburg to play games with William and Mary. The second team played first and the competition was fairly equal. No goals were scored by either team at anytime. But the game was pretty good because the offense and defense of both teams were so evenly matched.

The first team had a little more competition. Our defense held pretty good during the first half but the offense couldn't get through.

However, late in the second half, William and Mary pushed their way to LC's circle and the one second ball the ball was loose, their center halfback charged in and drove the ball straight for the goal. Our forward line pushed hard to try and make up for it, but couldn't quite make it. Several times in the last ten minutes, LC carried the ball from our end to their circle but lost it because of the excellent drives William and Mary were producing. Both games were very well played.

Swim Halloween witches brew up a successful water show.

P.E. Department Adds To Many Geist Activities

Among the Geist festivities, the Physical Education department added their share of entertainment in the form of a water show, Color Rush and the Varsity Hockey team competing in a hilarious game against the Alumnae. The water show entitled, "The Fall of the House of Dark Shadows" was arranged in four parts with weird characters such as witches, green slime, two black cats, and four goblins. The show was a big success and extra performances were given to accommodate the great number of spectators.

After walking in Geist parade with a few clown antics of their own, the Varsity Hockey team presented another big attraction. Alumnae from various places competed against the Alma Mater. The first half was filled with action. The Alumnae defense was pretty good, but Longwood scored two goals. At the half, Color Rush was held. There were twenty runners competing. Ten runners from the greens and ten from the reds. An interesting combination was sophomore, Sue Manahan against freshman, Lucy Sale. Both are on the Hockey team and are racing each other all the time. Lucy came out on top this time. The red and whites had the most winners and received five points toward the Color Cup to be presented later that night. The second half of the hockey game began. There was a great deal of movement all over the field but no goals were scored by either side.

All in all the week end including the sports, skits, booths, and the parade turned out to be a big success!

Longwood should have a very good team this year and all students interested in Basketball can get involved in playing, helping to manage the team, or watching. Students are urged to support all the home games. The highlight of the season will be the tournament in Lynchburg on March 5 and 6. Many college teams will be participating and Longwood hopes to send an excellent team that will go in fighting with true Longwood spirit.

Longwood teams fought hard but competition remained equal in a 0-0 game with William and Mary.

LC Swim Team Wins First Meet Cahill Is Captain

The Varsity Swim team handily won its first meet of the season against Westhampton College last Thursday by a score of 58-40. Longwood's 200 yard medley relay team consisting of Kathy Umbdenstock, Eleanor Challen, Ellen Cahill, and Leslie Edwards won the first event of the meet and set a new pool record at Westhampton with a time of 2:14.3.

The 200 yard freestyle was won by Lois Hrubik. Kathy Umbdenstock won the 100 yard individual medley and easily captured the 100 yard backstroke. The 100 yard breaststroke was won by Eleanor Challen while Kathy Kutscher took first place in the 50 yard backstroke.

Longwood held the lead throughout the meet and had a spectacular finish. The final event, the 200 yard freestyle relay consisting of Ellen Cahill, Leslie Edwards, Eleanor Challen, and Kathy Umbdenstock was won by Longwood when Kathy swam the last leg of the relay. Longwood was behind by about two body lengths when Kathy Umbdenstock dove in and slashed through the water to win by an arm's length.

The newly elected team captain is Ellen Cahill.

ODU Defeats Swim Team Next Home Meet Nov. 16

The Varsity Swim Team was defeated by the strong Old Dominion team last Wednesday by the score of 71-33. Despite the strength of Old Dominion's team, Longwood was able to capture three firsts. Katherine Hipskind placed first in diving, the freestyle relay of Ellen Cahill, Leslie Edwards, Eleanor Challen and Kathy Umbdenstock is still undefeated. After this first place, Eleanor Challen won and set a new Old Dominion pool record with the time of 37.0. In the 50 yard breast stroke.

Second places were won by Ellen Cahill in the 50 yard butterfly, Eleanor Challen in the 100 yard breast stroke, Kathy Umbdenstock in the 100 yard individual medley and in the 100 yard freestyle where she was just out touched.

Longwood played host to the Mary Washington swim team yesterday and will travel to Lynchburg tomorrow to compete against Lynchburg College. The next home meet will be this Monday, November 16, at 4:00 p.m. against Madison.

Rotunda Celebrates Fiftieth Anniversary

By MARY ALICE CARMODY

November 20, 1970, marks the fiftieth anniversary of "The Rotunda". The first "Rotunda" was called the "Dummy" and was approximately half the size of the 1970 "Rotunda". The "Dummy" was four pages, three columns wide. It contained no artwork, many jokes, and the news of the town.

The first "Dummy", the Normal School Weekly, appeared on campus October 29, 1920. The following is a reprint from a first page article, "Introducing Dummy".

Why another "Dummy" with over 600 of us already here? There is a reason! When a publisher wants to show what a book or magazine looks like he gets up a blank, brainless thing, which he calls a dummy.

As we go to print, no name has yet been selected for our weekly paper, and we wish this week only to give an idea of what it will look like. Hence we adopt this printer's term.

Perhaps the students will want another name; but having heard it used so oft, and so endearing, we think it a not altogether inappropriate name for the little paper which seeks to be a spokesman for the average normal school girl. For convenience, therefore, we shall call it Dummy until we get a better name.

It is true that we need, and have needed for a long time, a paper which would represent the activities of the students and faculty. Through Dummy it is our aim to portray their thoughts and actions; their joys and petty griefs; their mistakes, pet grudges and secret ambitions, hopes and ideals.

We want our paper to stand for loyalty to the Normal School and to uphold the real ideals which she represents and the aims toward which she strives. When we see mistakes made we shall advocate coming out in the open and talking about them and we shall try to suggest means to correct them.

We shall have fun too. We shall get it and give it through Dummy. For school is no less the place for fun than for work, and who does not like a joke? Dummy wants your jokes.

Dummy hopes to be also the connecting link between alumnae and alma mater. To the alumnae we have to say that in our columns we shall gladly give space to your contributions and we hope for your subscriptions. (The cost of a subscription was $2.00 a year.)

Also we want Dummy to be a link between our friends in the community, and the school, for from time to time we shall flash light on the life in the Training School.

All this we undertake to do, not solely by the efforts of the staff alone, but through contributions from all of our constituents.

And now girls, will you please lend us your thoughts and ideas? Don't depend on somebody else to do it; for it will not get done. Whenever you think of something witty or something you'd like someone else to know about - just "slip it through the slot" to us.

In the third "Dummy" appeared a plea for a name for the paper. This editorial was entitled: "Oh, For a Name!" and is reprinted here:

"Won't somebody please name Dummy! The staff has tried; everybody in school has tried. A great many names have been suggested and voted on, but as yet, nothing particularly appealing has appeared. 'Dummy,' they say is too dumb; 'The News' is too old; 'The Mirror' too reflective; 'Normal Light' too bright; 'Blue and White' hasn't local color enough, and 'Pink Mule' is a vulgar brute, though he does have some kick. So there you are!

The name of the school paper should be original, distinctive, and full of 'punch,' but not too outlandishly clever or whimsical. Here's a chance for somebody to win everlasting fame.

And it was a chance for someone to win everlasting fame. Volume five appeared with a new name in place of 'Dummy', November 26, 1920 marked the first issue called 'The Rotunda'. The article 'Eureka - A Name' is reprinted as follows:

"After a long and strenuous quest, the publishers of this paper, the folks at the State Normal School, have found a name for Dummy. And as in the famous quests of 'youden times', what we sought was found not far away but right here at home. Everybody knew the rotunda has always been the center of the great building that houses our life. But it required a special inspiration to enable everybody to decide by vote that ROTUNDA is the most suitable name for the paper. Hereafter the paper will be called by this name."

Times have changed; "The Rotunda" has changed, but in this, our fiftieth anniversary year, we would like to rededicate ourselves to presenting the thoughts, actions, opinions, and ideals of the Longwood College community.

Pres. Willett Holds Press Conference- Concentrates Mainly On Alcohol Issue

President Willett, on the job in his efforts to inform students at the press conference.

By ETHEL REITER
STAFF REPORTER

In his second press conference of the year, President Willett met with Longwood and Hampden-Sydney students. The conference was held on Wednesday, November 11 at 4:00 in the Gold Room. Following the customary procedure, the first few minutes were devoted to general comments by Dr. Willett and the remaining time was concerned with a major Longwood issue.

As mentioned in most previous meetings President Willett reminded students of several of his well-known beliefs and policies. First, he repeated that all suggestions must be signed by the person responsible for submitting the question or opinion. Absolutely no action can be taken by himself or any administrator if the note is anonymous. Another familiar topic was that of "going through the proper channels." If a student desires to raise some issue he should not "fly off the handle." President Willett wants to be consulted personally to provide the facts.

The conference then focused on the alcohol issue. President Willett opened the discussion by stating that very early in the business of dealing with this overall question a great number of people raised legal questions. He resolved that the first step was to contact the Attorney General for his legal opinion. The last meeting of the Virginia General Assembly opened new avenues of doubt. Prior to this session the law stated that persons under the age of 18 could not possess alcohol, but the law was changed to include all persons under 21 years of age. Most Virginia institutions allow possession and the consuming of alcohol in compliance with the state requirements. Dr. Willett, however, has some difference of opinion concerning such a situation. If the policy is changed to permit possession in the dormitories where most students are under 21 he wonders if the law is being violated. This is the reason President Willett considered it necessary to ask the Attorney General for his legal opinion which also has the force of law. After this briefing by the President the floor was opened for questions and discussion.

Q: Will the results of the Alcohol Questionnaire be made known?

A: Yes, they will be published.

Q: Can the Board of Visitors pass the issue over your veto?

A: I can veto the rule, but the Board has the final say. Of course, it would not necessarily have to go before the Board. But even if I were to veto it I think I would still present it to the Board. There have been occasions when the Board leaves the final say up to me.

Q: Do you feel there will be negative reaction of this type of change?

A: Alumnae, parents, and other groups, I would have to say would tend to react negatively. This burden is on me, however, and not the students.

Q: What did you find out at Mary Washington?

A: The issue at Mary Washington College was two years in duration. Students may possess and consume alcoholic beverages in compliance with the ABC rules of Virginia. No alcohol is allowed at social functions. Mr. Houston is of the opinion that it worked out fine. After the first week there were no major problems.

Q: When will you receive legal opinion from the Attorney General?

A: I don't know. I can't say how long it will take to get response. There is no way for me to know.

Q: What percentage of the student body is under 21?

A: I don't know but I've heard the figure 70%.

Q: If the Board vetoes the issue can it be brought up again?

A: Yes, if it fails this time it does not mean the issue is dead.

Q: What is your opinion?

A: I have mixed feelings. I could make a good speech either way. I will be influenced by student vote but not bound by it. It is not fair for me to make a statement now.

President Willett concluded the conference by reminding students that timing is important. There has to be enough time to work everything out correctly. Students must be tolerant. The worst thing would be polarization among the student body. "It is a test of maturity in how we accept change. Legislative Board and majority of the student body is accepting it in the right manner."

LIVE AND LEARN!

Reconstruction Is Needed

The Greeks are going to have to rely on something more than the usual emphasis on communal spirit, close friendships, and love of tradition in order to influence girls to join the pledge class of 1970-71. For students have become aware of the incongruities in the pledging system. For example to many it has become a chore to go through Rush. This applies not only to the "rushes but also to the sorority sisters. Girls find it difficult to smile incessantly 3 hours a night 5 days a week at virtual strangers. The agony continues; for during the day visitation takes place. Here, different sorority members perch for 15 minutes on your bed or chair and try desperately to keep a logging conversation going. For the rushee's too, the entire process can be extremely unpleasant. Her constant parroting of her name, her major and where she is from is enough to make her wish she didn't even exist.

These problems and others like them certainly aren't new, but perhaps it is time that the Greeks attempted to reconstruct the sorority structure. The Greeks at Ryder College in Trenton, New Jersey have. The Panhellenic Council at Ryder College has decided that all the national sororities on campus should abolish pledging. The council announced that it is up to each individual sorority to decide on a new orientation program. The council will no longer make any rules concerning pledging.

Perhaps Stephanie Lacombe, president of Zeta Tau Alpha at Ryder College helped to change the system when she said:

"If Greeks are to stay, they'll have to drop the harassment and embarrassment and make things more relevant to the sisters and their needs. The trend in the future will be to relax the rules concerning pledging and do things to make the sisters more unified."

It is time for a change in the outdated sorority practices. Hopefully, the Longwood Greeks realize this need, and will attempt to revise the system in some manner.

Rumors Tend To Become Factual

A rumor, as defined by Webster, is "an unverified or unfolded report circulating from person to person." In the past week, Longwood has been struck with much of this common gossip or hearsay concerning false fire alarms and drug raids in many of the dorms on campus.

A rumor can be a nasty weapon. It can very easily hurt someone or give someone wrong impressions because its false statements seem to spread faster than an epidemic or a disease. Yet, no one seems to try to stop its movement. No one offers to tell people the truth.

Many students heard rumors as early as twelve o'clock Thursday night that there had been a drug raid in some of the dorms. Not only did girls from other dorms call each other, but even boys from Hampden-Sydney called up informing the girls about the so called raid. All day Friday, girls tried to piece together any bit of gossip they heard, hoping to eventually come up with the truth. By lunch time, it was rumored that there had been drug raids in all freshmen dorms, plus some of the upper classmen dorms. Also, it was passed around that many girls had been suspended or kicked out.

This was really some story for the girls to take home to their parents or take to other schools on Friday when they left for the week end. Rumors, some true, some false, misquoted facts, misinterpreted statements, these were the things the girls took home to their parents and friends. What do you think their reaction was to this situation? What is their impression of Longwood College now?

Wouldn't it have been better if the student body had been informed as to what went on, instead of letting them possibly carry untruths home to their parents. The student body deserves the right to know the truth, and should be informed about a situation like this before it gets out of hand.

As it is now, many students, as well as many parents, are upset because they don't know what to believe, and they don't know whether the rumors are true or false.

Why should the student body be allowed to spread rumors? Why not inform them of what is going on and let them spread the truth!

Letters To The Editor

Discrimination Response

Dear Editor:

I would like to respond to the letter from Nancy Stout in the last issue of the Rotunda in which she implies discrimination on the part of the College in recruiting Negro students. I might add that Miss Stout has never discussed this with me and I would suggest to her as I have to others on occasion that if they took the time to check the facts in a situation they might find that the situation is somewhat different than the way in which they describe it. I might also add that I have extended the courtesy to Miss Stout of showing her this letter prior to my sending it to you.

My reason for answering this letter is based on the seriousness of any charge made in the area of discrimination. At stake are funds in excess of $100,000 that go to student scholarships which can be withheld in the event that HEW feels that an institution is in violation of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. Let me hasten to add for the record that HEW in its recent annual review at Longwood found no evidence of discrimination in regard to admissions although several suggestions were made in regard to recruiting procedures. If Miss Stout had bothered to check the facts she would have found that Longwood had engaged in a number of activities designed to increase the number of Negro students who can meet our admission standards. Included in these activities have been the bringing of high school guidance counselors, both white and Negro, to visit our campus. Individual efforts by a number of members of the staff in contacting alumnae brought prospective Negro students to the campus for Oktoberfest. Furthermore, our five current Negro students were approached as early as September in regard to assisting in this area.

Let me state for the record that Longwood is committed to and is observing a non-discriminatory admissions policy. It is a policy based not just on ETS scores but on multiple criteria. At the same time Longwood is committed to one standard of admissions for all. Any attempt to deviate from either of these policies in an abrogation of the responsibility placed on the College and results in the perpetration of an injustice to the individuals involved.

I would challenge Miss Stout to assist Longwood in the recruitment of any student who meets our admissions standards.

Sincerely,
H. T. Willett, Jr.

Open Dorms

(Ed. Note: Due to an oversight this letter was not printed in the October 21, 1970, issue. This concerns the October 14 article, "Weekend Open House At LC Stirs Up Liberalization Question.")

Dear Editor:

In response to the first-page article of the Rotunda, concerning the liberalization question as spoken by a H-C student, I would like to perhaps answer why there must be "such agony involved in adjusting to the present," and why open dorms can't "just be initiated now and forgotten." I'll admit the dorm room isn't the ideal location when one is in need of semi-privacy, but where else in this institutionalized life of ours can we go? This is not a letter demanding more student centers, as they are quite nice, but if one's outlet and retreat where he knows he can "let down his hair" is jeopardized, even by such compromise as letting the fellows up certain hours of the weekend afternoon, where will we stand?

Call me conservative, a prude, whatever, but I never have thought it proper to entertain a gentleman in my room.

From observation, the dorm parlors and recs, Lankford, and student centers are ample for being able to "bear yourself thin" when you have a guest. Therefore, in my opinion, open dorms would be an infringement upon one's right to privacy, the most precious he has in a life somewhat like that in a "goldfish bowl" anyway.

Ann Bartow, '74

Blue &amp; Whites Together

After working on Oktoberfest this year, we would like to comment on the editorial and letter to the editor in the Nov. 4 edition of the Rotunda.

As both red and green, we agree that we worked hard on our individual skits, but throughout the entire week there was mutual respect and much blue and white spirit.

After so much work, the reds were disheartened to get so little recognition for what they had done. Who should realize this but the greens, who knew how much work had been put into the skits.

There are always some winners who will gloat over a victory and some losers who will cry and wish to get revenge on their rivals. But as far as we could both see from backstage, the blue and white spirit prevailed.

Red and green competition is a part of Geist. If not, there would be one blue and white float, one blue and white booth and one blue and white skit. So when you ask, "is competition that important?" — Of course it is, it's the foundation of Oktoberfest.

When you say the red and greens should take a look at themselves and see if they are trying to portray the blue and white spirit of Longwood, we say that the apathetic people who judge the majority by the actions of a few should take a look at themselves and see if they know what blue and white spirit really is.

Blue & Whites together,
Judy Wines, class of '74
Terry Jones, class of '73

Returning To Campus

Dear Editor:

Returning to Longwood Oktoberfest weekend was a most entertaining time for those of us who have graduated. To the members of Geist who put in so much time and effort and to the members of the student body who supported the weekend, we extend congratulations; for it was indeed the best Oktoberfest we have attended.

Although the campus has changed drastically both in population and facilities in just one short year, the same intangible spirit prevailed: the spirit that makes Longwood and its daughters so very unique.

It gives one a great deal of satisfaction to find that the concept of victory and defeat still carries the same undecurrent of respect. And it is this respect that makes the traditions of Longwood so special to those who have experienced them.

The greatest moment of all, however, was the realization that a final wish was granted. You did that favor for the class of '70 — you passed along the White and Blue.

Sincerely,
The Class of 1970

Behind The Wrong Stage

Dear Editor:

All I can say to the girls who are condemning the Red & White and Green & White spirit for being too competitive is that you must have been behind the wrong stage Saturday night. I was behind stage after Friday and Saturday night's skits, and I did not see anything like you saw.

Granted, there was joy and excitement in the Green & Whites hearts and disappointment in the hearts of the Red & Whites, but neither color was "gloating" over victory or "seeking ways of revenge." (The statement, "playing their revenge (physical and mental)" was really poor taste and showed a bit immaturity itself.) Evidently, you missed the embracing of many Red & Whites and Green & Whites as the R&Ws shared happiness for their Green sisters and G&Ws shared disappointment for their Red sisters.

It certainly did not hurt anyone and definitely was not a sign of immaturity to see tears of sadness and smiles of joy. The trouble with this cruel world is that not enough people have feelings. There are far too many straight faced people with cold hearts who don't care.

In response to the question "is competition really that important?" I will end by referring to a statement made by a freshman Saturday night after the results were announced. "We may have lost the skit, but we gained the true meaning of sisterhood."

Margaret Lowry

Liquor On Campus

Dear Editor:

We feel that it is time for those of us who are opposed to having liquor on campus to stand up and be heard. It would appear that the majority of the student body is in favor of this change simply because those of us who are opposed have had little or nothing to say.

In talking with other students (both those in favor of and those opposed to liquor in the dorm) we find several reasons given in support of such a change. A classic reason is that some girls would rather drink in the privacy of their own room than to be seen drinking at Tom's. Also some feel that those 21 years and older are having their rights to buy and consume liquor infringed upon.

One reason is: if you are going to drink and enjoy doing it, why does it matter where you drink or who sees you? Tom's really isn't that far away anyway! And about infringing upon the rights of those 21 and over — if liquor is allowed in the dorms, those of us who are opposed are having our rights infringed upon, too.

We came to Longwood because it is highly accredited as a teacher's college. When the image of Longwood is lowered in the eyes of those who hire teachers, then our rights as students and future teachers have been violated. We came to Longwood to get our college education and prepare ourselves to become teachers. Liquor in the dorms can in no way help us to realize this goal and might possibly hinder us. When recruiters come to Longwood to hire new teachers, are we going to maintain the same priority which we have benefited from over the years? Will we be known as a "party school" or as the BEST teachers' college in Virginia?

Sincerely,
Shelley Pancoast
Nancy Rakes

Over Price

Dear Editor,

I have been away student teaching and have recently returned to campus, while purchasing books at the bookstore, I noticed that some were priced above the price so listed on the book cover. I am referring to one History book in particular that is priced as $2.95 on the front cover, yet had a small white sticker over it, pricing the book at $3.95. I realize that the bookstore is under a great deal of management — my question then is this, are the books being sold at a price entirely fair to Longwood students?

Jane Richardson, '71

Thank You

Dear Editor,

As a returning student teacher, I would like to thank the whole "Rotunda" staff for sending me the paper while I was out student teaching. It really did a great job of keeping me somewhat up on happenings on campus. I say "somewhat" because I obviously couldn't be here and have the involvement which only comes from being here. However, the paper did a good job in giving me an objective idea of what was happening and also the opinions of different students concerning events. It helped to relieve an anxiety I had about fitting into Longwood in the middle of the semester. Knowing a little something about the issues and actions on campus made it easier for me to fit back into the total school situation. Thanks for bothering to spend the stamp money on me.

The Scene: Elliott Gould walking through a riot-torn campus amidst screaming students and clubbing cops. The movie: GETTING STRAIGHT. Although particularly appalling after the events at Kent State, this dated but mildly amusing tale did begin the campus confrontation cycle in films. Unfortunately Bob Kaufman's screenplay bounces between T.V. sitcom and awkward brilliance. For not only is rebellion depicted as a high-spirited and relatively harmless game, but any link to American political, military or social problems has been scrubbed away and only the issue of Authority remains to rebel against. "Action Now! Pigs Go Home!" chant the cuddly Central Casting revolutionaries; but — especially in the monumentally inept riot sequences — these Barbie and Ken dolls with placards seem less a guide of campus discontent than an unconscious comic imitation of it.

The film's final scenes are particularly unattractive. Grad student Elliott Gould has been virtually forced to cheat on an exam and, as a result, won't be able to achieve his dream: teaching high school English in the ghetto. After a Shakespearean farewell to the teaching profession, accompanied by sobs from coed Candy Bergen, Gould takes his M.A. orals and acts out all our fantasies of academic revolt by freaking out, jumping on the table, and reciting obscene limericks. Then, although he's always remained carefully detached from campus protest, he hurls a rock through a window and joins his merrily rioting peers in a literally smashing finale.

But that's not all. At the very end, the confrontation between students and the National Guard recedes into a soft-focus background for the reconciliation between Gould and Candy Bergen, who recline amidst the careening bodies for a bit of behind the barricade copulation. Which just goes to prove that Gould was right when he said that revolt is popular because it's sexy! (In another scene in the film, Gould confronts the university president and points to a student who is running about like a deranged baracuda just outside the window. "A week ago that kid just wanted to get laid," he says. "Now he wants to kill somebody. You should have let him get laid.") Activism as lustful pleasure is only the most preposterous of GETTING STRAIGHT's vanities. Indeed, with its comic hippie (Robert Lyons), Peacock black militant (Max Julien), and icy Education prof (Jeff Corey), the entire film attains a level of cartoon consistency that only the extremely persuasive and flamboyant Gould completely overcomes. The film definitely established Gould as a leading man.

GETTING STRAIGHT is "revolution for the fun of it" and may not be the answer to the ever-popular: "What are our young people coming to?" In fact, I'm sure it isn't!

Sunflower

By Charlotte S. Hooker
Professor of English

On the surface SUNFLOWER is an embarrassment of riches. More marvelous Henry Mancini music underscores the exquisite and exciting color of Russia and Italy, whether that incredible field of sunflowers, for instance, or the subtly lit interior of a simple cottage kitchen or a Rome railway station. Cesare Zavattini's masterful screenplay of love-and-war has been masterfully directed by Vittorio de Sica and produced by Carlo Ponti and Joseph Levine. Then there's Sophia Loren in love with none other than Marcello Mastroianni, which is of course, still de rigueur. Making a triangle of their bittersweet story is the Russian star Ludmila Savelyeva (remember WAR AND PEACE?), whose golden-red hair and naive but absolutely devastating pure blue eyes could make almost any man forget — but that's the story. And there's yet another "star," whose cameo part is almost the piece de resistance, Sophia's gorgeous young son, Carlo, Jr. Besides all this, the editing is tastefully done, with skillful and effective interweaving of flashbacks throughout. Indeed, on the surface the film succeeds perfectly and all the formulas work, as they should in the hands of so many Italian cinemasters. Even the greying hairs of Sophia and Mastroianni seems a glorious mark of honor for enduring fame.

So why should one be annoyed if below that surface the structure looks somewhat flimsy? What if the rather slim story is as old as humanity and war? What if Ludmila's rescue of Mastroianni is a bit ludicrous — that is one way to get a man. What if baby Carlo with all those pretty little teeth looks much too developed to have a pacifier shoved into his mouth? Of what matter if one is tempted to boot Sophia in the rear as she sobs on a railway platform while Mastroianni, the heel, goes riding away with those doleful eat-your-heart-out-for-me eyes looking back at her? Or if one goes home with little more than a wet hankie (frankly, my Kleenex stayed dry), why care? There are still all that beauty, pathos, and some deft touches of humor besides.

One other facet of the film needs mentioning, namely, its Russo-Italian relationship. Aside from the obvious assets of the Russian scenery ("from the Kremlin to the Ukraine," say the ads), including Ludmila, and aside from whatever economic advantages accrue from any bi-national production these days, the film is in tune with the current movement to soothe the wounds of WWII. We are shown that more than one Italian soldier who fought in Russia chose to stay there after the war, denying his homeland and adopting Russian citizenship. The magnificent field of sunflowers, we are told, is a living memorial to those Italian soldiers who died on the Russian battlefield. So that if there is still overt enmity, it is between individuals, not nations. And not a word is said about Communism.

Gymnastics Clinic Held At LC Various Schools Participated

Last Saturday, November 14, a State High School Gymnastics Clinic was held here at Longwood in French Gymnasium. If anyone wandered over to watch, they would have found some very interesting stunts and skills being performed. High schools from all over the state were allowed to send six girls to the clinic. The students spent most of the time practicing and working on routines to be performed in the afternoon. There were six different stations with teachers from various schools helping the students. Miss Fath, who teaches gymnastics here at Longwood, helped with General Judging. Miss Patsell from Patrick Henry High School in Roanoke taught Floor Exercise. Movements on the Beam were taught by Miss Deubers from Annandale. Miss Smith from a high school in Arlington helped with Vaulting. Miss Reinwald from Washington and Lee in Annandale gave pointers on the Uneven Parallel bars. The last station was the Trampoline taught by Miss Jaynes from Madison College. After practicing all morning, the girls ate lunch and returned at 2:30 to give their final compulsory demonstrations.

Coach Praises 1970

Varsity Hockey Team End Successful Year

TO: 1970 Varsity Hockey Squad
FROM: Miss Davis

This Fall I had the pleasure of working with one of the finest teams I have ever coached.

I have never evaluated a team by its win-loss record, and I certainly won't change this policy now. Instead I look for supreme effort—a team that plays up to, if not beyond, its physical capabilities.

The 1970 Varsity Hockey Squad put forth this extra effort. They were truly a team to be proud of—a team with a lot of drive and certainly a lot of possibility.

As a matter of record:

First Team
Win-Loss: 4-5
Scores: Longwood—14 goals
Opponents—14 goals

Second Team
Win-Loss: 4-1-1
Scores: Longwood—15 goals
Opponents—5 goals

Whistles, Classes And Good Coaching Equal Hockey Ratings

Twenty-two Physical Education Majors participated in a basic techniques class in order to be rated as hockey officials. This class met three times a week. The students practiced their skills on the Intramural hockey games, and class hockey games. At the end: Five local A's were given—Five local B's, and Nine local C's.

Receiving local A's were, Patti Coogan, Nancy Fowlkes, Kay Harvey, Margaret Lowry, and Suzanne Morgan. Receiving local B's were Debbie Ellenbrand, Janet Ford, Carlie Keene, Bobbie Thurston, and Ann Weisiger. Receiving local C's were: Kathy Dougherty, Beth Hall, Pam Harrison, Renee Harrison, Cindy Jarvis, Lynn Kwitkowski, Joan Lawter, Deb Morris and Terry Van Cantfort.

According to the rules of the United States Field Hockey Association, a local A or A official shall—

1. Be approved by two rated umpires, one of whom holds at least a local A rating and has the approval to administer ratings of the local association or umpiring center committee within those area the tests are administered. If no one local association or umpiring center exists, approval to administer these examinations may be granted by the sectional chairman. Before rating a candidate, each judge shall have observed the candidate in not less than one full-time official game or its equivalent.

2. Receive a grade of at least 80 percent on the current examination.

3. Be examined every two years. The local C official shall—

1. Be a High School or College student or an approved apprentice umpire.

2. Be approved by at least two rated umpires, one of whom holds at least a local A rating and has the approval to administer ratings of the local association or umpiring center committee within whose area the tests are administered. Before rating a candidate, each judge shall have observed the candidate in not less than one full-time official game or its equivalent.

3. Receive a grade of at least 70 percent on current written examination.

4. Be re-examined every year. The two raters for these umpires were Dr. Jackson and Miss Diane Davis. The exam was in two parts: written and practical. The candidates also had a hockey course. They can call any hockey game.

At Longwood, Dr. Jackson holds a National Rating; Mrs. Bobbitt a sectional B; and Miss Davis a local A. Miss Bobbitt says that this class excelled in the number of high ratings received. She has written a poem about their accomplishments:

There were twenty-two students who blew on their whistles

From morn till late at night;
But each of them tried—sometimes even cried;

And sometimes they said there was fight.

But as you will see, their efforts paid off.

And these results bring me glee;
There were these ratings;

There is no debating—9 C's, 5 A's, and 5 B's.

McCaffrey And Davis Represent LC Against English Touring Team

Hockey for Longwood girls is over, but the All English Touring Team is still on the move. After defeating the United States Team, 3-0, the New Atlantic Team 3-0, and the Philadelphia College Team 2-0, they moved down to Westhampton today, November 18, to compete against a selected group of players from the Tidewater Association college and club teams. Representing Longwood on the team is Senior, Jane McCaffrey. After playing all season with the Varsity Hockey Squad, Jane won a position on the college All-Star team and will play goalkeeper against the English. From the looks of their records, Jane will have her hands full. Representing Longwood from the faculty will be Miss Diane Davis. After an excellent job of coaching all year, she will take a position on the defense against the English. She describes the team as being very strong and tough to beat. Following the game, there will be a banquet given at St. Catherine's. Nancy Folkes, a member of Longwood's Varsity Hockey Squad will be our representative to this event.

The Varsity Gymnastics team has six meets scheduled—with Stratford (A)—Radford (A)—The University of North Carolina at Greensboro—University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill—(A), VPI, and William and Mary. Some of these meets will be held at home in Frency gym—some away. The team practices three times a week, practices are open to any interested students. Around November 25, a team will be chosen to represent Longwood College.

Speakers On Dramatic Arts To Speak Here For Seminar

What are the trends in contemporary theatre? What opportunities are available in theatre upon graduation from college? What is the best training for the American actor? These and other questions will be answered by professional actors, directors, and theatre owners in the upcoming College Theatre Seminar to be presented in Jarman Hall, December 12, from 10:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m.

The College Theatre Seminar will be a lecture-demonstration-discussion program for all students interested in any facet of the theatre. Alpha Psi Omega, the honorary dramatic fraternity, is spearheading the effort to bring stimulating contacts with professional theatre personnel to the Longwood campus. The organization has invited a number of guest lecturers whose credits extend over a wide variety of theatre experiences. Representing the Barksdale Theatre in Richmond, are owner-producers Nancy and David Kilgore. Together, this couple has produced, directed, or acted in some 115 productions during the theatre's 16 year existence. Also from the Richmond area are Frances Wessels and Walter Williamson of the Virginia Museum Theatre. Mr. Williamson's lecture topic will be "Conservatory training for the American Actor," while Miss Wessels will concentrate on "Dance and Movement for the actor." Una Harrison, an English actress trained at the Royal Academy of Dramatic Arts and the Birmingham College of Mime and Dramatic Arts, will give an impromptu talk on acting. Joining the seminar from the western part of the state, is Barter Theatre director Owen Phillips whose touring production of THE HASTY HEART delighted Longwood audiences last year.

Although this seminar has originated within the drama department, it is hoped that as many interested students as possible will avail themselves of the opportunity to meet, listen and talk with these qualified and enthusiastic speakers.

Comedy Tragedy Absurdism Included In 'Exit The King'

"Exit the King" is a long one-act play written by French Avart-Garde writer Eugene Ionesco, known for his absurdist and sometimes clamorous one-act plays, mixes both comedy and tragedy along with absurdism in the play.

"I wrote this work in order that I might learn to die," Ionesco said of "Exit the King." He concluded that there was no solution to solace for death — "One can do nothing."

The play deals with the progression of a king from the point of suspicion in life, to suspicion and refusal to recognize death, to slow the eloquent acceptance and resignation.

In spite of its basic theme of death, there are light moments in the play provided by the king himself, the royal maid, Juliet, the castle guard and by the Doctor at court, who is also the executioner, astrologer and bacteriologist.

As for the King, he is a measure of all men, if not all kings. He is sometimes eloquent, witty and ingenious; while at other times, he is weak, average and afraid. It is Ionesco's purpose to catalogue the emotions of the death of a great king, but rather those of Everyman. For whether king or commoner, Everyman must face death.

The play is stylistic, rather than realistic, and the Players-Jongleur production is designed to include all the incongruities that are so much a part of Ionesco's work and perhaps life itself. The Longwood production will treat the play as "show" and allow the audience to draw its own conclusions about its pertinence and meaning to life.

The cast includes Scott Reeves, John Chinn, Cindy Baughn, Brad White, Linda Dexter, and Diahn Simonini.

Artists Series Committee Lists Remaining Agenda

Each year the students of Longwood College have the opportunity to see and hear outstanding performers in the field of music and dance as part of the Artist Series.

Through the direction of a committee composed of both faculty members and students, 3-4 programs are scheduled annually. In choosing the artists to appear each year, the committee considers which performers among selected soloists, symphonies, and dance groups will appeal most to the college community.

Past productions have included the widely-acclaimed Alvin Ailey American Ballet, which performed last year, and more recently, the Indiana Symphony Orchestra which appeared in October.

Also on the agenda for the 1970-1971 season is the Pennsylvania Ballet performing on January 10 and I Solisti Veneti, a chamber music group, scheduled for March 7.

The Pennsylvania Ballet should be special interest to the student body. This young dance company, which made its debut in 1963, is rapidly becoming one of the country's most popular ballet groups.

Two dance forms, classical ballet and modern dance, are combined through the choreography of the Company's masters, John Butler and Robert Rodham.

The company's repertoire includes 20th century pieces such as "Four Temperaments" and "Allegro Brillante" as well as traditional diversions from "The Nutcracker" and "Sleeping Beauty."

I Solisti Veneti, scheduled for later in the semester, has also received excellent reviews and has been acclaimed as being "among the greatest of the world's Chamber groups."

Students are encouraged to attend both of these performances and take advantage of the opportunity of seeing these artists on campus.

Administration Comments On Mall Proposal

By LYNNE WILSON
An article appeared in October 28th ROTUNDA proposing the allocation of that land between the high rises and the fine arts complex for a mall. As stated, this land had already been set aside for a gymnasium, parking lot, and tennis courts.

Since the publication of that article I have met with Mr. Paul, Business Manager and Treasurer of the college. Mr. Paul explained that the General Assembly of Virginia must approve and provide the funds for use of all college grounds. The new Physical Education building has finally been approved on the college's budget. It is certainly much needed as the present lier building is almost unusable as it is too small for spectators, there is no room for timekeepers, and the observation facilities are poor. Although it is inappropriate for Physical Education purposes, it will be proposed to the governor that the Iler Building have another floor added to be converted to a history and social science department.

When questioned about the possibility of appealing to the General Assembly to have the Physical Education building put west of Ely Street, Mr. Paul pointed out that this would make necessary the relocation of even more Farmville residents. That land across ## Chi . . . Why Not Give It A Try?

So for this year, CHI has walked several times. Many freshmen in the Tabb, French, and Cunningham dormitories have been able to see with excitement and a little fear, the walk of the CHI members. But, the fact that the Freshmen in Wheeler, Curry, and Frazier have not seen CHI walk was brought to the staff's attention. Many '74s feel left out, disappointed, unimportant, and hurt because they have been cheated out of seeing CHI walk.

Many of us can recall our freshmen year. Then, all freshmen, with the exception of a very few, were housed in Ruffner, South Ruffner, Tabb, and French. This was very convenient for the CHI members because they could make themselves visible to all the freshmen by walking down the Colonnade.

How exciting it was to hear the hard knock of the "Nightly Watch" at your door about three or four o'clock in the morning saying that CHI was walking. A mad rush to any vacant window facing the Colonnade then followed. The girls arranged themselves so that the short ones got in front and the taller ones fell in behind. In this manner, all caught a glimpse of those white robes.

When the walk ended, the silence was broken by the screams of excitement. Many of us were so scared that we could not talk. The walk usually put an end to any further sleep for the night, for after the first shock was over, all the girls got together and tried to decide which upperclassmen were in CHI.

This was and should continue to be an important part in a Freshman's life at Longwood. The CHI walks help to add to the blue and white spirit.

Why leave out a large part of the Class of '74? They are eagerly waiting for the night when CHI will visit them. We know that it is hard to reach all the Freshmen since they are so spread out, but possibly if CHI could make more walks and visit a different dorm each time, they could make all the freshmen happy.

Don't make these freshmen lose their faith in the CHI spirit by neglecting to walk in front of their dorms! At the present time, these freshmen feel that if CHI doesn't care about them, then why should they believe in the CHI spirit.

So CHI, don't let these Freshmen finish their first year at Longwood disappointed, hurt, and totally disbelieving in the CHI spirit. See if you can't satisfy their curiosity with a scary little walk by some students dressed in white robes some morning at three or four o'clock. We think it would help and the rest of the '74s would feel important again. Why not give it a try?

— M. F. B.

Is 2 To 5 Prime Time?

Longwood has gone the way of the progressive schools: We now have open dorms. It is too bad that this progressivism did not influence the hours. From two o'clock until five on Sundays, the Longwood ladies may invite a male into their rooms providing that the door is left open and that their rooms are in the nicest condition possible. It appears that most of the men on campus at this time are either brothers, or fathers.

One reason open house was instituted was an effort to keep the girls on campus over the weekends. It seems that if we could have men in the dormitories for three hours, we would be appeased enough to stay here the whole weekend, just anticipating those three hours. I am afraid that this will not be the case. Three hours of open house at Longwood does not make up for a weekend at Virginia, etc.

Another reason for open house is so that fathers, brothers, and boyfriends will be able to help the girls carry their luggage back to their rooms. If this is the case, then why is it not possible to have open house on Friday, Saturday and Sunday? If a girl left the campus carrying luggage with no one's help, then why does she need help bringing it back? Has she acquired that much extra baggage? Also, does every one return to campus between two and five on Sundays? What would happen if someone returned to campus at 5:15 with three suit cases, five books, and a box? She must either find another girl to help her or get permission from the head resident to have her male friend carry her luggage to her room.

It would seem that open house for the entire weekend, perhaps starting at noon on Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, and lasting until eleven o'clock at night would be a more feasible solution for keeping the girls on campus, and the male guests would provide an attractive addition to an otherwise all-female atmosphere.

Letter To The Editor

Iron Hand

Dear Editor:

As an interested student and person who feels that all should have equal opportunities for higher education, I would like to praise Miss Stout's letter, which appeared in the November 11th issue of the ROTUNDA. I am glad to see someone has the concern and courage to stand up to the administrative facade and write about an issue that entails the welfare of our nation and the obligation of Longwood College.

Dr. Willett has often ruled his girls with an iron hand. Through open rebuffs, publication censorship, and private, personal degradation he has been able to keep the lid on fight. Even though Dr. Willett may be under the bigoted pressures of the local townsfolk, I would think that a man of his position could stand up and express his views.

Three charges of discrimination and a lack of responsible explanation seem to have prompted such a letter by Miss Stout. Her request seems to be valid, but will the reply be of the same quality?

H. Randolph Laird

Recruiting Blacks

After talking to Dr. Willett, I would like to inform the Longwood students of some of the things being done to recruit black students. In my efforts to get the facts, after reading Dr. Willett's letter (a copy of which was given to me the day after my letter appeared), I made an appointment with him for Monday afternoon. Various problems caused Dr. Willett to postpone the appointment until Wednesday. When I finally talked to Dr. Willett Wednesday morning, I found him very courteous and open in answering my questions. I found the facts to be much as I had represented them. I did learn that a summer remedial program (such as the one at U.Va.) is being looked into and would be financed by federal funds. Dr. Willett pointed out that he and other members of the administration had personally visited schools and talked to high school principals, especially in Richmond, Longwood's largest recruiting area and also an area with a large percentage of blacks. Dr. Willett assured me that Longwood is committed to "one standard for all" (I never doubted it). He believed that remedial work should be done in the high schools. I think that's a wonderful idea, but the fact remains that remedial work, in most cases, is not being done in the high schools. Out of simple curiosity, I asked the President why he reads all applications of black students. He said that this is to personally guard against discrimination, which I think is good.

He added that he also reads financial aid applications. Dr. Willett assured me that he wants more blacks at Longwood, and that the main problem is convincing blacks that Longwood is genuinely interested in them and is strictly nondiscriminatory in its policies. I'd like to point out here that since white power structures are responsible for our present educational systems, they must take the responsibility for righting the wrongs done to blacks for so many years. While colleges have helped to create the separation, they must be mainly responsible for integration. Because they haven't been given the chance for so many years, blacks cannot automatically be expected to apply to white colleges. Whites must, therefore, take an overwhelming part of the effort to bring blacks into these situations that have so long been denied them. Actually, what counts now is results, not intentions.

I have given Dr. Willett a copy of this letter and also a rather vague suggestion for a program to help local blacks meet Longwood's admission standards. I believe this can be most effective on the local level and I hope something in this area can be initiated in the near future.

I am gratified that at Longwood communication between administrators and students is possible, since I believe communication to be the key to many problems.

Beer And Wine

Dear Editor:

We as seniors who have returned from student teaching are amazed and concerned about the biased dispute concerning liquor in the dorms. We who have been taught to be objective find little objectivity in the discussion at hand.

Having read the recent article "Liquor on Campus," we feel that it is necessary to express our opinions as supporters of having liquor in the dormitories. Where and when a student embibes is a matter of personal preference and should not be restricted by archaic social codes. As mature individuals, we do not feel that the facilities in Farmville satisfy the desires of some of the students. Beer and wine are not the only social beverages available on the market, and likewise, the atmospheres of local establishments do not necessarily fit the mood of the individual. If this proposal is adopted we feel that the liquor should and would be consumed with the rest of the dormitory room.

What infringement of rights? Certainly not personal freedom, for the question concerning liquor in the dorms is a matter of choice. If you have decided not to drink, no one is going to lure you into a "den of iniquity."

We agree that Longwood College is a fine teacher preparatory institution, but we fail to see how the passage of this proposal will lower the esteem of the college or the students. The definition of a "Longwood Lady" must change as social customs and expectations change. Isn't it better to have freedom of choice than to sneak around social rules which are outdated? Which would be the greater injustice — to repress a person's natural inclinations or to be able to demonstrate them openly and freely?

We came to Longwood to gain higher education and we find it difficult to believe that having liquor in the dormitories will curb this desire. If this proposal does sway members of the student body, then perhaps we all should think twice about our primary objective for being here.

Sincerely,

Pam Lynn

Judie Guidice

Beverly Tompkins

100% Divisions

Few letters to the Editor, I'm sure, begin with "Thank you," so I chose to begin this one with "Few letters to the Editor." Seriously, thank you is what needs to be said to the Longwood student body, faculty and staff for its support of the Prince Edward County United Fund.

Under the able direction of your Registrar, Col. Raymond Gilchrist, your "Campanile" has thus far raised a record $2,567.95, and attained 100% of its assigned goal ($2,560.00) with some portions of your drive not complete. At a time when the economy is sagging, this is an outstanding effort and all at Longwood are to be complimented.

Particular thanks are due to the student body of Longwood for the support they give to the Prince Edward County United Fund. When you consider that these young ladies are not in the strict sense residents of our county, this certainly demonstrates that they feel a commitment to the betterment of mankind.

We'd like all of you at Longwood to know that the twelve agencies which are supported by your United Fund are dependent upon all divisions of the drive attaining their objectives. You can be proud to be one of the 100% divisions.

Yours very truly,

D. C. ELLIS

Chairman, United Fund

Mixed Emotions

Dear Miss Carmody:

I have read with mixed emotions the various reactions to your Oktoberfest Weekend which have appeared in your paper.

As an alumnae of Longwood, having served on our Alumnae Board of Directors, and having on several occasions been president and/or Secretary/Treasurer of our Alumnae Association here in Greensboro, I just could not believe the animosities and jealousies existed as evidenced by reports in your paper.

My son attends Hampden-Sydney College, and he, with his father and me, several of his friends, some students from Longwood and parents of other Hampden-Sydney students were simply enthralled with the Oktoberfest productions. My husband was most reluctant to go to the production as he assumed he would be bored with an amateurish display of talents. After witnessing the fine performances of all concerned, he, along with all the others with whom we talked, couldn't voice strong enough praise.

For someone who had witnessed your show at Oktoberfest, enjoyed it to the fullest, it was, needless to say, a real "let down" to read comments by your editors and some members of your student body which shattered all the wonderful esprit de corps assimilated by the participants — It certainly required many hours of hard work and cooperation to put together such a fine show.

Instead of your editorial, cartoon, and article "An Opinion on Student Activities," such as appeared in your November 1 issue of the Rotunda, how much more appropriate your support of the fine Oktoberfest production would have been. Your attention is called to the enclosed article which appeared in the Richmond News Leader on November 20 — "Girls Find Fun at Longwood" by Rita Lyons, Miss Lyons (professional writer) has beautifully reported your Oktoberfest activity, and from Curry has already been purchased and last Saturday the houses on the block were sold.

When the question of saving the home on the corner of the block was mentioned Mr. Paul pointed out the high cost of such a project and the probable set backs by the General Assembly.

Mr. Paul did make it clear that he and others in the administration understood the students' need to have a place to go for some peace and quiet away from the dorms. He suggested that rather than tackle the problem of getting the General Assembly to approve a mail when it is so hesitant on approving needed academic buildings, we work to have trees planted to provide more privacy in the existing Stubbs Mall. Of course, it will take time, but it would mean that future Longwood students will have a place to go.

The administration will present this proposal to Mr. Alan G. Winslow, our landscape architect, for consideration.

Two-Credit Course Developed By Center For Learning Needs

DAYTON, OHIO, (L.P.) — The University of Dayton's "Plan for the Seventies" program, currently consisting of six separate lectures, is tied directly to the University curriculum.

Developed by the Center for Interdisciplinary Studies, the two-credit course is designed to meet the educational and learning needs of the task forces involved.

The process of the course is divided into three contexts. The first of these, the school context, is concerned with developing a structure of knowledge as the basis for planning.

The laboratory-studio-work context is the second phase which will be used in the course. This will involve the actual experience of "creating the future of the University of Dayton." This will be the actual planning effort of the people in the course.

The third context, the community seminar, will allow the educational process to be stimulated by outside innovators and resource people who can contribute different perspectives

Basketball Teams Chosen, JV Meets Deep Creek Dolls

On November 16 tryouts for the varsity and junior varsity basketball teams were held. Playing for the Sophomore class are Dotty Bohannon, Carol Chory, Barbara Cridlin, Gail Gossage, Sissy Grant, Joy King, Sue Manahan, Dianne Padgett, and Shirley Pinney. Janet Ford and Margaret Lowrey are the representatives from the Junior class.

Coaching the varsity team is Miss Jean Smith while Miss Oliver is taking over the coaching responsibilities for the junior varsity team.

Managers for the varsity and junior varsity teams are Ellen Adams and Daria Poole. Scorekeeper for both teams is Janet Garrett.

Although the teams are young they are hoping to have a successful year. Come and support your teams.

Junior Varsity

The Deep Creek High School basketball team, The Deep Creek Dolls, coached by Vernon Pullig, will play our Longwood J.V.'s at 2, Saturday, December 12, in French Gym. Afterwards the girls will be on a tour of the campus.

The J.V. team consists of: Cindy Bradley, Carol Chory, Diane Padgett, Shirley Penney, Gail Gossage, Joy King, June Benninghove, Sue Craven, Daria Poole, Susan Stutz — manager, Ellen Adams — manager, and Jane Garrett — scorekeeper.

Barrett, S.M., University Vice President, said, "University problems can't be attacked in a fragmentary way. You must work with a comprehensive view."

Black Orpheus

Note: BLACK ORPHEUS will be shown next Monday, December 14, at 7:30 p.m. in Bedford Auditorium as the initial offering of The Film Committee. Donation at the door: 50¢.

The film BLACK ORPHEUS is a rich, romantic treasure-trove for eye and ear, an encomium of Brazil, and an exuberant affirmation of life. To experience it is to understand why it won the Grand Prize at the Cannes Film Festival (1959).

Director Marcel Camus selected a bronze and beautiful pair of modern-day lovers (a trolley-car conductor and a girl from the country) to reenact the tragic myth of Orpheus and Eurydice against the majestic scenery of Rio de Janeiro, enlivened by the exotic masquerades of pre-Lenten Carnival. This visual splendor is enriched by frenzied macumba (voodoo) rhythms, mellifluous Portuguese lyrics, and the bossa nova melodies of Antonio Carlos Jobim and Luis Bonfá. (Their music has since become legend.)

Over all Camus cast the magic blend of contraries, that very essence of romanticism: Beauty, exquisite and delicate, as Orpheus, who has the power to make the sun rise, sings the haunting "Manha de Carnaval" (popularized in America as "A Day in the Life of a Fool") while the dawn breaks in a glory over the bay of Rio. Wild, Gothic terror as the Spectre of Death — or is he just another masquerader, perhaps a jilted lover? — pursues Eurydice so that Orpheus — who himself inadvertently causes her death — must seek her in the underworld of the city morgue and of a bizarre macumba ritual.

Felicitade and tristesse: the contraries of Carnival, one day for which the poor of the favelas wait all year. A single day when, with absolute abandon, they may play at kings and queens, dancing and singing their hearts out, heedless of the poverty, heartbreak, and death which are waiting all the time to overtake them. The macumba drums, simultaneously with the inevitable doom of tragic love and with the very pulse of life. In the end Orpheus, pursued by a Fury, falls to his death, only to be replaced by a small boy who picks up his guitar and begins to strum.

Once more the sun rises; life goes on. Only the framework of dream is myth, and evidence that is intermittent. The rest is almost documentary, for most of the actors are amateurs, selected on the spot after Camus (no Lin to Albert, by the way) had been in Rio for several months, absorbing the atmosphere of the city while seeking funds to continue the film. The event had gone broke. (The Brazilian government finally paid the lion's share.) Even the principals were not then film stars. Breno Mello, who plays Orpheus, was by profession a soccer player and Marpessa Dawn, the lovely Eurydice, was a dancer from Pittsburgh and the only non-Brazilian in the cast, though one would never have suspected. And so the film has a strong strain of authenticity. If it seems like a romantic fairy tale of long ago, that is because Carnival-time in Rio is one of the few folk traditions still alive on earth. One need only hop a jet in the proper season to prove its reality.

Woodstock

By SARAH FARRAR

Many critics have come away from WOODSTOCK, the film, disappointed with it and/or Woodstock, the event. Criticism has run from gentle condescension to bitter commentary. What did these critics expect? Was it revolution for the festival itself that made watching the movie that much more distasteful and difficult to observe objectively?

The question of the picture's unrestrained length is a matter of individual opinion. In answering this question, it is helpful to ask: Could a strip of film three hours and four minutes long ever hope to recapture trip-out at Bethel? It could and it did. I came away from it feeling very good inside, very warm.

Woodstock has the effect of scouping up your psyche, your hand-ups, your frustrations and shattering them against the screen. The color is glorious, the photography no less than superb. Being a documentary and therefore having no prearranged script, director Mike Wadleigh, producer Bob Maurice and crew could have had little idea of what exactly they would capture. That they had the inspiration to film Woodstock merits them a certain degree of credit on the strength of that alone. And keeping in both the ridiculous and the responsible hikes the film up one more notch.

There are the interviews with town folk and festival attendees. Some reactions are angry; others are unable to express their emotions and instead substitute overworked rhetoric. There is the mud and the marijuana and children and Army helicopters and skinny-dipping and the Port-O-San man and making love in the grass and the general boyness. What diminishes not a whit during these solid hours.

But the best of all is the music, enhanced through Wadleigh's camera techniques and excellent editing. The sound is far better than anyone could have heard at the festival itself, which might tend to make the film superior to it in that respect. The double, triple and superimposed images, rather than detracting from the musical performances, focus on individual movements, solitary facets, fingering, facial expressions, and in so doing pull the viewer smack into the music. If anything is wrong with the musical segments, it is that footage has not been included from such groups as Blood, Sweat, and Tears, the Grateful Dead, and from Jefferson Airplane's incredible two-and-a-half-hour session.

Three performances stand out. Country Joe, who comes out on the platform tall, regal, super-cool, and so together that the others pale by comparison. Country Joe with his "Fixin' To Die Rag," still the very best Vietnam parody around. Then there is Mike Shriver, nineteen year old drummer for Santana, with upturned nose and freckles. There is nothing teenybopper about what he pulls from these drums, and his face is sheer ecstatic delight. And, finally, there is Crosby, Stills, Nash, and Young, whose "Suite: Judy Blue Eyes" is slightly off-key, musically not as perfect as the record, but so incredibly sad and sensual.

More than anything else, however, Wadleigh's film manages to impart the fight for self-survival that so characterized Woodstock. How else can you explain a half-million people who, for reasons of their own, managed to pull off a spectacular, flamboyant music and medicine show overcoming obstacles, sidestepping financial traps and doing it with a profound sense of community and trust in one's neighbors? To be sure there were pitfalls.

But I can hardly think the experience can be described as a "playpen," as it has been called. How much consideration have those harsh critics of Woodstock given, for instance, to the display of arrogance and childishness at the Republican National Convention (not to mention Chicago)? The "kids" who tripped out on "love," "peace" and other amorphous verbiage are to be put down as frivolous and irresponsible, what descriptions can be applied to gay men who went flitting about in butterfly costumes at the Miami Convention?

If one doesn't like WOODSTOCK, it certainly DOESN'T mean that there is nothing left for them, but to walk forever the roads of the ugly and forlorn, while the rest of the world, in peace and happiness, frolics away.

There was pain and agony in the eyes of people at the festival, just as there will always be in human life. As one blue-eyed young man in the film said: "People are lost!" As man has and will always do in one way or another, people are trying to learn to live, humanly and spiritually. WOODSTOCK is an example of a trip most of us inwardly wish we could take and sometimes never do.

Letters To The Editor

her article should be read by all the students at Longwood — I suggest you include it with this letter in your "Letters To The Editor."

As one matures, one learns that a sense of humor and mutual respect for one's fellow man are the bases for a fruitful and rewarding life. We would all do well to praise when praise is due — too often there is nothing of merit to extol.

Student Handbook

To the Director of Admissions:

Each year many students apply to Longwood College for entrance. When an applicant applies, she is sent a catalogue. No Student Handbook is sent to this "prospective college student." In the case that the applicant is accepted in the college, she still does not receive a handbook until late August. How is a "prospective student" suppose to know the regulations of the college if she does NOT receive a handbook until this late date? By this time of the year it is too late to apply to another college if the rules are not acceptable to the person applying.

I think that the Student Handbook should be incorporated into the catalogue and sent out to "prospective students" when they ask for a catalogue. (The handbook could be prepared at the same time as the catalogue, and if any changes occurred in the rules after publication, a supplement could be sent to the students.) Also, another solution would be to send an applicant both books at the same time. By sending the handbook with the catalogue, she would let the applicant know how the school stands on certain matters and it would also give the student a better background in making her choice of colleges to attend. Lastly, if a "political activist" or a "radical" was planning on coming to Longwood and she received a handbook with the catalogue, she most assuredly would not come to this conservative college.

Would you please consider this suggestion and let me know if anything will be done?

Sincerely,
Linda Jones

The Reply

Dear Linda:

Mrs. Mary Watkins has given me your letter of November 17 and asked me to reply to it. Like you, I hope that the Handbook can be distributed to our incoming students somewhat earlier than August. However, we cannot get the Handbooks to prospective students before the summer since some regulations of the college are not approved by Student Government until late in the academic year and the Handbook has to be current for the year ahead. Because the Handbook is edited by students, there are some additional delays in its publication, since they must undertake the very difficult editorial task while pursuing a full course of study.

The material cannot very feasibly be incorporated into the catalogue since it involves different considerations. Even if it were, the many changes which have taken place so rapidly in the past few years would not be as up-to-date if they appeared in the catalogue which is published in the previous academic year.

I think that most of our students have a general idea of what our campus is like when they make a decision to enroll in Longwood. Our Admissions information shows that most of our students choose the school as a result of contacts with our present students or with recent alumnae. Most of them visit our campus prior to their enrollment and we encourage every prospective student to visit the campus before making her final decision.

If you will look at the procedures and regulations of other residential colleges you will find that they are not significantly different from our own in most aspects of college life. As to how conservative we are in our social regulations, I think this is a matter of interpretation. Certainly we have heard from many voices that they are too liberal even as we have heard from others that they are too conservative.

I am sorry that you did not respond to our invitation last summer to attend pre-school retreat. We had hoped that you would come because we wanted to give you an opportunity to express your opinions before a representative group of students, faculty members and the administrative staff and have them discuss your ideas along with others that were brought before the group. Any letter by its very nature is less comprehensive in its scope than a free-wheeling discussion might be.

Yours sincerely,
Herbert R. Blackwell

Senior Capping

To the Editor:

As a member of the student body, I was both shocked and disgusted with President Willett's "speech" at Senior capping. Not only was it an inappropriate time for him to avenger any personal animosities he might have against a student but the position he took was one totally unbecoming a college president.

He demeaned himself not only as a person but as an administrator by personally condemning a student in front of part of the student body. How he was able to speak in favor of Academic freedom in one breath yet harshly criticize someone for using this freedom in another is, to me, pure hypocrisy. He proclaims the right of students to speak out yet through continuous criticism of the student newspaper he does everything in his power to squelch this right.

For President Willett to be so personally offended by one student's to react as he did shows that he is not able to receive criticism in an adult manner. I seriously doubt that President Shannon of the University of Virginia or President Hahn of VPI, would lower themselves to answer every student critic that attacks them or every bit of criticism that is published in the student newspapers of their schools.

I personally did not agree with some of the opinions voiced by Nancy in her letter to the editor but I feel that it is the responsibility of every student to defend her right to express her own opinions.

I realize that by criticizing President Willett openly in this letter I will probably be called into his office or denounced at a future meeting of the student body but I feel that this letter had to be written to show him that many strongly disapproved of his actions that evening.

Liberal Outlook

Letter to the Editor:

The administration is to be applauded for its recent crusade against subversive propaganda, unwarranted dissent, and SDS inspired activities, all ruinous to the Longwood image. At last month's academic assemblies, various members of the administration courageously gave students an unbiased view of the distorted and perverted attempts of some individuals to create chaos. We were all happy to hear that Longwood will maintain its antiprogressive spirit. We realize that change is severely destructive and violent, if this institution is to remain stable and decent, we must denounce any marked innovation in our unique system.

It was also quite commendable for the administration to reveal to the student body how grossly victimized they are by a sensationalized and dishonest press. It is quite evident that these reporters print fictitious situations, never consult the authorities on a matter, and misuse their limitless freedom. Being a news-respecting and aware institution, we must likewise denounce these fanatics who seek to deceive us.

In conclusion, I would like to express my desire that Longwood would not lose its open-minded, liberal outlook — may we continue to be humanitarians, hiring Blacks and teaching the eligible ones; may we perpetuate happiness, emotionalism, and maturity in our traditional activities; and may we forever oppose the nonconforming minority. We are fortunate, for "we lie in the lap of immense intelligence, which makes us receivers of its truth and organs of its activity."

Water Show

Dear Editor:

In regard to Cheryl Looper's letter to the Editor, November 11, 1970, I would like to respond to the paragraph concerning the H2O and Corvettes Club. First of all, the club thanks Cheryl for her statement, "The Corvettes and H2O presented an excellent show, or so I've heard."

Secondly, with reference to tickets, number of shows, and loss of money, her comments show a lack of understanding of the situation. Tickets were printed for spectator capacity for each of three planned performances. The two additional performances were graciously given by the club for those who stood in line, some with tickets who failed to come at the proper time and some who had not purchased tickets at the midway. No publicity was necessary for the additional performances. The house was filled five times, and there was no money loss to the club since everyone paid to see each performance.

I agree that it was unfortunate that people had to wait in line in a hot, stuffy gymnasium. However, this was their choice and the H2O and Corvettes gave performances as long as there was an audience.

Thank you,
Kathy Wilson

Attorney General's Letter Received

Questionnaire To Go To Students January 5

Office of the Attorney General
December 8, 1970
Dr. Henry I. Willett, Jr., President
Longwood College
Farmville, Virginia 23901

Dear Dr. Willett:

I am writing in response to our meeting of December 7, 1970, concerning proposed changes in the Longwood College rules governing possession of alcohol on campus. At present, the College forbids the possession of alcohol by all students. The College is now considering a general revision of these rules.

As you know the General Assembly recently revised the ABC laws so that it is now a misdemeanor for anyone under the age of 21 to purchase or possess any alcoholic beverage. (3.2 beer is not defined as an alcoholic beverage.) The Code also makes it a misdemeanor for any person to attempt to do any of the things prohibited in the ABC laws or to aid or abet another in doing, or attempting to do, any of the things prohibited by the ABC laws. In addition it is a misdemeanor to drink any alcoholic beverage in any public place which is defined as "any place, building or conveyance to which the public has, or is permitted to have, access . . ."

I am of the opinion that consistent with the foregoing statutes, Longwood College may revise its rules to permit students 21 years of age and older to possess and consume alcoholic beverages on campus. This might be accomplished by drafting an exception to the existing rule so that students of age are permitted to possess alcoholic beverages. This approach would have the benefit of retaining the College rule prohibiting possession by students under 21, which possession would be a violation of State law.

In allowing students 21 years of age and older to possess and consume alcoholic beverages, it must be made clear that students may not consume alcoholic beverages in public places.

The College should take care to insure that all students know that State law forbids the possession of alcoholic beverages by persons under 21 years of age. The College should also take reasonable steps to insure that the law is obeyed. This means that if the College administrators in their day-to-day normal activities learn of a possible violation, an investigation should be conducted to determine whether in fact such violation did occur. The situation is somewhat analogous to a student violating any College rule. The charge will be investigated and, possibly, disciplinary action taken against the student. The same is true, of course, in cases where students are charged with illegal possession of drugs.

Finally the College should make it clear to all students, especially those allowed to possess alcoholic beverages, that they should abstain from aiding and abetting other students under 21 to possess or attempt to possess alcoholic beverages.

Ellen Lyon Elected Madonna

By BONNIE MOSLEY
Longwood's YWCA is again striving to promote the true Christmas spirit, that of unselfish giving, throughout the campus and community. On December 16 the Y will present its annual Christmas pageant at 7:30 in Jarman Auditorium.

The pageant is produced entirely by interested students while Freshman Commission tries to keep things jolly. Under the supervision of Sally Foster this year's pageant promises to be one of the most sensitive and heartwarming experiences of Long-wood's Christmas celebration.

The grand finale will include the unveiling of the Madonna. Each year the Y nominates three girls. The Senior Class nominates three girls whom they feel have exhibited the characteristics of a good Christian. The Senior Class then chooses one of these girls by popular vote. The purpose of this tradition is to recognize the efforts of one girl to be kind, considerate, cheerful and Christian.

This year the Senior Class has chosen to honor Margaret Ellen Lyon. Ellen, an elementary major from Vinton, Va., has set an example of Christianity throughout her college career with her ready and honest smile and consideration for others.

The conclusion of the pageant will be the White Christmas donations. Each campus organization is given opportunity to give money to a worthy cause. At the end of the pageant a member of one organization, dressed in white, brings a sealed white envelope containing a donation to the Christ Child and the nativity scene. This year the money will again be used to pay for dental care for the needy in Prince Edward County. In past years this has enabled a boy to have his teeth taken care of as well as many other projects.

All in all, the YWCA wishes each and every one of you the merriest of Christmases and the happiest of New Years. God be with you.

Dining Hall Reminders

- There have been various instances when girls have been seen taking bags full of fruit and cereal out of the dining hall. We realize that there is not a statement in the handbook concerning the quantity of food that can be taken out of the dining hall (cereal, fruit, crackers, ice cream bars, cookies, cakes, and brownies), however, we feel that a girl should limit the amount she carries out to what she can take in her hands. If taking an excess of food out of the dining hall continues, we may have to restrict taking out any food at all.
- There have been complaints from various tables that they aren't getting enough seconds. All you have to do is tell your waitress how many seconds you need (for instance, four servings of meat) and she will bring them to you. Just remember to tell your waitress how many seconds you need.

3. The complaint of there not being enough seats in the dining hall was brought to our attention. Mr. Carbone said that he always has at least 10 extra tables set up for every meal that are ready to be opened if necessary. Anyone who is not shown a seat by the hostess should go to the Slater office immediately.

4. Any organization or sorority who wishes to have reserved seats in the dining hall or who wishes to carry food out of the dining hall should contact Slater a week in advance. Slater is here to cater to the student's needs and to help them in every way possible, but by waiting too late to call in reserved tables and carry outs, it is sometimes impossible for them to assist you.

5. The reason for having chicken the same night every week is because it comes in fresh and instead of freezing it and serving it later, it is served the day it comes in. Due to the distance we are from a metropolitan area, Slater can only get orders in on certain days.

6. Mr. Carbone and Slater management urge that any student that has any complaints come to see them immediately. They will be more than happy to assist you in any way possible.

Ellen Lyon, this year's Madonna, will be unveiled at the Christmas pageant in Jarman tonight.

Think Beautiful Thoughts

"Look at that guy with the long hair. He must be a hippie. I bet he's on drugs."

How many times have you heard those sentences spoken or have said them yourself? Why must people who dress differently be hassled about it? True, there are hippy dressed people who blow grass and drop acid, but there are also guys out there in that big world with crew cuts and plaid ties and a hypodermic needle with heroin in it. Just because he has a crew cut does not mean that he doesn't know what drugs and firebombs are.

Call you really tell the worth of a person by the clothes he wears? Some believe that clothes make the man and that a man expresses what he feels about himself by what he wears. If this is so true, what would natty clothes have done for Albert Einstein? Would E=MC have come any easier if Mr. Einstein had worn a blue serge suit?

If it had, I am sure that every would-be physicist in the country would have run out and bought a three-button blue serge suit.

By this, I am not implying that everyone who dresses differently is a genius, but isn't everyone entitled to make a free choice of the clothing he wears? Clothing your body in what you feel like wearing should be a freedom for everyone. If you do not have the nerve to wear what you want, or if you want to dress the way the group dresses, go right ahead, but don't criticize the one who dresses out of the ordinary. I have been on far too many LC field trips with girls who have decided that they are either Edith Head or the editor of "Women's Wear Daily." As they entered a large city, they had to audibly express their feelings as to what everyone crossing the street was wearing. If a guy had a beard, he was a hippie. If he had a beard, long hair, and a moustache, he was a pusher. If a woman was dressed in brightly colored clothes, she was either a gypsy or a fallen woman. These girls did not know these people. They had never seen them. They were making a pre-judgment. Why? Perhaps it was just idle conversation. Perhaps that is all it is with anyone who makes comments about other people without knowing them. But, did it ever occur to you that it would be a much nicer world if everyone kept their unfounded opinions to themselves? After all, girls, we're in college now learning about the big world outside and supposedly learning how to think. LEARNING HOW TO THINK! Remember that the next time you want to make an unfounded pre-judgment. THINK beautiful thoughts, and you may make the world a more understanding place in which to live.

Deadwood

Last week, Longwood was invaded by eleven boys from the University of Virginia who were taking a political survey for a comparative government course, entitled "Public Opinion." This was a project done by two students and the other boys came along to help ask the questions on the survey.

This survey was based somewhat on the Michigan Survey Search in which the public opinion of two countries, Great Britain and the United States was compared. Since these 11 students could not compare the population of two countries, they decided to compare the opinions of students in two colleges.

The seventeen page survey contained questions on politics, pot, Vietnam war, John Burch Society, racial and urban affairs, Spiro Agnew, President Nixon, and many other timely subjects. This was a personal interview because one of the U. Va. boys read the question, the girl responded, and then he wrote down the response.

Now, to come to the touchy part of the story. The two schools chosen were Sweet Briar and Longwood. The boys had worked along with Dean Holt on this matter, and had chosen 50 girls, randomly, 25 from the Junior class and 25 from the Freshman class to participate in this survey. Likewise, they had chosen 50 girls from Sweet Briar. By this study, the students hoped to see the "difference in socio-economic status between the two schools, and the maturity difference between the first and third year girls." Therefore, it was to be an inter and intra college study.

These young men had gone to Sweet Briar the night before and out of the 50 girls invited, 41 girls showed up, which really was a good turnout.

The story changed quite a bit when the boys hit Longwood. In the period from seven o'clock until 11:30, these boys stayed in the Gold Room of Lankford patiently waiting for the girls to appear. By nine o'clock 19 girls had come. Some of these girls weren't even the ones invited, but had been asked to participate as they walked through Lankford. The U. Va. students began sending their boys and other girls to dorms to try and "rope" other students into taking the survey. After much hard work and a lot of patience, the U. Va. men finally got a total of 30 girls to answer their survey.

What was wrong with the Longwood girls? Why didn't they take a few minutes out of their schedule to help these boys with a project for their class? How would you have felt if you were in their shoes? What opinion would you have of the Longwood girls now?

To our surprise, the students from U. Va. were very cheery and actually made excuses for the girls who didn't show up. Some of their comments were: "I'm sure some of them had night classes. There were probably a lot of meetings to attend. Some probably had tests. Maybe some were sick. It is very cold outside tonight. I'm sure it is not apathy."

All we can say is, "Longwood you sure won't look good compared to Sweet Briar!" The next time someone asks you to help them in this way, think about how you would like to be treated, and think about the impression you will make on others.

Those students who did not show up missed out on a very educational experience. Also, they missed meeting a great group of young men who were anything but slanderous of the Longwood girls.

Our apologies to these eleven University of Virginia students.

Customs And Traditions Differ, Christmas Spirit Is Universal

By LYNNE WILSON

As the Longwood ladies decorate their doors, wrap mysterious objects in bright paper and ribbon, and sing carols while waiting to dinner, people all over the world are making their own preparations for the Christmas holidays.

On hand to tell us about Christmas in their countries are Edda Fricke, of Germany and Milly Salazar of Costa Rica, who both came to Longwood this year on assistantships in the foreign language department. Both girls conduct the language labs, help students and answer questions.

Edda first came to the United States in 1969 when she was part of a student program in Michigan for four weeks and then toured for eight weeks. She is planning on staying at Longwood for one year, during which time she will pick up some courses.

Milly, on the other hand, is a junior at Longwood and wants to graduate from here. She has already attended four years of college at the University of Costa Rica where she studied as a bi-lingual secretary. Milly admitted that out of one hundred applicants for the assistantship, only seven were chosen. Now an English major, Milly's chief worry is that she can't swim well enough to pass her requirements.

When asked about Christmas in Costa Rica, Milly said it was much like the American Christmas. The houses are decorated mainly on the inside, and since it is a Catholic country, each house displays a nativity scene. Just as in America, the pine trees are gaily decorated and the gifts are left beneath it for eager little hands to tear into. Milly contested the idea of our Mrs. Santa Claus; she insists Santa is a bachelor.

The Christmas season is one of joy in Costa Rica with popular parties, bullfights, dances, ferris wheels, and fireworks for about two weeks. While Christmas Day is a family affair, New Year's is the day to have a ball, and from 10 p.m. to 8 or 9 a.m., the parties thrive.

The Costa Rican students have an advantage over Americans in their participation in Christmas festivities, for their "summer vacation" runs from November 25 to March 5. Imagine a whole month to get all that Christmas shopping done!

While the Costa Ricans celebrate a Christmas much like ours, Edda's Germany has a different tradition. Germany's St. Nikolaus arrives the night of December 6. The children leave their shoes on the window sills, and if they've been good old St. Nick fills the shoes with candy; but if they've been bad, switches appear in the shoes.

On December 24, Weihnachtsmann, or Father Christmas, puts toys under the candle-lit Christmas tree while the family is at evening church services. When the children return from church, they go through that delightful ceremony of opening all those marvelous packages in mysterious shapes and sizes.

After the gifts are opened and paper and ribbon are strewn about the house, the family sings or reads poetry, and that night fish is the traditional meal.

The 25th is a day to visit friends and relatives and to partake of goose stuffed with apples. Sounds delicious!

We hope both Edda and Milly enjoy their American Christmas this year, and the ROTUNDA staff wishes to extend to all of you its best wishes for a delightful Christmas holiday.

Doze Not; Exams Are Coming

The Freshman Commission for this year was voted on by the Freshman class and its members are: Meg Atkinson, Diana Bass, Cindy Crisp, Lynn Greenway, Kristin Pearson, Lynn Hamilton, Marty Lewis, Jones Moreno, Nancy Phillips, and Linda Wood. The commission is composed of twelve Freshmen and Debbie Cochran, class president.

The commission's main purpose is to instill the ideas of YVCA and the spirit of Christmas into the Freshman class. The Commission will present a skit for Christmas, has decorated the tree in the Rotunda, and will conduct Sings.

Letter Of Interest

Dr. Henry I. Willett, Jr., President
Longwood College
Farmville, Virginia 23901

Dear Sir:

The Governor of the Commonwealth of Virginia requests your assistance in finding qualified candidates for our Administrative Intern Program.

This year we are hopeful for another large group of interested candidates. Your help in making seniors, graduate students and faculty aware of this opportunity would be appreciated.

The program is intended to prepare able, interested college graduates for effective leadership in State government, in an attempt to strengthen the quality of our administrative staffs. It is suggested that students in the fields of political science, economics, sociology, planning and architecture would be especially interested. However, there is room in State government for most fields of academic endeavor, thus, interested students in the liberal arts, sciences and other fields might profit from exposure to such a program.

A supply of application forms and supplements have been sent to your placement office for distribution. A sample brochure is enclosed for your information.

Thank you for your help. Both the students and the State of Virginia will benefit from your assistance.

Sincerely yours,
John W. Garber
Director of Personnel

Virginia's Commonwealth Intern Program

The blend of the old with the new in the Commonwealth of Virginia makes your year's assignment as an Administrative Intern an outstanding educational experience. You become oriented to the State's organization and services and prepare for your eventual role as a State government administrator. One year of training qualifies you for a mid-level assignment in such areas as budgeting, personnel, administrative analysis or other fields of technical competence. It is recommended that interested persons from all undergraduate and graduate fields apply.

Each intern will receive one or more assignments of several months' duration in central staff and line agencies. Intern positions are available in such agencies as the Division of Personnel, the Division of State Planning and Community Affairs, the Division of the Budget, and many others (further listing types of programs are available upon request). Individual assignments, which cover varied aspects of management analysis and operations, are designed for maximum utilization of your prior training and education. Every attempt will be made to tailor the program to your specific needs and interests. Interns will be urged to participate actively in the department's operation, and take part in the decision-making processes necessary to that department's operation. There will be many opportunities for discussion, consultation, and evaluation with administrators and technicians both within Practice continues as Varsity and JV get ready for a busy season.

JV Basketball Team Downs Deep Creek Dolls, 53-26

On Saturday, December 12, Longwood's junior varsity basketball team played host to the Deep Creek Dolls from Deep Creek High School. Longwood's 53-26 victory marked the beginning of the 1971 season.

As the first half came to an end Longwood had a 29 to 10 lead. This lead was sparked by baskets from Sue Craven, Joy King, Diane Padgett, and Katherine Tally. Impressive defensive moves by all team members throughout the half kept Deep Creek from scoring more than three points the first quarter and seven points the second.

High scorer for the JV team was Joy King with fifteen points followed closely by Diane Padgett with thirteen.

Joy scored her fifteen points on six field goals and three foul shots while Diane's thirteen points were scored from five field goals and three free throws.

On Thursday, January 7, there will be a speaker from the Virginia Health Careers Council visiting Longwood between 10:50 and 12:05 a.m. Any student interested in learning facts about any health career is encouraged to come to Bedford auditorium to hear this speaker.

The Student Ski Association has designed a program to bring down the cost of skiing, thereby enabling college students around the country to ski more, or to take up this growing winter sport. Says Chaffee, older brother of Olympic skiers Suzy and Rick Chaffee, and himself a former college ski racer: "As an undergraduate at Harvard and later as a graduate student at Berkeley, I saw how disheartened college students were over the high cost of skiing. So last year I set out to do something about it." That something is the Student Ski Association. A nationwide Student Ski Card promotional campaign is now underway on nearly 1,000 college campuses in North America. Students at many colleges will find posters and application coupons on campus bulletin boards, ads in college newspapers and Ski Card sales being handled by fellow students, working as SSA Campus Representatives.

Longwood Drowns Roanoke In Closest Meet Of The Year

The most exciting swimming meet of the year took place last Tuesday, December 15th here at Longwood. Our team met the Roanoke College team in what turned out to be the most competitive and closest meet of the entire season. Roanoke led all through the meet with the Longwood girls not far behind. In the last event, LC was losing by only five points. But the Longwood girls came through in the last event and won the 200 yard freestyle relay which gave them the meet. The final score was 53 to 51. The first place winners in the final event were Ellen Cahill, Eleanor Challen, Kathy Umbdenstock, and Leslie Edwards.

Katherine Hipskin captured a first place in the diving event. Other first place winners included Eleanor Challen. In the 50 yard breaststroke, Kathy Umbdenstock in the 100 yard backstroke and the 50 yard backstroke, and Leslie Edwards in the 100 yard freestyle and the 50 yard freestyle. Second place winners included Ellen Cahill in the butterfly, Eleanor Challen in the 100 yd. breaststroke, and Kathy Umbdenstock in the 100 yard individual medley.

Miss Sally Bush, the swimming coach, was very pleased with the team. The girls were glad the meet was over but looked forward to the Tournament at William and Mary. The tournament was held this past weekend and our girls did place in several events but the final results of the meet have not yet been sent to the coaches.

The swimming team has done very well this year and is to be congratulated for the good work. The competition has been great and the meets have been very exciting. We are looking forward to a great team next year!

H2O And Corkettes Present Synchronized Swimming Show

Now that the swimming competition is over, attention is turned to the Synchronized Swimming presented by the H2O and Corkette Club. The girls are already working on a great show to be given on March 17th and the 20th. The theme has been chosen but can not be announced at this time. The sponsor is Dr. Barbara Smith. An interesting aspect of the show is that some of Dr. Smith's students are writing some of the numbers in class. A great amount of work is going into this show and will produce some very exciting and very promising entertainment.

There are 33 members in the club. The President is Judy Donahoe and the Vice President is Lois Hrubik.

LC is off to a good start in the 50 yd. freestyle event against Ferrum College.

Mary Baldwin Places Third In Competition

Longwood College took a third place at a recent American Fencing League Association meet at Virginia Commonwealth University in Richmond. Mary Frances Baldwin, varsity fencing member, took third place in the Virginia Division of Women's Foil Competition.

First place was won by Richmond fencer Geraldine Edmunds who was the State AFLA finalist last year. Second place went to a student from Lynchburg College.

Participating in the meet were two women from the Richmond Fencing Club, four students from Lynchburg College, and two from Longwood College; including Miss Baldwin and varsity fencing coach, Miss Sally Bush.

This was the first out of season fencing meet for the Longwood team. The regular fencing season will begin in January with tryouts on the 5th, 6th, and 7th. Meets will begin in February and the Intercollegiate Tournament is scheduled for March 12th and 13th at Longwood College.

The Longwood girls have done very well in diving competition thru out the season.

A first place for LC's hard working team.

Exit The King

Saturday night's performance of Eugene Ionesco's The King was pleasing both technically and literally. Directed by Mr. Douglas Young, the cast and crews carried a most uncompromising script to a smooth completion.

The acting was, for the most part, more than satisfactory. Scott Reeves, as the King, proved his acting ability in the portrayal of an extremely difficult character. Although Reeves' initial attempts at aging were somewhat sketchy, his "after-grey" performance was certainly worth waiting for. Also to be commended is Brad White, who as the Doctor did another excellent job, despite apparent problems. As Queen Marguerite, Diann Simonini was disappointing, possibly because she was sandwiched between Reeves' and White's characterizations. Her dedication to her own character blighted any simulation of communication with her highly actors. Had she reacted more and recited less, the already long production (occasionally the actors could not be heard for the seats) might not have seemed quite so long. Cindy Baughman made an absorbing Queen Marguerite; hers was an unusually striking portrayal, possibly due to her highly pleasant vocal quality. In minor roles, John Chinn and Linda Dexter added

The People Next Door

By SARAH FARRAR

Unfortunately, at a time when understanding, unbiased and realistic understanding, is needed — a movie is released that just doesn't help anyone. To be sure it is virtually harmless if one enters the theater expecting a solid cross-section of the "truth." "The People Next Door" presents a very "loud," to say the least, picture of darkness in suburbia.

What does one do when he finds his daughter huddled in the back of her bedroom closet, taking a little time on LSD? Or shackled up in the East Village with a Hell's Angels colleague? Well, if you believe Eli Wallace and Julie Harris in "The People Next Door," you blame older brother. You get mad — at little sister. You get mad at the neighbors and each other. And all the time you yell, yell, yell. In every way "The People Next Door" is an anachronism, a "naturalistic" play like those prevalent in the 1950's. It ran on TV two years ago and has now been transported to the screen with every cliché, every oversimplification, every gross dramatic, taking a trifle. The subject, to be sure, is a serious one. But J. O. Miller, who wrote the similarly deviant "Days of Wine and Roses," is really not interested in it. (And to be sure, the film shows that.) What occupies his time is repeated and "poisonous" attack on youth, who are portrayed throughout as spoiled, selfish, loveless and unloving brats. There are a couple of slight attempts to explain young people's interest in drugs (Mommy takes a lot of pills, Daddy is a booze hound), but it's smack of smug rationalization. It just doesn't work.

In the midst of all these dismal goings on are several fine actors yelling to get out. Wallace is brutal and forceful as the father; Hal Holbrook, playing a nextdoor neighbor, is remarkably moving against overwhelming odds; and the young actors — Deborah Winters, Steven McMichael, Ron Scardino — are a talented crew. The best of "The People Next Door" is the brilliant, low-key camera work of Gordon Willis, who has a fine eye for color and composition.

One can't really take the film too seriously, but do consider its subject: American family life and its changing scope. At least one becomes more aware of something that possibly they hadn't considered as important as it is.

One lesson the viewers can learn from the film (rather indirectly but it is there): Try a little understanding. Put yourself in the other fellow's shoes, even if it is a parent! It might prove some supervising results. "The People Next Door" could learn from you.

welcome diversions, despite the fact that their characterizations were directly opposed to their make-up. Both were, however, believable, which in a play by Ionesco is a feat in itself. Technically the show had some minor set-backs. Make-up fell short on Queen Marguerite, who looked as though she had fought a losing battle with a smudge-pot; make-up did score well with the Doctor, though, and provided a sufficiently aged King. Other technicalities included slightly unbalanced lights, torn flats, and sloppily painted thrones. Whether these last items were intentional or not, they were distracting, but none detracted greatly from the overall performance. Technical laurels involved effective trap exits, disappearing thrones, and a precision stage crew. Costumes should now take time out for feathers in their own caps.

All factors considered, our Longwood ladies were handed an intellectually stimulating evening on, if not a silver platter, then a student identification card, their only admission requirement. It is indeed a pity that so few of our culture vultures decided to take advantage of a swing away from musical comedy. Perhaps a later production will grasp three hours out of their month.

Santa Finds

His Beard Too Short

When His Pants Fall

By LYNDIA VAN HORN

With the advent of Christmas quickly approaching, it is appropriate to look at the trials of Santa Claus. Every year the Jaycees of Farmville call upon Dr. James Helms to fill the seat occupied only once a year by Santa. Dr. Helms has been filling this role for longer than he can actually remember, although he put the date at somewhere around 1957 or 1958.

There are several basic categories of children. Dr. Helms noted, First, there are the near infants, who view Santa as some kind of red monster. Santa's job is to calm these children and make them like Santa Claus. Next comes the children ages two to five who idolize Santa. These are the children most welcomed by Santa. They are sometimes awe struck and unable to speak. This child has nothing but love for Santa. As Dr. Helms says, "It's the eyes that turn you on." The next group includes those children who have memorized the list catalogue and those who are nonbelievers. Even though some of those children want everything, the average child asks for no more than three items. This group also includes those children who ask for something practical and most items desperately needed. There is always someone standing close to Santa to get names and addresses of these children so that they can be given what they need. This is Dr. Helms' idea of the true Christmas spirit.

Even though the rewards for Santa Claus are many, there have been drawbacks as well. This year Dr. Helms jumped from the float in the Christmas parade, his pants fell to the ground, "Nothing," he said, "is quite as embarrassing as standing there with beard and gloves without your pants."

Dr. Helms mentioned lastly that he feels he is chosen for Santa Claus because he doesn't have to rely on a pillow for Santa's tummy. "Don't you think," he said, "that it's appropriate to have Thanksgiving before Christmas so Santa Claus can 'fill' his role a little better?"

Governor's Management Study Proposes College Improvements

By ETHEL RIETER

The following items have been extracted from the Governor's Management Study. This document includes a description of the institution, the present operating methods, an appraisal of current operations, and a list of recommended improvements for all state schools. The recommended improvements here listed have been submitted to the Governor for consideration.

1. Eliminate one resident construction inspector. Longwood College has two full-time inspectors. Construction would have to continue at current levels to justify continuation of both positions. The standards of the State Council of Higher Education show a reduced need for new construction over the next four years. Elimination of one inspector would produce net annual savings of $8,500.

2. Operate the golf course at Longwood as an auxiliary enterprise. It is current practice to pay the salary of the golf course manager and groundsman from general funds. The school's golf course should be considered an auxiliary enterprise and all costs associated with its operation covered by fees. Salaries of the manager and groundsman as well as the annual cost of grass seed and maintenance in the amount of approximately $13,800 will be saved.

3. Fund the college's proposed Physical Education building only to the extent of need, as shown by the State Council of Higher Education for 1979-80. Presently, Longwood College has 6,681 assignable square feet of physical education facilities. Based on enrollment projections of the Council for the 1979-80 school year, an additional 22,389 square feet will be required. Longwood has received planning money for 66,000 assignable square feet or a facility of 90,000 gross square feet. This recommendation proposes a reduction of 47,070 gross square feet. The one-time cost avoidance resulting from adherence to Council standards represents $1.26-million.

Mistletoe Is Not What You Think

Mistletoe, with all its quaint, pretty Christmas inferences, isn't the friendly little "plant" you might think. It is a grim parasite that grows on almost every variety of tree in the U.S., sometimes causing the host to sicken or die, says the December SCIENCE DIGEST. Birds spread mistletoe by eating its berries and then wiping their bills on trees to get rid of the sticky seeds.

Pat Perry, 1971-72 Maid Of Cotton

Lynda Van Horn

Chosen from among twenty finalists, Patricia Dianne Perry became the 33rd Maid of Cotton on December 30 in Memphis, Tennessee. A panel of seven judges selected the winner after two days of judging on the basis of personality, alertness, beauty and background. Pat became the first Maid of Cotton from Virginia. A senior home economics major, Pat was a member of the fencing team, Orchestra, Phi Mu, and president of Kappa Omicron Phi. She also served as Miss Longwood in 1968.

To be eligible for the contest the finalists had to be born in a cotton producing state or have lived continuously in the Cotton-belt since the age of seven or earlier. She must be between the ages of 19 and 23, never married, and at least five feet five inches tall.

As a beginning to her reign, Pat was featured on a special float in the recent Cotton Bowl parade in Dallas, and earlier this week was honored by the city of Danville upon her return home from a two week period of glamorous activity. She will complete her first semester's work at Longwood before returning to Memphis to prepare for a globe circling fashion and good will tour. She will visit some twenty-five cities in the United States and Canada and then travel to twelve countries in the Far East and Europe including: Korea, Japan, Taiwan, Hong Kong, the Philippines, Indonesia, Thailand, and India. Returning to the states via Europe, she will visit Rome and Paris. At the conclusion of her tour next summer, she will be presented with a new automobile from Memphis District Ford dealers.

The city of Farmville and Prince Edward County planned a public salute to honor the new Maid of Cotton. The joint county-community-campus celebration was held on the lawn of Prince Edward Courthouse Wednesday, January 13, at 12:30 p.m. Invitations had been extended to a number of leading civic, business, and political leaders across the state, in addition to a large number of Longwood students and members of the Farmville area.

In her role as America's cotton industry's fashion and good will ambassador, Pat will appear on television and radio programs, take part in cotton fashion shows throughout the world, and be featured in numerous civic activities. Her personal wardrobe is made up of high fashion cottons created by some of America's leading designers.

I Got By With A Little Help From My Friends

For the past two semesters I have been Editor-in-Chief of "The Rotunda," and, in this editorial, I would like to thank the ACTIVE members of the staff who have helped put the paper out every week. It seems that, like everything else, it's the ones who complain the most who don't do anything constructive about what they're complaining about. With over 2,000 girls on campus, more than five should be actively involved in putting out the newspaper. The newspaper is not the only group on campus that is having this problem. The other publications have this problem as do many of the clubs. Where are these 2,000 plus girls when it comes to doing something constructive? Many girls complain because one girl is in charge of more than one organization. But why not, she is probably the only girl who has really done something for the organization. Where are the apathetic majority? They are probably sitting back in their rooms with a Coke and a movie magazine.

Enough of the apathy lecture. The main point is that "The Rotunda" will not be able to survive unless it has more willing workers. This also includes the faculty. At one time "The Rotunda" did have enough staff to have every department covered by a reporter who would see the department chairman and find out if there was a story that needed coverage. Now there are not enough students to do this. In order to have a fair representation of the departments, someone in each department should notify the editor or a member of the staff about ten days before the next paper comes out that there will possibly be a story from the department.

Another problem where lack of staff really hurts is during the Sunday night lay-out sessions. The old faithfuls come every week—about three of us—who count words, write headlines, type, lay-out the paper, and when an expected story does not come in, the Editor has to come up with an inspiration to fill the spaces. Or, when the pictures don't come out, there is a mad dash to either retake the pictures before the printer's deadline or to find a substitute. As an example, when none of the pictures came out for a paper last year, two of the pictures could be retaken, but something had to be done to fill the space left by four pictures. The academic calendar and a game were used to fill the place. At times like this, my suite meets for a brainstorming session until someone comes up with a solution of what to stuff into a hole on page one. Thank you, roommate and submates.

Then there are the times when I get a call at eleven p.m. on Sunday night. Someone wants an article in "The Rotunda." The paper has already been laid out and an extra story is not needed that week. Whoever got the idea that "Rotunda" articles should be turned in on Sunday night? Saturday at 6 p.m. was the deadline. Getting an article to the Editor on Sunday night does not give her time to read the article and check to see if the facts are correct. Contrary to what may be popular belief, we do not enjoy spending five hours in "The Rotunda" office laying out the newspaper, just so that on Wednesday someone can ask why there wasn't a picture in the paper of the LC tiddlywinks champions.

There are also the students who do not turn in their articles until Monday morning. The newspaper, completely laid-out with articles accompanying it, should be in the hands of "The Farmville Herald" on Monday morning, ready to print. Thank you, "Farmville Herald," for the many times you have understood about a late story or have tried to help fill a space.

There are students who complain about the content of the "Letters to the Editor," the news stories and the editorials. They feel they are biased, that the paper is just the viewpoint of the small staff who keep it going every week. If this is the situation, it's your own fault, you people sitting back in your rooms lounging, you can join the staff. You can write "Letters to the Editor." You can submit articles, features, or reviews. You can even talk to the Editor, but don't expect her to come to you for your opinion. If you feel that your opinion is really that important, go to her.

And if you want to compare the Longwood newspaper with other college newspapers, remember one thing, their staff may be larger and PAID.

If you feel that you do not have the time to write for the paper, there is still much you can do—proofreading, writing cutlines, typing, counting stories, etc.

Help next semester's staff. Don't let them turn old and cynical before their time. Join "The Rotunda!"

CVVA Presented Film On Western Society Recently

"Civilisation," the color film series tracing the great ideas and events of Western Society over the last sixteen centuries, came to this area on January 12. Sponsored by the Central Virginia Art Association (CVAA), the special program is a gift of the Ladies Council, Virginia Museum of Fine Arts.

A 13-part series, "Civilisation" has won critical acclaim on two continents. It was created, written and narrated by the distinguished British art historian Lord Clark of Saltwood (Kenneth Clark). What makes the series different from other historical films is the fact that Clark views the development of Western man in the light of man's artistic accomplishments. Clark tells the story of civilization through the media of paintings, architecture, sculpture and music. "The Washington Post" commented about this presentation: "He (Clark) can look at a carving in the nave of the Chartres cathedral and make you see how it personifies the spirit of an age . . . he pulls out a few sentences from the dazzling storehouse of his mind and makes the listener immediately curious to know more about the subject."

Produced by the British Broadcasting Corporation, "Civilisation" was televised originally in Great Britain in 1969. In the United States, it has played to full houses at art galleries and universities.

The series will be shown here in seven installments, according to James P. Baber, president, CVAA. The first program, scheduled for viewing January 12, was one hour in length. The six succeeding programs will be shown January 15, 19, 22, 26, 29, and February 2. Each of the latter is approximately two hours long, featuring two consecutive films from the series. "Civilisation" will be shown at the Prince Edward County Courthouse, Main Street, Farmville, at 7:30 p.m. The program on January 26 will be shown in the Conference Room of the new county office annex. There is no admission charge and the general public is invited to attend.

Players Elect Officers

Longwood Players elected new officers last Thursday. The President is Joyce Saunders, Vice-President is Beth Tavares, and Technical Director is Neil Skinner. Other officers are Treasurer, Diane Rourke, Secretary, Kay Burcher, and Public Relations, Brenda Griffin.

Through the end of this week, paintings by two Longwood students will be displayed in the hall of first-floor Bedford Building. The painting on the left is an acrylic by Donna Wadsworth; on the right, a mixed media painting by Becky Kelso.

Students Design Own Course Of Study At Chatam College

PITTSBURGH, PA., (L.P.) — Chatam College has adopted a new academic program which frees the student from traditional requirements and gives her an opportunity to design the course of study which best fulfills her personal educational interests and abilities.

Under the new program, the student may complete the 34 courses required for graduation by choosing freely from a wide selection of courses in the humanities, social and natural sciences.

Two interim programs and a tutorial must also be finalized. The interim programs will provide month-long, differently structured and especially intensive work in a field of special student interest. The senior tutorial — an individual study project designed by the student and a faculty advisor, and requiring competent oral and written articulation — will now be the only formal academic experience common to all Chatam students.

The new curriculum will offer a special group of topic-oriented and problem-oriented seminars open only to freshmen. During the first ten days of each fall term freshmen will be allowed to attend classes without registering for them.

This will give new students an opportunity to meet the majority of the faculty and to determine by actual classroom experience those courses which best fulfill their educational objectives.

In the new curriculum the student — working closely with her faculty advisor — will determine whether she will pursue a traditional or an innovative program. In choosing her course work, she may decide on a traditional departmental or interdepartmental major, and thus assume the structure of

"7" Day Period Rules In Effect, Calldowns Given

The purpose of the 7-day period will be to create an atmosphere conducive to study during the exam period. This shall be accomplished in two ways.

- I. The 7-days prior to exams, January 12-18, will be considered a strict quiet period and will be enforced by Residence Board.
  - A. Regular Residence Board rules concerning quiet on the halls will be enforced strictly.
  - B. Complete quiet will be expected at all times during these days.
  - C. Any girl may give another girl a calldown for excessive noise during the 7-day period preceding exams of the exam period.
  - D. A calldown given for excessive noise during this period will result in 2 days plain campus.
- II. No organization or college-related activity shall hold meetings during the entire 7 days preceding the exam period.
  - A. The Judicial Board and the Residence Board may be two exceptions. They may meet if the need arises.
  - B. Any other exceptions of special requests will be handled by the office of the Dean of Women.

the requirements for that major.

She may elect instead to center her work on a problem involving several disciplines not usually considered related. Or she may decide to create a mosaic of course work, one not actually centered on any particular major or problem, but appropriate to her personal intellectual requirements.

To assure that the student has ample experience in the methods of scholarly work, certain unconventional course formats have been created. One such course is the Freshman Seminar, a topic- and problem-centered approach to learning designed to involve small groups of students in research and in consideration and articulation of a common problem. The Faculty Symposium will serve as another kind of innovative course.

In lieu of traditional classwork, two or more faculty members may schedule a symposium to discuss a subject relevant to their disciplines, or to test and formulate scholarship in which they are engaged.

It is impossible to overestimate the importance of the faculty-student relationship to the success of the new program. For his part, the faculty member is freed to determine new courses in obedience to his academic interest rather than to the requirements of a standardized basic curriculum.

He will teach what he genuinely wants to teach, in the way he wants to teach it, just as the student is free to chart her course of study.

Pass-Fail Option Used In Colleges May Be Replaced

PULLMAN, WASH., (L.P.) — The pass-fail option now being used in many colleges and universities, may in time be replaced by a credit-no credit option with failing marks eliminated entirely.

This possibility is raised by Jim Quann, associate registrar at Washington State University, Quann based his findings on a survey he conducted among 150 four year colleges and universities.

The initial survey was sent to major universities in each state, as well as institutions that were reported to be experimenting with pass-fail or other grading innovations.

Much of the data listed in his study may soon be outdated, he said, but "emergent trends can be determined, and a useful model can be designed."

He concluded by saying that of 25 grading options adopted during the 1969-70 school year, 55 per cent utilized a variation of credit-no credit grading, while 72 per cent completely eliminated the effect of the "F," or failing grade, on the grade point average.

"Thus, while pass-fail is the more prominent trend in new grading techniques, the credit-no credit option, with complete elimination of the concept of 'failure,' is the emerging pattern," Quann said.

A student has been charged with and pleaded guilty to cheating. The student has been suspended until February, 1972.

Psychologist Reports "New Left" Group To Have Had Exotic Drug Experience

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF., (L.P.) — Student campus radicals — the New Left — are the most likely to have had illicit-exotic drug experience, reports psychologist Richard H. Blum in his new two-volume study, "Students and Drugs," (Jossey-Bass Inc., San Francisco).

"From 1962 until today," he writes, "the most visibly fervent groups on campus have been the New Left, the student radicals whose protests, sit-ins and other forms of political activity have stirred so much interest. Those in the left wing are shown in our survey data to be the most likely students with illicit-exotic drug experience."

And the farther to the left, the more intensive their drug use, Dr. Blum finds. There are some exceptions, he notes. Marxists, for example, are strongly opposed to illicit drug use.

Either way, in any student drug-using group, they are "vitality interested in drugs" and "they can have these drug interests plus a strong admixture of active-left politics, with its emphasis on power sharing (or grabbing), confrontations, and expanded individual freedom (or anarchy)."

But the issue is more complex than that, and there is danger in categorization, the research associates on the survey project note.

In the first place, Dr. Blum writes, "most students do not appear to be interested in illicit-exotic drug use, the New Left or dropping out. Consequently, any diagnosis of student drug experimentation or activism which says 'students are . . . ' misses the fact that most students are not."

"In the second place, even the stu-

Wofford College Alters Grade System No D & F Grades

SPARTANBURG, S.C., (L.P.) — In a move designed to emphasize the positive aspects of learning, Wofford College altered its grading system by dropping the grades of D and F this fall.

In the place of these marks, grades of "Placement Credit only" (PL) and "No Credit" (NC) will be given. The grades A, B and C will be maintained.

Under the new system, the entire grade point ratio system, which has been used as a factor in determining whether a student is eligible for graduation, will be abolished. The former system made it nearly impossible to offset D's and F's with good grades. In lieu of the grade point ratio previously required, candidates for degrees will be required to accumulate 120 semester hours worth of credit with grades of C or better in order to graduate.

Beginning this fall, any student making a PL in a course during the regular semester will receive no semester hours toward the needed 120 for graduation, but will complete the particular requirement if the course is required for graduation.

Students earning an NC in one of these courses will receive no semester hours of credit and no completion of the satisfaction of the requirement. These required courses will have to be repeated until at least a grade of PL is earned. If the course is an elective course, there is no requirement to repeat the course and some (Continued on Page 4) dents who are activist, drug-oriented or drop-outs are by no means a homogeneous group." These "revolutionaries of the inner world, the drug-oriented," Dr. Blum points out, espouse doctrines that sound like a Christian sermon: "fellowship, love, peace, religious experience, personal expansion, and artistic development."

"The revolutionaries of the outer world," he writes, the activists, espouse goals "which sound like a Presidential campaign speech: peace and international accommodation, freedom at home and abroad, democratic sharing of power, justice and opportunity for all."

Dr. Blum and his associates, who spent more than eight years on their study, surveyed more than 20,000 persons and analyzed research from several other Western countries and cultures. They talked to drug users at five western colleges and universities and six California high schools, and found that the most prevalent use of an illicit drug was the smoking of marijuana. They drew a profile of the typical marijuana-smoker:

More prevalent among students who are older upper-classmen, arts and humanities and social science majors; Come from wealthier families with one or both parents deceased;

Are either without religious affiliation, or are Jewish, or have no interest in religion, or differ from mother or father's religion;

Find athletics of no importance, (but) do participate and are involved in politics;

Do seek new experience, do not participate in activities related to academic or future careers, politically are strongly left or are undergoing political change farther to the left; and are in disagreement with the politics of their parents."

But a follow-up study reveals that as the use of marijuana becomes more prevalent among the majority of students, as it has now on some campuses, users' characteristics are less extreme, so that the portrait of the marijuana experimenter is also the portrait of the average student.

Big Brown Eyes And Dark Hair, That's Peyton Of Prince Beowulf

By VICKI BOWLING

There is a new face on campus. Most of the students have already seen it, for who could help but notice and remember a young, active, friendly male with big brown eyes and shiny, dark hair? That's right, I'm talking about Peyton of Prince Beowulf, the Great Dane puppy of English professor Fred P. Herndon.

Mr. Herndon was all too happy to talk about his youthful friend. Like any proud father, he brought out snapshots recording his "son's" growth. Under Peyton's watchful eyes, he related some very interesting facts.

It seems that Mr. Herndon, like the British author Thomas Hardy, was beginning to have fears of not having someone to carry on the family name. Peyton solved the problem. Beowulf was his father and Peyton is Mr. Herndon's middle name.

Peyton is about half the size he will eventually reach. He will grow six to seven inches taller and will add 85-95 lbs. to his present 75 lbs. It is obvious that Peyton is still a growing puppy. He celebrated his seven-months birthday on December 17.

Is it expensive to keep a Great Dane? Well, he eats about six lbs. of food a day, both dog food and leftovers. Mr. Herndon figures that he has already spent $700 on Peyton. He plans to get some of this money back, though, by making a show dog of him.

Peyton accompanies his master everywhere, including on some dates. He fits right in, liking people more than other dogs. Particularly partial to his kind master, he is very obedient.

Mr. Herndon said that the reaction to Peyton by the young females on campus was generally that of admiration. "Unfortunately," he mourned, "he doesn't know how to appreciate it or take advantage of it."

"On a Clear Day" represents Hollywood's conception of a mystical musical — meaning that boy meets girl in the here and now, loses her in a past life, and gets her in a future incarnation.

"B." In this case is sexy Yves Montand, a psychiatrist who discovers that, under hypnosis, a chain-smoking college student, Daisy Gamble, possesses a past existence and identity so fascinating that he immediately falls in love with her.

Alan Lerner's Broadway musical is about this baffling lovely and her master-of-fact reincarnation. Barbra Streisand throws her accent around fairly well but somehow it is all too overdone.

Unfortunately, Barbra has apparently done some spreading out herself, for while in the 1970 scenes she's merely plump, the 19th century flashbacks find her looking positively bovine. The songs are good, and she belts them out the Streisand way. But one wishes he were seeing Barbra in a concert in Central Park (where she really is enjoyable) instead of the film, for her songs have been strung out by excessive stylistic indulgence that not only do Alan Jay Lerner's lyrics get swallowed up in an interpretative mess but any likeness of emotional or melodic communication almost disappears as well.

Montand comes off well, considering he's blessed with some of the score's weaker material — with a series of dreary scenes in which reincarnation is discussed in terms very elementary.

The film's subject could have had more intellectual vitality.

(Reincarnation is a subject that if approached with the right amount of magnetism, can hold just about everyone's interest.) The film lacked this quality and its impact is further lessened by Lerner's inability to fashion a convincing narrative style from the plot, character, music and theme. Among the more notable cast members is: "Easy Rider's" Jack Nicholson who, as a passive crypto-hippie, smiles vacantly (and endlessly) from the depths of a yellow turn-of-mind.

Director Vincente Minnelli manages to summon traces of his energy and inventiveness for the film's last twenty minutes, but he evidently couldn't prevent inexcusable technical errors (phony backgrounds, inaccurate follow-ups, atrocious lip synchronization, etc.).

Streisand manages to deliver some funny lines with a bit of flamboyancy. But, when you see this mystical musical extravaganza you'll probably realize it could have been better, it's one of those movies you see and don't regret seeing — but some of you will find it won't be one of your favorites.

Drug Use, Pre-marital Sex - Topics Of Survey

The purpose of this study, made during the second week of November, was to obtain information about the behavior of students in certain areas of personal health. It is to be hoped that eventually it might be possible to make comparisons between the results of the questionnaire this year and those which might be obtained in future years.

Approximately one-third of the student body, randomly selected, was used to answer the questionnaire. A total of 234 freshmen (28%), 153 sophomores (29%), 117 juniors (32%), and 129 seniors (33%) responded to the questionnaire. This means that a total of 633 (30%) of the members of the student body participated in the study.

SMOKING

- One-third of the students questioned do smoke.

- A higher percentage of seniors smoke than members of other classes.

- Thirty-one (7%) of the non-smokers did smoke, but have stopped.

- The majority (86%) of smokers consume less than one pack of cigarettes a day. (58% of these smokers use fewer than 10 cigarettes per day.)

- More than one-half (53%) of the smokers started smoking in high school.

DRINKING

- Slightly less than three-fourths (74%) of the students questioned said that they have used alcohol.

- 91% of the students who indicated that they have consumed alcohol do so only on weekends, once or twice a month, or at occasional social events.

- Only 9% of the students who do drink do so several times a week.

- A higher percentage of seniors use alcohol than other students do.

- More than one-half (54%) of the students who drink began in senior high school. An additional 12% began earlier than high school.

DRUG USE

- Of the students questioned, 17% have taken illegal drugs.

- Of the students who have used illegal drugs, over 95% indicated that the only exposure to drugs was with marijuana (16% of the total group questioned).

- The results indicate that most students who have used drugs, have been experimenting, and are not habitual users.

University Attempt To Separate College From Publications

COLLEGE PARK, MD. (L.P.) — The University of Maryland's Board of Regents recently announced the appointment of a special commission composed of prominent journalists and educators to study methods of separating student publications from the University.

The creation of a commission was recommended by a special committee of the Board appointed to study all aspects of the student activities fees. On the recommendation of the committee, the Regents acted to separate fee-supported student publications from the University and to have the proposed commission advise them no later than February 1, 1971, on the procedures to be followed to do this.

Student publications at the University are presently supported by funds allocated from mandatory student activities fees. Controversial contents which have appeared in several student publications prompted investigations to find out how these publications might become self-supporting.

University President Wilson H. Elkins in announcing the commission's appointment commented, "We realize we cannot be engaged in censorship which courts have ruled against."

"This leaves the University as the publisher without means of control of its student publications. We expect to separate the student publications so the University will not be the publisher and the question now is how to do it."

4. A higher percentage of juniors have used drugs than others have.

PRE-MARITAL SEX

1. 28% of the students questioned indicated that they have had pre-marital sex relationships.

2. Approximately 50% of the students who have had pre-marital sex relationships did so prior to graduation from high school.

3. A higher percentage of seniors have had pre-marital relationships than other students have.

KOSYGIN CONDEMNS RAIDS

MOSCOW — Soviet Premier Alexei Kosygin has condemned U.S. Bombing raids over Laos as an "outrageous invasion." Kosygin said the Soviet government is following the events in Indo China with "serious attention."

The Soviet Premier also attacked Israel's role in the Middle East and accused Tel Aviv of constantly threatening a new war by its grip on occupied Arab territories.

NEWS BLACKOUT CHARGED

SAIGON — The Communist Pathet Lao has charged that U.S. and South Vietnamese troops are massing on the South Vietnamese border for a major operation in Laos. In a broadcast, the Communist-led guerrillas asserted the two forces will operate in conjunction with troops from Thailand.

The Laotian government has confirmed that fighting is going on in that country. But it said nothing about whether South Vietnamese troops might be involved. The command has imposed a news embargo on operations in the northern sector of South Vietnam, near the Laotian border. But administration officials in Washington indicated the news blackout will be lifted soon.

U THANT TO RESIGN OFFICE: COMMENTS ON ISSUES

UNITED NATIONS — U Thant declared that he has no intention of continuing as U.N. Secretary-General after his present term expires at the end of this year. He now is in his tenth year as secretary-general.

At a news conference, Thant also commented on a number of international issues. He does not believe the U.S. or the Soviet Union should take part in any peacekeeping force in the Middle East, but added that Britain and France might play such a role.

He disclosed the U.N. Secretariat is preparing for the eventual admission of Red China to the U.N., but he does not expect this to occur before next year.

MEN TAKE OFF FOR MOON

HOUSTON — Apollo 14 space-men, Stuart Roosa, Edgar Mitchell, and Alan Shepard, took off Feb. 1 at 4:03 p.m. for the moon. A full week of activity, including walks to new craters, concluded Tuesday with splash down in the South Pacific, 900 miles south of Samoa. The crew, which had trouble docking, was given the go ahead and completed their walk on the moon.

NIXON REPORTS TO CONGRESS

Longwood Mourns Death Of Student And Employee

Mary Elizabeth Kienlen, freshman at Longwood College, died last Thursday night in a Greyhound bus accident. She was 18.

Beth was on her way to Richmond to meet her mother when the accident occurred. She was to have flown Friday to South Bend, Ind., for "Mardi Gras" weekend at the University of Notre Dame.

Although Beth had only been with us for a semester, she had touched the lives of many of the students at Longwood. She was elected "Miss Pep" her senior year at St. Gertrudes High School. She brought this same enthusiasm with her to Longwood and showed it in her relations with her classmates.

She is survived by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Kienlen of Richmond and six younger brothers and sisters. Funeral services were held Monday, February 8, in Philadelphia. In lieu of flowers the family asked that donations be given to St. Gertrudes High School.

In Memoriam

Mary Elizabeth Kienlen

Mr. Phillip Ward

Mr. Phillip Ward, head baker at Longwood College for 31 years, died unexpectedly last Friday. He was 49.

Mr. Ward came from a long line of bakers. His grandfather worked here at the college for 50 years and his father worked here for 40 years. Mr. Ward became interested in baking when he accompanied his father to the Longwood kitchen at the age of 16.

Mr. Carbone, head of Slater Service here at Longwood, said, "I respected Phillip as a person and as a darn fine baker." Mr. Ward was in charge of all the fancy decorating of the bakery goods including the famous Oktoberfest cakes.

Mr. Ward had spent four weeks last summer in the hospital, before returning to work last fall. Mr. Carbone said Mr. Ward came to him Thursday afternoon and said the doctor had recommended he go back to the hospital for a while.

Mr. Ward was dedicated to his job and was hesitant to leave and return to the hospital.

He is survived by his wife, four grown children, one of whom is stationed in Japan, and a little girl at home. Funeral services were held Monday at the First Baptist Church.

It is an answer to student demands to participate in areas outside their major. Such courses as yoga, film making, bridge, current events, opera, stitchery, current trends in education, ecology, birth control, and film as an art form are offered. These courses will provide the students with opportunity to form new hobbies and interests and to discuss current issues. Classes will start at 7:00 p.m. Mon-

SECRECY CREATED FEAR

WASHINGTON — Senate Democratic leader Mike Mansfield has told newsmen the continuing secrecy about the Laos situation is creating "a certain amount of apprehension about what is in the offing." He said, "I dislike getting my information from the Russians, the French and the Japanese." Mansfield referred to foreign news reports about developments in the Laotian border region.

All classes are free, and no prerequisites are required. The instructors will be members of the faculty, administration, and students.

If the "Experimental College" proves a success, the Student Union plans to add subjects that are in the regular curriculum. These courses will enable students to take courses that they would otherwise not have time for.

Among the classes being presented by the "Experimental College" program, youga seems to be very intriguing. However, this is not the proper attire for a yoga class.

Project "Do It" To Alleviate Problems In Prince Edward

Project Do-It is a new social action program sponsored by the Student Social Interest Action Committee, the Episcopalian Youth Group, and the Vista Volunteers in the area. The purpose of the program is to create a rapport between both Hampden-Sydney and Longwood students and underprivileged families in the community. A girl and boy team will be assigned to a particular family in hopes that it will be mutually beneficial for both parties.

Prior to assignment there will be a Training Weekend for the students. Due to the large turnout at the first explanatory meeting, two Training Weekends have been set on February 12-14 and February 19-21. These weekends will attempt to educate and prepare the students for working with the underprivileged families and offer suggestions for ways in which they may help their family. Films and various speakers will be included in the Training session. "Poverty in the South" and the film on Prince Edward County are both scheduled to be shown. Jim Ghee, a law student, will speak on the legal aspects of poverty. The background and history of Prince Edward County will be discussed by Darwin Williams, a resident of the area and community action employee. Andy Rothschild, a Vista Volunteer, will speak on Welfare Rights Organizations, and Lindsey Nolting, a Welfare Rights worker, will discuss Day Care Centers. Dr. West, a local dentist will speak on health aspects.

A Positive Policy

The Rotunda is under new management. It is my primary objective as editor to make sure that the news of Longwood College is presented truthfully to the students. All aspects of college life, whether favorable or unfavorable will be scrutinized and reported on. I wish to make it clear that my staff and I are not, as many have assumed, a small group intent on upsetting the Longwood tradition. We are instead interested in informing in a newsworthy fashion.

In order to put together a respectable paper, co-operation is needed on levels other than that of the editor and her staff. There are some courtesy rules which should be followed in order to improve communications and the news content of all articles.

1. When a Rotunda reporter gets in touch with you, try to make it a point to see her.
2. If a Rotunda reporter is asked to represent the school in a social function give her ample warning.
3. All newspaper stories are to be turned in by 12:00 a.m. on Saturday, typed, double spaced, and placed in the Rotunda office. Stories which are turned in late will not be used.
4. Classified advertising will now be available to Longwood students at 3 cents a word.
5. Opinions expressed are those of the weekly editorial board and its columnists and do not necessarily reflect the views of the student body or the administration.
6. If there is some discrepancy call the editor at either 2-6497 or 2-6326. It is her responsibility to see that everything is done correctly.

We have never been more serious in our attempt at putting out a respectable Rotunda. We need your co-operation as well as help. We intend to represent you, so if we can help you in any way please feel free to call on us.

An Open Letter To The Student Body

A number of questions have been raised by students in regard to the policy of the administration of the College with reference to the Rotunda. I would, therefore, like to answer these questions by presenting the following policy statement.

The administration of Longwood College does not now nor has it ever required the submission of copy for approval prior to publication. Indeed, the only occasions on which members of the administrative staff and myself have read material prior to its being included in the Rotunda have been when, out of courtesy, members of the Rotunda staff have submitted it for our comments.

What is actually printed in the Rotunda should be that material which is prepared by the staff of the Rotunda. Obviously there are going to be occasions when members of the administrative staff, including myself, and members of the staff of the Rotunda are going to disagree on a particular issue. This is as it should be. It is important that members of the Rotunda staff should attempt to exercise the same sense of responsibility that is involved in the production of a commercial newspaper. More specifically, this would involve an attempt to get both sides of a story, if indeed there are two sides, before committing the story to print. The interviewing or calling of the administrative staff member, faculty member, or fellow student involved or responsible for a particular department or activity prior to writing on that particular subject, is standard journalistic practice. It is one which I wholeheartedly commend.

It has been in the interest of giving a reporter or a correspondent full information, perhaps to which they would not have had access, that on occasion I and other members of the administrative staff have called in members of the Rotunda staff for consultation as is our prerogative and responsibility. What use the Rotunda staff members make of this information is their prerogative, subject only to the basic journalistic axiom of seeking truth and accuracy.

I shall be happy to answer further questions in regard to this statement from members of the student body. I shall also plan on answering questions from interested students in this regard at the next press conference on February 18, at 1 p.m. in the Gold Room.

Sincerely,
Henry L. Willett, Jr.

The United Women's Front

Women of Longwood College: We are interested in forming a communications network among the women of Virginia. We feel that as women we share common grievances, and that it would be beneficial for us to meet together to share our experiences and discuss means for solving our problems arising from women's unequal status. We would like to have a gathering of women interested in working with other women in Virginia on these matters some time in February in Charlottesville, Va. If this idea appeals to you, please contact us immediately at the following name and address: Glenna Booth, Box 3125, University Station, Charlottesville, Virginia 22903.

Thank you,

A Universal Expression

To the Editor, c/o Mr. Carbone and Staff,

We wish to thank you and your staff for the various activities you provided for us during exam break. Perhaps most of all, we wish to thank you for the "eters break" refreshments provided each night during exams. You are probably aware that at the end of the semester students' funds are usually low, and it was a relief for us to know that we could afford, both time-wise and financially, to take a coffee break! In many small ways that have added up to a big lift, you have been one of the greatest contributors to higher morale during this strained period in the semester.

Again, thank you,
Cookie Howell and Others

A Letter Of Commendation

To the Editor:

We are two graduating seniors who would like to pay tribute to the administration, faculty and staff who during these four years have made Longwood a college of which we are very proud. Not only have we found a willingness to cooperate with the students on the part of the faculty and staff but also on the part of the members of the administration, such as Dr. Willett, Dr. Blackwell, Dr. Wells, Dean Wilson, Dean Holt, Mr. Paul, Mr. Dalton, Mr. Thomas, Mrs. Watkins, and many others too numerous to mention.

With the help of these persons, concerned students who make their wishes known through accepted Longwood procedures can bring about needed changes and certain fringe benefits. How many of us can remember rules such as 10:30 p.m. week night curfew, no drinking within a 15 mile radius of Farmville, no sitting in parked cars on campus, lights out, and bed check? Constructive suggestions by students to the administration have transformed "archaic" rules into humorous memories. We have personally experienced positive results in our dealings with the administration. We are glad that Longwood has such rules which may in time come to be changed, but nevertheless, rules that help Longwood maintain the standards which set it apart from other colleges.

The American Dreamer

With campus audiences assuming a dominant role in movie attendance, a Hollywood film project is now being designed for direct distribution via the national campuses, ignoring the established movie house distribution routes.

Appropriately, the film, "The American Dreamer," involves a maker of cinema's new wave, Dennis Hopper. "Dreamer," now filming in Taos, New Mexico, is a story about Dennis Hopper played by Dennis Hopper. Co-directors of the film are Lawrence Schiller, one of the leading international photo-journalists, and underground writer L. M. Kit Carson.

Because of its subject matter and honest depiction of Hopper's lifestyle and points of view, Schiller plans to market "Dreamer" directly to college audiences, with special two- or three-day bookings to be scheduled on all campuses during a saturation period of three weeks this year.

"The idea isn't revolutionary. It's merely realistic," Schiller says. "The action and the ideas in the film relate to the lives of students. We don't expect other audiences to fully understand it, so why go through the hypocrisy of normal channels of distribution? Quite frankly, we expect many normal film houses would refuse to book this film because it may not be considered pure entertainment in the normal sense of the word. But audiences with young and open minds will be terribly stimulated by it. Will they enjoy it? Does anyone enjoy a bomb blast? The point is, you can't ignore it."

Schiller, with some one hundred covers on LIFE, NEWSWEEK, SATURDAY EVENING POST and top magazines around the world, made his film making debut with the New York sequence of "Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid." Last year he produced the upcoming "Lexington Experience," a film that explores the relationship between hard drugs and the world of rock music, following the Pacific Gas & Electric group on a concert appearance at the Federal dope rehabilitation center in Kentucky.

Hopper, a storm center of acclaim and controversy since his film directing debut, "Easy Rider," sent the movie industry off in new directions, has been as much a center of controversy because of his lifestyle as because of his art, especially since a LIFE magazine cover story on the actor-director's way of life.

"The American Dreamer," filmed from an outline rather than a script, sets up situations relating to Hopper and "lets them explode in front of the cameras," according to Schiller. It will treat all aspects of Hopper's existence from his art to his sex life.

The distributing Corda Productions will entertain bids from campus groups which may wish to sponsor the film's exhibition on individual campuses. Interested groups can contact the company at 1041 N. Highland, Hollywood, California.

The Lankford Student Union is checking the details in acquiring this film.

MARY ANN
BENTLEY

Art, art, art! It's all over! Currently five exhibits complement the Longwood campus. In the Bedford gallery are works of Lois Morrison of New Jersey, who formerly taught art at Mary Baldwin College. There are fourteen figure drawings and a print included in the show along with the larger group of works that Miss Morrison terms "Pattables."

Soft three-dimensional figures are achieved by the use of a technique called "trapunto," a method related to the folk art of quilting. Miss Morrison's "Pattables" incorporate a variety of painting and drawing techniques which are then mounted in rustic window or door frames.

The artist, Lois Morrison, holds a B.A. in fine arts from Mary Baldwin College, spent two years in Japan, took graduate courses at Indiana University, and received her master of fine arts from Virginia Commonwealth University.

This exhibit will be on view during the month of February, when the art building is open from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m., and from 7 p.m. to 11 p.m. week days, Saturdays from 2 p.m. to 6 p.m., and on Sunday, from 2 p.m. to 10 p.m.

Also in Bedford Building hang two exhibits on Japanese art. Located in the first floor hallway, the Contemporary Japanese Prints include modern usage of the techniques of etching, lithography, and mezzotint, plus free variations in standard wood block methods. These works were printed by artists who sketch their work, cut their own blocks and do their own inking, at every stage directly controlling the process. Classical prints were produced by several men, each a specialist in the technique. Abstraction provides a departure from traditional subject matter and illustrates the theme of "Man's view of himself, of the creatures about him, and of his thoughts."

"The Prints of Hiroshige" are showing in the second floor hallway of Bedford Building. Utagawa Hiroshige (1797-1858), is renowned for his work in ukiyo-e (wood-block prints). He first became famous in Japan and later in the West with his ingenious portrayal of the Tokaido, the national highway which connects Tokyo with the capitol at Kyoto and the western provinces. The exhibit includes examples of these prints and also explanations and photographs to further illustrate Hiroshige's classical techniques.

From the National Gallery of Art in Washington, D.C., the traveling exhibition, "The Creative Past: Art of Africa," forms an informative maze in the second floor hallway of the Bedford Building. Designed to give a hint of Africa's rich diversity in time and space the sculptural reproductions provide the viewer with a new visual vocabulary of the art of Africa, and a deeper understanding of the contributions Africa's creative past has made to the history of mankind.

Dan Yellow Kuhne, director of exhibits at University of Maryland, is currently showing his luminous works in Lancaster Library Gallery. His creative resume gives a clue to the nature of the paintings but only first-hand observation provides the "real thrill" projected by his works.

All exhibits continue through February.

Students Rights: Liberty Or License

By ETHEL REITER

The student - university relationship has been traditionally described as "in loco parentis," which means that the university stands in place of the parents and has the power to control and restrict the actions of its students. As a result of his status, the student does not possess the same rights that belong to his non-college peers, specifically the provisions of the First and Fifth Amendments to the Constitution. The student is subject to limitations of his freedoms of speech, press, assembly, privacy, and protection from self-incrimination. It means arbitrary hours for women and compulsory functions; (it means the possible "double jeopardy" of receiving punishments from the university and the courts; it means supervision and regulation of privacy; it means living under the threat of punishment for conduct unbecoming a student, or for failure to adjust to the college pattern. Student discrimination stems from the broad and vague doctrine of "in loco parentis". However, since the 1960's, many courts have rejected the "in loco parentis" concept. Unfortunately, while it can no longer be considered to have much legal validity, it is still invoked by various institutions of higher learning.

"The enrolling of a student in an institution of higher education does not deny him his general constitutional rights, especially that of being accorded due process or fair play. At the same time student status does not generally accord special rights or privileges. The courts have ruled that students are entitled to a hearing in situations involving the possibility of major penalties."

The relationship between the student and university has also been considered a contract under which the student agrees to pay his money and abide by the rules. Some courts have said that all statements in a catalog constitute an "express contract." This type of contract can be extended to include statements in the application for admission, forms filled out for scholarships, or any other documents given to the students.

"The courts have generally recognized the existence of some form of quasi-contractual relationship between the student and institution. This is the basis upon which the college catalogue and student handbook assume the degree of importance which they possess. Many feel that the written promise to obey college rules contained in the admissions application constitutes one of the strongest legal deterrents to violent and unwarranted conduct."

With the universities preparing such documents, it is possible for student rights to be severely limited. However, there are a number of ways to escape the obligation of harsh or unfavorable provisions. First, a student may be a minor (under 18 or 21 in most states). If this is the case a contract is unenforceable under state law.* A contract can also be unenforceable if one has not signed anything pledging obedience to the catalog, rules, etc. Many colleges prepare contracts and present them to applicants on an "accept-it-or-don't-come-here" basis. Courts do not favor this type of contract and usually declare them void. Finally, some courts do not even consider college catalogs and documents to be contracts.

Rules for student conduct vary dramatically among universities. There are those schools which have no rules at all, preferring to treat student discipline on a case-by-case basis. Other institutions employ catalogs to impose very broad and general rules. For example, a student may be forced to conduct himself in a manner which does not reflect unfavorably upon himself or the university. Courts have disagreed about a university's right to discipline a student without a specific written code. There are still those who believe in the college's "inherent power" to discipline students with no need of written rules, and there are those who support vague and general statements. The current trend, however, is towards clear and precise rules to support disciplinary actions. Many educators consider this view to be the most reasonable since university discipline can severely damage a student's career. The American Association of University Professors supports this position and has urged that student conduct standards be "defined in advance and published," and that the university avoid vague phrases like "undesirable conduct" or "actions injurious to the best interests of the institution."

"A suspension prior to a hearing can be justified only in situations where that student's presence on campus would pose some 'imminent danger' to the college."

The specific rule requirement demands not only a clear definition of prohibited acts but also the possible punishment. Suspensions from the College of William and Mary were recently overturned by a federal court, in part because a no-visitation rule did not define the penalties for the violation. A legal requirement for written rules would have tremendous advantage. Students could then attack a rule as being unconstitutional as written. For example, charging a student demonstrator with violating a college rule against holding a demonstration would be illegal because the rule is invalid. It is now clearly established that a public university must respect a student's constitutional right to protest and cannot discipline a student for exercising it within his constitutional bounds.

The First Amendment to the Constitution limits censorship of publications by public universities. The university always has the burden of showing a compelling reason for curbing a publication. University control can take the form of formal or informal censoring of news, editorial and advertising content. Control can also be exercised by refusing to appropriate university funds, by prohibiting the use of campus office space, by suspending or disciplining key student personnel. The mere threat of these measures constitutes effective censorship. Student organizations and individual students should be allowed, to distribute pamphlets, except in classrooms and study halls, or collect names for petitions concerning either campus or off-campus issues. The right to free speech also protects both the right of any speaker to express his views on a campus and the right of the audience to hear them. If a university bans a speaker, it violates both the speaker's and the student's rights.

"The courts have ruled that speaker ban regulations are illegal. Rules pertaining to scheduling procedures must be reasonable. In scheduling it is considered reasonable to insist on a rebuttal or question and answer period."

The Fourth Amendment prohibits "unreasonable searches." The reasonableness of a search depends on the identity of the searcher, the time and place of the search, how it is conducted and for what reason. Few courts have considered the legality of searches in the university setting.

Those that have appeared to give special attention to the particular needs of the university to maintain an educational atmosphere. Only future court cases will finally determine whether, for example, a dormitory system is such an integral part of an educational function that random searches are justified or whether dormitories are simply temporary living quarters that should not be searched more easily than an ordinary citizen's home.

"The courts have ruled that college officials have a right to search student rooms without a warrant where there is a sound basis for expecting the existence of a situation promising harm or danger to other students and the institution or in situations where there is sufficient reasons to suspect that a crime has been committed. Search should be limited to such cases. Prevailing opinion on student records calls for respecting the privacy of such records except with student permission or where a clear and present danger exists either to persons or property."

The student government, student organizations, and individual students should be free to discuss, and to pass resolutions, distribute leaflets, circulate petitions, and take other lawful action to challenge any matter and defend student rights.

"The purposes of an organization must be legal in order for that organization to qualify for campus recognition."

Within the university complex, the student must be viewed as an individual who is most likely to reach maturity if left free to exercise his rights of citizenship on and off the campus.

Like all complex human enterprises, the American college is made up of many groups - students, faculty, several levels of administration, board of trustees, alumni, parents, legislatures, and various governmental agencies, which may desire to influence its policies.

The healthy, strong college asserts its autonomy, even though it is aware that many people constantly scrutinize its policies. The truly independent college will meet criticism not by modifying its policies, but by redoubling its efforts to persuade its constituencies that freedom is an important means towards its educational goal. It is clear that the public interest is not served when the academic community is fearful of experimentation, controversy, and dissent.

The college which wishes to set an example of open-minded inquiry in its classrooms will defeat its purpose if it denies the same right outside of the classroom. Limitations on the freedom of students are not then to be seen as simple administrative decisions which adjust the school to the prevailing climate of public opinion.

A Cheaper Way To Ski, Use Ski Cards

The Student Ski Association has designed a program to bring down the cost of skiing, thereby enabling college students around the country to ski more, or to take up this growing winter sport.

The Student Ski Card program is open to undergraduate, graduate and professional school students of any age. High school students, faculty and students' wives and husbands who are not in school are as yet not eligible.

Typical savings on a two-day ski trip during the week (non holiday week) can net a college student over $17 with the use of a $4 Student Ski Card from the Student Ski Association.

"The Student Ski Association," says Chaffee, "is not actually a ski club. We are not politically oriented, we have no meetings, no officers, no dues and are most certainly nonviolent.

What you should know about diamonds when you know it's for keeps

You've dreamed about your diamond engagement ring a thousand times. But now that you know it's for keeps, it's time to stop dreaming and start learning about diamonds and their value.

COLOR: Fine white diamonds are quite rare and valued accordingly. Other shades in relative order of their worth are: blue, yellow, brown and black.

CUT: The cut of a diamond—the facets placed on it by a trained cutter—brings out the gem's fire and brilliance.

CLARITY: Determined by the absence of small impurities. A perfect diamond has no impurities when examined under ten power magnification by a trained eye.

CARAT: A diamond's size is measured in carats. As a diamond increases in size, its price will increase even more if the quality remains constant.

Although it's important to know the facts about diamonds, you certainly don't have to be an expert to choose a Keepsake Diamond Ring...

Your Keepsake Jeweler has a complete selection of new styles. He's in the Yellow Pages under "Jewelers."

New Officers Seek Participation And Cooperation

By ANGELA FOLEY

It would appear that there is one problem most of the major officers on campus have in common; participation, or rather, the lack of it. After interviewing at least one of the major officers in each of the organizations which compose the Student Government, including the YWCA and AA, this single thought was a frequently recurring one.

Residence Board, for example, is not an organization that automatically brings participation to mind. Nevertheless, it is necessary for the student body to cooperate with Residence Board in order for it to function efficiently. Donna Gibson, Vice-Chairman of Residence Board, feels that students could improve on rules or situations existing on campus more effectively by voicing their opinions officially, rather than just quietly mumbling complaints to one another. Donna admits that perhaps all the rules set by Residence Board are not good, but the point is that all the students agreed to follow these rules on coming here, and therefore it is their responsibility to observe these rules. If changes are necessary or desired by the student body, then it is imperative that the students, as individuals, show an interest in bringing about these changes. It takes time and numbers to accomplish any changes and the interest and cooperation of students is essential.

Work is being done, according to Mary Tabb Johnston, Chairman of Residence Board, on revising the handbook. At the moment, she says, efforts are being made to pick out those rules which do not apply anymore or need to be clarified in order to make the handbook more functional. Sign out procedures and curfews are being discussed, and some changes in signing out should be seen in the not too distant future. Mary Tabb does feel that Residence Board is a necessary and functional organization, and should be treated with more seriousness by the student body.

Frankie Brown, Chairman of Legislative Board, also wishes students would voice their feelings in a correct manner. It is not necessary to be a representative in order to make suggestions. The Board is there to serve the student body, but needs to know what the students want. Frankie would also like to make an appeal to students that if they have problems, complaints, or proposals, faster and more efficient action will occur if they take the suggestions directly to the proper source. That is, if it's something concerning dorm regulations, take it to Residence Board, or something concerning infractions of rules take it to Judicial Board, etc. This would cut out unnecessary steps and bring faster results. If students are uncertain about where to refer their problems, then take it to Legislative and they will direct the student. Analyzing the names of each board is one way to help determine what problem to take where.

One of the major reasons for confusions of this type is the great amount of overlapping between boards. Several rules are questionable as to which board they should be under, and a greater separation and clarification of powers is necessary to help solve this overlapping problem.

The type of participation needed by Judicial Board is in the form of support. In order to gain this support the students must be made aware that Judicial Board is flexible; it changes with the times. It is extremely important and very necessary organization. Furthermore, Verona Leake, Vice-Chairman, states that the honor code does work and is working as she has seen just in the short time she has been in office. It should also be made clear that in trials, the student is always given the benefit of the doubt if there is any lack of Royal Kings to play for Senior Ring Dance.

Juniors To Present The Carpenters In April 23 Concert

By STEPHANIE SIVERT

Preparations are being made for the annual Junior Ring Dance to be held the weekend of April 23. Weekend activities include a concert on Friday evening featuring The Carpenters, a picnic Saturday afternoon at the Longwood club house for the Juniors and their dates, the dance, with music being provided by the Royal Kings from Roanoke, and an early morning breakfast for the Juniors sponsored by the Freshman class. The concert and the dance is open to the entire student body.

This year the dance will be held in the Rotunda and the dining hall. It was felt that this area would help to create the right atmosphere for the dance in relation to this year's theme of "Tara", the Southern plantation of Scarlett O'Hara's in the novel "Gone With the Wind."

Expenses for the event are shared by Lankford Student Union and the Junior class which has planned some fund-raising projects for the months preceding the dance. Committees for the weekend, including decorations and publicity, are now being formed and members of the Junior class are urged to sign up to help plan the activities.

Board Notes

BOARD OF VISITORS

The board of visitors met February 4 and 5, 1971, with various members of the administration.

It was announced that the Board passed a recommendation to add a member to the Education department. Mr. Jefferson Lee Pemberton was added to the faculty and will begin teaching in the fall as an Assistant Professor of Education.

The board also promoted several faculty members.

Those promoted to full professors were: Dr. Francis Brown, Dr. Lee Land, and Dr. Marvin Scott.

Those promoted to associate professors were: Dr. Janice Glascock, Dr. James Gussett, Dr. Robert Lehman, Dr. Freida McCombs, and Mr. Gary Rosecrans.

Those promoted to assistant professors were: Miss Norma Jean Abbott, Miss Sandra Bollinger, Miss Jane Farrell, and Mr. Homer Springer.

RESIDENCE BOARD

Residence board will discuss at its next meeting revisions of the handbook. Those to be discussed will be:

1. Extending curfew until 12:00 p.m. instead of 11:30 p.m. on week nights.
2. Methods of signing in and out.
3. Time in which one must be signed out.
4. Classrooms remaining open until curfew on week nights.
5. Call down system and some rules that warrant calldowns.

LEGISLATIVE BOARD

Legislative Board formed a committee to draw up the alcohol rule to be presented to the president, but decided to meet with him before drawing up the rule. Boobie Bannin and Jody Mace were selected co-chairmen of the Examination "A" Exemption Committee. A questionnaire had been completed by the faculty, but the results were inconclusive. The committee will investigate exam policies. The board decided that all freshmen will be required to attend the Honors Council Symposium to be held on February 16, 1971.

The date for Ring Dance Weekend has been changed from April 9-10 to April 23-24. The "Highly Tightly" Concert scheduled for April 24 has been canceled. Religious Emphasis Week has been moved from February 8-13 to March 8-11.

It was suggested that a bulletin board in the New Smoker be used to post announcements made at each meal, in addition to making the announcements. Student Government Organizations and each Class would also have their own wire.

It was suggested that Slater be approached with the possibility of having two head tables in the dining hall after major elections, one for the outgoing board members and one for the incoming board members.

A press Conference will be held Thursday, Feb. 18, 1971, at 4:00 in the Gold Room. It was suggested that Hall Presidents be in charge of taking attendance for required assemblies.

The board decided that Longwood would support the community in their drive for the Heart Fund. Nancy Fowlkes was selected chairman of this committee.

It was suggested that the Board

Junior Year Abroad Offers Programs In Foreign Study

By MARGARET BLAIR

Longwood currently has one organized program for the Junior Year Abroad. It is designed for Spanish majors and is associated with the University of the Americas in Puebla, Mexico. Second semester sophomores and first semester juniors study at the university for a semester and receive credit for the courses they take there. Presently, two sophomores, Maria Gibbons and Joyce Walters, are enrolled in this program.

Students who are interested in study in other fields can make applications to a foreign university, and if accepted, their credits will be transferred back to Longwood. Anne Marie Daley, a junior studying at the University of Wales at Cardiff, is in this kind of program.

Faculty Receives Professional Insight, Evaluation Forms

By VICKI BOWLING

Sometime during their Longwood career, most students are asked by a professor to respond to an evaluation questionnaire concerning the course and instructor. This is done at the end of a semester, under the supervision of the Academic Affairs Committee.

This year three different types of questionnaires were used. One was the detailed form used in the past. A second form, using a rating scale, was based on an evaluation sheet for labs from William and Mary. The American Association of University Professors supplied the third, also based on a rating scale.

Each professor received a copy of each type. According to Dr. Frank, faculty advisor to the Academic Affairs Committee, the questionnaires employing a rating scale are more beneficial to laboratory and physical education classes. It is entirely optional as to whether or not a professor will use an evaluation form.

"The first year that I had anything to do with this," Dr. Frank stated, "seventeen faculty members participated. The second year, thirty-nine participated. This year over seventy faculty members gave out evaluation sheets."

To keep the evaluation strictly objective and anonymous, no records are kept. It is up to the instructor who sees his evaluations. Dr. Frank commented that five members of the English department submitted their evaluations to him.

The faculty members who take part in the evaluation take the student's answers seriously. Many new professors, particularly, are interested in results of the evaluations. A professor gains insight as to what he is doing well and what he is doing poorly.

recommend to the Faculty Committee the possibility of beginning school earlier, exams being scheduled before the Christmas holidays, and ending school earlier.

It was suggested that we have no seven day period. Exams would begin on Wednesday and end Friday of the following week with Monday and Tuesday of the first week used as reading days, exempt from classes,

There are also accredited organizations specifically constructed for study abroad, such as the American Institute of Foreign Studies. One Longwood junior, Michele Moorer, is in Vienna, Austria, with the Institute of European Studies.

For students interested in foreign study during the summer, Longwood offers programs in geography and language and is planning one in art history. Anyone interested in these programs can find more information from Mr. Rubley, Mr. Nunn and Mrs. Ernout, and Dr. Flynn, respectively. Dr. Carolyn Wells, Campus International Education Ad-evidence, etc. All the members of Judicial Board including their advisor, Dr. Tinnell, are conscientious and sincere in their work, and are there to help anyone who needs it.

Nothing definite has been discussed, but there is a general feeling among Judicial Board members, that the drug problem should be concentrated on even more strongly, and they would like to see the problem alleviated as quickly as possible.

The YWCA would like to remind the student body that it is not strictly an organization for religiously affiliated students. It is also a social action group, so to speak, and does many things to help the community. As Ellen Dunn, President of the YWCA says, it can do as much as the students want it to do, or as little. Meetings are open to everyone and all ideas are welcome. Quite often the YWCA takes on projects they wouldn't ordinarily have been thought of if a suggestion hadn't been made. The Write Hanoi campaign is a prime example. This idea was brought to the Y originally to find out what organization would handle it, and resulted in the sponsoring of the campaign.

The only organization that seems optimistic about student participation is the A.A. President, Patti Coogan, says she feels interest is good throughout the student body and while there are never too many people for anything, a good number of students turn out for all sports activities.

There are plans under discussion for revising the A.A. constitution, but otherwise organization is quite satisfactory and the work load is fairly distributed. The new system of representatives in each dorm is working very well, says Patti, and provides for better contact with the students.

In summary, it can be observed that the key word is student cooperation, and there is a lesson to be learned from the observation of where the greatest amount of interest lies. Could it be that students don't care enough about what goes on in their student government?

MIDWINTERS CONCERT CANCELLED

CHARLOTTESVILLE — Due to the contractual cancellation of Roberta Flack, the Midwinters Weekend Concert at U. Va. has been cancelled. Thomas Sansonetti, president of PK German, stated that because of Miss Flack's refusal and the lack of time, his organization could not afford to put on the concert.

The concert was to have presented Miles Davis along with Miss Flack and was to have coincided with the end of Black Culture Week being held at the University.

GRANTS IN AID TO MINORITY GRAD STUDENTS

BLACKSBURG — Virginia Tech has been selected as one of 10 schools in the nation to receive a $10,000 grant from the American Society of Planning Officials (ASPO) and the Ford Foundation, to support minority group students in the graduate program in urban and regional planning.

Students who receive the fellowship awards may receive up to $2,500 for the academic year and a dependency allowance of $85 per month over 10 months. Minority groups are defined as Black-American, Mexican-American, Puerto Rican or American Indian by the ASPO.

STUDENTS VOTE FOR "DIXIE"

BOONE — A special referendum recently revealed the feelings of Appalachian State University students toward the playing of "Dixie." The vote went 1,692 for the playing of the song and 450 votes against.

The issue of the playing of "Dixie" and the apparent racist attitudes raised by the song were first mentioned in an editorial in the college newspaper. The writer stated that "Dixie" has no place on a campus that has a black student or athlete! This statement gave rise to the referendum.

Student Mobilization Committee Conference To Be February 19

The Student Mobilization Committee is promoting a National Student Antiwar Conference to be held on February 19 at Catholic University. The delegates from around the country are trying to plan a "spring offensive against the war."

The Student Mobilization Committee to End the War in Vietnam is reported to be the largest national student organization in the United States opposed to the war in Indochina. They state their program as being "a fight for the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of all United States troops and material from Southeast Asia, for abolition of the draft, and against all forms of campus complicity with the war." They support self-determination for Vietnam and Third World America, and constitutional rights for GIs and high school students.

The platform of the SMC includes:

1. Total Immediate Withdrawal — From the beginning of the antiwar movement, the student wing has been reported to have taken the lead in making the demand for immediate withdrawal of all U.S. troops, the main demand of the entire movement.
2. Democracy within the Movement — The SMC states they stand for full democracy in decision making. The central expression of this policy is their national conferences, in which any individual or group is welcome to participate. All major policies and projects of the SMC are decided upon at such conferences where all SMCers have voice and vote.

3. Nonexclusion — The SMC seeks to unite everyone who is opposed to the war, regardless of their opinions on other political questions. Only through such unity does the SMC feel that they can force withdrawal from Indo China.

4. Mass Actions Independent of all Parties and Institutions of the Government — The SMC feels that the independent mass action is and has been the most effective weapon of the antiwar movement. This organization believes mass actions provide a focal point for local, regional and national organization of the growing antiwar sentiment, and serves as a reminder to the government that there exists a powerful opposition which they do not control and cannot ignore.

U. Of Md. Dormitories Called 'A Disgrace'

By a Washington Post Staff Writer

ANNAPOLIS, Jan. 28—Dormitory conditions at the University of Maryland's College Park campus are a "disgrace to the state," Chancellor Charles E. Bishop told a Maryland State Senate committee here today.

Testifying before the Senate Finance Committee, Bishop said he would like to take legislators for a tour of the College Park campus dormitories, some of which date back to 1917. "The residence halls on that campus are, I think, a disgrace to the state," Bishop said.

Bishop, who is midway through his first year as chancellor of the university's biggest campus, prefaced his remarks by telling the senators that the school was a "great institution."

Following the hearing,

Bishop said that roughly one-third of the 8,300 students living in dormitories in College Park are in residence halls needing extensive renovation. He said needed repairs included plumbing, heating, acoustical improvements and redecorating. He estimated the cost at "several millions."

Repairs on the worst of these residence halls, including the World War II-vintage trailers housing 500 students, cannot wait, Bishop said, adding that he hopes to take money from current housing receipts to correct those conditions this summer.

Earlier, University President Wilson H. Elkins told the committee that the school administration had spent considerable time studying its mistakes and planning new procedures in case disruptions, such as those that occurred last spring, break out again this year. "I think we had some weaknesses last spring that were corrected," Elkins said.

Astronauts Splashdown In Pacific

ABOARD USS NEW ORLEANS (UPI): Three U.S. moon explorers had a triumphant splashdown on Tuesday afternoon. This ended a nine-day, $400 million mission which erased the spectre of Apollo 13 and put the space program back on the right track.

The space ship was loaded with 96 pounds of moon rock and scientific data. Splashdown for Alan Shepard, Edgar Mitchell, and Stuart Roosa came at 4:05 p.m. EST right on target, 900 miles south of Samoa.

Earthquake Hits LA

LOS ANGELES (UPI): The worst earthquake in 38 years struck Los Angeles on Tuesday. Panic stricken residents ran from their homes as buildings collapsed, overhead bridges fell onto freeways and broken gas mains set off fires.

Sixty-three people were known dead, and many were injured and hospitalized with heart attacks. Property damage was estimated to be in the millions.

Nixon Seeks Ways To Aid Environment

WASHINGTON: President Nixon has asked congress for new controls to clean up the nation's air and water, to cut down on noise and to end the discriminated use of pesticides and toxic substances and the dumping of wastes into the ocean.

Nixon proposed a national land-use policy that would involve the federal, state, and local governments in a new cooperative effect to regulate uses of land. This plan also includes more parks, and expansion of the wilderness system, ways to save historic buildings, and regulations to cover the effects of mining on the environment.

Israel Backs Canal Reopening

JERUSALEM: Israel's Prime Minister, Golda Meir has stated that her government is prepared to help reopen the Suez Canal but would not withdraw from the east bank unilaterally as suggested by Egyptian President Anwar Sadat.

Mrs. Meir stated that in return for an Israel withdrawal, Sadat gave no undertaking to fulfill the basic clause of the U.N. Security Council resolution of November, 1967, on the Middle East — establishment of secure and recognized borders and the signing of a peace agreement.

Experimental College Receives Enthusiastic Participation

By KATHY ROBERTSON
Longwood's first attempt at what many schools call the "free university" has been met with enthusiasm and excitement on the part of students, faculty, and administration. Those students taking advantage of these extra-curricular courses realize the value of broadening their field of knowledge and interests. Each course offers an educational experience to the students and the instructor. Many of the instructors emphasize that they are learning along with their class and are trying to avoid the more formal lecture method used in the majority of Longwood's regular courses. They encourage the students to participate fully.

For those students who wish to learn more about modern trends in art, education, medicine, politics and other related areas, there are courses offered in film as an art form, current trends in education, current events, ecology, and birth control. In each of these classes there is an attempt to maintain a free exchange of ideas and opinions between students and instructors. As one student said concerning her current events class, "I just enjoy sitting and rapping with the teacher." Each student in the current events class has submitted a list of suggested topics for discussion. The instructors will choose the most frequently requested topics and discuss them at any length the students wish.

Courses in bridge, opera, stitching, film making, and yoga are offered to students who wish to develop new recreational and hobby interests. Instructors of these classes encourage the students to use their creative talents for personal expression and enjoyment. The students in the film making course are especially excited. The Student Union has provided cameras; each girl has been given a roll of film and one week to learn how to use the camera. At the first meeting of the class "Take One," a film made by students at Berkeley, was shown as an example of what can be done by creative amateur film makers. Each group of students in the class will make several short films and one "major" film during the next six weeks. Choice of subject matter for the films is left up to the students. A freshman enrolled in this class expressed the feelings of everyone involved in the Experimental College when she said, "I just can't believe the freedom we have."

Fees Increase To Aid 'Auxiliary Enterprises'

By LYNNE WILSON

Student fees will be raised $180 dollars next year in order to help pay for our "auxiliary enterprises" which are not covered by tax funds. Such areas as the laundry, dining hall, infirmary and activities building, are considered to be "auxiliary enterprises." A percentage of the $180 increase will also be used to pay Longwood personnel, partly because of the governor's 10% raise to all government employees of which only one-half is supplemented by state funds.

Longwood is not the only college in Virginia, however, that is being forced to raise its rates. The Radford College Board of Visitors has approved fee increases for the 1972-73 academic year. The increases include, a $30 raise in boarding fees, a $39 hike in out-of-state tuition, $30 more for day student fees, and $23 more per quarter for out-of-state student fees.

In reference of the rising fees at Longwood, Col. Carr, Long-wood's vice-president, remarked that he and Mr. Paul were doing everything possible to keep the costs down. They are now trying to get more money from tax funds through the General Assembly in order to lessen the financial obligations of the students.

Dr. Vorsey To Speak On "A Land Divided"

Dr. Louis De Vorsey, Jr., sponsored by the Institute of Southern Culture, will speak on the topic, "A Land Divided: The South on the Eve of the Revolutionary War" at 4:00 p.m. on Monday, February 22, in Jeffers Auditorium.

Dr. De Vorsey, Jr., who is now acting head of the Department of Geography at the University of Georgia in Athens, has researched such topics as "Surveying and Mapping in the Eighteenth Century" and "Eighteenth Century Hydrographic Surveys."

25 Longwood Girls Save Farmville Blood Program

By DEBBIE K. ABERNATHY

Twenty-five Longwood girls gave blood at the Farmville Armory on February 8 enabling Farmville to remain eligible according to National Red Cross regulations for free blood. These girls heard about the need for blood in order to reach the 250-pint quota. Mrs. Susan W. Clark, a volunteer since 1958 of the local Red Cross Chapter and who works in the Longwood College home office, made the comment, "I am so proud because the girls helped the county meet its quota and remain eligible for free blood. They did it because they wanted to do it." The sharp rise in the amount of blood needed came largely as a result of shortages in county visits and emergencies such as open heart and lung surgeries.

If any area fails to accumulate at least 95% of its established blood quota, which was 250 pints for Farmville, residents of that area receive only regional coverage — that is, they receive blood free of charge only within their specific region. Cases requiring specialized treatment available only in hospitals outside of the specified region would not be covered; life-giving blood would then have to be purchased at high rates by the pint.

When the girls heard of the need for added donations via radio and word of mouth, Dean Wilson granted special permission allowing them to give blood to the Red Cross.

Mrs. Adelaide Edwards, Executive Director of the Farmville

Chapter of the American Red Cross, commented candidly: "Longwood College is indeed a credit to the American Red Cross, not only in the Blood Program, but also in other programs which the Red Cross sponsors on campus, such as the Water Safety Program and the First Aid Program."

She further praised the Longwood girls saying, "They gave an hour of their time and a pint of their blood to help assure that a sufficient quantity of such a precious commodity would be on hand when critically needed. The Medical Program is a life-saving program. Every student who contributed not only aided others by the humanitarian service itself, but also broadened her own education."

Attention:

18-Year-Olds Rule Changed

BLOOD DONATION BY MINORS: Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any minor who has reached the age of 18 years may act as a blood donor to any nonprofit blood bank or duly licensed hospital for or without consideration. His consent shall not be subject to disaffirmance because of minority. The consent of parent, parents, or guardian of such minor shall not be necessary in order to authorize such service as a blood donor. Any such blood bank or hospital, or its agents or employees, shall not be civilly liable for such taking except in cases of negligence.

"Majors" Be Counted

A few years ago the sports page was considered one of the most important pages in the paper. This would indicate that sports at Longwood was an active and integral part of campus life. Others seemed to think so too, for last year at the Associated Collegiate Press conference the Rotunda received a rating of 150, or excellent on sports coverage. The comment attached read, "excellent sports coverage, considering yours is a women's college."

This was all in the past, however, for even though the "majors" are still considered to be the largest and most active group on campus their status on the Rotunda has diminished. Because the physical education department is so large and activities are scheduled constantly it is not feasible to have reporters covering all sports activities. As a result, sports is not being adequately reported. The "majors" as a whole should recognize this fact and attempt to help keep the Rotunda supplied with sports news. This would enable the Rotunda to give "a complete and interesting picture of school athletics." Certainly the "majors" should be willing to contribute to this end.

The problem of sports coverage can be approached, however, from a different and more unpleasant angle. Sports should be placed in a paper only in relation to its importance in school life. From the coverage and interest shown recently it would seem that sports activities neither have the impact nor the importance that they once had on the Longwood campus. If this is the case then there is no need even worry about comprehensive coverage. Is this the case majors? Why not help elevate sports to its proper position. We can be rated excellent again, but only with your help.

Student Rights Updated

To the Editor of the ROTUNDA:

As a former president of the Longwood College Chapter of the American Association of University Professors, I was, naturally, very much interested in the article on Student Rights in today's issue. As a member of the student generation prior to the Punic Wars, I had always thought that rights of citizenship came when one had accepted the full responsibilities of citizenship — earning one's own living and paying taxes — while my student status conferred many privileges upon me (with, of course, concomitant responsibilities) which were not nearly as taxing and demanding as rights would be.

However — I note that the one source cited in the article is the AAUP Bulletin for Summer, 1962. I thought it might be of interest to the Longwood community to have a few pertinent quotes from the most recent statement on student rights, published in 1969. As viz:

Students and student organizations should be free to examine and discuss all questions of interest to them, and to express opinions publicly and privately. They should always be free to support causes by orderly means which do not disrupt the regular and essential operation of the institution. At the same time, it should be made clear to the academic and the larger community that in their public expressions or demonstrations students or student organizations speak only for themselves. (Article IV, Section B 1.)

Institutional authorities, in consultation with students and faculty, have a responsibility to provide written clarification of the role of the student publications, the standards to be used in their evaluation, and the limitations on external control of the operation. At the same time, the editorial freedom of student editors and managers entails corollary responsibilities to be governed by the canons of responsible journalism, such as the avoidance of libel, indecency, undocumented allegations, attacks on personal integrity, and the techniques of harassment and innuendos. (Article IV, Section D)

In developing responsible student conduct, disciplinary proceedings play a role substantially secondary to example, counseling, guidance, and admonition. At the same time, educational institutions have a duty and corollary disciplinary powers to protect their educational purpose through the setting of standards of scholarship and conduct for the students who attend them and through the regulation of the use of institutional facilities. (Article VI, preamble) Article VI does continue by spelling out the various safeguards that should apply to students in cases of disciplinary action; however, the AAUP statement does not in the least deprecate the right of the institution to institute such action when it appears applicable.

Finally, the most recent statement of the AAUP on "Freedom and Responsibility" in the Bulletin for Winter, 1970, contains the following passage:

Membership in the academic community imposes on students, faculty members, administrators, and trustees an obligation to respect the dignity of others, to acknowledge their right to express differing opinions, and to foster and defend intellectual honesty, freedom of inquiry and instruction, and free expression on and off the campus. The expression of dissent and the attempt to produce change, therefore, may not be carried out in ways which injure individuals or damage institutional facilities or disrupt the classes of one's teachers and colleagues. Speakers on campus must not only be protected from violence but given an opportunity to be heard. Those who seek to call attention to grievances must not do so in ways that significantly impede the functions of the institution.

The above statement was passed by the Association Council

Advocates Open Dorms

During The Week

By RICK REED

Some time ago I wrote an article for THE ROTUNDA suggesting that an open dorm policy would probably have no serious ill effects and that they should be tried. Since then open dorms have been in effect; for limited periods on week ends and so far as I know no drastic increase in crime, atheism, or the smoking of that LDS have occurred. Presbyterian mothers have not taken their daughters out of school, nor have grades fallen or pregnancies increased from the normal level. Furthermore, it has been definitely established that the biochemist from Brigham Young University who allegedly discovered a positively correlation between open dorms and breast cancer was in error. Further research indicates that open dorms are no more harmful than alcohol. Since no catastrophic results have occurred, why not try some open dorm hours during the week?

Sincerely,
Rosemary Sprague

Warning Break Ahead

Students of Longwood College:

I would like to take this opportunity to welcome you to our city and sincerely hope that your stay will be a pleasant and memorable experience.

In order that neither you, nor the city, incur any unpleasantness the following suggestions and policies have been instituted and will be adhered to unequivocally.

1. Do not come to Fort Lauderdale unless you definitely have a confirmed housing reservation. Our policies and ordinances prohibit sleeping in cars and/or sleeping in the open. Campers or trailers are not permitted to park on the beach. If this type vehicle is to be used as living quarters it must be parked in a trailer park specifically licensed for this purpose.

2. All the laws that govern the conduct of the individual will be enforced. A person must be 21 years of age in order to purchase or consume alcohol. Persons guilty of intoxication (it should be noted that drinking in the open is not permitted), narcotics, use of false identification, creating unnecessary noise, or any other form of disorderly conduct and any other unlawful act, will be arrested and prosecuted. Violations of the traffic code will result in apprehension and prosecution of the offender.

3. Parents and school officials of any and all students arrested during this period will be officially notified.

Students should be aware of the fact that persons who are arrested and convicted on any charge will have established a permanent and sometimes criminal record. (Continued on Page 7)

I Love My Wife

STARTS AT STATE THEATER
TONIGHT

A Review by Sarah Farrar
Universal Pictures has done it again! I LOVE MY WIFE explores a man "caught" in marriage and follows his adventures as he tries to escape.

Elliott Gould is his comic best as Richard Burrows, a successful surgeon who was reared on a combination of old Gary Cooper and Japaense bomber movies plus a steady dose of bathroom masturbation.

Gould is "Portnoy's Complaint" revisited, only in medical whites. He gets it together enough to get married, but problems begin after the birth of the couple's first baby. (The little bambinos sure make changes after the ecstasy of wedded bliss!) With his wife Jody getting fat and disinterested, this doctor-husband starts philandering with the attractive and willing nurses in the hospital.

The film's material is effective, thank goodness, because even Elliott Gould, lacking material, can be a dreadful eyesore. Directed by Mel Stuart, I LOVE MY WIFE is photographed with an uncanny sense of truth for the '50's and 60's. Much of the credit goes to a clever original screenplay by Robert Kaufman, the author of the much less likeable, hard-to-figure-out GETTING STRAIGHT.

With just enough seriousness to offset the humor, the film examines the dilemma of a man who tries to have it both ways — with Brenda Vaccaro as his weight-gaining wife and Angel Tompkins as his mistress.

Things seem to go from bad to worse for hubby-turned-playboy. What becomes of wife and children? Is Dr. Burrows damned to a life of quickie affairs?!! Oh — I LOVE MY WIFE! Enjoy this winter comedy release at the State Theater right here in Farmville.

JOHNNY CASH

JAMES TAYLOR

James Taylor Headlines

'Johnny Cash On Campus'

Tonight At 9 P.M. On ABC

Folk-rock super-star James Taylor makes his network television debut as a guest on "Johnny Cash On Campus," tonight at 9 p.m. (EST) on the ABC Television Network.

On the show Cash talks to students about what's happening in music today, what songwriters are trying to say and how well they succeed. And he talks about narcotics — his own experiences with drugs and how he will teach his son to deal with such things. He also sings his hits, "A Boy Named Sue" and "Sunday Morning Coming Down."

Other guests on the program which was taped before an all-college student audience in Nashville include Neil Young, Tony Joe White, Linda Ronstadt and Albert Brooks.

Taylor, at 22, is the biggest new name on the folk-rock circuit. His album, "Sweet Baby James," has sold 1.2 million copies, and his hit single, "Fire and Rain," also soared to a top slot on the pop music charts.

His songs have been recorded by Andy Williams, Blood Sweat and Tears, Melanie and others. They include "Something in the Way She Moves," and "Carolina in My Mind."

The tall, slender singer-writer in the faded jeans and T-shirt actually comes from a more polished background — his father, Dr. Isaac Taylor, is now the dean of the University of North Carolina Medical School. His mother studied music at the New England Conservatory and sang professionally at one time.

Though he's had ups and downs in his personal life, Taylor prefers to emphasize the good times in his songs. "I just want to write songs, sensitive songs. I think the direction people need to go is inward," he has been quoted as saying.

He has signed up for a concert tour of 27 cities in 35 days, and recently completed a movie, "Two-Lane Blacktop," to be released in the spring.

Newman Festival Continues In Bedford Building

By CHRIS BAILOR

"Cool Hand Luke" was the first feature film of the Paul Newman Festival now showing in the Bedford Art building through the 18th. Other Newman films to be shown in the series include "Harper," and the "Hustler." The films will be shown at 7:30 p.m. and admission is 25¢.

The Paul Newman Festival is an experiment tried for the first time this year to decide whether or not a series of films under one category each week is more popular than miscellaneous films throughout the year. If widely supported, the films committee would like to present festivals under such categories as Bette Davis films, mysteries, shock thrillers, religious movies, and other popular related films next year.

Rehersals Begin For 'Look Back In Anger'

By BELINDA BRUGH

Director Harvey Sneiderman has assembled an experienced cast of actors for the upcoming play, "Look Back in Anger," to be presented March 18-20 in Jarman Auditorium. The cast is composed of Dave Clark, Joyce Saunders, Rick Vaughan, Lynne Wilson, and Ken Shick.

Dave Clark, a sophomore majoring in English at Hampden-Sydney, will be portraying the lead character of Jimmy. Dave has previously been seen on the Longwood stage in productions of "The Adding Machine," and "Six Characters in Search of an Author." He is a member of the Hampden-Sydney Jongleurs and was recipient of the best actor award at Lane High School.

Creating the character of Alison, Jimmy's wife, will be Joyce Saunders, a sophomore English/drama major. Longwood audiences will remember Joyce for her performances in "Summer Brave" and the one act play, "The Agreement." Joyce is a many-faceted individual whose interests range from music to swimming. She is president of the Longwood Players and a member of Alpha Psi Omega.

An actor who can always be depended upon for a memorable performance is Rick Vaughan, a senior math major at Hampden-Sydney. This time undertaking the role of Cliff, a friend of Jimmy's who lives in the same

By MARY ANN BENTLEY

The Department of Art at Longwood, in cooperation with the Art Education Service of the State Department of Education, will sponsor a Summer Art Seminar for art educators in the public schools of Virginia August 8 through 20, 1971.

Two outstanding nationally known individuals, one an artist, the other an art educator, will be used as a focal point of the program. These two people will be responsible for giving lectures, demonstrations, critiques, leading discussion sessions, and for individual consultation, thereby working in close cooperation with section leaders.

Two section leaders or instructors who are the Assistant Supervisors of Art Education for the State Department of Education will be responsible for the 80 people. Their job will be to suggest reading assignments, give other types of assignments, and suggest research, oversee individual student activities and cooperate and structure the work of the two outstanding leaders. The section leaders will also be responsible for grading and evaluating their student's work.

The following courses will be offered in the Summer Art Seminar:

Art 552s PAINTING STUDIO. A study of various theories and trends of painting and their direct application to contemporary art education. 1 credit. Miss Flynn and Mr. Alfred Leslie (New York Painter).

Art 542s PROBLEMS IN ART EDUCATION. Directed study in historical and contemporary philosophies of Art Education, curriculum planning and methods, and the application of art education research for the public schools. 1 credit. Mrs. Loomer and Mr. Edmund Feldman (Art Educator, University of Georgia.)

Innovative Project Parallels LC Lab School

By MARY ANN BENTLEY

A Committee for Innovative Education was created by teachers in Delaware County, Pa., on January 24, 1971, for the purpose of exploring new materials and methods of teaching. The project, New School Program, in Delaware, parallels Longwood's Lab School program in that both groups wish to stress that.

1. Teachers are competent educational specialists capable of initiating and responsibly carrying out new educational ideas;

2. Education is best when a multiracial, multimaterial, non-graded, diversified socioeconomic background approach is used;

3. Students learn best when their learning is self-directed and that responsibility is best learned when responsibility is given;

4. Educational soundness is furthered emphasizing the affective domain of learning instead of by the cognitive.

Project New School is in need of ideas, suggestions, interested educators and financial aid. Membership in the committee for Innovative Education is $5.00.

Abortion Ads - A Misdemeanor In Virginia

By LYNDA VAN HORN

"Pregnant? Need Help? These are the frequently asked questions in a number of abortion advertisements which have recently flooded the American college press.

The ads range in type from those simply offering a referral service to those giving phone numbers and addresses where abortions are readily available. The ROTUNDA has not been exempt from a barrage of such advertising material. Some ask that we print the ad as a public service to the community while others offer to pay for their ad being run and even offer an example of their past advertisement to guide us.

Why then has anything yet to be printed in the ROTUNDA? In a letter to Dr. Willett the Assistant Attorney General of Virginia, William G. Broadus outlines the provisions of section 18, 1-63 of the Code of Virginia. The section states that any publication, lecture, advertisement, or publishing encouraging "the procuring of abortion or miscarriage" in Virginia is a misdemeanor. In order then to remain within the law and indeed in existence, the ROTUNDA has simply stored away all the requests to print advertisements.

Virginia is not the only state prohibiting advertising abortion. The Concordia College weekly newspaper, the CONCORDIAN, was suspended because it carried such an ad. Dr. Joseph I. Knutson, president of the college in Moorhead, Minn., justified suspension of the newspaper since "When a college newspaper carries defiance of the purpose and goals of the college and the admonitions of staff and students to the point of running a paid ad for an abortion clinic in New York and when news is put in such a way as to make drugs and sex seem the predominant theme among Concordia students, I as president, have no other recourse than to suspend publication of the paper." The advertisement of abortion is also against the law in Minnesota and the college itself is legally responsible for any publication of the college including the college newspaper.

Still, many college newspapers including those in Virginia, have seen fit to publish these ads in either ignorance or open defiance of the law. These ads point out that abortions are now legal in New York as well as Washington, D.C., Hawaii, and other cities without any residency requirement. They usually advise young women to get medical tests rather than taking pills or relying on other such drastic measures and to "copy our number for future references."

Most of the ads are advertising referral services with "professional counselling," and they all advertise for abortions in New York. Although abortions are now legal in many states, women continue to flock to New York for many reasons. New York has no residency requirements; most of the abortions are done in hospitals or clinics; and the doctors' fees there are much less than in other areas of the country. Abortion in New York is also available upon demand and there is a relatively shorter or no waiting period.

Since New York State's liberalized abortion law came into effect on July 1, some 16,000 women have obtained abortions there. Although the law is effective throughout the state, more than half of the abortions were done in New York City alone.*

Abortion has become a moral as well as political controversy. The Catholic Church has taken a definite stand against it, and several states have refused to pass revised legislation concerning abortion. Recently Maryland's General Assembly introduced legislation liberalizing their present abortion laws. The bill is substantially the same as that vetoed by Governor Marvin Mandel last year. This year's bill, if passes, would make abortion a matter to be decided entirely by the woman in question and her doctor. The new bill restricts abortions in the first 20 weeks of pregnancy—the current three year old law has a 26 week limit.

Opponents of the bill object to the lack of a residency requirement and some propose that it is a "legal genocide bill against the black people." Proponents of the bill argue that the psychiatric examination now required of patients under the old law is "unnecessary time consuming, and discriminates against the poor."

Even though various religious groups have openly objected to revised abortion laws, there are those within the church who recommend abortions under certain circumstances. Charles Bayer in his "Confessions of an Abortion Counselor" tells of how he feels it is morally wrong to kill the young fetus which is what abortions entail, but he feels even more strongly that it is wrong to force these women to rely upon unsafe abortion methods and thereby endanger their own lives. In Cook County Hospital in Chicago, 4000 women each year are treated for complications resulting from these insufficient abortions, either self-inflicted or performed by back alley butchers who demand outlandish prices in the worst of sanitary conditions. Bayer says that when confronted by one of these desperate women, who range in age and position from the unwed teenager to the middle-aged mother of six who simply does not want another child, he simply cannot lower his head and spout moral wrong doing. He reviews the circumstances carefully in every case and then if he sees fit supplies the name and phone number of a reputable doctor.

There are others besides Mr. Bayer who go against their personal beliefs and are forced to decide whether the life of the unborn child or the life of the desperate woman is more important. There are many who feel that abortions are wrong under any conditions and stand fast in their fight against liberalized abortion laws. These people contend that abortions are simply a form of legalized murder campaign against those who are trying to liberalize the laws. Many lobby in state legislatures when decisions are to be made on proposed abortion bills.

Right or wrong, abortions have become a fact of life on American college campuses and the entire country. When faced with the decision to terminate her college career or terminate her pregnancy, many young women gratefully choose this latter alternative. Whether through the relatively safe procedures used by various hospitals and clinics throughout the country, or through the highly unsafe procedures employed by the illegal abortion community, many young women are paying fees up to $1,000 for such an operation. To these women the question of abortion comes out of the realm of morals and into the realm of physical reality. They search out any method of ending their unwanted pregnancies even if it may mean self-inflicted tortures. These are the women whom the liberalized abortion laws have most benefited.

First Fencing Match Fatal; However, Team Looks Good

By MARY FRANCES BALDWIN

Longwood's Varsity Fencing Team met with Randolph-Macon College in Lynchburg for their opening match Tuesday evening, February 9. Though both the first and second squads lost their overall matches, they did succeed in winning several bouts apiece. This was the first electrically scored match that LCH has ever competed in and was quite an experience for the team.

The first team is composed of Mary Baldwin who is back on the team for her third year and who this year is holding down the No. 1 position on the team. Mary succeeded in winning two out of her three bouts. Ellen Cahill is returning for her third year and Ellen finished with a record of 1-2 for the evening. Janice Russell, a new face on the team with a lot of potential, did not fare quite as well, but picked up a number of touches and learned a lot about competitive fencing in each of her three bouts.

The second squad, composed of Temple Harvey, JoAnne Canada, and Faye Ingram, lost 4-5, but felt very successful, even though they were not able to pull out the final bout which broke the tie that ran throughout the match. All three of the girls on the second squad are new to fencing as well as the team. They took beginner fencing at the college first semester and came out for the team at the start of second semester, and are showing a lot of enthusiasm and determination. They certainly showed it Tuesday evening. The four new girls showed a little understandable apprehension at the start of the matches, but soon the competition fever caught hold and they started winning their bouts.

New Equipment Sparks Team; Judges Find Job Easier

By RUSTY ROWE

New equipment has been added to the fencing department. Fencers met last Thursday night, February 4, for team tryouts. Six members were chosen for the team. Janice Russell, Ellen Cahill, Temple Harvey, JoAnne Canada, and Faye Ingram are new members. Returning with three years of experience is Mary Frances Baldwin. The new equipment is electrical. There is a special metallic vest with a cord connected to a box which registers when a person is touched. It enables the judges to judge more accurately. In woman's fencing, a score is when a fencer makes a valid touch on an opponent. The first player to score four touches, or whoever is ahead in five minutes, is the winner. Miss Sally Bush is coaching the team this year.

It was a good beginning for the team, and they are looking forward to their future matches. The next one is scheduled for 7 p.m. Tuesday, February 16, at Lynchburg College. The team will be hosting the Virginia State Intercollegiate Fencing Tournament for Women, March 13, and anyone is invited to Iler Gym all day, admission free, to view the fencing performance. There will be three divisions of college fencing and one open division in which all coaches and college alumni are invited to participate. This will be the first electrically scored tournament held in Virginia. To date we have 11 teams planning to be here.

Longwood's first home meet will be held Saturday, February 20, at 2:00 against William and Mary College. The competition will take place in Iler Gym and the student body is invited to come out and support their team.

Ellenbrandt, Fowlkes And Fath Receive Official Ratings

By RUSTY ROWE

Starting this past September, ratings, similar to those given in basketball and hockey, were given to those who wanted to judge gymnastics. The tests are done by film and a written test is also given. Scores are sent to the National office. Three types of ratings given are local, regional and national. Of the seven rated officials in the state of Virginia, Longwood now has three. Nancy Fowlkes and Debbie Ellenbrandt have received Local ratings; and Miss Judith Fath has received a regional rating.

On January 13, the Regional High School Gymnastics Meet will be held at Madison College and five Longwood students will attend for the purpose of judging the events. Also, three students will judge a high school meet in Arlington on the 20th.

does not get any volunteer help, it will be discontinued.

Longwood JV's Beat Madison, Randolph-Macon

The Longwood College JV's kept the lead from the beginning against the Madison College JV's as Dianne Padgett tossed in 15 points to spark her team to a 31-21 win, last week.

The first quarter saw Longwood ahead only 5-3 as they hit only 14% of their shots from the floor. The field goal percentage steadily progressed from 25 per cent in the second period to 40 and 41 per cent in the third and fourth quarters as the JV's found their range.

Padgett hit at a 44 per cent clip in gathering 15 points. Defensively Gail Gossage and Sue Craven dominated the boards with 16 and 13 rebounds, respectively.

Longwood Resumes Play

The Longwood varsity basketballers resumed action last Saturday as they defeated Eastern Mennonite College away, 47-35. On Tuesday they played a home game and took Randolph-Macon, 64-35.

Coach Jean Smith commented on the Eastern Mennonite game that it was like starting the season all over again after a month long break. After going through the first half with a series of player adjustments, Longwood started clicking with its ball handling to establish a well balanced scoring attack.

Nanette Fisher spurred her team on to victory as she scored 15 points and grabbed 12 rebounds. Sue Manahan was second high with 12 tallies, and seven rebounds.

Defensively, Fisher and Manahan were the players of the day (Continued on Page 7)

Write Hanoi is a campaign to raise money for the Democratic Republic of Vietnam. The campaign is being run by the American National Red Cross.

The Red Cross is asking you to help by writing a letter to the people of Hanoi.

It is a simple task. You just need to know a few things about the people of Hanoi.

Ask Hanoi to release the names of their prisoners. Ask them to release the names of their prisoners. Ask them to release the names of their prisoners.

Longwood Responds To Write Hanoi Campaign

Longwood students, faculty, and staff, in response to the recent "Write Hanoi" campaign, amassed approximately 800 letters on behalf of American prisoners of war.

Ellen Dunn, president of the YWCA, explained that Longwood was approached for its help by Mrs. Anne Moore, chairman of the campaign in Prince Edward County. Dr. Willett then asked the YWCA to handle the school appeal.

All letters will be sent to Richmond. Together with letters written by Richmond area residents, they will eventually be taken to Hanoi.

Helpful individuals were plentiful. One girl contributed "Write Hanoi" posters. Offices cooperated by letting students duplicate materials. While there were some personal letters written, the majority of the letters were printed forms signed by students.

"I'd like to thank those who contributed," Ellen stated, "The response was good."

The college administration has become concerned with Rt. 328 because of the problem of safety. This road is a heavily traveled street with many trucks backing to load and unload cargo. It is also a main thoroughfare for passenger cars. Because it is considered both dangerous and against the law to walk in the highway, it has been asked that students use the sidewalks.

REPRINTED FROM FRANKLIN COUNTY TIMES

With things changing so rapidly in the field of education these days I thought it would be of interest to print the copy below of an old teacher's contract dated 1915. The teacher had to sign the following contract in order to teach in the local school that year:

1. Not to get married. (This contract becomes null and void immediately if the teacher marries.)
2. Not to keep company with men.
3. Be home between the hours of 8 p.m. and 6 a.m., unless in attendance at a school function.
4. Not to loiter downtown in ice cream stores.
5. Not to leave town at any time without permission of the chairman of the board.
6. Not to smoke cigarettes. (This contract becomes null and void immediately if the teacher is found smoking.)
7. Not to drink beer, wine or whiskey. (This contract becomes null and void immediately if the teacher is found drinking beer, wine or whiskey.)
8. Not to get in a carriage or automobile with any man, except her brother or her father.
9. Not to dress in bright colors.
10. Not to dye her hair.
11. Wear at least two petticoats.
12. Not to wear dresses more than two inches above the ankles.
13. Keep the school room neat and clean; (a) Sweep the floor at least once daily. (b) Scrub the floor at least once weekly with hot water and soap. (c) Clean the blackboards at least once daily. (d) Start the fire at 7 a.m. so the room will be warm by 8 a.m.

Comics Revolution Batman Fights Poverty - Filth

NEW YORK - Comic books are taking a new direction and becoming more contemporary and relevant to the problems facing our current generation. Examples in recent issues show Superman as neurosis-ridden, Batman becoming pollution conscious and Green Arrow coping with bigotry and discrimination.

This is a radical departure from the days when most comics heroes encountered monsters from outer space, supervillains and mad scientists. The problems of today are civil rights, racism, poverty and pollution from without; alienation and self-doubt from within, and the superheroes are involved in all of these.

Comics heroes' entire lifestyles and thought processes are changing in this new era. Viewing the changes, one article in a national magazine notes:

"Superman, he of the impervious 'kishkas,' finds himself in a slum where kids have fire hydrants instead of swimming pools and auto dumps instead of playgrounds. 'Could you survive in this jungle without your super-powers?' he's asked by a black resident. Superman wonders, and so begins to develop a social conscience."

For Batman and Robin, there are changes, too. Batman has shuttered the Bat Cave and his suburban estate to move to the city to fight pollution, poverty and the people who profit by exploiting the poor and the weak. Robin is going to college where he soon will be involved in campus problems, civil rights and peaceful dissent.

And the list grows. Wonder Woman and Lois Lane have become involved with "women's lib" in their own lives, and Superman's pal, Jimmy Olsen, a cub reporter for 30 years, has battled slumlords in ghetto areas.

Indicating that these new approaches are not random, single-episode deviations from the norm, but new directions, Carmine Infantino, editorial director of DC Comics, acknowledges the change and credits it to the growing sophistication of the comics audience.

Says Infantino: "The readers of comics have changed. Today's youth has become too aware and too educated to be satisfied with a constant flow of escapism. Even as the largest publisher of comics, we realize we must continue to progress in our books if we are to remain successful."

Views On Living With Freshmen

By BIC KOLCUM

For the first time this year there are fourteen girls known as Resident Counselors. They have been placed on each floor in predominantly freshman dorms, and on one floor in Wheeler. Of the fourteen, there are two sophomores, one senior, and eleven juniors.

The duties of the Residence Counselor includes advising the girls on personal problems and helping the head resident. Each counselor is paid $500 for her services, which can be collected in monthly checks or put toward tuition.

When asked how the counselors serve the girls, Cookie Howell, a counselor on first floor North, said she served mainly as an information desk. "They ask me questions about meetings, registration and which professors to get," explained Cookie. "Since I never lived on a freshmen hall before, it's interesting."

Selena Lee, a junior on second floor South, feels that she has gained invaluable experience as a Resident Counselor. "If I knew before I accepted the job what I know now, I would've done it without pay."

Selena expressed the importance of making the girls feel that she cared about their welfare. "It gives a resident counselor a bad name if she doesn't put out an effort."

Mickey Urnes, a senior counselor on first floor Tabb, felt that in order to be efficient as a counselor, she should devote most of her time to the job. "The most important thing I do is just to listen, I don't attempt to solve any problems."

Mickey said that she usually answers questions about dating, especially at Hampden-Sydney, whom to see for a particular problem, schedules, and the infirmary.

Joan Putney, a junior on first floor Main, also expressed the importance of being available at any time. She tries to let them work things out for themselves. "I don't try to barge in on their private lives and be a big pal," Joan indicated, however, that there was a drawback in being a resident counselor. That is the separation from friends and members of my class. Sometimes I feel a little out of contact."

Diane Bottoms, a junior on third floor Wheeler, expressed similar feelings. "The biggest trauma is separating from friends and dragging your roommate with you." The freshmen and transfer students are living on all floors in Wheeler, so Diane is not as much in contact with them as some of the other counselors. "I don't know if I'm a benefit or not because there are few problems. Mrs. Baber is so helpful and easy to talk to."

All the girls were vague as to why they were chosen for the job. Some had heard about it and consulted Dean Brown or Dean Holt. Others were informed that they had been recommended by their prospective Head Resident, and then went in for an interview with Dean Brown. They admitted that the money was a big attraction to the job at first.

Excellent contribution by playmaker Margaret Lowry and scoring and rebounding by Nanette Fisher (20 points, 14 rebounds) led the Longwood "V" team to a 63-34 victory against Randolph-Macon.

Sue Manahan's 10 points and eight rebounds, Dottie Bohannon's 10 points, and Belinda Johnson's consistent play set the stage during the first three quarters.

Under the control of Janet Ford, the second team played the entire fourth quarter and contributed 15 points to make the win a total team victory. Debbie Carneal, a freshman, playing only in the fourth quarter, scored nine points.

Old buildings make way for new plans.

New Look At Longwood By Landscape Architect

By MARY FRANCES BALDWIN

Recently Mr. Alan Winslow, landscape architect, was present to show base maps of the college to various faculty and administration officers. These base maps, which include all the buildings and utilities of the college, showed his suggestions for ways to improve the landscape of the Longwood College campus. Adding lights to and planting shrubs at new and old building areas were his main objectives.

Of chief concern to the students has been the land located between the high rise dorms and the new music and art buildings. Students had expressed a desire to have a park or place to release tensions and worries. This area is to be the location of a new Physical Education building with new tennis courts and more student parking area.

According to Mr. Winslow's plans, the new building would be located in the area across from Curry with shrubs and plants surrounding the building. A walk, leading from the high rise dorms, past the new building, would run into Pine Street upon which the art and music buildings are located. Mr. Winslow stated that there is some natural growth in this area which he would like to see kept and preserved. This growth would be next to the walk way and would separate the new building and the new tennis courts. Possibly benches could be placed in this middle section where the students could stop and rest between classes.

The new tennis courts would be located on the portion of land nearest the art and music building facing Pine Street. Hopefully these courts would be lighted, so that tennis matches could be played at night and the Longwood students could get more use out of them.

The parking lot, which would hold 112 cars would face Spruce Street and would be separated from the tennis courts by a row of shrubs and plants.

Mr. Winslow also had some ideas on improvements of the area between Lankford and Stubbs, better known as Stubbs Mall. Here he hoped to dig up and fill in the area, thus making somewhat of an amphitheatre where graduation ceremonies could take place. The walk way would probably remain as is.

Although Mr. Winslow is working very hard on these plans, they must first be approved by the Administration and Board of Visitors before any further action can be taken. Since there are no funds available at the present time, a request, during the 1972-74 biennium, would be made to the General Assembly for funds to cover building and planting.

Consumer Group Wants Campus Members

The Virginia Citizens Consumer Council, a statewide group working for consumer education and protection, is organizing campus chapters and would like to hear from any interested student, faculty or staff members at Longwood.

The VCCC is active in a number of areas including complaint investigation and follow up, legislative research, environmental action, supermarket reforms, and toy safety. In the past year the Council has devoted major attention to fighting VEPCO proposals for electricity rate hikes. Its efforts so far have saved state residents over $12 million.

The Council has also worked to reverse the Traditional "buyer beware" marketplace warning to "seller beware." The group has designed both stamps and buttons showing a cash register ringing up "no sale" and warning "Consumers Care - Let the Seller Beware."

The Consumer Council which represents about 70,000 Virginians through individual and group memberships, is eager to involve college and university communities in its work and wants to set up a chapter at every major campus in the state during the coming year.

"The college and university community has led the way on so many of the important issues facing our nation that we would like to encourage some of its members to devote their talents and energy to consumer problems," said the Council's President, Mrs. Doris Behre.

"Consumerism is an issue that affects everyone - rich and poor, black and white, young and old. Whatever your spending level and whatever you buy, you are entitled to honestly advertised, quality goods and services at fair prices. We welcome the help of all interested persons in making this goal a reality," Mrs. Behre continued.

Membership applications for the Consumer Council and a brochure describing its work are available from P.O. Box 3103, Alexandria, Va. 22302. Dues are $2.00 a year. The Council especially hopes to hear from volunteers who will help organize a local group and start work on research and action projects.

Phone Wires Cut

Five Times In Dorm

Five times within one week the wires to the phone on third floor North Cunningham have been sliced. Repairmen from the Virginia Telephone and Telegraph Company were called to repair the phone for the fourth time on Saturday afternoon.

After checking the phone, the repairmen showed Mrs. Murphy, the house mother for North Cunningham, how the wires had been cut in the storage room. A new wire was connected from the phone to the storage room. Later the same night between 11 and 12 o'clock the wires were severed in three places and the amplifier in the receiver was removed.

Mrs. Murphy reported that the incident disturbed the girls living on the hall but that she "can't point a finger at anyone."

Participants In Project Do-It Find Poverty And Discrimination In Prince Edward

Project group rallies for speaker.

By ETHEL Reiter

"Both races as human beings have the obligation, the responsibility, of helping to correct America's human problems... In our mutual sincerity we might be able to show a road to the salvation of America's very soul. Malcolm X, 1965

The above statement of Malcolm X appropriately sets forth the theme of the Project Do-It Training Weekend held February 12-14 in Powhatan. Approximately 40 Longwood and Hampden-Sydney students participated in the program sponsored by the Student Social Interest Action Committee, the Episcopal Youth in the area. The purpose of the weekend was to educate and prepare the students for working with underprivileged families in Prince Edward County.

The program included films, speakers, and rap sessions. On Friday evening, the film "Poverty in the South" was shown, followed by discussion. The next day's activities began with the film on the Prince Edward race situation and included a discussion on the legal aspects of poverty by Jim Gee, a University of Virginia law student and resident of Farmville. Other speeches were given by Dr. West, a Farmville dentist, on health problems found in the culture of poverty, Lindsey Nolting spoke on Day Care Centers, and Andy Rothschild, a Vista Volunteer, discussed Welfare Rights. Everyone broke up into small groups Sunday morning for specific instruction in working with the poor families.

Exploring the problem of poverty, which is ultimately the race problem, was designed to be an educational experience. Each speaker emphasized the fact that everywhere in the United States, in this specific case Prince Edward County, black and white perceptions of each other are distorted by fear, ignorance, and resentment. White racism has alienated the blacks and denied them the essential need for education, economic power, and political office. As a result of being a victim of the Prince Edward School close-down in 1954, Jim Gee believes that the greatest faith for salvation lies in education. Despite that faith, he sets forth that the white power structure in Prince Edward County has failed to provide the young blacks of this community with anything approaching equal education.

He believes that the existence of the Academy simply perpetuates the educational segregation which was outlawed by the Supreme Court 16 years ago and creates an educational, racial, and social gap. It was pointed out, however, that Prince Edward County is not the only area contributing to inadequate education.

During discussion, the Vista Volunteers pointed out that poverty and discrimination condemn blacks and poor whites to bad housing. Black Americans pay more than whites for comparable housing, and are four times more likely to live in substandard housing. Of all black Americans says TIME's Harris poll, 25% have leaky ceilings, 26% are overcrowded; 29% have rats, and 32% have faulty plumbing. * "In addition to this," a Vista stated, "there are those houses without any plumbing, any heating, any electricity. One need not travel beyond Farmville to find such conditions."

Dr. West affirmed that health care is least available to those who need it most, need being rationed to purchasing power. He said, "The average poor black adult doesn't know anything about his medical needs or his right to medical attention. We need to help the children in the area of health, to educate them. We need a more efficient system devised for delivering care to all Americans."

These were the major educational outcomes of the Training Weekend. It will be the goal of the involved students to tutor the children of the families, to help with repairing housing, to inform these people of their legal and welfare rights, and in essence to give them a feeling of individual strength and worthiness.

Poland Revoking Increase

WARSAW: Poland's leaders have reversed sharp food price increases which set off bloody riots in the Baltic cities last December and caused unrest elsewhere throughout the country. Prime Minister Piote Jaroszewicz announced that prices would go back to their previous level as of March 1.

30 Reported Dead At CIA Base

VIENTIANE: Thirty men, tribesmen were killed and 60 wounded, according to Laotian military sources, after a bombardment of the Central Intelligence Agency's base at Long Cheng.

It was released that American F-4 bombers mistakenly bombed Long Cheng while in an attempt to break up what was called a siege of the base of Pathet Lao and North Vietnamese forces.

High Schools Strike In France

PARIS: Paris's main boulevards were the main scenes of a three hour march by 10,000 French students who were protesting condemnation of a young mathematics student who allegedly punched a policeman. More than 60 high schools went on strike. There was no violence, but Interior Minister Raymond Marcellin prohibited any further street demonstrations.

Governor Foresees Alaskan Bankruptcy

ALASKA: Gov. William A. Egan of Alaska testified that unless oil is flowing through the proposed Trans-Alaska Pipeline by mid-1976 his state will face bankruptcy.

A delegation of Alaskan officials has been in Washington for hearing by the Interior Department on the import that the 800-mile pipeline would have on the Alaskan environment. The pipeline would carry oil from the frozen North Slope to the port of Valdez on the Gulf of Alaska for shipment by tankers to the Puget Sound area.

Calley Found "Normal In Every Respect"

GEORGIA: According to Judge Reid W. Kennedy, Lt. William L. Calley was found 'normal in every respect' after being examined by an Army sanity board.

The three-month-old trial has resumed after a recess in which Calley was examined by three Army psychiatrists at Walter Reed Hospital in Washington. The doctors' full diagnosis has not yet been made public.

Dr. Willett Supports Off-Campus Publication Announces Fee Increase At Press Conference

By VICKI BOWLING

Announcements and answers to questions from the suggestion box highlighted Dr. Willett's press conference, held Thursday, February 18, in the Gold Room.

Dr. Willett opened the conference by reminding students that suggestions can be handled much quicker if they are signed. A third suggestion box has been installed outside of the Information Office. This is in addition to the ones located in Lankford and outside of Dr. Willett's office.

A new publication is in the process of being organized by both Longwood and Hampden-Sydney. Not intended as competition for the existing publications on campus, the publication from the Land of Oz will feature literature and art reflecting students' personal feelings.

On the subject of obtaining change and cashing checks, Dr. Willett stated that the college has looked into the possibility of purchasing a change machine, but that it is not economically feasible. There are two places on campus where students may obtain change. Tim Brown's office in Lankford and the Information Office keep small amounts of change. Mr. Harper in the bookstore will cash checks.

Due to escalation of costs and Longwood's desire to maintain a top faculty, there will be a $130 increase in fees next year.

Dr. Willett hopes that scholarship aid will be increased to help offset this. Federal grant money for next year will be increased. People have tried, unsuccessfully, to have the Virginia State Teachers' Scholarship raised.

There have been many requests from students who want to start school early so that the end of the first semester and Christmas vacation will coincide. A committee has been formed to look into this, and also the possibility of having spring break and Easter coincide. In planning any change, student teaching must be considered. Dr. Willett wants to remain on the semester system.

When asked if a half-day vacation could be given on Good Friday to enable out-of-state students to go home, Dr. Willett replied that it would not be practical to miss more class time on Fridays.

Student government committee is now studying the alcohol question. A number of students have expressed concern that some of the alumni will cut off funds if alcohol is allowed on campus. Dr. Willett said that this is to be expected of any major social change, but that he hopes that any cut will not be sizeable. He does not believe it will affect Longwood's image in the General Assembly.

In reply to questions concerning the curriculum, Dr. Willett said that there are not sufficient funds to offer horse-back riding. We are planning on adding courses leading to a degree in library science.

Dr. Willett was pessimistic about having the clocks on campus set correctly. They require the attention of an electrician.

Individual questions were raised concerning obtaining individual locks in the Cummings, more trash cans on campus, having the antennas on Curry and Stubbs fixed, better lights in the dorms. These matters will be investigated by the proper personnel.

Dr. Willett had several announcements. He cautioned students to be careful when walking by the old Home Economics building, as it is being torn down. Students were reminded to use the sidewalk when walking the area behind Hiner.

Dr. Willett remained to talk with individuals who had other questions.

Grade Distribution Shows No Significant Change From Past

By MARGARET BLAIR

An overview of grade distribution percentages for first semester of the 1970-71 session shows that students' grades at Longwood varied little from previous trends. The percentage differences between first semester

1969-70 and the now completed first semester are statistically negligible. In the report the percentile for 1969-70 is listed first and 1970-71 second:

%A - 17.65, 16.59; %B - 40.96, 40.22; %C - 30.95, 31.19; %D - 8.24, 8.67; %F - 2.21, 3.35; total grades given - 10,139, 11,295.

As explained by Dr. Herbert R. Blacksell, Dean of the College, Longwood's grade distribution is about the same as those of other institutions of comparable status.

There are 148 students on the Dean's List, and 14 of these girls made the maximum 4.00 grade average for the past semester. A little over 200 students did not make the minimum grade requirements; 2.00 for upperclassmen and 1.80 for freshmen.

Statistical data for the comparison of grades between classes and for the exact number of students who went on academic probation have not been processed at this time. However, all students on AP and their parents have been notified.

The girls who made 4.00 for the first semester of the 1970-71 session are Susan Carol Barnes, Doris Jean Black, Jennifer Ann Brown, Nancy Lee Goodman, Lucy Ann Gresham, Karen Lynn Haldeman, Brenda Kay Hamner, and Deborah Kinney Jackson. Lottie Jester Lawrence, Barbara Anne Lewis, Rosemary Ann Lohman, Joanne Arvilla May, Margaret Ruth Pulley, and Cynthia Anne Toggert also made 4.00's.

Dr. Arnheim Speaks On Psychological Aspects Of Art

By MARY ANN BENTLEY

Dr. Rudolf Arnheim, Professor of the Psychology of Art, Harvard University, will deliver two lectures February 25 in the Bedford Building Auditorium. Invited through the Visiting Scholar Program, Dr. Arnheim will speak at 10:00 a.m. and 1:00 p.m. on "Visual Thinking" and "Visual Order and Disorder" respectively and will illustrate his lectures with color slides.

Dr. Arnheim, whose psychological studies on the forms and functions of art are read in several languages, became Professor of the Psychology of Art in Harvard University, on July 1, 1968. He was Visiting Professor at the Carpenter Center in 1964, and again in 1966.

Born on July 15, 1904, in Berlin, Germany, Professor Arnheim holds the Ph.D. degree from the University of Berlin (1928). He held Guggenheim Fellowships in 1942 and 1943 and was a Fulbright Lecturer at Ochanomizu University, Tokyo, Japan, in 1959-60. In 1966-68 he held a Research Grant from the U. S. Office of Education.

Before coming to Harvard, Professor Arnheim was a member of the Psychology faculty, Sarah Lawrence College, Bronxville, N. Y., from 1943 to 1968, and during that same period of time Lecturer and Visiting Professor on the Graduate Faculty of the New School for Social Research, New York, N. Y. In 1967 and 1968 he was a Visiting Professor at Teacher's College, Columbia University.

He is the author of "Art and Visual Perception," "Film as Art," "Picasso's Guernica," "Toward a Psychology of Art," and "Visual Thinking."

Dr. Arnheim is a former president and trustee of the American Society of Aesthetics and former president of the Division on Psychology and the Arts of the American Psychological Association.

Professor and Mrs. Arnheim live in Cambridge, Mass. Their daughter is a senior at Sarah Lawrence College. Mrs. Arnheim will accompany her husband to Longwood.

The "Eye Spy" Case

A rumor is a specific proposition for belief, passed along from person to person, usually by word of mouth, without secure standards of evidence being present. Rumors seldom fail to have personal and clearly identified victims, nor do they fail to specify clearly the character of the action or deed that provides the tenor of the tale. Hearsay reports of happenings, gossip, slander, and predictions are the concrete forms that rumor takes.

The central feature of the previously stated definition is the insistence that rumor thrives only in the absence of "secure standards of evidence." This criterion marks off rumor from news, distinguishes legend from science, and separates gullibility from knowledge. However, this is not the situation at Longwood. Most disciplinary actions on this campus have its source in hearsay information and idle gossip. It is common knowledge that several students have been "victimized" and pressured by Longwood's distorted tactics of discipline.

Colleges often use student or outside informers whose identity they wish to keep secret. For one thing, this kind of information should never be used against a student unless the university identifies the informer and gives one the opportunity to challenge her information. I know of several cases where students have been summoned to the Dean's office through a letter or telephone call which fails to explain why. Appearing in the office without any prepared defense, the student is presented with a series of vague rumors concerning her behavior, passed to the administrator by unidentified "honorable students."

The judicial system functions quite the same way. A student never meets her accuser, but she must suffer the consequences of her informer's gossip. Judicial Board members approach a student, inform her of her suspicious behavior, and then do her the favor of "keeping a watchful eye" on her until her college career comes to an end.

Rumor is woven deep into the fabric of society, and it is impossible to remove it or the destructive forces of rumor. What I am proposing, however, is that rumor cease to be a source of objective information at Longwood.

54c A Meal? Don't Complain

By DONNA GIBSON
Dining Hall Committee

A system of meal tickets rather than a set fee for student meals was investigated by the Dining Hall Committee. From the suggestions of students in the fall, an optional system where the student would pay at each individual meal she attended was examined.

Conferring with ARA Slater System and College Services Corporation, a seven-day, 21-meal week was used in the calculations. The average meal cost under the complete option plan of using meal tickets would be $1.54 per meal if the Dining Hall was open for 21 meals per week. Under the present system, the cost to each student is 54¢ per meal.

Both of these per meal costs are the charges by ARA Slater and do not include the maintenance of the equipment, or payment of the waitresses' salaries, all of which are a direct expense of the students and college.

By comparing the two prices, the optional basis for meals would be highly expensive as well as largely unworkable in our dining service.

Letters to the Editor

A Waste Of Time?

To the Editor:

How could the Freshman possibly be required to go listen to anything as useless as Mrs. Taliaferro's speech? If we had stayed in our rooms and studied much better use would have been made of our time.

We were under the impression that the speech would be about the Honoraries and Business Opportunities. Instead it was about Mrs. Taliaferro's life with a throw for Women's Lib.

If she thinks that the extent of business opportunities is television and airplane mechanics, then she is a far cry from a good public relations example for Longwood.

How embarrassing it must have been for President Willett to have her continuously speaking of the better girls' schools. Longwood must have something or why would we all be here? Also since Longwood is primarily a teacher's college, it sounded really great to hear one of the professors telling us not to be teachers.

I hope that in the future required assemblies will be worth the effort of attending.

A Suggestion

Dear Editor:

As a waitress in the dining hall I would like to make a suggestion to the students that would make a waitress' job easier. The dishes we carry on trays can be heavy and they get heavier when we have to thread our way through groups of girls talking and walking slowly in the main aisles. Probably many students have had near accidents with waitresses carrying trays and it is only because the waitress is trying to hurry and get somewhere where she can set it down. Clearing the aisles and moving to one side would save wear and tear on both students and waitresses and would result in food being served more quickly.

Sincerely,

Joanie Feathers

Students Push To Reform Codes

Reprinted From Richmond Times-Dispatch

A sampling of Virginia colleges and universities shows that more codes are being reversed right now than in all the decade past. The issues, it appears, have become more complex, and the revisions more philosophical. Constitutionality, due process are words the students of the '70's are using.

Today, if a student feels his rights have been violated, he's apt to take his college to court.

Today, the spot check showed, many institutions of higher learning in Virginia are making sure their rules and regulations are constitutional.

In general, students at private schools seemed more content with their codes than did those at the state-supported colleges.

And administration spokesman at Hampden-Sydney College said the student code there has been generally well accepted.

"What we have is enforceable, but some rules need to be liberalized," said John Luxton of Waynesboro, chairman of Hampden-Sydney's student judiciary board.

Students at Mary Washington

College, a branch of the University of Virginia, have proposed a bill of rights similar to that advocated by students at the parent school. The proposed Mary Washington bill of rights is to be acted on soon by the administration.

"We are in a period of transition here," said Susan Cottingham of Morrisville, Pa., judicial chairman of the Student Association at the Fredericksburg college. "We're working on a lot of new proposals."

A group of association officers have been trying to decide whether students can make and live under their own rules, Miss Cottingham said.

Problems at Mary Washington have been worked out through cooperative efforts of the students and administration, said Marilyn Morgan of Staten Island, N. Y., Student Association president.

"We're fighting old traditions of a southern women's institution," she said.

Recent changes in the Mary Washington code have included liberalized dress, drinking, and residence hall hours, a college spokesman said.

"We have always viewed these things (rules) in terms of constant review, constant change of circumstances," said Michael Houston, Mary Washington's assistant chancellor. "All rules and regulations are under a kind of constant scrutiny."

Changes through student-administration cooperation also were cited at Longwood College in Farmville.

"Our code is a little strict but I don't feel suppressed," said Mary Tabb Johnston of Blacksburg, chairman of Longwood's residency board. Miss Johnston, a senior, said the possibility of allowing alcoholic beverages in dormitories is under study by the legislative board.

Amy Bolling, a freshman from Richmond, said the student code "works and I like it," although she favors a relaxation of room visitation rules.

This past fall the College of William and Mary came out with its first really revised code in six years, although in between (Continued on Page 7)

"Little Fauss And Big Halsy"

Reprinted from Paramount Press Book

The thrilling sport of professional motorcycle racing is the background for Paramount Pictures' "Little Fauss and Big Halsy" starring Robert Redford and Michael J. Pollard. The Albert S. Ruddy Production, directed by Sidney J. Furie, opens Wednesday at the Farmville Theatre.

Producer Ruddy and director Furie go behind the scenes to explore the motives which produce the unusual breed of men dedicated to risking their lives in a perilous sport. The script by Charles Eastman centers on three young people who are part of the uncertain world of motorcycle racing.

All scenes were filmed on location in Southern and Northern California and in Arizona. Shooting was done in San Francisco, Los Angeles and Phoenix, and in smaller towns like Lancaster, Rosemont and Willow Springs. The production operated like a traveling road company, filming in a different town every few

The motorcycle racing sequences were filmed at a variety of tracks, including the Willow Springs Raceway, 100 miles from Los Angeles; the Manzanita Speedway in Phoenix, and at the new Sears Point International Raceway in Sonoma, California, north of San Francisco. Filming at Sears Point was done during the running of the first national championship road races at the new paved 2 1/2 mile track.

To give audiences the sensation of actually participating in the races, cameras were placed on special mounts attached to the motorcycles. Then stunt riders joined the pack of bikes and filmed the high speed sequences at close range. A camera crew in a helicopter followed the action from above. In addition, a recorder was mounted on the speeding machines to capture the authentic sounds of motorcycle racing.

"Little Fauss and Big Halsy" co-stars Lauren Hutton, Noah Beery and Lucille Benson. The film was photographed in panavision and color by Movielab.

Blasphemy is easy to come by these days, it seems, and mediocre rock music is even more abundant; for those who have objections to either, there's a lot of objectionable material in "Jesus Christ, Superstar." This recorded "rock opera" makes an honest and often very interesting effort to do three difficult things: reinterpret the events of the last week of Christ's life, set the new interpretation into the idiom of mass culture with modern language and characterizations that carry parallels in rock-culture and contemporary politics, and put the result into the form of conventional opera, orchestrated with rock music. "Superstar" reacts to the notion of Christ as that willowy young man with the far-away look in his eyes, the meek but confident son of God who, disguised as Jesus, mild-mannered convert to a great Middle-Eastern religion, preaches a never ending sermon for Love, God, and the Eternal Life. Webber and Rice fight the traditional characterization by being antitraditional: they put Jesus (rather uncertainly) into the role of a mass-culture hero, make Judas a sort of cautious road-manager, cast Mary Magdalene as a groupie in love with Christ, and Simon Zelotes as a politico who wants to co-opt Christ into a revolution against the Roman occupation. The point of all this is to make it clear by analogy that Jesus was a man, a man who had worries and faults, who had to deal with the same problems all men have to deal with, and who offered his flesh-and-blood body up to crucifixion in the face of very human doubts; the Superstar metaphor is just a more or less appropriate metaphor for Messiah.

"Superstar" has a fundamental aura of reverence; Christ's last words are verbatim from the Bible, and the last song in "Superstar," an instrumental piece that follows "The Crucifixion," is titled "John Nineteen Forty-One," a reference to the point in John's Gospel where the narrative describing the discovery of Christ's resurrection begins. But it has a few half-concealed implications that are wide-eyed blasphemy for those who see the Last Supper, for instance, as a sacred event. Webber and Rice, with a neat bit of circular logic and some imaginative rewriting, transform the Last Supper into an open fight between Jesus and Judas. While this goes on, the Apostles sit calmly by getting into their cups, oblivious of what is going on, singing a drunken ditty that gets more ragged each time they sing it and that implies that the Gospel accounts are inaccurate. The implication is that Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John were all hopelessly drunk at the Last Supper (and the overall implication that the Apostles were generally out of touch with what was going on) is very clearly blasphemous. Otherwise it's a needlessly clever justification for the liberties Webber and Rice take with a few scenes from the Gospels.

The score of "Superstar," in its weakness, spells out the problems of any attempt at "rock opera;" the closer "rock opera" comes to the conventional opera, the more difficult it is effectively to employ rock music in the score; opera has to develop plot and characters verbally — with the words sung by the characters. The tendency, then, is for the music to become somewhat subordinate to, and tied to, the structure of the words. The "Who's "Tommy" avoided the problem by keeping very close to pure rock performance; but "Tommy's" pretensions to being conventional opera are even weaker than "Superstar's." Despite some capable back-up musicians and a particularly good performance by Ian Gillan as Judas, "Superstar" mixes rock with pop and produces too much schmaltz. The brightest moment of the whole show is an intentionally schmaltzy one that comes when a chillingly ironic Herod mock-playfully challenges Jesus in a sleazy ragtime: So you are the Christ, you're the great Jesus Christ Prove to me that you're no fool— Walk across my swimming pool If you do that for me then I'll let you go free C'mon King of the Jews.

Miss Bishop Exhibits In Pennsylvania

By MARY ANN BENTLEY

Miss Barbara Bishop, chairman of the art department, was recently invited to exhibit a sampling of her works at Lock Haven State College, Lock Haven, Pa.

The show opened on February 1 with a warm reception for Miss Bishop who later delivered a lecture on the basic principles of printmaking as they relate to her work.

Consisting of twenty-three pieces, the exhibit includes prints and drawings. A wide variety of media was illustrated in her drawings as flocking, silkscreen, transfer, and pencil were used to fortify and accentuate the richness of Miss Bishop's works. The show continued through the 19th of February.

Friday, February 26, Miss Bishop will travel to Virginia Commonwealth University for "A Mini-Conference and Research in Art Education." Reflecting the National Art Education Association, the Conference Research Divisions were established in an effort to identify and organize interests in this area.

Purchase Committee Makes Decision

By MARY ANN BENTLEY

The Committee for the Purchase of Art Objects by Contemporary Virginia Artists has chosen for the Longwood collection two works by Lois Morrison. Upon invitation by the committee Miss Morrison's "Pattables" are now on exhibition in the Bedford Gallery.

The sensitive drawing, "Tree," number 22, and the masterly trapunto, "Seated Pattable," number 16, (both marked by red stars) are the recent acquisitions which bring the total collection up to 31 art objects including paintings, drawings, prints, sculpture and a mosaic.

The Purchase Committee adopts the Virginia Museum's definition of a Virginian as one having been born in Virginia or having resided for at least five years.

Miss Morrison, presently of New Jersey, is a Virginian by birth.

Founded in 1951, the Committee for the Purchase of Art Objects by Contemporary Virginian Artists first functioned from private donations. Because a certain amount of student funds are now allocated to the committee, the art objects are displayed in widely traveled areas, i.e., the dorms, the library, and the offices. The committee is presently attaching more plates and purchase dates to the collection which will then be redistributed.

Involved in the committee are Mrs. Janice Lemen, Chairman, Miss Nancy Leitch, Mr. Paul Rouillard, Mr. Charles Butler, and Miss Freida Myers. Student members are Kathy Barclay, Debbie Comper, Mary Alice Carmody and Becky Kelso.

The Julien Binford painting is to be exhibited at a retrospective show at Mary Washington College this spring and has been photographed for the catalogue.

Black Education At The High School?

"It Depends On The Person"

By LYNDA VAN HORN

What is it like to attend a private all white academy? What is it like to attend a public school with an almost total black enrollment?

These were originally the questions to be answered at least partially by this article. It became necessary, however, after a course of two weeks of telephone calls and interviews, to change the complexion of this assignment and in fact write an almost completely different and perhaps one-sided story.

Why has it happened then that this initial story of comparison has been revised into an essay on the attitudes and feelings of the Prince Edward county high school teachers and students?

ADMINISTRATOR INTERVIEWED

Last week two appointments were made with the school officials. The headmaster of Prince Edward Academy said that he did not think that he could help with answering questions and referred the interviewer to Mr. Robert Redd, administrator of the Prince Edward School Foundation which handles the affairs of the private white school. Mr. Redd was very helpful with the statistics and pertinent details about the school, but said that it would be impossible for the students and/or the faculty to be interviewed at the school. He said that the school had already had much adverse publicity and had hence made it a policy not to allow the press to visit the school during school hours. He did mention though, that ROTUNDA staff members could go out to the school in the afternoon at school closing time and be conducted on a tour of the empty school.

The second interview was to be held that same afternoon with Mr. Clarence Penn, the principal of Prince Edward County High School. Upon visiting the school it was found that Mr. Penn could not be available that afternoon but would be glad to set up a second interview for a later date. This second interview was scheduled for the next week, but Mr. Penn had to leave on an emergency and could not be available. He did, however, say that the students and teachers could be interviewed and to feel free to go about the school speaking to whomever necessary.

BACKGROUND OF COUNTY HIGH SCHOOL

The large county high school was built in 1952, but not essentially black segregated until federal court ordered the Prince Edward County to open the schools in 1964 after being closed for a period of eight years.

What effect did the closing have upon the Negro school population who were forbidden admission to the newly opened all white Prince Edward Academy? The effects were crippling and could only be determined through long range study.

Dr. Robert Green, a member of the education department at Michigan State, who came to Prince Edward County to try to salvage black education, writes of the conditions:

"Early school deprivation may have irreversible effects," he wrote in his report. "If this is the case, then the rate of subsequent development should be substantially different for children who have experienced severe early deprivation. Terminal skill development of these children would never attain a normal level."

He goes on to note that many of the black children had digressed to the point of having lost the ability to manipulate a pencil.

Now, twelve years since the first closing of the schools, the schools are functioning and providing education to the black community. It must be made clear at this point that the school is not entirely black. There is a handful of white children attending the schools whose parents for one reason or another did not send them to the white academy — the tuition costs for one year at the academy are $475.

Mrs. Beatrice Mitchell, the black high school librarian, has worked in the Prince Edward County schools since 1964. At the beginning of this time she worked as an assistant in the "Free School" set up through private funds to serve as a "catch up" program to the black children. She was most emphatic as to her satisfaction within the school system. She feels the county is placing a good deal of emphasis on the library and other learning materials. When asked if she felt in any way alienated from the white community of Farmville, she replied that she had heard about animosity between the races but had experienced none herself. In overall view she considered her residence in the county as a "profitable and pleasant experience."

BLACK STUDENT OPINIONS

Some of the black students did not agree, however, with all of what Mrs. Mitchell stated. Several felt that the curriculum was lacking in enough black history and literature courses being taught in the school. One student mentioned that an Afro-American history course was offered and a sampling of Negro heritage was offered in English classes, but he was not satisfied with the amount.

The students were asked to compare the white teachers with the black. One Negro girl said that there was almost an even distribution of black and white teachers and as to their success as teachers, she said that generally "it depends on the type of person."

Several of the black students interviewed said they felt a definite pattern of prejudice still existed in the community. They felt that it was hard to find good jobs since the majority of business men in the community are white. Many also said that they felt the presence of Prince Edward Academy as an outward sign of this prejudice.

There were those black students who disagreed with these views. Some said that they did not feel a prejudice existed and that they were satisfied with the school curriculum.

What is school like for a white student in the predominately black school? A few white students, although relatively hard to find, were also interviewed.

WHITE RESPONSE

A young ninth grader gave her impressions after being in the school for only one day. Her family had just moved into the Farmville area and she was attending her first day at the county school. She stated that her teachers all of whom were black were very friendly but she did not feel anyone had really tried to put her at ease. First impressions? — "I don't like it. There are just too many blacks." She said she had been greeted by the black students by "we have another Pocahontas here." Admitting that she felt fear at first entering the school, she lamented, "They just seem like they don't want to learn."

However valid these first impressions toward a true view of racial relations at the school is hard to decide. There were those white students who were satisfied with conditions in the school and felt that most of the black students were friendly.

Prince Edward County High School is seeking accreditation by the Southern Association of Schools and Colleges. Even if denied this accreditation the school has come a long way in providing equal education for blacks and whites alike.

Gymnasts Unleash Full Ability; Swamp Stratford 78.7 - 39.9

By RUSTY ROWE

Last Wednesday night, February 17, Longwood's gymnastic team met with Stratford College. With Longwood swamping the meet, the final score was LC 78.7 and Stratford 39.9. Competition included floor exercise, vaulting, balance beam, uneven parallel bars, and tumbling. LC's highest cumulative score came in floor exercise. The total was 18.55 for the three gymnasts. Carolyn Paxton received a 5.75; Suzanne Morgan, a 6.3; and Suzanne Stewart, a 6.5. This was an excellent start and throughout the entire meet LC kept pulling farther and farther away coming up with some of their highest scores for the season.

The vaulting event showed some pretty good scores, too. Individual points included Nancy Frost with a 5.0, Dana Hutchinson with a 5.25, and Martha Hicks with 4.8. Total score was 15.05.

The sports editor would like to make a correction here, concerning last week's Gymnastics article. She said the uneven bars were the hardest of all events. Some of the gymnasts don't agree with that. Though the bars are the most exciting, the hardest event seems to be the balance beam. Even for a good gymnast, turning cartwheels, doing handstands, and tumbling on the beam is really very hard. The total points for this event were 11.85.

The highest scorer was Nancy Frost. She did exceptionally well with a score of 5.55. Curry Pettis and Kitty Lassiter also competed with scores of 3.8 and 2.5, respectively. The best event of the meet was the uneven parallel bars.

Debbie Ellenbrandt with a score of 5.45; Martha Hicks with 5.65; and Carolyn Paxton with a 6.4, outdid themselves. They are really something to watch when they start moving. By the end of this event they were well ahead of Stratford who had no chance to beat Longwood now.

But Stratford wasn't all they were well ahead of, checking previous gymnastics' scores showed that their previous high score at the end of the usual four events was 58.0. It was now already 62.95. Miss Fath was well satisfied with the team's performance and said that they would try for an even higher total next event and keep on getting higher. She left the team staring at her with their mouths wide open. The uneven bars didn't end the meet, tumbling was added. Nancy Frost with a 3.95, Carolyn Paxton scoring 5.6; and Curry Pettis with 6.2, added another 15.75 points to their winning score to make a total of 78.7 points.

The gymnastic team members include Jackie Ashe, Linda Burgdorf, Diane Derrick, Debbie Ellenbrandt, Nancy Frost, Martha Hicks, Dana Hutcherson, Kitty Lassiter, Karen Lewis, Suzanne Morgan, Debbie Morris, Curry Pettis, Carolyn Paxton, Suzanne Stewart and Nancy Fowlkes as manager. The team has two more meets scheduled for February 22 (Monday), here against William and Mary at 4:00 p.m. There will be four events plus tumbling. The other meet is March 3 (Wednesday) at Stratford College at 5:30 p.m. There will also be four events plus tumbling. Everyone is invited to attend and watch Longwood's gymnasts in action.

Fencing Team Still Improving, Record Now 2 Wins, 1 Loss

By MARY BALDWIN

The Longwood College Fencing Team competed in their second match of the season at Lynchburg College the evening of the 16th at 7 p.m. The team won by a score of 10 to six. They had gained much experience and knowledge from their match at Randolph-Macon Women's College the week before and did not let up their drive from the start of the match to the finish. The Longwood team led in the total number of bouts won throughout the match. Mary Frances Baldwin led her teammates in the number of bouts won, winning three out of the four she fought. Close behind were Joanne Canada and Temple Harvey both winning two out of four. Jan Russell and Faye Ingram sharing on the number of bouts fought, finished with a 2-0 and 1-1, respectively. It was a most exciting match, and spurred the girls on for daily practices on preparation for the home match against Mary Washington College on Saturday, Feb. 20. This home meet again proved victorious for the Longwood fencers. The winning fever remained throughout the meet as they fenced Mary Washington College before a good crowd of spectators. The final scores were: first team won 8-1 and the second team 4-0. Longwood's record now stands at two wins and one loss.

Miss Sally Bush, the coach for the team, has been doing an excellent job. The team has a lot of potential but needed a good coach to bring it out. Miss Bush also does a good job of judging the home meet. Even with the help of four students judging, it is hard.

The next match will be a tri-match held at Madison College in which the Longwood fencers will meet Lynchburg College once again. The rematch should prove to be a very exciting one.

New System For Excused Absences Begin Feb. 22

In the past, students who have been confined to the infirmary or who have taken college-sponsored trips have been issued a small form called "Absences" whereby they were excused from class. The number of these excused absences slips have increased to such an extent that it has become necessary to find another method of notifying the faculty about a student's excused absence. The "Absences" forms have been discontinued. In their place, a weekly list of students who have excused absences will be issued to the department chairmen every Friday afternoon. Faculty members are asked to check with the chairmen on Monday if they wish to know about their student's excused absences.

Longwood Students Attend Performance Of Moliere Play

By CHRIS BAILOR
Moliere's "LeBourgeois Gentilhomme" was performed in the University of Richmond's Fine Arts Building on Wednesday, February 17.

Jean de Rigault's production of the play was presented by Le Treteau de Paris, and sponsored by the Department of Modern Foreign Languages at the University.

Written for Louis XIV and his court, the play originally cast Moliere himself in the role of the main character. The 18th Century play was unusual in that it was both introduced and performed in the French language.

Several students from Longwood attended the play, and commented that had they not previously studied Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme, they would probably have been completely confused as to the plot. The dialogue was presented much too rapidly for complete comprehension by unadapted French students, yet the excellent acting by the Parisian company made the play well worth seeing.

Bookstore Will Keep Present Check Cashing Service For Students

By LYNNE WILSON

Although Longwood's snack bar cannot cash checks without a purchase, the book store will cash personal checks up to $5, or $5 beyond the cost of purchases made.

There had been recent student discussion because the snack bar won't cash personal checks. Mr. Carbone had found it too large a task to take care of check cashing at Lankford, plan meals and banquets, and keep all the books straight. However, this doesn't mean a student can't cash checks on campus. Mr. Harper, the book store manager, will cash student checks without a purchase up to a $5 limit. The limit is necessary because even now daily check cashing amounts to over $500, and larger checks would necessitate more trips to the bank and greater sums of money on hand. Two party checks can be cashed for any amount as long as the student endorses the check.

Certain restrictions have been placed on book store check cashing. Should a student cash more than one non-sufficient fund check, her checks will no longer be honored at the store. Presently there is no service charge for bad checks, but banks charge $2 per check, and if insufficient fund checks become frequent, Mr. Harper may also have to initiate a charge.

As long as the students need to cash their checks on campus, the book store will continue this service.

DR. BREIL

Dr. Breil Publishes First Major Work On Liverwort Flora

By KATHY ROBERTSON

Dr. David A. Breil, Associate Professor of Natural Sciences here at Longwood College, has recently published in pamphlet form his study of "Liverworts of the Mid-Gulf Coastal Plain." The study was originally published in the Fall, 1970 issue of THE BRYOLOGIST.

During the three years of his survey (1965-68) Dr. Breil examined more than 5,000 specimens of liverwort flora, approximately 2,500 of which he collected himself. Representative specimens of those included in his personal collection are now included in the herbaria of Florida State University, Duke University, the New York Botanical Garden, and the Smithsonian Institution.

The pamphlet is a study of the 107 species of known liverwort flora of the Gulf coastal plain. For each species Dr. Breil gives a brief description of the physical and structural characteristics, including its habitat and location. "The need for such a guide has become urgent since progressive devastation of vege-

Drink Machines Impractical

By LYNNE WILSON

Longwood students have made several requests for can or bottle drink machines to replace the cup vendors, but these machines are impractical in terms of capacity, maintenance, and expense.

Longwood now has thirty-eight vending machines that gross approximately $50,000 per year. The Coca-Cola Co. of Lynchburg, which stocks the machines, feels that with an average investment of $1,500 per machine, the current level of sales won't justify additional machines.

In addition a request for changing cup drink machines to bottle machines presents problems that would reduce gross sales to the extent that some of the machines now on campus would have to be removed unless the vending operation was subsidized by the total tuition and fees of the students.

In reference to the use of bottle or can vendors on campus, the Coca-Cola Co. cites several disadvantages. First, there is always the danger of broken bottles or of the metal can rings dropped on the floor. There is a maintenance problem in that the space taken up by a can or bottle is considerably more than that of a cup. Another disadvantage lies in the fact that a cup drink machine has a capacity of 1000 drinks whereas a can or bottle machine can hold only 226 drinks. This means four times more service is needed, and there would be more interruptions by the service men in the forms. It is also easier to fill syrup containers than to bring in bulky bottles or cans. Since these factors would reduce the total efficiency of the operation by about 75%, it is estimated that 20 to 25 cents would have to be charged for each can or bottle drink. Furthermore, the cost of a cup is only one cent while a bottle or can is about five cents. Finally, there is not enough space or electrical current to service the two to four bottle machines that it would take to replace one cup machine.

Currently, there are five bottle vending machines on campus. They are in buildings and grounds, the science building, the library, Jarman, and the Lankford rec. These are justified in that the volume of business dispensed by these is small enough not to warrant the installation of a more expensive cup machine.

Miss Carmody Former Editor Teaching Art In Farmville

By VALERIE BLANKS

The former editor of The Rotunda, Mary Alice Carmody, is now teaching at Prince Edward County High Schools.

Miss Carmody, originally from Pennsylvania, graduated from Longwood in January and began teaching art courses to students from grades 7 through 12 at the high school in February. Prince Edward County High School, which was known as Robert R. Moton High School until recently, was without an art teacher for two years until this year. Right now Prince Edward is working for accreditation and Miss Carmody is busy filling out reports for the Art Department.

Beginning in mid-March Miss Carmody will teach afternoon classes at the high school and advise the teachers of the four elementary schools in the county as art resource teachers for the county. The high school will possibly hire a full time art teacher next year, Miss Carmody may fill this position but has hopes of attending graduate school in the fall. She enjoys teaching at the high school level but believes she would like to specialize at the college level.

When asked if she had any problems with the students, Miss Carmody responded, "Not many, I am pleased with their obedience and good manners." She also commented on the talent of some of her students. But one problem that Miss Carmody as well as some of the rest of the faculty are faced with is that some of the students do not have much time for doing homework. Because of the years when the school was closed, some of the students were not able to go to school at the proper age. They are now married and have jobs after school. The teachers have taken this into consideration and have tried to lighten the load. But on the whole Miss Carmody is enjoying teaching at Prince Edward County High School.

A.A.U.W. Reports Few Women In Top Jobs

Despite claims by most colleges and universities that they include women in top-level administrative positions, women administrators seldom have major policy-making responsibilities, according to a survey conducted by the American Association of University Women.

Women also are under-represented in top-level faculty positions and in influential student offices, the survey disclosed, although 90 per cent of the institutions surveyed said their promotion policies for women teachers were the same as for men.

In administration, women's jobs involve skills and attention to detail, not policy-making or influence, the association said.

More than 90 per cent of the institutions questioned indicated that their policy was to include women in top-level administrative positions. The survey also found, however, that women are generally at the middle-management level or in stereo-typically female jobs, such as deans of nursing.

Women in administration are most likely to be head librarians, directors of placement, or directors of financial aid, the AAUW said, and least likely to be presidents. Women fill more positions of responsibility at women's colleges, private institutions, and colleges with fewer than 1,000 students, than at large and public institutions, the study found.

Women were more likely to hold influential student positions at institutions with fewer than 1,000 students. Of those, 18 per cent had women student body presidents in the three year period, compared with two per cent at universities with enrollments over 10,000.

About 22 per cent of the nation's faculty members were women, according to the survey, the country's faculty women were full professors, compared with 24.5 per cent of faculty men.

John Froines emphasizes the fact that organized action is needed to end the war.

Froines Speaks On War And Outlines Treaty Of The People

By ETHEL REITER

John Froines, a member of the Chicago Seven and a leader in the civil rights and antiwar movements since the early 1960's, called for a new, sustained movement to end the Vietnam War in his address to the Hampden-Sydney student body Wednesday night.

Froines clearly set forth the purpose of his speech, "I want to talk primarily about the war, the Nixon strategy, Laos, and organizational forms to end the war."

It is necessary to go back to the 1968 New Hampshire primary to find the beginnings of the Nixon strategy, McCarthy won in New Hampshire because of the growing antiwar sentiment. Therefore, said Froines, Nixon's aim is to win the war and end protest by decreasing the death toll in Vietnam. This involves a very simple strategy of forced urbanization of the peasants. There are three parts of this strategy: saturation bombing which is equivalent to three Hiroshimas a week; sensor devices which allow jets and artillery to zero in on anything that radiates heat; and terror weapons, such as pellet bombs and cloth mines.

Froines believes that the whole thing has failed for one simple reason. The U.S. thinks that by using these weapons which drive all the peasants from the countryside, it is possible to separate the people from the fighters. However, the people are fighters and the liberation front has been brought to the cities. The war is not out of the city.

The purpose of the Laos invasion is to remove public attention from the war in the cities, Froines stated. The Laos invasion is just another step towards further escalation.

"I talk about these weapons and tactics because we have allowed technology to divorce us from the effects of bombing, the killing and the suffering.

New Shipment Of Cottons and Spring Linens
Schember's

Something is wrong when we have to define victory in terms of body count," Froines stated.

To end the war, Froines said that a strong and sustained peace movement is vital, one that will not surrender to pressures as all efforts in the past have done. He also proposed that the treaty of the people be taken to every single American for ratification.

This treaty originated when a group of U.S. students met South and North Vietnamese students to formulate a peace document. It has been ratified by students of both parts of Vietnam. The treaty calls for a cease fire, complete and safe American withdrawal, the release of POWs, and a democratic election in North and South Vietnam to decide the question of government.

"If the government of the United States has not stopped the war by May 1, 1971, the functioning of the government will end," declared Froines. There is a planned demonstration to be held in Washington, D.C. On May 2, there is to be a GI strike starting with Fort Bragg. Demonstrations will be held at every American embassy in Europe and Asia. Every major U.S. city will have nonviolent demonstrations.

Washington is to be surrounded by a massive assembly of non-violent demonstrators. Demonstrators will also assemble on Pennsylvania Avenue to "close down the Capitol." Vehicles will be left stalled on the entrance roads to the Pentagon and the CIA building.

Froines ended his speech by saying that this massive nonviolent demonstration is our obligation to humanity and our only hope for peace.

Change Machines Impossible To Maintain At Longwood

By LYNN WILSON

In answer to student requests, the business office recently inquired into the possibility of putting change machines on campus, but the machines were found to be both impractical and unreliable.

Recently, Mr. Jim Blanton called to Macke Co., which handles the vending operation at VCU, to get some information on the machines. He found that the change machines would cost $1,000 and an additional $300 per month for service.

Since there is no profit in the change machine itself, its primary purpose is to boost the sales from the vending machines. Our vending machines would have to gross $1,200 to $1,500 per month to warrant the installation of change machines, but they fall far short of this with an average of $800 per machine per month.

In addition to the expense of the change machines itself, experience shows them to be in need of repair at least two or three times per week, and these repairs would require factory trained service men. Since the machines are basically unreliable, it is conceivable that a girl might have to wait several days for money lost in a faulty machine.

Despite the fact that change machines will not be placed on campus, change is still available in the bookstore, the upstairs Lankford office, and information office in Ruffner.

Students To Meet Legislators In Statewide Open Forum

Four Longwood students will attend the Virginia Student-Legislator Open Forum which will convene Friday, April 23, at the John Marshall Hotel in Richmond. The purpose of the meeting is to "develop a closer and more constant rapport between the college students and the state legislators of the Commonwealth of Virginia."

The forum, patterned on a successful open forum held in Georgia, will include approximately 300 student representatives from 65 state institutions of higher learning. These representatives will discuss various topics with members of the Virginia and United States Senate, House of Delegates, and House of Representatives during the two-day conference.

Topics to be discussed include lowering the voting age in Virginia in compliance with the Supreme Court ruling, discrimination on campuses against blacks and women, drug abuse and rehabilitation, environment, higher education, reform of the state government, urban problems and welfare and health assistance.

Food and lodging for all delegates will be paid for by funds raised by the Steering Committee of the Open Forum, headed by Wayne Kay, a student from VPI.

John Pagan, Speaker of the Senate and member of the Open Forum Steering Committee, commented, "This is an opportunity for college students from every institution of higher learning in the state to speak in person with legislators about the matters that concern us all very much."

Students Push To Reform Codes

time some changes were made. Restrictions against alcohol have been lifted, those curfews extended, driving privileges liberalized and open visitation in residence halls permitted to a limited degree.

There was turmoil at the Williamsburg school last year over the open housing rules, and the issue remains the "big hassle," according to Robert Ranson, Student Association vice president.

(On Friday, the State Senate unanimously approved a resolution calling on administrators of state-supported colleges to make sure dormitory visitation rules are "in keeping with the moral tone of Virginia." A bill already approved by the House of Delegates would make it a misdemeanor to return to the scene of a campus demonstration once ordered to leave by proper authorities. The American Civil Liberties Union has formally opposed both measures.)

Dormitory sign-out regulations, Ranson said, are "flaunted in the face of the administration . . ."

He said there's a "very strong feeling that it should be up to individual students to run their own lives . . . The college shouldn't attempt to regulate morality."

Colleges In The News

State Senator Charges Sex "Out Of Hand" In Dormitories

CHARLOTTESVILLE: At a recent session of the State Senate, Senator Herbert H. Bateman, of Newport News, proposed a resolution that would tighten control over dormitory visits by members of the opposite sex. Mr. Bateman charged that sex among students at the state's colleges and universities has "gotten out of hand." He referred to dormitories as "bawdy houses" and added that the situation was worse than he could describe.

R-M Woman's College Joins In Fee Hike

LYNCHBURG: Randolph - Macon Woman's College has joined the ranks with those schools that are raising student fees for 1971-72 in order to correct rising expenses. Fees for resident students will increase $175 over the previous year. Although this is a 5% increase, it hardly keeps pace with the cost of living increase of the last 12 months.

Faculty Committee Defeats Representation

BLACKSBURG: A resolution which would have given students at VPI representation on the University Council, the policy making body, was defeated by the Faculty Senate at a recent meeting.

The reasons for the defeat of the resolution were that the membership of the committee would be too large and that the power of the faculty would be diluted. The Faculty Senate did leave open the possibility of support for increased student representation on University commissions and committees and voted to allow students to make proposals before the University Council.

Peace Conference Prepares For April 24 Offensive

By LISE WORTHINGTON

A meeting of the Student Mobilization Committee to end the war in Vietnam was held at Catholic University last weekend. With more than 1,000 participants, the Peace Conference reflected the progress being made by the SMC in building its spring offensive against the war.

The major idea that was stressed both in workshops and in mass meetings that the overwhelming majority of the American people are fed up with Nixon's war in Southeast Asia. Because people have reached the saturation level, the coalition group tried to emphasize the fact that students and others must organize the type of antiwar demonstrations that will draw into action the majority of Americans who have never before participated in the antiwar movement, and to remobilize those hundreds of thousands of activists who have been confused and disoriented by Nixon's rhetoric about 'winding down the war.'

Perhaps one of the most important things that was voted on at this Peace Rally were the dates for the spring antiwar activities. It was voted that the first major activities will begin April 1-4. On these dates there will be nationwide and local activities such as hunger marches to dramatize hunger for housing, fasts, and teach-ins. On April 24, the mass walk on Washington is scheduled demanding immediate withdrawal of all U.S. military air, land and sea forces from Vietnam.

When the dates had been settled, other representative speakers were given opportunities to speak. Each speaker could talk for five minutes, then could, if needed, ask for an extension for three minutes. He was granted the three minutes' extension by a majority vote.

One of the more popular topics was 'don't reform the draft.' What was stressed was that the groups were not for mere revision of the draft, nor were they for mere reform. What they advocated was total abolition of the draft and the selective system that administers it.

Representatives of other groups were present to give their views and to inform the crowd that had gathered in the gymnasium of Catholic University. There were several speeches from individuals representing the Gay Liberation Movement.

What was emphasized was that the Gay Liberation movement is by no means merely a part of the "cultural revolution, instead it is the century's overdue rebellion against male oppression and against some of the most dehumanizing superstitions ever known." In close association with the women's liberation movement the gay front represents a direct challenge to one of the major institutions in our society; the nuclear family which buttressed the capitalist system. It was pointed out that the gay liberation is a struggle against the fear of homosexuality which limits and destroys all human relationships in our society, including the heterosexual.

Other topics discussed included a proposal for a 30 hour week at 40 hours pay, an end to political repression, the dangers of inflation and repression, the importance and growth of the Third War Party, and proposals for a general strike by the labor movement.

It was hoped by the coordinators of this rally to raise funds and gather support for the next major rally to be held in Washington on April 24. When a student was asked her opinion on the overall impact of this conference, his response was: "Hell, I don't know. I just go where the action is."

News From Wesley Foundation

"Protect Your Environment"

Dr. Elizabeth Jackson, Professor of Natural Sciences at Longwood, will speak at the Wesley Foundation on February 24. Her topic will be "Protect Your Environment," the theme of last year's "Earth Day," which emphasized the environmental crisis facing our country. Dr. Jackson will point out some of the severe deteriorations of our environment that have occurred and are still occurring, and what the private citizen can and should do to prevent or stop these deteriorations in order to preserve our environment for the future. The program begins at 6:45 and everyone is invited to attend.

"Coffee House At Wesley Foundation"

The Wesley Foundation will feature Mose Henry in a coffee house to be held on Friday, February 26, beginning at 7:30 p.m. Formerly the leader, public relations director, and lead vocalist for the folk music group, The Highwaymen, Mose has traveled throughout the country using music, drama, and experimental media worship to help show young people the place of Christ in modern society. He has served as director, musical director, composer, arranger and producer of many commercials for radio and TV. He also created the Family Album for Columbia Records and has worked in the field of motion pictures. His most recent venture is a contract to write an off-Broadway play.

Also appearing in the program will be several Longwood students including freshmen Marie Wiemer, Dinki Burner, Wanda Schuller, and Carol Knight.

The coffee house is designed to provide an informal evening of fun and entertainment in which all Longwood and Hampden-Sydney students are invited to share. Admission is free, and refreshments will be sold.

"Carpenters" Will Not Perform At Ring Dance Concert

By CHRISTINE SHARPE

What happened to "The Carpenters"? After having heard that "The Carpenters" were playing for the Ring Dance concert, this question is on the lips of many Longwood students.

In the February 10 edition of THE ROTUNDA it is stated that "The Carpenters" would appear on April 23. Why did the Junior Class allow one of its members to state that they would appear when no contract had been signed?

The juniors were trying to work a block booking arrangement for "The Carpenters" with several nearby schools. Their agent never gave the class an answer because he was working on a booking in Las Vegas for the group. Although the class did not have "The Carpenters" booked, a member of the Junior Class released the news that they would come.

Now after losing "The Carpenters" the Friends of Distinction or Brooklyn Bridge will play for the concert.

There is no such thing as A TENDER TRAP

Consider the raccoon — one of the earth's friendliest most lovable creatures. He is part of the woodland lore and wonder of nature. Favorite children's stories endow him with almost human qualities along with the otter, the fox, the beaver, the muskrat and other forest dwellers.

Trapping animals like the raccoon is neither a friendly nor lovable occupation. Forty million leg-hold traps are set out continuously in the United States and Canada alone. The cruel, jagged-toothed traps can crunch an animal's leg, leaving him to bleed, suffer and starve for days before the trapper comes to deal the final death blow. The animals are so agonized that they often chew off their own feet.

It takes forty raccoons to make one coat for a human. Yet hundreds of defenseless animals may die before those forty pelts are collected. The traps snap at anything — turtles, eagles, groundhogs, porcupines, dogs and cats. A trap doesn't have any feeling about that and neither does a trapper.

You, too, can help in the crusade to stop the vicious killing of animals that keep our environment alive and give joy to our children. You can refuse to wear the skins of animals for prestige or pleasure. You can speak out against these ungodly trapping practices in the name of the animals that still survive. And you can make a TAX DEDUCTIBLE CONTRIBUTION to Friends of Animals which is doing something constructive about this wanton destruction. DO IT NOW and feel better immediately — in the knowledge that you are helping to preserve our natural wildlife heritage — for your children and their children.

News Briefs

Communist Offensive Powerful In Laos

Saigon-South Vietnamese military forces continued their push into Laos in order to try and destroy Communist strongholds along the Ho Chi Minh Trail. By midweek however, pressure from the North Vietnamese army was beginning to turn back the South Vietnamese and heavy fighting had erupted in Laos and Cambodia. Hill 31, a base on the northern perimeter of the fighting, was overrun Friday by the North Vietnamese and the South Vietnamese were forced to retreat in several areas. The fighting is considered the heaviest since the Tet offensive of 1968 and losses are high on both sides. By Saturday afternoon, the South Vietnamese had regained control of Hill 31, but were still facing heavy fighting at many points.

GI's May Enter Laos

WASHINGTON—A Nixon administration spokesman announced Friday that U. S. combat troops may be sent into Laos. The purpose of these troops would be to protect the search and rescue teams trying to save stranded American airmen. Although these troops would be temporarily stationed in Laos and would engage in hostilities, neither the Pentagon nor the White House feels that such action is in violation of the legislative restrictions on the use of ground troops and advisors.

Students Rioting In Columbia

CALI, COLUMBIA—Colombia was declared in a state of seige by its president, Misael Borrero, and troops were sent onto the nation's university campuses when fifteen people were killed in rioting at the University of del Valle. Students had occupied university buildings and disrupted campus activities for several days in an attempt to oust university president, Alfonso Ocampo Laondono. The first daytime curfew in many years has been imposed.

Israel May Be Willing To Discuss Pact

UNITED NATIONS—Israel is believed to have informed U. N. intermediary, Dr. Gunnar V. Jarling, that she is now willing to discuss in detail territorial and other claims with the United Arab Republic in order to establish an agreement. No specific references were made to the boundaries Israel would be willing to accept or how far she would withdraw her troops. The move was made in response to an Egyptian declaration of two weeks ago laying down preliminary conditions of a peace pact.

Foundation Terminates Tuition Grants

By ETHEL REITER

The Longwood Foundation, Incorporated, following a request made by the Board of Visitors, has terminated its program of tuition grants for children of faculty and staff members to attend private institutions. The decision was reached at the last Board of Directors meeting of February 4 and 5.

H. E. W. Changes

The decision came after a detailed consideration of the numerous ramifications involved. The Board began consideration of the tuition grant program after the U. S. Department of Health, Education, and Welfare (HEW) charged Longwood with violation of the Civil Rights Act. The HEW group, headed by Dr. Eloise Severinson, inferred that the Foundation was not actually a private organization since the college president acted as director and the college vice president as secretary and treasurer. The group also questioned whether or not the college was in violation of the Civil Rights Act by "indirectly allowing the Longwood College Foundation to provide money for the children of its white professors to attend Prince Edward Academy."

Background of Foundation.

The foundation, which has no official connection with the college, was started by Dr. Francis G. Lankford in 1959, the same year that the local public schools were closed. The Foundation was created mainly to support the college and to help in attracting the best faculty possible. In order to achieve this goal, the foundation gave scholarships in the name of faculty children, enabling them to attend the various private institutions in the area.

Administration's Opinions.

President Willett believes that the awarding of tuition grants was perfectly legal. Defending the Foundation he said, "Any statement that says the program was illegal was false." However, he feels that it was in the best interest of the College that the program be dropped. As for the after effects of the decision Dr. Willett appears to be optimistic: "It won't bother us; faculty recruiting has been very successful."

Colonel Carr said that the funds were cut off because of the annual report of HEW. The possible violation of the Civil Rights Act put Longwood's federal funds of $100,000 in jeopardy; "thus, the program had to stop." He expressed mixed emotions about the decision, "One is concerned with the quality of education that their children receive, and they won't get it at the county high school," Col. Carr echoed the sentiments of President Willett, "We still don't feel that the foundation was wrong to use the money to finance tuitions."

New Programs For Foundation.

Last year $16,000 went out to faculty members in the form of scholarship grants. A question now raised is what will be done with the additional funds in the Foundation? Mr. Bristol, also a member of the Board of Directors, acts in the area of fund raising and program planning. First of all, scholarship funds may increase enabling the College to have money on hand for emergency cases. Another plan is to provide instructional grants to faculty members for the improvement of teaching methods. The Foundation is also going to try to give a grant to renovate and equip the faculty lounge. Mr. Bristol would like to see an endowment fund so that Longwood would have a visiting scholar on campus for a year. He emphasized the fact that none of this money is used for operating expenses, rather it is for quality programs.

Reactions of Board Members.

The Board of Directors consists of 15 members, and a few of these members were willing to voice personal opinions concerning the termination of the tuition grants program. Dr. Lockwood said that he had mixed feelings because of the many pros and cons of the issue. He stated that there is a very complex moral question involved; however, there is the legal question that dominates.

J. Elmore Eubank, Jr., of Hampton, Virginia, was "very sorry that this had to come about." He signed the decision reluctantly but realizes the situation that caused the board's action. The program was perfectly legal despite the accusations of discrimination made by HEW. Lester A. Andrews of Farmville, believes. He also feels that it will not affect the educational situation in Prince Edward County: "It will go on like it has in the past." Hunter G. Sledd of Richmond, preferred to remain silent.

Some Faculty Responses

Faculty reactions varied from complete silence to enthusiastic acceptance. Dr. David Breil said, "I don't think that I should say anything right now. I will have to wait and see what happens in the future." Mr. Rubley feels that the President did what he thought was right. "It's a rather complex situation. One has to realize why the Foundation was started. There was a necessity when the action took place. The administration had to do something when the situation existed." However, he sees the new decision as a possible relief to the school situation in Prince Edward County. "In a way I'm glad to see it, but I'm also a little apprehensive." Dr. DeWitt had always opposed the tuition grants on a philosophical level. He said, "I have no beef with private schools, but a faculty member should also receive money to finance his child's education in a public school. It just seems ironic that an institution training girls to teach in public school systems should support a private institution."

Boards Considering Extension Of Curfew And Open House

By VICKI BOWLING

Extended curfew on weeknights and extension of open house hours are two of the proposed changes currently being considered by Legislative and Residence Boards and Dr. Willett.

The proposed curfew change is extending weeknight curfew to 12:30. It has been passed by both boards. Dr. Willett, now studying the proposal, said that the Board of Visitors may want to consider it when it convenes in May.

Frankie Brown, president of Legislative Board, gave several reasons why a curfew change is desired. It would be "primarily a social change." Students could go to more places, even out-of-town. They would study later all over the campus. The possibility of keeping Lankford and the library open later will be looked into. If passed, the curfew would be in keeping with that of Sunday night and there would not be so much variation in curfews.

All three boards have considered extending open house hours. Mary Tabb Johnston, president of Residence Board, said that they would like to extend it to possibly Saturday afternoons.

Because of the opposition by the General Assembly to open dormitories at state-supported schools, no action can be taken on this. There is currently a proposed resolution in the Va. General Assembly by Senator Herbert Bateman of Newport News, that moves to restrict the dorm policies of all Virginia state supported schools so that they will be more in line with the moral standards of the citizens of the State of Virginia.

If this resolution were passed it would advise state supported colleges that the General Assembly advocates parietal hours which would not encourage "increasing sexual promiscuity" among students of those schools. Dr. Willett explained that state schools must weigh the resolutions of the General Assembly carefully. On the extension, he stated, "It will remain as is until we have something definite from them."

Beginning in March, there will be open meetings in the dorms held by a representative from each of the three boards and the dorm presidents. Mary Tabb Johnston said that they hope to have these meetings once a month.

The Lion And The Mouse

In the past Rotunda reporters have come under severe criticism for not getting all the facts before they print a story. Certainly every reporter should report fairly both sides of the situation, but what many individuals don't realize is that many of Longwood's faculty, administration, and students refuse to talk to Rotunda reporters. It has come to my attention that several faculty members have been very uncooperative when Rotunda reporters have approached them. There is the case where a member of the administration refers a reporter to a member of the faculty, and the faculty member continually promises the reporter material, and then conveniently goes out of town, leaving the reporter without a story for a third week in a row. Or, there is the case where reporters are intimidated, . . . intimidated to such an extent that they are afraid to turn in stories for fear that the instructor will cut their grade, or make life unpleasant for them. There are also those individuals at Longwood who hold back information when the reporter comes around. But, the odd thing about this situation is that they had been very vocal in front of an audience on the very same topic in the snack bar, or in the rec., but let the Rotunda reporter stick her head around the corner and everyone is suddenly very silent. Another tactic is to quickly get around to other members of the administration and brief them so when the Rotunda reporter comes around the individual involved is not able to answer, or conveniently doesn't know, or glosses the situation over, making it sound just fine. Reporters cannot and will not get news in this kind of atmosphere. If others cannot show us the courtesy of trying to be at least a little helpful in getting the news then what kind of an effort should I ask my staff to make None!

Infirmiry

Dear Editor,

Suggestions have been made for various changes in many areas, but I would like to make a plea for a qualified and competent doctor of general medicine for Longwood College.

As a senior, I have made the usual visits to the Infirmiry over the years, for colds, viruses, etc., but these are basically easy to diagnose. How does a doctor, whose major field is anesthesiology, diagnose appendicitis . . . a ruptured one at that? Exactly - he doesn't! I am not undermining Dr. Wells' ability in his major field, but I am concerned about his ability in other areas.

I have been told that the salary allotted for the Infirmiry doctor is low and this is the major drawback for tempting a good general practitioner. I cannot understand why Longwood could not find some means with the help of state funds to increase the salary.

I know that I am not the only girl who has been misdiagnosed, but as I leave the hospital for the third time since November, I beg for something to be done before a real tragedy occurs.

Sincerely,
Kim Meyer

Questions To The Board

Dear Editor,

Being fully aware that Longwood's Judicial System is not a civil court, we are also aware that a person is entitled to certain rights in any disciplinary action. Therefore, we are direct-int the following questions to the members of Judicial Board:

1. Can conjecture (guesswork, inferring, or predicting from incomplete evidence) serve as adequate evidence in finding someone guilty?

2. Why cannot the accused be confronted by his accuser and/or the evidence being used against him, thus giving him the opportunity to challenge the validity of said accusations?

3. Why is it not a standard procedure that the accused has 24 hours between the time of accusation and the time of trial thus allowing him time to prepare a defense?

4. Is not prolonged and intense questioning a form of coercion?

5. Is the austere atmosphere created by the wearing of black robes necessary in a student court?

6. Is the standard of secrecy upheld by the members of the Board in the same manner that they require of the students?

If the Board has not as yet considered these questions, we suggest that it do so immediately in an effort to insure that due process of law be guaranteed every student.

Sue Wilkes
Mary Berlin
Ethel Reiter

EDITOR'S NOTE: These questions should be directed to Judicial Board members tomorrow at 4:00 in the Gold Room.

A Trained Board

I am convinced that the correct judicial procedure is not taking place in many of the cases that are tried here at Longwood. For a group that has the power to expell, suspend and put students on probation, I feel that our judicial board members should have some sort of formal training. For example, in the drug case that took place last week, approximately nine members of the 11 on the board were on their first case. Frankly, knowing how serious the offense of drugs on the Longwood campus is, I wouldn't want to be judged by novices. Another point that I would like to bring out is that I wouldn't want to attend any trial in which . . . the members refused to divulge to the accused the incriminating evidence. It is because every thing that has to do with the judicial board is so secretive here at school that no one really knows their rights. It is only when a case is over that students find out what they could have done.

I strongly suggest that our judicial system be reformed, before some student is crippled because of a faulty law enforcing body.

LC Movie Audiences

To the Editor:

Longwood students owe a great deal of thanks to the Student Union, which has made available this year many excellent films. Where else could one hope to see movies such as VIRGINIA WOLFE, 2001 and DR. ZHIVAGO for only a quarter? This is a rare opportunity which many of us are eagerly seizing.

It is extremely unfortunate, however, that those of us who attend these movies for the purpose of appreciating good films, or simply for the personal enjoyment, are unable to either enjoy or appreciate them. This is due to the handful of inconsiderate students who apparently have never learned the meaning of responsible, mature behavior. These are the students who, at every tender love scene, or at the slightest suggestion of nudity, giggle nervously, snicker in embarrassment, or make crude remarks. These are the students who can be heard three rows away explaining the plot or making predictions as to the outcome of the movie, or who even shout stage directions to the actors. This sort of behavior is understandable and expected of the typical eighth-grader, but then the typical eighth-grader would not be admitted to movies rated "for mature adults." Even if they did manage to get in, their rude remarks and loud whispers would soon be interrupted by an usher telling them to either stop disturbing the audience or leave the movie house.

Longwood, unfortunately, has

Rio Lobo With John Wayne Starts Tonight

By SARAH FARRAR

A film for John Wayne fans and John Wayne fans ONLY - This is RIO LOBO. You've got to like the man and the kind of performance he delivers or you won't like the film. Wayne trots back from his TRUE GRIT triumph with a fairly well-mounted production, but one that is starved for the real tension it should have.

RIO LOBO is a lusty story of the Civil War and after. It's the day when the Carpetbaggers were trying to take Texas away from the filibuster who took it away from Mexico in the first place! Wayne is teamed with Jorge Rivero (romantic star of Latin America) and Jennifer O'Neal (top model cum actress).

I found very little in the film that was absorbing. It is a flick made and flashed on the screen... one goes in and comes out not particularly shaken by laughter, sadness or any other emotion. RIO LOBO does not involve the viewer. Unless you're a "John Wayne movie buff," the film has little to offer, except the gents will find Jennifer O'Neal is very nice to look at. In the afterglow of his Academy Award, the "Duke" Wayne seems a bit weak in this Howard Hawks production with Mr. Hawks functioning as producer-director.

RIO LOBO is nice entertainment for those who just want to watch a mildly good story and temporarily forget their pressures and problems... but it's very temporary!

Students continue to practice for upcoming play, "Look Back in Anger."

Play By 'Angry Young Englishman' John Osborne, To Open March 18

By BELINDA BRUGH

"Look Back in Anger," currently in rehearsal at Longwood, was written by an angry young Englishman, John Osborne. Mr. Osborne's play has a dominant note of fierce opposition to "middle class" values and standards. A personal clue to his play may be found in his background. His family was firmly rooted in both the middle and working class patterns. His education was split down the middle by the class barriers still prevalent when his play was first produced in 1956. John Osborne left school at sixteen, never to attend a university. He worked on several trade journals before entering the field of theatre. Mr. Osborne's entrance into theatre was not, however, as an author, but as a tutor for a group of child actors touring the English provinces. His first job was followed by positions as stage manager and actor. After struggling along as an actor with only the usual hard earned pittance, he wrote "Look Back in Anger" and persuaded the English Stage Company to produce it. In 1956, "Look Back in Anger" premiered at the Royal Court Theatre in London with spectacular results.

"Look Back in Anger" which will be produced in Jarman Auditorium March 18-20, is the story of two young women and one young man who are attracted to the personality of Jimmy Porter. Jimmy, like John Osborne, is an angry young man. A very unpleasant egotist who can offer no solution to his problems, Jimmy's rebellion is blind and irrational. He is a sadist, a heel, an introverted snob, and a blackguard in general.

"Tartuffe" To Begin Auditions On March 4

By BELINDA BRUGH

Auditions for "Tartuffe" by Moliere will be held on Wednesday and Thursday March 4-5 in the Jarman studio theater from 4:00-5:00 and 7:00-9:00 p.m. Faculty and students are invited to try out for all parts. Thirteen parts will be cast; six women and seven men. Scripts are available at the Lancaster Library circulation desk and the department of speech and drama. If anyone is interested in the technical areas of production, now is the time to sign up.

John Osborne has this to say about Jimmy: He is a disconcerting mixture of sincerity and cheerful malice, of tenderness and freeboating cruelty; restless, full of pride, a combination that alienates the sensitive and the insensitive alike.

Jimmy, his wife Alison, who has been beaten into a state verging on insensitivity, and his loyalist friend, Cliff Lewis, live in constant tension in a flat somewhere in the midlands of England. They constitute a small cell of opposition to everything that is normal.

After describing the relationship of Jimmy, Alison, and Cliff, Helena is introduced midway through the second act. Helena is an actress friend of Alison's who particularly hates Jimmy. Jimmy, in return, fiercely hates Helena. However, Helena persuades Alison to leave Jimmy and go home to her parents. Thereafter, Helena promptly becomes Jimmy's mistress and replaces Alison in Jimmy's bed and at the ironing board. Alison's return later in the third act provides a dismal concluding resolution.

Silent Chi

To the Editor:

Well, Chi finally walked for Wheeler. After believing all of these months that the strain of work had killed them off, Chi decided to revive itself. So at 3:00 Saturday morning, those once familiar figures paraded in front of Wheeler.

The question of why Chi walked on Saturday morning is interesting, but who they walked for is more intriguing. For months, the freshmen living in Wheeler have felt left out of one of Longwood's oldest and proudest traditions. Many of them have waited in anticipation for the night when they were promised that Chi would appear. Well, it finally happened. It happened on a night when nearly everyone was gone and without any signal or warning as to what was happening. Consequently, Chi's walk was witnessed by only eight people, two of whom were sophomores, and most of them did not see much of the walk.

Chi, give these girls an even break! When I lived in North last year, there was always plenty of warning about a Chi walk. We were even roused out of our beds by the campus police. I've heard this cannot be done because there are upperclassmen in Wheeler, but this does not sound very plausible. I am sure if Chi puts its nine heads together, it can come up with a solution. Your reason for walking may have been very important, Chi, but couldn't it have waited until a night when more girls could have seen you? Or are you suddenly afraid of being closely inspected by the Longwood students?

Alcohol Was Legalized — Why Not Marijuana?

By LYNDA VAN HORN
Marijuana!

To smoke or not to smoke. This is the crux of a great debate which now sweeps over our country.

It is factual that there are millions of testified users throughout the country. These people are in open defiance of the law and are faced with the prospect of being jailed and paying heavy fines. Still, the amount of marijuana used in the United States increases every day.

In a survey made before 1968, approximately twenty per cent of college students questioned had had some experiences with marijuana. Now, three years later that percentage has risen to an even greater amount. In a nationwide survey almost four per cent answered affirmatively to the question, "Have you ever used marijuana." That would mean that more than eight million people in this country alone have tried it.

With so many people experiencing the effects of marijuana, and with so much money going out of this country for sales of marijuana — should marijuana become legalized?

One Longwood girl answered "yes" to this question. She felt that marijuana should be studied and if no stronger adverse effects are found than now known, it should be legalized.

Known Facts

What are the known facts about marijuana? The long term physical effects of taking marijuana are not yet known because no one had done this necessary long term research. There are obvious physical effects that can be found, however. Rapid heartbeat, lowering of the body temperature and often reddening of the eyes are noticeable physical effects. The drug — if it can be called a drug — also stimulates the appetite, changes the blood sugar levels and dehydrates the body.

Usually, when smoked, the drug effects can be felt quickly—about fifteen minutes after inhaling the cigarette smoke. The effects can last anywhere from two to four hours depending on the smoker and the potency of the cigarette.

Since it affects the individual's self-control, the effects of marijuana vary so widely that it can be either a stimulant or a depressant. The psychological effects include distortion of hearing, vision, and loss of time.

Arguments Against Legalization

Those against the legalization of marijuana claim that the effects can be harmful to the users. They say that any drug that loosens self-control may contribute to criminal behavior. They admit that persons under the influence of marijuana tend to be passive, but some crimes have been committed by persons while they were "high."

Longtime heavy use? The dangers seem to be definite. The foreign experience suggests peril for a large percentage of users. The analogy with alcohol, suggests that self-destruction would be frequent. There is little doubt that the chances of escaping some form of damage are poor.

Longtime moderate use? There is no real answer as to the effects of longtime moderate use. Those against legalization say that the normal person who adopts a longterm practice of moderate marijuana use is "deliberately facing unknown dangers."

Also, anxiety reactions and panic states have been noted. Accidents have occurred due to impaired judgment and their distortions. Some scientists claim that the inexperienced user may become excessively suspicious of people and may take actions leading to injury. A "toxic psychosis" consisting of mental confusion, loss of contact with reality, and memory disturbances have been reported.

Although, there may be very serious effects of smoking marijuana, most of the Longwood students who answered negatively to the question, "Do you think marijuana should be legalized" did not give these as explanations of their answers. Many were weary of the unknown effects of long range use, but most objected to a need to escape reality. As one girl says, "What bothers me is that people use marijuana for an escape. If they can't face up to reality then what kind of shape are they in?" Another girl said that escape was sometimes necessary to physical and mental well-being but that she didn't think a person needed marijuana or other drugs to escape.

Change The Laws?

Should the laws be changed? Of, should law enforcement be stepped up? Should even greater numbers of otherwise respectable individuals, especially young people, be caught in police raids with probable upset to their future lives?

Opponents of this course claim that prohibition never has and never will work. They often point to the unsuccessful prohibition of alcohol. More than half a century of enforcement of the narcotics laws has not succeeded in halting the traffic.

Advocates point out that there can be no physical addiction to marijuana. This means that the body does not become dependent upon continued use of the drug. Neither does the body, probably, develop a tolerance to the drug which makes necessary larger doses to get similar effects. They argue that a reefer gives one a lift and even — early in the habit, at least — improves the performance of physical and mental work. Colors seem brighter, and hearing seems keener.

There is nothing in marijuana itself that produces a need to use other drugs. Most marijuana smokers do not progress to stronger substances.

Withdrawal from marijuana does not produce physical sickness as does withdrawal from heroin. Sudden withdrawal may cause restlessness or anxiety in a few persons who are heavy marijuana smokers, just as withdrawal of regular cigarettes may cause anxiety to the heavy smoker. True withdrawal symptoms as seen in the heroin addict do not occur.

Also, marijuana has no aphrodisiac quality. It was thought in the past that both promiscuity and impotence could be caused or triggered by the smoking of marijuana, but there is no scientific basis for either claim.

Longwood Students Say

Some reasons given by Longwood girls to legalize marijuana are that marijuana cannot be proven harmful and that it gives smokers a type of euphoric "high." One girl claims that the marijuana smoking date is a lot safer than the one drinking alcohol. She says, "I've never seen a person on 'grass' become violent." Another girl states bluntly, "It's no worse than 'booze' so why not?" Still, there are others who look at the economic standpoint. Legalizing marijuana would cut down on the importation and may cause a heavy new sales business. "Legalizing it," she says, "is a good idea. It would make it a lot cheaper!"

Whether marijuana will be legalized or not is a problem which legislatures must decide. Advocates of either position should write their representatives with their views. This is a question which must soon be answered as marijuana use increases every day.

Longwood Fencers Victorious Top Team In Recent Tri-Meet

Longwood's Fencing Team again came out victorious when they competed against Madison and Lynchburg in a Tri-Meet held at Madison College on February 27. Final score in both games was 5-4.

Longwood's first team competed in the Tri-Meet and fenced Madison first. Joanne Canada led the team with a perfect score of three wins out of three attempts, followed by Temple Harvey, winning 2 out of 3 bouts. The winning spark failed to hit Mary Baldwin, as she played her worst game in her fencing career and failed to pick up any wins against Madison College.

Longwood then competed against Lynchburg College, whom they had defeated earlier in the season. After some pep talks, Mary Baldwin finally came alive with a strong determination and won 2 out of her 3 bouts against Lynchburg. Temple Harvey also won 2 out of 3 and Joanne Canada came through with one victory out of three attempts.

LC's second team lost to Madison's second team with a score 7-2. Faye Ingram was the only fencer for Longwood to defeat the Madison fencers and ended up with two wins and a loss. Ellen Cahill and Janice Russell failed to score any victories.

Longwood is now preparing for the Intercollegiant Tournament to be held here March 12-13 in Her Gym.

LC Defeats Hollins Harvey And Canada Return Undefeated

The Longwood Fencing Team kept in the winning column as they defeated Hollins College 15-10 in a recent meet at Hollins.

Longwood's team left Farmville with a deep desire to bring back a win, and with this thought in mind, they faced their opponents with aggressiveness and much skill.

Temple Harvey and Joanne Canada led the LC team with a perfect score of 5-0 in their attempts. Close behind was Mary Baldwin, winning 4 out of her 5 bouts. Faye Ingram and Janice Russel, although not faring as well as their other teammates, showed true spirit and gave Hollins a tough fight. Faye brought in the final victory to end the match with Longwood leading 15-10 over Hollins.

Longwood's record now stands at three wins and one loss.

I Solisti Veneti, a string ensemble will perform in Jarman Sunday at 7:30 p.m.

Internationally Praised Orchestra To Visit LC

By CHRISTINE SHARPE

I Solisti Veneti, a string ensemble orchestra of international reputation, will perform under the direction of Claudio Scimone in Jarman Hall Sunday, March 7, at 7:30 p.m.

The 12 performers and their conductor have been acclaimed by the London Times as an "ensemble with the brilliance of soloist" and defined them as one of the best foreign teams. "Uncanny tonal texture, smooth, lustrous, other-worldly" were some laudatory phrases describing their performance by the Philadelphia Enquirer.

The orchestra will begin their concert with Mozart's serenade, Eine Kleine Nachtmusik, a charming and lighthearted piece of entertainment music for string ensemble. The serenade by Dvorak, String Serenade, Opus 22, displays the simplicity, sincerity, and beauty of his music. The national characteristics of his works make them speak for his people through color, rhythm, and closeness to the Czech soil. One of Tchaikovsky's most popular compositions, the Serenade for Strings, is the finale for a marvelous evening of entertainment.

I Solisti Veneti, founded in Padua, Italy in 1959, has given concerts in 50 countries. They have quickly attained an international reputation with concerts in major cities of the United States and Japan. They have participated in such major festivals as Salzburg, Barcelona, and Maggio Fiorentino.

For two consecutive years the ensemble has received the Paris "Grand Pris du Disque," in London it was awarded the "Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Memorial Medal" and has received the Diapason d'Oro in 1956.

I Solisti Veneti is the only European Chamber orchestra to perform music of all times. The group's intellectual liveliness has inspired many contemporary composers to dedicate new works to them.

The group will be presented to Longwood by the Artists Series.

Dr. A.L. Rowse Draws L.C. Girls Twice To U. Va.

By LYNNE PIERCE

Mr. Couture, Mr. Miller and six of Mr. Couture's students, traveled to the University of Virginia Monday, February 22, to hear Dr. Alfred Lesley Rowse, a renowned historian in the field of Tudor England, speak on research materials for the Tudor period and where to find them. Dr. Rowse is also known as a pioneer in the field of writing county history, which he covered in his book, TUDOR CORNWALL. Dr. Rowse was invited by Mr. Martin J. Havran, a former student of his, to speak to his graduate class in Tudor-Stuart Britain, which Mr. Couture is attending. After the lecture was completed, Mr. Couture's students were introduced to Dr. Rowse and spoke with him for several minutes. Dr. Rowse remarked that he enjoyed having the Longwood students present because they laughed at his jokes.

The following evening three Longwood students, Lise Worthington, Lynne Pierce and Sheila Martin, returned to U. Va. to hear Dr. Rowse's formal talk which was delivered in the McGregor Room of Alderman Library on his new book, THE ELIZABETHAN RENAISSANCE. Dr. Rowse's speech concentrated on the effect of the Renaissance on the social life and literature of England. He stressed the traditional view of the Renaissance even though it is considered conservative. England did not enter the Renaissance until the last part of the sixteenth century and was greatly influenced by the ideals being expressed in Italy. It was very clear however, that Dr. Rowse believes Elizabeth to have been the center and moving force behind the English Renaissance.

Englishmen toward three Indian wogs, or immigrants. Dr. Theroux feels that the book will appeal especially to college students. Though THREE WOGS is not like the currently popular LOVE STORY, Dr. Theroux thinks that it will be well received.

Dr. Theroux left Longwood last semester to go to England to complete the book which he started in the spring of 1970. He stayed, primarily in London, for about five months and "misses it already." The amiableness of the English people impressed him, and making friends was no problem. The weather, also suited Dr. Theroux's moods. He liked the frequent changes from sunshine to rain. "Can you imagine Florida," he asks, "with that sun always bearing down on you?"

THREE WOGS will be published in the United States and in England this July. It is of average length and will cost about three or four dollars.

DR. THEROUX

By JULIA STEPHENSON

Dr. Alexander Theroux, Associate Professor of English at Longwood, has just completed his first novel which he calls THREE WOGS. The novel concerns bigotry in England. In England, Theroux explains, there is animosity toward people from India. His book is about the intolerance of

County HS Students To Attend Several Survey Classes

By MARGARET BLAIR

Local students from Prince Edward County High School will be attending classes at Longwood in connection with a program set up with Mrs. L. R. Pervall, guidance counselor at the high school. Fourteen girls will come to the college to sit in on freshman or introductory level classes for the purposes of enriching their educational lives, showing them what college work is like, and providing encouragement for those with college potential.

The idea for a program of this type was suggested at a meeting of the Human Relations Council in town. Mr. Ben Sandidge, German professor in our Foreign Language Department, has been instrumental in setting up the program. He explained that boys from the high school had visited classes at Hampden-Sydney College, and that in a conversation with Mr. Perry, Superintendent of Schools, he found it was hoped a similar opportunity could be provided for girls. The original idea was to allow the visiting students to attend classes on a regular basis, but it had to be limited to five visits or auditing fees would have become involved. The girls will attend the following classes each Wednesday through March, the time, number of students, class, and instructor are listed in that order:

9:00-9:50, two, Anthropology 201, Mrs. Cristo.
9:00-9:50, two, History of Civilization 112, Mr. Crowl.
10:00-10:50, four Sociology 221, Mr. Stonikinis.
10:00-10:50, two, Biology 102, Dr. Breil.
11:00-11:50, four, Survey of English Literature 212, Mr. Stuart.

Both Mr. Sandidge and Dr. H. R. Blackwell, Dean of the College, hope that the program will be continued and expanded in the future. Its purpose is to serve the area and those high school seniors who are interested in continuing their education.

Colleges In The News

Mary Baldwin College Considers New "Mini Semester"

STAUNTON — In his annual speech to the college, Dr. William W. Kelly, president of Mary Baldwin, discussed several possible innovations for the coming year in the curriculum and the way it is presented. An interesting addition which is being considered is the "mini-semester." This would consist of three weeks of concentrated study in one field. By accelerating their studies, students under this program would be aided in completing their academic requirements in three years.

H-SC Plans Radio Station

HAMPDEN-SYDNEY — H-S College is in the process of planning a radio station which will hopefully broadcast its first program in September, 1971. WHSC will probably be an FM station broadcasting music, basketball games and news at night after WFLO has signed off. The committee in charge of the planning has sent a letter of inquiry to the FCC about obtaining a commercial broadcasting license. The main problem facing the committee is a location from which to broadcast. The college has been petitioned for the use of a room in Bagby Hall, which is not being used at present. The station will have a range of a ten-mile radius in order to include Longwood and Farmville.

Hotline Installed Between Students And Faculty

RUSTON, LOUISIANA — A telephone hotline between faculty and students has been installed by Dr. F. Jay Taylor, president of Louisiana Tech, in order to increase communications at the university. Callers are invited by a recording to make suggestions and a transcript of the recorded message is presented directly to the president. Dr. Taylor answers questions and explains policy in a special hotline column in the school paper.

Badfinger In Concert

BOONE, N.C. — Badfinger, the English group which has been under the personal supervision of Beatle Paul McCartney, will appear in concert in Appalachian State University's Varsity Gymnasium on Tuesday, March 9, from 7-9 p.m. Badfinger's first hit single was "Come and Get It," which was the feature song of the movie, "The Magic Christian." Their latest hit was "No Matter What."

Midwinters At William and Mary Cancelled

WILLIAMSBURG — Chairman Tom Hege of the Student Association entertainment committee has announced that the Midwinters concert scheduled for March 6 has been cancelled because a group could not be provided which would yield a financial profit. Difficulties had arisen over signing contracts and transportation for the groups which said they could come. The committee hopes to present a second Spring finals concert as a replacement.

International Magazines Accept Works From New Faculty Member

MR. ALLEN WIER

By LYNNE WILSON

Mr. Allen Wier of Longwood's English Department has recently had two stories and a poem accepted for publication in three international magazines. February 11, the story "Cambell Oakley's Gospel Son Shines on Roy Singing Grass" appeared in the "Greensboro Review." April's edition of "The Southern Review" will have another story, "Cops and Robbers," and a poem, "1883 in the Heat" will appear in the spring issue of "South and West."

Mr. Wier is no new comer to the literary arts though previously his work has appeared only in literary magazines. He had two years of training in creative writing at LSU, where he was privileged to work under David Madden, a man well known and much respected in literary circles today. Mr. Wier was Madden's graduate assistant during those two years, and he found both a friend and a teacher in the distinguished writer. Placed in charge of weekly meetings at LSU of poets and writers, Mr. Wier was able to meet many other young writers as well as some of the better known artists.

For his thesis, Mr. Wier wrote a novel, STOPPING PLACE. He is still making revisions on that work, but has no future plans for submitting it for publication. He is, however, currently writing another story, and he's thinking about doing a second novel. A professor of creative writing, short story, American literature, and freshman English, Mr. Wier has very definite ideas on education. He agrees with Madden's philosophy that when one walks into a classroom, there is death all around, and it is up to the teacher and the students to bring life into the room. He would like to see students take a more active part in their own education and take advantage of those opportunities.

Coed Dorms In Danger At University Of Virginia

CHARLOTTESVILLE — A plan to terminate the use of the Alderman Road Dormitories at U. Va. as coed dorms has been challenged by a petition from the women who have applied for housing next year. The petition states that nothing should be done to endanger the progress the university has made in establishing realistic male-female relations. The women feel U. Va. will be taking a step backward and retarding the opportunities of students to mature through daily associations with the opposite sex. Difficulties concerning security were given as the prime reason for moving the women out, but the coeds feel the risk is no greater than with separate housing.

In defining his philosophy of education, Mr. Wier quotes Fitzgerald when he insists that "the test of a first rate intelligence is the ability to hold two opposing ideas in the mind at the same time and still retain the ability to function."

Mr. Wier finds life in Farmville a change from the cities he's grown used to, but he and his wife enjoy the small town atmosphere. Mrs. Wier, a transfer to Longwood from LSU and currently student teaching at Prince Edward County High, also writes poetry.

Dr. Lewis DeVorse's Speech Found Boring By Faculty Member

By JULIA STEPHENSON

Dr. Lewis DeVorse, Chairman of the Geography Department at the University of Georgia, presented a lecture entitled "A Land Divided: The South on the Eve of the Revolutionary War," for the Institute of Southern Culture, Monday afternoon at Longwood College.

DeVorse spoke of the strife over land between Indians of the southeast and early settlers. This friction, he said, led to the Proclamation of 1763 which fixed a boundary line along the Appalachian watershed separating the lands of the Indians and settlers. The 1 1/2 hour lecture included slides of old maps, Indian scenes, and portraits which illustrated DeVorse's points.

Later, a Longwood history professor commented on the lecture. "It was boring," she said. "He may have presented new material to the geography people, but anyone who knows anything at all about history didn't learn anything new." This professor seemed to think DeVorse had a quantity of valuable material but didn't know how to handle it.

First Coed Pledges SAE Fraternity At Randolph-Macon

By LYNNE PIERCE

Becky Severin, one of four female students at Randolph-Macon College in Ashland, has become the first coed to pledge Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity. Pledging for SAE requires only that the student have a 2.0 average and an interest in the fraternity. Becky already knew many of the brothers and Dudley Sydnor, past president of the chapter, said that this was actually a case of the fraternity rushing her. National rules forbid coeds from becoming brothers, but loopholes in the national laws do allow females to pledge. The chapter is planning to set up a "little sisters' club" which would be an organization coeds could join and, in June, the R-M chapter plans to lead the fight in the state convention to loosen restrictions and allow coeds to become full brothers.

Becky describes her experience as being very pleasant and exciting and one which has made her many new friends and provided an opportunity for joining in campus activities since there are no sororities. She remarked that much of her time is being spent fulfilling her pledge duties, which include playing football and baking cookies for her fraternity brothers. For those who might find this a harrowing experience, Becky adds that her brothers always "treat me just like a lady."

Lankford Student Union To Rent Refrigerators

The Lankford Student Union, under the direction of Mr. Tim Brown, is planning to buy small portable refrigerators and rent them to the students for use in their rooms.

At the present time, the Student Union is attempting to borrow funds from the school in order to buy the refrigerators. If the loan is approved, it is hoped that the Student Union will be able to start renting the refrigerators after spring break, if not by then, at least in time for the beginning of summer school. The rental cost for each unit for a school year will be $32 or $4 a month. Rental fees would increase during the summer with prices being $5 a summer school session.

After the money borrowed from the school to buy the units has been paid back, the Student Union hopes to use the money received from rental fees to help the classes to sponsor different events such as the Junior Ring Dance and to provide the students with free concerts during the school year. A percentage of the money obtained will also be set aside for maintenance of the units. If any refrigerator does not function properly the Student Union guarantees to replace it.

When renting the refrigerators the students must agree to two stipulations:

1. The refrigerators must be transported to the dorm rooms by the students from Lankford. No installation service is available. (It is felt that this should not cause any difficulties since the units can easily be carried by two people.)
2. Rental fees are payable in advance first semester. Second semester a note will be sent to each student renting a unit to remind them of their fee.

At the present time, approximately 900 people have expressed interest in renting a refrigerator.

William And Mary's Editor Charged In Obscenity Case

By SHEILAH MARTIN

The "Flat Hat," the student newspaper of the College of William and Mary, has been accused by the Publications Committee of printing "certain obscenities." The complaints stem chiefly from the February 12 issue concerning the Student Association Senate meeting of the night before. The alleged obscenities were printed in both the headline and the body of the article. The story directly quoted an open meeting and an official resolution presented to the Student Association in reference to recent drug arrests at one of the dorms.

The Publications held a hearing to decide "as to whether the phraseologies involved meet the substance of the complaints." It is within the committee's power to recommend that the Board of Student Affairs take disciplinary actions which could include the dismissal of Editor-in-Chief Tom McDonald.

In an interview, McDonald disclosed that his defense would consist of two major parts: First, the words could not be considered obscene by legal definition, and if the Committee tried to push their own definition, it would be no more valid than his own. Secondly, he said any attempt to discharge him would be limiting the freedom of the press. "The decision to use the language was not a capricious one," McDonald said. "It was made in good faith, working such things as accuracy and community standards of faith. In our opinion, directly quoting the official AS resolution and (SA President) Wm Le... reaction were essential to accurate and complete reporting of the story," McDonald concluded by stating, "If the use of this language did offend anyone, then I apologize. It was not meant to offend; it was meant to inform."

There are other ramifications besides the possible dismissal of McDonald, however. Several members of the staff, including both the business manager and the advertising manager, have resigned.

These resignations, however, were not a direct result of the obscenity charges, they were the final motivating force. The "Flat Hat" has also lost advertising accounts because of the alleged obscenity used.

The results of the hearing have not, as yet, been released, but McDonald expressed confidence of a successful case.

When a William and Mary student was asked about the general opinion of the student body, she remarked, "The majority of the students think that the whole thing is stupid. During the last few years, the newspaper has received increasing freedom, so we have learned to take the article for what it said, and not how it was said."

Senator Herbert Bateman States

'Temptation' Threat To Student Morality

Bateman

Longwood's administrators currently have their hands tied because of the proposed resolution in the Virginia General Assembly by Senator Herbert Bateman of Newport News that moves to restrict the dorm policies of all Virginia state supported schools so that they will be more in line with the moral standards of the citizens of Virginia. If this resolution is passed state supported colleges would be advised that the General Assembly advocates parietal hours which would not encourage "increasing sexual promiscuity" among students of those schools.

Senator Bateman introduced the resolution after an investigation of an undisclosed Virginia college. Reliable sources indicate the school under investigation was William and Mary College in Williamsburg.

Last year William and Mary was the scene of a much publicized incident involving parietal rules and the enforcement of such rules. Two couples were caught in the dorms during nonparietal hours and were subsequently suspended for the remainder of the semester by the Judiciary Committee. However, when appealed to the Federal Court in Norfolk, the students were reinstated by Judge John Mackenzie because the enforcement of the dorm rules was applied arbitrarily. Judge Mackenzie went on to reaffirm the constitutionality of the college's dorm rules.

Senator Bateman affirmed that his resolution would suggest to Virginia supported schools that they adopt parietal rules which would not generate an opportunity and an exposure to temptations which students have fallen victim to from the beginning of time. However, there is nothing to force the colleges to conform with the resolution but it is quite obvious that the act would put enough pressure on the schools to ensure its adoptions in the various Virginia colleges.

The major question in this controversy seems to be whether or not college students are mature and moral enough to adopt and follow their own parietal hours. When asked about this, Senator Bateman stuck to his theory that the maturity of the students was not in question, but rather the temptation was too great for the students to refuse and that the parietals should be revised in order to eliminate the temptation.

Student Education Association Discusses Interview Techniques

By PATRICIA PATTESON

Mr. Ronald Perry, Superintendent of Prince Edward County Public Schools, discussed "What School Administrators Look for in an Interview" at a recent Student Education Association meeting. He considered the interview to be the most valuable source for evaluating the applicant and discussed interview techniques. Applicants should send a letter of inquiry to the superintendent stating what position you are applying for, your ability to meet certification requirements and your availability for a personal interview. Mr. Perry indicated that the best time to apply for a teaching position is usually in the spring of the year. He also stressed the importance of carefully selecting personal references. As important as your application is being prepared for the interviewer's questions. The questions most often asked are:

1. What is your philosophy of education?
2. Why do you wish to teach in this particular school system?
3. What are your professional aspirations?
4. Why should he employ you?
5. What features of school organization are good or poor for good teaching?
6. What ideas would you like to try or experiment with?
7. What educational problems are disturbing you? How do you think they might be solved?
8. Are you willing to participate in extracurricular activities?
9. What subjects or grades do you wish to teach?
10. How much discipline is important in the educational system and what is your role as a teacher in discipline?

Mr. Perry reminded the students that it is customary to send a letter of thanks to the interviewer in appreciation for his time and help.

Religious Emphasis Week, March 8-11

YWCA vice-president Sally Foster, has revealed plans for a series of speakers in this year's Religious Emphasis Week which runs March 8 through 11 and is entitled "To Care is to Share." The YWCA sponsored program which climaxes in an Agape Love Feast will emphasize social action as part of the student's religious life.

The Rev. Mr. Godfrey Tate of Norfolk, will begin the program Monday, March 8, speaking on his work with "Inner City" in Norfolk. After telling of the problems and needs he has found, he will discuss his insights into these problems and will offer suggestions as to ways in which listeners may work towards a solution.

On Tuesday, March 9, Mose Henry of the Presbyterian School of Christian Education in Richmond, will present a "folk-rock gospel." No stranger to the Longwood campus, he has performed several times at the Wesley Center's "Cactus Inn." Through song and personal witness he will point up the need for concern with and awareness of the problems of others.

Catholic priest Clement Burns and Protestant chaplain Howard Gordon will speak on the Christian-social gospel on Wednesday, March 10, discussing how the Christian should relate to such issues as American foreign and domestic policy, civil rights, poverty, racism, war, the draft. Father Burns and Rev. Gordon share an ecumenical ministry at the University of Virginia.

On Thursday, March 11, the Agape Love Feast will close the week of programs. This will be in the tradition of the "love feasts" of the early Christians. These meals were provided by church members for the purposes of religious fellowship and charity to the poor and the widows of the Christian community. Deriving from the earliest days of the church, the meals may possibly be rooted in the common meals of Jesus and his disciples or such events in Christ's ministry as the feeding of the multitude.

The feast at Longwood, led by Canterbury director Tracy Wilder, will be a combination of a meal and a religious service of folk hymns, prayers, readings, and discussion. Possibilities of the meal taking the form of a poverty dinner are being discussed.

The entire week is open to all Longwood students. Special invitations for the Agape supper are being sent to the area churches in an attempt to bring together the people of the community and the students of Longwood and to foster discussion over forces at work in the community and what action the Church hopes to take in relation to these actions.

American Airmen Kidnapped

ANKARA — Four airmen were kidnapped Thursday afternoon by political extremists in Turkey and a ransom of $400,000 was demanded by 6 a.m. Saturday (11 p.m. EST Friday) or the men would be executed by firing squad. The time limit was originally twelve hours earlier, but when Turkish authorities captured one of the kidnappers, it was extended to allow time for his release, which was demanded as part of the ransom. Rioting erupted when police attempted to search the university after a tip that the men were being held there.

Capital Damaged By Bomb

WASHINGTON — A powerful bomb caused considerable damage when it exploded in a portion of the Senate wing of the Capitol March 1. The explosion was believed to be part of a plot by extremists to hasten the Senate in pulling troops out of Viet Nam. No one has been arrested, although several clues are being followed.

Pennsylvania Bankrupt

HARRISBURG, PA. — Pennsylvania went broke Monday and faced the possibility of not paying 70,000 state employees until money could be provided. Gov. Milton J. Shapp has halted payments to private firms which provide vital services and refuses to sign paychecks until the state legislature approves his tax plan, which would alleviate the problem.

Voting Rights For Women Rejected

GENEVA — Liechtenstein remained the only Western area where women cannot vote after a referendum to establish suffrage failed last week. The split occurred between the young and older men, who did not want to be merely copying their more powerful neighbor, Switzerland, which just voted in women's suffrage recently.

P. M. Trudeau Marries

VANCOUVER, B.C. — Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau of Canada was married in a quiet ceremony Thursday night to Margaret Sinclair, the 22-year-old daughter of a politician. Although the couple had dated frequently, the marriage came as a surprise to the nation.

Students Question Judicial Procedures At Open Forum

By ETHEL REITER

"How can you say the system doesn't work? The system does work," replied Dr. Henry I. Willett, Jr., to approximately 500 students, who challenged and questioned the fairness of Longwood's judicial system at the Judicial Board Open Forum, held in the Gold Room last Thursday.

Dr. Willett made the opening statement at the conference which Judicial Board opened to the student body in an effort to explain the structure and procedures of the judicial system here.

In his opening remarks, Dr. Willett gave what he considered to be two valuable purposes served by the conference. The first purpose is the dispelling of rumors, and the other is the possible soliciting of suggestions for improvement of the judicial system.

The president went on to make some general statements concerning the law. He believes that there exists a great deal of misconception as far as the law is concerned. "It is a common fallacy on the part of many people to equate the procedures of a court of law with those of a college disciplinary hearing. Students possess some fundamental rights, but they are not analogous to the rights of a citizen," stated Dr. Willett.

According to Dr. Willett, the courts require three things in student trials: a statement of the charges, a fair trial (which does not include the right to legal counsel), and substantive evidence.

Joan Putney, Chairman of Judicial Board, stated the procedures if a student is "turned in." First, an individual must report a student to a Judicial Board member. After this, there is a preliminary notification at which time the Chairman and Vice-Chairman go and talk to the accused and any witnesses. The charge is then determined. The trial is held as soon as possible. The only people having any knowledge of the charge are the Chairman and Vice-Chairman. It is explained to the other board said that it was not fair to direct this question to Sandy Oliver, therefore, Joan Putney answered. When we go to see someone we tell them who we are, where I would, though. If anyone was convicted of being a pusher by Judicial Board, then I would strongly recommend that this student be prosecuted.

QUESTION — When a person is suspended for violation of the Honor Code what records can be seen?

ANSWER — If the period of suspension is still in effect the records can be shown to anyone inquiring in an official capacity.

QUESTION — Is there a list of suspected narcotics users circulated among members of the administration and faculty?

ANSWER — Dr. Willett indicated that he had a mental record of such suspects, but he has no knowledge of a published list.

QUESTION — Who testifies first, the accused or the accuser?

ANSWER — Joan Putney replied that the accused comes in and is charged. Another board member went on to say that the system is set up to be flexible so that it works on a human basis and not according to "all this legal stuff." Therefore, if we feel that the accused or the accuser should testify first we can act on these feelings.

QUESTION — I have read that it is one's legal right to face his accuser during the trial in order to challenge his accusations. Does one ever face his accuser here?

ANSWER — In most instances the accuser is not revealed in order to avoid conflict between the accused and the accuser.

QUESTION — What specifically are the "prevailing standards" as stated in the Handbook?

ANSWER — Joan Putney answered that they are the social and Honor regulations stated in the Handbook.

The conference was then thrown open to student questions and suggestions. Cy Young, Chairman of Panhellenic, made the first statement from the audience. With several students standing to show their support of her words, Cy Young said that the group wished to direct all questions to Judicial Board members. However, these questions were not intended to be taken personally.

QUESTION — In a narcotics charge can a student decide if she wants to be dealt with by the campus or civil authorities?

ANSWER — Dr. Willett said that a narcotics charge is in violation of Longwood's social code, and, therefore, a student is subject to the Judicial Board. The decision as to whether or not you will be prosecuted by civil authorities is that of the Commonwealth's Attorney. I am bound under law to report such felonious conduct to the Commonwealth's Attorney; however, I have never suggested that a student be prosecuted. There is one situation

Extension Of Curfew Hour During Week Approved For Spring

By SHEILAH MARTIN

Frankie Brown, Chairman of Legislative Board, and Mary Tabb Johnston, Chairman of Residence Board, were notified by Dr. Henry I. Willett, on March 5, that he has approved a curfew extension to 12:00 on week nights. The boards had originally asked for the curfew to be extended to 12:30 to eliminate any confusion resulting from the three different curfews which now exist.

The new curfew will not become effective until after spring break. Dr. Willett said the delay is to allow time for all the head residents and desk girls to be notified of the change. He also mentioned that the student teachers will have returned by that date so that the adjustment will be made by the entire student body at one time.

"Due to lack of funds, for this year," said Frankie Brown, "Lankford and the library can not be held open any longer." However, there is a possibility that funds will be appropriated for that purpose next year. The classrooms will probably be left unlocked longer so that the students may use the additional half hour to study in the buildings if they wish.

Judge Rules Paper Belongs To Students

Reprinted From ASG News

Justice Alfred A. Arraj, chief judge of the U. S. District Court in Colorado, ruled Feb. 11 that Dorothy Trujillo for the Southern Colorado State College (SCSC) ARROW be reinstated in her position as managing editor and refunded back pay.

She was fired by the paper's faculty adviser and the college administration when she tried to publish "controversial" material including an editorial that condemned the administration for proposing new faculty parking lots. Since early September, Trujillo was required to submit all "controversial" material to the faculty adviser.

In the precedent setting decision, Arraj ruled that "the state is not necessarily the unfettered master of all it creates. Having established a particular forum for discussion, officials (Continued on Page 7)

Beware Of "Friendly Advice"

In our grade conscious and competitive college atmosphere students are extremely sensitive to anything that might jeopardize their grades. Professors cannot help but be aware of the influence that they have over students' thoughts and activities when the question of grades comes up. There are professors here at Longwood who take advantage of this student-professor situation often under the guise of "friendly advice." This "friendly advice" is often intimidating.

As much as I hate to harp on this point, I feel it necessary for it occurs in some form each week. Several faculty members whether aware of it or not have intimidated many students in not writing for the Rotunda. Because of remarks concerning possible grade lowerings, poor recommendations and threats of liable students are unwilling to commit themselves. In this tense atmosphere where professors are so powerful, students may ask, what actually is freedom of the press? If students feel intimidated at all freedom of the press does not exist. The "friendly advice" then has served its purpose, to keep the student quiet. I have found that if a faculty member has "advised" a student beforehand, it is extremely difficult to convince them otherwise. Faculty members look at your present method of convincing students. Do you use the "friendly advice" tactic? Whom are you kidding. A paper cannot be run competently by students who are afraid to write what they see and feel.

A Loss Of Rights

Dear Editor:

At the open meeting with the Judicial Board and Dr. Willett, it became apparent that Longwood students have lost two of their most basic rights. Rights, our judicial system held dear before there was a Longwood.

The first is the right to face one's accuser and hear all evidence she presents against you. Judicial Board has stated that it cannot force an accuser to reveal her identity to the accused. The board could refuse to act until she did so. If a girl is ready to accuse a fellow student, she should be willing to face that student.

The second is the right to remain silent without the fear that silence means guilt. Dr. Willett told us that the courts have ruled, that in college judicial cases, silence can weigh against the accused. The Supreme Court has ruled (Miranda vs. Arizona) that silence cannot be interpreted as guilt. I am fully aware that college judicial cases differ from criminal cases, but are we to be given less consideration than those accused of criminal offenses?

If we are not afforded every right that other citizens have, then Longwood's judicial system cannot be considered fair or successful.

A Challenge

Dear Editor:

I challenge the opinions of your anonymous reviewer concerning "Jesus Christ, Superstar." I do not find the recording blasphemous, mediocre, needlessly clever, or reactionary. It is not merely this one particularly ill-tempered review that prompts me to speak; the charge of a lack of musical sophistication has arisen in several quarters against this recording. As for your reviewer's sophistication, anyone who really believes that in conventional opera the music has a tendency "to become somewhat subordinate to, and tied to, the structure of the words," would be rather nonplussed to hear Mozart's opinions on the same matter. In fact, conventional opera, historically speaking, has been perhaps the most effective enemy of language before television, but that is another issue.

Not one of the reviewers I have read has noticed that the dominant influence on "Superstar" is neither Mozart, nor Verdi, nor Wagner, but Brubeck. If we are indeed to attack a new work because it fails to become either conventional opera or conventional rock and roll — because, in effect, it is original rather than conventional — are we to deny the rhythmical revelation this recording offers because neither Elvis Presley (in fact) nor almost any conventional operateer (in effect) feels at home in 7/4 or 5/4 time? Perhaps if Webber and Rice had called their work an oratorio rather than an opera we would all feel better. They have used these "new" tempos with such facility that apparently those reviewers who find the recording unsophisticated cannot detect them. Doesn't anyone remember how Brubeck played a single rhythmic figure over and over all through "Take Five" so no one would get lost (this is according to Brubeck's own testimony)? How does one answer the charge of blasphemy? I can think of only one reply to anyone who says it is blasphemy to suggest that the Apostles never fully understood Christ during His lifetime: cock-a-doodle-doo, cock-a-doodle-doo, cock-a-doodle-doo.

I think "Superstar" is a very remarkable work of creative reverence. To those who believe "creative reverence" to be a contradiction in terms, there is indeed nothing to say.

Public Opinion

Dear Editor:

In the ROTUNDA of March 3, the vice-president of the college, Col. Carr, is quoted with regard to his reaction to the termination of tuition grants by the Longwood Foundation: "One is concerned with the quality of education that their (sic) children receive, and they won't get it at the county high school." While this may be a prevalent opinion among whites in the county, I find it quite out of place for an administrator of a state owned college to belittle a public high school in this way. The clear implication is that the white segregated private high school is vastly superior to the public high school. The fact is that Prince Edward County has basically sound schools which are constantly being improved upon. Whatever strengths and weaknesses the county high school has should show up in its evaluation this spring by the Southern Association. If the high school is accredited by this agency (the same one by which the college is accredited), it will be, according to the superintendent of schools, the only high school thus accredited within a wide radius of Prince Edward County, including the private academies in the area. Whatever the outcome of the evaluation, some impressive improvements have been made at the county high school recently, and it is not the inferior school the white myth would make of it.

Everyone is entitled to his own opinion, but is it not an inherent duty of a public teacher training institution, and therefore of its administrators, to promote public education? And doesn't the statement quoted, in effect, officially write off a public high school as a lost cause?

"Proper Channels"

Dear Editor,

Perhaps the purpose of the open forum on judicial procedure was misunderstood, but most of the student body was under the impression it was to be a question and answer period between students and the Judicial Board. Ultimately, it resembled one of Dr. Willett's press conferences.

Most assuredly, Dr. Willett had the right to express his opinions, but one wonders if this gives him the authority to dominate the forum. After delivering his opening remarks, he should have turned the program over to the chairman of the Judicial Board and refrained from answering questions other than those directed to him or those the board specifically requested he answer.

While President Willett's cooperation is necessary, and his presence adds to the occasion, in the future the students should be allowed to direct their questions to the proper sources of information.

'Lovers And Other Strangers'

Starts Tonight At State Theatre

By SARAH FARRAR

LOVERS AND OTHER STRANGERS is a funny movie and a pleasant way to spend a little under two hours. Written by the comedy team of Renee Taylor and Joseph Bologna, it combines in a film the strengths and weaknesses of a series of interlocked routines constructed on the spur of the moment!

Using the impending wedding of Mike (Michael Brandon) and Susan (Bonnie Bedelia), a pair of students who have lived together a year and a half, as its jumping-off point, the film goes on to explore the relationships of various couples. The viewer discovers the groom's working-class Italian family and the bride's ritzy Westchester, New York one. Mike's mother and father barely have time to worry about his wedding, as their older son is on the verge of breaking with his wife. Susan's super-sophisticated father (Gig Young) is, when not burning steaks on the grill, busy cornering his wife's plump but personable best friend (Ann Jackson) in the bathroom; and her older sister (Anne Meara) has a tough time getting hubby Harry Guardino away from his exercising and into bed.

The writer's message, as we are told in no uncertain terms, is that we're all REALLY strangers no matter how much love we share. That may very well be. But if you don't keep that in mind, you can completely enjoy a film about at least a half dozen ridiculous love relationships.

'Physically' speaking, much of the casting is all wrong. Most obvious is young Brandon, who looks about as much as like the son of Italian parents as comedienne Anne Meara looks like Gig Young's daughter. But not one complaint can be lodged against the acting. Much of the film's peculiar appeal comes from the wide spectrum of talent it employs: stage and screen actors, television personalities, and nightclub performers all come together as a delightful group.

As accomplished as they all are, the picture is robbed by some relative newcomers. Bob Dishy is perfect as the playboy "comes on strong" usher of the wedding, playing up to plain cousin Brenda (Marian Hailey, whose voice is probably the most wonderful thing in the movie).

It must be mentioned that Anne Meara does a brilliant job as the neglected wife. As the groom's parents, Bea Arthur and Richard Castellano are superb. The others, like Harry Guardino, Anne Jackson, and Gig Young, give mature performances that keeps LOVERS going, on a scale between amusing and very funny, from start to finish!

This delightful flic begins tonight at the State Theater and runs through Saturday night.

"Virginia Bedford: her life and work at Longwood . . ." an honorary exhibit, opens March 10 and continues through the 26th in the Bedford Building Gallery.

Having been transformed into a glowing maze of panels and plexiglas, the gallery presents not only samples of Miss Bedford's fine enamels and pottery but also an inkling of the artist herself. Her bright personality and gracious talents vibrate throughout the show.

Thirty-nine enamel pieces characterize Miss Bedford's versatility in the medium. Free-flowing designs, geometrical shapes, deep earth tones, and bold hues, combine, contrast, and complement the nature and handling of the works. A favorite object is the delicate "Drinking Vessel," (no. 9). Its background of natural copper is highlighted by a fiery pattern of burnt red-orange and yellow-green.

Ceramics is another specialty of the artist. Varieties in glazes, shapes, uses, and visual effect typify Miss Bedford's controlling talent in the field of pottery. The linear pattern of her earthenware "Vase," (no. 43) is formed by lines at right angles to each other which are carefully fused to conform to the circular shape.

Miss Bedford received her B.S. degree from the University of Missouri and her M.A. degree from Columbia Teachers College. She studied at Harvard one summer as a recipient of the Carnegie Scholarship; she has also spent summers in New Hampshire, Ohio State University, Guadalajara, Mexico and the University of Tennessee at Gatlinburg.

Miss Bedford came to Longwood in 1928. She became chairman of the Art Department in 1942 and served in that capacity until July, 1970. In her time here, Miss Bedford has taught such courses as design, figure-drawing, lettering, art education, ceramics, enamels and general crafts.

A great deal of imaginative thinking and hard working combined to make this exhibit a reflection of sincere appreciation for Virginia Bedford's life and work at Longwood. All students are invited to the reception for the artist March 19, 7 to 9, Bedford Building.

What Do We Really Know About The Library?

By LYNDA VAN HORN

Locking the library! This is one of the proposals by the staff of Lancaster Library and the library committee.

In "locking the library" the downstairs portion of the library will be locked forcing all students and users of the library to exit past the check out desk and through the main doors.

Many of the faculty and student body feel that this is justified since so many books are missing each year. Richard Coutour, a member of the library committee, says "I'm in favor of this. Under the circumstances, girls are more apt to check books out if they have to go by the desk." Another faculty member of the committee cited this as an important step in maintaining quality library facilities.

Some members of the library staff disagree. Last year, only 133 books were reported missing from the stacks and only 76 or 1.03% missing from the reserve books. With such a small percentage missing, one staff member "fails to see the need" for the locking. This number only represents, however, those books actually reported lost. Since there is no official inventory system of checking books, it is impossible to determine how many volumes are actually missing.

This system is common among colleges throughout the state.

Both Mary Washington and Westhampton Colleges have their library systems set up so that anyone entering the library must exit past the check out desk. Radford College also has only one exit and even includes a door guard to insure the checking out of all books.

Improvement Of Library Facilities

How else can the library be changed and improved? Last year $59,000 was allocated for book funds. Is this enough considering the constant growth of both undergraduate and graduate students? Says one faculty member, "He (Mr. Butler, the librarian) makes the purchases with what he has available. There is just not enough money."

Can the state be convinced to grant more library funds to the college? Mr. Coutour feels that the state will give the money if the faculty and student body push for it. Some professors order vast numbers of books while others order relatively none. This tends to make the library heavy in one subject area while lacking in another. Mr. Coutour adds that the library is always asking the faculty to order books. "When you have a faculty asking for more books, the state is going to give you the money."

The students must push for better facilities as well if the library is to grow. Members of the library committee and library staff do not feel that the students avail themselves of the library. "The library is not a catacomb or prison," says Mr. Coutour. "It is an echo chamber or a hall into the future." He feels that perhaps the ROTUNDA can stimulate growth and interest by providing a semi-monthly listing of new books in the library perhaps with accompanying book reviews. Another member of the committee expressed her concern about student use of the library. She did not feel that enough students used the library or even knew how to. She felt the percentage of students who take the library seriously is very small.

Student Use And Suggestions

One library staff member stated that she saw the same group of students always using the library. She felt that many of the girls did not know where to look for information or whom to approach for help. This is the purpose of the library staff. She said, though, that some members of the faculty faced the same difficulties. She thought both faculty members and students should take it upon themselves to explore the library and to ask the library assistants to help in finding any materials.

There are also students who have suggestions for the library improvements. One angered student thought it ridiculous to have to wait until 10:30 to check out periodicals. She felt this rule promoted the "borrowing" of these magazines and journals. Another student had similar views and suggested a more frequent sorting of the magazine collections. She commented on the almost "impossible" task of finding a popular magazine published within the last five years. A faculty member also complained of this problem. She felt the shelves should be checked and sorted more often to prevent students from "hiding" books and periodicals.

Still another student suggested that the check out system might be automated speeding up library procedures. The major problem in this area is that the cost is so great to install such a program. William and Mary College is currently considering such a program. In an article in the FLAT HAT the William and Mary college newspaper is quoted, "It is the general opinion that a library with annual circulation of 100,000 can seriously consider the use of automated equipment." Again the problem in installation lies in a lack of funds. The article goes on to say, "the needs are apparent but money is tight in the state. Financing is holding us back." Longwood, however, does not have that kind of book turnover. In the 1969-1970 school year, only 48,380 books were checked out with only a 2.4% increase over the previous year.

Three other state schools were asked how they handle their check out problem. Of the three schools contacted — Mary Washington, Radford, and Westhampton — only Westhampton uses an automated checking system which they have found "very successful."

Establishing An Archive

Several faculty members are also interested in restoring the archives of the library. This could be a place where literary and art treasures of the area could be displayed and stored. Mr. Coutour is especially interested in this area. He feels that Longwood has the chance to become a "repository for Southside Virginia." There are papers, maps, and paintings in this area that simply have no place for storage. He says that this could be a great advantage to Longwood's graduate program. He goes on to say, "Some genuine effort should be made on this point. The lack of concern is due partly to a lack of funds." He suggested perhaps that alumni be approached and a fund established for the maintenance of an archives program.

Most people interested in the library are quick to note the many improvements that have occurred within the last few years. A vast number of books and materials have been ordered through the library. If the library is to continue to offer the best services to the Longwood students and Farmville community, then it must continue to grow and advance.

Bridgewater Defeats LC In Semifinals

Bridgewater College defeated Longwood in the semifinals of the basketball tournament by a score of 43-31. The tournament was held at Lynchburg College last weekend.

Longwood, who went to the tournament with a record of eight wins and one loss, defeated Virginia Commonwealth University in the quarter finals with a score of 51-44.

Individual points in that game were:

Margaret Lowry	13
Sue Manahan	5
Dottie Bohannon	11
Nanette Fisher	22
TOTAL	51

Longwood's team had been suffering due to the injury of one of their key players, Sue Manahan. However, she played in the third quarter and managed to pick up five points, but also managed to reinjure her knee. The second injury prevented her from playing in any more of the tournament games.

Longwood then advanced to the semifinals where they played Bridgewater and were defeated by a score of 43-31.

Coach Jean Smith commented that the one main reason for the defeat was "inexperience verses experience." "We made a lot of mistakes that showed the results of pressure on a young team," she stated. The LC varsity team was composed of two juniors, three sophomores, and four freshmen, as compared to Bridgewater's team which included mostly seniors who had worked together for four years.

Miss Jean Smith commented that they had defeated Bridgewater earlier in the season, but had had the luck of playing on their own court and had had the playing ability of Sue Manahan. She was exceptionally pleased with freshman Lucy Sale. "Lucy started in the Bridgewater game, showed her true ability, and played a really good game," stated Miss Smith.

Individual scores were:

Margaret Lowry	8
Dottie Bohannon	6

Nanette Fisher	14
Janet Ford	3
TOTAL	31

Bridgewater ended up losing to Westhampton in the finals game held Saturday night.

Coach Smith's comments on the overall season were: "Considering the inexperience of a young team, and my being a new coach in a new situation, I am very pleased with the season. Of course, I would have liked it to have been much more, but I'm satisfied with how it turned out. It was definitely nothing to gripe about. I think I had a very good group of students with whom to work."

One extra highlight of the trip to Lynchburg was the selection of an All-Star Tournament Team. Longwood was indeed honored by having freshman Nanette Fisher chosen as a member of the All-Star team. Selection was based on the player's performance during the tournament game, and players were chosen by a selected panel of judges.

Longwood's Varsity team has had a good season with a final record of eight wins and one loss.

Longwood's Faye Ingram makes a quick parry to prevent a touch from being scored against her in a recent bout.

Fencers Lose To Radford End Season With 4-2 Record

The Longwood Fencing Team lost their last meet of the season as they were defeated 15-10 by Radford College. The meet was held in French Gym before a good crowd of well wishers.

The team started the meet off relatively well and held their own as their lead kept shifting hands. However, toward the end, it was all down hill for the LC team.

Again, some of the team members failed to come alive and this led to their eventual loss. Joanne Canada and Temple Harvey lead their team, each winning four out of their five bouts. Mary Baldwin and Janice Russell each won one bout to bring the final score for Longwood to 10 wins. Although Faye Ingram scored no wins, she showed much skill and determination and gave the Radford girls a hard fight. The meet was fenced electrically and was directed by Peter Lynne of Lynchburg College.

Although the actual season is over, the girls have high hopes for the Intercollegiant Tournament to be held this week end in Iler Gym starting at 9 o'clock, on Saturday morning, March 13.

Longwood will have three teams entered. Coach Sally Bush feels the teams should do very well in the tournament competition.

The student body is invited to come and watch and cheer on the LC team. It should prove to be an interesting experience.

This is the form that helped Longwood defeat Stratford College in a recent meet.

Argentine Troup Performs Native Productions Tonight

By SUSAN SMITH

Hosted by the Longwood College Foreign Language Department, a touring Argentine theatrical group will present, in English, a program describing the evolution of the Argentine theater tonight at 7:30 in Bedford Auditorium.

Director Luis Saslavsky will give an introduction showing a view of Argentina and her people by discussing plays performed in Buenos Aires from 1870 until now. To show the evolution of customs and characters, the actors, Beatriz Matar and Duilio Marzio, will perform scenes from these plays.

Luis Saslavsky has studied painting in Paris, and worked as a movie critic at home and in Hollywood. Later he directed an amateur group that was to become a successful professional cast. His second attempt at movie direction, "The Closed Door" was successful. After a series of important films in Argentina, he made several films starring the best French actors and actresses.

The young Argentine actress Beatriz Matar, has received several awards for her acting in movies and the theater. She graduated from the National School of Dramatic Art. On television she has appeared in plays by Noel Coward, Shakespeare and noted Argentine playwrights. She is the author of a book of poetry, a theatrical play and songs of movies. She also teaches members of the Municipal Ballet of the San Martin Theater in Buenos Aires.

After studying law Duilio Marzio found his inborn talent for acting. The leading man in 25 films, he was awarded Argentina's Best Acting Award for his role in "Yesterday was Spring." On stage he has performed in 33 plays by prominent playwrights. Marzio was President of the Argentine Actors' Association for four years.

Vandalism In Dorms Occuring But Not Prevalent

By VALERIE BLANKS

Several acts of vandalism have occurred in Longwood College dormitories in recent weeks, with Wheeler dormitory suffering the most.

Two or three weeks ago an expensive flower arrangement, which had been in the Wheeler parlor for eight years, was torn apart. Two acts of violence took place last week which shocked Mrs. Baber, the housemother. A floor lamp and two table lamps, which she had bought, were stolen from the study room on February 25. The lamps were apparently lifted through a window after the screen was removed. It must have happened after curfew because of the presence of girls in the room. Two couches in the parlor were apparently slashed with a penknife in several places on the following Sunday night between 8:30 and 12:30.

Mrs. Baber, in conveying her feelings about the incidents, said, "I'm really hurt by what has happened, and I can't understand the motive behind it."

Mrs. Ordeau, head resident in Tabb, stated that some boys closed themselves in a telephone booth about six weeks ago and removed the phone from the wall. Some "suspicious looking" water was also found in the bottom of the booth, but she is not positive as to what it was and considers the incident unimportant, but embarrassing.

Mrs. Crandle, head resident in Curry, reported that a mirror in the men's room had been broken, but added that there are "no perfect people" and the boys are usually nice. Linda St. John, assistant head resident in Frazer, reported that some foul language has been scratched on the paneling in the dorm, but that no other vandalism had occurred.

The "Natural Wildlife" will play for a mixer in the Commons Room on March 13 from 9 to 1. Admission will be $1.00. The group will play psychedelic music, also rock. "Natural Wildlife" is from Richmond and have backed up many leading groups in concert including "Chicago."

Judicial System At Area Colleges Improving

By STEPHANIE SIVERT

How does Judicial Board case procedure at Longwood compare

Conference Thursday On W & M Campus

The Student Association at the College of William and Mary are co-sponsoring with the Williamsburg Moratorium Committee and the Free University Counter Conference on Peace and Justice to be held March 11, 1971, on the William and Mary campus. The conference is scheduled to coincide with the opening day of the National Conference on the Judiciary in Williamsburg which includes a major address by President Richard M. Nixon.

When asked what the purpose of the Peace and Justice Day is, Suzanne Bisset, one of the coordinators, responded that "it is to consider an alternative view of peace and justice at an open conference where people can express a variety of opinions. According to Suzanne, "One of the major focuses of Peace and Justice Day is to promote the NSA People's Peace Treaty in the Williamsburg area and throughout the state."

Speakers at the Counter Conference who have agreed to attend include Rennie Davis, Chicago Seven defendant and organizer of the People's Coalition for Peace and Justice; John Froines, another of the Chicago defendants; Allen Ginsberg, poet; Don Gurewitz, National Executive Secretary of the Student Mobilization Committee; Dave Ishin, President of the National Student Association; Andy Stapp, American Servicemen's Union, and Leonard Weinglass, lawyer for the Chicago conspiracy trial.

In addition to the Peace and Justice group, a group of students for Peace with Freedom will be on hand at the Conference. The group feels that "the much heralded Committee for Peace and Justice does not represent the views of all the students at William and Mary," and that the "vocal left" represents the views of a minority of students on the college campuses across the nation.

to the judicial system proceedings at similar women's colleges throughout the state? In an attempt to answer this question, the chairmen of the judiciary committees at Radford College, Mary Washington College and Randolph-Macon Women's Colleges, were contacted this week and asked to explain how their judicial systems operate, if they felt a majority of the student body was satisfied with the present system and if not, what changes were being made to improve the system.

At Radford College, a teacher training institute similar to Longwood, the judiciary system consists of an Honor Code composed of 2-3 elected representatives from each of the four classes plus a representative from the College's day students. If a student sees an infraction of the Honor Code, she reports the incident to the chairman of the Honor Code. The chairman thereby appoints a member of the Court to investigate the situation to determine if a charge should be made. If a student is accused of committing an infraction against the Honor Code, she has from 3-5 days to prepare her case before she must appear before the Court.

The accused student may enlist the help of any member of the undergraduate student body to aid her in her defense. She may also ask three witnesses of her choosing, from within the student body or outside the college community, to testify to her character. After she has prepared her case, the defendant and the counseling student, as well as the student who has brought the charges against her, appear together before the court to present their case. In this way, the defendant is allowed to question and refute some of the information she may feel to be misinterpreted. After hearing the evidence, the court retires to decide the verdict. In some cases, to insure absolute impartiality, the chairman may invite two students to sit in on judicial proceedings as guest jurists.

Board Notes

Legislative

A list of the revised Alcohol rules was submitted to the legislative board to be voted on at the next meeting.

It was decided that the next meeting of Legislative Board be held in the Gold Room so that more students would be able to come to the meeting to discuss Handbook changes.

The date for the Student Government Open Forum will be March 16, at 7:30.

There will be an American and State flag put up between Curry and Frazier dormitories.

Judicial

1. A member of the Longwood student body has been placed on social probation until June 1971 for violating dating rule 4a.

2. A member of the Longwood student body has been placed on general probation for the remainder of her time at Longwood for falsification of records.

Colleges In The News

Apathy Defeats W&L Constitution

LEXINGTON — An attempt to ratify a new student body constitution was defeated recently at W&L due to student apathy in the election. Fifty percent of the students enrolled must vote in order to approve a change, but only 43% of the students took part in the election. The new constitution would have established two equal branches, a legislative body and Honor Court, to replace the old system of having one branch with legislative, administrative and judicial powers.

5th Dimension to Perform

RICHMOND — VCU will be hosting the 5th Dimension Friday, March 12, at 9 p.m. in its new gymnasium. The popular group will be appearing after recently performing at the White House for President Nixon and the governors of the states. Tickets will cost $3.50 for VCU students and $5.50 for others. The stubs will be good for the Charlie Byrd Concert March 14.

U. Va. To Transfer Two Colleges

CHARLOTTESVILLE — Patrick Henry College and the Eastern Shore branch of U. Va. will be turned over to the state next year to be operated under the community college system. President Edgar F. Shannon said that the university should not try to duplicate the system maintained in the community colleges. Dr. Shannon also emphasized that U. Va. would be able to concentrate more on its four-year colleges. Mary Washington College, George Mason College and Clinch Valley College, and its graduate programs.

Fan Free Clinic Overwhelming Success

RICHMOND — a free clinic has been established in the Fan district to provide medical treatment for those who cannot otherwise afford it. Doctors, nurses and counselors, totaling a staff of fifty, donate their time, free of charge, to keep the clinic open two nights a week. The clinic has been a great success in that it has treated more than 1,100 patients since Oct. 1. Although the public health department covers some costs, the bulk of support comes from contribution. The clinic was established to deal with a wide area of medical needs, but Dr. Charles Thomas, chairman of the board of directors, admits that 50% of the clinic's work concerns girls seeking information on birth control and abortion.

Witcha Plane Crash Avoidable

WASHINGTON — The National Transportation Safety Board has revealed that the crash which killed 31 persons going to a Wichita State football game could have been avoided if the pilot had realized a minute sooner that he was flying into a box canyon. The plane was 5,165 pounds over its weight limit when it left Denver and the crew did not know the capabilities of the plane. The crash occurred Oct. 2 while the team and supporters were traveling to Logan, Utah, for a game.

From The Land Of Oz

PUBLICATION FROM THE LAND OF OZ, the new literary magazine published by Hampden-Sydney and Longwood students, will go on sale at the end of this week. Edited by a group known as "The Family," the eight-page bimonthly magazine will provide an outlet for literary and artistic expression not offered in any of the schools' present publications.

The Longwood print shop will supply 1,000 copies at the staff's expense. The $40-$50 printing expenses should be met in part through sales.

"The Family" insists that Oz is not intended to rival any present publication on either campus. Since it is to include literature, art, photography, and music, competition would seem to exist. When the editors of Longwood's publications were approached concerning Oz, they responded optimistically. Cookie Howell, editor of THE VIRGINIAN, commented, "The function of the yearbook is well defined, and there is little chance that the Oz objectives will overlap into yearbook format." Childrey Farber, editor of the GYRE, Longwood's literary magazine, does not feel that the PUBLICATION FROM THE LAND OF OZ "will hurt the quality of material that is being turned into the GYRE." When Lise Worthington, editor of THE ROTUNDA was asked what her opinion of the upcoming publication was, she said, "Oz, if handled properly, could be a very effective supplement to journalistic efforts on both campuses."

More than just a publication, "The Family" says, "OZ is a state of mind."

An Invitation From The Colonnade Club

Longwood College Colonnade Club invites students to attend their meeting Thursday, March 11, at 8 p.m., in the ABC room of Lankford Building. La Marick Beauty System, Inc., of Charlotte, N. C., will have their supervisor of the Richmond Wig Hut, Miss Kathee Eckman, and two assistants demonstrate the styling and care of wigs. A question and answer period will follow the demonstration. At the close of the meeting, wigs may be purchased by those interested.

Private Enterprise More Important Than People

By LYNNE PIERCE
Bernadette Devlin, the socialist member of Parliament from Northern Ireland, spoke on the development of violence and prejudices in Ireland and the United States at Randolph-Macon Women's College Saturday night. Miss Devlin cited examples from the histories and present systems of both countries to prove that their problems are very similar. One of her main points was that present conflicts are due to the unequal distribution of economic resources, in which 5% of the populations in both nations control the wealth. In order to alleviate this problem, Miss Devlin proposed that the people force the government to take some of this money from "the haves" and distribute it among "the have-nots."

David Frost Host Of Ecology Panel At Richmond Forum

By LYNNE PIERCE

David Frost, television host and interviewer, appeared at the Mosque in Richmond, Saturday evening, to moderate two panel discussions on the topic "Man Versus Environment." The discussions concerned ecological problems around the country and their solutions, with particular emphasis on the ecology movement in Virginia.

In discussing the population problem, Ben Wattengerg, an ecologist, stated he believed that this country is not over crowded and is in no danger of being so and Charles Howard of Planned Parenthood maintained that "accidents cause children."

Ecological Activist Newton An-carrow pointed out that anti-pollution methods are not as expensive as most people believe and can often be profitable. Virginia, due to its late entrance into the American economy, has an advantage over other areas and may be able to avoid some problems.

Judge Rules

may not set space limitations on that forum which would interfere with protected speech."

The primary contention of the defendants (the college administration and faculty adviser) was that the ARROW was not in fact a free student newspaper but an "instructional tool," to be controlled ultimately by the administration. They based this contention on the use of state funds to support the newspaper.

Judge Arraj, however, noted, "We appreciate that school officials have authority to prescribe and control conduct in the schools, but this authority must be exercised so as not to intrude on fundamental constitutional rights."

According to Trujillo's attorney, American Civil Liberties Lawyer Robert Boons, the college administration, and Colorado state attorneys who defended them, found an inconsistency between the newspaper used as a teaching tool and the newspaper used as a free forum for student opinion.

What you should know about diamonds when you know it's for keeps

You've dreamed about your diamond engagement ring a thousand times. But now that you know it's for keeps, it's time to stop dreaming and start learning about diamonds and their value.

Because no two diamonds are exactly alike, jewelers have adopted exacting standards to determine the relative value of each and every diamond in the world. These standards include a diamond's size (carat weight), color, cut and clarity.

COLOR: Fine white diamonds are quite rare and valued accordingly. Other shades in relative order of their worth are: blue, yellow, brown and black.

CUT: The cut of a diamond—the facets placed on it by a trained cutter—brings out the gem's fire and brilliance. Anything less than correct cut reduces beauty, brilliance and value.

CLARITY: Determined by the absence of small impurities. A perfect diamond has no impurities when examined under ten power magnification by a trained eye.

CARAT: A diamond's size is measured in carats. As a diamond increases in size, its price will increase even more if the quality remains constant. But larger diamonds of inferior quality may actually be worth less than smaller, perfect diamonds.

Although it's important to know the facts about diamonds, you certainly don't have to be an expert to choose a Keepsake Diamond Ring . . . because Keepsake guarantees a diamond of fine white color, correct cut and perfect clarity or replacement assured. The famous Keepsake certificate provides permanent registration, trade-in value and protection against loss of diamonds from the setting.

Judicial System Improving

They help evaluate the evidence and vote on the verdict. The chairman has no vote. If, after a decision has been made the student thinks she has been treated unjustly, she can appeal her case to the Court.

Concerning changes in the present system, Honor Court Chairman, Lynn Snyder, said that there may be some changes made concerning the role of the guest jurors but other than that no drastic changes are planned. She felt that the majority of Radford students appeared to be satisfied with the judicial system.

While Radford's judicial system is similar in some respects to Longwood's, Randolph-Macon's Judiciary Committee offers some different alternatives to both systems. The Judiciary Committee, headed by a student chairman, consists of the President of the College, two deans, an elected faculty member, and representatives from the Senior, Junior, and Sophomore classes as well as the Student Government President.

When an infraction of the Honor Code is reported, it is the duty of the Judiciary Chairman, with the aid of the Dean of Students, to investigate and present her findings to the Committee. Both the student who is charged and the person who accuses her must appear before the Judiciary Committee. If the person who makes the accusation against a student refuses to face this student before the Committee, the case is refused and is not tried. Elizabeth T. Herbert, Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, said that she felt that it was the responsibility of the student bringing forth the charges to confront the student she was accusing. She also explained that at R-M there is no precedent for punishment. Each case is considered individually. There is no set punishment for different offenses. When asked if the Committee wore a special attire such as black robes when they met she answered that they did not feel that that was necessary. Since people are naturally nervous at times like these anyway, she felt that an informal atmosphere was best. At the present time, the appeal system consists of an appeal to the college president but plans are being made to change this method of appeal.

The Joint Council is the main judiciary body at Mary Washington. It consists of three faculty members and five students. The features of their system that distinguish it from the previous two systems are that the accused can enlist the help of anyone from the academic community to aid her in her defense. Also, when called before the Council, the defendant has the right to cross-examine the student who has brought the charges against her. Susan Cottingham, Chairman of the Joint Council, said that this enables the defendant to correct any misinterpreted impressions or to challenge any exaggerated remarks. At Mary Washington the defendant has 3-7 days to prepare her case. She may also invite, with the consent of the chairman, up to 25 of her friends to the judicial proceedings. These proceedings at Mary Washington are also conducted in an informal atmosphere. Since many changes in the judicial system at Mary Washington were instituted recently, no new changes are expected in the immediate future.

The girls questioned at each school felt that their system of judicial procedure suited the needs of the students at their schools but each one agreed that they would always be willing to improve the system if the majority of the student body felt that change was necessary.

News Briefs

W. Young Dies

LAGOS, NIGERIA — Whitney M. Young, Jr., executive director of the National Urban League, died Thursday, at the age of 49, while swimming at a beach in Lagos. A heart attack was considered a possibility, but an autopsy has been scheduled to determine the actual cause of death. Young was known for his ability to communicate with politicians, corporate leaders and poor and militant blacks. He was a recipient of the Medal of Freedom, this nation's highest civilian award.

Objector Status

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court ruled 8 to 1 last week that conscientious objector status could only be given to those who opposed all wars. Objection to only the Viet Nam war would not be acceptable, even though it has "roots in a claimant's conscience and personality that is 'religious' in character."

Turkish Regime Ousted

ANKARA, TURKEY — The unrest and violence which has been occurring in this country for the last few months, and which climaxed in the kidnapping and eventual release of four American airmen last week, forced the regime of Premier Suleyman Demirel to resign Friday. The action was the result of a demand from Turkey's top four generals that a government which could save the country from anarchy be set up. Unlike eleven years ago, the military has made no move to take over actual rule of the country.

Visas For Jews

MOSCOW — Soviet Jews continued their demonstrations in an attempt to obtain permission to emigrate to Israel, although they were told they would be barred from doing so if they were "fit enough to fight the Arabs." They were informed that those who qualified would receive visas in two weeks, but that the government would not tolerate further demonstrations.

VISTA to End

WASHINGTON — President Nixon has circulated a confidential plan which would merge all volunteer agencies and cause VISTA to be dismantled. The agency is to be replaced by four new corps, but only a small part of the group's present activities for the poor would be continued. The new agency will center on the concerns of the volunteers and not the needs of the poor. A final decision on the merger has not been made, but a final version is expected to go to Congress this week. The merger includes the Peace Corps, but it will continue to exist as an entity and will deal with international affairs as before.

Children need to be guided and tutoring often helps.

1971 Miss Longwood To Be Chosen In Pageant April 17

The 1971 Miss Longwood will be chosen in Jarman Auditorium on Saturday, April 17, at 7:30 p.m. The theme of the Pageant will be "What's More American?" Mr. Dick Barnes of Portsmouth will be the emcee and entertainment will be provided by The Villagers from Churchland High School. Tickets will be sold after spring break in the new smoker and at the door.

All contestants must be freshmen, sophomores, or juniors, at least 18 years old. Each girl must have a 2.2 cumulative average and must be sponsored by a club, student organization, or a group of five or more people. Ten semifinalists have been chosen from the original contestants. They are Virginia Arminger, Deborah Arvin, Amy Bolling, Cindy Borill, Nancy Goodman, Jane Hoen, Linda Olsen, Gail Thompson, Kathy Webb, and Judy Wimmer. The girls will take part in talent, swimsuit, and evening gown competition, and will be interviewed by the judges.

The panel of judges will include Mrs. Barbara Kelly of Martinsville, a former Miss Virginia; Mrs. Faye Christiansen of Roanoke, who works with the Miss Virginia pageant; Mr. Sig Smith of Alexandria, a former executive director of the Miss Florida Pageant; Mr. Richard Reynolds of Winston-Salem, a free-lance photographer who has judged many beauty pageants; and Mr. Duke Tucker of Charleston, South Carolina, who has judged numerous state pageants. Mrs. Kelly, Mr. Smith, and Mr. Reynolds were judges in last year's Miss Longwood Pageant.

The pageant is sponsored by the Executive Committee of the Miss Longwood Pageant. The committee members are Pat Necessary, General Chairman; Gail Waldron, Producer; Joan Putney, Director, and Bev Aston, Business Manager. These girls, and many others, as well as the contestants have worked very hard to make this year's contest a bigger success than ever before. They hope everyone will plan to attend and support the 1971 Miss Longwood.

Longwood Tutoring Program In Second Year Of Service

By MARGARET BLAIR

The Longwood College Tutorial Program, originally initiated jointly under the Prince Edward County School Administration and the college, is now in its second year. The program is a cooperative endeavor between the school division, the individual teacher and the tutor who acts as an assistant to the teacher.

Girls who are interested in tutoring must meet the six requirements set up by the Prince Edward County School Board:

- 1) All students must be on the Junior level or above and approved by their Department Chairman.
- 2) All students must have at least one course in reading and/or a methods course in techniques and procedures in teaching.
- 3) Specific problems assigned to the students must be identified by the teacher and Mr. Barham, Assistant Superintendent, prior to assignment.
- 4) Students will be assigned according to their ability to work with the designated problem.
- 5) Students must have a 2.0 point average or above.
- 6) A schedule consisting of the assignments and the time will be prepared by Mr. Barham and a student coordinator (Mary Berlin) and approved by Mr. E.H. Vassar of the Education Department. Each student will have a copy of the schedule.

The tutors assist primarily in the local elementary school for the reason that most problems occur because of reading deficiencies. Early qualified help will avoid deficiencies in the upper grades. The tutoring program does use some secondary majors, usually in languages in special areas.

Student tutors assist teachers on a voluntary basis, but they must have permission from their parents or guardians. All tutoring is done on the student's free time, and she works with children both individually and in small groups. The classroom teacher has prepared plans and instructions each day the tutors are scheduled to come. An advantage of the program is that the college student can ask qualified professors for assistance concerning teaching methods or the usage of materials for aids.

Last year, twenty-four Longwood students acted as tutors during the first semester and there were thirty-three second semester. This semester there are eleven student tutors. Some tutors who have already done their student teaching are taking part in the program for more experience.

It is hoped that the tutoring program will expand. Currently, it is evaluated by the tutors themselves at the end of each semester, and improvements are suggested. In the future, directors would like to train juniors who, when they become seniors, will train new junior members.

Board Meeting In Dorms Considered Highly Successful

By VICKI BOWLING

Improving Stubbs Mall was one of the variety of suggestions offered during the question-discussion periods held in each dorm March 8 and 9. Representatives from Legislative, Residence, and Judicial Boards conducted the meetings.

Open to all interested students, the meetings are "an attempt by Student Government to go directly to the students instead of the students having to come to us," according to Frankie Brown, chairman of Legislative Board. Small groups were an advantage, she thought. Ideas and questions were brought up that might never have been introduced in a mass meeting.

Frankie was at the meeting in Stubbs. Sorority members wanted to know why they had to pay corporation dues every semester. The locking of roof doors was questioned. Why teachers can dock grades if a student has attended two-thirds of the classes and academic probation for teachers were also areas of interest.

Suggestions from Stubbs included improving Stubbs Mall, perhaps by placing benches there. The possibility of installing dorm to dorm phones which would require no payment was mentioned.

Mary Tabb Johnston, chairman of Residence Board, helped conduct the meeting in Main. Many students there were interested in judicial procedure and the new curfew change, she reported.

In Curry, Jenny Boykin, a member of Judicial Board, helped answer questions concerning the proposed alcohol on campus. Students were interested in what regulations would be if the issue is passed. There was much discussion among the students themselves, she said.

Frankie said that the Boards will try to group and investigate the questions and suggestions. She thought that the meetings were generally well received. If possible the meetings will be held once a month.

Classes Will Not Be Held On Pre-Registration Day, April 27

The "In Group"

Due to the controversial events that followed, I feel that a rather belated follow-up of "The Eye Spy Case" editorial is in line. If the reader can recall, I made clear my opinions concerning disciplinary actions at Longwood. After several weeks of thought and consideration, I now realize that I made some very "strong and questionable" accusations. How could anyone come to such erroneous conclusions? In fact, how could anyone come to ANY conclusions? With closed trials, protected informers, unrevealed evidence, ambiguous rules, and the oath of secrecy the system seems to be above reproach. This was emphasized at the Judicial Board Open Forum which instilled such tremendous confidence in the judicial system.

However, many students are not satisfied with the great secret system, nor do they consider themselves to be "in good hands." Fortunately, students now realize that they can do something to change the traditional rules and proceedings that exist at Longwood. I am taking this opportunity to call for continued efforts and additional suggestions concerning Longwood's judicial system. However, I should advise any concerned student to align herself with the proper group. There is that group which is respected on campus and "will be listened to." Then there is the group which has been challenged on numerous occasions and labeled just as often. Beware of the anarchists, leftists, subversives, Communists, those bloodthirsty individuals, and the radical "Fierce Fighters" on campus. These people will hurt your cause. "Play politics!"

Former LC Student Represents Tech In Apple Festival

Miss Martha Ann Chevalier has been selected from among eight young ladies sponsored by various organizations to represent Virginia Tech in the 44th annual Shenandoah Apple Blossom Festival to be presented Friday, May 7, and Saturday, May 8, in Winchester, Virginia. Martha is a health and physical education major and was sponsored by the Health and Physical Education Majors Club. A native of Virginia Beach, Martha loves it here and feels that there is no comparison between Tech and her former school, Longwood College. Longwood's representative will be announced at a later time.

Letters to the Editor

A Concerned Board

In reference to Miss Reiter's editorial entitled "The Eye Spy Case" of February 24, Judicial Board would like to make the following points clear.

- 1) No student is brought to trial until a preliminary investigation is made from the facts involved in the case. No disciplinary action is taken without sufficient evidence.
- 2) Rumor, heresay, and idle gossip are not the basis for any trial or disciplinary action.
- 3) Miss Reiter professes to have knowledge of the particulars of most disciplinary action occurring on Longwood's campus. Such information is not obtainable through any "reliable" source.
- 4) Miss Reiter states that "A student never meets her accuser, but she must suffer the consequences of her informer's gossip." This statement is not true. In order to protect herself from undue pressure on campus, the accuser has the option to reveal herself to the accused. In such instances, the U. S. District Court for Western Missouri has ruled that "There is no requirement for confrontation or cross examination of witnesses."
- 5) In this editorial, Miss Reiter states that, "It is common knowledge that several students have been 'victimized' and pressured by Longwood's distorted tactics of discipline." It is doubtful if this "common knowledge" represents a complete and accurate report of any Judicial action since Judicial Board cannot reveal evidence or discuss the case with anyone.

Any "rumor" that is heard about a case can only be a result of the one-sided reports of those who testify, and they do not have access to all the information which Judicial Board can use to form their decision. As Miss Reiter implied, rumors can be destructive. We challenge Miss Reiter to give an instance in which she knows a student has been convicted on rumor or hearsay evidence. Judicial Board actions are based on the Handbook statement found on page 86, "The accused is ALWAYS considered innocent unless proved guilty."

Respectfully,
Judicial Board

Misquoted

Dear Editor:

There is one misquotation in the lead story on judicial procedures which I think needs to be brought to the attention of the student body. As quoted, the question was asked, "When a person is suspended for violation of the Honor Code what records can be seen?" The answer as quoted is, "If the period of suspension is still in effect the records can be shown to anyone inquiring in an official capacity." It should be made clear to the student body that no student records are made available to persons outside the college except at the student's own request. When a student transfers to another college the officials of that college normally contact officials at Longwood to ask if the student is in good standing. When that question is asked about a student who is under suspension, the response given is that the student is eligible to return at the end of the suspension period. No further information about the student's record is given.

One question frequently asked me about students' records that has no relevance to judicial proceedings is whether adverse letters can be placed in a student's placement file by faculty members who may have a 'grudge' against the student. The editorial remarks of your most recent edition indicate that threats to this effect have been made. I want to make it clear that nothing can be placed in a student's placement file that she herself does not request. The only letters put in the file are those which she solicits.

Sincerely,
Herbert R. Blackwell

An Expression Of Of Thanks

We would like to take this opportunity to respond to an article in a recent issue of the ROTUNDA concerning resident counselors. As freshmen, we realize the important role these upperclassmen play in helping us to adjust to college life.

During those first few weeks of college, we had many questions and various problems. Knowing there was someone who was willing to listen and who was willing to help us, created a more secure feeling amongst our hall. It is good to know that there is an upperclassman on each freshman hall who really does understand, since she has experienced the same situations or very similar ones as we did and will this year.

They have meant an awfully lot to us this year and we feel they are doing a very important job. Thank you, resident counselors.

Public School Response

Dear Dr. Sandidge:
c/o Editor of the Rotunda

I read your "Letter To The Editor" published in the latest issue of THE ROTUNDA with much interest, pride, and hope. It is very refreshing to find a citizen in Prince Edward County who is aware of what is happening in the public schools and is willing to publicly support and promote public education. Far too many persons are willing to support us verbally and in private only.

Students Work On Display

Examples of students' art work are now hanging in first and second floor hallways of the Bedford Building. The exhibit will continue through March 26.

The various art classes are represented by some of the finest works achieved in the class. Prints from the graphics class include linoleum cuts of Farmville architecture, embossings of everyday objects, and other combinations of print-making.

Still life, nonobjective, and abstract paintings decorate both floors. Delicate watercolors, silkscreens, and drawings dominate the second floor hallway along with collages and oil pastels in abstract motif from design class.

Sculpture class presents its

"plastery beasts" and transforms the main hallway into a delightful menagerie.

This show includes works from both semesters of art instruction and is a handsome combination of imagination and craftsmanship.

Yes! The Reed and Barton Silver Opinion Competition has only two weeks of life left at Longwood.

Sponsored by the Art Department, the contest offers $7,000 in prizes. First Grand Scholarship Award is $1,000 cash; second is $500, third is $300; and the next seven are $100 each. In addition, the next 100 winners will receive sterling, china, and crystal worth approximately $75.

"All ya' haf ta do is" select the three best combinations of sterling, china, and crystal, listing choices on the contest form. Editors of House Beautiful, Seventeen, and Bride's Magazine have already selected what they unanimously feel are the three most suitable combinations that can be made up from the 28 designs from which to choose. Prizes will be awarded to Scholarship Program entries matching (or nearest to) the opinion of the experts.

The campus representative, Mary Ann Bentley, and others will be canvassing until the close of the contest. Also, applications can be procured and filled out after dinner Wednesday through next Thursday in the new smoker, or by contacting the representative at 392-6268, 249 Frazer.

'Wuthering Heights' Poorly Cast, Great Disappointment

By LYNNE PIERCE

"Wuthering Heights" is an "all new adventure in entertainment" and "Emily Bronte's immortal story of defiant young love," or so the theater and producer would like you to believe. Unfortunately, the movie is far from immortal and the greatest adventure in it is discovering where Patrick Tilley found the strange copy of Miss Bronte's book that he used to base his screenplay on.

To the viewer who has not read the original novel, the discrepancies in the story are not noticeable; however, anyone who is familiar with the book is in for a shock. The time sequence is clumsily handled, often confusing and bears little resemblance to that in the book. The ending, however, is the most surprising point of the movie. I could not help but wonder how I missed Heathcliff being shot when I read the book, but then perhaps I read a different version than that used by Mr. Tilley.

The performances of the actors could have been a redeeming factor for the movie, but instead were a severe disappointment. Anna Calder-Marshall is at best a mediocre Cathy. Emily Bronte's character was a wild, but extremely beautiful, creature of the moors, with a temper no one could stand up to, but as Miss Calder-Marshall portrays her, Cathy becomes a simpering, spoiled brat and loses the power given her in the novel. Timothy Dalton is almost believable as Heathcliff, but he lacks the ability to be convincing in the role. He has tried very hard to perfect his wild, angry look, but he ends up looking like an old man, who peers at everything over the top of his glasses instead of through them.

"Wuthering Heights" cannot be considered a complete waste due to the outstanding camera work and landscape the movie was shot against. A striking feature of the book was the importance Emily Bronte accorded to the moors and this was captured in the film. The rolling hills, dotted with ancient ruins and laced with wild, overgrown moors, do more to set the mood than anything else. The use of colors and tone is outstanding. By far, the best scenes of the movie consist of the camera panning the countryside with the music of Michel Legrand in the background. This alone has enough aesthetic appeal to dull the effects of the rest of the movie to the point of toleration.

Quotes

By BELINDA BRUGH

The wrong people going hungry, the wrong people being loved, the wrong people dying. I thought if you loved me it didn't matter.

I've always wanted you — always! He's a sloppy irritating bastard ... more uplift than a film starlit. Do you feel sin crawling out of your ears?

If you slap my face — God, I'll lay you out!

Sycophantic, phlegmatic, and of course, top of the bill — pusillanimous

I'm in the fire, and I'm burning, and all I want is to die.

Horrorifying and oddly exciting. Why, why, why, why do we let these women bleed us to death? Have you ever watched somebody die?

And you think I should be overcome with awe because that cruel, stupid girl is going to have a baby!

A silly symphony for people who couldn't bear the pain of being human beings any longer.

Founder's Day — We've Come A Long Way !

By LYNDA VAN HORN

"Students must get permission from the President of the College or from the Head of the Home to leave town" This is one of the many rules set down in the 1931 edition of the State Teachers College Handbook.

This weekend Longwood will celebrate Founders Day with dedicatory services of the new buildings on campus.

It is interesting to look back into the history of the college and into the type of school life the average student led.

From Seminary To College.

According to history, Longwood traces its beginnings back to March 5, 1839, with the incorporation of Farmville Female Seminary Association. This school was housed in one building now a part of Ruffner Hall. Very little is known about this school. It is believed to be associated with two older women's seminaries in Farmville begun in 1833. If this is true Longwood can claim this year as its founding date.

In 1860 the school was expanded and became known as the Farmville Female College. The student body was limited to 30 pupils to "Ensure each pupil all the care and attention promotive of health and comfort, and to make this emphatically a Home School," according to the first college catalogue.

Bible As Only Book

The school was operated very much as a home for girls with all of the students and teachers living and working together. Every minute of every day was carefully planned to afford the girls the ultimate in education. "Instead of remaining in cliques in their rooms, out of school hours to spend their time in gossip and scandal, the young ladies are encouraged to assemble with the teachers in the parlors and library with needlework or book."

Farmville Female College was opened basically for area girls with little or no admission requirements. The school was operated mainly on funds drawn from the state and from private donations. Parents of girls did not have to worry over money for tuition and were encouraged not to give their daughters any "pocket money, nor countenance them in extravagant expenditures."

Although a library is mentioned in this catalogue, this is in reference to a reading room rather than a place for a collection of books. Apparently the reading of books other than textbooks or the Bible was frowned upon. "Novels and promiscuous newspapers and pamphlets will not be received into the college without consent of the President."

"Rule By Love"

In the Farmville College catalogue of 1876-77 emphasis was still placed on the "home" atmosphere at the college. At this time the number of students had grown to 112—almost four times the original number. The college had added in this catalogue information concerning honor and regulations of the college.

In order to imitate a family atmosphere, the college's aim was to "rule by love and not by penalties; demerits are sparingly used, espionage strictly avoided, the honor and self-respect of the pupil constantly appealed to."

There were few written regulations at the college, but those stated in the catalogue were quite conclusive and limiting. Girls living at the college were not allowed to leave the grounds at any time except through express permission. The students were not allowed to receive visitors during school or study hours "nor the visits of young gentlemen at any time except at the discretion of the President."

Parents in this year were urged to send their daughters spending money to be kept for her by some officer of the college as the "President cannot advance money to pay for books, stationery, express or freight charges, or like incidental expenses."

College Given To The State

In 1884 because of war and lack of operating funds for the college, a group of Farmville citizens purchased the old Female Seminary or College and offered the buildings to the state to set up a "normal" or teaching institution in Prince Edward County. On March 7, 1884, the state legislature passed an act establishing the State Female Normal School. This was the first State institution in Virginia for women to acquire higher education.

In the first college catalogue of the Normal School is recorded the purpose of the school. It was established "for the education of white female teachers for the free public schools of the state of Virginia."

There was no admission charge for those students who signed a pledge saying they would teach at least two years immediately upon graduation from the college. There were at least 88 of these students from across the state. There was also no charge for area ministers' daughters. Three girls attended under this category. There were also 30 students—bringing the total to 120—who did not sign the pledge and paid a yearly fee of $30.

For the first time admission requirements were expressly stated. The candidates for admission must be recommended by the Superintendent of Schools in their respective city or county. Each county and city was allotted a certain number that could be recommended.

Educational requirements were rather vague and not at all easily determined: Minimum literacy requirements included: "the ability to read fluently, and to express thoughts in grammatical English, to write a fair hand, to spell correctly, to solve problems of moderate difficulty under all the ordinary rules of arithmetic; to locate the principal cities, rivers, and mountains of the world and to give the boundaries of any specific State of the Union, to describe the leading events in the history of the United States."

In 1914 the School dropped the "Female" from its title and became the State Normal School for Women.

Officially A Teacher's College

It was officially recognized as a teachers college in 1924 when the name was again changed to State Teachers College at Farmville. In the earliest Student Handbook of this college on record issued in 1931 are many of the regulations placed on the girls. For example, all students were required to attend all meals and all classes. Excuses were allowed "on account of accident, illness for an hour or so, or bad news."

No student was allowed to smoke or to leave or return to the college "with young men without special permission from the President or the Head of the Home." The Head of the Home is similar to the present day Dean of Women.

Longwood

It was not until 1949 that Longwood College got its present name taken from "Longwood," the birthplace of Confederate General Joseph E. Johnston.

Saturday faculty, alumni, and students will join to celebrate the growth of a college for over a century at festivities of Founders Day.

LC Is Top Virginia Fencing Team

Baldwin And Harvey In Top Six

LC Coach Takes Second In Open

Longwood's Fencing Team showed their true skill as they captured the title of Number One Virginia State Fencing Team in the Intercollegiate Tournament held here in Iler Gym on Saturday, March 13.

The first team, which is composed of Mary Frances Baldwin, Temple Harvey and Jo Anne Canada, started the tournament off fencing the Hollins College team. They quickly defeated Hollins' team 2-1 and moved up in the winners' column. Madison College was their next opponent, and again LC came out on top by a score of 2-1. Radford College, whom Longwood had lost to earlier in the season, became the next contender for the semifinal position. Longwood again came through with a victory of 2-1 and moved to the finals, facing Penn State University.

The meet was fenced on a double elimination system, meaning that each team had to be defeated twice before they were disqualified from further competition. Longwood, who up to this point had not lost to any team, faced Penn State, who had to defeat LC twice in order to capture the first team title. Scores in these bouts were 2-1 and 3-0 with Penn State winning.

However, Longwood had not lost entirely. Former students of Dr. Caroline Sinclair, a former fencing instructor and coach in various Virginia colleges, donated this year an award in her honor to be given to the top Virginia State Team. Since Longwood had worked themselves up to a place in the finals, they were declared Virginia's top fencing team out of eight other Virginia colleges competing for the honor.

Two Make Top Six

For the individual competition, six fencers from the first team division who had won the most bouts fought, were chosen. Longwood's Temple Harvey and Mary Frances Baldwin both gained a position in the top six fencers of the Intercollegiate Tournament. These top six then fenced each other to obtain a number one fencer. Temple Harvey, showing much skill for a first year fencer, won the third place award in this division. Mary Baldwin finished fifth.

The number one spot went to Clare Tate of Penn State. Other places were: second, Anne Elmore, N. C. State; fourth, Mary Karondosouski, Penn State; and sixth, Mary Jane Ferrell, Radford.

Coach Takes Second

Miss Sally Bush, Longwood's Fencing Coach, took second place in the Open Division. The Open Division, which includes college coaches and alumni, had nine entries this year. Miss Bush, who won six out of her eight bouts, defeated coaches from Virginia and out of state. Miss Emily Ryals, Randolph-Macon's coach, took first place for the second consecutive year. Miss Beth Alphin, Penn State coach, placed third.

In other competition, during the day, Mary Washington College placed first in the Second Team competition, and Randolph-Macon Woman's College placed first in the Novice Team event.

Longwood had entries in both of these divisions. Team members Janice Russell, Faye Ingram, Rose Bowen, Joyce Saunders, and Nan Sayles gave their opponents a good fight before being defeated.

Colleges competing included: Hollins, Longwood, Lynchburg, Madison, Mary Washington, Mary Baldwin, N. C. State, Penn State, Randolph-Macon W. C., Radford, and William and Mary.

Dr. Dennis Morey of Richmond presented a lecture-clinic on Friday night for the fencers. He, Peter Lynne of Lynchburg College, Mrs. Anne McComas of Norfolk, and Miss Rosemary Rummell of Madison College served as the official directors of the tournament. Miss Anne Henderson of Lynchburg College served as head official of the meet.

This officially ended Longwood's season. However, some of the team members will be traveling to William and Mary on April 10 for the AFLA State Championship Foil Competition.

Next year's Intercollegiate Tournament will be held at Madison College in Harrisonburg, Virginia.

Karate Demonstration To Show Skill And Poise

Karate a sport for all who are game.

By SYLVIA SMITH

Phil Woodward and Nick D'Ambrosia, will perform a Karate Exhibition at 7:30, March 21, in Her Gym. The exhibition is sponsored by the Oriental Society.

The Supermen of Karate work faster than speeding bullets. Their speed makes the difference. Through several years of careful training the karate students learn the precision skills necessary to perform their art.

The program will include some exercises; katas, kicks, one step sparring and finally free sparring — tournament style. Their stretching and limbering exercises are like ballet, slow and graceful. Katas are formal drills in which the participants, from a standing position execute blocks and kicks. The one-step sparring is a training effort to acquaint the reflexes with the skills used in counter moves. Finally the free-sparring demonstrates a real tournament situation of one to one contact and attack.

Like the Hai Karate commercial, Phil and Nick will break bricks and boards too, but in controlled methods. Nick will break seven one-inch boards at once and Phil will break dangling boards at seven feet.

Both boys studied karate in the D.C. area. Phil studied with Jhoon Rhee, a native of Korea. Rhee is one of the best in the country and "The Black Belt," a karate magazine in California has called him "The Pied Piper of Korean Karate." The Kwon Do form of Korean Karate, which Phil studied, is the most popular in Vietnam, where it is used in hand-to-hand combat. This Kwon Do form is the most graceful and brutal type of karate.

Nick studied at an Air Force base in Alexandria. His concentration is Bondo Karate and he is especially good at breaking. This form uses the power of the fingers, using a spear thrust method of attack, and is more offensive.

Karate is more than chopping blocks. It is a sport that breeds self-confidence.

One thousand, five hundred pounds of thrust are concentrated at the point of impact. Total muscle concentration gives 100% efficiency against an opponent or in breaking. The main body forces are the hips, shoulder motion, and stomach tension.

The Karate yell, from the stomach, is also useful. Besides scaring the opponent it helps release the extreme tension in the stomach.

Both Phil and Nick have earned their brown belts, second only to the black belt, the highest order of karate.

Following the exhibition there will be a question and answer session in the Her classroom. Refreshments will be served.

Welfare Services Increasing In Prince Edward County

Mr. George P. Stone, director of Social Services in Prince Edward County, was the guest speaker at a meeting of the Human Relations Council in the First Baptist Church on March 11, at 8 p.m.

Speaking on the welfare system in Prince Edward County, Mr. Stone explained the structure of the system and the various services offered by the poor. He said that the Welfare Department is different in that it has divided loyalty, receiving federal, state, and local funds. There are also different services offered by each division.

Within the federal structure there are four major programs, aid to dependent children, aid to the blind, old age assistance, and aid to the permanently disabled (ages 18-65).

There are several state and locally ministered services. Medicare is paid for by the state through tax revenue. The Foster Care Program provides for children committed by the courts or the parents. At this time Farmville has placed thirty-two children in foster homes. Because Prince Edward County is without a probation officer, Social Services is also responsible for the probation of children in the juvenile court.

Mr. Stone emphasized the fact that these services are ever increasing. In 1968 there were only 148 welfare cases, now there are 386 in Farmville.

"Dean's" Luncheonette Enjoys Serving Students

By CHRISTINE SHARPE

"Dean's," the luncheonette behind Stubbs, has been open for 24 years and has been catering to Longwood students for 15 years.

In an interview with Mrs. Dean she freely discussed her relationship with Longwood and its students as a result of the luncheonette's proximity to the college.

Mrs. Dean said that she made many friends of Longwood students who frequent the luncheonette. "A majority of the students who come here are from Richmond and Roanoke," she said, "but we get them from all over." Graduates of Longwood still come back to visit with the Deans.

Once asked by a customer where the Longwood girls got their manners, Mrs. Dean replied, "They come to school with their manners. They're just excellent." She said that all of the girls that she and her husband come in contact with are very nice.

Longwood students have been eating at the luncheonette for the past 15 years. At first the students who were student teaching at the local high school stopped there on their way to and from the high school. Soon other students began to eat there or just stop in for ice cream or a coke. When Stubbs and Lankford were being built the Deans "felt like a part" of Longwood. They served many of the workmen. Then when the dormitory was completed many students from Stubbs visited the luncheonette. Now not only students but also teachers have their lunch at "Dean's."

When asked her feelings about Longwood, Mrs. Dean said, "The college has helped the community to grow and it is an asset to business."

Why do Longwood students go to "Dean's"? Mrs. Dean felt that they go there "just to relax" and to get away from it all. Many students go there during exam time to study in the quiet and restful atmosphere.

"Dean's Luncheonette" is a quiet place to get away from it all and enjoy a pleasant meal. One Longwood junior said, "We used to get the best hamburgers there my freshman year and for only 25¢." The atmosphere and good food can still be found at "Dean's but due to inflation the hamburgers are now 30¢.

Flat Hat Obscenity Charges Dropped

By LYNNE PIERCE

The "obsenity" issue involving the Flat Hat, William and Mary's newspaper, was settled temporarily last week when the Board of Student Affairs accepted a report submitted to it by Publications Committee, which absolved the charges against the paper.

After reviewing the letters of complaint and the testimony of Editor-in-Chief Tom McDonald, the Publications Committee issued a statement that it could not "claim complete understanding of what constitutes obscenity" and, since the editor had made every effort to correct his mistake, it felt the charges against him and the paper should be dropped. The recommendation also warned "it is a dangerous practice to challenge an editor's prerogative to exercise his own discretion in deciding what is essential to accurate reporting."

State Court Rules Riot Act Violates Right Of Assembly

By LYNNE PIERCE

The Virginia Supreme Court ruled last week that an important part of the 1968 antiriot act is unconstitutional because it is "over broad." The ruling came in a case involving two Charlottesville men, William Sylvester Owens and Roy Lee Ferguson, Jr., who were arrested and tried shortly after the act became a law.

Owens and Ferguson were arrested on September 8, 1968, during disturbances in Charlottesville and sentenced to six months in jail. In appealing the case, a lawyer for the men charged that the law infringed on the rights of free speech and peaceful assembly guaranteed in the U.S. and Virginia Constitutions.

The court upheld the motion and stated in its opinion that the act makes an assembly of persons for exciting public alarm or disturbing the peace unlawful. However, it fails to meet the common law interpretation which requires a clear and present danger of violent conduct to be involved. Under the law, a peaceful, silent gathering to discuss public danger or pollution would be unlawful.

The court declared the act to be unconstitutional because it conflicts with the First Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. The convictions of Owens and Ferguson were ordered to be reversed because they were convicted under a statutory definition the court will not accept.

The law could be saved by two alterations according to the court. It could be amended to exclude those assemblies protected by the First Amendment and it must be qualified so that a clear and present danger of violence is involved in order for the assembly to be unlawful.

Dr. Donald Bryant To Lecture Here On British Voices

Dr. Donald C. Bryant, a professor in the department of speech and dramatic art at the University of Iowa, will speak here March 17, at 3 p.m., on "British Voices for America, 1765-1783." Dr. Bryant is an authority on Edmund Burke and parliamentary and public speaking and writing during his period in 18th century England. In addition to his teaching and lecturing duties, he has contributed to books and articles.

Colleges In The News

Professors Sue

RADFORD — Four professors are suing Radford College in a case which names Dr. Charles K. Martin, the college president, as a co-defendant. The four were notified that their employment would be terminated at the end of this academic year and they have charged that this action is in no way connected with their academic competence. The local chapter of the NEA is supporting the professors and is seeking assistance from the national group.

Boycott at VPI

BLACKSBURG — SGA President Sandy Hawthorne has declared a student boycott of the University Bookstore, dining hall snack bars and all drink and candy machines on the VPI campus. Hawthorne stated two goals for the action — "We want to demonstrate to the University that they can be hurt . . . and that students are capable of sustaining a long term political action." Student volunteers began selling candy and drinks in the dorm to replace the machines and local stores are stocking textbooks.

SGA Censure Fails

RICHMOND — An attempt to censure President Jim Elam was defeated by the House of Representatives at VCU. The action was prompted when Elam confessed he had not been signing all bills passed by the Congress, although the school constitution requires him to do so. The censure failed mainly due to the fact that bills become law without being signed unless Elam notifies the Congress differently.

Drug Charges at U.Va.

CHARLOTTESVILLE — Ted Foote, former president of the Interfraternity Council, announced that drug cases at U. Va. may be handled by city and state police without first notifying University officials. State police have notified the Dean of Students that they are discontent with the handling of students caught with drugs. Previously, flagrant use of drugs was handled by the Governing Board of the IFC, which has only handed down warnings to the fraternities. No definite decision has been made as to who will control drug cases in the fraternities or whether there will be a change of policy concerning the dormitories.

Joint Council at W&L

LEXINGTON — Washington & Lee University has taken a definite step in putting policy control on an equal level between students and administration. The first meeting of the newly formed University Council, which will consist of students, faculty and administration, took place recently and made the important decision to have co-chairmen, with one student and one administrator elected to the posts. The council agreed to meetings scheduled monthly and for them to be open to the public; however, the council can be called to a meeting anytime by a chairman or by two-thirds of the body. The council faces a range of issues which could include drugs, ROTC credit, coeducation and dormitory and fraternity rules as a start.

Part I — A Two-Part Series

LC Students Profit From Observing At Campus School

By LYNNE WILSON

Longwood's Campus School, which opened in August of 1970, is a working example of Longwood's approach to education. An academic department of Longwood with its own allocations from the state, the Campus School is operated by an excellent faculty with access to modern equipment and teaching aids.

According to Dr. Lee Land, principal of the Campus School, the primary purpose of the school is the correlation of theory and practice in Longwood's teacher training program. The school allows the future teachers to observe and work with the basic teaching techniques studied in the classroom.

Two programs have been set up at the school for Longwood students. The first is the teacher observation program usually involving freshmen and sophomores. It is usually arranged through an education course, but all students are welcome to request a time to visit the school and observe the classes. With as many as six girls observing at once, the class simply continues its routine work.

By April the Campus School will have closed circuit TV's so the Longwood students will be able to observe while not actually in the classroom. Students will observe live classes on TV in the Hiner Building, or if the college class wishes to see the program at the campus school and discuss the classroom activities with Dr. Land, there is a college student's room set up for this purpose.

The advantages of the closed circuit TV are obvious. The classes can be taped and viewed over and over. Should a question arise concerning the class, the tape can be played back and the question cleared up. By observing the class via TV, the Longwood students are free to comment, ask questions, or discuss the class in progress.

When asked if the observers distracted students or teachers at the campus school, Dr. Land said little or no attention was paid to the observers. He does not anticipate any problems when the TV goes into use either. Wearing a cordless mike, the teacher will move about the room and conduct class as usual.

The second program incorporated at the campus school for Longwood students is the program of participation. The Longwood student acts as a teaching assistant from 8:00 to 3:00 for two successive days. Elementary trainees will assist in one of the grades from one through five. Secondary majors will assist in the sixth or seventh grade. The girls will perform a variety of functions during their two days, including giving special assistance to students with questions, grading papers, making out tests or working with the office equipment.

Two Concerts

The Department of Music will present two concerts in connection with the dedication of the Wygal Music Building during the Founders Day week end. The faculty, students, and public are cordially invited to attend them.

On Friday evening, March 19, at 8 o'clock, the Department will present a program made up of selections by the Concert Choir conducted by Dr. John W. Molnar, a clarinet solo by Willie Ann Voyten accompanied by Jeanne Richardson, the Madrigal Singers in two numbers, and individual solos by Mr. Robert Blasch, pianist, Mr. Paul Hesselink, organist, and Mr. James McCombs, bass-baritone. Miss Pauline V. Boehm and Miss Frieda E. Myers will play the four-hand accompaniment to four numbers by the concert choir. A reception for Mr. and Mrs. Wygal will follow the concert.

On Saturday afternoon, the Fairfax High School Chorale and Madrigal Singers will present a program under the direction of Mr. Fred O. Wygal, Jr. A feature of the program will be "Psalm 98," composed especially for this occasion by Mr. David F. Shaw. This will be the first performance of this composition. An open house will follow the concert.

Senior Recital

Sherry O'Neal Foglesong, senior music education major, will present her graduating organ recital Sunday, March 21, at 4:00 o'clock in the Recital Hall of Wygal Music Building.

Included in the program will be George Friderick Handel's "Organ Concerto No. 4 in F Major (The Cuckoo and the Nightingale); Johann Sebastian Bach's "Toccat, Adagio, and Fugue in C major," BWV 564; two organ settings of the chorale "O Sacred Head, Now Wounded," by Johannes Brahms; and Marcel Dupre's "Prelude and Fugue in G Minor."

Mrs. Elinor Dalton, soprano, will assist in the recital. She has chosen to sing three arias from the Bach cantata literature; she will be accompanied by Miss Foglesong.

Miss Foglesong is chaplain of Sigma Alpha Iota, a member of AGO, MENC, president of the Concert Choir, active Jarman Singers, and member of Honors Council.

She is a student of Mr. Paul S. Hesselink, Assistant Professor of Music at the college.

Dr. David Kaplan To Discuss Drugs At Wesley Center

Dr. David M. Kaplan, a senior at the Medical College of Virginia, will speak on drugs and their abuse at the Wesley Foundation on March 17, at 7:00 p.m.

Dr. Kaplan is a native of Roanoke and a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania. Dr. Kaplan works in the Adolescent Clinic at the Medical College which serves young people between the ages of 12 and 21.

The patients in the Adolescent Clinic come from all parts of the state and all socio-economic levels. Among the problems that are treated at the clinic are those of growth and development, school, drug abuse, and personal relationships. The Adolescent Clinic attempts to examine and treat youth in order to help them find a useful place in society.

From his work in the Adolescent Clinic and with "Hotline," the Richmond Crisis Intervention Center, Dr. Kaplan has a wide background on the subject of drugs. He will bring two former drug addicts with him for the program. All are invited to attend.

Four To Present Recital

The Longwood Department of Music will feature four Longwood vocalists in a recital in Wygal Recital Hall, on March 24, at 8:00 p.m. The four singers, students of Mr. James McCombs, will be Cheryl Brown, a soprano accompanied by Willie Ann Voyten; Sharon Lee, a soprano accompanied by Nancy Hardman; Jimmie Lu Null, an alto accompanied by Nina Garrison; and Cathy Webb, a soprano accompanied by Anne Lewis. The program will include art songs in German, contemporary American and English songs, and selections from several operas.

Mr. Duke Planning Trip To New York For Next February

By JULIA STEPHENSON

Plans for a weekend trip for Longwood social science majors to New York City in 1972 are being made now, said Mr. William Duke as he appraised the trip taken last month.

The trip is scheduled for Feb. 24-27, 1972. It will cost $40.00 which covers transportation and accommodations, plus money for eating expenses for three days. A bonus will be complimentary tickets to the Tonight Show.

The weekend trip, which has been made for three years, has two purposes, Mr. Duke said. The first is for his government classes to take a tour of the United Nations Building. The second is for his government classes to do and see what they want "unconstrained by the nausea of an organized tour."

After the UN tour the girls are free to sight-see, bum around, or take in a Broadway show. Located in Manhattan, they are in easy walking distance of Chintown, the Stock Exchanges, St. Patrick's Cathedral, Rockefeller Center, and several famous art museums. "If they don't see something, it is their own fault," commented Mr. Duke.

Kappa Delta was recently honored with a visit from her National President, Mrs. Pat Merrill.

The following girls were welcomed into Kappa Delta as pledges: Lin Davis, Mary Beth Downy and Sloan Sherrill.

Alpha Delta Pi Sweetie

Tommy Johnson, a sophomore at Hampden-Sydney College, has become the "Sweetheart" of Alpha Delta Pi sorority. When asked how this came about Frankie Brown said, "So many fraternities have sweethearts, so why couldn't we? We wanted someone who wasn't someone's boy friend, someone we could all be friends with."

Many of the sisters had met him at Tom's Campus Room and when he visited the chapter room during open house. All the girls liked him immediately and when he was nominated for "Pi Guy" he received a unanimous vote. At least twenty of the sisters drove to Hampden-Sydney that night and serenaded Tommy outside his window at Cushing Dormitory.

"My roommates knew what was going to happen and they had been acting funny all night. They were really giving me a lot of grief." When Tommy heard the girls outside he realized what was happening.

He became the official "Pi Guy" during a ceremony held in the chapter room. "I felt kind of funny," Tommy said, "It's not an everyday occurrence."

Angie Folley summed up the sisters' feelings by stating, "Tommy is a big brother and boy friend all rolled into one."

New Honor Code Protects Students At R-M

By VICKI BOWLING

A graduated penalty system and abolition of the 24 hour period are among the features of the new Honor Code adopted by Randolph-Macon College on February 15.

At R-MC, an accuser must confront any student whom he believes has violated the Honor Code. With the changes making the Code a more just one, it is hoped that more students will accept this responsibility.

Under the new Code, there are five possible penalties: (1) expulsion, (2) suspension for the rest of the term, (3) suspension for one or more terms, (4) campus and/or social restriction, and (5) a reprimand.

Also related to the graduated penalty system is the practice of noting on a student's permanent record the fact that he was convicted of an Honor Code offense. Now no notation will be made unless suspension or expulsion is recommended.

The 24 hour period following confrontation during which the student could withdraw from school and avoid a trial was abolished. It was felt that this self-imposed maximum penalty was extremely harsh. Also, the phrase "Withdrew of own volition" noted on a permanent record signifies to all Virginia colleges that the student was suspected of an honor violation. The student who formerly chose to withdraw was really not escaping the charge.

Under the new system, a confronted student is required to have a trial, at which time evidence, testimony, and defense will all be presented.

A system of legal advisors has been set up. Four students appointed for two year terms will act as counsel. An accused may choose one to aid with his defense, or he may choose a member of the student body at large. Another advisor will act as prosecutor. No one advisor will serve in the same capacity for every trial.

A refusal of a student to testify will be considered a conduct offense and will be treated accordingly, unless the student is using the Fifth Amendment. Previously any refusal to testify was noted on a student's permanent record.

The rights of the accused are clearly stated in the new Code. Any denial of these rights may be grounds for a mistrial.

A Commendation

Dear Miss Worthington:

Last semester I had the opportunity to serve on a Review Board concerning three cases on which the Judicial Board had acted. I wish EVERYONE could have an opportunity to serve on a Review Board, and could see the type of conscientious and diligent investigation of all factors involved.

The above experience leads me to commend the students and their faculty advisor, who give so much of themselves and of their time to render this service to Longwood students and to their college by willingly serving on the Judicial Board.

Sincerely,
Kathleen G. Cover

Williamsburg Speakers Shout

To An Unresponsive Crowd

WARNING: "Do not try to get involved in a riot. However, in the event of a police riot, remember that everyone within the assembly will be considered a rioter. Get out of the range of fire. If tear gas is used, try to throw the canister away from the crowds." This was a rather stiff warning given to a group of 2,000 students who gathered at the William and Mary Amphitheater last Thursday to "consider an alternative view of peace and justice."

It was evident that the peaceful group of 2,000 that had gathered had other more important things on their mind besides rioting. They considered the sun, Lake Matoaka, and how much of a donation to give for the free hot-dogs, cokes, and fruit.

As they ate their free food, they partially listened to the day long speakers who yelled, chanted, shook their fists, and quoted pages of 'Nixon propaganda in an attempt to rouse the unresponsive crowd.'

Perhaps part of the lack of spirit lay in the fact that many students were disappointed when John Froines, one of the Chicago defendants, and Leonard Weinglass, a lawyer for the Chicago conspiracy trial cancelled because of personal reasons.

Of the speakers who were present, however, there were only two who received any sort of response from the college crowd. Rennie Davis, one of the Chicago 7 defendants and the organizer of the Peoples Coalition for Peace managed to gain a standing ovation, as did Allan Ginsberg, the poet.

Ginsberg introduced to the crowd, "the long hum" which consisted of three hums in succession. The single syllable sound, as explained by Ginsberg was to "unify the body in a single gesture of rhythmic behavior."

But, the day as a whole was to many individuals "disappointing." It became evident that the war movement has slowed down considerably and the once active students of last year's marches seem to be disinterested, and tired of protesting in the streets.

This unresponsive attitude on the part of the former marchers for peace can lead one to ask, where is the peace movement? One can further speculate on the turn out for the planned April 24 offensive against Washington.

Board of Visitors To Review Alcohol Rules May 5

By SYLVIA SMITH

Revised Drinking regulations were passed by the Student Committee at its meeting on March 15. The following rules will now be up for reapproval by the Board of Visitors who will meet May 7, 1971.

- Any intoxication (to the extent that a student's condition or conduct shall be offensive, disruptive, or destructive) or consumption of alcoholic beverages in public, violates the Virginia State law and the acceptable standards of student conduct at Longwood College. Possession and consumption of alcoholic beverages on the Longwood Campus must be in compliance with applicable laws of the Commonwealth of Virginia. In summary the law specifies the following:
  - The prohibition of liquor, wine, and beer for all those beneath the age of 21. (3.2 beer is permitted for ages 18-21.
  - Virginia law precludes the consumption of alcoholic beverages which are being transported, or are in one's possession, in public shall be concealed from view.
- The following regulation, agreed upon by both the Executive Cabinet of the Student Association and the administration of the College, are intended to interpret further — and more specifically — the general drinking rules.
  - Individual residence hall rooms will be the only areas on the campus considered private and, therefore, are the only areas where alcoholic beverages may be consumed. Hallways, parlors, recreation rooms, sorority chapter rooms, and kitchens are not included in the definition of residence hall rooms.
  - Only 3.2 beer will be allowed in the Freshman Dorms.
  - During "Open House," a residence hall, including individual rooms, will be considered a public area, and alcoholic beverages may not be consumed — either by students or their guests.
  - Guests of students or the College are obliged to abide by all College regulations.
  - In residence halls, excessive noise or any other activity which infringes upon the rights of others will be dealt with by Residence Board. Penalties will normally be: First violation will result in a warning, second violation — campus, third violation — social probation, and fourth violation will be referred to Judicial Board with a recommendation of suspension.
  - Any students not abiding by the state law will be dealt with by Judicial Board (1) Penalties for any student, 21 years or older, aiding and abetting those under 21 years of age will normally be: First violation — campus, second violation — social probation, and third violation may result in suspension. (2) Penalties for possession and consumption by persons under 21 years of age will normally be the same as for aiding and abetting.
- Beer will be sold at the Club House on Longwood Estate to be consumed only on the premises, and only beer purchased there may be consumed. The staff at the Club House reserves the right to ask for identification.
  - Anyone violating the above regulation will be asked to leave the premises.

The student committee members are: Linda Southworth, Jody Mace, Debbie Chapman, Bobsie Bannin, Kathy Barclay, chairman, Frankie Brown, Joan Putney, and Mary Tabb Johnston.

Chichester-Clark Resigns

BELFAST, NORTHERN IRELAND — Northern Ireland was thrown into a political crisis as Prime Minister James Chichester resigned Saturday, after a vain attempt by the British government to persuade him not to resign. British Prime Minister Heath had sent Defense Minister Lord Carrington to Ireland to assure Chichester-Clark that British troops would support him. However, Chichester-Clark stepped down under pressure from militant Protestants to institute harsher measures against the Catholic-oriented Irish Republican Army. Chichester-Clark will remain in office until a new government can be formed, probably under Brian Faulkner. Rev. Ian Paisley, Protestant leader, has announced he will not support Faulkner.

Calley Jury Meeting

FT. BENNING, GA. — The jury in the trial of Lt. William Calley extended its deliberations of the past week over the weekend, which would include an extensive rereading of testimony involving four prosecution witnesses. The rereading of the testimony was allowed over the objections of defense attorneys who claimed that it gives the government a second chance at convicting Calley.

Class Registration for Fall Semester set for April 27

Registration, which has been moderately revised, will be held in Lankford Building, April 27, beginning at 8:00 a.m.

One change from last year is that students will register for first semester only. Dean Wells said that it is difficult to plan a year ahead. Registration for the spring semester will be held in November.

Seniors and juniors will register in the morning with sophomores following in the afternoon. 100 students will register each half hour. Order will be determined by drawing numbers. On April 21, students will draw numbers for registration and rooms.

Students can pick up registration forms in the Registrar's Office April 5. Students should then consult their advisors from April 5 to 26. Day students should make an effort to draw numbers April 21, but if this is not possible, they should go to the Registrar's Office the next day.

Schedule changes which result from any mix-up at registration should be made at the Registrar's Office within the week after registration. There will also be a free change period from August 9 to 20. Students should write the Registrar during this time.

Summer school catalogs will be available in early April. To register for summer school, one must fill out the form in the catalog and send it to the Director of Admissions along with an application for admission.

"I'd Rather Let Them Drink Than Smoke Dope," says Alumni

By ETHEL REITER

The probability of having alcohol in dormitories attracted the greatest amount of discussion from Longwood alumnae at the Founder's Day Symposium held in the Wynn Building, 3:00 p.m. Saturday.

Dr. William L. Frank, chairman of the English Department, made the introductory remarks. He explained that the panel was intended to be very unstructured and informal. The purpose of the symposium was to bring together representatives of the administration, faculty, and student body who could answer any questions the alumnae may have concerning present situations at Longwood.

The members of the panel were Frankie Brown, chairman of Legislative Board, Nancy Fowlkes, president of the Junior Class, Dr. Patton Lockwood, head of the Department of Speech and Dramatic Art, and Dr. Herbert

Open Forum With Legislative Board Draws Few Students

By VICKI BOWLING

The Bookstore, an interphone system, and curfew change, were topics which dominated the Legislative Board Open Forum held in Jeffers March 16.

The forum was conducted as a regular Legislative Board meeting.

An interphone system drew much response from the relatively few students present. Such a system would enable a student to call somewhere on campus without paying. Mr. T.C. Dalton, one of the advisors to Legislative Board, said that the possibility of installing one has been investigated. The initial expense is rather high, but he said that if the students want it, it will be investigated further. Money would come from student activities fees, which would have to be raised.

The bookstore was another subject of discussion, particularly in regard to prices. Books are sold at prices set by the college, Mr. Dalton reported. Prices of art supplies are regulated by volume. To those who felt that the Bookstore Committee should meet, he suggested that they ask the chairman to call a meeting.

In reply to a question on elections procedure, a spokesman for Elections Committee replied that elections are held in the dorms to get more students to vote. The fact that this makes it hard for day students to vote was mentioned, followed by a suggestion of having day student wires.

After spring break, curfew will be 12:00 Monday through Thursday nights. Classrooms will be kept open until 11:30 p.m., but there are insufficient funds to allow Lankford and the library to remain open.

Farmville merchants have been asked by the college not to cash student checks or accept student charges unless a student I.D. is shown. There have been incidents involving bad checks.

There were various other questions which Legislative Board answered. Student teach-

Good Friday At Longwood

"Let us go; the fog is rising"

E. Dickinson

By ALEXANDER THEROUX

Good Friday, you will have noticed, is a school day at Longwood College this year. We call it Good Friday; the formal observance of this day here, however, seems to recapitulate the rather classic definition of Lichtenberg's Knife: "a weapon with no blade that has the handle missing." It is no more Good Friday, as far as public observance goes, than the celebration of the Penny Post, the annexation of Wyoming, or a commemoration to George Washington Carver's miraculous peanut. And we who celebrate, orate over, shush up in reverence about, and proclaim, not to say apotheosize, every dead statesman, movie star, rock musician, baseball player, and world leader have to vacantly shuffle on about our business on April 9 and proceed to dissect minks, solve quadratic equations, and memorize the dates of the Thirty Years' War. Pluralism is a merciful narcotic.

There is a secularism so palpable in the Modern World — I include Farmville — that it seems with the passage of only a few years more we'll be staining cathedrals the color of money, calling sleep a liturgy, and writing out inch-long poems made out of mindless slogans dedicated to the muse, Hexachlorophene. Nowadays, before us is spread out a rosary of asinine worship, the asininity residing in degree not in kind, and consequently while we are accorded "days off" to observe space flights, watch funerals, honor Lee and Jackson, and eat turkey, that holy day that commemorates the central act of all human history — Jesus Christ's crucifixion — we write out, as it were, in water, all in beautifully constructed sentences and syntax that say nothing whatsoever, absolutely nothing, nothing at all.

The great cataclysms, the thromboses, that have resulted precisely from a mistaken sense of priority are innumerable. Stupid little boffins and self-styled polymaths in almost every area of human life are constantly nagging at our personal values, and now we must forgo a personal GOD? I am not the first to suggest, am I, that to NOT be upset about things like this is the first step toward the foundation of that dreadful city we seem to be building? Rising out of a grey space, very like the Cities of the Plain, I see a sponge-headed race of middle-class cretins — stripped happily of all sacramentals, unaware of grace, hissing at sanctity — and the modus vivendi is already quite identifiable. It will be a world where churches have become museums, bank accounts determine social prestige, and the only ritual left for us will have developed into polishing cars, applauding demagogues, and eating entire gigantic meals that last all day Sunday. There is a lull around us, here, there, and everywhere, that shows us like children, in a frighteningly mocking way, reluctant to climb up over the sides of our ontological crib but satisfied, merely, to sit there in the sea of synthetic fluff, making goo-goo's, and barking for more vitamized pap. It is a question of standing up. It is a question of gaining perspective.

There's just too damn much blabbing about God around here and not enough action. The blabbing is insufferable, the action is being diverted, and it's the wrong kind of God. The fact that we officially attend school on Good Friday is not only terrible in itself. It is, as well, a metaphor for the crucial ills we seem to suffer in such abundance these days. We have kicked priorities through the uprights. The tragedy, perhaps, is that many have cheered while that was done and continue to do so. Atheism in the last analysis is materialism, and that business goes on as usual on Good Friday is a loud and grotesque hoot in favor of both. Moses, perhaps, was not justified in smashing the Tablets to smithereens at the foot of Mt. Sinai, but, dammit, his anger is perfectly understandable, don't you think?

Pinheads At Longwood

Letter to Editor:

Even through Longwood's atmosphere is becoming more open minded and progressive, there are still a great number of students, faculty, and administration who judge people strictly on the basis of their majors or their manner of dress. We see those who speak out against racial or class prejudice classifying all physical education majors as "slightly masculine," all art and drama majors as "freaks," or all math majors as

"eggheads."

In like manner, a girl who continually shows up in jeans and a T-shirt, may find people she's never even met describing her as a "revolutionary" or a "free love advocate," while the girl who wears a neat dress and hose every day may be surprised to hear herself described as a "brown-noser" or "someone who would have fit the Longwood image ten years ago."

It's about time that the Longwood students, faculty, and administration realized that the categorizing of people is outdated, narrow minded, and unfair. Every individual on this campus deserves to be judged for the person she really is, not for her appearance or for her choice of careers. So let's open our minds, Longwood, and reserve our judgments for those we know.

Lynne Wilson

Poor Response

To the Editor,

Where were all of the dissatisfied people on Longwood's campus when Legislative Board held its open forum on March 16? The sound of complaining faculty and students is a common one here and is often very loud. This seemed to be a perfect time for these people to let their gripes be known, but apparently their problems had been solved. Only a handful of people showed up to ask questions, the most earth shaking of which dealt with inter-dormitory phones. The whole situation brought back to mind the recent ROTUNDA cartoon on the lion and the mouse.

Of course, questions may have been discouraged by the manner in which the forum was run. Instead of having a free period for questions and answers, the gathering became just another meeting of Legislative Board. The people who had questions, as such, had to sit through the reading of the minutes and the committee reports. Questions were allowed under the heading of new business.

The most disturbing aspect of the forum though was the lack of participation. I can't help but draw a comparison between this forum and the one concerning Judicial Board. The earlier meeting proved to be very effective in airing complaints which were held by students and faculty. The turnout was most impressive for this meeting. I don't believe that the students are only interested in one of their boards. We should be concerned at all times with anything that any of the boards is doing. The same spirit that was shown in confronting Judicial Board should be used in relation to Legislative and Residence Boards, also.

If Longwood students and faculty are not more aware of this responsibility, then we are going to find this school in the same type of situation as Washington and Lee University. Student apathy has reached such proportions there, that a new SGA constitution, which would have given the students more authority, was defeated because less than 50% of the student body voted. Student government elections became pathetic when people had to be persuaded to run; then voting had to be done twice because not enough voted originally to give one candidate a majority. If Longwood students aren't careful, they're going to lose what little opportunity they have for voicing an opinion in policy making decisions.

Lynne Pierce

Some Spring Break

Every year students are faced with the same old problem — spring break is but a postlude to an unscheduled week of examinations. Despite the elimination of mid-semester estimates for most upperclassmen, the large number of freshmen in 200-plus courses necessitates grade averaging before the midsemester. This is a headache for the faculty, true, but do they have to make it a headache for everyone? It is a bleak prospect to start out on Monday knowing one has four tests and a paper or two due before Friday. Break becomes a study period of its own, since many major projects are assigned for the following week.

I recognize the fact that these grades are helping us by giving more to work with in the final averages. But how much can a string of mediocre or even failing scores boost our averages?

The faculty knows midsemester is coming, yet many of them invariably wait until that last week to assign tests.

Enjoy your spring break. Not many of us will.

Cookie Howell

A Progressive System

I would like to congratulate the staff of the ROTUNDA on the recent articles concerning Judicial systems at other Virginia colleges. These articles have been quite helpful in pointing out the

A Subscription Method?

The Appropriations committee in Richmond is taking a close look at student publications these days, especially newspapers. W. Roy Smith, chairman of the House Appropriations committee has told newsmen that the question has been raised as to whether some college publications should be supported by a compulsory student fee, or whether they should be supported by the number of issues sold.

At Longwood, students pay an activities fee, part of which goes toward the support of the school's publications. As it stands now, representatives from each publication are forced to convince the Longwood appropriations committee that they need X number of dollars for the coming year. If the committee feels that you don't need the funds, then they don't appropriate them, and your publication suffers. Even though the funds are taken from student fees, the fact that administrative members sit on the appropriations committee means that pressure can be exerted at any time. If however, the Rotunda were self supporting these problems would no longer exist.

It would take a little extra work in soliciting subscriptions but in the long run I think it would make things a lot easier. For example, if the paper was sold on a subscription basis, then the editor and her staff could be paid a salary at a per centage rate. This might make the editors position a little more alluring to students in the future. Certainly if your pay check depended on how many subscriptions were sold the incentive would be greater to put out a better paper. This subscription policy would also alleviate the pressure problem, for administrators would have very little to say about with is published. The subscription method might be hard at first, but I do think it would, in the long run, benefit the Longwood publications

There Was A Crooked Man

By SARAH FARRAR

An Arizona Territorial prison camp in the 1880's, with all the comforts of Andersonville, is the setting for "There Was A Crooked Man." Joseph L. Mankiewicz gets his tongue caught in his cheek in this not very successful attempt at an Eastern Western. A $500,000 robbery, a bloody riot, a massive escape attempt, and a shattering final revelation are the elements proving producer-director Mankiewicz' proposition, "There's a little of bad in every good man."

With a roster of stars that includes Kirk Douglas, Lee Grant, Henry Fonda, Warren Oates, and

Burgess Meredith as the long imprisoned Missouri Kid, the film plods along with its every-man-has-his-price theme (courtesy of screenwriters David Newman and Robert Benton of "Bonnie and Clyde" fame.)

"There Was A Crooked Man," never seems inhabited by real people, and all the surprise twists, coincidences and double crosses are just so much wasted energy. Hume Cronyn, however, steals the show as a delightful little conservative by the name of Dudley Whinner. Takes a break from your activities just to see him. It's a good performance.

Look Back In Anger: Faulty But Commendable Production

By MR. ALLEN WEIR
Instructor of English

The production of John Osborne's "LOOK BACK IN ANGER" by the Longwood Players and Hampden-Sydney Jongleurs evoked ambivalent responses.

A shadowy skyline visible through its open top, the semi-realistic set was effective, though a little clean and bright for the Porter's attic room.

Several details were bothersome. In Act One, Alison carefully ironed and folded clothes. She dropped a stack of clothes and they unfolded, and she carelessly stuffed them in a drawer, still unfolded. In Osborne's play, Jimmy blares a trumpet, paralleling his verbal trumpeting. The Longwood production substituted a rather mellow sounding saxophone. At one point in the play, the cistern overturned. Osborne set his play in "the present," (i.e., the early fifties) and described Jimmy as "about twenty-five." In the Longwood production, there seemed some difficulty in establishing "the present." Jimmy said, "We had all that done for us, in the forties, when we were still kids." This suggested the time of the play as the early fifties, but Helena looked contemporary Longwood in bell bottoms in Act Three. Admittedly, these are picky details, but taken together, they detracted.

The players seemed stiff. The sadness and hopelessness of Osborne's characters, their British subtlety and suggestion of feeling was often lost in loud anger and melodrama. Act One was best; the production declined thereafter. This is, perhaps, a problem inherent in the play—Osborne's powerful first act overpowering the last two.

Like the set, the players, particularly Dave Clark as Jimmy and Rick Vaughan as Cliff, were not sleazy enough. Clark, in neat button down collar and clean, pressed slacks was usually unconvincing as Osborne's angry, sensitive young man of the British working class. He often overacted, and his excessive fidgeting with his hands irritated rather than suggested Jimmy's restlessness. Despite problems with the role, Clark had a few fine moments with Jimmy's more jocular, relaxed rhetoric—notably in exchanges with Cliff. Joyce Saunders, as Jimmy's wife, Alison, had the difficulty of reacting to Jimmy's tirades. She was most often blandly tolerable, less frequently tearfully overacting. Her squirrel routine in the first act was nicely done and touching. Lynne Wilson seemed convincing at times, at times her sudden outbursts suggested a soap opera caricature. She and Clark approached the farcical at the end of Act II when they kissed, then moved, still kissing, to the bed and fell bouncing on the mattress as the curtain came down.

In Act II, in the scene with her father, Colonel Red Fern, Alison said, "Something's gone wrong somewhere, hasn't it?" In this scene, which should have been tender and moving, it was Ken Shick as Red Fern that was wrong. From his stiff, spray-silver hair to his batting eyelids, his portrayal was phony. He spoke in a slow monotone and moved like a mannequin. The scene was intolerable.

Vaughan's portrayal of Cliff was the most natural. At his worst he was fawning over Alison instead of being the somewhat sad, sensitive friend. At his best, as in the Morris dance routine, he was humorous and sensitive. The song and dance routines were the most relaxed, delightful moments in the play. The first scene of Act III with Cliff, Jimmy and Helena punning on Eliot's "Little Gidding" was especially nice.

Despite many shortcomings, the production was a commendable effort, and was the best production this writer has seen in Jarman Auditorium this year.

Longwood and Barat to Spend Summer in Europe

By MARY ANN BENTLEY

Longwood and Barat College of Lake Forest, Illinois are offering a summer travel-study program in Art History in Europe. Directed by Sister Virginia Barsch, R.S.C.J., Professor of Art History, Barat College, and Miss Elizabeth L. Flynn, Assistant Professor of Art History, Longwood College, the course is open to all interested students.

The purpose of this course is to provide an opportunity for the students to see and study the great works of Western Civilization in their "original" state. Emphasis will be on the art, i.e., painting, sculpture and architecture of each city with side trips to nearby places of interest.

Included in the course will be diversions of a cultural and entertaining nature, the opera in Paris, and Rome, bull fights in Spain and concerts in Florence. There will be opportunities for individual exploration of the cities and for shopping, plus some time for sketching or other artistic endeavors.

All students must take the course for credit. (6). There will be a final exam. The course is designed to utilize the short time available for the development of the student's intellectual life. Every student will be provided with sufficient information to find the required works of art in each museum. Prior to departure, all students must have read Janson's "HISTORY OF ART." Each student is free to visit and study with the group or to stop and sketch or stay longer at a favorite monument.

Travel rates per person are $939.00 plus Longwood tuition. This rate includes hotel accommodations for a total of 27 nights, meals—breakfast and dinner daily, transportation when not on foot, and all taxes and gratuities for services provided.

The course will last from June 17 to July 19. Beginning at Longwood for orientation and discussions, the class will then proceed to Washington where a flight will be taken to New York, then to Paris. After six days in and around Paris, the group will fly to Milan then to Florence. A bus will be taken to Rome where a week will be spent, then to Madrid and surrounding area for a week.

Applications and further information may be obtained after spring break from Miss Flynn.

New Art Course Proving Itself

Fundamentals of Photography 355 was added to the art curriculum and offered second semester this year. Open only to art majors, it has proven not only very informative but equally enjoyable as well. Taught jointly by Dr. Carolyn Wells and Miss Barbara Bishop, this course presents an art media new to Longwood majors. The eight students in the class are held spellbound by photography's "secrets" as they experiment and discover the wonders of the camera and darkroom.

Peanut butter jelly?

Peanut Butter And Jelly Helps Slater Run "A Tight Ship"

By LYNDA VAN HORN

"Peanut butter and jelly is a lot better than nothing at all," so says Mr. Joseph Carbone, Director of Dining Services for ARA Slater at Longwood.

Mr. Carbone, unlike some other dining hall managers, feels that peanut butter and jelly should be served at the evening meal "if the girls just don't like or can't eat what is served."

Mr. Carbone

This is the first year Mr. Carbone has been associated with Longwood on a full time basis though he has worked at other institutions where Slater serves the meals. Last year he was employed at Hampden-Sydney and mentions that a great many differences can be found in the two schools as far as the serving of food is concerned.

Cafeteria style meals are served at Hampden-Sydney and "the boys are not as concerned with their diet" as are Longwood girls. Mr. Carbone said that boys are not as hard to please although they eat much more.

Planning Food Quality

When questioned as to likes and dislikes about the dining hall one girl said, however, "They don't give us enough to eat. Half the time we can't even get seconds."

Mr. Carbone explained that food quantity is determined mainly through past experience. There are some things students like better than others. "For example," he said, "we know when we have hamburgers we're going to need to have open about 185 tables." There are a total of 210 tables in the dining hall. "We figure seconds on a 32% basis." That is, about 32% of the girls will want a second hamburger. Discrepancies can be accounted for by an unexpected and unprecedented heavy request for certain food items.

"We have to plan our meals closely to avoid waste," Mr. Carbone said that contrary to some rumors, all food put in front of the girls that is not eaten is thrown away. Nothing is kept that is left over from the meals unless an unusually large amount of an item is not taken from the kitchen. For example, stew or chow mein may be served during the week and then again on Sunday night only if a quantity is left in the pots, not taken from the tables. Health standards demand that all food coming in contact with the students must be discarded, including salads and beverages.

Dr. Cafeteria?

One Longwood girl suggested that the dining hall be set up on a meal ticket basis. The girls would elect to pay for their meals in the dining hall or to eat somewhere off campus or in the dorm. Mr. Carbone said that it is a school policy - not decided by Slater - that all girls who board at the college would also take their meals at the dining hall. It would be much more expensive for those girls who wanted to pay for their meals, he said.

Food Quality

Currently meals at Longwood cost the students $1.61 per day per student. This includes not only the food costs, but costs such as labor, supplies, laundry expenses, licenses, taxes, insurance, replacements, and utilities. If Longwood were to switch to the meal ticket plan costs would double, estimates Mr. Carbone.

When asked if cafeteria style served meals would not be less expensive, Mr. Carbone said that the savings would not be worth the inconveniences caused by this style such as standing in line. "Family style meals are much easier to prepare. They way it is now the staff can have cooked, served, and cleaned by 7:00 after supper."

He said that cafeteria style meals would necessitate extra hours for the staff and perhaps more staff members. Not as many waitresses would be needed, but "there is a big difference in paying a student for one or two hours and having to pay a full time employee extra." Right now there are 83 Slater employees including those in the Snack Bar and the Tea Room. This number would have to be added to if cafeteria style meals were served.

Menu Preparation

What constitutes making up a menu? Mr. Carbone said that he plans all the menus and says that even though the students may not think so on occasion, all the meals are nutritionally balanced. Menus are frequently sent to the head dietitian of Slater to be checked for nutritional values. He suggests what may be lacking and how to improve the quality of menus.

Several factors help to determine the daily menus. Such things as shape, color, texture, variety of preparation, and special events must all be considered.

Special Events

Special events? Do administration or staff luncheons take precedence over regular dining hall food preparation? Of course not," assures Mr. Carbone. "We take care of the students first and everybody else second." When special events are planned, however, menus must also be planned so that kitchen space is properly used.

Who pays for these special luncheons? The organization or the person giving the luncheon does, for the most part. "None of the students' funds are put into a function of a private nature unless it involves students," says Mr. Carbone.

Results from yearly questionnaires are also a factor in planning the menus. Slater is interested in the likes and dislikes of the girls, says Mr. Carbone. The results are kept on file and "referred to each week as I plan the menu. I know there are some things I can't serve because the girls just don't like them." Sometimes he tries a new dish to see if the girls like it. If response is negative it is rarely served again.

"One girl found a green worm floating in the lima beans," said Mr. Carbone when questioned if anything were ever found in the food. "Something like this has only happened to me twice," he said, "but twice is too often." He explains that even though all the food is government inspected "sometimes these things happen."

"I have sent things back, especially meat, that does not meet up to our (Slater) standards." All meats are Grade A choice or better and delivered three times a week "cut and served to our specifications." Some meat such as chicken is served only fresh, thus menus also depend on deliveries. Because of dependency upon deliveries changes must sometimes be made in the menu.

Mr. Carbone urges girls to come to him with complaints if they are not satisfied with the food service. "I take more than a personal interest in the food service. I want to see it right and I want to see the girls happy."

LC Watershow Draws Large Crowd

H2O and Corkettes practice numbers president in the watershow "Ripples In Time."

The H2O and Corkettes Clubs recently presented a watershow, "Ripples In Time," before a large group of alumnae, family, friends, and Longwood students.

Student natatrappers created numbers depicting various times of importance in the history of the United States, through movements in the water. Some of the important events included independence, war, exploration, expansion, liberation, automation, and moon exploration.

The music used to accompany the swimmers correlated with the theme and added much to the mood which had been set. Soft music like "Tara" was contrasted with lively music of the Roaring Twenties and patriotic music of America.

The use of colored bathing caps, railroad scarfs, and added frills, lace, stars, and stripes to swim suits made the costuming an important attribute to the show.

The number "Computers" was cleverly done with lights attached to the swimmers, and it was very impressive to spectators to see only lights move through the water. "Moon Walk," presented by Lois Hrubik and Judy Donohoe, showed much skill and perfectly timed execution of movements.

Members of H2O include: Ellen Cahill, Patti Coogan, Cathy Carr, Judy Donohoe, Katherine Hipkind, Lois Hrubik, Bonnie Jewell, Betsy Raines, and Cathy Teague.

Tennis Team To Be Selected Turnout Is Overwhelming

Warm weather has brought out not only the blossoms on the trees, but tennis balls, rackets, and prospective tennis team members.

Mrs. Phyllis Harriss, Varsity Tennis Coach, stated that thirty-six girls had come out for the varsity and junior varsity teams. Practices have been held each afternoon for the past couple of weeks. The final decision on team members will be made this week.

Mrs. Harriss and Miss Carolyn Callaway, Junior Varsity Coach, would like to thank all the girls who came out for the team. "We had a lot of good players try out for the team, but of course we couldn't use everyone. Miss Callaway and I want to encourage those who did not make the team to continue playing tennis and to try out again next year," commented Mrs. Harriss.

As a reminder to the student body, the tennis courts are reserved for varsity and junior varsity players from 4-6 o'clock Monday through Thursday. Also, with the increase in the number of students desiring to play tennis, Mrs. Harriss suggested that students play doubles instead of singles, thus allowing more students to have access to the courts.

Top Gymnasts Vie For Positions On US National Team

The selection of the United States Gymnastics Team to represent us in the Olympics will be held in Northern Virginia April 24-25.

Miss Judy Fath, LC Gymnastics Coach, says that this will be the last time that the nationals competition will be held on the east coast for a long while. "It should prove to be a very exciting and rewarding experience, and I urge anyone who can to go," she stated.

Preliminaries will be held April 24 at Yorktown High School with competition beginning at 2 o'clock and 7:30 o'clock p.m. The finals will be held April 25 at Walt Whitman High School with competition beginning at 3 o'clock p.m.

Kathy Rigby and Roxanne Pierce will be two of the competitors. Kathy is the silver medalist in the World Games on the beams and the number one gymnast on the National Team. Roxanne placed second on the uneven bars and on vaulting in the recent meet with the Russians. She was to have competed in the World Games, but broke her leg and was unable to participate.

Tickets may be obtained from E. Ardella Smith, Yorktown High School, or from members of the Yorktown Girl's Gymnastics Team. Tickets are $4.

With Crosse In Hand, Girls Practice Cradling

Inner Field has recently been the scene of much activity as students practiced their cradling and passing in hopes of a position on the varsity or junior varsity lacrosse teams.

Twenty some girls have been coming each afternoon with crosse in hand to practice skills. Most of the girls have played lacrosse before, but there are a few who are new to the sport.

Recently, a lacrosse clinic was held at Mary Washington College. Miss Anne Huffman, Lacrosse Coach, and several girls trying out for the team, attended the week-end session. Skills were stressed and then the students were allowed to play a few games of lacrosse.

Team members will soon be chosen as the Longwood girls get ready for their first game against Westhampton on April 17.

The lacrosse schedule includes:

April 17:	Westhampton:	Here:	10 a.m.
April 20:	Lynchburg:	There:	3:30 p.m.
April 24:	Bridgewater:	There:	1 p.m.

Ann Chrystene Taylor Crowned As Miss Mecklenburg County

By CHRISTINE SHARPE

Ann Chrystene Taylor, a Longwood Freshman, was crowned Miss Mecklenburg County March 13 at the local pageant.

Chrys says that it is "fine and exciting" to be Miss Mecklenburg. "I was very surprised and pleased when I won. It still doesn't seem real."

For her talent Chrys played the "Prelude in C# minor" by Rachmaninoff.

Her prizes for winning are a $300 scholarship, clothes, and other gifts.

Chrys is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W.H. Taylor, Sr., of Clarksville, Virginia.

Brenda Dale Evans, also a Longwood freshman, placed second-runner-up in the contest.

Board Notes

Legislative Board

1. A question was raised as to whether Senator Herb Bateman's proposal, which was recently passed by the Virginia Assembly would affect Longwood's present or future Open House regulations.
2. It was decided that the Student Government dorm meetings were successful and that meetings of this nature will continue periodically.
3. It was brought to the attention of the Board that the Bookstore Committee has not yet met. It was decided that if a student felt there was sufficient need for the Bookstore Committee to meet, she should contact the chairman of the mittee, Mr. Couture.
4. It was suggested that the policy of having dorm and hall presidents count votes in their dorms during major and minor elections be reviewed by the Elections Committee.

Campus Bill Vetoed

RICHMOND — Governor Linwood Holton vetoed a bill March 18 which had been recently passed by the Virginia General Assembly as an effort to keep "troublemakers" off of state college campuses. The bill gave the head of the institution and the senior law enforcement official the authority to order anyone creating trouble, or suspected of planning to do so, off campus immediately and they could not return for one year. To do so would be a misdemeanor and subject to a fine or jail sentence. The bill would include students enrolled at the institution as well as outsiders. Governor Holton vetoed the bill because it set no standards to judge conduct by and "would give unscrupulous officials free reign to trample on the First Amendment guarantees of the Constitution." Holton based his views on an opinion given him by Atty. Gen. Andrew Miller, who said the bill is too broad and therefore unconstitutional. Miller has submitted a substitute bill which defines more clearly what conduct is expected and protects the freedoms of the Constitution.

Goal of Campus School Faculty Concerns Achievement As Individuals

By LYNNE WILSON

Part II — New Teaching Methods Utilized

This program of two successive days has proved far superior to last semester's experiment in which a student aide went to the classes for one period on six different days. The current system gives the Longwood student two days to become accustomed to the class and get over her initial fears. She will have a free period to discuss the classes and problems with the regular teacher, and if she wishes she can remain after school with the regular teacher.

Could Longwood students have observed and assisted at local elementary schools? Dr. Land holds that the program would lose its effectiveness because the theory would not be as controlled. Longwood stands for a basic approach to education, and familiar with this approach, the teacher implements the theory into his classes. In addition, there would be transportation and scheduling problems involved in sending Longwood students to a public elementary school.

Although these preliminaries do take place at the campus school, the school allows no student teachers. It is more beneficial to the future teacher to be in a public school where she'll see less ideal situations. However, should a student have difficulty in her student teaching, she would be encouraged to observe at the campus school and to assist the teacher.

Concerning the student body at the Campus School, Dr. Land points out that there is no intellectual requirement. A typical group of elementary students, the children can come from any community as long as they furnish their own transportation. As the student body stands now, there are forty children of Longwood faculty and forty-five of Longwood staff members. Sixty to sixty-five are from this and neighboring communities and forty-five to fifty are from the Hampden-Sydney faculty and staff.

The instructors at the Campus School must have secured a Master's degree and taught at least three years previous to their application at Longwood's school in order that they might have already worked out a philosophy of education. Dr. Land screens the prospective teachers, and he has employed a fine faculty.

Dr. Land, who opened three elementary schools at Virginia Beach, praises the Campus School as the best set-up in terms of the numerous materials available. Dr. Land insists that the Campus School is limited only by the imaginations of those who run it. With a library of over 6,000 materials and another 500 ordered this year, the Campus School offers tremendous opportunities for teachers and students alike. Realizing that not materials but the way they're handled make the school, the teachers had a two week in-service program before the school opened to learn the most effective uses of the equipment.

According to Mrs. Buchanan, fifth grade teacher at the school, the teachers have one aim. That is the achievement of each child. By pulling together, the instructors take each student as far as he can go. A professional atmosphere prevails at the school, and both students and faculty are proud of what they have and are eager to show others.

The students refer to their work as "fun-learning." Conscious of the goals of the school and proud of their achievements, they will stay after school to get help on their work. The students are aware that they are expected to be self-directed at the Campus School, and they work accordingly. Because of this atmosphere, discipline is excellent. On this policy of self direction, Dr. Land says, "Why not do for our children what we'd want to do for ourselves."

Richmond reporters were so impressed with the smooth operations at the school the first day it opened that they asked whether students and teachers had rehearsed it. Stuart Landrum observed that he "had never gotten a feeling of freedom and a sense of purpose as from this school."

Anthropologist To Visit MWC

Reprinted From Richmond Times-Dispatch, Thursday, Feb. 11, 1971

FREDERICKSBURG — Anthropologist Margaret Mead will visit Mary Washington College, April 29 as the college's first Distinguished Visitor in Residence.

She will meet informally with students and faculty, attend classes and give a lecture that night.

The Distinguished Visitor in Residence program is an effort of the alumnae association to give the college an endowed chair. The first endowment, which has made Dr. Mead's visit possible, is in honor of Eileen Kramer Dodd, professor emerita of psychology, who retired last year, and her husband, the late James Harvey Dodd, who was a professor of economics and business administration.

Colleges In The News

Sun Dial Running Down

LYNCHBURG — The Sun Dial, the student newspaper at Randolph-Macon Women's College, is being forced into a position that is facing many college newspapers due to student apathy. The paper has released a statement that, if new staff members are not found, there will no longer be enough people to put out a paper. The Sun Dial has already had to cancel one week's paper and is uncertain about future issues.

Representation Killed

BLACKSBURG — A motion proposed by SGA President Sandy Hawthorne, which would have provided for more student representation on the University Council, was defeated by the Council at a recent meeting. The Council does not favor a tripartite concept, where students, faculty and administration are equally represented, but it does endorse an increase in student representation. The Council voted to set up two committees to study increasing the student representation.

Tenure Plan Fails

RICHMOND — The SGA Congress at VCU rejected a proposal, now before the University Assembly, which deals with a tenure plan for professors. The motion failed because it made no provisions for students to have a voice in granting tenure, although the Congress was assured by faculty representatives that each department intended to consider student evaluations before giving tenure. The Congress also condemned the bill for lacking clarity in describing the grounds for removal of professors and for containing a "grandfather clause," which grants tenure to professors on the basis of the time they worked at RPI. The Congress also voted to ask the faculty to submit the final tenure proposal to a student referendum for passage.

Coeds On Council

CHARLOTTESVILLE — Residents of the Alderman Road dorms and Mary Munford dorm at the University of Virginia recently adopted a new constitution which created the Association of Residents Councils. The new council will consist of representatives from the dorms concerned and will unite the male and female councils which had existed separately before. The Alderman Council hopes that, by creating a joint council of men and women, some of the problems connected with an all-male constituency can be alleviated. The new constitution will go into effect in April after elections have been held to elect officers.

Alpha Lambda Delta Initiates 32 Freshmen

The Longwood Chapter of Alpha Lambda Delta initiated 32 new members March 21 at 3 p.m. in the ABC Rooms of Lankford Building. Membership in Alpha Lambda Delta, a national scholastic honor society for freshmen women, is based on the grades of one full semester on the cumulative average of one year which must be 3.50 or better. The new members and their parents were honored at a reception immediately following the initiation ceremonies. Members of the faculty and administration were also present at the reception. Officers have been elected for the 1971-72 year and were installed at the initiation. They include: Barbara Bannin, President; Carolyn Yeamans, Vice-President; Shirley Chappell, Secretary; Mary Sue Clayton, Treasurer; Lottie Lawrence, Historian; and Ailene Phillips, Editor. Mrs. Cada Parrish, Assistant Professor of Mathematics, is Alpha Lambda Delta's advisor.

This year's chapter has started a scholarship fund which they soon hope to present to a deserving student. In May, Alpha Lambda Delta presents the Maria Leonard Book Award to the senior member with the highest cumulative grade-point average. This year, the award will be ROETHKE: COLLECTED POEMS.

Mr. Vassar to Discuss Student Policies April 8

A required meeting on April 8 and visits to individual teaching centers will keep the 1971 Block I student teachers busy throughout the month of April.

Dean Heintz and Mr. Vassar will meet with all student teachers, including those practicing teaching this summer, on Thursday, April 8, at 7:17 p.m. in Jeffers Auditorium. The roll will be checked for each student teaching center. Housing is Dean Heintz's topic. Policies governing student teaching, kinds of information the student teacher should get on the visit to her school, classroom policies, attendance, personal grooming, tort (liability) insurance, and supervision will be covered by Mr. Vassar. Any questions students may have concerning student teaching will be answered at this meeting.

Visits to the student teaching centers have been scheduled throughout the rest of the month. The date to visit Roanoke, previously scheduled the day of pre-registration, has been changed. The revised schedule is as follows:

April 15 — Colonial Heights and Prince George; April 20 — Danville and local; April 21 — Roanoke; April 22 — Lynchburg; April 28 — Richmond City; April 29 — Chesterfield, and May 5 — Henrico.

This is the first year for a new K-3 program. Beginning August 30, 1971, these elementary majors will teach 10 weeks, five in kindergarten and five in the first, second, or third grade, and receive eight hours credit. All others will begin on September 13, 1971, and teach only eight weeks for six hours credit. All these students complete their teaching on November 5.

Eighty-six secondary majors and 111 elementary majors will be off campus next fall student teaching.

Proposals For A New B.S. and B.A. Degree

By MARGARET BLAIR

The Curriculum Committee with the cooperation of the Foreign Language Department, has proposed changes in the foreign language requirements for both the Bachelor of Science and the Bachelor of Arts degrees. The Curriculum Committee has proposed these recommendations to the Academic Policies Committee which has approved them. The changes have yet to be submitted to the faculty for approval.

The college catalog currently states that students pursuing the B.S. and who plan to teach have no "additional requirements beyond those in general education and teacher education except as prescribed by the department in which the major program is taken." Psychology majors must include 12 semester hours in foreign language and eight semester hours in biology with their general education program. Other students seeking the B.S. degree "must take 30 semester hours in science fields (24 for math majors) and 12 semester hours in one foreign language," (p. 53, 1970-71 Longwood College Catalog). The proposed change for the Bachelor of Science degree states that "there are no additional requirements for students beyond those in general education and (for prospective teachers) those in teacher education except as prescribed by the department in which the major program is taken."

The present requirements for the Bachelor of Arts degree is 12 semester hours in one foreign language for those students planning to teach. Other students must take 18 semester hours in one foreign language or 12 semester hours beyond the introductory course and Philosophy 360, (p. 53, 1970-71 Longwood College Bulletin). The proposed change will require that students seeking the B.A. take 12 semester hours of one foreign language beyond the intermediate course. Also, "candidates for this degree must complete the general education and (for prospective teachers) the teacher education requirements; additional nonmajor courses may be prescribed by the department in which the major program is taken."

It has also been proposed that students in business can get a nonteaching degree. If approved by the Board of Visitors and the State Council of Higher Education, as anticipated, it will go into effect next year.

If these recommendations are passed, students are advised to follow either the latest catalogue or the catalogue under which they began.

Founders Day

R. Blackwell, dean of the college. Frankie Brown said that the symposium enabled her to "join with other people who have enjoyed Longwood, and bring them up to date with the activities of the Student Government." She mentioned the successful Heart Fund drive, the committee to study the next academic year, the current review of Judicial Board, and the revised alcohol regulations.

"The spirit of Longwood has remained constant even though there have been many changes," said Nancy Fowlkes. She went on to review the many red and green activities of the year.

Speaking from the point of view of the artist, Dr. Lockwood said that "the time of happy childhood has passed at Longwood. The students are now more sophisticated, more critical." He said that we can't disregard the fact that the world is changing outside of this community, and the students must be prepared to face this world. According to Dr. Lockwood, education can be compared to a juggling act where the educator must artistically balance justice, expedience, and a sense of honor.

Dean Blackwell illustrated to the alumnae how much students have changed. He related an incident from the week before when a student asked for the distribution of birth control pills on campus. His answer to her was that the concept of "in loco parentis" is a dying philosophy. He said that part of his job is to point out to students that change which is slow to them may be very shocking to other constituents.

After each member of the panel made opening remarks the floor was open to questions and answers. The following questions were all asked by alumnae:

Question: "Does alcohol come by a vote of the students or by a decision of the administration?"

Answer: Frankie Brown: "The issue started with a student poll. Next we had to find out the Virginia law concerning alcohol. Legislative Board appointed a subcommittee to draw up a list of proposals in compliance with the law. This list will be reviewed by President Willett and Dr. Blackwell. The Board of Visitors will have the final vote."

Question: "Why do the students want it? Is it just something they don't have and so they want it?"

Answer: Frankie Brown: "That's about it."

Question: "What do the students think of the college as an educational institution?"

Answer: Dr. Blackwell: "I'm not really in a position to answer but we give a very sound education where the students get a broad range of liberal training."

The meeting then broke up, and the alumnae engaged in further conversation of the alcohol issue among themselves. The following is a conversation of three Longwood alumnae: "They might as well let them drink because they do in Hampden-Sydney fraternity houses, and just think there are boys there." "It's nothing but a status symbol. All they want is social change, and I say stop them for a while." "Well, honey, you know that they are having a drug problem now. I'd rather let them drink than smoke dope."

"Out of the closets, into the streets... the gay revolution is here to stay?"

(Editor's note: Students in Charlottesville and Richmond active in the Gay Liberation movement were interviewed. Anonymity for those persons involved is necessary in order to prevent legal complications.)

By LISE WORTHINGTON

"Out of the closets, into the streets . . . the gay revolution is here to stay" is the feeling expressed by Gay Liberation participants both in Richmond and Charlottesville. The participants all students either at VCU or UVA are interested in encouraging the movement which "involves development of gay pride and ending sexual chauvinism."

During recent interviews the students talked freely about the purposes and aspirations of the gay liberation movement. One of the first ideas expressed was that of marriage. Gay liberationists want the freedom to marry. There are, however, stipulations to the marriage contract which are expressed in the "Gay Manifesto." What the group wants to get away from are: 1. exclusiveness, propped attitudes toward each other, a mutual pact against the rest of the world. 2. promises about the future which we have no right to make and which prevent us or make us feel guilty about growing. 3. inflexible roles, roles which do not reflect us at the moment, but are inherited through mimicry and inability to define equalitarian relationships.

When a gay liberationist was asked if she wasn't being a little idealistic in her marriage stipulations she said "no, for the serious gay liberationist a sensitivity exists which makes the Manifesto easy to follow."

The Manifesto was quoted again when it was pointed out that there is a definite correlation between the women's liberation movement and gay women. The students did make it clear that they were not saying that the majority of women liberationists are gay. The gay liberationists do feel however, that a closer tie with the women's movement will help strengthen their movement. According to the Manifesto "woman's liberationists are our closest allies. We must be sensitive to their developing identities as women and respect that."

A coed liberationist at the University of Virginia expressed an idea which both the Richmond and Charlottesville groups are working towards. They are interested in broadening the education curriculum in schools to include courses in gay history. One interviewer said "I want to learn that certain historical figures were homosexuals in a history course, rather than in a course called Sociology of Deviant Behavior. It was mentioned that there is now an organization, the Gay Activists Alliance in New York which is establishing a library for gay literature."

When asked how large the gay liberation movement is, no one could really say for sure. Part of the reason for this it was explained is that the gay liberation is a movement and not an organization. It was indicated that attempts have been made and still are being made to organize, in order to gain strength and recognition. Gay dances have been held in Richmond, and what is known as "Gay Pride Week," will run from June 20-27. "Gay Pride Week" will culminate in a St. Christopher's Gay Liberation parade in New York on June 27.

When asked for a brief statement that most expressed and summarized the Gay Liberation movement, a VCU student read the cover of a leaflet which is free for the asking. "Gay liberation refuses to apologize for the occasionally humorous but often tragically destructive lives of some Gay people—we condemn the society which is responsible for our oppression and call to all to join us in the struggle for a world in which all human beings are free to love without fear and shame."

Revision Committee Seeks To Eliminate Rules, Procedures

By LYNNE PIERCE

The first draft of a detailed report, which will state specifically what conduct is prohibited and what penalties can be imposed for improper conduct of students, faculty, administration and staff, has been issued by the University Policy Committee of the University of Richmond. The committee, which was established last fall by President George M. Modlin, is composed of students, faculty, deans and a member of the Board of Trustees, Dr. W. Tyler Haynes, who is chairman.

The Richmond Collegian, the University of Richmond's newspaper, stated in its editorial concerning the report, "For a disciplinary action to be legal it is necessary for the school to state its policies concerning the nature of punishable violations, the punishments and a clear preservation of due process."

The report begins by asserting the "right and duty" of the university to "maintain order" and to "exclude persons who disrupt the educational process." The committee points out that the university "is committed to preserving the exercise of all rights guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States," but cautions that any student "who exercises his right as a private citizen . . . must assume full responsibility for the consequences of his actions."

The committee is still working on the phase dealing with the question of whether an administration official or student judiciary has jurisdiction over a case. Open meetings are planned to discuss the draft issued and to solicit ideas and possible changes.

The report now provides appeal procedures for cases of excessive or adverse decisions and, when completed, will include procedures for enforcing regulations, adjudication and observance of due process.

The Judicial Revision Committee at Longwood College is working with similar goals in mind. The committee is composed of 14 students who work jointly with Judicial Board members and Dean Blackwell. The purpose of this committee is to arrive at precise and clear-cut policies and a judicial system which will insure due process.

LC Publications Reviewed

By Va. House Committee

By COOKIE HOWELL

Longwood's publications are now required to be sent to the Appropriations Committee of the Virginia House of Delegates, who are delving into the problem of journalistic practices in the state-supported colleges.

Each of the committee's 20 members will receive all forthcoming issues of THE GYRE, THE ROTUNDA, and THE VIRGINIAN in order that they can "be better informed about what the students are reading," said Del. W. Roy Smith, Jr., committee chairman.

The requirement stems from recent difficulties with Mary Washington's newspaper, THE BULLET, and William and Mary's THE FLAT HAT. Both controversies centered around the use of obscene language, THE BULLET was also highly criticized for stories about birth control methods, women's liberation, and an abortion information center in a dormitory.

Since many student publications operate financially under the same system employed at Longwood — receiving support from a compulsory student fee — the committee is considering the possibility of having the publications become self-sustaining.

When asked how such a proposal might affect THE ROTUNDA, editor-in-chief Lise Worthington replied, "THE ROTUNDA could manage well enough, I suppose, but I can't speak for the other publications. THE ROTUNDA's income is already supplemented by advertisement fees."

The committee's main complaint is that insufficient control is exercised over student publications. Should the committee decide to take action, it is likely that they will have student fees withheld from the publications' budgets.

The committee insists that it is not advocating censorship over these publications, only higher journalistic practices. These could be attained through a greater degree of faculty guidance, Smith maintained. "Certainly there is no reason to let them drop any lower than they already are," was his comment.

Four New Faculty to Join Longwood Staff Next Year

By STEPHANIE SIVERT

Four new faculty members will be added to the Longwood teaching staff for the future school year. Additions are being made in the Department of Natural Sciences, the Education and Psychology Department, and at the Campus School. As explained by Dr. Blackwell, the number of faculty members employed each year at state institutions is set by the state depending on the student enrollment.

Among the prospective new faculty members is Miss Marilyn Hatch, a 1963 graduate of Longwood. Miss Hatch will be teaching basic courses in anatomy as well as Freshman zoology. She earned her Master's Degree at Indiana University and is currently working on her Doctorate at the Medical College of Virginia. Miss Hatch has taught at Indiana University, the University of North Carolina at Charlotte, and at George Mason College as well as serving as a teaching assistant at the Medical College.

Currently serving as a school principal in Richmond, Mr. Jefferson Lee Pemberton, III, is being added to the Education Department. A graduate of Emory and Henry College with a Masters Degree from the University of Virginia, Mr. Pemberton will teach basic courses in education as well as work with the student teachers in Richmond. In addition to serving as a school principal in both Richmond and Chesterfield County, he has had several years of teaching experience in the Chesterfield Public School System.

Mr. Edward Smith, a graduate of Heidelberg College, will teach psychology. He will complete his Doctoral requirements this spring at Kent State University in Ohio. He previously taught at Frederick College before going to Kent State.

Dr. Blackwell noted that each of these future faculty members is under 30 years of age and will bring with them to Longwood a "combination of youth and experience."

Replacing Mrs. Anne C. Lund at the Campus School will be Mr. Gary Parsons. Mr. Parsons, a specialist in physical education, will also teach math and science on the sixth grade level at the school.

The future faculty members will be welcomed additions to the Longwood teaching staff.

weaknesses of Longwood's system.

I support Miss Reiter in her plea for judicial reform. At Radford, Mary Washington, R-MC, and R-MWC, the accuser confronts the accused. Why not at Longwood? Shouldn't we have at least the same rights that other Virginia college students have?

I'm disappointed in the reactions of the Judicial Board and of the college administration to the student demands for reform. Instead of always defending the system, why not be a little creative in improving it? Dr. Willett says, "The system does work," and I agree. But couldn't it work better, with less secrecy and with more regard for the rights of all students? After all, shouldn't we know what signing the Honor Code means, other than white dresses and lighted candles?

Brezhnev Supreme

MOSCOW — Leonid I. Brezhnev was reelected as the general secretary of the Soviet Communist Party at the 24th party congress being held at the Kremlin. Indications are that the collective leadership which took power from Nikita Krushchev is ending and that Brezhnev is emerging as the single strong man in the government. He already has complete control of the party and his close supporters have been added to the Politburo. Western diplomats feel that Brezhnev's new power could have significant effects on the fields of domestic and foreign policy.

Newsman In China

HONG KONG—Peking has taken a sudden departure from its basic policy and is allowing representatives of the American news media to enter China in order to cover the tour of an American table tennis team, which entered China Saturday morning. The men will represent the Associated Press, Life magazine and the National Broadcasting Co. This marks the first time that full-time correspondents with U.S. citizenship have been able to visit Communist China in 22 years. The decision is believed to have been made in reaction to President Nixon's action of removing restrictions on visits to China by U.S. citizens.

Ceylon Insurrection

KEYALLA, CEYLON — Young insurgents have been battling the forces of the Ceylon government since April 5. The rebels have armed themselves by raiding police stations and private owners. About 1,000 people have been killed since the revolt began. The rebels are reportedly taking young boys and girls from the villages to fight for them.

Draft Limits

WASHINGTON — Sen. Harrison Williams, Jr., D-N.J., plans to submit an amendment to the Senate next week which will limit extension of the draft law to one year instead of the already proposed two years. This amendment would be closer to the recommendations of the Gates Commission, which calls for an all-volunteer Army by July. The House has already defeated a similar bill by 198 to 200.

Adult Sesame Street

WASHINGTON — An adult version of Sesame Street, the children's program on educational television which has received wide acclaim from educators, is going to be financed by the U.S. Office of Education. It was announced Saturday.

Dr. Willett Discovers Russian Schools Authoritarian Oriented

By VICKI BOWLING

"Even though you realize that your own country is not perfect, you come back with a greater appreciation of it."

This was the observation of Dr. Willett concerning his recent trip to Russia.

Dr. Willett spent eight days in Moscow and Novosibirsk, which is in central Siberia. He was also in Rumania and Poland for a short time.

Dr. Willett was one of 82 educators who made the trip. Directed by Dr. Gerald Reid, of Kent State University, the group was composed of a cross-section of both college and public school personnel.

The purpose of the group was to visit Russian colleges and public schools. Dr. Willett observed that the school system was very authoritarian. He cited an instance of a teacher telling a child he had six seconds to answer a question.

Some discussion, though not much, is allowed in the classroom. Dr. Willett heard a class of 13 year olds discuss heroes. One girl announced that her heroine was Joan of Arc. After class, Dr. Willett sought her out and gave her a postcard of Longwood, explaining his interest in her statement.

It was interesting and surprising, Dr. Willett noted, to hear of a religious figure such as Joan of Arc in a country in which an organized religion is almost nonexistent. In Novosibirsk, a city of over a million residents, there are only half a dozen churches.

"Communism is the religion,"

Dr. Willett pointed out, "and Lenin is the savior."

The dedication to Lenin is unbelievable, Dr. Willett said. His picture is everywhere. The lines to see his body are tremendous. Visitors are allowed to go to the front, otherwise, they'd be waiting in line five or six hours. Stalin is virtually ignored.

The government is very strict on visitors. Dr. Willett gave reasons why. The 24th Congress is getting ready to meet, and the government is tense about the situation. There is also some feeling of dissent, particularly on the part of the intellectuals. The government is cracking down on the intellectuals. It has imposed a strict limit on literature brought in by visitors, particularly western visitors. Technical publications, however, are allowed.

A guide from the official Russian agency was constantly with the group. What the group was not supposed to know was that there was a second guide, seemingly inconspicuous. This second guide was a check on the first, making sure that the first didn't say or do anything out of line.

"It was quite obvious, however, who our second guide was," Dr. Willett grinned. "We even took pictures of him."

The news telecasts were depressing, he admitted. They are all communist oriented, with no real news of the world.

Daily news sheets are printed by the American Embassy. A member of the group picked up copies everyday. Otherwise, Dr. Willett said, they would not have Geist, an honorary leadership and scholarship organization, honored 11 juniors in its spring tapping on Tuesday evening, April 13. The students were recognized because of their outstanding achievement in scholarship, leadership, and service to Longwood College. Geist feels that these girls have tried to promote college loyalty and to preserve the ideals of the institution. They have at the same time built an understanding between students and faculty. Those tapped were: Frankie Brown, Patti Coogan, Sally Foster, Donna Gibson, Jody Mace, Margaret Webb, Jo Brown, Lois Hrubik, Martha Marchese, Amelia Nespoli and Kay Powell.

Lynn Coleman Represents Longwood In Apple Festival

By SHEILAH MARTIN

Lynn Coleman, a senior in Alpha Gamma Delta Social Sorority, has been selected by a committee consisting of students, faculty members, and administration, to represent Longwood in the annual Apple Blossom Festival being held in Winchester, Virginia, May 6-8.

Lynn will be one of 28 princesses representing various colleges and universities throughout the state presiding over the three days of festivities beginning May 6, with rehearsal for the coronation of the Queen, the daughter of Astronaut Alan Shepard. The following day, May 7, marks the beginning of the actual festivities with the coronation followed by a historical tour of the town of Winchester. The Apple Blossom

Administrative Clean-Up

A Thoughtful Stand

Should students have any voice in the dismissal of professors?

Although there are mixed reactions among the student body at Longwood the most prevalent feeling seems to be that since they as students are directly affected that, yes, they should have some say as to "who gets the hatchet."

How would the student have a voice in this area of academic policy?

It has been suggested that a joint student and faculty assembly would be formed which would be able to recommend directly to the president and the Board of Visitors. It could become a recorded policy that the Board of Visitors would solicit recommendations by the student Faculty Assembly upon any matter directly affecting faculty interests and on all matters of academic policy. This committee, it has been suggested, would be responsible for such things as seeing that there is no general discrimination against young applicants for faculty positions and that a college-wide formal student evaluation of faculty be held every two or three years.

This idea of a joint student-faculty assembly has begun to gain wide support. The main argument supporting such a plan is that in the present system the academic freedoms of students are being infringed upon. Students feel that since the administration "hires in their best interest" that they are the ones which should be consulted in the matter. If the question of faculty dismissal is, as many say, a question of student academic freedom, then perhaps Longwood does need a joint Student Faculty assembly. It might be worth looking into.

Discontinuation Of Subject Majors

A Threat To Future Educational Opportunity

By LYNNE PIERCE

In the week since we returned from spring vacation, there have been many rumors around the campus concerning the discontinuation of several majors which are now offered by Longwood. The rumors were contradicting and declared that anything from specific classes to entire departments were being eliminated. In order to clarify the reports, I spoke with Mr. Ben Sandidge about the future of the German Department, the one most often mentioned.

Mr. Sandidge said he has been informed by the dean that because of low enrollment and "trying to economize," he is considering dropping the German major from the curriculum. No definite decision has been made yet, but Mr. Sandidge has been given a contract which terminates at the end of next year. Meanwhile, Longwood will be looking for an instructor who can teach another language as well as German.

Should German be dropped, only those classes required for a general degree will be taught. When asked if a program similar to that used with Greek and Latin students could be set up, Mr. Sandidge replied that he felt they "don't offer enough at Hampden-Sydney" to qualify a student for a degree in German.

Mr. Sandidge is now most concerned with what will happen at registration. If students think they will not be able to complete their German courses, they will not sign up for any of the classes. Since the fate of this, and any other department in danger, will depend on registration figures, it is imperative that students sign up for these classes to keep them from being cancelled.

The controversy over the fates of the departments involved raises questions concerning what sort of system of priorities Longwood should follow. Should a college discontinue parts of its curriculum and yet continue to increase the number of buildings it constructs?

Longwood has been emphasizing in recent years that it is a liberal arts college and not specifically a teacher-training institute. However, it does not appear to be logical to cease offering classes when such a move can only make a curriculum, which is already sadly limited, even narrower in its scope. Longwood will be defeating its own goals for the future and will only be suited for educating teachers for below the seventh grade level. While I would never dispute the importance of elementary education, our society has gone far past the point where this was considered sufficient for future achievement.

The logical solution would be for Longwood to stop expanding and to begin conserving in other areas until it can afford to support both the necessary curriculum and expansion. To follow any other procedure can only be detrimental to Longwood College in the future.

Letters to the Editor

An Open Letter

Open Letter to Mr. Bill Stuke, Instructor of Art, Longwood College.

Dear Bill,

I would have to thank you for your cooperation with the Art department at the John D. Wynne Campus School this year. The students from your classes who have come to observe and teach have been outstanding. They have been well prepared, enthusiastic, and willing to risk themselves in the new experience of taking the responsibility of relating significantly with children. The girls have met with me to plan, provided me with detailed lesson plans in advance, and been unfailingly dependable in meeting their teaching assignments. More important, they have been imaginative and innovative in their teaching methods. I commend you on a job well done.

It is evident that you are adept at being a participant in learning experiences with your students, since they bring this ability to the classroom as a part of their teaching repertory. Teachers of your calibre who are able to generate enthusiasm in students are invaluable.

I offer my condolences to you on the termination of your contract. I must also offer my condolences to the students of Longwood College. Your departure is their misfortune.

Sincerely,

Representative?

Dear Editor,

Colleague tapping last week was a great disappointment to a great number of freshmen; not because they weren't tapped, but because the whole ceremony was so predictable. The new Colleagues are either members of sororities or physical education majors. On several occasions leading members of the freshman class were left out because they didn't fit into either category.

Colleagues are selected mainly to greet the incoming freshmen and transfers in the fall. They try to instill in the newcomers the blue and white spirit of Longwood. This blue and white spirit is manifested differently in each individual; therefore the Colleagues should be a cross-section of these individuals. We are not all sorority sisters, nor are we all top achievers in the department of physical education, and the new students have the right to know that the rest of us are a part of the college community, too.

In the future, perhaps the Colleagues could be selected because of the work they have done in school activities and the blue and white spirit they have shown throughout the year. This way Colleagues would be a true representation of the student body.

Barbara Radford

Fairness?

When students register for classes, they are only allowed to know the time and place the class meets. Therefore, they have no choice as to what professor they get. We do PAY to go here and therefore, it would seem that the student should be able to get the teacher he prefers providing there is space and he can fit it into his schedule.

Secondly, is it fair that the students, faculty, and administration have no joint committee in which they can see if the professors are living up to their jobs. I don't think it is the full duty of administration and the Board of Trustees (for the lucky professors who have tenure) to see who stays and who goes. After all, the students are the ones who attend these classes everyday, so why don't they have a voice?

As the system stands now, it is unjust.

Linda Jones

M.S.U. Senate Ousts Campus Paper Editor

(Reprinted from A.S.G. News)

The staff of the REFLECTOR, student newspaper at Mississippi State University, has lost its latest battle in efforts to regain control of the paper since being ousted by the student government Feb. 17.

In a Federal District Court decision March 16, U.S. Judge William C. Keady refused to grant REFLECTOR Editor Grady (Foots) Thurmon a temporary restraining order against the student government takeover.

Thurmon, in a suit against the university president, the officers of the student senate and the board of publications, will be appealing the case to the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans.

Meanwhile, most of the REFLECTOR staff and Thurmon are publishing an alternative paper, FRIENDS on the campus.

The student government changed the locks on the REFLECTOR offices at 3 a.m., Feb. 18 after calling for Thurmon's resignation the previous afternoon, after an obscene word appeared in a controversial article on black studies at Mississippi State. The lockout occurred while Thurmon was attending a national editors' conference in California.

A few days later, the senate finally held a hearing, charging the editor with general negligence of duty, naming no specific acts and officially dismissed Thurmon as editor, installing Joe Patterson, Thurmon's business manager, as his successor.

Funds have been raised from various friends throughout the South, and from the U.S. Student Press Association's emergency publishing fund to aid the ousted staff which plans several tabloid newspapers before the general campus elections March 31.

Mississippi State elects both its editor and business manager in campus-wide elections each Spring, the same time as the student government elections. The Student Government is designated the publisher of the student newspaper by the student constitution, which also ex-

Colleges In The News

Draft Movement at U. Va.

CHARLOTTESVILLE — The American Civil Liberties Union and the Charlottesville Draft Resistance have been joined by the student council of the University of Virginia in seeking an end to the draft. The draft law expires June 30 and the groups are working to see that it is not extended. The council's action accompanied a joint resolution of the House and Senate of U. Va. calling for a repeal of the law.

Paper Cuts Back

EMORY, VA. — The Student Council at Emory and Henry College voted recently to discontinue its tradition of presenting the Excellence-in-Teaching Award due to a shortage of funds. The council has come under fire from students, however, because they feel money is being spent unwisely in other areas. The White Topper, the school paper, has cut itself back to four pages and is putting the money saved in a fund for the award. Editor Steve Hunt says the council may refuse the money, but, if it does, the paper will present the award on behalf of the students.

Black Culture Studied

RADFORD — Radford College has a new club concerned with understanding and appreciating black culture. The club will promote interest in black culture, try to find ways of dealing with problems on the Radford campus and will encourage study programs in black culture at other colleges and universities. The group is encouraging more black studies in the college and the recruiting of black students and professors. At the first meeting, a resolution was passed asking the English Department to set up a black literature course.

Student Police

MONROE, LA. — Northeast Louisiana University has instituted a policy of maintaining student security officers in order to relieve the main security officers of ordinary jobs. The force consists of 17 students, who wear armbands for identification and spend most of their time directing traffic and giving parking tickets.

VCU Craft Exhibit Opens At Longwood

By MARY ANN BENTLEY

Opening today in the Bedford Gallery is an exhibit of craft works done by graduate students of Virginia Commonwealth University. The show continues through April 27 and may be seen during the regular Bedford Building hours.

Weavings which include wall hangings and clothes are rich in color, variety, and style. Hand-somely designed and crafted wood furniture adds a new dimension to the show. Fine and delicate jewelry is contrasted to the bold and earthy forms of ceramics displayed.

The artists are students of Regina Medley and Geff Reed, both of whose works have been exhibited at Longwood. The show is a beautiful example of creativity and craftsmanship combined to provide a rewarding visual and tactile experience.

Student Teaching Experiences Rewarding

"Students who complete student teaching with a grade below 'C' are not recommended for certification as teachers." So reads the Student Teacher's Handbook — the law book for those preparing to begin the unique experience of student teaching.

With the recent return of last block's student teachers, it was thought a random poll of the "lucky ones" would reveal much about the advantages and disadvantages of their experiences.

Discipline Problems

One junior prospective student teacher admitted that she feared having discipline problems. When questioned about this, various views and opinions were brought out by these seniors.

"I really had no discipline problems," one girl said. "I let the students discipline each other, really. If some of the students got out of hand, and this was rare, other students reprimanded these troublemakers themselves."

Demerit Systems

Many of the student teachers interviewed told about the demerit systems employed throughout many of the schools. If the student talked aloud in class either without being called on or in some other way disrupted class, then the teacher was expected to give the student a demerit. In some schools a certain number of demerits would cause a lowering of the student's grade, while in other schools a number of demerits would result in suspension.

Did the student teachers use the demerit systems prescribed by their schools? In some cases — yes.

"Sometimes the demerit system would be the only thing that worked. Some kids would only behave after being threatened by or receiving a demerit," one student teacher said. "I hated having to resort to the demerit, though."

Other student teachers felt the demerit system was wrong and would not bestow demerits.

"I couldn't see how suspending a student from school would help him. Often the slow learners or the repeaters were the ones given the demerits, and suspending these kids from school would not make their behavior improve, but make them more bitter and apt to cause trouble."

Another returning Longwood girl told how receiving demerits sometimes became the symbol of status. "One boy openly bragged about getting over 400 demerits in a single year," she said.

Problem Students

Did you ever have any problems with students who refused to learn or who just slept in your classroom? "was another question asked of the student teachers.

"I had one class of only repeaters," one girl began. "Some of these kids worked at night and didn't get home until late and then didn't feel the need to do homework. I had to find something that would interest these kids on their own level — that would keep them awake. I used a lot of current issues units in that class."

"Sure, I had a couple of kids who slept in every one of my classes. What did I do? I let them sleep. I figured their sleep was more important," another girl said.

There were those who disagreed with this theory, however. "I felt I had to wake these sleepers to be fair to the rest of the class. Sleep and boredom tend to be contagious, you know."

Other girls told of how they treated students who refused to respond. Says one girl, "I had one little girl in my class who just refused to take part in any class activities. I found that she was embarrassed because she wasn't up to the level of most of the other kids."

"I really thought one guy was going to be a big disappointment. I finally hit upon giving him little jobs and roles in the class to make him a part. Being Antony in 'Julius Caesar' was one of the best things that ever happened to Willie."

Still, there were those who after continued efforts refused to respond and were disappointments.

"There was one boy in my advanced class who was convinced he was stupid. His ability was the same as his classmates', but he never did the work he was capable of just because his parents told him all his life that he was stupid. I was never able to make any progress with him."

Friendly Or Aloof?

How important to be friends with the students, was another question asked of the student teachers. The views on this question were varied.

"I think a student teacher must establish herself as a teacher right away. That means that she must put herself on a level with other teachers and not with the students," claimed one girl.

"Being too friendly with your students just doesn't pay. The kids expect you to be a teacher and not a buddy. This doesn't mean that you stay behind your desk all the time, but allowing the kids to get to know your personal life isn't good," another said.

One girl had an opposite view. "It is very important to be friends with your students. They can still have respect for you even if they get to know you personally. Your responsibility toward the kids is more than just being a teacher. You have to be willing to answer questions and help them on a personal level as well."

Usefulness of Education Courses

Did you find that your education courses taken while at Longwood were of great value?

"I never really knew how important those things they teach you in education are," said one student teacher. "I never saw the real value of all those objectives and lesson plans until I actually went out to teach."

Another girl was not as definite. "I guess those courses really helped," she said, "but of course nothing is like actually teaching a classroom. When you have 25 or 30 kids in your class, you have to be quick and able to think on your feet."

"Besides my education classes, I think my supervising teacher helped me the most. She left me pretty much on my own but was willing to help out whenever I had problems I couldn't solve for myself. She just really impressed me with her professionalism."

On the whole, student teaching experiences seemed to be rewarding. Of course, there were those who had difficulties but that is to be expected in any program, especially one that handles so many types of situations.

In any case, the student teacher program is over again for this year excepting those who will practice teach in the summer. It is hoped that next year's results will be equally as satisfying.

Baldwin Tops Fencers Next Step Is Nationals

Mary Frances Baldwin, a member of Longwood's Fencing Team, captured first place in the Women's Division of the Virginia State AFLA Foil Championship held recently at the College of William and Mary. This qualifies her as one of Virginia's three representatives to the National Competitions.

Temple Harvey, another Longwood fencer, placed in the top six fencers, and ended up taking fifth place.

Seventeen women registered for the Women's Division. These fencers were divided into three pools of six, six, and five. Each contestant was required to fence all other fencers in their respective pools. The top two fencers in each pool were then placed in a final pool to determine the top three places.

Mary Frances won in her pool with a score of four wins and one lose, while Temple won in her pool with a final score of 3-2. Both then advanced to the finals. In this competition, Temple ended up with a score of 2 wins and three loses, while Mary Frances ended her bouts again with a score of 4-1, loosing only to her teammate, Temple Harvey.

Other winners were: Mrs. Marie Dacey, Richmond Fencing Club, second; Cheryl Evans, Mary Washington College, third; Susan Morey, Richmond Fencing Club, fourth; and Barbara Clare, Lynchburg, sixth.

National Competition will be held later this spring.

Mrs. Elaine Taylor, English Lacrosse Coach, gives Sherry Williams pointers on the proper way to cradle.

English Lacrosse Coach Instructs Longwood's Team

Mrs. Elaine Taylor, of Dorset, England, was the visiting coach for the LC Lacrosse Team at a clinic held here this past week end.

She was selected as the visiting coach because in the past six years, while serving as a teacher and lacrosse coach in a selective type of grammar school, her lacrosse team has won the national lacrosse title four years.

While here at Longwood, Mrs. Taylor worked with sixteen girls on basic skills of cradling, pivoting, passing, catching, picking up the ball, and cutting and creating a space.

Mrs. Taylor spoke highly of her visits to the various colleges so far. "It has been a great honor for me to serve as a visiting coach. The friendliness and kindness has been overwhelming. By the enthusiasm of the coaches and students, I know that lacrosse will come to be a popular sport in the United States," she commented.

Mrs. Taylor has been in the United States for two weeks and plans to spend at least another two weeks visiting colleges throughout the state.

Many spectators came out to watch Longwood's Varsity and Junior Varsity tennis teams defeat Mary Washington College by a final score of 8-2.

What you should know about diamonds when you know it's for keeps

You've dreamed about your diamond engagement ring a thousand times. But now that you know it's for keeps, it's time to stop dreaming and start learning about diamonds and their value.

Because no two diamonds are exactly alike, jewelers have adopted exacting standards to determine the relative value of each and every diamond in the world. These standards include a diamond's size (carat weight), color, cut and clarity.

Although it's important to know the facts about diamonds, you certainly don't have to be an expert to choose a Keepsake Diamond Ring . . . because Keepsake guarantees a diamond of fine white color, correct cut and perfect clarity or replacement assured. The famous Keepsake certificate provides permanent registration, trade-in value and protection against loss of diamonds from the setting.

COLOR: Fine white diamonds are quite rare and valued accordingly. Other shades in relative order of their worth are: blue, yellow, brown and black.

CUT: The cut of a diamond—the facets placed on it by a trained cutter—brings out the gem's fire and brilliance. Anything less than correct cut reduces beauty, brilliance and value.

CLARITY: Determined by the absence of small impurities. A perfect diamond has no impurities when examined under ten power magnification by a trained eye.

CARAT: A diamond's size is measured in carats. As a diamond increases in size, its price will increase even more if the quality remains constant. But larger diamonds of inferior quality may actually be worth less than smaller, perfect diamonds.

Your Keepsake Jeweler has a complete selection of new styles. He's in the Yellow Pages under "Jewelers." Or, dial free day or night long distance 800-243-6000. In Connecticut, call 800-942-0655.

Clean-Up Project Seeks Volunteers

By SYLVIA SMITH

A self-help clean-up program for needy families in Farmville and Hampden-Sydney will be held this Saturday and several Saturdays thereafter.

Sponsored by the Housing Committee of the Prince Edward Council on Human Relations, the project will include cleaning, painting and minor repair work on homes in the area.

Last May the Council sponsored the successful Gross Street Project. Approximately 20 Hampden-Sydney and Longwood students spent a week-end painting, cleaning, and repairing houses on Gross Street.

This will be a community project. In an effort to improve living conditions, volunteers will help residents to improve their own homes.

The Council needs both student and faculty volunteers for this project. Supplies, transportation, and lunch will be provided.

Interested students should be in front of Langford Building at 9 a.m. this Saturday.

Committee Votes To Extend Course Withdrawal Period

The Academic Policies Committee recently decided to change the procedure for withdrawing from classes. A student will be able to drop a course any time within the first six weeks of the semester.

In the past, withdrawals had to be made before the end of the first two weeks of the semester. If a student dropped a course after this time she received an automatic F in the class. Under the new system if a student withdraws from the college or from a course within the allotted six weeks, she will receive a grade of W (withdrawal) instead of WP (withdrawal passing) or WF (withdrawal failing).

The committee does not feel that this change will interfere with the academic quality of any course. It will merely enable the student to adequately evaluate her choice of courses. The change will be included in the next catalog.

Applications Available For Student And Resident Assistants

By KATHY ROBERTSON

Application forms for the positions of Resident Assistant and Student Assistant will be available later this month. Any student interested in being a Resident Assistant should contact the office of the Associate Dean of Students. Forms will be available in the dorms for freshmen and sophomores who wish to sign up as Student Assistants.

A Resident Assistant, formerly known as Resident Counselor, is a student who resides in a freshman dormitory and serves as a counselor for a group of freshman students. Each resident Assistant devotes from 10 to 15 hours each week to her counseling duties. The salary is $55.55 per month.

Resident Assistants are selected on the basis of their qualifications for counseling and advising. They should be observant of problems, understanding, cooperative, willing to take initiative in talking to students, sympathetic to problems existing in dormitories, and able to devote time and energy to the execution of their duties.

During Orientation Week Student Assistants are busy meeting all the new freshmen. The Student Assistant is a person who is anxious to help the freshmen feel at home at Longwood, to show them around, to listen to their problems, and to help them in any way possible to adjust to college life. Student Assistants are members of the sophomore and junior classes recommended by classmates, Head Residents, and instructors. Students may also indicate that they are interested in being Student Assistants.

Passenger Train Service To Be Discontinued In Farmville

By VALERIE BLANKS

April 30 is the last day rail passenger service will be available in Farmville. This action came as a result of Railpax announcing its new and limited route system.

The National Railroad Passenger Corp., better known as Railpax, is a semipublic corporation created by Congress to take over rail passenger service. Their new network will go into effect on May 1.

Railpax chose to cut out the Norfolk & Western Railway System from Norfolk to Cincinnati, favoring instead the C & O. The Chesapeake & Ohio Railway System extends from Newport News to Cincinnati, passing through Richmond.

This is only one example of the restrictions placed on the rail service route. The network will provide 184 passenger trains, which is half the nation's rail passenger service, to connect 114 cities with 100,000 or more population. This will provide for 85 per cent of the nation's urban population. The new route bypasses a few states and many major cities.

Railpax is restricting its services to the routes that offer the best chances for eventual profitable operation and improved service. This group restricted its routes because of the low financial resources it has to work from.

The discontinuance of the N&W Train Nos. 3 and 4 will affect many of the Longwood and Hampden-Sydney students. A number of the Longwood girls depend on the train for transportation to Norfolk, Roanoke, Christiansburg, Bluefield, and Portsmouth. One student from Portsmouth said she "was very disappointed and upset" by the decision. She relied on the train as the "nicest and fastest way to get home. The bus takes five hours where the train only takes three."

Mr. Wilson, who works at the train station, cited that there were around 100 students at the station wanting transportation home on the Friday before Spring break because of the rough weather. As Mr. Wilson said, "It really presents a problem," affecting the employees who will be without jobs, as well as the students.

Current Job Crisis Highlights National English Conference

The National Conference on the Future of Graduate Education in English will be held in Knoxville on April 22 to 24. Dr. William L. Frank, chairman of the Department of English at Longwood College, will attend.

As explained by Dr. Frank, the major concerns of the Conference will be the current job crisis, the rating of Graduate Programs by the American Council, and the controversy of the Ph.D. versus the Doctor of Arts Degree.

Of interest to the Longwood students will be the Conference's deliberation over the problem of the oversupply of Masters of Arts degrees. If M.A.'s are in abundance and are forced into teaching on the high school level, it could create a backlog of Bachelor of Arts looking for teaching positions. The conference will try to determine if there is a problem of oversupply and possible solutions.

known what was going on.

The Russian government gave the group several pieces of literature. One book they received was about Russia defeating Germany during World War II.

"Not only the fighting man won," Dr. Willett said, "but also the party. If there was ever a piece of propaganda, this is it."

The Russian government exercises a great deal of control over the people. Dr. Willett compared the situation to that in Orwell's 1984.

"It's not quite as bad as that," he said, "but there is definitely the feeling that you are being watched."

"I've been in many countries before," Dr. Willett said, "but never any as oppressive as Russia. There was a great feeling of relief going through the passport controls to leave that country."

"You come away with a stronger sense of compulsion to improve your own country," he continued, "so that it won't become like Russia."

Dr. Willett already has made plans to lecture some classes on his trip. He will be showing his slides on Thursday, April 22, at 7 p.m. in Bedford.

Although this is Lynn's first experience participating in a pageant, she does not appear to be nervous. When asked what her first reaction was when she was notified of her selection upon returning from student teaching, she replied, "I was very surprised and honored. I really didn't expect it at all."

Judicial Reform Committee

Presents Proposals To Dean

By ETHEL REITER

Seven members of the Judicial Reform Committee presented to Dean Blackwell 18 proposals on Thursday, March 25.

Dean Blackwell seemed quite receptive to a majority of the proposed changes. He disagreed with only three. He freely discussed each proposal thoroughly and gave examples to support his opinions.

The meeting resulted in a decision to hold an open forum to present these proposals to the student body. At this forum each proposal will be written in its final form. They will all be combined in a booklet and students will vote on each one separately. This meeting will be held in late April.

Cy Young said, "We left with a feeling of accomplishment. I think we are really going to get somewhere."

Art Instructor Dismissed Solicits Student Support

By ETHEL REITER

"I have come here to ask for your support," said Mr. William Stukeby to about 50 students assembled in Curry dormitory 10:30 p.m., Wednesday.

Mr. Stukeby, an instructor in the Art Department, recently received a notice of his dismissal. Dean Blackwell said that Mr. Stukeby is being replaced by a more experienced and qualified professor. "We tried to hire this woman last year, but she wanted to stay in the school system in which she was working. This year she agreed to come to Longwood," said Blackwell.

However, Mr. Stukeby does not feel that this is the basis of his dismissal. He had received earlier a letter from President Willett in which he accused Stukeby of making derogatory remarks regarding Longwood's judicial system. This letter was then sent to the Board of Visitors.

A student asked Mr. Stukeby if he felt that his alleged remarks led to the termination of his contract. He replied, "Yes, I do."

A petition was then read which asks for the continuation of Stukeby's teaching position at Longwood College. These petitions are being circulated in the dorms.

New Head Colleague To Carry On Blue And White Spirit

By CHRISTINE SHARPE

Donna Hicks has been chosen Head Colleague for the 1971-72 school session. Her election was announced at a ceremony in the Rotunda Tuesday night.

The old Colleagues formed a procession from the third floor of the Rotunda and walked down to circle around Donna. The Colleagues presented Donna with a dozen red roses and the bell in the bell tower was rung for her.

After the ceremony the Colleagues held a reception for Donna and gave her a tray as a gift.

"I was really surprised and excited when I was chosen," said Donna. Asked what she thought her duties would be, Donna replied, "My biggest job and that of all the new Colleagues will be to fill the shoes of the old Colleagues. Debbie Chapman and all the old Colleagues just did a fantastic job."

As Head Colleague Donna will be responsible to give a "blue and white welcome" to the incoming Freshmen. A concert, banquet, Freshman capping service, and picnic must all be planned for the new Freshmen.

Donna will lead 75 Colleagues through various activities next year. The main job of the Colleagues is to welcome freshmen and familiarize them with Longwood's many customs and rules. They also assist in Founder's Day activities and the annual Forensics Tournament.

Arab Pact

CAIRO — The semiofficial Cairo newspaper, Al Ahram, reported Saturday that the leaders of Egypt, Syria, and Libya have signed an agreement to merge their countries into a federal union. The new government will be established after referendums in the three countries on September 1. The union will not make a peace treaty or negotiate directly with Israel.

Army Option

WASHINGTON — This year's high school graduates are being offered a plan to avoid the draft and a tour of Vietnam. Under "the European Option," if a recruit enlists in a combat division, he is guaranteed a 16 month assignment in Europe. After the tour in Europe, the recruit would have to go wherever the Army assigned him, but U. S. involvement in Vietnam is expected to be concluded before this time. The program went into effect March 25 and is part of the Army's general revision in its recruiting methods.

Capital Deserted

CHUADANGA, EAST PAKISTAN — The provisional capital set up by the rebel forces in East Pakistan was abandoned Friday without a fight. Thousands of refugees were heading for the Indian border and resistance seems to be disappearing everywhere. The rebel forces have been thrown into complete confusion and are surrendering without fighting. Those forces still operating are reverting to guerrilla warfare.

China Tour Over

HONG KONG — The U. S. table tennis team, which has been touring China for eight days, returned to Hong Kong, Saturday. The group expressed mixed emotions about their views on China, but all agreed it had been a rewarding experience.

Debbie Arvin Reigns As 1971 Miss Longwood

Debbie Arvin receives crown and roses of the Miss Longwood pageant.

By CHRISTINE SHARPE
Deborah Ann Arvin's face showed her complete astonishment when she was announced Miss Longwood of 1971 at the pageant Saturday night. Dee received the Most Talented Award as well as the title of Miss Longwood.

"I kept trying to think of a number that rhymes with six. I couldn't believe that I'd won. I was so surprised and excited. These were the thoughts that were running through my head as I was being handed the dozen red roses and as the crown was placed on my head by Debra Hyatt, Miss Longwood of 1970."

The four finalists were 1st, runner-up, Jane Alden Hoen; 2nd, runner-up, Cathryn Ann Webb; 3rd, runner-up, Cynthia Leigh Borill; and 4th, runner-up, Amy Diane Bolling.

Jane Hoen was also selected by the other contestants as Miss Congeniality.

Sandra Gail Thompson, Judy Lynn Wimmer, Virginia Lynn Armiger, and Nancy Lee Goodman were the other contestants in the pageant.

A ballad, a jazz, and a classical version of "Autumn Leaves" on the piano won Dee the title of Most Talented. Dee, an 18 year old freshman from Victoria, was sponsored by the Longwood Concert Choir. For the evening gown competition, Dee wore a white Empire gown. As winner of the pageant, Dee will receive a $500 scholarship and gifts from the Farmville merchants.

In the questioning of the finalists, Dee was asked, "Of what value is music to the high school student?" She answered by saying that music has always lifted her spirits and she feels that it can do the same for high school students.

Jane Hoen's folk ballad "The Marvelous Toy" accentuated the theme of the pageant "What's More American." She played the guitar and sang as her talent. Jane, 18, was sponsored by the Freshman Class and is from Richmond. Close friendships and many activities for girls were the advantages of an all girls' school given by Jane in the finalists' questioning. Jane received a $150 scholarship as 1st runner-up.

All examinations are scheduled in accordance with the first day of the week that a class meets. For example, all classes meeting at 11:00 a. m. on MWF, M-F, MT-F, or any combination beginning with Monday at 11:00 a.m., will have the final examination at 9:00 a.m., on Tuesday, May 25. In the event a class meets at an irregular hour, e.g., 12:45 Monday, the class will be examined at the time set aside for the regularly scheduled classes meeting during that period, in this case with the classes meeting at 1:00 on Monday. Examinations for evening classes will be scheduled on the evening of the regular class meeting during the examination period.

Examination periods preceded by an asterisk are alternate times which may be used in addition to, but not instead of, the regularly scheduled period. Instructors may permit students to take examinations at the alternate periods listed. Many classes do not lend themselves to dual examinations. Therefore, acceptance of this program is the sole prerogative of the individual instructor. Deviations from the above schedule may be arranged with the instructor involved. Deviations should not be made in conflict with other examinations scheduled for the student involved.

Grading Softer? Students or Teachers Better? Whatever the Cause, Grades Are Going Up

(Reprinted by permission, The Chronicle of Higher Education.)

SAN FRANCISCO — Students' grade-point averages are going up, according to a recent survey of grading practices on about 100 campuses.

Between 1960 and 1969, the mean grade-point average of undergraduates rose from 2.4 to 2.56 (on a scale on which 4.0 equals straight A's), reports Leroy S. Burwen, director of institutional research at San Francisco State College, who conducted the survey.

During the same period, the mean grade-point average for graduate students rose from 3.19 to 3.36, Mr. Burwen says. However, graduate students' averages did not increase between 1968 and 1969, indicating that they may have gone as high as they can go on a 4.0 scale.

On the other hand, grade-point averages for undergraduates seem to be rising at an accelerating rate with no signs of "topping out," Mr. Burwen says. The increase in undergraduates' averages between 1968 and 1969 was equal to the increase for the preceding four years.

Mr. Burwen says his survey indicates that grades are losing their validity as indicators of students' abilities. "The kind of inferences you were once able to make from grades, you are less and less able to make," he says.

"We're entering an era when the bachelor's degree will not be as good a job-getting tool and when employers won't be able to evaluate graduates on the basis of their grades," Mr. Burwen says. He predicts that employers will use "new and different kinds of selection criteria," such as aptitude tests.

While he has no data on why students' grades are going up, Mr. Burwen says there are three possible explanations:

*Students are getting better.

*Teaching is getting better.

*Grading is becoming easier.

Mr. Burwen believes the last reason is at least partially true. Faculty members, he says, are less willing to flunk students out of college.

While this may be partially due to the draft, Mr. Burwen says that "the onus for flunking out is shifting from the student to the school." Many professors, he says, may have an "unconscious reaction" to that shift.

A Special Thanks

Although we realize that Chi cannot commend everyone in one burning, the Rotunda Staff was a little disappointed to find that Mrs. Frankie and Mrs. Daniels of the post office had been overlooked the night of the burning.

Even though a Rotunda staff commendation is not quite as spectacular, nor as sensational, as a Chi recognition we feel that the postmistresses should be commended this year for their service rather than having to wait until next year for possible public recognition.

So, in the true spirit of Chi, minus the fire, robes and song the Rotunda would like to thank both postmistresses for their outstanding service to the college.

We realize and apologize that we cannot give you ashes nor a poison bottle to remind you that you were recognized. We can only remind you daily by thanking you for the job you are doing.

There is one string attached, however, in a Rotunda commendation. In any future mail strike, we expect you to remember our vote of thanks. Chi will just have to suffer without any mail.

A Correction

Dear Editor:

I would like to clarify one point in the article in the April 14 edition of the ROTUNDA, which dealt with the possible discontinuation of certain subject majors at the College. Miss Pierce, the author of the article, states that "... Longwood will be looking for an instructor who can teach another language as well as German." The wording of the article no doubt leaves the impression that this statement was obtained from me. Actually, the statement to which I believe Miss Pierce is referring was quite different in nature and context. During our conversation I was asked how the College could "economize" in the case of German, since I am the only person teaching the subject anyway. My reply was that perhaps the College could eventually employ a professor who would be able to teach another language as well as German. I did not say that the College is in fact taking any such action; indeed this would contradict the Dean's officially stated position that he is only considering the elimination of the German major at this point.

Otherwise, I wish to commend you for the outstanding job you have been doing with the paper and in particular for the interest you have shown in developments affecting the academic program of the College. Keep up the good work!

Ben Sandidge

Percentages

Dear Editor,

I would like to comment on the letter to the editor that appeared in the April 14 issue of the ROTUNDA which was signed by Barbara Radford.

It seems to be Miss Radford's opinion that the new Colleagues were chosen unfairly. They were either physical education majors (eleven out of seventy-five were) or members of sororities (twenty out of seventy-five were not). Even if all seventy-five Colleagues had either been physical education majors or members of sororities, what would that have implied?

I wholeheartedly agree that "blue and white spirit is manifested differently in each individual" but how can anyone say that because the majority of Colleagues are in sororities that they are all alike? They are as individual as you and me.

It is a shame that everyone who wanted to be a Colleague couldn't be one, but this doesn't mean that the new students won't get to know the rest of us who are a part of Longwood. Student Assistants, composed of Sophomores and Juniors, also come back early to orient the new students and they are as much a part of the College as the Colleagues are.

There were a couple of comments in Miss Radford's letter that contradicted each other. First, she said that the "whole ceremony was so predictable" and then she said that "in the future, perhaps the Colleagues could be selected because of the work they have done in school activities and the blue and white spirit they have shown throughout the year." Well, if the ceremony WAS so predictable, then it was obvious that the people who would be chosen Colleagues did exemplify blue and white spirit being as these Red and Whites were voted on by Green and Whites.

If there are any sound suggestions for the tapping of next year's Colleagues, please bring them to Donna Hicks, our new nonphysical education major, nonsorority member, Head Colleague.

Very Sincerely,
Debbie Chapman
Head Colleague 1970-71

An Independent

As the newly elected Head Colleague for the session 1971-72, I became quite disturbed after reading the article in THE ROTUNDA that said, and I quote, "The new Colleagues are either members of sororities or physical education majors."

I must begin by saying that I am neither a physical education major nor am I in a sorority. The same applies to our newly elected Secretary and Banquet Chairman. These are only a few of many such examples.

When a girl goes through Rush and joins a sorority she meets many people that otherwise she never would have met. This gives more people the opportunity to know her also. This is true of a physical education major, too.

As she actively participates in the many sports offered on Longwood's campus, she develops many new friendships.

Each girl that was selected to be a colleague, is unique and different in her own way. She will present her girls with her own type of Blue and White spirit.

The article also stated that "Colleagues should be selected because of the work they have done in school activities and the blue and white spirit they have shown throughout the year."

I feel that all of the newly selected colleagues have lived up to this and it will be their job to continue so. I must add that the people that were chosen as Colleagues are not the only freshmen who have shown blue and white spirit. As in any election, there are many who are qualified. I am sure it was not an easy job for any of the people in the orientation groups to elect certain girls nor was it an easy job for the old Colleagues to vote.

The Colleagues of 1970-71 did a marvelous job and I am sure they thought long and hard before they chose the Colleagues that they felt were capable but nevertheless, the girls they chose can not be stereotyped as either a sorority sister or physical education major.

Donna Hicks

The Owl And The Pussycat (Starts At State Theater Tonight)

By SARAH FARRAR

Come in. Sit down . . . and laugh! Bill Manhoff's THE OWL AND THE PUSSYCAT was a Broadway hit in 1964 and is the kind of sex comedy New Yorkers and just about everyone else has gone for in a big way during the last decade. The story: dumb flamboyant hooker confronts mousy, literary clerk; a long night of anguish; real boy finally discovers real girl; both finally discover themselves; love triumphs. Though the mechanics are nothing more than convenient, Buck Henry's updated screenplay and Herbert Ross' slambang direction save them. The humor is still Broadway slick — and most of its mass is shot during the film's first half hour — yet THE OWL AND THE PUSSYCAT is decidedly well-crafted, good entertainment.

As the unhappy folks struggling with one another, Barbra Streisand and George Segal make an oddly appealing pair. She's the horse-radish on his plate of fish; loud, abrasive, and everything he's not. Yet, Segal holds his comic own against the Brooklyn "music" she spurts out, even after discovering the "sexual Disneyland" he has on his hands. Most memorable after their first lengthy encounter is their turning on scene at the home of Segal's in-laws to be.

The inevitable hilarity of these situations, Miss Streisand's flying obscenities, the vital contribution of Segal's performance, and Ross' snappy direction bring THE OWL AND THE PUSSYCAT up to all expectations Hollywood had for it.

Of course, Barbra is not Katherine Hepburn. But all she has to do is open her mouth and you can tell she's a professional. Forget her lack of depth as the female counterpart in this romantic film, though. Just remember that the real magic happens when she sings (which she doesn't do in the film).

THE OWL AND THE PUSSYCAT is playing Wednesday through Tuesday, April 21 through 27 at the State Theater.

Three Bands, Free To Students, Highlight May Day Schedule

Three free bands will highlight this year's May Day Weekend. Tim Brown, Lankford student union director said that the entire bill will be paid by the student union. "The entire week end, complete with picnic and reception will be free for the students.

The May Day activities will begin Friday April 30 at 7:00 p.m. with a free concert until 12:00 p.m. on Her Field by the Natural Wildlife.

Saturday's activities will begin at 2:15 in the afternoon with the May Day skits. Debbie Chapman, who is in charge of the skits this year is confident that many of last year's skit problems will be alleviated. She said that the skits will not only be heard this year, but that they will contain jokes that will be understandable and will relate to freshmen and their parents. The skits will be followed by the May Queen, Ellen Lyon, and her court.

One of the festivities surrounding the May Queen and her court will be the second free band of the weekend. The South Folk String ensemble composed of four men will play country folk and James Taylor selections. This will be followed by a reception at 4:30 p.m. in Lankford for all students and their guests.

After the reception a picnic catered by Slater is scheduled on Wheeler Mall. That evening the third free band, the J Gees an eight-member band from Annapolis will play on Her Field.

Because the entire weekend is free to the student body, Tim Brown feels optimistic about the turnout. He said that last year there were approximately 884 guests plus an undetermined number of students. He realizes that the guest list will probably drop this year, but he is still hoping for at least 700 guests and about 1,000 students.

He hopes that because the student union is providing so much free entertainment that the students will consider staying on campus for the May Day Week end.

Miss Bishop Returns From Dallas

Miss Bishop, Chairman of the Art Department, recently returned from the Eleventh National Art Education Association Biennial Conference held in Dallas, Texas, from April 4 through 9.

Dr. Rudolph Arneim was a lecturer and he spoke on "Art as Humanism," which was the general theme of the Conference. Besides lecturers there were workshops, special and general sessions, mini-conferences, exhibits, research reports, films and symposiums which related to and elaborated on the "goal of education — the human goal, the humanistic goal, the goal so far as human beings are concerned." This goal "is the self-actualization of a person, the becoming fully human — it is helping the person to become the best that he is able to become." (William Bealmer, NAEA President).

Linoleum cut prints by Campus School children

Campus School Exhibits In Bedford

By MARY ANN BENTLEY

Currently showing in the second floor hallway of the Bedford Art Building is an exhibit by students of the John P. Wynne Campus School. Varieties of techniques and imagination are combined to render the colorful and interesting print.

"The Kindergarten through Grade 3 drew directly onto poly-print plates with pencils and pulled their prints using hand baren's," reports Miss Sherry Potts, Director of Art, of the Campus School.

By using 9" x 12" Speedball plates, Grade 4 cut out their designs and attached them to cardboard. The prints were pulled using the press.

Grades 6 and 7 transferred their creations to linoleum plates and cut the plates with regular linoleum tools. Using construction paper, tissue paper, bogus paper, and tissue collage, the prints were pulled using the press. Water soluble inks were used in all cases and the subject matter was the choice of the student.

This, how exemplified, a high degree of creativity and talent evident in subject matter, use of material, and craftsmanship.

'Tartuffe' Story Of Relationships

Within Emotional Triangle

The Longwood Players and Hampden-Sydney Jongleurs will present "Tartuffe" by Moliere on April 29, 30, and May 1, at 7:30 p.m., in Jarman Auditorium.

"Tartuffe" is based on the conflict in the relationships between Tartuffe, Elmire and her husband, Orgon. Through deceptive means, Orgon is influenced to take Tartuffe into his home as a guest. This puts Tartuffe closer to his target, Elmire, who he has asked to be his mistress.

Damis, Orgon's son, has not been deceived by the religious facade which Tartuffe has been hiding behind and is determined to expose him before his father. Damis discovers instead that his father refuses to believe him and not only orders him from the house, but disinherits him.

As the play approaches its end, Elmore decides to expose Tartuffe's true character to Orgon. However, because Orgon has made Tartuffe his heir, his power is too great for her to fight. The resolution of this conflict concludes the play.

Chi Walks - A Step In A New Direction ?

The identities of Chi's twelve members were revealed at the annual bonfire Wednesday night in Her parking lot.

Led by torchbearer Linda Southworth, members Bonnie Bower, Brenda Brown, Lynn Coleman, Sally Gill, Penny Jones, Andee Maddox, Debbie Remsburg, Sue Rinaldi, Carol Umdenstock, Casey Wilkes, and Connie Williams conducted the seventy-year tradition.

The spirit of Longwood College is supposedly interwoven with tradition and fostered with high ideals, all embodied in Chi, the campus' twelve member secret society.

Clad in white robes, each marked with a large "X" (the Greek letter chi), the students of Chi are said to be those girls who exemplify the honorable attributes to which the organization is dedicated.

Spirit Of Cooperation

Founded October 15, 1900, the society holds as its essential purpose to encourage and maintain the spirit of cooperation among students in all phases of college life. In the past, this has been expressed through the donation of the library sundial, the Chi tiling in the old rec, the flags in Lankford Building, and the landscaping of the Dell at Longwood Estates. Further evidences of the group's service are the cornerstones of Stevens Building and Jarman Auditorium and the plaques for French Building.

Standard reminders of Chi's ideals are found in the Chi banners, early-hour walks, chants, and the Chi signs painted on the sidewalks. Preceding major campus events concerning the student body is the placement of the red and white Chi banners with a skull and crossbone insignia, the organization's emblem. These banners are more frequently than not pilfered by sticky-fingered enthusiasts prior to the heralded event.

Of particular interest to freshmen are Chi's walks, which usually take place between 2 and 4 a.m. The campus police assist in rousing the chosen dormitories to witness the spectacle of the white-robed figures walking in a chain procession. Although the members no longer wear hoods to help conceal their identities, they hold their arms outstretched and keep their heads bent down to sufficiently mask their faces.

During the walk the society's chant can be heard: "Chi is watching you / We're gonna go where / you are . . ." The song, like the organization's ideals, helps to project an image of omnipotence; yet it is maintained that Chi as an organization never seeks to find fault in others.

Timed Chimes

Chi does commend, however, and does so in a most ceremonious way: with its annual bonfire, an event which causes campus-wide confusion for two weeks. Because Chi does not announce ahead of time the date of "burning," false alarms abound during April. Whether instigated by suspiciously timed chimes or anonymous phone calls, Chi "scare" usually result in crowds of several hundred pajamaed fans searching for the fire site.

Chi helpers are also made known at burning, since they, along with the campus police, organize the viewers before Chi appears. The Chi members walk around the fire site, while the torchbearer, along with the helpers, ignite the poled boxes and logs.

When the fire is burning, commendations are made by each member. A white effigy tossed into the flames accompanies the name and attributes of each person commended.

Waning Meaning

Despite its high ideals and lofty purposes, many students feel that Chi's meaning is waning. Most agree that in principle it is good, but the typical complaint is: "Why doesn't Chi ever do anything?"

Apparently few girls are aware that Chi does, in fact, keep an emergency scholarship fund for needy students. Built up from contributions from Chi alumnae, the one-and-a-half-year-old fund is dispensed to students who absolutely cannot secure the money to continue their educations. This spring was the first occasion that the scholarship has been awarded; eligibility is determined by the business office and awarded by administrative request.

However, concerned students have noted that ideals are frequently forgotten unless they are visibly put into use. Although the term "spirit of Longwood" was tossed around frequently in attempts to define Chi's purposes few girls were able to explain what that phrase should include.

One junior said, "All of us have some Longwood spirit, but Chi is supposed to be special. If they're special, why don't they do something special to show spirit instead of just walking in the middle of the night?"

Late Date

This opinion also summed up the attitudes of freshmen who were disillusioned with Chi and its practices. Waiting until October for the first of this year's four walks seems to have caused many potential Chi fans to fall by the wayside.

The long wait was explained by Chi sponsor and alumna, Miss Barbara Bishop. "That was the week that the plumbing was creating problems in Stubbs," she said, "so the walk was delayed until the members, the majority of whom live in Stubbs, could leave the dormitory without detection."

Still, many freshmen felt neglected. "By the time they finally got around to us, we had had it with watching for them," said one. "Some girls on my hall didn't even get up when the nightie-watch called us. I mean I guess it's exciting if you go for that kind of thing - and we probably all would have orientation week - but after we got settled down, we just didn't need that stuff as much."

Tradition Is Key

Has Chi really lost its pur-posefulness? Several juniors felt it still has a place on campus. The key factor, they insisted, is tradition.

"If you don't respect tradition, you just don't understand why Chi is special," explained one. "It's all tied up together - Chi, song contest, reds and greens - you just have to be a part of it to understand it. It's everybody working together that's important with those things, and the kids who don't work with them can't really understand them, I guess."

Perhaps Chi needs to find new directions for its energies to spark interest into those students who pay it unenthusiastic respect. It is interesting to note that while criticism was voiced by many, only two girls interviewed admitted to disregarding the Chi emblems on the sidewalks; most girls simply sidestep the red insignias out of habit, superstition or request. Apparently there exists a potential market for Chi tradition yet.

Ideally, Chi has as its members Longwood's highest caliber students. Hopefully these girls can solve the dilemma of a gap between the society's objectives and what some feel are its shortcomings. Many students seem to feel that an organization whose prime objective is a spiritual bond within the student body should maintain a working contact with the student body. It should not allow itself to be forgotten in the shuffle of changing attitudes, but should be flexible enough to apply its objectives while still maintaining anonymity.

LC Tops Lynchburg; Bows To RMWC

Cheryl Clarke reaches up high to return a ball across the net to her opponent.

Bobbie Ellen won her singles match in varsity competition against Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

Gymnastic practice is offered every Wednesday afternoon for any students interested in practicing stunts.

Longwood's Varsity Tennis Team now has an overall record of two wins and one lose as they dropped a match to Randolph-Macon Woman's College, 4-3, and picked up a win over Lynchburg College 5-0, in matches held last week.

In the match played against Randolph-Macon, at Lynchburg, Lynn Coleman, Freda Lunsford, and Brenda Blackwell, all singles players, each dropped their matches to their opponents. Number one doubles players, Laurel Baldwin and Lynn Kwiatkowski, also lost their match while number two doubles players, Debbie Ellen and Charlotte Fugett, scored a victory.

Three members of the Junior Varsity Team went along to Lynchburg and helped to bring Longwood's final score close to that of Randolph-Macon Woman's College. Doubles players, Dana Hutcherson and B. J. Rogers, and singles player Bobbie Ellen, each won their match.

Lynchburg College proved no competition to Longwood's team as LC defeated them by a score of 5-0. All singles and doubles matches were won by LC.

Freshman Brenda Blackwell shows the powerful serve that helped her defeat her Lynchburg College opponent.

Lacrosse Teams Top Westhampton In Recent Game

Lacrosse season got off to a good start as both the Junior Varsity and the Varsity teams beat Westhampton College by a score of 7-3 and 5-4 respectively. The game was played Saturday on Barlow Field.

Rene Harrison, a veteran lacrosse player, and Kay Harvey, a newcomer to the sport, both showed outstanding skill as they each scored four goals to help Longwood advance to victory. Rene played on the varsity, while Kay played on the junior varsity team.

This year's team is composed of veteran players returning with much experience and skill, as well as rank beginners who had never held a cradle before practice started. Coach Anne Huffman feels this year's team has much enthusiasm and determination to make this a winning season.

Rene Harrison concentrates on her Lacrosse skills. She helped lead Longwood to a 5-4 victory by making 4 of the 5 goals.

looks like we're just going to break even and that's all we wanted to do anyway." She concluded by saying that if you have not already purchased your tickets, do so quickly as they probably will not be sold at the door.

Lambda Iota Tau Sponsors Art Appreciation Lectures

By MARGARET BLAIR

Two art-appreciation lectures, sponsored by Lambda Iota Tau, will be given by Reverend Dr. Raymond V. Schoder, S.J., of Loyola University in the BC Room of Lankford at 7 p.m., April 28, and 1 p.m., April 29.

The first lecture will concern The Master Spanish Painters, the works of Murillo, Velasquez, Ribera, El Greco, and others. Thursday's lecture will concern the topic of Humanism in Greek Art. Both lectures will feature original slides of outstanding clarity and beauty.

Dr. Schoder is well versed in classical studies. He has served as a Fulbright Professor of Greek Art and Archaeology at the University of Nijmegen, Netherlands. Visiting Professor at the American School of Classical Studies in Athens, Greece; Visiting Professor of Greek Art at Sophia University, Tokyo, Japan; and as the director of summer courses of the Virgilian Society at Cumae, Italy, for American teachers.

Dr. Schoder has also taken numerous study trips abroad for first-hand study and photography of archeological sites and museum art in the classical, Near East, Byzantine, and Medieval fields.

Many of his 12,000 color slides have been used by American and foreign publishers in some 80 books, including TOME-LIFE series on the GREAT AGES OF MAN, Book of the Month Club, texts, encyclopedias, art and history surveys, and in the National Slides Archive of the Archeological Institute.

Dr. Schoder has had his three volume READING COURSE IN HOMERIC LITERATURE, MASTERPIECES OF GREEK ART, and ANCIENT GREECE FROM THE AIR published. He was also a co-editor for the New English Bible and the IMMORTAL DIAMOND: STUDIES IN GERARD MANLEY HOPKINS.

A reception will follow Wednesday's lecture.

Music Department Announces

Music Conference

By Barbara Radford

The Virginia chapters of the Music Educators National Conference will meet at the University of Richmond on April 24. Among the chapters meeting is the Student Chapter of the Virginia Music Educator's Association. They will install new officers and make plans for next year's intercollegiate choir.

Three of the chapter's new officers are from Bridgewater College, but the newly elected treasurer is Ray Biggs, a freshman at Longwood.

Last November the Intercollegiate Choir Concert was presented in Jarman Auditorium. At the chapter meeting Saturday it will be decided where this year's concert will be presented and possible directors will be discussed.

Bridgewater Chorale

The Bridgewater College Chorale is coming to Longwood, Tuesday, April 27. The sixteen member group plans to present songs such as "Raindrops Keep Falling on My Head" and other popular songs. The concert will be held April 27 at 5:00 in the Wygal recital hall.

Arcs Ideals Arc Award Founded For Recognition Of Deserving Students

By ETHEL REITER

The Arc Award, a newly devised method for recognizing deserving students who have contributed unusual and outstanding service to Longwood College, will be presented at Senior Assembly.

No more than 10 seniors and juniors combined may receive the award, and these students must be in good academic standing. Students are not eligible who hold an office voted on in major elections, nor can any students who are commended by Chi, presidents or vice-presidents of classes, or members of Geist.

Nominations may be received from the junior and senior classes, from the faculty, from the presidents of all organizations, from the Dean of Women and from the Deans of the College. Nominations are reviewed by a selection committee, which is composed of the senior recipients of the Arc Award of the previous year, a dean, the sponsor of Geist, the sponsor of Chi, and one faculty member. The dean and the faculty member should rotate a new representative appointed each year by the selection committee.

In order to initiate action, the first selection committee will be Miss Bishop, Dean Holt, Dr. Wells, a faculty member to be chosen and the following students: Casey Wilkes, Andee Maddox, Connie Williams, Sue Rinaldi, Mary Curtis Conrad, Jeanean Woolfolk, and Brenda Morene.

The names of the recipients of the Arc Award will be listed on a plaque which will hang in Lankford. In addition, a small memento will be given to each recipient.

Articles On Military History By Millar Accepted For Print

By VALERIE BLANKS

Jack Millar, Assistant Professor of History and a recent addition to the faculty at Longwood, has had one article published and another accepted for publication on military history. Both are an outgrowth of Mr. Millar's research on the foreign soldiers who served in the army of the English king, Henry VIII.

The first of these articles, "The Albanians: 16th Century Mercenaries" appeared in the winter 1970-71 issue of the British-based "Journal of the Society for Army Historical Research." In it Mr. Millar seeks to establish the true national identity of the Albanians, or "Albanoyes horsemen," as they are most commonly referred to in the military annals of the period, while at the same time attempting to evaluate their influence on the development of professional standing armies.

The second article, "The Landsknecht, His Organization and Recruitment with Some Reference to the Reign of Henry VIII" is scheduled for publication this October in "Military Affairs," the quarterly journal of the American Military Institute. "Landsknecht" was the name given to the mercenary German infantry pikeman, i.e. spearman, the late 15th and 16th centuries. Recruited originally about 1485 by the later Holy Roman Emperor, Maximilian I, the landsknecht acquired such a fearsome reputation that after 1500 no respectable monarch in western Europe dreamt of waging war without him. England's Henry VIII was no exception, and Mr. Millar in his article seeks, among other things, to explain how that ruler enlisted contingents of landsknechts for his service.

Dr. Schorske received his M.A. and Ph.D. from Harvard University. He has served in the past on the faculties of Wesleyan University and the University of California at Berkeley. During the nine years he was at Berkeley, Dr. Schorske was a supporter of the Free Speech Movement and was active in educational reform.

Colleges In The News

Statement Of Rights At R-MWC

LYNCHBURG — A "Joint Statement of Rights and Freedoms of Students" will be presented to the students of Randolph-Macon Women's College and voted on April 27. The College Council has been working on the statement for three years to make it meet the needs of the campus. The protection of students' rights and privacy is the main purpose of the statement, which guarantees the privacy of student records, freedom of the student press and the right to organize and join whatever groups or clubs the student chooses as long as there is no infringing on the rights of others.

Student Strike Vote

CHARLOTTESVILLE — Students at the University of Virginia will vote in a referendum April 28-29 on whether to hold a "nonviolent, noncoercive strike" on May 3, 4 and 5, in order to protest against the Indochina War and in memory of Kent State and Jackson State. If the strike is approved, the Student Council will be bound to organize it. A slate of constructive activities has already been proposed for the days which were chosen to coincide with the Antiwar Days in Washington, D.C. The main objection is that the referendum will create a precedent for a strike every May and would create ill feelings against the University.

Judiciary Code Altered

BOONE, NORTH CAROLINA — The Student Judiciary of Appalachian State University has taken steps to clarify and make fairer disciplinary actions which may be taken against students who violate university regulations. Financial aid sponsored or administered by the university was previously immediately suspended if a student was given specific or general probation. Such a decision will now be considered by the administration. Specific probation was also changed to Administrative Reprimand to allow for less severe punishments for minor offenses.

U.Va. Admissions Squeeze

CHARLOTTESVILLE — President Edgar F. Shannon of the University of Virginia has announced that, for the first time, U. Va., will not be able to accept all of the qualified Virginians who have applied for admission. President Shannon was speaking before a luncheon of the Alumni Association on the need for growth at the institution in order to meet the demands of present education. Shannon stressed that without the needed support, the University cannot grow and develop at an acceptable rate.

Training For D. C. March

BLACKSBURG — The University Vietnam Committee at VPI has organized training sessions for people planning to participate in the April 24 March on Washington and the May Day activities. Basic information on legal rights and aid in demonstrating, techniques in nonviolent mass action, emergency first aid and basic self-defense will be given. What to wear and take, how to relate to police and troops and basic information on housing and transportation will be dealt with in other workshops.

Anti-War Demonstration To Be Held In D. C.

A massive antiwar demonstration sponsored by the Student Mobilization Committee will be held in Washington, D. C., on Saturday, April 24.

Local support for the demonstration is being solicited by the Family, made up of Longwood and Hampden-Sydney students.

According to "Family" member Darcy Morrisson, "This is one of the biggest offensives any group has put on in the history of demonstrations."

An information sheet put out by the "Family" calls mass demonstrations an "effective method" for relaying ideas.

The sheet further explains, "By the sheer weight of numbers that can be mobilized at a given time and place, the antiwar movement gains credibility and visibility. It provides a way for new people drawn into the movement to register their opposition to the war."

Although the SMC is sponsoring the rally, one does not have to be a member of the organization to participate in it.

"We are encouraging people to go to Washington and be in force," Darcy said.

Different groups will be assigned areas in the city at which to begin their march. It will be a "peaceful assembly," Darcy said, as long as trouble-makers can be kept out.

To prevent incidents or to handle them if they erupt, students are being trained to act as marshals, as Darcy said, "We are out for peace."

The SMC is also advocating a $6,500 guaranteed annual income for all families in America, and the release of all men and women from prison who have been jailed for their political or moral beliefs.

The "Family" is sponsoring two buses for the weekend. One, the bronze "Family" bus, will cost $2.50 per person, and the second, an army bus, will cost $3.00. Participants are asked to bring sleeping bags, food, and water.

Those interested in attending the demonstration should contact Gil Davenport at 223-4402, or see the students at the tables set up in front of the snack bar.

Childrey Farber, the Gyre editor expresses hope for a new magazine. "Literary talent is here, it just has to be found." With a new style and format she hopes to draw interest to the literary magazine.

Longwood's Literary Magazine To Create Student Interest

The GYRE magazine in its 31st year at Longwood, has not only undergone a total revamping in layout and organization, but is also appealing to student interest.

The annual publication under the advisorship of Mr. Allen Wier, will include submitted representational quality work in prose, poetry, cover design, and art categories. Monetary awards will be offered. First prize winners of all categories are invited to the annual publications banquet which will be held on May 6 this year.

To avoid misunderstanding on the layout of all submitted work, the GYRE staff asks that all submissions be typed, no more than one work per page. All submissions will be returned promptly after the GYRE's delivery from press.

The GYRE staff organized, for interested students, an exchange library open during regular GYRE office hours from 7:00-10:00 on Wednesday nights. This library presents students with the opportunity to read, review, and enjoy literary magazines from other national universities and colleges.

Next spring GYRE will host what may become a traditional, annual literary festival to coincide with the distribution of the GYRE. All Longwood students will have the opportunity to meet and work with known and promising prose and poetry writers, artists, and photographers. The activities for the literary festival, tentatively scheduled for April 4-6, 1972, include readings, sidewalk art shows, exhibits, movies and workshops.

"Oz" Will Present Articles On Birth Control In Next Issue

By STEPHANIE SIVERT

Student response to the new literary magazine "Oz" has been good reported members of "The Family," the group of Hampden-Sydney and Longwood students who edit the publication. Approximately 600 copies of the first issue of the "Publication from the Land of Oz" were sold last month to Longwood and Hampden-Sydney students and faculty who were interested in the first attempt at an independent publication. The first issue featured poetry, art work, and short stories contributed by Hampden-Sydney and Longwood students.

Included in the next issue of "Oz," which is scheduled to come out at the beginning of next week, are articles concerning student rights, abortion, birth control, and an article by Longwood professor I.B. Dent on the "Constitutionality of the Longwood Constitution." Plans are being made for future issues of "Oz" one of which will be by and about children featuring children's art and literary creations. Another issue will deal with the subject of birth and death.

When asked if the magazine had any trouble finding contributors, a member of the family commented that it did not have any trouble getting material for publication. She mentioned though that the students at Hampden-Sydney seemed more willing to enter their literary work for publication than were the girls from Longwood.

When asked if the administrations from either schools had commented on the first issue of "Oz," a member of "The Family" said that they had not said anything in particular except to grant them permission to sell it on campus. She added though "nothing printed in the first issue was controversial. Reaction to the next issue may be different."

Dr. Sprague To Assume Office As President-Elect Of AAUP

DR. ROSEMARY SPRAGUE

By MARGARET BLAIR

Dr. Rosemary Sprague, Board of Visitors Distinguished Professor of English, has been voted President-Elect of the Virginia State Conference of the American Association of University Professors. She will succeed to office next year, while her duties meanwhile are equivalent to those of Vice-President. Miss Sprague has formerly held the office of President for the local chapter of the AAUP and has also served a two year term on the Executive Committee locally. Her election to the President's office on the state level is also the first time for a member of the Longwood faculty.

The AAUP is a professional organization for all those teaching on the college level. Its concerns are for academic freedom, teaching conditions, tenure and salary, as well as for hiring and firing. The AAUP's National Office can put a university's administration on censure if the college has violated academic freedom. However, the organization is not a radical group or a labor union, and it stresses cooperation. The AAUP has also issued a statement of "Student Rights and Responsibilities" that Longwood has also adopted.

Miss Sprague expressed her belief in cooperation rather than contention. As state President, she will be in liason with local chapters. The state conference is particularly concerned with decisions made by the state legislature that affect the colleges. Currently they are particularly interested in the community college system in Virginia.

Miss Longwood '71

19, was sponsored by the Madrigal Singers. Cathryn sang an opera for the talent competition. "Music makes the harmony that binds the world," was Cathryn's answer to the satisfaction that she receives from singing in the Madrigal and in the Concert Choir. A $100 scholarship is given to the 2nd runner-up.

When questioned on graduation, Cynthia Borill said that she faced it with mixed emotions. Cynthia played "The Rustle of Spring" on the piano in the talent competition. Cynthia, 18, was sponsored by the Junior Class and is from Portsmouth.

Amy Bolling, 18, from Richmond, was sponsored by the Alpha Delta Pi Sorority. She sang "Raindrops Keep Falling on My Head." In the questioning, she said that the accomplishment of writing is her main fulfillment as a member of the Gyre staff.

Mr. Richard Barnes, a native of Tidewater, was the Master of Ceremonies for the Miss Longwood Pageant of 1971.

The Villagers, directed by Mr. Barnes, were the entertainment of the pageant. They sang a medley of American songs titled "Pledge of Allegiance." They also accompanied the contestants in their song and dance routine, "I'm a Yankee Doodle Dandy." Their superb performance gained them a standing ovation on their second appearance.

Dressed in a light red-striped dress with red matching hat, shoes, and parasol, Debra sanga medley from "Hello Dolly."

Workshop On Ecology Meets During Registration Period

A one-day workshop concerning the ecological importance of forests will be presented in Jeffers Auditorium on April 27, from 9:00 a.m. until 2:20 p.m. The program is designed for seniors, particularly education majors, and is meant to create an awareness and appreciation for the benefits provided by forests. Several speakers are coming from the Southern Forest Institute, and a film, which deals with factual and emotional considerations of conservation, will be shown to assist the students in making a judgment on the issue based on a broad acquaintance with the facts. A question and answer period has been included for each section in the schedule.

Those students who complete their preregistration early, especially those planning to student teach next year, are invited to attend the remaining portion of the workshop.

PROGRAM

9:00-10:00 George W. Dean: "Virginia Forest Resources"
10:00-10:20 Break
10:20-12:00 Film: "The South's Third Forest"; two short talks: "The Multiple Use Story" and "Enemies of the Forest"
12:00-1:00 Lunch
1:00-2:30 Three topics: "Forest Industries and Their Products"; "Wildlife and Recreation"; "Conservation in Action"

News Briefs

Soviet Space Lab

MOSCOW — The Soviet Union launched an unmanned space-ship, Salute, last week and quickly followed it by launching Soyuz 10 with three cosmonauts aboard. The launchings were believed to be part of a preliminary program which will lead to the assembling of an orbiting space laboratory by the Soviets. Late Saturday the two ships had moved into position for a rendezvous and it was predicted by authorities that a transfer of the men from one ship to the other would take place. It was also believed that the Soviets would launch one or two spacecraft to be joined to the others.

Rogers to Middle East

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State William Rogers has announced he will go to Israel and four Arab nations next month to attempt a peace settlement for the Middle East. Rogers will discuss a plan for opening the Suez Canal with Egypt and Israel and feels this is a preliminary step to a final agreement.

Pregnant Officers

WASHINGTON — The Army has announced another policy change which is directed at ending the double standard between men and women in the armed forces. The Army will now allow its female officers and enlisted women to have children and raise families while they remain in the service. An automatic discharge was previously required in these cases.

Papa Doc Dies

PORT AU PRINCE, HAITI — Calm reigned in Haiti following the death of President Francois "Papa Doc" Duvalier, despite the fact that political upheaval had been predicted. Duvalier had the Haitian constitution altered last January so that he could name his own successor, who would then hold office for life. At that time, he appointed his son, Jean Claude, then 19, to succeed him. It is believed that Jean Claude's sister, Marie Denise, and her husband are the real rulers for the present due to the President's youth and inexperience.

Busing Upheld

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court ruled last week that large-scale busing and limited racial balancing were constitutional methods of insuring black children an integrated education. The ruling ran counter to the policy announced by the Nixon administration, which calls for neighborhood schools and an end to massive busing. The next school cases to be heard will determine whether the Supreme Court will apply the same desegregation plan against Northern schools that it has used in Southern cases.

May Day Skit To Feature Snow Blue And White

By VICKI BOWLING

May Day festivities will get underway Friday, April 30, with a free concert by the Natural Wildlife on Iler Field.

Featuring hard rock, the concert will be held from 7-12 p.m.

Activities on Saturday afternoon, May 1, will begin at 2:15 with the May Day skit. This year's skit is based on Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs. The story concerns a girl getting acquainted with Longwood. Adaptations of such songs as "Consider Yourself" and "Whistle While You Work" will be sung.

May Queen Ellen Lyon, her maid of honor, Maxine Stone Crowlings, and her court will be presented at the conclusion of the skit.

Members of the May Court include seniors Joanne May, Jeanine Woolfolk, Andee Maddox, and Rita Sell.

Junior attendants are Lindsay Lewis, Joan Putney, Betty Ann Glasheen, and Joan Lawter.

Those representing the sophomore class are Dianne Derrick, Karen Clark, Leslie Schatz, and Yolanda Olde.

Freshmen Donna Hicks, Robin

Glascok, Cindy Crip, and Lucy Gresham will complete the court.

The traditional May pole dance will follow the presentation of the court. Sixteen girls have been diligently practicing for the occasion. Ellen Knapp, Dianne White, Didi Alexander, Linda Harris, Mary Krauf, Debbie Cores, Sandy Dennis and Cathi O'Donnell will perform the ritual.

Also dancing will be Lea Harris, Stephanie Holt, Janet Miller, Vicki Taylor, Brenda Wright, Beth Faulkner, Vernie Harris and Amy Burcher.

A second band will appear Saturday afternoon. Playing country folk will be the South Folk String Ensemble.

A reception in Lankford for students and their guests will be held at 4:30 p.m. This will conclude the afternoon activities.

A picnic supper is planned by Slater for that evening.

The third band of the weekend will play Saturday night, also on Iler Field. The JayGees are eight midshipmen from Annapolis, who will play hard rock.

Tim Brown, Lankford Student Union director, said that it should be a good week-end. He encourages all to come out for it.

Bus Company Planning System For College To Replace Train

By VALERIE BLANKS

The Longwood Administration is working with the Greyhound Bus Company to set up a special bus system for those girls affected by the closing of the rail passenger service.

The Administration did everything in its power by contacting our District Congressman and the Cabinet Member in charge of the Railpax route to try to keep the Norfolk and Western trains operating through Farmville, but to no avail.

Mr. H. F. Carmack, District Sales Supervisor for the Greyhound Bus Company, assured the Administration that special arrangements can be made for extra buses for the rest of this semester, provided enough girls buy tickets to justify running one — East or West.

If at any time at least 33 girls purchase a one-way or a round-trip ticket to any point or points close together, a special bus can run for them, leaving at a time of their choice and loading on campus if necessary. If they purchase a round-trip ticket it could be arranged to bring them back to Farmville at anytime they choose.

It would be necessary for the girls to purchase their tickets for the special, giving their names and phone numbers to the agent in Farmville, Mr. Bruce, and he would advise Greyhound of the number sold and the departure dates and times requested.

It would be necessary to give at least a four days notice in order to set up the special buses and advise all the operating people who would be concerned with setting up the special. If enough girls did not sign up to justify the special service, at the cut off time of four days in advance, each girl would be advised by phone that enough had not signed up, so they could ride the regular scheduled buses or make other arrangements.

It is suggested that girls getting tickets for any week end, but especially for Mother's Day week end, May 7-9, purchase them from Mr. Bruce at the bus station well in advance so that he can make arrangements with the main office.

Mr. Carmack also assures that additional buses will be added to their schedule next fall on a regular basis.

With the train situation as it is students are forced to find other ways of transportation.

Termination Of Faculty Announced At Conference

By ETHEL REITER

The termination of six faculty contracts was announced by President Henry I. Willett last Tuesday afternoon. Speaking at the April Press Conference, Dr. Willett said:

"We have had to look at a number of faculty positions and the faculty-to-student distribution. As a result of this examination we anticipate that six contracts will not be renewed over a two year period. Three professors will leave this year and three next year."

The cut-back is a result of orders from the Virginia State Legislature. They are forcing all state colleges to go through and evaluate every area in terms of productivity.

"It is just a product of the times," said Dr. Willett, "one must look at everything in terms of specific need." He added that in comparison with other institutions this is a very small faculty turn-over.

Dean Blackwell explained the issue in greater depth. Roughly speaking the college is authorized to have seven faculty members for every 100 students. There can be no growth in the faculty since there will be no increase in the student body.

The major cut-backs will be in the departments of German, Government, and Physics. The change in the Art Department faculty is for the purpose of introducing a new program. Longwood needs a teacher with ability in elementary education to enable art majors to certify to teach on the elementary level.

In a previous interview with a Rotunda reporter Dean Blackwell said that only academic limitations have been involved in any decision not to renew a contract. These reasons have been given in writing to the faculty members.

Many students at the press conference were not satisfied with these explanations. One student said, "The College exists for the student; we receive the services rendered by these professors, therefore, we feel we should have some voice in the hiring and dismissal of teachers."

Students also contended that these cutbacks resulted in a very limited curriculum at Longwood. "Longwood has become a teacher factory where everyone must be an elementary education or physical education major to receive any academic benefits. The catalog is definitely misleading considering it states that Longwood is a liberal arts college," said one student after the conference.

Dr. Willett ended the conference by saying that these decisions were not final, because a number of factors must be considered by the end of next year.

The next press conference will be held on May 4.

As Usual!

The rising senior room registration was chaotic. It was designated on the instruction sheet handed out prior to the final assignment that "preference in room assignments would be given to those students arranging themselves in 3's and 5's." Those signed up next were suites of 4's and 6's. Finally the sheet read "all remaining."

In practice this meant that a rising senior who drew the room registration number 1 would be forced to wait for a room until the very end if she had no roommates or suitemates. She might as well have had number 356, it would have made little difference.

There were also complications with groups of girls who did not comprise, under this year's system, a full suite. They were forced to sit an hour and a half with a relatively low number, and watch number "256" get a suite before they did.

With this type of system one wonders why the seniors wasted their time at a room draw. It seems that the only way one could come out on top in this situation was to agree to "stuff" three people in a Curry or Frazer room. Then, with your 202 number you could wait and get a room before the poor sap with the number 1!

It is no wonder that several mumblings were heard around 8:30 about the system which "just wasn't fair." Even those students working behind the desk were heard to say, "This is taking forever." It was generally agreed among members of the rising senior class that room registration this year was poorly planned.

Longwood's Attitude Insufferable

By ETHEL REITER

A drafted Confederate soldier, deserting to the North in 1862, wrote President Jefferson Davis a letter explaining his actions. In it he declared that he was happy to be gazing for the last time upon "our holy flag - that symbol and sign of an adored trinity - cotton, niggers, and chivalry."

Albert Burton Moore, CONSCRIPTION AND CONFLICT IN THE CONFEDERACY

Yes, Longwood, the Confederate soldier who described the Stars and Bars as the symbol of "an adored trinity - cotton, niggers, and chivalry," come closer to an accurate historical interpretation than he probably imagined. His contemptuous reference to the flag, which he was deserting, revealed an instinctive understanding of the civilization which that flag represented.

The question is - can the strongly marked character of the South, that deep provincialism, that deep racism, that deep romanticism - can it survive through the ages. Yes, at Longwood this Southern heritage lives on!

Scene 1: A Southern plantation. A group of black slaves (then known as darkies) sits around a ramshackle log cabin while Southern belles and their gentlemen friends sip mint juleps and dance. The air is heavy with the sweet smell of magnolias.

Scene 2: Farmville. A group of blacks (known as inferior beings) sit around a decaying shack while Longwood ladies and their dates drink and dance. The air is heavy with the smell of absurdity.

The fantasy as a "Tara" existence is so embarrassingly absurd that it seems hardly a product of college creativity at all. It is more like a primitive reflex, a throwback to the dim past.

It is only fair to admit that this lily-white "junior prom" is not the only example of Longwood's racial conservatism. Does not the name "Longwood" come directly from the land owned by a Confederate military figure? Do we not have a peculiar sort of society that wears white robes and holds burnings as does the Ku Klux Klan (possibly a far-fetched analogy)? Do we not possess the traditional racist attitude when students are warned and advised not to mix with the immoral black help on campus?

Not to exaggerate this contribution, but it is so disgustingly ironic and pitiful that such things occur here. To have GONE WITH THE WIND setting the theme at Longwood against the tragic and violent struggling of today's blacks! The fact that Longwood has such dances and friendly advice to white girls is a metaphor for the extreme social distortion and mental perversity found here. I find these actions and attitudes insufferable.

Letters to the Editor

A Birth Control Clinic

To the Editor,

When I first thought over the matter I am now concerned with, I couldn't believe my ears when I heard that Longwood did not have a birth control clinic. Then I thought maybe the infirmary handles it in some way, maybe they have a gynecologist. Well, I went into the infirmary to get the facts and I found that there really is no gynecologist. But "we are lucky to have one in Farmville in the first place." I had even heard that you must go through the infirmary to get an appointment with Dr. Turner. I questioned this also and found that you are not required, but are requested to go through the infirmary. Another "rumor" which should be cleared up is that concerning what is and what isn't put on your record. I found that one should register their pills for medical reasons. If a girl has some serious side effects from the pills, and the infirmary knows nothing about them, what can the infirmary do?

Aside from these few possibilities, the girls at Longwood are still left hanging. It is unbelievable that Longwood has no gynecologist. Why couldn't we get a doctor who is certified to practice internal as well as general medicine?

Longwood needs to face up to the fact that the definition of a Longwood lady is not what it used to be. I often hear the reason as being one concerned with responsibility and taking the parents' place.

If you are so morally obligated, then why are you shirking your responsibilities as our protector? Admit that your world is different than ours and help those that need you.

A Correction

Dear Editor,

I would like to correct an article in your April 21 issue that stated I was in the process of composing an article on the constitutionality of the students' constitution. I do have some concern about a few points in the constitution, but I am not in the process of forming these into an article for OZ.

I would like to take this opportunity to state that I am glad to see that a group of students are reviewing the existing system and I have talked with and offered my assistance to those involved in this matter.

Yours truly,
I. B. Dent

P.S. I would like to add that I believe this year's papers, and particularly this semester, have been quite an improvement over the past issues that I have seen.

Thanks

Dear Editor:

We would like to congratulate the Junior Class on their Ring Dance Weekend. We feel that the entire weekend was well organized, especially when considering the number of people involved. Although the Friends of Distinction were the second choice due to the loss of the Carpenters, they were not a disappointment. The Rotunda was a perfect setting for the dance and the evening was quite enjoyable.

We would also like to thank the Freshman Class for the breakfast and Slater for the picnic.

All in all, the weekend was a success.

A Baffled Freshman

Dear Editor:

At the beginning of my freshman year I was informed of the presence of a "Chi." After a year I have yet to understand a Chi. Their significance appears to be only in name. As for service, planting tulips is not the most worthwhile service to the school. Therefore, this organization must be honorary only.

Until a Chi burned and the suspense to who was on it relieved (who would have guessed who was on it?) I had never seen a Chi.

This whole group baffles me. To whose benefit does a Chi walk at 4:00 a.m. contribute? Professors don't understand a lady's sleepiness after an all night stakeout in hopes of seeing a glimpse of the elusive Chi.

Since a Chi exists (we know from rumor and sidewalk markings), perhaps a Chi or a former Chi could explain their existence to the masses.

I will go further to say that I do not see why a Chi must go through theatrics. It appears to me that the significance lies in its secretiveness in honoring active school members to be members. The walks, robes, and other rituals seem rather ridiculous.

Therefore, it would be interesting to see a Chi explain the importance of theatrics to the purpose of a supposedly secret organization.

I do not feel that I speak for myself. My peers have questioned a Chi and we would like to see answers.

Thank you,
Darcy Morrison

'Little Murders'

(Starts At State Theater Tonight)

By SARAH FARRAR

Jules Feiffer's "Little Murders," based on his play, is a comedy with a brutal edge portraying and predicting the conditions of violence that contemporary America lives with — and nurtures. Feiffer's "typical American family" lives in a typically terror ridden neighborhood in a typically explosive large city.

This comedy of terrors reaches the screen intact, and with Feiffer enlarging upon his own play by incorporating Manhattan itself into the action, it's been improved.

Alan Arkin makes his feature directing debut (as well as a brief cameo appearance as the hysterical Lieutenant Practice); Elliott Gould does his best and most serious work to date.

Technically, there is some awkwardness, but the moments of power particularly the final scene — come through like dynamite, and the city retches its way into one's consciousness. It's a good, tough minded film with a biting sense of humor, and Vincent Gardenia is remarkable — painfully funny, scary and even moving — as Gould's father-in-law. The film also stars Donald Sutherland, Marcia Rodd, Lou Jacobi, Elizabeth Wilson, and Jon Korkes. It was shot for 20th Century-Fox, produced by Elliott Gould and Jack Brodsky.

"Little Murders" starts tonight at The State Theater.

Tartuffe, much pleased to find so easy a victim,
Has in a hundred ways tricked
him,
Milked him of money, and with his permission

And a fierce headache which refused to leave her.
Ah, and Tartuffe?
Tartuffe? Why, he's round and Bursting with health, and excellently fed.

Poor Fellow!

Last week, his conscience was severely pricked
Because, while praying, he had

And killed it, so he felt, too wrathfully.
Tartuffe is no young dandy,
But, still, his person . . .

Despite Complaints, Infirmary Still Services

By LYNDIA VAN HORN

"No medical excuse will be given for sunburn cases" is rule number 12 in the Longwood College Handbook under Infirmary regulations.

Though medical excuses are unavailable for cases of sunburn, almost any other ailment can be treated in the infirmary and provide individuals with medical excuses.

There are very few Longwood students who have not for some reason either major or minor visited the Infirmary. The Infirmary is to some a place where someone goes only in the severest of situations. To others the Infirmary is the spot of periodic visits.

Treatment Capabilities

The Infirmary is equipped to handle almost any medical upset on campus. From treatment of colds, which is the most common complaint among Longwood students, to dressing of wounds, the Infirmary stands ready to serve.

There is a nurse on duty in the Infirmary 24 hours seven days a week. Though Dr. Wells, Longwood's physician, is not always in the Infirmary, he does have office hours from 1:00 to 4:00 p.m., Monday through Friday, and is on call at all times.

This year the Infirmary boasts as part of its services a psychiatrist. Dr. Sams is available on Wednesdays only by appointment from 9:00 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Dr. Sams also reserves the hour and a half between 3:30 and 5:00 p.m. for students who want to see the doctor but who did not make an appointment.

Myths and Misconceptions

"I've never been in the Infirmary," one Longwood girl said proudly. "I guess I just never get sick."

Among those who have not been in the Infirmary in the course of their college career come various ideas on what they think and have heard about the Infirmary.

One girl told of how she had been informed by her friends of Infirmary conditions. She pictured a big room behind those closed doors marked "No Visitors" where row after row of beds formed the main decor and nurses came in periodically to make sure all the girls are in bed and not bothering each other.

She said she didn't know what the girls did all day. "Just lie there sick all day in that lonely room, I guess," she said.

Actually the Infirmary isn't quite what this student thinks it is. There are rooms both upstairs and down that are for the most part bright and efficiently decorated. "Though in some cases the trim on the curtains has faded and new paint jobs could be used, we try to have matching color combinations," said Mrs. Frances Garland of the Infirmary staff.

Infirmary Improvements

Mrs. Garland told of several improvements she had witnessed in her 11 years of service as a registered nurse in the Longwood Infirmary.

The beds used to consist of mattresses supported by swing springs, and in the large pink room with eight beds there was only one bathroom facility. Now the beds are regulation hospital beds, and other lavatory equipment was added.

Curtains around each bed were installed last year said Mrs. Garland to give the girls a certain amount of privacy. A storage room has been built downstairs where an old hand pulled elevator used to be.

On coming to the end of the Infirmary area, Mrs. Garland revealed her "pride and joy," the sun porch. This semicircular room is glassed in and brightly furnished to provide a cheerful escape from the Infirmary beds to the girls.

Mrs. Garland expressed her desire for a small television for this room to provide the girls with some entertainment. So far no one has offered to supply one. "Maybe instead of planting a tree, the senior class could donate a television here," said the nurse.

Interior Design

In the Infirmary rooms themselves, magazines and newspapers are provided for the girls' enjoyment. To some this doesn't seem to be enough. "If you go there with something simple, you're sure to come out with at least a severe case of boredom and who knows what else," one student complained.

Besides the sun porch and the individual Infirmary rooms, there are doctors' offices, a small nurses' quarters, a kitchen, and storage space that make up the entire Infirmary area.

There is a bed in the nurses' room where the nurses can rest during all night duty. This room is equipped with a telephone and an emergency bell system that summons the nurse on duty at any time.

All of the meals are prepared in the kitchen with special attention given to the way they are cooked. Two ice machines and air conditioning are among the facilities recently added to the Infirmary.

Student Reactions

Mixed reactions came from Longwood students when asked to talk about the Infirmary.

"I've only been over there once," one girl said, "and they (the nurses) were really nice to me. I had to go to the hospital for stitches and everyone did all they could be make me comfortable."

One girl complained of being made to eat. "You try to sleep or get some rest and they come in with those food trays. I guess it is important to get your nourishment, but I sure didn't think so at the time."

"I try never to go over there with a cold," said a Longwood student. "They always want to paint my throat and then give me that little package of salt to gargle with. Most of the time I use it to put on my popcorn."

Another girl told of going to the Infirmary two different times for two different things and both times being given Phisophex. When asked to comment on this she said, "It did get rid of my warts."

Always Busy

In spite of what these girls say there are always filled beds in the Infirmary. "It's so unpredictable," Mrs. Garland said. "Certain times during the day every bed in the place may be filled, then an hour or two later there may be only two or three girls here."

Mrs. Garland remembered once when so many girls were victims of a flu epidemic that they had to put mattresses down in the French Gym area to accommodate all the ill. "We didn't even know who was here, there were so many," she said. "Parents were coming to get their girls and had to walk around looking until they found their own."

When asked if her job were rewarding, Mrs. Garland replied, "Oh, I like taking care of you brats."

Team Bows To Ferrum Bailey Places Third

On April 13, the Golf Team had their first tournament out at Longwood Estates against Ferrum Junior College. The team played well and made a gallant effort to win, but Ferrum took the tournament by a score of 7-5. Becky Bailey and Ann Santore combined to give Longwood their five points.

This year, all the colleges agreed to compete in match play instead of stroke play and to have a maximum of four girls from each school compete in the match. The remaining members of the team can play against other members from the opposing school, but their score does not count in determining the winning school. In match play, the match is won when a player wins more holes than there are left to play. A hole is won by making a lower score than your opponent.

To determine which school wins the tournament, a point is given to each player who wins the most holes on the first nine. A second point is awarded to each one who wins the most holes on the second nine. Then each player who wins the most holes for the total eighteen holes receives another point. This gives each player a chance to receive a maximum number of three points for her school.

The second tournament of the season was an invitational held at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro (UNC-G). Twelve colleges, each sending four golfers, participated in the tournament. Representing Longwood was Louise Moss, Ann Santore, Becky Bailey, and Lisa Dixon. These four girls, along with their coach, Dr. Smith, left early last Friday in order to arrive in Greensboro in time for a practice round that afternoon. Unfortunately, the wind and rain kept all the golfers inside.

On Saturday, at 9:30, all the participating golfers teed off for a round of eighteen holes. Since this was an invitational, it was played as stroke play rather than match play. Pam Wiegardt, from Madison College won the tournament by a score of one over par, 61. Becky Bailey won third place and a golf ball for having the lowest number of putts during the round.

Members of the Golf Team include: Louise Moss, Ann Santore, Becky Bailey, Debbie Brooks, Lisa Dixon, Peggy Lynch, Ann Weisiger, and Cartie Keene. Dr. Barbara Smith is coach.

The next home tournament will be held on May 6. Come out and support the Longwood golfers.

A powerful tennis serve is always helpful in a tennis match. Many LC players have this skill which helps them to defeat their opponents.

Varsity Tennis Stars Defeat Roanoke 6-1 Record Stands 3-1

Cloudy and windy weather did not keep the Varsity Tennis players from showing their skill and experience as they defeated Roanoke College by an overall score of 7-1 in a match played on Barlow Courts last Wednesday.

Five singles matches were played, with Longwood winning four out of five. Those tennis players defeating their opponents were: Lynn Coleman, 6-4 and 6-0; Brenda Blackwell, 6-2 and 10-8; Charlotte Fugett, 6-0 and 6-0; and Debbie Ellin, 6-1 and 6-0. Freda Lunsford dropped her match to her Roanoke opponent with scores of 6-4 and 6-2.

In doubles competition, regulars Lynn Kwiatkowski and Laurel Baldwin were victorious over the Roanoke players ending with a 10-2 score. Freda Lunsford and Lynn Coleman, playing one of their first doubles games, also defeated their opponents by a score of 10-7. The overall standing is now three wins and one loss.

Lynchburg, Bridgewater Top LC Lacrosse Teams

Longwood's Lacrosse teams have fallen into the losing category as they were defeated by Lynchburg and Bridgewater Colleges by scores of 4-2 and 7-4 respectively. Both games were played away.

Although both the varsity and junior varsity teams dropped their game to Lynchburg College, the team members showed much skill and a lot of good sportsmanship. The game became a little dangerous at times as the Lynchburg squad played solely to win causing Longwood players to return with injuries to their hands and their heads.

In the Varsity game, sophomore Lynn Sherertz and senior Sherry Williams kept the Longwood team in the game with each girl scoring one goal. Janet Ford, a junior on the Junior Varsity team, made the two goals in that game.

The game against Bridgewater was much more enjoyable, even though the Longwood squad was outmatched as far as skill was concerned. There was no roughness and both squads realized that the fun was in the playing of the game itself.

Only one team competed against Bridgewater. This team was a combined effort of players from both junior varsity and varsity squads. Junior Rene Harrison made two goals and Sherry Williams and Cindy Bradley each added another point to Longwood's score.

JV Tennis Team Remains Undefeated Downs Ferrum 5-0

Longwood's Junior Varsity Tennis team continued their winning streak as they defeated Ferrum Junior College by an overall score of 5-0 in a match held last week. The games were played here on Barlow Courts.

In the singles competition, Becky West, Bobbie Bannin, and Bobbie Ellin each downed their opponents by a score of 8-0, playing pro-set games.

B. J. Rogers and Dana Hutcherson defeated their doubles contenders with scores of 6-1 and 6-0. Liza Potts and Cheryl Cooper were also victorious in their match. Scores for this match were 6-0 and 6-1.

Colleges In The News

Referendum Reconsidered

CHARLOTTESVILLE — The Student Council at the University of Virginia has voted to change the proposed strike referendum to an opinion poll. The Council feared that a poor turnout in the planned elections would result in the Council being bound to organizing a strike by a small percentage of the student body. The Council also feared that the referendum would be unconstitutional since it is not provided for in the constitution. An amendment is being proposed to stipulate that 40 per cent of the student body must vote on a referendum for it to be binding.

William and Mary Referendum

WILLIAMSBURG — In a referendum held at William and Mary last month, 88 per cent of the students indicated that they are dissatisfied with the present form of student government at the school; however, less than 40 per cent approved of the Community of Students which has been proposed as a substitute. The students approved of the power which would be given to the Senate, but disagreed with the general structure of the Community of Students.

PBK Attacked

RICHMOND — The Phi Beta Kappa chapter at the University of Richmond has become the center of criticism because of the blackballing of a Richmond College senior. The blackballing rule requires that only two members of the chapter vote against a student for admittance to be denied. Members of the chapter feel that the student, Jim Winders, was blackballed because of his appearance and political leanings. Winders has long hair, a moustache and is a liberal. They feel no explanation is possible to justify his rejection. A proposal has been made that the blackball rule be replaced by a three-fourths or two-thirds majority vote.

RICHMOND — Look magazine was in Gloucester recently to photograph a modern outdoor wedding which featured bell-bottom outfits. The wedding and reception featured Laura Jones and Carl Cummings, students at Virginia Commonwealth University. The article, which used other VCU students as guests, will appear in a June issue.

New Party

CHARLOTTESVILLE — A new party with the objective of changing the structure of the student government, has been formed at the University of Virginia. The New Constitution Party proposes to elect Student Council representatives on the basis of residential constituencies. This would create an Assembly of approximately three hundred students which would choose ten of its members to serve as an executive Senate. Three officers, Chairman, Secretary and Treasurer, would be elected from the Senate. The symbol of the new party is a phoenix rising from a pile of ashes.

Margaret Nuckols To Replace Dean Holt During Next Year

Dean Holt will leave Longwood in June to complete requirements for her Doctorate.

Replacing Miss Holt during the time she is away from campus will be Miss Margaret Nuckols, a 1970 graduate of Longwood. As an undergraduate, Miss Nuckols majored in psychology. In June she will complete work at the University of Virginia for a master's degree in counselor education with special emphasis in college student personnel work.

Miss Nuckols will "bridge the gap" until Miss Holt returns in September of 1973.

Dean Holt will be attending the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. She is very happy that the college has granted her this year's leave. She is leaving with the encouragement and approval of the administration.

She will return to Longwood in September 1973 and continue as the Assistant Dean of Students.

While no promotion is immediately foreseeable Miss Holt feels that this degree will be an asset to her career.

During her years at Longwood Miss Nuckols served as Assistant Editor of the 1970 VIRGINIAN; as membership director and project chairman of Phi Mu; and as an active member of the German Club and YWCA. She was tapped for membership in Geist and Pi Delta Epsilon, a National Honorary Collegiate Journalism Fraternity.

Dean Wilson said that she is very pleased that Miss Nuckols has accepted the position of Acting Assistant Dean of Students because she is the kind of person who will show both competency and enthusiasm in her work. Miss Nuckols has a "friendly, outgoing personality and will relate well to the students." She will begin her duties at Longwood College in late August, 1971.

Tom's Campus Room Considers Converting To Private Club

By LYNNE WILSON

Tom Smith, the proprietor of Tom's Campus Room, has suggested that Tom's become a private club for college students.

This idea was first mentioned to Frankie Brown, Student Government President, because several students had asked about the possibility of having a private club. The basic reason for such a club is to create some week end entertainment for Longwood students and their dates. At the same time, a private club would make it possible to bar "undesirable elements" from membership.

As a private club, Tom's could provide weekly entertainment and dancing. When questioned about the facilities for dancing, Tom said that the Campus Room could expand if there was a sufficient income to cover expenses.

As with any private club, dues would be charged on a yearly basis. This could come either from the individual student or from an activities fee. Students from out-of-town colleges could also gain membership or visit the club as guests of Hampden-Sydney and Longwood students.

Mr. Tim Brown, Director of Lankford, says that it is unlikely that club membership could be incorporated into the student activities fee. He doubts that the Fee Committee would pass such a proposal because fees are for the benefit of all or a majority of the students, and many Longwood students would not be interested in belonging to such a club. He added that the proposal would have to go before the Legislative Board, and before fees could be allotted, the organization or club would need a constitution. However, this does not eliminate the possibility of individual students paying dues to belong.

Tom welcomes student opinion concerning this matter. Students are encouraged to write Letters to the Editor or see Tom personally.

Students Aid In Cleanup

A group of Longwood girls helped the Human Relations Council in their drive to clean up the neighborhood on South Virginia Street, Saturday, April 24.

Having met at 9:00 in front of Lankford, they were driven over to South Virginia Street to begin work. After the initial division of labor, each girl began cleaning walls, removing old wall paper, moving furniture, sweeping, and painting. As the afternoon ebbed, both the appearance of the homes and the spirit of the residents grew brighter.

The Human Relations Council will continue its fix-up drive along with Longwood and Hampden-Sydney students during May 1, May 8, and May 15.

U. VA. Reviews Visitation Policy

Longwood Not Yet Affected

The Board of Visitors of the University of Virginia is reviewing the first year parietal hours. The review is a result of the Bateman Resolution which calls for the boards of state institutions to review their visitation policies.

Chester R. Titus, associate dean of students, asked for a review of the parietal hours including "policy, implementation, and supervision." From suggestions from first year legislative bodies and the counseling program, he is preparing a report for the dean of student affairs.

The dean of student affairs, D. Alan Williams, said that the report was for informational purposes only and no information is being given out on it.

Steve Brickman, Chairman of Counselors, was asked to submit suggestions. He said that the consensus of the counselors was in favor of a 24-hour parietal policy as a maximum limit. Individual halls and suites would be allowed to determine their own policy from the general policy.

The First Year Legislative Council favors the same policy as the counselors said Charles Musson, president of the Council. Currently, the parietal hours are enforced by the First Year Judiciary Council.

Longwood's two to five visitation hours on Sunday have not yet been affected by the Bateman Resolution. Students doubt that Bateman would find any reason to curb such a "ladylike" visitation policy.

Half A Million Protestors Gather

WASHINGTON D.C.

May 1 To 5

MAY DAY

MASSIVE NON-VIOLENT ACTION COME TO STAY!

Washington witnessed a peace march of about a half a million people on April 24, 1971. Students, clergy, GI's, gay people — people from all walks of life were in mass to protest the War in Vietnam.

The march started Saturday morning at the Ellipse. Peacemakers gathered in various groups to make the mile long march to the Capital building.

The march itself had been well planned. The Student Mobilization Committee trained people as marshals to help keep the march orderly, peaceful and legal. Medics and legal aide advisors were on duty to help protesters in need. As a result of this peaceful demonstration against the War in Vietnam, only nine persons out of the 500,000 were arrested.

From the Ellipse the march moved slowly down Pennsylvania

Avenue towards the Capital. Each contingent had organized chants to make their voices heard. Followers without specific groups marched along side.

The police were apprehensive at first. The protestor's angry chants caused a feeling of trouble. As the march proceeded tension relaxed and a good feeling circulated.

Over 200,000 gathered in the Capital lawn to listen to anti-war speakers and singers. From where we sat we could hear only faintly the cries of politicians and agency heads to end the war.

The evening's entertainment was a rock festival on the lawn in front of the Washington monument. Rock groups such as Grateful Dead and Country Joe and the Fish held the audience's attention until about five in the morning.

During the weekend, the scent of marijuana filled the air. People were less inhibited than ever before to pass and smoke dope freely. One person at the concert was so desperate for matches that he traded grass for them. Even though dope is illegal, no one bothered smokers and no one saw any bad effects from it.

The Spring movement continues with People's Lobby. Instead of just talking with the members of Congress and the White House staff, the People's Lobby will ask government members to sign the People's Peace Treaty and ask them to join in other peace movements.

The Lobby is from April 26 to May 4. The demands include guaranteed annual income of $6500 for a family of four, the end of the war now and set date for the complete withdrawal of all troops in Southeast Asia, as well as the release of all political prisoners.

Celebration of Peace on May 1 will provide workshops on non-violence for upcoming action.

May Day, May 3 to May 5, inaugurates the nonviolent acts of civil disobedience that has been building up all week. Each contingent will organize separately in collaboration with everybody else. The action planned is to take main routes into Washington at 6:00 a.m. and stay until taken to jail.

The final movement in the Spring Offensive is the No More Business as Usual on May 5. Scores of young persons are encouraged to stall highways and prevent business from commencing. The idea is that if the government won't stop the war, we stop the government.

Board Notes

Legislative Board

1. The examination exemption policy was presented to the faculty and they referred it to the Curriculum Committee.
2. The Board voted to accept the request that Lankford Student Union be given the title of major organization. This becomes effective immediately.
3. A recommendation was made to the Board that Tom's be turned into a private club just for college students and that the college or the students pay a yearly fee to belong. It was decided that this issue be turned over to Lankford Student Union.
4. The Board accepted Bonnie Mosely and Joyce Saunders as co-editors of the VIRGINIAN and Patsy Butler as Business Manager next year. It was also suggested that the possibility of the editors-in-chief receiving academic credit for their work be considered.

After Curfew:

Man Found In Wheeler Claims Student Let In

A young man was caught in Wheeler Dormitory at 1:30 Thursday morning. He was arrested by the campus police after startling two girls in the dormitory.

Douglas Ramsey was first seen by Linda Lee Jones on first floor, who said he entered her room from her suitemate's room. Linda thought it was her suitemate at first but soon realized it was a man. She laid back down and pretended to go to sleep. He left her room and reentered her suitemate's room. Linda then ran across the hall and called the campus police from her hall president's room. She was afraid for her suitemate but her suitemate never knew he was there.

Ramsey then apparently went up the stairs to second floor because Judy Brown had started down the hall when she saw him at the head of the stairs. She immediately went to her hall president's room and got in touch with the head resident. These girls heard the door to the roof shut, so when the campus police arrived they directed him to the roof.

The campus police arrested Ramsey on the roof where he was trying to hide at about 1:30.

Ramsey was already on Longwood's blacklist for being caught in Tabb Dormitory in 1969. He was on a three year probation. He also has a trial coming up for car theft. He will be tried the 30th of this month for violation of probation and trespassing.

It is not known how Ramsey entered the dormitory, but Ramsey stated a "chick" let him in. Mrs. Baber, head resident for Wheeler, said, "There's no way he could have broken in."

Two Seniors Present Recitals

Two senior music education majors, Patricia Wornom and Jeanne Sharon Richardson will present recitals on April 28, and May 2.

Miss Wornom's recital which will be performed in Wygal Recital Hall at 7:30 p.m. April 28, will include "Sonata in C major, K. 513" by Scarlatti and "Variations on a Nursery Tune, K. 265" by Mozart.

Miss Richardson's Recital will also be held in Wygal Recital Hall on May 2 at 4:00 p.m. She will perform at the piano "Mozart on Temple Ruins" by Debussy, "Variations in a Serious Mood" by Mendelssohn, and works by Scarlatti and Mozart.

DR. ALEXANDER V. BERKIS

Dr. Berkis To Speak On Book, Latvian Life And Longwood

"Communism, my experiences in Latvia, a little about my book, and Longwood College" are the topics to be discussed by Dr. Alexander V. Berkis over WSNJ radio (Bridgeton, New Jersey) on Thursday and Friday, April 29 and 30.

Recently, Dr. Berkis lunched with Paul Hunsberger, the host of WSNJ's personality-interview show, to tape two fifteen minute programs entitled "Off the Cuff at Le Fevre's White Sparrow Inn."

Dr. Berkis, a professor of history and social sciences, came to Longwood in 1961. He is a native of Latvia, where he lived under communist rule for five years. In 1945, he fled, leaving his practice as a criminal lawyer for greater personal freedom. After arriving in the U. S., he turned his attention to education, earning his M.A. and Ph.D. from the University of Wisconsin.

From his bitter experiences with communism in his native land, Dr. Berkis has developed a dedication to individual freedom. For his contributions in this area he has been awarded, for three consecutive years, the Congress of Freedom Liberty Award for "outstanding efforts to uphold fundamental and traditional Americanism."

Professor's Home To Be Shown On Tour

The home of Mr. Richard T. Couture, professor of history at Longwood, will be one of the buildings to be shown on the St. James House tour.

The tour which will be held Sunday, May 9, from 1 p.m. until 6 p.m., is to raise money for the St. James Episcopal Church in Cumberland County.

Mr. Couture's home, Bolling Island Plantation, is one of eight on the tour. When asked about the heritage of his house he said that the east wing of the building was built in 1771 by the Salmons family. In 1808 the entire property was sold to Col. William Bolling of "Bolling Hall." His son Thomas enlarged the house, and added the wings sometime before 1835.

Mr. Couture bought the house and 50 acres of land in 1962. He has spent the past nine years restoring and furnishing Bolling Island. He has rebuilt the two story columned portico facing the James River and resurrected the orangery.

At present he is working on the upstairs portion of the 200 year old house. Mr. Couture says that "he has made every effort to preserve the original mantels, ceiling rings and floors of the house."

When Mr. Couture was asked how much longer it would take to furnish and restore his home completely, he grinned and said "a lifetime." He went on to say, however, that people were welcome to come on the tour. Tickets can be purchased from him for the entire tour for $3.00, or they can be purchased separately at any home.

Faculty Unit Asks 'Depoliticization'

(Reprinted from ACP)

Washington
"A university should be a place for instruction, learning, and the pursuit of truth through research and reflection, and not an instrument of social change," declared the membership of the University Professors for Academic Order at the organization's national conference here.

"A university should, therefore, not tolerate demands from any source that takes stands on questions that are properly the concern of political organizations," the members continued in drawing up a statement of policy for their new association.

The organization, founded with the goal of "depoliticizing the campus community," has attracted 800 members and 40 campus chapters during its first seven months of existence.

The members also voted into their statement of policy:

- That colleges "should not permit a minority acting in concert to infringe upon the rights of the majority of the academic community."

- That "working for or attending a university is a privilege . . . it is not an innate right."

- That the teacher "is entitled to responsible liberty in the presentation of the subject he teaches," but it is "improper for the professor deliberately to intrude material designed to politicize his students."

Members also approved a resolution that they be vigilant in making sure that administrators hold students to conduct "appropriate to a community of scholars."

The association plans to investigate alleged cases of denial of faculty promotion and tenure and unpunished violations of proper academic conduct by students, according to Justus M. van der Kroef, chairman of the political science department at the University of Bridgeport and president of the association.

Friends Of Distinction Concert Draws Favorable Response From Audience

The Friends of Distinction received a warm welcome from the Longwood audience.

"The audience is 50 per cent of the performance. They were a good bunch of people."

These were Floyd Butler's words when he was asked to describe his reaction to the Longwood audience in an interview after the Friends of Distinction concert.

The concert opened with an instrumental arrangement performed by the back-up band, which led into the entrance of the Friends of Distinction singing "Born to Wander." The audience response was immediate and enthusiastic. A definite rapport was established which was maintained until the concert was concluded.

The Friends introduced themselves as Jessica, Harry Elston and Floyd Butler. Floyd later revealed in the interview that Jessica does not use her last name because she does not like it, although Harry insists "she gave it away." Following the introductions, they responded to audience requests for "Grazin' In The Grass," their first hit, which brought everyone to their feet.

Two of the finest performances of the program were solos by Jessica and Floyd. Jessica displayed a mellow, but extremely powerful and entrancing voice as she sang "Lady May." Floyd Butler showed his versatility and that of the group in his rendition of an Anton Jobim song.

The evening was an example of soul music rendered in a highly professional manner through songs including, "I Could Live Without Love," Marvin Gaye's "What's Going On," and the latest hit by the Friends, "I Need You." The evening was sparked by the humor of the Friends and the audience reaction. They concluded their performance to the shouts of "more" from the audience.

After the show, the Friends of Distinction were as enthusiastic about the audience as the audience had been about them. The group enjoys college concerts because the students come to hear what they have to say and appreciate the music. They were very pleased by the response of the Longwood group and intend to hold it up to the Hollins College audience, which is their next concert. Floyd, in kidding two Hollins representatives who were present, said, "I'm going to hold this out to them and make them match it."

In talking to a group of Longwood students later, they summed up their views of the concert with: "It was great!" They felt the show was outstanding and expressed the hope that next year's concert will be just as good. As one student said, "I'd be willing to pay twice as much for another evening like this."

Sophomores To Order Rings Soon

Tentative plans are being made for sophomores to order their rings on May 4, 5, and 6. Students will have a choice between the traditional ring ($22.50) or the filigree style ($23.00). A miniature may be ordered in either style ($21.50) and extra features will have additional costs.

A $10 deposit will be required when the order is placed and students will be allowed to trade their high school rings for a $10 credit on their new ring. Orders will be taken in the new smoker with a system based on the alphabet. If the filigree model is late in arriving, ordering will be May 10, 11, and 12.

Linda Barber, a 19-year-old Longwood freshman, has been named Miss Caroline County of 1971.

For her talent, Linda sang, "Don't Rain on My Parade" from the musical "Funny Girl."

Legislative Forum Interesting, But Not Pertaining To Longwood

By MARY LOU GLASHEEN

This past weekend three students representing Longwood College attended a Student-Legislator Open Forum in Richmond.

The purpose of the Forum was to establish an effective line of communication between students and legislators in the state of Virginia. Students from 40 institutions of higher learning (colleges, universities, etc.) throughout the state were represented.

Among the list of government representatives were J. Sargeant Reynolds, Lieutenant Governor, Commonwealth of Virginia; John Warren Cooke, Speaker, Virginia House of Delegates; Andrew P. Miller, Attorney General, Commonwealth of Virginia; Hunter B. Andrews, member, Virginia State Senate, and Honorable Lloyd C. Bird, member, Virginia State Senate.

The students, together with the legislators discussed topics such as: Effective Forms of Lawful Dissent and Methods of Communications. Some of the ideas which were a product of these discussions were:

1. Why not have State Legislators visit colleges and universities to participate in open discussion with administrators, faculty and students? The student delegates felt that if these four groups could be made to communicate, many of their problems would be nonexistent.

2. Students should be represented on the board of visitors of the college, perhaps by the Student Government President. The Board of Visitors should spend more time on campus with the students in order to understand and relate with their problems.

3. A large number of the students attending the forum were opposed to the Herb Bateman resolution concerning open dormitories. They felt that the student body should have the right to make its own social regulations.

4. The student delegates were in favor of the 18-year-olds' right to vote and more emphasis placed on the rights of the 18-year-old rather than the 21-year-old.

5. Students should have more of a voice in selecting curriculum.

Several of the topics discussed were problems which were not directly related to Longwood. For example, students complained about the lack of student representation on committees of the college and the failure of the college administrators to communicate with the students. A student in one of the discussion groups remarked, "The only time we see the President of our University is when he walks from his car to his office." A Longwood delegate was able to offer this student the suggestion of having Presidential Press Conferences similar to those at Longwood.

It can be said, though, that the Forum itself was a success in that students left, feeling that they understood a little better the problem of the legislator, and the legislator left with a better understanding of the problems now facing college students.

"Hair," A Theatrical Experience?

By VICKI BOWLING

"If you miss it, you've missed a rare theatrical experience." "It" is "Hair." The comment is from a review of the rock musical by Alton Williams of the RICHMOND NEWS LEADER (Tuesday, April 27).

"Hair," appearing in Richmond for the last time tonight, has been a subject of controversy in the city for weeks. Briefly, "Hair" protests war and prejudice and mocks the establishment.

As Mr. Williams says, "It is the statement heard from many a young person today, tossed off in a haphazard way. It is the long-haired youth speaking, who, when the time comes cuts his hair and dies on the battlefield of Vietnam."

One of the most celebrated reasons for protests against the play is the nudity which occurs in it. The one nude scene appears on a darkened stage right before the intermission and lasts for a few seconds.

A full page "Open Letter to Mayor Bliley," appearing in the NEWS LEADER (Friday, April 23), was sponsored by the Citizens for Decency. It asked Mayor Bliley, "Do you know that 'Hair' mocks the American flag? that 'Hair' glorifies the use of drugs? of the nudity in 'Hair'? that 'Hair' is sacrilegious? that 'Hair' (Continued on Page 8)

News Briefs

Nixon To China

WASHINGTON — In his press conference Thursday night, President Nixon stated that speculation about the recent trip of the U.S. ping pong team to Communist China has not been useful and that it would be premature for him to comment on possible diplomatic recognition for that country. He did emphasize the recent strides taken in the fields of travel and trade and said the U.S. would continue to broaden relations. Nixon said he also expected to visit mainland China some day.

Amtrak Begins

WASHINGTON — Despite a last minute effort to halt its beginning, the Amtrak rail passenger system went into operation May 1. Amtrak is the federally subsidized and administered organization which eliminates one-third of the passenger trains that were running in an effort to make rail transportation more efficient and financially sound. In the cut-back, famous trains like the San Francisco Chief, the Capitol Limited and the Wabash Cannon Ball were ended.

Air Standard

WASHINGTON — The federal government issued its first clean-air standards Friday, but said that drastic changes in everyday living would have to be made in order to achieve them. The commission has placed limits on the concentration of six pollutants in the air and has set a deadline of July 1, 1975 for the cities to clean their air. Though 10 cities are facing particularly hard cleaning jobs, over 100 must clean their air to meet the standards.

Philippine Deaths

MANILA — Three persons were killed and several wounded when a rally by laborers and young activists erupted in explosions and gunfire in front of the Philippine Congress building Saturday.

Secret Theme Highlights "Loose" Faculty Follies

By SYLVIA SMITH

The Longwood faculty will present the Faculty Follies on Friday, May 7, 1971 at 7:30 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium.

Mr. Rubley, Mr. Dent, Mr. Snelderman, and Dr. Lockwood will serve as the co-producers of this year's show. They expect it to be a big success.

The program will be in satire form and to reveal the subject would remove the surprise impact that will be of major importance to the show. It will be a "loose" show and one participant commented that, "It will be all in good fun but we may lose our jobs after this production."

duction."

Among the cast members will be: Dr. Anita Ernout, Miss Eleanor Bobbit, Dr. Beatrice Bland, Miss Cada Parrish, Mr. Harvey Sneideman, Dr. Patton Lockwood, Col. Raymond Gilchrist, Col. John Carr, Mr. I.B. Dent and Mr. Earl Rubley.

Mr. Rubley regrets the bad timing of the event on Mother's Day weekend. A lot of hard work has gone into the making of this program and it is hoped that a large number of students will be able to attend.

You may miss the chance of a lifetime if you miss this presentation — so don't miss it.

Skeptical Students Wonder About No Announcement Policy

Announcements will no longer be made in the dining hall as of last Monday.

For the two-week period starting May 3 through May 14, a daily bulletin will be published to substitute for announcements in the dining hall. It was decided that only emergency announcements can be made over the public address system, but these must be cleared in advance by the Dean of Students Office.

This new method was recently passed by the Legislative Board in order to alleviate the problem of lengthy announcements which were being made during the meals. Many students felt that the use of the public address system should be discontinued because no one was really listening to the announcements.

In order to have announcements put in the daily bulletin, they must be received by the Public Relations Office by 9 a.m. Two bulletins will be placed on each table in the dining hall, and there will be one on each bulletin board on the dormitories. These will be given to the head residents or their representatives at the noon meal.

Daily bulletins will not be available on Saturday or Sunday. Information pertaining to these two days will be placed on Friday's bulletin.

A representative from Lankford Building will pick up the bulletins for that building in the Information Office during the noon meal. One bulletin should be placed on the day students' bulletin board.

When students were asked about this proposed system, the majority felt that it was extremely impractical. One student said that if she ever needed to make an emergency announcement, "she'd rather stand in the aisle and do the Highland Fling than run over to the Dean of Students Office." A waitress said that these bulletins would only aid in cluttering up the tables as if they were not cluttered enough. Another student said that "it just seems ridiculous to go to all this added trouble when the public address system is available."

The last run, . . .

Follies Tuesday after our deadline

A Painless Affair

Many students were dreading registration this year because of last year's fiasco. But, to their surprise, they found registration last Tuesday to be a very simple affair.

Careful planning and cooperation were evident in this year's registration procedure. It was virtually impossible for number 500 to register before number 205. Because only a handful of students was permitted to register at one time, the registration tables were almost never crowded. True, near the end, several tables such as history and psychology, "the have-to corner," were besieged but that was to be expected.

Another aspect of this year's registration which deserves mention was the sign-out tables. Last year the harried girls behind the desks did little to instill calm in the already rattled students before them. This year, in an organized manner, girls were able to move as quietly through the sign-out procedures as they had through the earlier registration.

A relieved 'thank you,' then, is in order for administration, faculty and students alike who together made this year's registration a painless affair. LW

A Commentary

Academic Freedom Versus Social Commitment

By ETHEL REITER

One distressing fact about the American scene is that so many of the ideas advocated in colleges and universities are regarded as unacceptable, or even terribly offensive, by the great majority of the public. We certainly cannot overlook the financial support colleges receive from the taxpaying Americans, and we must realize the commitment colleges have to the public. It is equally important, however, that college administrators do not carry this point to an extreme. We must not go as far as sacrificing academic freedom for social approval.

This is obvious in all areas of college activities (newspapers, curfews, dress codes, drinking regulations). A recent example is the issue of dormitory visitation policies. Over a month ago, Senator Herbert Bateman of Newport News, introduced a resolution restricting dorm policies of all Virginia state supported schools so that "they will be more in line with the moral standards of the citizens of Virginia."

Senator Bateman affirmed that his resolution would suggest to Virginia schools that they adopt parietal hours "which would not generate an opportunity and an exposure to temptations which students have fallen victim to from the beginning of time." However, there is nothing in this resolution which would force the colleges to conform to it.

When I questioned various student leaders at Longwood about extending our visitation hours (which now exist from 2 to 5 p.m. on Sundays — how liberal!) they seemed to consider Bateman's absurd resolution as the Eleventh Commandment. Evidently by the response I received from these people, the matter is not to be reviewed or considered any further.

Other Virginia colleges are pursuing reasonable parietals despite Bateman's resolution. The Student Committee of Randolph-Macon's Woman's College adopted to include a petition for extended parietals on the ballot. The requests were to extend visitation hours: to 24 hours every day of the week, or to have them beginning at 1 p.m. Friday, and to continue until Sunday night at 10 p.m., and/or to have male visiting hours Monday through Thursday from 5:30 p.m. until 10 p.m. At the University of Virginia the consensus of counselors was in favor of 24 hour parietals.

The major concern for Longwood is whether or not the students here are mature enough to make their own moral judgments, not how pleased the alumnae and parents will be with restricted parietals.

Letters to the Editor

A Special Thanks

To the Editor:

As chairman of the spring bloodmobile, sponsored by the Red Cross and Geist, I would like to thank all the students, faculty and staff members who donated blood and who assisted in the program. I would especially like to thank Mr. Carbone and the Slater System for contributing food to the canteen and for providing supper in the snack bar to students who were at the bloodmobile when the supper was being served in the dining hall.

Thanks to the interest and assistance of everyone, our bloodmobile was a success.

'At Least A Pamphlet'

After reading the letter in last week's Rotunda, by Sara Fredrick, I began to feel that I am not alone. On March 15, of this year, I went to Dean Blackwell to discuss with him several "gripes" I have with Longwood. Among the many things that I felt the school needed was a clinic for Birth Control. In a school with 2,100 girls and the female problems that arise, a gynecologist is definitely needed. A general practitioner is not qualified to handle these problems and therefore can cause more trouble for the girl involved rather than help her.

I would like to see the administration take note of the concern of some of the students and take some action on this point. I have heard them say at times that, they can not act as our parents, and then at another time say that we, as students, are their responsibility and they must act "in loco parentis (in place of our parents). It was told that a Clinic would be taking over the responsibility of our parents but I disagree. It would be up to the individual girl to decide whether a trip to the proposed clinic would be necessary for her and/or if she wanted or needed "the pill."

There are several ways in which this clinic could be administered. The first, of course, would be to obtain the funds in order to hire a doctor for the job and he could come in one or two days a week. The second would be to find doctors in the surrounding area who are concerned with this problem and ask them to donate their Wednesday afternoons (instead of playing golf). Perhaps several doctors would be interested and some kind of rotating system could be worked out. As a final resort if nothing else could be done, the college could publish a pamphlet that would have the names and addresses of doctors in the area who would be willing to have the girls visit them, with a reduced fee.

I can only conclude by saying that I hope the administration will look into this idea and check it out thoroughly, and if something can be worked out they will establish this clinic.

Beth Downey

An Added Comment

An Open Letter:

At the Student-Legislator Open Forum held recently in Richmond (April 23-24), three Longwood girls listened to students from colleges and universities in all parts of the state of Virginia complain about poor systems of communication and what could be done about it. The students complained that at their institution they were not represented on committees of the college, they were not given the opportunity to speak with college administrators and at several of these institutions the students have never even seen their president except on rare occasions. In some schools the students are too apathetic to voice their opinion if changes are needed.

The administrators at Longwood College have shown that they are concerned enough about their students to hold press conferences, speak with the students and see to it that the students are represented on college committees. The students at Longwood, especially this year, are to be congratulated for taking advantage of these opportunities. They have shown, particularly at the press conferences and in the college newspaper, that they are concerned enough to speak up and voice their opinion. Thanks to this cooperation on the part of both students and administrators at Longwood, we are proud to say that we were able to offer suggestions to institutions such as William and Mary College, Old Dominion University, and Radford College on how to improve their systems of communication.

Unfounded Rumors

Dear Miss Worthington:

I wish to end several rumors about the physics program which have developed as a result of the April Press Conference and the article which appeared in the last Rotunda — Termination of Faculty Announced At Conference.

1. The physics major is not being eliminated.
2. The introductory courses and four advanced courses will be offered next year.
3. There are ten physics majors at Longwood at this time.
4. There is a definite need for well-trained physics teachers at the secondary levels in the schools of Virginia. Last year only four majors were graduated and there were twelve vacancies.
5. The enrollments in physics have increased to 161 students for the 1969-70 session from 89 students during the 1968-69 session.

* Thank you,
Marvin W. Scott, Chairman
Department of Natural Sciences

* The statement made at the April Press Conference about our physicists also teaching sections of physical science is correct due to the students' demand for this course.

Band - Aid

To the Editor:

I would like to thank the Student Union for making May Day weekend entertaining. There was something for almost everyone. Of particular interest to many of us were the free mixers on Friday and Saturday nights.

I am happy to see someone working to bring the students diversions they want.

Wuthering Heights

(Starts At State Theater Tonight)

By SARAH FARRAR

It's about time a passionate love story hit the American screen again! Cathy and Heathcliff, Emily Bronte's romantic characters from her novel, come alive in the performances of Anna Calder-Marshall and Timothy Dalton. WUTHERING HEIGHTS is a film taken from the immortal classic and depicted in a way in which today's young audiences can identify. As a matter of fact, ANYONE with an interest in the colorful possibilities of the man-woman relationship will be interested in the movie, particularly the more exciting final scenes.

The novel was once described as "one of the greatest love stories in all literature." Wuthering Heights is the name of a farmhouse on the Yorkshire Moors. It is to this house, the home of Mr. Earnshaw (Harry Andrews), his wife (Rosalie Crutchley), and their children, Hindley (Julian Clover) and Catherine, that a young boy, found starving by Earnshaw in the streets of Liverpool, is brought to live. He (Heathcliff) is raised along with the other children.

Filmed on the Yorkshire Moors, the classic love-hate relationship between the volatile farmer's daughter and the waif is rekindled. Screenwriter Patrick Tilley describes the production as "a kind of English Western." Since, visually, the period of the story's action corresponds with the early pioneering frontier days in the U.S., the same sort of rugged existence is graphically depicted.

Says Timothy Dalton of his role: "I'm glad I don't have to emulate Sir Lawrence Olivier in my portrayal of Heathcliff. It's pointless comparing the two Heathcliffs. His was a romantic . . . it was right at the time and in the mood of the first film made for the audiences of the 1930's. My character was a bit of a moody bastard."

Cathy's character is well portrayed by Anna Calder-Marshall. Anna says, "I'm an actress, and I'd choose any medium that gave me the chance of finding a new character." (And the film version just happens to do just this for her). "Cathy, as written by Emily Bronte, is a wonderful character for an actress to tackle. Not that I'd like to meet her because Cathy is impossible . . . but she's real."

Robert Fuest, director of WUTHERING HEIGHTS, (which plays May 5-11 at the "State Theater"), sees his film as "one about difficult children who become impossible adults but marvelous lovers."

Timothy Leary's Jail Notes Just Published

By PATRICIA LIVERMAN

Timothy Leary's new book, JAIL NOTES, has just recently been published by The Douglas Book Corporation. This is Leary's most personal and most revealing book, as it gives an account of his experiences in the California prison from which he escaped last September.

Leary's account of prison life gives an insight into the man and his meaning. The following excerpt from JAIL NOTES by Timothy Leary shows his thoughts on prison life.

Let the punishment fit the time. Pavilion conditioning and learning theory teaches that the pain must be directly relevant and immediate.

After year time prison inmate forgotten his crime, his arrest, his trial, his judge, his defender.

Just doing time. Storing up bitter supply of sullen anger.

SMITE COLLAR CRIME

Six months wondering about Charles Man Son.

He was, of course, the crushing blow to the exoteric hippie movement.

After Man Son, anyone who looked like Christ was suspect of being a ritual murderer.

Even my Mother turned to me and said, "You're not like that Manson are you?"

Why Man Son Why? I have refrained from comment on Man Son because I didn't understand. He had clearly transcended something social. It seemed impossible that it could be an LSD transcendence. But one must be cautious. LSD teaches us that nothing makes any difference. But why senseless killing of innocents?

L.C. Players and Jongleurs made a valiant attempt, but fell a little short in the last play, Moliere's Tartuffe.

LC Players' Tartuffe An Admirable Attempt

By David Vest

A generally inexperienced group of Longwood Players and Hampden-Sydney Jongleurs made an admirable attempt last week to interpret one of the most difficult of all comedies, Moliere's "Tartuffe." If their performance was seriously flawed, one must respect their efforts to make this essential French play available to the community.

The most effective performance was turned in by Molly Gaddis in the role of Dorine, the maid. In the early scenes, Miss Gaddis had trouble with translator Richard Wilbur's brilliant couplets, but she got quickly stronger and dominated several scenes with the real vitality, as opposed to mere effervescence, which the part demands. Larry Smith was uneven as Orgon. In the disastrous scene where Cleante advises him on the difference between true piety and sham (the low point of the performance, in my opinion), Cleante's crucial speech was almost entirely lost in the audience response to Orgon's overplayed effeminate gestures. At other times, these gestures were effective. In fact, they were always funny, but sometimes at the expense of the play. But the fault was not entirely Orgon's; F. M. Hite failed to give his Cleante enough conviction in this scene, although he was quite good at other times, particularly just after intermission when he and Tartuffe strolled through the audience. To his credit, he fought valiantly against a thick beard which gobbled some of his best lines. Danny Roberts and Martha Ellis were more than adequate as Valere and Mariane, the young lovers, and Brian Grogan had good moments as Tartuffe. He handled the transformation of Tartuffe from false saint to false patriot well enough. Jesse Reter played Elmire quite creditably; her denunciation was excellent.

There was more than one unfortunately played passage. The opening scene dragged badly. But the difficulty of the play must be kept in mind. It is a comedy, but its subject is very grave. One may say that the cast failed to convey the serious theme of the play — they played it too lightly, and the moral force gave way to the jokes in the wrong places. But then, some of the jokes were so funny as to seem almost enough. If the actors failed to quicken the somber tones with conviction, they made the lighter moments come alive, and for that much of Moliere we are grateful.

At times the entire cast seemed self-conscious of having to speak poetry, but there were several scenes when they came close to getting maximum effect from the rimes. I praise every one of them for the way they made the couplets work in the more outrageously comic scenes. If they lost control of the poetry during a few grave speeches, we must remind ourselves that one of the greatest points of difference between Moliere's time and our own is the ability to combine moral intensity with wit — an ability which Moliere possessed to the highest degree, but which we often seem to lack.

“To Beer Or Not To Beer? . . .

By LYNDA VAN HORN

Is the Longwood College community about to experience change and witness the drinking of alcoholic beverages on campus?

Almost seven months of work is soon to come to an end as members of student government prepare to present proposed changes in the rules concerning alcoholic beverages to the Board of Visitors.

The Board, consisting of eleven members appointed through offices of the Governor, will meet on Friday, May 7, and discuss among things the proposed changes.

Speculation is high as to what the outcome of almost an entire school year's work will be. Will Longwood have the privilege of alcoholic beverages on campus or is the need and demand great enough to warrant change?

Student Representatives At Board Meeting

Entering the Board meeting will be five student representatives, Frankie Brown and Casey Wilkes will speak in behalf of legislative board as proposals and plans have been made through two of these boards.

Mary Tabb Johnson, chairman of Residence Board, and Joan Putney, Judicial Board chairman, will also be present at the meeting to answer any questions which may arise concerning the enforcement of regulations and questions on the proposed penalties for rule infractions.

ties for rule infractions.

Kathy Barclay as chairman of legislative board's Alcohol Committee will be the fifth student representative. She will present the proposed changes along with the proposed rules as they will be stated in the College handbook if passed by the Board.

Problems With the Law

The committee has done much work in research in preparing for this meeting. Members of the Alcohol Committee have talked with representatives of the State Attorney General to learn of the legal aspects involved in such changes. They have also studied handbooks of other state supported schools that already allow alcohol on campus.

One problem the committee has encountered is how to deal with the recent state law which makes it a misdemeanor for anyone of the legal age for buying and consuming alcoholic beverages (21) to willingly give such beverages to those under the legal age.

In order to comply with state laws and to assume the responsibility, a State supported college must abide by proposed rules that state, "Any student not abiding by state laws, including the law regarding aiding and abetting those under legal age, will be dealt with by Judicial Board. Penalties will include campus, social probation, suspension, expulsion, or prosecution by law enforcement officials."

Student Questionnaire

Along with the list of rules and regulations concerning alcoholic beverages which has been approved both by the Executive Cabinet of the Student Government Association and the administration of the College, the student committee will present to the Board the results of a student opinion poll taken in January of this year. The Board has already had contact with these results, but the results will be made available if the Board members wish it.

The questionnaire issued to the students asked several things, "Are you for or against changing our rules to give permission to possess and consume alcohol in the dormitories?" was the first question.

When results were tallied it was found that of the 1820 who voted 1152 or 66 per cent favored change while 668 or 36 per cent voted against any changes.

It is significant to note that over 70 per cent of the juniors and seniors favored change since in fact they are the ones of legal age who will be affected. Only 67 and 58 per cent of the sophomore and freshman classes, respectively, favored change, although this amount is still substantial.

Student Opinions

Several students were not hesitant in stating their views on the proposed changes.

"Why shouldn't we have it?" a girl said. "If I'm old enough to buy it, I should be old enough to drink it as long as I don't bother anybody else."

Another Longwood student had similar feelings. "Other schools have alcohol on campus and the schools are still running. I don't think we'll have much trouble if we get it. My parents don't mind if I drink so why should the school?"

There were other students, however, who held opposite views. Said one student, "We just don't need it. Girls can go to Tom's or the Nottingham if they want beer. It's not that far away."

"I think it will cause too much trouble. Judicial Board has enough to do without worrying about this," still another girl answered.

Staff, Alumnae, and Parents Speak

Besides students, head residents were questioned on the matter as well. Several said they had no opinions they would care to state. One said she was "definitely against" it while another said she thought it was not going to be a problem and "would go along with the decision of the administration and the Board of Visitors."

Several of the alumnae have voiced opinions regarding the proposed changes allowing alcohol in the dormitories. As in the case of the students and the head residents, there are those who are for and those who are against changes.

The administration was also questioned. Dr. Herbert Blackwell, Dean of the college, said that he did not feel he could give any opinion that might sway the Board one way or the other.

Several letters from parents have been received in the president's office, he said. Most of them have had a negative view of the proposal, but, "Just as you're going to hear from the students for it, you're going to hear from the parents against it."

Is the push for alcohol on campus just a "Status symbol" or "something the students don't have and so they want it" as some alumnae feel or is it a part of the progressive movement that Longwood and other schools have been under going?

Does Longwood need alcohol on campus and is it ready for change? Have the present rules remained the same too long?

Throughout the seven months of work letters from parents, students, alumnae, and friends have come to the office of the president of the College and to the ROTUNDA. Voiced opinions have been heard by many. Those for proposed changes and those against have had their say.

How will the Board of Visitors vote? Several administrative officials admit to having an idea of how some members will vote, but no one is willing to publicly comment.

Some decision, even if it is a decision to delay voting, will be made Friday. Only after the Board of Visitors meets will the final vote be taken and the decision made.

LC Archery Team Takes Top Three Spots Over RMWC

Longwood's Archery Team showed their skill with bows and arrows as they shot their way to victory over Randolph-Macon Woman's College by a score of 2,147 to 1,824 in a match held last week.

Longwood also took the top three places in the match. Georgia Freeman scored a 534 for first place, Susan Stutz scored 532 for second, and Rose Bowen scored 428 for third place. Other LC players competing were June Beninghove, 362, and Judy Poats, 291.

Randolph-Macon's scores were: Susan Huntley, 415; Jean Stewart, 392; Donna Crowder, 323; Elizabeth Hoag, 336; and Fumiko Foos, 358.

The next archery match will be held on Thursday, May 6.

Golf team members Peggy Lynch, Lisa Dixon, Debbie Brooks, Anne Weisiger, Becky Bailey, Louise Moss, Ann Santore, and Cartie Keene listen carefully as rules and instructions for the Williamsburg tournament are given. Longwood won over three other schools with a total of 22 points.

Lacrosse Players Outscore Opponents RMWC Loses 9-7

Longwood's Lacrosse Team came back to the winning columns as they defeated Randolph-Macon Woman's College by a score of 9-7 in a game played last week. The game was played at R-MWC in Lynchburg.

Leading Longwood scorer was senior Linda Southworth with five goals. Rene Harrison, junior, followed closely with four goals. Junior Kay Harvey and sophomore Cindy Bradley each scored one goal to give Longwood a total of nine goals or points.

Those scoring for Randolph-Macon were: B. Shirley, four goals; A. Tracey, two goals; and J. Bultner, one goal.

Longwood's record now stands at two wins and two losses.

Longwood will host the College of William and Mary on Wednesday, May 5 at four o'clock on Barlow Field. Come out and cheer your team on to victory.

Team Wins Tournament Defeats Three Schools

While everyone was enjoying their one day off from classes because of registration, the Longwood Golf Team was swinging their way to victory over William and Mary, Randolph-Macon, and George Washington University with a score of 22 points. The tournament was held in Williamsburg at the Williamsburg Country Club.

Each school brought two teams to the tournament. Longwood's first team was composed of Louise Moss, Ann Santore, Becky Bailey, and Cartie Keene. The members of the second team were Lisa Dixon, Debbie Brooks, Peggy Lynch, and Ann Weisiger. Each team competed in match play against the other three schools. Both of Longwood's teams were victorious. When all the matches were over, the total score showed Longwood had won with 22 points. Second place went to William and Mary with 17 points. Randolph-Macon placed third with 10 and one-half points, and George Washington University scored last with one and one-half points.

When asked about the tournament, the team members agreed that the course was one of the best they had played on so far. Several of the golfers also admitted leaving quite a few golf balls in the ponds around the course.

Having been asked about the future matches, the coach, Dr. Smith, remarked that the team was going to be pretty busy preparing for the high school golf tournament which will be held at Longwood on May 8. The next competitive tournament for Longwood will be on May 6 against Madison, Sweet Briar, George Washington University, and Mary Baldwin. This will be the last home tournament for the golf team.

The following week end, Longwood will host the first Virginia Intercollegiate Golf Tournament. All the colleges in Virginia have received an invitation to participate in the tournament.

Everyone plan to spend the afternoon at the estates watching some excellent golf.

Orchesis dance classes at Longwood College will present their Spring Dance Concert on Wednesday and Thursday, May 5 and 6, at 7:30 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium. Dr. Betty Bowman is sponsor. Suzanne Stewart, a freshman from Richmond, practices some of the positions used in the dance.

May Day: A Nonviolent Disruption!

By LYNNE PIERCE

Massive demonstrations, which were to begin on May 1, were planned by the Mayday Collective with the idea of disrupting the functioning of the federal government during the first week of May. The original strategy was developed at the Ann Arbor Student and Youth Conference on a People's Peace in April and called for nonviolent civil disobedience. This plan was chosen because the Collective felt it limited the possibilities for confinement and dispersal open to the government and would cause less opposition from the American public.

The demonstrations were to be organized on a regional level with no central group in control. Once a regional group was organized, it was to choose a target in Washington, D. C. and practice its methods of attack. During the last week of April, the groups were to assemble at the Washington Monument Grounds, where information centers were located, and train in methods of mass action.

The group planned to celebrate the People's Peace Treaty on May 1 and to follow a SCLS mule train through Washington on May 2. During this time, there would be mass assemblies with speakers and rock concerts to keep the supporters entertained. They also planned movements for this time to encourage government workers to strike and GI's on duty to join the marchers.

Nonviolent civil disobedience was planned on a large scale for May 3 and 4, with the major objective of closing the Federal government section of Washington. This was to be accomplished by blocking traffic arteries during the early morning rush hours.

Twenty-one targets, in two general categories (traffic circles and bridges), were chosen as demonstration points. 20 groups, each composed of no fewer than 700 people, were to be organized. Each target was to be surrounded by 1,000 demonstrators and major targets were planned to attract 3,000 people. The groups were to move in waves, one replacing another as its members were arrested.

In conjunction with these disturbances, there were to be marches on the Pentagon, Justice Department and Congress. The Collective also plans for demonstrations in South Vietnam against U. S. forces.

'No Business As Usual' is to be observed on May 5-7. At the end of the week, the group will decide what further steps to take.

Miss Ellen Lyon is escorted by her father, Worley S. Lyon, of Vinton, down the pathway of Stubbs Mall to be crowned Longwood's May Queen amid the plaudits of her subjects Saturday afternoon. A senior, she was chosen by her classmates for the honor.

Longwood May Day Features May Pole And May Queen

By VICKI BOWLING

A crowd of students, parents, friends, and future students was on hand to observe and participate in the May Day festivities Saturday, May 1, beginning at 2:15 on Stubbs Mall.

The crowning of May Queen Ellen Lyon highlighted the afternoon. Ellen's father, Mr. Worley S. Lyon, placed the wreath of spring flowers on her head as the court and visitors watched.

Debbie Chapman began the afternoon by introducing the skits, "Snow Blue and White and the Seven Dwarfs," primarily for incoming freshmen.

Featuring Brenda Griffin as the homesick freshman who finds her one-and-only at a mixer, the skit had as its moral, "Those coming to Longwood may not find their Prince Charming, but they will find happiness and friendship. And two out of three ain't bad!"

Dragon Chandler, General Chairman of May Day, gave the official welcome, especially to the Class of 1975, the Baby Greens who were present.

Dragon introduced Dr. E. Lee Land, Director of the Campus School, as Master of Ceremonies. After he recognized several important people in the audience, the Maypole dance was performed by girls dressed in different colored formals.

At the conclusion of the dance, Dr. Land presented the May Court. Dr. Willett's youngest son, Scott, served as crown bearer and Lydia Millar, daughter of history professor Gilbert Millar, acted as flower girl.

Entertainment was provided by the Southfolk String Ensemble, a folk group composed of four young men.

A reception was held in the Gold Room, followed by a buffet dinner on Wheeler Mall.

Two free concerts added to the success of the weekend. Natural Wildlife performed Friday night and the Jay-Gees on Saturday night, on Iler Field. Both concerts were well attended.

Tim Brown, advisor for May Day, estimated the number of visitors at 800.

Several prospective Longwood students had the same favorable reaction to the festivities. "I'm more enthusiastic than ever about coming to Longwood!" one future green and white exclaimed.

"I think the week end was a success," said one Longwood senior. "Having a lot of activity, especially the concerts, helped relieve the boredom of staying here on a weekend. I think Longwood should offer such activities more frequently."

Holdings Of Degrees Jobless

By MARGARET BLAIR

The National Conference on the future of teaching English in higher education, held in Knoxville, Tennessee, April 22-24, reached some agreement of opinion in determining that problems do exist concerning the current job crisis, the ratings of Graduate Programs by the American Council of Education, and the controversy between the Doctor of Arts and the Ph. D. degrees.

There is at this time an oversupply of Master of Arts and Ph. D. degree holders. To arrest the abundance, some university departments have voluntarily limited the number of graduate students accepted to a percentage of the average of the past five years.

One recommendation of the Conference was that the Modern Language Association inaugurate a program similar to the American Medical Association involving internships and residencies for intern scholars. However, with the continued growth of junior and community colleges and with the upgrading of secondary school programs, there appears to be a continuing demand for M.A.'s in the teaching of English.

Concerning the rating of Graduate Programs, a representative of the American Council of Education explained the rationale of the ACE ratings. However, many participants of the Conference deplored the improper use to which ratings are put. The general consensus is that many universities buy ratings by hiring well known scholars as professors who result in having little contact with their classes. The Conference passed a resolution asking that the MLA and Association of Departments of English to study the possibility of their sponsoring future ratings.

With regard to the recently activated D.A. (essentially the Ph. D. without a thesis), the Conference passed a resolution defending the proven success of the traditional Ph. D. for college teaching.

Chemistry Students Visit Laboratories For Practical Insight

More than 40 Longwood students taking chemistry courses recently visited several scientific laboratories.

The Analytical Chemistry class visited the Federal Bureau of Investigation Laboratory in Washington, D. C. on April 14. The class met with Dr. Virginia Bass, who taught chemistry at Longwood in 1967-69 and is now a senior chemist with the FBI. Dr. Bass and her associates showed the students the methods for identifying narcotic drugs and other crime evidences.

The General Chemistry class visited the University of Virginia Hospital on April 22. The group of 28 was welcomed by Mrs. Richards, Health Career Coordinator, Miss Shupe, a faculty member of the School of Medical Technology, the Public Relation Director of the Hospital and other staff members.

Each person presented a brief view on each discipline of the health science profession before the students were broken up into small groups for a tour. The places of visit included the biochemical, clinical, and nuclear medicine laboratories.

The Radiochemistry class visited the State Industrial Hygiene Laboratory in Richmond on April 26. The major work done in this laboratory is the analyses of polluted air and of water from the nuclear plant areas. Dr. Seiden, Director of the Laboratory, Mr. Stone, Radiation Health Specialist, and other chemists demonstrated the operation of an atomic absorption spectrophotometer for trace analysis, the use of gamma-ray spectrometer, and other methods for determining the lead content in blood and the radioactivity in milk, oysters, water and the air.

Students could smile in this year's registration get-together.

Successful Registration: A Hit With Apprehensive Students

By CHRISTINE SHARPE

Registration! Students each year get panicky as the day approaches. This year, however, there was much less confusion and a great deal more organization than usual.

Numbers were drawn for the order of registration and then they were really used. In previous years, numbers have also been drawn, but at registration the students were let in by the hundreds defeating the purpose of drawing numbers.

"After three years of bum registration, it was a real relief to get a good one. Getting through in 20 minutes was like a miracle," said a junior. Other upper-classmen also commented on how much more organized registration was than in previous years.

Even the majority of the freshmen were satisfied with the system. "It really worked well. I was able to get all the classes I needed," said one freshman. Another said, "registration for next year was so much easier than registering for this year's classes. Everything just seemed to work so well."

The seniors seemed to be more pleased than anyone else as they avoided Lankford on Registration day. "I just walked by and smiled to myself. It was such a relief not to have to stand in those lines again," said a graduating senior.

Colleges In The News

Coeds At W&L

LEXINGTON — Twenty-six coeds from four Virginia colleges will attend Washington and Lee University next fall. The girls will be participating in an exchange program involving eight single-sex institutions in Virginia and North Carolina. The majority of the girls attend Hollins College, with the others coming from Mary Baldwin College, Randolph-Macon Woman's College and Sweet Briar College. The only Washington and Lee student in the program will study at Sweet Briar.

New Drinking Rules

STAUNTON — The faculty Review Board of Mary Baldwin College has approved a new drinking policy for the college community which is in keeping with recent state Senate action regarding regulation changes. The consumption of alcoholic beverages by students and their guests will be allowed at designated locations on the campus. Possession of alcohol in dormitory rooms will be allowed within the boundaries of state law. Alcoholic beverages will be allowed to be served at social gatherings on and off campus with the approval of the Dean of Students. The new policy will go into effect next fall.

IDL Leader Speaks

NORFOLK — Rabbi Meir Kahane, the leader of the controversial Jewish Defense League, will speak Thursday, May 13, at Old Dominion University's gymnasium. He will speak under the auspices of the ODU Hillel Foundation and is expected to defend his "militant" tactics which have been attacked by most of the Jewish community. The plight of the Soviet Jews has been the focus of his efforts.

Review Board

CLINTON, SOUTH CAROLINA — The Board of Trustees of Presbyterian College has accepted a plan proposed by the student body last March which calls for a committee of administrators, faculty members and students who would have the final say in matters dealing with student life. The committee will act as a faculty voice in ratifying proposed student legislation. Besides reviewing the various legislative acts passed by campus groups, the committee will also be responsible for setting the dates for this legislation to go into effect. The proposal needs final faculty approval to become effective.

SUSGA Walk-Out

MONROE, LOUISIANA — Delegates from Northeast Louisiana University led a walk-out at the 1971 Conference of Southern Universities Student Government Association when a proposal calling for SUSGA to address issues of today failed. Supporters of the proposal felt the group should take a stand on issues which affected the students who elected the representatives from the 90 universities and colleges at the conference. Northeast was joined in the walk-out by students from Kentucky, Louisiana, Georgia, Virginia and the other Southern states.

blasphemes God?"

The letter ended with the statement, "Mr. Mayor, you have an obligation to use the full power and prestige of your office to alert the decent citizens of Richmond to the blasphemous nature of 'Hair' and to urge them not to support it."

When the play was performed in Cleveland, a bomb was thrown in the theatre. No one was injured. There were also two bomb scares during the two months the musical appeared in Cleveland.

Supporting "Hair," Mr. Williams writes, "... it adds up to one of the most exciting shows ever to play at the Mosque. It's no wonder that 'Hair' has become a worldwide stage hit. It is something completely different, in concept and execution."

A group sponsored by the Student Union saw the play last night in Richmond. All of the tickets that the Student Union had obtained were sold.

Oceanography And Field Biology Classes, Planning Eastern Shore Trip

By VALERIE BLANKS

Students from the Oceanography and Field Biology classes taught this semester by Dr. Batts are taking a trip to the eastern shore May 6-8. The purpose of the trip is to study different forms of ocean life.

Dr. Batts, who is taking the group of 19, says it will be a fun as well as an educational trip. The students will be traveling by bus, and will stay in a dorm at Wachapreague, where they will cook their own meals.

On the 6th the girls will tour the Virginia Institute of Marine Science (VIMS) at Gloucester Point. The next day they will go out on the water at Wachapreague, the eastern shore laboratory of VIMS, in two boats. The girls will then get out in the water with their equipment and seine. Seine means the collection of the organisms in the ocean with nets and other types of catching equipment. That night they will eat some of the things they have caught, such as oysters, crabs, and clams.

Saturday, the 8th, the group will collect specimens on the base side of the Eastern Shore. They will also visit the Seashore State Park at Virginia Beach before returning.

Besides examining the different organisms as they are caught, they will be preserved and brought back to college for further examination.

Debbie Lewis, who went on the trip last year, said, "The trip is really worthwhile. In a course like oceanography, it helps to have practical experience with the organisms."

A Rewarded Wish

Registration for classes proved to be a breath of fresh air after last semester's run-around for all freshmen concerned. Even though everyone may not have exactly what she needed or hoped to get for next fall's classes, each girl should certainly be able to say she did not miss the old system.

Dean Wells and her staff deserve a round of applause for the improvement. We all clamored for something to be done, and to our relief, she did it.

"Bolling Island Plantation" Shown Sunday On St. James Tour

By LYNNE PIERCE

Bolling Island Plantation, once owned by the Bolling family and now owned by Mr. Richard T. Couture, a member of the Longwood College History and Social Sciences Department, will be part of a tour to be sponsored May 9 by St. James Church.

When Mr. Couture first bought the 50 acres he owns, there were 14 buildings on the property. Most of the buildings have been torn down and only the main buildings, including the main house, kitchen and a slave cabin, will be open for the tour.

The main house was built in sections and shows three styles of architecture: late colonial period, Federal period with Tuscan columns and Victorian period. The house, which sits on a stretch of land behind a knoll, gives the appearance of being more antebellum than it really is.

The tour of the interior of the house will include only the ground floor, which consists of the living room, dining room, bedroom and study. The 1810 section has been decorated with pieces from the American empire period and others which have been imported. Much of the interior has been modeled after Thomas Jefferson's home, Monticello, as the original design called for. The rest of the house has been decorated in the Regency and early Victorian periods.

Mr. Couture expressed particular pride in the restoration of the living room. The room is done in Regency colors, with curtains designed from a volume on the Regency period and triple sash windows based on a design by Jefferson. The furniture in the room includes a Madame Racamier sofa, Chippendale and Queen Anne side tables and a Louis XV sofa. The room is highlighted by an amethyst chandelier.

The tour will also include the original brick kitchen built in 1825, the orchard, a walk to the knoll and the orangery, where orange trees were forced to grow in order that the family could have the citrus juice which was difficult to obtain.

Mr. Couture has often expressed the joy and pleasure he has received from living in and restoring the house. He feels it has a personality all of its own and that to try and create an impression of it would be futile. The visitor's impression of the house will be determined by what he is looking for. Mr. Couture summed up his feelings on the purpose of the tour: "We want to show that this is the way we live with the past."

"Bolling Island," a world in itself, is on view in the St. James House Tour Sunday.

News Briefs

Money Crisis

BRUSSELS — An international monetary crisis, involving the flooding of Europe with U. S. dollars, is threatening to destroy the beginnings of West European unity. The crisis began when dollars began pouring into Europe because of high interest rates and the expectation that West Germany would revalue the mark up again. The Common Market has gone into an emergency meeting to try and solve the near panic, but it is being split by a disagreement between France and West Germany over which policy should be followed. West Germany has proposed "floating currency" which means each country finds its own level according to the supply and demand. France feels such a move is not plausible. Since each country determines its own policy, it is expected that if West Germany goes to floating currency, the Netherlands will follow.

Launch Failure

CAPE KENNEDY —The United States launched the Mariner 8 spaceship Saturday night for an intended flight to Mars to take pictures. The satellite was to be followed by launching Mariner 9 on May 18 and the data gathered was to help determine if primitive life could exist on the planet. Soon after the take-off however, the rocket spiraled out of control and failed to direct the ship toward its target. The launch was declared a complete failure, but no cause has been found as yet. At the same time, the Soviet Union managed to put a string of satellites around the world with one shot.

Annexation Denied

RICHMOND — The Department of Justice decided Friday that Richmond's 1970 annexation of part of Chesterfield County violated the U. S. Voting Rights Act of 1965 and is therefore unlawful. The law provides that no political subdivision under its jurisdiction may change its voting laws or election practices from those in effect as of November 1, 1964 without government approval. The law only applies to certain Southern states, Virginia included. Richmond intends to appeal the decision to a three-judge federal district court in the District of Columbia.

Brezhnev To France

MOSCOW — Leonid Brezhnev, the Soviet party leader, has announced that he will lead a Soviet delegation going to Paris later this year. Brezhnev has not visited a non-Communist country since he took control of the party in 1964. The visit is to return the visit last fall of President Georges Pompidou and will take place in October or November.

Board Approves Alcohol Proposal

By VICKI BOWLING

The Board of Visitors of Longwood College accepted the proposal of alcohol on campus at its quarterly meeting here on Friday, May 7.

The Board also reviewed other College policies relating to student life.

Regulations concerning alcoholic beverages which had been agreed upon by the Executive Cabinet of the Student Government Association and the administration were submitted to the Board and approved.

Official Statement

The official statement from the Board was, "While wishing to make perfectly clear that the Board of Visitors does not endorse the use of alcoholic beverages, the Board accepts the recommendation from the Legislative Board of Student Government which would permit some utilization of alcohol on campus strictly in compliance with the laws of Virginia."

Individual residence rooms in the dorms will be the only places on campus where alcoholic beverages may be consumed or stored. This is because only individual rooms are considered private. Halls, parlors, recreation rooms, kitchens, and sorority rooms are considered public places. Storage will be allowed in dorm kitchens.

According to Dr. Willett, this ruling of private and public places is from the State Attorney General, and holds true for other colleges in Virginia as well as Longwood. The alcohol committee, headed by Kathy Barclay, has seen the Attorney General in Richmond, and he in turn has been here considering the legality of the issue.

Specific Regulations

In freshmen rooms, only 3.2 beer will be permitted. Legislative Board feels that the chances of a freshman rooming with an upperclassman are slight.

During Open House, individual rooms are considered public places, therefore, alcoholic beverages may not be consumed there by either students or their guests.

This regulation is not uncommon, as Mary Washington uses it. It guards against a situation that a student might not be able to handle.

Guests of students or the College, such as female week end guests, must follow College regulations. Violators will be subject to penalization.

Sale Of Beer

Beer will be sold at the Club House at Longwood Estate. It is to be consumed only on the premises. Only beer purchased at the Club House may be consumed. Dr. Willett explained that this will aid in handling the situation there. Control can be exerted as far as age is concerned, and beer can be kept off the golf course, which is considered a public place.

The staff at the Club House reserves the right to ask for identification. Violators will be asked to leave the premises.

These regulations have been set up in compliance with Virginia law.

Virginia law states that liquor, wine, and beer are prohibited for those under the age of 21, although 3.2 beer is allowed for age 18. Alcoholic beverages may not be consumed in unlicensed public places. Any alcoholic beverage being transported, or that is in one's possession, in public must be concealed from view.

Violations

Intoxication will be defined as "behavior which is offensive, disruptive, destructive, or which renders a student unable to sign in and get to her room without assistance."

Depending on its severity, Residence Board, Judicial Board, or the administration will deal with violations.

Residence Board will handle infractions which occur in the dorms. These include excessive noise or other activity which infringes upon another's rights as a result of consumption of alcoholic beverages. Penalties will be campus or social probation, with repeated violators referred to Judicial Board.

Any student found violating the state law will be dealt with by Judicial Board. This includes aiding and abetting those under legal age. Penalties will be campus, social probations, suspension, expulsion, or prosecution by enforcement officials.

Dr. Willett said, "I don't think there will be many violations. I

Changes In Academic Calendar To Benefit More Students

By KATHY ROBERTSON

The 1971-72 academic calendar includes several innovations that should benefit all Longwood students.

Classes will begin on Friday, September 17. All Monday, Wednesday, Friday classes as well as Tuesday, Thursday classes will meet on Friday for one-half period each. This is to allow the new students time to find their classes and give all students a chance to get the list of books needed for their classes so that books may be obtained in time for the first full class periods the following week.

Students will also have a period of six weeks to drop a course without receiving an F. This new policy replaces the two-week drop period.

Preregistration for the Spring Semester for all students will take place on December 2. This will allow students more time to decide which courses they need to take or to repeat.

Next year, the Spring and Easter Vacations will coincide. Classes after the vacation will resume at 1 p.m. on Monday, April 3. This will be of special benefit to students who must travel long distances.

Summer Registration

Students who wish to attend summer school are reminded that registration must be done through the mail as soon as possible. Classes are rapidly filling up on a first-come-first-served basis.

Summer catalogues are available in the Dean's office. There is a registration form in the catalogue that should be completed and sent to the Registrar's office as soon as possible.

Freshmen must have a 1.8 cumulative average by the end of this semester and upperclassmen must have a 2.0. Any student with a lower average is required to attend summer school.

In A Nut Shell

This is the last ROTUNDA for this school year. In looking back over the entire year it should be realized that many changes have taken place on the Longwood campus. A quick look at Longwood in review shows that:

The Alcohol question is now resolved, and we will have alcohol on campus at the beginning of next year. It remains to be seen, however, how mature the students will be in obeying the points which were passed by the Board of Visitors.

We were given this year three hours of visitation in the dorms on Sunday. Granted, this is nowhere near open housing, but perhaps in the coming years the strict policy will be liberalized, or at least modified. In the meantime we do have 2-5 on Sunday.

Our Judicial system is slowly being revised. Residence Board is also profiting from the close scrutiny being given to Judicial Board. Both boards are being remodeled so that students can be both safe and sure that proper judicial procedure is being carried out.

For the first time in many years we have had this year a functioning Student Union. It is true that all the activities were not well attended, nor were they well received, but an attempt was made to provide the students with activities that might interest them.

All the changes this year are too numerous to mention. In spite of all the complaining that has been done about an apathetic student body, an apathetic faculty and an administration that loved tradition too much to change, much seems to have been done. Those of us who are quick to complain about the archaic traditions here at Longwood should reflect for a moment on the Longwood of only four years ago.

It is evident then, that everyone is willing to change and modify to a certain extent. Longwood is beginning to change with the times, and this year's changes, revisions and improvements should prove to students that not only is change possible but it is welcomed!

As a parting thought, the ROTUNDA staff would like to wish the student body good luck on exams, and a very happy summer vacation.

Longwood: A Positive View

By ETHEL REITER

"If Miss Reiter finds Longwood so insufferable, why does she bother to remain in its atmosphere?"

Letter to the Editor May 3, 1971
Jo D. Smith Class of 1960

I do not believe that it is common practice to use the editorial page of a college newspaper to publicly state one's reasons for attending an institution. However, since Mrs. Smith has raised the question publicly I feel that I owe her an explanation.

I would begin by saying that Mrs. Smith obviously read more into my commentary than I said. I stated that in the area of racial issues I found Longwood's attitude to be quite conservative and, therefore, insufferable. It is quite evident that this does not include every area of Longwood College.

There are many reasons to remain in Longwood's atmosphere.

As President Willett always says, "in comparison to other state institutions the tuition at Longwood is quite low." Despite this comparatively low financial burden, Longwood has an excellent Financial Aid Department. It appears to me that the people in this department are extremely understanding and willing to help as much as possible. The college offers numerous loans, scholarships, and part-time jobs.

In the area of academics I have very few complaints. Although there seems to be too much emphasis on the education major, there is still enough of the liberal arts spirit to create a well rounded program and room for personal tastes. I also feel that the school is interested in hiring the best teachers available.

Another reason is that there is much hope for Longwood. I hate to use that classical line, but "Longwood has progressed tremendously since I first arrived." Although I do not feel that this is a valid argument every time new issues arise, it is a remarkably true statement. When I look back to the freshmen days of preposterous rules (must always wear a dress, lights out after midnight, 12:30 curfew, pink slips, and so forth) I am honestly amazed to see how far we have come. I also look at the new students coming to Longwood each year and am gratified to see how much more realistic and aware they are.

I would like to conclude my last commentary for this year by saying that I have never intended to editorially attack any individuals at Longwood. However, Mrs. Smith, it is my right and privilege as well as your Silent Majority to question, criticize, or denounce any policy of this institution. That is why the editorial page exists.

Letters to the Editor

Alumna Misses Silent Majority

To the Editor:

It appears to me our college newspaper, THE ROTUNDA, has become a tool which certain students use to publicly criticize, denounce, and degrade the establishment, my alma mater. I make particular reference to the completely negative attitude expressed in the editorials themselves and many of the 'letters to the editor.'

Is there nothing "good" left at Longwood to comment about on the editorial page? I would certainly like to read the opinions of what I believe is the "silent majority" at the college.

Maybe the students feel that someone else should speak, but if we continue to pass the buck no one will condone the actions of the minority. I have sat back all year with my tongue in cheek and regret not having spoken my piece sooner.

In closing I would like to refer to the article "Longwood's Attitude Insufferable" by Ethel Reiter (April 28, 1971). If Miss Reiter finds Longwood so insufferable why does she bother to remain in its atmosphere.

What-Might-Have-Been

My Dear Friends,

I wish to thank each and every one of you for your concern in the matter of the nonrenewal of my contract.

Your questions, your statements of confidence, and your concern for my future have been most rewarding. It is a tribute that I shall never forget.

To my students and the student body at large I thank you for your support and selfless generosity. To my fellow colleagues, many thanks for your comfort and advice. And, finally, to the administration for taking the time and energy to answer student questions in regard to my position at Longwood.

I wish I could have stayed on at Longwood. Now, one cannot, it seems, ignore the old proverb which runs "The saddest story of them all is What-Might-Have-Been." But perhaps it will fall out, somehow, that What-Might-Have-Been might actually be, even if somewhere else. I know, in any case, that my friends will be with me to share it.

Yours faithfully,
Bill Stukey

Chi: Enigmatic Organization?

Dear Editor:

Since serving a term as an alumna director several years ago, I have been graciously sent THE ROTUNDA, which I have usually read with interest. From time to time, articles or letters appear concerning that enigmatic organization (?) known as Chi, and I have often started to write my reflections on it. As a freshman at the college in the fall of 1939, I shared the feeling well expressed in the April 28 letter by Miss Morrison, I, however, by accident — not a stakeout, Darcy — had the experience one night to be on our dormitory hall, when suddenly I realized that the white robed figures were walking! Since that time, I have often thought of what a terrifying feeling it must have been for some poor, innocent freshman to be awakened to see those ghostly faces staring down at her. I had heard, too, the rumors of other things done by Chi — in the name of retribution, no doubt — such as actually painting a girl's hair for a misdeed such as yes, night-riding! Now that my own children are in college, I am truly amazed that such an organization still continues to exist. True the elusive sisterhood is to be commended for beautifying the campus with the tulips (I wonder if that feat was accomplished by the dark of the moon and white robes . . .) Secret membership and white robes — shades of the Klu Klux Klan! Surely, college students have deeper and more real concerns today than being fearful of stepping on a Chi sign painted on the sidewalk. I can hardly believe that all of this is for real! As for Chi of 1972 who writes in her inspired letter that Chi is really "a part of today with a vision of tomorrow" . . . touching, but just whom is she kidding?

TO THE 1971 GRADUATING CLASS
LONGWOOD COLLEGE

The continued success of the American Experiment depends primarily on the qualities of heart, mind and spirit of our young people. As college graduates you have not only the training and idealism, but the opportunity and responsibility to build through further study or through your chosen careers the kind of society which will make further generations proud to identify with your accomplishments.

I know that you will not fail to become part of a positive response to the needs of America: a response worthy of her resources and capacities, worthy of the historic courage and the wisdom and will of her people. Your studies have given you the tools to dedicate yourselves in a very special way to helping overcome some of the most difficult problems we face, and as you become further involved in these efforts, you will continue to discover more examples of the ways in which the complexities of modern life make it imperative for us to work together.

The destiny of our nation is not divided into yours and ours. We share it. There can be no generation gap in America. We must all keep an open mind and forthright spirit, balance the courage of our convictions with the courage of our uncertainties, triumph over bigotry and prejudice and recapture the unity of purpose that has always been our strength.

Your fresh ideas and candid approach can be a strong deterrent to division and a valuable asset in building the alliance of the generations we so urgently need if we are to advance the cause we share. As I congratulate you on this graduation day, I do so in full confidence that you will answer this need both in your careers and in your daily lives.

"The Statue"

Starting Friday May 14, At State Theater

By SARAH FARRAR

And how would you feel seeing yourself there, eighteen feet high, weighing close to 700 pounds and wearing nothing but a fairly impressive-sized fig leaf? David

Niven, who recently had the unique experience of seeing himself cast in simulated marble for THE STATUE, opening Friday, May 14 (playing through the 15th) at The State Theater, reports he felt just fine -- if a bit overwhelmed by it all.

Niven, 60, whose career spans an amazing four decades is busily at work in this eighty-third film playing a Nobel Prize winner, the inventor of a universal language. His wife, played by Virni Lisi, is an equally famous sculptress and her commission by the President to create a statue of her husband for outside the American Embassy in London sets off a round of complications.

Niven's comedy timing seems as impeccable as ever. What is his technique? "You can't play comedy unless a circus is going on inside you -- and I suppose I try to remember that." Helowers his voice to a confidential whisper, "Drama is much, much easier to play."

This 18-foot nude statue of Mr. Niven is the central object -- of love, envy and jealousy -- in the outrageous new comedy. Robert Vaughn also stars, playing an ambitious U. S. statesman, an ambassador who has the ear of the President. Even the White House becomes involved in the scramble of protocol and propriety.

Nudity in statues is not new in the world of art or motion pictures, however, The Statue apparently has updated yet another morality code . . . for nude sculpture. Filmed primarily in Italy, the Josef - Shafte color production was directed by Rod Amateau and produced by Anis Nohra, with Shafte as executive produced. It is being distributed by Cenerama Releasing.

To this date, I have not seen the film, but I suppose any "wild comedy about marriage, sex, and sculpture that is so clean it could be previewed in the Vatican . . . for adult audiences only" is not without interest?

One - Act Plays On Thursday Feature Work By Mr. Young

The Longwood Players and Hampden-Sydney Jongleurs will present two one-act plays Thursday night at 8:30 in the Jarman Studio Theatre.

The opening play, "The Anarchist," was written and will be directed by Douglas M. Young of the Speech and Dramatic Arts Department. It is a two-character "comedy of menace" and stars Jongleurs John Chinn, who appeared earlier this year in "Exit the King," and Dave Clark, who had the leading role in "Look Back in Anger."

The second play of the evening is a domestic comedy by 19th Century English playwright Sir Arthur Pinero. It is titled "The Play-goers." Directing this production is Brad White, a sophomore at Hampden-Sydney who appeared in both "Good-bye Charlie" and "Exit the King" this year. Next year White will enter the North Carolina School of the Arts at Winston-Salem.

Appearing in "The Play-goers" will be two Longwood Players who had leading roles in productions this year. Belinda Brugh was seen in "Good-bye Charlie" and Joyce Saunders, in "Look Back in Anger."

Also appearing in the show will be John Adams, Cookie Howell, Marlene McDaniels, Suzanne Curry and Julie Sherrod, I. B. Dent, who teaches in the Geography Department and who appeared in "Good-bye Charlie," will also be featured.

Those planning to attend the two shows are reminded of the limited seating capacity of the Studio Theatre and of the unusually late starting time -- 8:30 -- for the productions.

"The Heart Is A Lonely Hunter" Tonight In Bedford

Some of the strangest dialogue an actor ever had to learn fell to Alan Arkin while he was starring in "The Heart Is a Lonely Hunter," the Warner Bros.-Seven Arts film which will be shown on May 12 at 7:30 p.m. in Bedford. Admission is 25¢ per person.

Arkin is, of course, a master of articulate dialogue, but he portrays a deaf-mute in the Technicolor adaptation of Carson McCullers' celebrated novel. So he had to learn the sign language of the deaf, becoming, in fact, letter perfect at his newly acquired skill.

To get the hang of the hand signals Arkin read books and studied films on the subject. He also took lessons in sign language and lip-reading from a resident of Selma, Alabama, where "The Heart Is a Lonely Hunter" was filmed entirely on location.

I was not dismayed by the fact that I have no speaking lines or I wouldn't have done it," says Arkin. "I was interested not only in the character, but in the whole story. A good character without a good story isn't enough," he adds.

In his role of the deaf-mute Arkin brings warmth and friendship into the lives of several people. Among them, Mick Kelly, a 14-year-old girl played by Sondra Locke, Miss Locke, a 21-year-old Tennessean, is making her professional acting debut after winning the role of Mick in a national talent search.

"The Heart Is a Lonely Hunter" was directed by Robert Ellis Miller, produced by Thomas C. Ryan and Marc Merson, from a screenplay by Ryan. The poignant drama co-stars Laurinda Barrett, Stacy Keach, Jr., Chuck McCann, Biff McGuire, Percy Rodriguez and Creely Tyson. Academy Award winner James Wong Howe was director of photography.

Works from the show that took two weeks to hang.

Juniors Exhibit In Bedford

By MARY ANN BENTLEY

After many headaches and much confusion the Junior Art Majors finally managed to organize and hang a fine show of their work completed at Longwood. Handsome examples of sculpture, ceramics, crafts, enamels, painting, printing, drawing and jewelry work illustrate the students' involvement and achievement.

The exhibit will remain until May 24 at which time the Photography class will exhibit along with Buffy Winifree and Nancy Dunn, independent printmaking students, and Linda Rorer, an independent jewelry work student. At the same time Linda Lee Jones will show her paintings from independent study in the first floor hallway with students of independent crafts and enamels.

In the second floor hallway constructions from basic design and "things" from art education are on display.

The summer exhibit program for Bedford Gallery will include a show by the State Supervisors of Art. Baylor Nichols, Shirlee Loomer and Charles Flynn will exhibit their drawings and paintings from June 15 to September 30.

Graduation: A Time Of Mixed Emotions

By LYNDA VAN HORN

"The Board of Visitors, the Faculty and Graduating Class of Longwood College announce the Commencement Exercises..." begins this year's graduation announcement.

As in every year the about-to-graduate seniors are looking forward to the occasion with mixed feelings. Most are anxiously awaiting the day when they no longer have to attend classes and take tests. Some are slightly melancholy at leaving the place where so many friends were made and four years were lived.

Several seniors were asked their feelings upon approaching this special occasion.

"I can't believe it," said one girl. "I can't say I'll be sorry to get away from all the work, but I suppose I will miss my friends." Another girl began, "I've been in school so long, it's going to seem funny on the other side of a desk for a change."

"Graduation is going to be one of the happiest times in my life. The other will be the next week when I get married," still another senior said.

Post-Graduation Plans

Plans after graduation include teaching for most and marriage for many. Graduate school is still a third alternative chosen by some. Several interviewed had quite different plans.

"I'm going to bum around Europe," said one girl. "I plan to see the world before I settle down to do anything. It should be really exciting and educational."

A few girls said they just planned on getting married and raising a family. They felt their education would come in handy if they ever needed it.

Some girls who have not as yet received teaching contracts were making plans to work in offices and department stores to make their livings.

"I applied at a lot of different places," explained one girl without a teaching contract. "I've got to do something to pay back my teachers' loan, you know."

Advice To Underclassmen

Almost all of the girls interviewed were looking forward to whatever was to come after graduation, and most were eager to give advice to the underclassmen who must remain.

One girl advised, "Try not to get so discouraged. When things get bad just remember there's always the weekend to look forward to."

"Try to get to know your professors," another senior said. "They can really help you especially when it comes time to hand in recommendations."

One girl warned, "Don't panic! Things will always improve even if it may not seem so at the time. When you're piled up with tests and projects and whatever, try doing one thing at a time and not worry about the other."

"My only advice is to make the best of it and good luck," a happy-to-graduate senior said.

Most seniors agreed that the four years or in some cases three years, went by fast. Many found it hard to realize that they had finally reached the culmination of their college careers. On the other hand, many said that being a freshman seemed a long time ago.

"We've gone through a lot, in many ways it's (the four years) been too long and in many ways too short. I'm glad I made it and I wouldn't want to do it over, but I have to admit I'll miss it," one girl said summing up the feelings of a large number of the senior class.

With Senior Assembly, Senior Banquet, and Senior Sneak Day approaching, there is still a lot for the seniors to look forward to.

Memorable College Experiences

Most agree that these last days at Longwood are the most memorable and the best. Several seniors were asked to comment on other memorable experiences they have encountered at Longwood.

Said one senior, "One thing that stands out in my mind is the time we got up at six in the morning to stand in the rain and wait to register when we were freshmen."

"Trying for the win at song contest, meant a lot to me," another said.

"Getting a diamond this year is by far the most memorable thing that's happened to me," still another said.

Opinions On Longwood

Generally, the graduating seniors were more than willing to talk of their years at Longwood and to give advice. A few were counting the days until graduation and gave some ideas on how Longwood could be improved.

"I think Longwood should start an unlimited cut policy. There are some times when it's almost impossible to go to class, but you know you must. If a girl is responsible enough to be in college, she's responsible enough to know if she should go to class or not," offered one disgruntled senior.

Another senior complained about the lack of spirit. "Spirit has almost become a thing of the past. The underclassmen just don't seem as interested as we were. I think something should be done to build it up again."

One of her classmates had quite an opposite view. "I hope Longwood will soon do away with all the singing and hand holding. For a college, some awfully juvenile things go on around here. I'm glad some of the students are finally getting interested in a side of education other than the blue and white fun and games."

Others had various suggestions to offer. Among these were better student-faculty relations, changing from the semester to the quarter school year, getting more and better performing artists, having better food, and getting more boys in classes.

Mixed Feelings

Soon four years of college life will come to an end. Graduation for many will be happy, for many sad, and to most mixed feelings will be brought about by this occasion.

To those who must remain in the background awaiting the time when they too will be at the end, when they too will graduate, it is a time of saying good-bye and quiet anticipation for the future years when graduation will be a special occasion to them.

To the faculty and administration it is just another year when one more class will leave Longwood only to be replaced by another. Certainly some faculty members will be bidding farewell to close friends and favorites, but they too will be replaced by other Longwood seniors.

On June 5, 1971, the graduating senior class will go through commencement exercises. Parents, family, and friends will be on hand to watch as each girl is handed her diploma. Congratulations will be given and are in order to this year's senior class — the class of 1971.

Virginia Doubles Competition

Debbie Ellin and Charlotte Fugett, tennis doubles players for Longwood College, placed third in the state at the VITW held at Madison College this past weekend.

Their first opponent was Lynchburg College, whom they beat 6-2 and 6-0. They were defeated in their second match by Mary Baldwin College with scores of 6-0 and 6-2.

Debbie and Charlotte were then placed in the consolation round. Here they played Mary Washington College and Madison College and defeated both. These victories placed them third doubles team in Virginia.

First place went to Diane Parker and Talbot Jordan of Mary Baldwin College. Hollins College's players Miller and Demassy placed second.

Brenda Blackwell, one of Longwood's singles players, also competed, but lost her first two matches.

LC Hosts Golf Tournament

The First Longwood College Girls' High School Golf Tournament was held at the Longwood College Golf Course on Saturday, May 8. Invitations were issued to high schools throughout the state.

Based upon scores submitted by the participants the field was divided into three flights: Championship, First and Second. Winners and Runners-Up of the three flights were: Championship—Rebecca Hawkins from Bristol and Pamela Swim from Annandale; First Flight—Teena Rash from Richmond and Ann Baldwin from Farmville; and Second Flight—Donna Groseclose from Farmville and Donna Averill from Blackstone.

Among the eighteen participants were the following Farmville girls: Ann Baldwin, Carol Gates, Donna Groseclose and Lou Watson.

According to the Tournament Chairman, Dr. Barbara Smith, Longwood College is looking forward to hosting this event again in the future.

Lacrosse Players

Attend Tournament

Longwood College's Lacrosse Team attended the Virginia Association Tournament at Sweet Briar College this past weekend. Four members of the team were honored for their performance.

Junior Rene' Harrison was chosen for the fourth team, and seniors Jane McCoffrey and Sherry Williams, along with Terry Gadsby, sophomore, received honorable mentions.

In college team competition, Longwood first played Lynchburg College and was defeated 8-5. Longwood then defeated the Virginia Club by a score of 7-3, but lost their next game to Roanoke College, 7-1.

Coach Anne Huffman commented that "the team played well. I was real pleased and the tournament was very worthwhile," she stated.

In a game played at Longwood last week, William and Mary defeated Longwood's first team by a score of 7-4. LC's second team came back to triumph over William and Mary 6-5 in a very exciting game.

Golf Team Takes Second; Madison Scores Highest

By ANNE SANTORE

Most people believe in staying indoors if it is raining outside, but the Longwood Golf Team will try almost anything once. Even though it was raining last Thursday, the team's opponents, Madison and Sweet Briar, arrived on time. As the teams teed off at 1:00, the sun started shining and it looked like clear weather ahead for the tournament after all. Unfortunately, after half an hour, the rain started again, and the golfers got soaked playing the remaining holes. The tournament ended after nine holes because of the weather.

Like the previous tournament, this one was played with each school competing against the other schools in match play. The golfer in each match, who had won the most holes, received one point for the school. The final score read: Madison 6 1/2 points, Longwood 5 1/2 points, and Sweet Briar zero points. For Longwood's points, Cartie Keene defeated her opponent from Madison, Becky Bailey tied her opponent, Louise Moss and Ann Santore both lost their matches to Madison. All four golfers defeated their opponents from Sweet Briar. The other team members, Lisa Dixon, Peggy Lynch, and Debbie Brooks, played nine holes for practice and experience.

The golf team would like to express their thanks to Dr. O'Neil, Dr. Bowman, and Miss Oliver for their help during the tournament on Thursday and on Friday when the high school golfers arrived, since Dr. Smith was called out of town at this time.

Then on Saturday, Longwood hosted the First State Interscholastic Golf Tournament. A total of 16 high school golfers participated in the tournament. Rebecca Hawkins won the tournament with an 85. Second place went to Pam Swin who scored an 88. The tournament was a tremendous success, and the team thanks Dr. Smith for the time she spent organizing the tournament and for taking an interest to promote high school golf.

This was the last home tournament of the season, but for those who have never seen a golf match, there is still time. On May 15, Longwood will host the First Virginia Intercollegiate State Golf Tournament. Golfers from all over the state will compete for the trophies. This tournament promises to provide spectators with excellent golf.

INTRAMURAL BADMINTON:

This year's intramural badminton saw 46 participating; 22 of those 46 were freshmen. Girls paired up to play doubles within their class. Class winners were: Freshmen—Dana Hutcherson and Lucy Sale; Sophomores—Louise Moss and Mary L. Myers; Juniors—Joan Lawter and Suzanne Morgan; Seniors—Helen Beamer and Nadra Distal.

Students at the Campus School enjoy their recess period with equipment provided for their use.

Orchesis Concert A Success Variety Adds Extra Spark

Orchesis, under the direction of Dr. Betty Bowman, presented a dance concert recently in Jarman Auditorium which has been termed "the best dance concert in years!"

The theme of the concert was "Dance Has Many Faces" and to many people this is what added the extra spark to the performance. "There was such a variety of dances and forms this year," commented one enthusiastic viewer. "I never enjoyed classical dance too much, but I thoroughly enjoyed this concert," stated another observer.

The favorite number of the performance was "Tubby the Tuba," performed by the Junior Physical Education majors. A children's record, featuring a story of a tuba and his orchesis friends, was cleverly depicted through dance formations. This group has already received requests to perform their number for a nursery school group.

Other favorites were the independent studies done by Suzanne Morgan and Pam Patterson. Suzanne's dance "The Ritual Figure" was very interesting in that she danced with sticks taped to all four appendages. She showed skill in her performance, and much imagination in her choreographic work.

Pam's dance, "The Struggle," was performed by five dancers. The theme was cleverly shown through Carolyn Latham's dramatic performance to break away from "the group," made up of Debbie Morris, Debbie Hinshaw, Beth Hall, and Pam Patterson.

"The Folk Dance" presented by the Freshmen Physical Education majors, gained much applause. These girls showed excellently timed movements and much endurance as they performed all phases of the Irish Lilt.

The entire group of dancers is to be commended for their superb performance and hard work.

Judicial Review Committee Meets With Board To Discuss Proposals

Last night judicial board met with the judicial review committee to discuss eighteen proposals for revising Longwood's judicial procedure. Also discussed was the possibility of an open forum in which the proposals would be presented to the entire student body with comments and opinions from both judicial board and the committee.

The review committee, headed by Cy Young, has approximately fifteen members. Shortly after the last open forum for judicial board was held, they drew up the eighteen proposals which will cover both social and honor code offenses. A few weeks ago Cy and Joan Putney, judicial board chairman, agreed to meet "in the next couple of weeks" to discuss the proposals. No definite date for this meeting was set by either girl until last Sunday night when a ROTUNDA reporter asked the date. A call was placed then, and last night's date was set.

Two weeks ago Cy met with Joan and Verona Leake to give them a copy of the proposals and discuss them briefly. According to Cy, both Verona and Joan seemed receptive to most of the committee's proposals. Afterwards, Cy gave Joan a copy of them asking her to give copies to all judicial board members. Joan typed the proposals soon after receiving them, but they were not run off and given to the board members until last Monday.

In reference to the idea of an open forum, Cy contends that it is a must in order that the students be given the opportunity to hear and evaluate the pros and cons of all of the proposals before they come up for student vote. She adds that the proposals will not be voted on as a block, but individually. Therefore the forum will have to present individual discussions of each proposal.

Even after an open forum, the proposals must be passed by the judicial, residence and legislative boards before they can become effective. Or they must be approved by one-fourth of the student body through petitions and then voted on and passed by two-thirds of the voting students.

Since next week begins the seven day period, Frankie Brown, chairman of the legislative board, has commented that her board will have to vote on whether or not to meet during that time to discuss the committee's proposals. Frankie added that even if her board did meet, the proposals would have to be given careful consideration, and they could not simply be rushed through. She further explained that her board could put this under legislative business to be taken care of the beginning of next year.

When told of Frankie's reactions to these last minute efforts, Cy commented that in a recent conference with Dr. Blackwell, the review committee had been cautioned against trying to run the proposals through too quickly without adequate time for careful thought and consideration by the committee, the boards, and the student body.

"College Profiles" To Aid In Job Placement For Graduates

By SHEILAH MARTIN

Unemployment has been a threat to the uneducated, unskilled, or semi-skilled worker for a long time, but recently it has become a threat to members of virtually every socio-economic class. "Forty-two per cent of the seniors at Longwood have either secured jobs or have been accepted for graduate school." This is somewhat misleading, as it not only includes those seniors scheduled to graduate in June but also those who graduated in August, November, and January. Even though this is a relatively high percentage in comparison with other colleges in Virginia, many students find it disquieting.

To alleviate this problem the Virginia Employment Commission has devised the "College Profiles" which is "a statewide effort aimed at obtaining the widest possible exposure to prospective employers for graduates." Any interested senior who has not yet found a position needs only to obtain an application form from Mrs. Frances D. Brooks, Director of Placement, in the Placement Office in Ruffner, and her name, degree earned, area of specialization, type of work preferred, and address will be entered into the "Profiles."

"Each edition is mailed to chief executive officers and personnel directors and is used by our representatives in personal contacts with employers," wrote Assistant Commissioner Albert L. Moore in his recent correspondence with Mrs. Brooks.

Mrs. Brooks encourages all those seniors who have not secured jobs, whether they are in the teaching program or not, to take advantage of this opportunity. "The State of Virginia is making every effort to assist college graduates to secure positions," she said.

Federal Funds To Black Colleges Not Even With Whites

Black public colleges in several Southern states are finding it almost impossible to expand or to integrate their schools as federal funds are poured into competing predominantly white institutions.

Although a federal judge ordered Southern educators three years ago to "dismantle the dual system of higher education," an official in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare says "present federal policy is helping perpetuate the dual system."

The "dual system" of Universities for whites and State Colleges for blacks has been integrated somewhat in past years, but the dual nature of funding and building programs has gotten worse.

An Associate Press study conducted recently, for instance, found that newer, mostly white schools in such cities as Nashville, Tenn., and Montgomery and Huntsville, Ala., are growing larger in direct competition with long-established publicly-supported black schools in the same cities. The study found that of $72.3 million of federal land grant funds given to Alabama, Louisiana, Florida, and Tennessee last year, $71.8 million went to four predominantly white schools and less than a half million to an equal number of black institutions.

The white schools have a 6-to-1 enrollment lead, but in federal land grant funds it was more than 140-to-1.

Board Notes

Legislative Board

1. The administration approved Legislative Board's recommendation to change Section I.A. #1 of the revised alcohol rules to permit alcohol to be stored in the kitchens on the halls.
2. It was suggested that this be done on a trial basis so that if stealing in the kitchens on the halls becomes a problem as a result of this rule, the rule can be changed.
3. The Student Union will begin renting refrigerators to students during the Summer School session.
4. The Board voted to accept Cookie Howell as chairman of the Publications Board.

New Science

Chapter Formed

A chapter of Sigma Xi, the national Scientific Society for pure and applied scientific research, was established between Longwood and Hampden-Sydney Colleges on Wednesday, April 28.

Sigma Xi was founded in 1886 at Cornell University "to do for science what Phi Beta Kappa was doing for the liberal arts," according to the AMERICAN SCIENTIST, the magazine of the organization. It is primarily involved with pure and applied Scientific Research in all fields of the Sciences, and it strives to encourage "individual investigation." Election to membership is based on "noteworthy achievement on research premise." The organization has over 110,000 members in colleges and universities throughout the United States.

There were 16 members of the Longwood and Hampden-Sydney science faculty present in addition to the presidents of both colleges, Dr. Willett and Dr. Reveley.

The installation and banquet were held in the William Henry Harrison Room, of Winston Hall, at Hampden-Sydney. The ceremony was conducted by Dr. Raymond J. Seegar, director of the committee of national lecture-ship of Sigma Xi.

Dr. Seegar gave a lecture following the banquet entitled "The Humanism of Science."

Mr. Hesselink practices for his next three appearances during the month of May.

Mr. Hesselink Gives Four Organ Recitals This Month

Mr. Paul S. Hesselink, Assistant Professor of Music, will make four recital appearances during the month of May.

Mr. Hesselink presented an organ recital at Bruton Parish Church in Williamsburg, on May 4.

The second appearance will consist of two short recitals to be given May 13 and 14 in Dinnent Memorial Chapel at Hope College, Holland, Michigan. Mr. Hesselink's performances at Hope College, his undergraduate alma mater, will be played on a new $40,000 organ built in the Netherlands and given to the college by an anonymous donor. Mr.

Hesselink is one of eight alumni asked to return to assist in the inauguration of the new instrument.

A public Faculty Recital will be presented by Mr. Hesselink in the Recital Hall of Wygal Music Building on Sunday, May 23, at 8 p.m.

The fourth recital performance will be given June 1 at St. Andrew United Presbyterian Church in Boulder, Colorado. This recital will be given in partial fulfillment of the requirements for the degree, Doctor of Musical Arts, for which Mr. Hesselink is a candidate at the University of Colorado.

Colleges In The News

Students Protest

BRIDGEWATER—Bridgewater College has been the site of student protests and demonstrations over social regulations since April 20. The protests began when five students were suspended for violating college drinking rules, but grew to include dormitory regulations and other grievances. The students at Bridgewater feel that the administrators have not been responsive to the needs of the students to make choices on their own. Several meetings between members of the administration and the student body were held, but failed to yield solutions. A questionnaire to poll student opinion on various issues was prepared and submitted to the students. A special committee composed of students and faculty has been set up to review the poll and student suggestions in order to make recommendations to the Board of Trustees.

Investigation Committee

WILLIAMSBURG—President Davis Y. Paschall of the College of William and Mary has invited members of the faculty, student body and administration to become members of a special committee being formed to review the Flat Hat, the school newspaper. The object of this committee is to study the paper and make recommendations on the status it should have. Since the recent controversy over the use of "obscenities," two alternatives have arisen, either there should be administrative supervision of the publications by the college or the Flat Hat should have independent status.

Administrator Challenged

CHARLOTTESVILLE—The Student Council at the University of Virginia has approved a statement asking President Edgar F. Shannon to reevaluate the Office of Student Affairs and the performance of D. Alan Williams as Vice-President of that department, instead of calling for Williams' resignation. The Student Council feels that Mr. Williams has been hostile to student ideas, has not acted in good faith in his relations with the students and has become a major obstacle in improving Council-Administration relations. Besides this resolution, the Council also decided that further correspondence with the Administration would be sent directly to President Shannon's office.

Constitutional Upheaval

RICHMOND—The House of Representatives at Virginia Commonwealth University has taken steps in reviewing a new constitution for the Student Government Association which would abolish the Senate. Although the approval of the Senate would normally be required for a constitutional change, under the provisions of the present constitution, the House has found a method to bypass Senate approval and does not plan to seek Senate consideration of the matter. The proposals have been made through the rules committee, which has the responsibility for revising the constitution and is responsible only to the House. The new constitution calls for a unicameral legislature; a president chosen by the students, with only veto powers; no vice-president; and a secretary-treasurer appointed by the legislature.

Faculty Schedule Follies For Next Fall Because Of Apathy

By VALERIE BLANKS

The Faculty Follies, a presentation of the Longwood faculty, has been postponed until next fall because of too little participation. This year's presentation was planned for May 7.

Mr. Earl Rubley, of the Social Science Department and a co-producer of Faculty Follies, said that about four professors dropped out because of other necessary activities.

"Fourteen wasn't a large representation from the faculty to begin with, and with only 10 we decided we couldn't put it on.

"May is a bad time because everyone is so busy," said Mr.

Rubley. "Mother's Day weekend is especially bad because so many students go home. We hope to arrange a date in October, in the middle of the week, when more faculty can participate and students can attend.

"We haven't given up on the project. We're too enthused about it to give it up, in fact, we'll probably use the same idea this fall," Mr. Rubley added. He described their idea for the presentation as "different" and "unusual."

The purpose of Faculty Follies is to raise funds for Geist.

Last year they had to turn people away at the presentation. One student said, "It was a scream! I wouldn't miss it."

Sale Of Birth Control Book Approved By Administration

The Hampden-Sydney Outsiders Club has finally secured permission to sell its book, ELEPHANTS AND BUTTERFLIES . . . AND CONTRACEPTIVES with its supplement on the Longwood College campus.

The Longwood administration had previously put a ban on the book forbidding its sale. In a meeting Friday with Dean Heintz, Charles Llewellyn, a Hampden-Sydney student and member of the Outsiders Club, was told that the legal clearance had been obtained from the Attorney General's office for the distribution of the Farmville supplement to the booklet.

Problems arose concerning the legality of the supplement and the booklet because of specific abortion counseling references in them. Mr. John W. Crews of the Attorney General's office stated, however, that the books could be "lawfully distributed at Longwood College," thus giving the college administration the assurance it needed.

However, other problems appeared when it was revealed that due to a contract with the Longwood College Bookstore, copies could only be distributed through the bookstore.

In a conference with Mr. Harper, manager of the bookstore, it was learned that the bookstore would carry the books only on consignment, with the standard 25-35¢ mark-up. The Outsiders Club had purchased the books at 50¢ each and had spent considerable time and money in preparing the supplement. It is necessary for the club to sell the books at the list price of 75¢ just to break even. Although the club is not trying to make a profit on the books, it would be impossible to take a loss because the club is in debt, explained Llewellyn.

Harper said that he could not grant the club permission to sell the books on campus and noted that he was in business for profit, not public service.

Mr. Harry Lancaster, manager of the Book Nook which is across the street from Jarman Auditorium and, thus, "off campus," came to the club's rescue by agreeing to sell the books and the supplement at cost (75¢), as a public service and for the advertising. Consequently, the book is now available to Longwood students at the Book Nook.

ELEPHANTS AND BUTTERFLIES is being distributed by the Outsiders Club "not to promote promiscuity, but to increase individual social responsibility."

The book is concerned with contraception, abortion, venereal disease, pregnancy testing and related information. The supplement lists specific services available to Longwood and Hampden-Sydney students. The book and supplement are designed to help on a personal basis.

Legion Scholarship Awarded

Miss Pamela Jane Jenkins, of Buena Vista, a freshman at Longwood College, has received word from the Scholarship Committee of the American Legion that she has again this year been awarded the Legions Scholarship amounting to $500.00 for the school year, 1971-72.

Miss Jenkins, a 1970 graduate of Parry McCluer High School, received this same award last year. It is based on her "outstanding academic record and superb character." In competition with students throughout Virginia, Miss Jenkins is the only student ever to have received this award for two years.

Miss Jenkins is the daughter of Mrs. Sam Jenkins and the late Mr. Jenkins, of 2406 Birch Avenue, Buena Vista.

Judicial Planning To Split Duties With Residence Board

By STEPHANIE SIVERT

Plans are being made for a revision of the duties of both Judicial and Residence Board. In an attempt at judicial reform, a proposal has been recommended by Judicial Board and agreed upon by Residence Board that Residence Board accept the responsibility of handling all cases involving social violations except narcotics.

As it stands now, the responsibility of enforcing social regulations has been divided between Residence Board and Judicial Board. It is felt that since there are areas in which the duties of the two boards overlap, it would be simpler and more effective if all honor cases such as stealing, lying, and cheating plus the handling of narcotics were under the jurisdiction of Judicial Board, while all cases concerning social rules were under Residence Board.

It has been suggested that a new trial board be set up within Residence Board to preside over the trials. One suggested trial board would be composed of one non-voting member of Judicial Board, the officers of Residence Board, two advisors, and one member-at-large elected from the student body. In cases where suspension might be recommended, the cases would be returned to Judicial Board.

As this proposal involves a constitutional change, it will be necessary for the student body to vote on it this fall.

Students In Every Class Honored In Awards Assembly

The annual Honors Assembly was held Monday night in Jarman Auditorium. Awards and scholarships were presented by several organizations to students for their scholastic and leadership endeavors.

Scholarships were presented by various organizations to students as an honor in recognition of their scholastic achievement. Those receiving scholarships included: Alice Curry Wyne Scholarship-Arlene Greene; Dabney Lancaster Scholarship-Barbara Lee Cridlin; Elizabeth B. Jackson Scholarship-Margaret Blair; Emily Barksdale Scholarship-Lynn Giles; Fred O. Wygal Scholarship-Vicky Webster; Helen Draper Scholarship-Nancy Stout; Worthy Crafts Johnson Scholarship-Barbara Lewis; John P. Wynne Scholarship-Arlene Greene; Kappa Delta Pi Scholarship-Ellen Dunn; Mary Clay Hiner Scholarship-Suzanne Pope Carter and the Pi Omega Pi Book Scholarship-Arlene Greene.

The R. C. Simonini, Jr. Memorial Scholarship was presented by the Virginia Association of Teachers of English to Eva Kay Page. The scholarship was established in honor of the past chairman of the department and given to an English major chosen by the department. In return, the recipient agrees to do part-time secretarial work at the Association's Longwood office.

Alpha Lambda Delta and the Honors Council both presented certificates to students in recognition of their scholastic ability. Alpha Lambda Delta presented certificates to its senior members: Sharon Kay Broadfoot, Brenda Kay Hamner, Glenda Lewis, Joanne May, Cheryl Jean White, Connie Williams and Jeanne Woolfolk. Miss Woolfolk also received a book award for having the highest cumulative grade average in the group. The Honors Council presented their certificates for Spring 1970 to Charlotte Bennett, Connie Williams, Ada Amy Avery and Arlene Greene. Certificates for Fall 1970 went to Susan Barnes, Doris Jean Black, Brenda Hamner, Rosemary Ann Lowman, Jennifer Ann Brown, Karen Lynn Halderman, Margaret Ruth Pulley, Cynthia Togger, Nancy Goodman, Barbara Lewis, Lucy Gresham, and Lottie Jester Lawrence.

Approved Proposal

can't envision many."

He said that the Board expressed confidence in the student body in approving the proposal. It was impressed with the proper way in which the students went about securing the change.

Kathy Barclay, along with Casey Wilkes, Frankie Brown, Mary Tabb Johnston, and Joan Putney, was present at part of the meeting to answer any questions the Board might have. She explained to the Board members that this was a change the students wanted.

"The Board was extremely cooperative," she said.

Two students were given awards by the Board. Sophomores Dragon Chandler and Debbie Hyatt were recognized for their distinguished service to the College.

Dragon served as this year's May Day chairman. She is also an assistant in the Admission's Office.

Debbie is a former Miss Longwood. She served on the steering committee for the state legislature.

In other segments of college life, the Board looked into policies concerning visitation, narcotics, and a code of ethics for all campus publications.

Narcotics And Code Of Ethics

The Board reaffirmed its strong opposition to narcotics on campus. It also commended the office of the Dean of Students for the programs on drug education which it has sponsored.

The Board endorsed the development of a code of ethics for campus publications. It will review the code before its next meeting in August.

Finally, the Board of Visitors wished to publicly commend the student body and the student leaders for the proper manner in which they have sought changes in campus regulations.

Visitation Policy

Concerning visitation, the Board formally endorsed Senate Joint Resolution No. 24, which states "...the General Assembly hereby advises the presidents and governing boards of all state-supported institutions of higher learning that any policy which permits the visitation of students of the opposite sex in college dormitory bedrooms without proper regulation, control and supervision, and without the prior consent of the parents of any student under 21 years of age, is contrary to the public policy of the Commonwealth, inimical to the standards of morality, public decency and decorum which are indispensable for a stable, well-ordered society..."

When asked if there was any chance of Longwood extending its visitation, Dr. Willett said, "I don't envision any change any time soon as long as this policy still stands."

Any attempt by Longwood to change its visitation policy might be in violation of this code, Dr. Willett explained.

Protests Disrupt Bridgewater Campus Over Regulations

By LYNNE PIERCE

Student demonstrations and protests against the social restrictions placed on them have disrupted the campus of Bridgewater College for the last two weeks. The disruptions began when five students were suspended for violating the drinking regulations.

Bridgewater College currently has a policy of no alcohol being allowed on campus. The college has been lax in enforcing this rule and many students felt that the sudden suspensions were unfair and aimed at making examples of the students.

The protests began as mass meetings in support of the suspended students, however, as more students joined the group, other grievances were brought up. Questions were raised dealing with the social regulations on the campus, including the curfew hours and dormitory visitation privileges.

Longwood College has made policy changes recently which deal with the same demands from its students that Bridgewater College students are making of their school. Dormitory visitation hours have been established so that male visitors may go into the girl's rooms. Recently, curfew during the week was extended to 12:00.

A significant change in Longwood policy which Bridgewater College students would like to see at their school, was made when the Board of Visitors agreed to alcohol in the dorms. This new policy will go into effect in the fall.

'Hair': A Different Impression

been drafted. The commune has a cast of characters that are totally far out but very convincing. It has gay people, black people, freak people, but all free people, a circus of today's generation caught on stage by an audience.

The first act of the play is rather long. Since the play is written with few words, and very meaningful songs with chanting and dancing, the story is but a guideline to the overall impression of profound idealism and total emancipation that "Hair" gives. At the end of the first act in the last song comes the nude scene. The citizens for decency should realize that everyone has a body (a basic fact of life) and that war and discrimination are more obscene and immoral than the brief moment of human exposure on the stage. As for the "obscene" words, one should know that four lettered words in "Hair" are totally acceptable because they are used for emphasis. Despite Victorian claims of offending people, perversion and obscenity, the audience received Act I of "Hair" with an open mind and heart.

The second act of "Hair" is much shorter but just as important. In it Claude decides to submit to the Army and suddenly he is no longer a part of his friends. The reaction to his submission is chilling. His friends know his fate - Claude becomes just another casualty in a war that shouldn't exist.

"Hair" is lighted dynamite on social problems of today. Every relationship (such as gay, black-white, etc.) is accepted. Love and lovemaking are freely permitted. In effect the characters symbolically portray total individual freedom.

In the final analysis "Hair" is a very good portrayal of the fear, beliefs and idealism of young America. "Hair" should not only be seen but remembered.

By DARCY MORRISON
The touring cast of the Broadway musical production "Hair" succeeded in delighting a huge audience at the Mosque in Richmond.

The stage during the whole play is void of flats and drops. The orchestra is to stage left, practically in the wing. The stage does have as props what appears to be scaffolding. On the floor is painted slogans and graffiti.

Simplicity is sometimes the best, and so it is with the story in "Hair." The plot is centered around a young man named Claude who lives in a commune and has

Life In A Closet Theme Of Freshmen

These freshmen say they would prefer closet living to this squashed phone booth.

By PAM ANDERSON

EDITOR'S NOTE: A week in review by one ragged freshman.

On September 12, amid a rainstorm, an indication that the monsoon season had begun in Farmville, my roommates, Maria and Brenda, and I moved into our closet. Living in a closet is okay for one but for three it's unbearable. Eventually you learn when to inhale and exhale. Finding room for my trunk, four suitcases, and numerous boxes wasn't any problem but then my roommates also had two trunks, eight suitcases and various other paraphernalia. Those were just minor problems. After all, have you ever tried to find room on one electrical outlet for two hair dryers, three study lamps, a makeup mirror, three alarm clocks, and two sets of electric rollers?

On our hall there are three permanently scalded girls because someone forgot to yell flush. We have hot and cold running water, that is, if you don't flush the toilet while someone is taking a shower. Other freshmen aren't as fortunate. Debbie and her roommate share a bathroom with their suitemates. They requested to have the bathtub fixed. Instead, they got the light bulb in the bathroom replaced twice.

Debbie claims that the food here isn't so bad. Last night we had Recipe stew without the cheese biscuits. Maria said it would have been better with them. I have discovered that meat is a war cry and fruit is sufficient grounds for murder.

This week was filled with a bevy of activities. There were some 40 different teas, orientation meetings and required meetings we had to attend. Today was a light schedule — only classes, orientation meetings, and a required assembly or two.

Tonight there isn't much excitement on the hall, just the usual screaming, shouting, and yelling. Just a few minutes ago someone several doors down blew all the fuses on the hall. It seems strange to remove a plug from a light socket but she used her

Medina Acquitted

FT. McPHERSON, GA. — Capt. Ernest Medina, the officer in command of U. S. troops at My Lai, was acquitted Wednesday of all charges against him. The jury of Vietnam veteran officers deliberated for about an hour before reaching a decision. The Army still has the right of administrative punishment, such as official censure or demotion in rank, but Pentagon sources feel this is unlikely since Medina intends to resign.

Justices Resign

WASHINGTON — President Nixon was placed in the rare position of having two simultaneous Supreme Court vacancies to fill when Justices Hugo L. Black and John M. Harlan resigned within less than a week of each other. Justice Black, whose career dates from the early administration of Franklin D. Roosevelt, had been in the hospital for several weeks with a circulatory ailment. Justice Harlan, who is suffering from bone cancer, has been on the Court since 1955. Justice Black succumbed Saturday to his illness. At the moment, Rep. Richard Poff of Virginia is the front-runner for Poff's seat.

Russians Expelled

LONDON — Ninety Soviet representatives have been ordered out of Britain and another 15, who are temporarily away, have been prohibited from returning because of their espionage activities. The government has been worried about Soviet activity for years and is now taking a public stand against it. The Soviet Union will not be allowed to replace any of the expelled representatives or any expelled in the future. Other European governments are now inspecting Soviet representatives in their countries and further expulsions may occur.

Longwood students participated at Retreat.

Student Core Group Suggests Plans For Future

The Longwood Student Core Group met on September 29, 1971, at Longwood College. The group included representatives from the General Assembly, Faculty, and Student Body. The group discussed the role of the college and the future of the college. Each group reported significant opinions and points to the assembly in the afternoon session.

A summary of results which were underlined by a majority of seventeen groups followed.

There is a need for increased two-way communication in Longwood's system of academic advising. Advisors should be better informed of the college's course offerings. The actual role of the academic advisor was discussed and how far he should extend himself into counseling advisors on social and emotional problems. It was suggested that a joint committee of faculty and students be formed to study our present advising system. It was recommended that the posting of office hours by the instructor and two days off for advising be topics for consideration by this committee.

Students felt that the Honors Program should be more emphasized. Students felt a need for more information to be disseminated on advance placement policies.

The group expressed a desire for the continued study of our academic calendar, with the idea of finishing the first semester prior to the Christmas holidays.

Other topics received special attention from many representatives: the question of day student representation on various groups and means for involving these students in campus activities; expanded and continued programs on drug education; and a wish for financial and other incentive for academic excellence.

The retreat summary report stated that the participants felt a need for the college community to assume and maintain a positive attitude at Longwood College — particularly in publications.

Longwood Increases Size Of Changing Faculty By Two

By TINA MOODY

The departure of some faculty members combined with a larger number of returning upper classmen than expected has enabled Longwood to add two professors to the teaching staff this year.

Twelve faculty members have left permanently, four of which worked at the campus school, while three others are on leaves of absence to work on their doctorates. Additions to the faculty include nine new instructors, five professors returning from leaves of absence and five new teachers at

The crowded conditions of previous years still exist in some courses. For example, many of the classes in Sophomore English and Freshman math are large, but no more are. In the Dean's office, it had been hoped that this could be remedied, but state allocations of faculty have not been sufficient.

When questioned recently about the problem, Blackwell said, "One solution that is being used to keep classes smaller is to pay certain professors to take overloads. Those who teach extra classes do so on a voluntary basis and are paid with money set aside in the budget each year for this purpose." Part of this money will come from a $15,000 grant from the Longwood College Foundation, which was given to supplement state funds.

The carrying of overloads may be detrimental to some departments. One instructor stated he was disappointed personally because his department would have to cancel some of its scheduled projects. He felt it was a step back for the department and would be a detriment to the students.

In the English Department, there was a resignation which they were not permitted to replace. As a result, approximately 140 freshmen with undecided majors are not allowed to take Freshman Composition until the spring semester. This is the third year that such a division has had to be made among those taking the class.

In addition to the faculty, there are several members of the administration who have volunteered to teach. Although they are not paid, their hours total the equivalence of three full-time professors.

Annual Becomes Comedy Of Errors

The arrival of the 1970-71 Virginian has been delayed until November due to problems with postal delivery. The problems began last spring when the informal pictures of the seniors were lost in the mail. These pictures were eventually recovered, only to have several pages of Freshman pictures disappear. These losses were discovered soon enough that the pages could be redone; however, since that time more pages have disappeared in the mail which are impossible to replace. The publisher cannot complete the book until the pages are recovered and attempts are being made to find the material so that the delay will be as short as possible.

On our hall there are three permanently scalded girls because someone forgot to yell flush. We have hot and cold running water, that is, if you don't flush the toilet while someone is taking a shower. Other freshmen aren't as fortunate. Debbie and her roommate share a bathroom with their suitmates. They requested to have the bathtub fixed. Instead, they got the light bulb in the bathroom replaced twice.

Debbie claims that the food here isn't so bad. Last night we had Recipe stew without the chew biscuits. Maria said it would have been better with them. I have discovered that meat is a war cry and fruit is sufficient grounds for murder.

This week was filled with a bevy of activities. There were some 40 different teas, orientation meetings and required meetings we had to attend. Today was a light schedule—only classes, orientation meetings, and a required assembly or two.

Tonight there isn't much excitement on the hall, just the usual screaming, shouting, and yelling. Just a few minutes ago someone several doors down blew all the fuses on the hall. It seems she wanted to remove a plug from a light socket but she used her tweezers.

And so the blue and white spirit lives on at Longwood!

News Briefs

Medina Acquitted

FT. McPHERSON, GA.—Capt. Ernest Medina, the officer in command of U. S. troops at My Lai, was acquitted Wednesday of all charges against him. The jury of Vietnam veteran officers deliberated for about an hour before reaching a decision. The Army still has the right of administrative punishment, such as official censure or demotion in rank, but Pentagon sources feel this is unlikely since Medina intends to resign.

Justices Resign

WASHINGTON — President Nixon was placed in the rare position of having two simultaneous Supreme Court vacancies to fill when Justices Hugo L. Black and John M. Harlan resigned within less than a week of each other. Justice Black, whose career dates from the early administration of Franklin D. Roosevelt, had been in the hospital for several weeks with a circulatory ailment. Justice Harlan, who is suffering from bone cancer, has been on the Court since 1955. Justice Black succumbed Saturday to his illness. At the moment, Rep. Richard Poff of Virginia is the front-runner for Poff's seat.

Russians Expelled

LONDON—Ninety Soviet representatives have been ordered out of Britain and another 15, who are temporarily away, have been prohibited from returning because of their espionage activities. The government has been worried about Soviet activity for years and is now taking a public stand against it. The Soviet Union will not be allowed to replace any of the expelled representatives or any expelled in the future. Other European governments are now inspecting Soviet representatives in their countries and further expulsions may occur.

Longwood's future discussed at Retreat.

Student Government Retreat Suggests Plans For Future

By NANCY FOLKES

The Longwood College Student Government Retreat was held September 10, 1971, at Longwood Estate. The attendance included members of the General Assembly, Administration, Faculty, and students. The participants were divided into representative groups and discussed sundry topics of concern to the college community. Each group reported significant opinions and points to the assembly in the afternoon session.

A summary of results which were underlined by a majority of seventeen groups followed.

There is a need for increased two-way communication in Longwood's system of academic advising. Advisors should be better informed of the college's course offerings. The actual role of the academic advisor was discussed and how far he should extend himself into counseling advisors on social and emotional problems. It was suggested that a joint committee of faculty and students be formed to study our present advising system. It was recommended that the posting of office hours by the instructor and two days off for advising be topics for consideration by this committee.

Students felt that the Honors Program should be more emphasized. Students felt a need for more information to be disseminated on advance placement policies.

The group expressed a desire for the continued study of our academic calendar, with the idea of finishing the first semester prior to the Christmas holidays.

Other topics received special attention from many representatives: the question of day student representation on various groups and means for involving these students in campus activities; expanded and continued programs on drug education; and a wish for financial and other incentive for academic excellence.

The retreat summary report stated that the participants felt a need for the college community to assume and maintain a positive attitude at Longwood College—particularly in publications.

The many topics discussed

Longwood Increases Size Of Changing Faculty By Two

By TINA MOODY

The departure of some faculty members combined with a larger number of returning upper classmen than expected has enabled Longwood to add two professors to the teaching staff this year.

Twelve faculty members have left permanently, four of which worked at the campus school, while three others are on leaves of absence to work on their doctorates. Additions to the faculty include nine new instructors, five professors returning from leaves of absence and five new teachers at the campus school.

The crowded conditions of previous years still exist in some courses. For example, many of the classes in Sophomore English and Freshman math are large, but no more so than before. In the Dean's office it had been hoped that this could be remedied, but state allowances for the faculty have not been sufficient.

When questioned recently about the problem, Blackwell said, "One solution that is being used to keep classes smaller is to pay certain professors to take overloads. Those who teach extra classes do so on a voluntary basis and are paid with money set aside in the budget each year for this purpose." Part of this money will come from a $15,000 grant from the Longwood College Foundation, which was given to supplement state funds.

The carrying of overloads may be detrimental to some departments. One instructor stated he was disappointed personally because his department would have to cancel some of its scheduled projects. He felt it was a step back for the department and would be a detriment to the students.

In the English Department, there was a resignation which they were not permitted to replace. As a result, approximately 140 freshmen with undecided majors are not allowed to take Freshman Composition until the spring semester. This is the third year that such a division has had to be made among those taking the class.

In addition to the faculty, there are several members of the administration who have volunteered to teach. Although they are not paid, their hours total the equivalence of three full-time professors.

Annual Becomes Comedy Of Errors

The arrival of the 1970-71 Virginian has been delayed until November due to problems with postal delivery. The problems began last spring when the informal pictures of the seniors were lost in the mail. These pictures were eventually recovered, only to have several pages of Freshman pictures disappear. These losses were discovered soon enough that the pages could be redone; however, since that time more pages have disappeared in the mail which are impossible to replace. The publisher cannot complete the book until the pages are recovered and at-temps are being made to find the material so that the delay will be as short as possible.

A Welcoming Policy Statement

Welcome Freshmen.

You have, I am sure, been exposed to the fact that Longwood College does have a school newspaper, The Rotunda. For, to pass your orientation test you undoubtedly read and dutifully memorized the blurb in the Handbook which stated that the purpose of the paper is "to keep students, faculty, administration, and alumnae informed of current campus affairs . . ." It is highly unlikely, however, that with all the other memorization work required you gave any more thought to this one segment of the three college publications.

It is my intention then to briefly give the 1971-72 Rotunda policies. This list will hopefully serve a double purpose. Not only will it inform the new members on campus, but it will also refresh the minds of both the upperclassmen and members of the faculty.

1. The Rotunda is circulated each Wednesday of the school year, except for the weeks before each of the major holidays.

2. All newspaper stories are to be turned in by 12:00 a.m. on Saturday, typed, double spaced, and placed in The Rotunda office. Stories which are turned in late will not be used.

3. Classified advertising is available to Longwood students at 3 cents a word.

4. The Rotunda meetings are held each Tuesday after dinner in Grainger 106 for all interested students.

5. Opinions expressed are those of the weekly editorial board and its columnists and do not necessarily reflect the views of the student body or the administration.

6. It is the editor's responsibility to see that everything is done correctly. If there is any problem she may be reached at either 2-6497 or 2-6326.

It is necessary to add that in order to publish a college paper cooperation is needed on levels other than that of the editor and her staff. We are here to serve you, so feel free to call on us.

By BETH DALE

Longwood has always prided itself in its ability to reach the students and respond to their ideas and needs. One example of this is the Student-Faculty Retreat which I attended prior to the opening of school. Being less integrated in the Longwood tradition of spirit I was surprised to be invited to attend this seminar of thoughts and ideas concerning the college. Much to my disappointment, I found this to be more of a social function than an utilitarian event. The classroom cut policy, the hiring of a gynecologist on campus, changes in judiciary system, student choice of advisors, new courses in the curriculum were a few of the topics which were given capsule discussion which seemed more like empty words and rhetoric than meaningful topics and problems.

It was an excellent opportunity for the new faculty and administration to meet a cross-section of students from the campus and give them an idea of student interest on campus.

Although a good portion of the day was spent in private discussion groups the attendance of state legislators made me feel the retreat was little more than a political playground.

Realizing that at the end of the retreat that the Longwood ladies had been passified and made to feel that their ideas were taken into consideration, I felt that I was being curiously dismissed with an unspoken "I'll call you, don't call us."

Letters to the Editor

Chi

Miss Lisa Worthington
Editor-in-Chief
THE ROTUNDA

Dear Lisa,

Chi feels that two reminders concerning the student body should be made soon:

First of all, Chi urges the students of Longwood to take the utmost advantage of the academic curriculum offered here. Although many students are involved in extra- and co-curricular activities, their academic responsibilities should receive the first emphasis.

Regardless of her class status or major, each student should maintain a list of both her requirements and her possible electives well in advance of the next registration. In this way she can fully utilize the services offered to her both in academic counseling and later, in her classes.

The second item is a reminder that the deadline for voter registration in Virginia is October 2. All students over 18 should accept their civic responsibilities and vote in November's elections. Lists with registration information for Virginia are available in each dormitory office. Chi hopes that all Longwood students will take advantage of the new voting requirement and register soon.

Lankford Student Union

Dear Editor,

After talking to some of my friends I found out the refrigerators that students were purchasing are more trouble than they are worth.

First and foremost in the list of gripes is that the owner must purchase a three pronged electrical outlet in order to use the refrigerator.

Running close in second is the fact that ice cream and other frozen perishables are not known to remain frozen in the minute, almost nonexistent freezer compartment.

Although these delightful appliances were on display, they should have been more fully represented for example by saying that instant delivery meant that the student had to tote this thing from Curry Dorm to her residence on campus.

Next time the school offers such luxuries, it would be appreciated that a full representation be given.

Thank you,
Ann Morriss

Annual Delay

Dear Editor,

November has been announced as the month when the '70-71 annuals will arrive. November? Last year, when I purchased mine, September was the arrival month. September evolved into October and so on.

I don't want to see the blame for this put on any one person. I only wonder why it has happened and hope that the 71-72 annual staff can avoid this ridiculous situation.

Green Spirit

Dear Baby Greens,

We'd like to commend you on your wonderful enthusiasm. It's great to see that we have such fabulous little sisters.

But don't you think you went a little too far. I mean fire hydrants are required by law to be Red!

Perhaps you can remedy the situation and remember for the future, too much of a good thing can be hazardous.

Again I want to say how great we think you are. It's gratifying to see how quickly you've found the Green and White spirit. I hope it continues to carry you onward through the years. Remember - It's a GREEN'EM year.

Green and White Love

Little Respect

Dear Editor,

I'd like to send this letter to the students through you. It concerns our Patron Saint, Joan of Arc.

Now maybe Joan doesn't mean much to some of you but to some of us she is a symbol of all that's good in life and perhaps she's even the embodiment of our own personal goals.

At any rate, she is our Patron Saint and even though she may not mean much to you, please respect the meaning she has for others.

A small thing, such as placing a cup over the head of Joan on her horse shows that there is a lack of respect for all she stands for.

I only ask that all the students and friends of Longwood respect her traditions and her symbols.

Thank you,
Phyllis Dexter

Unkept Hives

Dear Editor,

Those students who were here last year, particularly those who lived in Wheeler or Cox or who went to the library often, may have noticed the last few weeks of school that there were unusual swarms of bees in those areas. Upon investigation, it was discovered that the bee colony in The Natural Science Museum on second floor Stevens had filled its box and had no further room to expand its hive. One student who reported this to a science instructor was told that the hive would be cleaned during the summer.

In the last two weeks, when I have passed the science building, I have noticed an unusually large number of bees clinging to the window and outside entrance to the hive. Out of curiosity, I went to the museum to investigate the cause. What I found was disgusting!

The bees are jammed against each other so tightly that it is nearly impossible for them to move. The comb has been built to such proportions that it is a wonder the glass sides of the container haven't cracked. In their struggle to survive, the bees have turned on each other and are killing themselves off.

The thing represents a bizarre kind of 1984, with bees waiting for others to leave the hive so that they may enter. It's ironic that this should be the responsibility of a department that extols the merits of population control and ecology. It's too bad they don't practice what they preach.

'Birth of a Nation' in Bedford Oct. 4

By MARGARET BLAIR
Cinema 71/72, Longwood's new film series, will present a 1915 silent film classic, "The Birth of a Nation," on Monday evening, October 4, in Bedford Auditorium at 7:30 p.m.

"The Birth of a Nation," one of this country's first feature films, was independently financed, produced, and distributed by David Wark Griffith. It cost about $100,000 to make at the time, but has reaped millions in return through subsequent showings.

One of the factors of the film's success was the use of all the technical devices that Griffith and other men had developed. "The Birth of a Nation" convinced the skeptical educated classes that the motion picture was not, as was thought, a "mechanical copy" of the stage, but a new and unexplored medium.

Even though Griffith's silent film was advanced in its techniques, it projected a stereotype of the American Negro's role in society that has prevailed on the screen for fifty years. "Birth of a Nation" is the drama of the sequel to the American Civil War inspired by the novel The Clansman by Thomas Dixon. The film depicts the tragedy of the Civil War through "candidly pro-Southern eyes," and it includes a sympathetic account of the rise of the Ku Klux Klan. It has stirred controversy everywhere it has been shown, but there is nodenying the sweep and grandeur of the three hour and twenty minute film that was the longest movie ever made at that time.

The combination of this film's technical and financial success established the motion picture as an art form unique in its universal appeal. The controversy over "The Birth of a Nation's" emotion-charged depiction of the Southern Negro also showed movies as being capable of creating sympathy between the actor and audience.

"The Birth of a Nation" was originally accompanied by a full symphony, and tickets to the film in 1915 were sold for a then unheard of price of two dollars. Cinema 71/72 has no admission charge but requests a modest donation of fifty cents at the door.

JESSIKA JENKS

Jenks Wins Title

Miss Jessika Jenks, a sophomore here at Longwood College, was crowned Miss Virginia State Fair in Richmond Sunday.

Jessika, a native of Fredricksburg and of undecided major, presided over the fair Tuesday, Governor's Day. Her duties for that day included being an honored guest at a luncheon given for Gov. Holton at the John Marshall Hotel. She also escorted the Governor around the fairgrounds.

She will round out her duties by participating in the opening ceremonies of next year's fair and the crowning of the new queen.

'The Tempest' Set For October

$10 PRIZE

In the event that no suitable design is submitted, the prize will be forfeited. Submit entries before Oct. 5 to: Brenda Bough 165, Box 150, Bedford, Virginia - 552 900

By JOYCE SAUNDERS
The Department of Speech and Dramatic Art, in conjunction with the Longwood Players and the Hampden-Sydney Jongleurs, will open their 1971-72 season with THE TEMPEST by William Shakespeare, on October 21-23 in Jarman Auditorium. This classic play will be directed by Dr. Patton Lockwood with choreography by Ann Bowman.

THE TEMPEST follows Shakespeare's successful formula — unrequited young love, unrelenting parents, secret plots, and the supernatural.

Prospero, Duke of Milan, has been usurped by his wicked brother, Antonio. While marooned on an enchanted island with his daughter, Miranda, Prospero becomes a magician, attended by the spirits Ariel and Caliban, deformed half-human creatures. With his powers, Prospero manages to have cast upon his island from an endangered ship, Antonio, the King of Naples, Alonso, and Alonso's brother, Sebastian. Alonso's son, Prince Ferdinand, arrives safely ashore, but separated from the party, he sees Miranda, and they fall in love.

On their part of the island Antonio and Sebastian conspire to kill Alonso. Their servants with Caliban similarly plot to murder and replace Prospero. Prospero's magic finally thwarts all schemes and the problems of politics and love are solved.

Although traditionally performed with serious interpretation, THE TEMPEST is intended to be a comedy, and will be performed with rousing comic devices: bumbling villains, music, and clever spirits.

Mr. J. Carter Brown, director of the National Gallery of Art, discusses the "Civilisation Series" with Sir Kenneth Clark.

'Civilisation' Series By Kenneth Clark Starts Sunday In Bedford Auditorium

"Civilisation," the color film series on the cultural life of Western man, written and narrated by art historian Kenneth Clark, will be shown at Longwood beginning Oct. 3 at 4:30 p.m., and 7:30 p.m. in Bedford Auditorium.

Longwood will receive the thirteen fifty-minute "Civilisation" films on loan free of charge from the National Gallery of Art in Washington, under a new program offered through the Gallery's Extension Services.

Under the program, which began this fall, the films are being distributed to colleges and universities with fewer than 2,000 undergraduates. Approximately 400 institutions can participate in the program each year, with an estimated 3,000,000 annual audience.

Each college will receive the films in sequence, one a week. There will be two showings of each, both without charge — one for the college and one for the local community.

The film to be seen this week, the first in the series, is "The Skin of Our Teeth," which concerns the Vikings, the Dark Ages, and Charlemagne.

"The distribution program has been designed," said J. Carter Brown, Director of the National Gallery, "to make it possible for audiences all over the country to see the "Civilisation" films on the large screen and with the fidelity of their original film form. In addition, it will offer institutions a means of strengthening relations with their local communities by sponsoring the second showing for the general public. College presidents, rather than art, history or humanities departments, have been asked to sponsor the program, in order to emphasize its availability to the whole student body.

Since its American premiere at the National Gallery in November, 1969, the entire "Civilisation" series has been shown nearly a hundred times and drawn more than 275,000 viewers at the Gallery. It is currently being seen throughout the United States on National Educational Television, supported by a grant from Xerox Corporation.

In the series, Kenneth Clark traces, from an avowedly personal point of view, the story of Western civilization through the visual arts, music, literature, and political history, from the fall of the Roman Empire through the 20th century. The films were originally produced for the British Broadcasting Corporation, which sent Lord Clark, two producers, and a three-man camera crew on a two-year mission through eleven countries to film the series. In Lord Clark's words, the aim was "to define civilisation in terms of creative power and the enlargement of human faculties."

Blasch Recital

Auspicious Start

For Music Department

By CAROL ROONEY

The memory march alone was astounding in the piano recital given by a member of Longwood's music faculty, Mr. Robert E. Blasch, September 19.

Mr. Blasch proved his musical competence by successfully capturing the transitional moods between the four period composition which ranged from the Baroque to the Romantic. This feeling of flexibility made the entire recital divergent but somehow unified.

For example, Dr. Blasch handled Bach's "Caprices on the Departure of His Beloved Brother" with extreme sensitivity and feeling. He was versatile enough, however, to be both imaginative and detached in "Suite for Piano" by Arnold Schoenberg.

His final composition, Schubert's "Sonata in D Major," a challenge for any pianist, was performed with a skill that only a practiced and serious artist could exhibit.

Miss Flynn And Students Tour European Centers Of Art

By DARCY MORRISON

This summer sixteen girls from Longwood College and Barat College in Lake Forest, Ill., embarked on an European art history tour for four weeks. Teaching these students were Miss Flynn of Longwood College and Sister Barsch of Barat College.

The trip included the famous art cities of Paris, Florence, Rome, Madrid, Venice, Milan, Chartres, and Vienna. Even though the art history aspect was stressed in this tour, the girls enjoyed learning of European life styles.

These summer study tours are made available to all interested students each summer. Janie Mosby, one of the touring students, explained that the trip was an excellent learning experience. By actually seeing great artifacts and architecture a new dimension in the learning of art history is added.

Longwood: Then And Now

By ETHEL REITER

Witnessing the beginning of another academic session prompts one to reflect on previous years at Longwood College and consider the changes that have occurred in the past three years. Does the Class of 1975 enjoy a more progressive, liberal, and advanced environment than did the Class of 1972?

In order to measure such academic, social, cultural, and philosophical progress, it may be of some use to reconstruct the prevailing conditions of just three years ago.

It appeared to be the worst times for college women. Women's Liberation was not then an active and meaningful movement so the female perspective was scarcely limited.

Academics In The Past

Academically there still existed the idea that the female mind was incapable of absorbing large amounts of knowledge. Therefore, she had to be taught quite delicately (spoon fed) and was forced to endure limited course offerings, rigid attendance policies, and conventional teaching methods.

The professional view was equally narrow. There seemed to be only one career for which women could be prepared. Therefore, Longwood existed chiefly as a factory for elementary and secondary school teachers.

Social Restrictions

The social restrictions were the most severe. Longwood girls were ruled under an iron hand so that they might be protected from the social and moral evils of the outside world. It was not believed that young girls were moral, responsible adults capable of organizing their personal lives without institutional ruling.

First, all students were required to have written permission from their parents or guardians to take any trip. If a student was permitted to leave campus, she must "sign out" giving the time she left and her destination. To leave overnight one had to fill out a destination slip giving all the details which had to be approved by the head resident. One was also subjected to curfews, 11 p.m. on week nights and 12:30 on the weekends.

In 1968 the dress code was extremely severe. Slacks were virtually nonexistent on campus. Dresses or skirts had to be worn to meals, classes, on front campus, downtown, and to all functions in Jarman Auditorium.

Dormitory Regulations

Dormitory life was quite different in past years. In freshmen dorms all lights had to be out by 12:30 a.m. At that time everyone had to retire in order to be present for bed check. After bed check no one could take a shower or make telephone calls.

Beds had to be made on week days by 10 a.m. and on weekends by noon. Rooms were checked by head residents once a week.

There were no visitation hours or alcohol in the dorms. All violations resulted in a call down which was similar to a demerit. Three call downs in one semester put a student on plain campus for one week. Four call downs in one semester resulted in two weeks' confinement to campus. Call down charts were placed in each hall with the student's name, the date, and the reason for the call down. The reasons ranged from taking a shower after bed check to being noisy to having one's iron out.

Philosophy in the '60's

Longwood was a tremendously traditional institution. It was so intensely involved in its past that it somehow escaped the revolution that began to shake other campuses at the time. Elsewhere around the world, irresponsible, immature hippies and other New Left types began making outrageous demands for academic freedom. Longwood, however, maintained its stability. The girls ignored the irrelevant outside activities and continued with all things that preserved Longwood's unique spirit. There were Rotunda sings, which resemble cheerleading, song contests, Geist festival weekend, May Day, and Chi walks.

Philosophically, the College operated "in loco parentis." According to this concept the college assumes the role of the parent. Longwood, acting as parents, struggled to maintain the family atmosphere. It was considered harmful to allow a notable transition from adolescent high school life to an independent college existence. Thus one's first college experience was a week of orientation. During this time the freshmen were cared for by Colleagues, Student Assistants and Orientation leaders who entertained them with hospitable welcomes, howdy parties, and words of sisterly advice.

The Longwood of Today

In 1971 Longwood is somewhat different. Its most noted change is in size. Since 1968 two dorms, a music building, art building, campus school, and home economics building have been constructed on land once occupied by Farmville residents. The student body has increased by approximately 800 students.

As far as academics are concerned there have been some changes made. Several departments have been decreased in size or will soon be eliminated.

Social conditions have made the most progress. Today only the freshmen are required to have written parental permission to leave campus. When one signs out she no longer has to designate the destination. Head residents do not have to approve destination slips. They are never seen unless in case of an emergency. Curfews have been extended to midnight on week nights and 2 a.m. on weekends.

The dress code allows students to wear slacks and pant suits to social functions, meals, classes, and downtown.

Students living in the dorms no longer experience lights out, bed check, or call downs (however, Residence Board now distributes Warnings). Alcohol can also be consumed in the dorms in accordance with Virginia state laws. And dorms are open from 2 to 5 p.m. on Sundays for visitation.

The customs and traditions of Longwood have survived the demands for change, and the girls still enjoy a bit of the past. The philosophic attitudes have also been preserved, and the student body can still look to the administration as foster parents.

To continue elaborating upon the measure of progress is absurd for it becomes a very subjective matter. It is obvious that the Class of 1975 will exist within a more liberal atmosphere than did the classes before it. Undoubtedly, they will witness and contribute to additional change. For those who desire to see more progress perhaps the words of Calvin Coolidge will serve as a source of inspiration:

Progress depends very largely on the encouragement of variety. Whatever tends to standardize the community, to establish fixed and rigid modes of thought, tends to fossilize society. It is the ferment of ideas, the clash of disagreement, the privilege of the individual to develop his own thoughts and shape his own character, that makes progress possible.

Coach Diane Davis puts hockey team members through many exercises, drills, and practice games as they prepare for their first game against William and Mary.

Varsity Team Tryouts Draw Many 1971 Hockey Season Begins Oct. 6

Tryouts for the varsity hockey team were held on September 19 and 20. The following people were chosen to represent Longwood during the 1971 hockey season: returning seniors, Ellen Dunn, Nancy Fowlkes, and Debbie Elentrand; returning junior Diane Derrick; new juniors, Cindy Bradley, Carol Chory, Gail Gosage, and Diane Padgett; returning sophomores, Loretta Bunting, Becky Burch, Beth Cobb, Dana Hutcherson, Lucy Sale, and Paula Williams; new sophomores, Debbie Amme, Debbie Carneal, Lisa Dixon, and Joanne Tucker; freshmen, Wanda Brock, Holly Davidson, Nancy Dmoch, Margo Gray, Debbie Jarrell, Susan Marcus, Karen Smith, and Susan Wagner. Managers for the team are June Beninghove and Nancy Fentress.

Coached by Miss Diane Davis and Miss Lindy Hatch, the team had been practicing every afternoon preparing for the first game of the season. This home game against William and Mary, October 6 at 3:00 p.m., should be one of the most difficult games of the season.

Plans Two Concerts

Orchesis, Longwood's modern dance organization, has begun a new year with a new sponsor. The membership drive began last week and there was a promising turnout at the first meeting with Miss Sandra Gustafson, Orchesis' new sponsor.

Miss Gustafson already has plans for the dancers. Hopefully, there will be two concerts this year, one at Christmas and one in the spring. The spring concert should prove to be very interesting. Miss Gustafson, who is working on her doctorate, will present her own choreographed dance done for her Ph. D. degree which will include both male and female dancers.

Some members of Orchesis will be working with Dr. Betty Bowman preparing for Longwood's first play, "The Tempest." Various scenes will show dancers depicting the role of spirits.

The group of dancers will meet each week and work on technique and skill. They will be allowed to express their own feelings through dance movements.

Fencer Places Sixth In Southeast Tournament

Mary Frances Baldwin, a senior physical education major at Longwood, placed sixth in the AFLA Southeastern Sectional Women's Foil Championship. The event was held at Florida State University in Tallahassee, Fla. the end of May.

The Longwood fencer won the Virginia State AFLA Women's Foil Championship in March, at a tournament held at the college of William and Mary. This victory qualified her to represent Virginia in the Southeastern Sectionals. Accompanied by fencing coach, Miss Sally Bush, Mary Frances left Longwood in the midst of final exams to compete in this event.

Having been placed in a pool of fencers with last year's sectional champion, Sophie Trett, Mary Frances recalls being "very scared." "Last year's champ was really terrific. I had no sooner faced her on the strip, when the director called the end of the bout. She had gotten four touches on me and I had hardly made any attack on her," stated Mary Frances.

Although "Mar" was scared, she continued to fight back and after five bouts, she ended up one of the top three fencers in her pool. This qualified her for the finals competition and eight more bouts, including another stab at Sophie Trett.

When asked how the second bout with the sectional champ went, Mary Frances replied, "I was determined she wasn't going to skunk me like she had the first time. I used up every bit of energy I had left and quickly got two touches against her. Everyone seemed to wonder what had happened to me. Miss Bush was especially surprised, and so was Sophie Trett. But, after those two points, Sophie came alive again."

Mary Frances said the competition was really tough, but she learned a lot and thought fencing more a skillful competitor was good experience. When asked how the Florida heat affected her, she said, "The humidity was terrible, and with the uniform and equipment on, I thought I'd roast. I think I must have perspired all the water out of my body. By the time I reached the fifth bout in the finals, I was so tired and so weak that I began a countdown. 'Only three more bouts to go and I'll be finished.' At the end of that eighth bout, all I remember is taking off my mask, unbuttoning my jacket, and lying down on the floor, panting."

Sophie Trett of NASA retained her title for the fourth consecutive year, followed by Lisa Douboulou, Ft. Lauderdale Fencing Club, and Pam Culshaw, Miami-Dade Fencing Club.

Colleges In The News

Student Conference

STAUNTON — Mary Baldwin College will be host to a three-day conference on student activism to be held October 6-8. The conference will be devoted to determining whether the idealism of today's youth can be channeled into outlets for action which already exist or if their goals can only be achieved by working outside the system. Leading the list of speakers will be Mrs. Lenore Romney, the wife of George Romney, the secretary of the U. S. Department of Housing and Urban Development.

Funds Restored

MONROE, La. — Students from the various colleges and universities in Louisiana were able to persuade Gov. John J. McKeithen to rescind a three per cent budget cut that was made in mid-June. While students on the Political Action Committee, a representative of the Louisiana Student Association, were meeting with the governor, rallies were held on 13 campuses in the state to demonstrate their support and to illustrate for the legislature the power of the student vote. The decision restores $3.5 million to the budgets of 13 colleges and universities.

Election Holiday

CHARLOTTESVILLE — The Student Council at the University of Virginia recently approved a motion asking the university administration to declare an academic holiday on general election day, November 2. A second motion was also passed which would lead to the distribution of absentee ballots. It calls for the campus legal service to publicize absentee balloting and provide information on the subject. Both motions must now be sent to President Edgar F. Shannon or the faculty for approval.

Visitation Under Fire

BOONE, N. C. — The visitation policy which is under consideration by the administration of Appalachian State University has received opposition from the junior counselors residing in White Residence. The junior counselors stated in a letter to the student government president that, when they applied for their jobs, they did not include the extra responsibilities that visitation carries and they had no intention of assuming those duties. Since the junior counselors in all of the dorms are divided over the policy, President Fred Barden feels a program will be needed that will not require their participation.

Student Recruiters

LYNCHBURG — The admissions office at Randolph-Macon Woman's College has instituted a new policy for attracting students to the school. Thirteen students will travel around the country, for a week at a time, discussing Randolph-Macon with students, parents and alumnae at high schools and junior colleges. The college also has a student representative in Reading, England, who will visit prospective students in England and Europe.

Honor System Favored

CHARLOTTESVILLE — Preliminary findings of a poll sponsored by the University of Virginia Honor Committee show that ninety-three per cent of the poll respondents favor an honor system.

New Head Residents and Assistants pose in Rotunda.

Six New Head Residents And Assistants Join Campus Life

Among the new faces on campus this year are Mrs. Bertha Lane, Head Resident in Frazer, and Lois Obenshain, Head Resident in Main Cunningham.

Mrs. Bertha Lane comes to us from Delaware where she is a graduate from the University of Delaware, and a major in Elementary Education and Drama. Mrs. Lane enjoys Drama foremost, but she also delights in knitting and bicycle riding.

Lois Obenshain, Head Resident in Main Cunningham, is a Longwood graduate with a B.S. degree in Health and Physical Education. After teaching Junior High School for seven years, she is now working on her master's degree in Education with emphasis in supervision and guidance. She, of course, enjoys sports especially golf and tennis. Miss Obenshain is glad to see that Longwood hasn't lost its friendliness.

Longwood also has four new Assistant Head Residents to aid the students. Miss Andrea Lassiter from Chesapeake is the Assistant Head Resident in South Cunningham. She attended Radford for two years and was a secretary for four years. Miss Lassiter is now a senior here at Longwood and she is completing her major in Physical Education. Her hobbies are sports and sewing.

The Assistant Resident for Tabb and French Dormitories is Lois Wells. Miss Wells is originally from Petersburg. She is a recent graduate from Longwood with a B.S. degree in Business Education. Aside from working on her master's degree in Educational Supervision, Miss Wells enjoys reading and playing the piano.

South Ruffner's new Assistant Resident is Linda Morefield, who is majoring in physics and math here at Longwood. She is originally from Pittsylvania County, and her numerous hobbies include car racing, coin collecting, travelling, sewing, and history. Miss Morefield is impressed with the cooperation displayed by the administration and her freshmen.

This year in Frazer Dormitory, Pat Quinn, a 1970 graduate of Longwood College, joined the staff as an assistant head resident. Miss Quinn, an English and drama major, decided to return to Longwood after one year of teaching seventh grade English in Culpeper, Va., in order to work on her Master's degree in her field. After she receives her master's she plans to continue teaching English and drama in secondary school.

Dean Nuckols Has Open Mind

"It was a complete surprise to me to find out that Dean Holt, the former Assistant Dean of students had resigned," said Miss Margaret Nuckols, the new acting Assistant Dean of Students. Miss Nuckols, who holds a Bachelor of Science Degree from Longwood and an M.E.D. in counselling education from the University of Virginia, said that the resignation has not affected her position in any way. She explained that she was hired last year to replace Miss Holt, who was to go on sabbatical leave to complete her doctorate at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. In spite of the early Sept. resignation, Miss Nuckols' contract is still valid for twelve months.

When asked to describe her job, Miss Nuckols said, "You have to know everything in this job before you can do anything. As acting Assistant Dean however, she deals primarily with the housing situation at Longwood. When asked her feelings on the controversial subject of "off campus housing," Miss Nuckols said that "although she wasn't opposed to seniors living off campus, she felt that it would definitely be impractical in Farmville at this time.

Miss Nuckols went on to add that she wouldn't develop a closed mind on any subject. In order to avoid this she explained that her working philosophy in all situations is to take things slowly. She feels that if she moves too rapidly she might miss an opportunity that would be more beneficial for all involved.

In summing up her first few weeks on the job Miss Nuckols said that "it was a very rewarding and demanding job." With such a varied job, she feels that the year should be an exciting one.

CHI Undergoes Overhaul

By DEBBIE STELLATO

A new song and symbol, a strengthened image, and a wider foundation of support marks Chi's 72 years on the Longwood campus.

Chi is an organization whose purpose is to seek out and reward excellence and effort in the different aspects of college life. Its commendations are not limited to students, but extend also to faculty, administration, and organizations of this college. The name Chi comes from the Greek letter X, (pronounced Chi) meaning ten. This number represented the original membership of Chi. Recently the membership has been expanded to encompass a greater number of fields of endeavor.

The symbol of Chi has been changed from a red skull and crossbones to the blue gothic letters CHI. The new symbol projects a more positive image to match the more positive nature of the Chi of our time, in addition to stating the idea more clearly and in stronger terms.

The tune of Chi's song has been retained, but the words have changed to express Chi's increasing role as guardians of the spirit and ideas of Longwood.

The melody is of the song, "Chloe," and the new words are:

CHI SONG

Through the dark of night
The spirit of Chi walks on Bearing blue and white
The spirit of Chi walks on
Throughout the days of Longwood
Strong ties of blue
Although the years may pass by
Chi will be there too
Clad in robes of blue
The secret of Chi is kept
Hold the torch of spirit long
Keep it strong
Down the colonnade and
On the campus, too, we
Bind the sisterhood.
The spirit of Chi walks on.

Geist Taps Usherettes And Class Representatives Oct. 4

By BEV ASTON

Geist will be tapping the Usherettes, a Mittenmeister, Festmeister, and Geistmeister on Monday night, October 4, at 9:00 p.m. on Wheeler Mall in preparation for the Oktoberfest weekend.

Two usherettes from each class are chosen to honor girls from each of the classes who have shown their friendliness, spirit, and support of the college. The usherettes perform a dance during the nights of the Oktoberfest skits and also help with other duties throughout the week.

The Oktoberfest Mittenmeister is chosen from the sophomore class to preside over Midway activities. The Festmeister, a member of the junior class, is chosen to act as mistress of ceremonies throughout the weekend. Her duties are many and this position is considered the highest honor Geist gives a member of the junior class. From the senior class, a Geistmeister is chosen who symbolizes the spirit and intelligence which lie behind the Oktoberfest Weekend.

The tapping ceremony is highlighted by presentation of a film of the events of last year's Oktoberfest. Geist clowns will be on hand to do the tapping.

Stickers For Student Cars Must Be Obtained Soon

Those students who wish to have a car on campus are reminded that they must go by Dean Nuckols' office and fill out a request form, which must then be approved by the car committee. Stickers for cars cost $5 and it is necessary that they are bought as soon as possible, since Campus Police will soon begin checking cars.

If an emergency should arise or there is no other way of returning to campus after a week end, students are reminded they must call Dean Nuckols or Dean Wilson BEFORE bringing a car on campus. Temporary permission can be given to have the car until the next week end and a temporary sticker must be bought for $2.

Students with cars may park only in the black areas shown on the map, which does not include the street between Stubbs and Cox. As a safety precaution, students are also asked to refrain from parking near construction sites.

Students should refer to their handbooks if they have further questions or contact the chairman of the car committee, Louise Bailey, in 214 Stubbs.

Television System At Campus School Ready For LC Use

By JUDY THORPE

The Education Department hopes to improve on its method of preparing students to teach through its use of a newly installed television system at the campus school. The system, which connects the school with the Education Department, consists of remote control cameras that are concealed to prevent disrupting the classes. Video tapes will be made of the actual classroom activities and will be used for future study. Since these taped classes are not planned, they will represent realistic situations and problems in the classroom.

The tapes then will be studied by various departments. The education department will view the class as a whole while other departments, such as science and English, will study their specific areas and the methods of material presentation. Even though the television network is completely installed, it has not yet been used.

She will be available as a resource person to talk over such things as research, the actual writing, and publication.

Miss Sprague's discussion will initiate a series of programs which are directed toward creating a sense of professor/student interaction in the realm of the academia.

News Briefs

Nixon Meets Emperor

ANCHORAGE, ALASKA — President Nixon met Emperor Hirohito of Japan in Alaska when he stopped there for a plane refueling on the way to Europe last week. It marked the first time that a ruling Japanese emperor had set foot on foreign soil. Nixon and Hirohito talked for 25 minutes and exchanged statements of friendship; however, no official statements were made.

Ministers Confer

LONDON — The prime ministers of Britain, Northern Ireland and the Irish Republic met last week to discuss possible solutions to the Ulster crisis. It was the first time in 50 years that representatives of the three governments had met. The meetings were held in strict secrecy with no briefings given to the press between meetings. At the end of the conference, the three heads of state issued a statement which condemned violence, called for an end to the internment policy and urged a "process of political reconciliation."

Exile Ends

ROME — Josef Cardinal Mindszenty left the American embassy in Budapest, Hungary and flew to Rome, ending 15 years of self-imposed exile, last week. The cardinal was convicted of treason in 1949 and was sentenced to life imprisonment when he opposed the Communist takeover in Hungary. Mindszenty was released from prison by insurgents during the Hungarian uprising in 1956, but fled to the embassy and refused to leave the country until he was cleared. It is believed that he left Hungary through the inducement of church officials.

Synod Opens

VATICAN CITY — A dispute between Pope Paul VI and a lobby of priests and laymen seeking radical change in the Roman Catholic Church occurred soon after the opening of the third World Synod of Bishops. The dispute rose over an address by the Pope warning the delegates to beware of outside pressure groups. The lobby group, Operation Synod, interpreted this as a fear tactic to induce the bishops not to agree with any strong proposals for change.

Arrest Illegal

SAN FRANCISCO — The 9th U. S. Court of Appeals ruled Thursday that the federal government acted illegally when it arrested Leslie Bacon to force her to testify about the bombing of the national Capitol. Miss Bacon was not charged with a crime at the time of her arrest, but was taken into custody because officials were afraid she would flee. The court stated she was denied the opportunity to appear willingly.

Frankie Brown And Dean Nuckols Attend D. C. Meeting

By FRANKIE BROWN

Longwood was one of some 350 colleges and universities across the nation represented at the annual conference of the Association of Student Governments in Washington, D. C., this past weekend.

The national gathering was comprised of college presidents or administrators and the student government presidents. Dean Nuckols, Assistant Dean of Students, and Frankie Brown, President of Student Government, were Longwood's representatives.

Old Dominion, Radford and Southwestern Community College also represented Virginia at the convention.

George Romney, Secretary of HUD, Senator Hubert Humphrey, Rogers Morton, Secretary of the Interior, and Pete McCloskey, U. S. Representative, were some of the 25 speakers who gave talks with question and answer discussions.

There was great diversity in the representation of the colleges present. The variation in student enrollment was one of the most marked differences. The enrollment ranged from 600 students to 45,000 students on campus.

Institutions were predominantly coeducational but there was a good percentage of male and female schools.

The student government leaders were extremely eager to meet one another and discuss their personal campus situations. It was remarkable how many mutual problems arose. One of the most common problems was trying to increase the percentage of students voting in campus elections. Many schools had only eight per cent voting. Student leaders were amazed at Longwood's high percentage of voting in student elections. Yet many of these schools were community colleges with no residential students. Thus Longwood's "dorm voting" could not apply.

Students were greatly concerned about student representation on college policy making committees. Most students agreed that a good percentage of student representation was needed in helping determine their college life, academically as well as socially.

Extended curfews, visitation privileges and alcohol regulations were some of the more predominant social problems concerning a majority of students.

There will be a "follow-up" convention later in the fall for just the student government leaders.

Commenting on the convention, Frankie said, "This past conference and the one coming up is a once in a lifetime opportunity to exchange ideas and suggestions from campuses all over the nation. No matter what problem you have, someone else has it too. Hopefully, we'll be able to help each other."

Students Given Priority In District Registration For Voting

By LYNNE PIERCE

U. S. District Judge Robert R. Merhige, Jr. ruled Friday that the registration books of the state Board of Elections must be kept open until Oct. 8 for college students and that residency requirements must be waived by the registrars in entering them upon the books.

The result of this ruling is that college students may register to vote in the districts where they attend school, therefore, Longwood students are eligible to register with the Prince Edward County Board of Elections.

The ruling was handed down in a case involving three college students, Barbara Manard, of the University of Virginia, Philip W. Pearl, of Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University and William Spencer of Lynchburg College, who contended that they had been denied the right to vote in their respective college communities. They claimed that arbitrary methods of interpreting the residency laws had been used by local registrars based on the ruling handed down by Attorney General Andrew P. Miller.

Miller ruled in late August that local registrars would have to determine which students are eligible to register in their districts. To aid them in this, a list of 12 areas which could be considered in deciding a student's eligibility: (1) The students plans upon graduation; (2) Whether he pays out of state tuition; (3) If he is already registered in another district; (4) The locality which issued his driver's license; (5) Whether he owns or rents his own home; (6) Economic selfdependence in the community; (7) Amount of freedom from parental control (8) Locality in which motor vehicles are registered or licensed; (9) Place where insurance is issued from; (10) Bank where accounts are maintained; (11) Custom of returning to parental home for vacations; and (12) Relationship with the community.

The students charged that these areas were not only vague but discriminatory. In his ruling, Merhige gave registrars details on how to handle college students. Students are to be registered on a provisional basis with their names on a separate list. Registrars must also ignore the requirements of Virginia Code 24-1-1 which deals with residency of students. In this way, students Verona Leake and Joan Putney explain the complexities in Judicial Law.

Judicial System Clarifies Procedures and Policies

By LYNNE PIERCE

Last year, the judicial system of Longwood College was under heavy criticism from many of the students. There were many questions posed about the procedures and policies followed by Judicial Board. In order to answer some of these questions and to take under consideration new ideas, a Judicial Review Committee was formed by interested students. The committee, meeting with Judicial Board members and Dr. Wayne Tinnell, its sponsor, agreed on some alterations and to leave some policies unchanged.

Written Procedures

The major immediate change is that all of the procedures of Judicial Board and the rights of the student are being written down and will be made available to any student who wishes to have a copy. The major objective is to clarify questions about the board and to dispel the aura of mystery which many students had felt existed. Joan Putney, chairman of Judicial Board, said, "We've written everything down so a student will know what's going on," and added that a copy of the changes will be available from any member of the board, Dr. Tinnell, or the Dean of Students, as soon as they are completed.

A point included in the change is that every student will be informed of her rights and the charges against her in writing before she comes to trial. It is also important, the board feels, that the student knows that refusing to answer questions may or may not be considered as incriminating evidence against her. Both Joan and Verona Leake, board vice-chairman, stressed that the members would not intentionally look at this as a means of guilt and that it would by no means be their only consideration, but they could not speak for the rest of the members as far as overcoming their human weakness to consider it. Joan explained, "I could tell every member in there not to weigh the fact that so-and-so wouldn't answer, but there might be something inside them that they can't help it . . . We put 'may' in there because we don't want the person coming in there to think that if they refuse to answer it won't be held against them."

Counseling Service

Steps are also being taken to set up a counseling service for students who must go before the board and would feel more comfortable with someone with them who understood what was going to happen. Mary Berlin, a member of last year's review committee, has written to several colleges to inquire about their system and intends to meet with Judicial Board later. Dr. Tinnell stated that the board was in favor of the service, but added that it would have to be set up through student action. He felt that a system comprised of interested students, who are working on a voluntary basis and are familiar with college law and Longwood's judicial system, could be an asset to the college.

When asked if a similar program could be used to provide a prosecutor, Verona replied that she was afraid it would lead to a "Perry Mason-type thing," where the only important issue would be getting a not guilty verdict instead of proving the student's innocence or guilt. Joan added that since the chairman has no vote and presents whatever evidence there is against the accused, she could see no reason for involving an extra person in the trial and risking the loss of secrecy intended to protect the student.

Accuser Still Faceless

Most of the procedures have remained unchanged. The board will continue to wear robes to preserve an appearance of unity; however, the color has been

A Book A Year, Part 1

"How many students use the library?" was a question on a survey distributed last week to students involved in the social science department here at Longwood. I assumed that this question meant, how many students do you feel go into the library and actually check out books. But, since the question was stated so vaguely it was successfully argued by other members of the class that the question could apply to all those students who use the restrooms of the library, the coke machine, and even those who use the library as a short cut from Grainger to Wheeler. What this will ultimately mean, then, is when the results of the survey are returned it will be said, rather boastfully that over half, probably even three-fourths of the campus, uses the facilities of the library.

For those of you who are interested, the real question here is how many students are using the library seriously. This means not only checking out books, but using all the facilities of the library from interlibrary loan down to the card catalog. The figures from the library indicate that on the average about 2% of the books were checked out last year. That means that every student at Longwood checked out approximately one book.

Why don't the students at Longwood use their library more? There is no one answer to the question. Perhaps they don't know how to use the library, which would certainly make researching any topic awfully tedious. Or, perhaps professors don't require extensive use of library resources. Even more degrading, but worthy of consideration, is that perhaps the Longwood girls are not intellectually stimulated more than once a year.

Whatever the reason, when one realizes that the library is often considered the "nerve center of the school," it is very distressing to find that so few students actually take advantage of it.

'The Retreat Has A Positive Function'

I was very much disturbed with the commentary in last week's Rotunda concerning the Student-Faculty Retreat. I can not understand how anyone can state "Retreat Becomes Social Function" and honestly feel that this was its only purpose. To me, it went far beyond a social get-together. The article stated "Longwood has always prided itself in its ability to reach the students and respond to their ideas and needs." I am sure we are one of the very few schools that can be proud of the communication between students and faculty. The retreat gives the Administration, faculty and students a chance to exchange ideas about all phases of college life. The atmosphere is an informal one so that all participating have an equal chance to express their own opinion.

The ideas and suggestions from the Retreat were summarized in last week's Rotunda. Dean Wells has taken immediate action on the problem concerning student advising. Each student is being reviewed to make sure that she has a faculty advisor. Also, the advisors in each department are being studied in hopes of limiting academic advising to the members of the faculty that are most qualified. The 1971-72 catalogue was revised this year to give each student a list of the required courses for each degree. The new catalogue is an advising program within itself.

The curriculum committee of the college is presently discussing the possibility of exempting a student with an "A" average from an exam. This was also one of the topics brought up at the Retreat.

It may be of some interest to the student body to become aware of some of the topics discussed in the two previous retreats and of the changes that have been made.

1. Suggestion: an infirmary committee be established similar to the dining hall committee. Results: A committee has been established and is now functioning.

2. Suggestion: The necessity of I.D. cards with photographs. Results: Student, Faculty, and staff now have I.D. cards with photographs.

3. Suggestion: Make an overall study and have a student opinion poll given to ascertain student's feelings about alcohol in the dorms.

Results: (A) study was made by committee; (B) students were polled and the majority favored alcohol in the dorms; (C) alcohol is now permitted in the dorms according to the Virginia State Law.

This is proof that the topics discussed at the retreat are not dismissed after everyone returns to campus. I am not saying that some of these changes would not have taken place had it not been for the retreat, but that the retreat offers an atmosphere in which the "wheel can start turning" for possible solutions. It is emphasized at Longwood that if you want to see changes and action taken on a specific problem, then you must "go through the proper channels." The administration and faculty stress every year that they are ready to listen and consider your ideas.

Longwood was privileged to have two state legislators present at the retreat. Since the legislators are responsible for making major decisions concerning Longwood and other state supported schools, it is imperative that they be aware of each school's functions. The retreat was an excellent opportunity for them to view Longwood in an informal manner. They were able to express their opinions. I do not feel, in any way, that the presence of the legislators was intended to make the retreat "a political playground."

After hearing new ideas and suggestions on various topics discussed, I left the retreat with an assured feeling that the future would unfold changes resulting from the retreat. I do not expect all of the topics to be acted upon within the next month, because any problem solved properly takes much time and consideration, but I do feel that each point will be weighed properly.

Thank you,
Linda Gill

Letters to the Editor

In Defense

Dear Editor,

As a participant in the Longwood Student Government Retreat on September 10, I reacted somewhat differently than Beth Dale, whose findings were reported in a commentary titled "Retreat Becomes Social Function" (ROTUNDA, September 29). Miss Dale's criticisms may perhaps be summarized and discussed under three headings:

1. Discussion of institutional problems was too brief and empty. In regard to this statement, I will agree that it is impossible in a few hours to discuss completely the kaleidoscopic variety of collegial concerns. Nevertheless, approximately two hundred interested persons did have an opportunity to realize the scope of the problems, formulate suggestions, and present them directly to the administration.

2. The presence of legislators seemed to subordinate the legitimate purposes of a retreat to those of politics. As there were no legislators in my particular discussion group, perhaps I am not qualified to assert that politics was not a major factor in the retreat. I personally was pleased that two or three state officials would demonstrate a real interest in Longwood and was far from disturbed by their presence. It would be no more pertinent to say that the presence of a parent or of members of the faculty, administration, and Board of Visitors turned the affair into an authoritarian debacle.

3. The retreat was an attempt to pacify vocal students rather than solve problems. Far from pacifying or dismissing student opinion, the retreat served, in my opinion, to demonstrate a sincere effort to integrate students fully into the workings of the college. I was impressed and gratified by the students I met and by their deep interest in Longwood. The retreat was a revelation of spirit, a positive step in the clarification and solution of problems and, not least important, a "happening" at which representatives of various facets of life at Longwood met and, for the most part, meshed harmoniously.

Sincerely,
Cathleen Hosey

'Political Playground'

Dear Editor,

I would like to disagree with the article written by Beth Dale about the Student-Faculty Retreat. Since we were in the same discussion group together, I feel some matters should be clarified.

Beth is very right when she reported that a cross-section of students attended. This is very important in receiving ideas from all sources. However, this was not a social function either in purpose or in the end result. We spent from 9 a.m. until 3 p.m. at the Retreat with possibly an hour and half or two hours for lunch and a break. The rest of the time was spent in discussion and reports. I certainly did not feel it to be a social function since I felt it was a serious matter and there was little time for socializing.

As for discussion of the topics, it must be noted that the discussion was what you as a member of the group made it. Our group, which was a cross-section in itself, came to some basic suggestions. Some ideas we spent quite a while on, others we did not. We found little to discuss about some things of importance since we either decided to wait to see what would be happening when all the students returned, or, these things had already been changed. If there was anything else to be discussed the members of the group should have spoken.

Afterwards all the groups assembled to report on what they had discussed and suggested. All of the reports were to be written and handed in for use by Student Government. Since I also attended the Retreat the year before, I realized that suggestions made then, of which many were important and controversial, had been acted upon and most of them incorporated. I feel that there has not been enough time to see all of the action on this Retreat.

Also, how should the presence of two state legislators, who only said hello to the whole crowd, and were only in two discussion groups out of 17 groups, make a "political playground?"

Certainly Beth could not feel like she was being dismissed with an "I'll call you, don't call us" when she had already been called. Also it had been emphasized what people, students or faculty, to go to, with future suggestions. It must also be noted that the suggestions made have been taken into consideration. Some have not been acted upon yet (there have only been two weeks of classes) and some have. Those that have consist of forming a Day Student Council and the lists for everyone interested in serving on a Legislative committee. If you are not satisfied completely, then go to Legislative Board meetings on Monday nights.

Sincerely,
Sue Bonham

A serious tone prevails in this rehearsal for "The Tempest."

Rehearsals For 'The Tempest' Enter Third Week

By BELINDA BRUGH
THE TEMPEST, to be presented October 21-23, is now in its third week of successful rehearsals. Assisting Dr. Patton Lockwood with his production are Kay Burcher as student director and Nell Skinner as stage manager. The large cast, which will include a chorus of 18 dancers, will be headed by Robert McIlwaine as Prospero, Duke of Milan. Mr. McIlwaine is a professor of English at Hampden-Sydney College.

Portraying the major female roles are Robin Rutherford and Beverly McGill. Miss Rutherford, a Floridian, will play the part of Miranda, daughter of Prospero. Beverly McGill, cast as Ariel, will have a spritely part to perform as she will be portraying a member of the spirit world. Both Miss Rutherford and Miss McGill are freshmen and will be making their acting debut at Longwood College.

Other members of the cast include Larry Smith, Bob Williams, Charlie Bishop, Stanley Kelsey, Rick Vaughn, Ed Koffenburger, Jeff Butler, Woody Fitzhugh, John Chinn, Bill Bush, Bob Shields, Scott Campbell, I. B. Dent, Carol Yeamans, Dianne Rourke, and Cindy Vaughan.

Working diligently behind the scenes to complete the set for THE TEMPEST are a group of hard-working, often neglected people — the members of the play production class. The students of this class, who are often using hammers and nails for the first time, always manage to produce an admirable set and they are to be commended.

Students who have designed program covers for THE TEMPEST are reminded that the deadline for submissions is October 5,

Columbia Pictures Releases Film By 'Controversial' Producer

Columbia Pictures has recently released Stanley Kramer's film version of Glendon Swarthout's prizewinning novel, "Bless the Beasts & Children." The film deals with the personal growth and maturation of a group of six "misfit" boys.

The six youths, of athletic incompetence and coming from broken or indifferent homes, are stuck in a summer camp they hate. They share an agonizing need for self-discovery which they find when they identify with a herd of "doomed" buffalo. They join together in an effort to save the buffalo herd from brutal "thinning-out" by hunters granted licenses by the state of Arizona.

Kramer, producer and director of the film, often has tackled supposedly difficult subjects as in "Guess Who's Coming to Dinner." They have brought him fame, fortune, and a storm of divided critical opinion. Cinema observers have labeled him the most controversial picture maker in history.

In early trial showings "Bless the Beasts & Children" evoked strong reactions differing with each audience ranging from passionate feelings about gun controls to generation gaps, or to ecology and related fields. The purpose of the picture, Kramer says, is to entertain. Beyond that, however, in the words of the author, Swarthout, who also wrote "Where the Boys Are," it seems to have already joined a notable list of Kramer's pictures with something to say, this time that "all living things are kin, and that by freeing others we free ourselves."

Student Exhibit Travels

"Ethereality: A Collection of Photographs" is an exhibit by eight Longwood art students. The show consists of 56 photographs and will travel throughout Virginia until June, 1972.

Born from a trying assignment depicting people, campus life, reflections, mundane objects and shapes, the show is a sample of work completed during the first semester that photography was offered at Longwood.

Co-taught by Dr. Carolyn Wells and Miss Barbara Bishop, the course opened quite a few eyes and interests.

The Central Virginia Chapter of the Museum of Fine Arts sponsored the show at Longwood during September and hosted a reception for the student-photographers Sunday, September 19, in the library gallery.

With the cooperation of Mr. T. C. Brown and the Lankford Student Union, the show is being made available to colleges and public schools in Virginia. The show opens in October in Richmond for the Art Education Services/State Board of Education.

The art education services of Roanoke city public schools will host the exhibit in Roanoke during November; Meadowbrook High School of Chesterfield County is scheduled for the show in December.

Beginning the new year, the photographs will be shown at Emory and Henry College during January. In February, William Byrd High School of Vinton will sponsor the collection and from there it will travel to J. E. B. Stuart High School of Falls Church.

For April, the show returns to Richmond to the art education department of the city schools and in May it winds up at the University of Virginia, Charlottesville.

The student photographers are Kathy Barclay, Brooke Baxter, Mary Ann Bentley, Donna Gleason, Janet Hirschman, Sharon Jefferson, Bonnie Moseley and Buffy Winfree.

Three From Longwood Exhibit In Richmond

By YOLANDA OLD
Longwood College is well represented in the "Virginia Photographers 1971" exhibit of the Virginia Museum in Richmond. The show opens with a reception Tuesday, October 12, and runs through November 7.

Miss Barbara Bishop, associate professor and Chairman of the Art Department, had two works accepted. "Close to Brandywine No. 1" is a photograph within a photograph depicting a row of illusionistic trees. Her second entry merited one of 20 Certificates of Distinction and is entitled "Close to the Brandywine No. 11." This print comprises three plexiglass panels, each silkscreened and hung in succession.

Another art faculty member, Miss Elisabeth Flynn, Associate Professor of Art History, had the print, "Coffering," accepted. This study of a coffered (decorated) ceiling combines a powerful viewpoint which surges up between two Doric columns with the detail and delicacy of the masonic sculpture.

"Bessie's Friend," a photograph by Mary Ann Bentley (a junior art major) was also accepted. This character study was represented in "Ethereality: A Collection of Photographs" and depicts an old lady waiting to see the last run of the N&W locomotive.

Over 1100 photographs were entered and 162 were accepted for this show. The juror was Harry Callahan, internationally recognized photographer and head of the Department of Photography of the Rhode Island School of Design. The show is scheduled to travel for two years after being exhibited in Richmond.

Geist Continues Tradition Of Tapping

By STEPHANIE SIVERT
Spectacular College Circus To Be Presented Saturday — Queen Elected By Student Body Will Be Crowned.

"Saturday night at 7:30 p.m., the S.T.C. gymnasium will be transformed, as if by magic, from a regular, ordinary 'gym' to a real, sure-enough Circus with side shows, freaks, animals, clowns, ring performances, circus food, trinkets, and continuous music. In fact, there will even be a ringmaster with a big silk hat. Side shows will be located both to the right and left of the ring. Among these will be found such things as 'The Chamber of Horrors,' 'The Fortune Teller,' 'Bluebeard's Wives,' and 'The Snake Charmer. All offer unusual entertainment."

This colorful excerpt from the December 7, 1927, edition of THE ROTUNDA announced the coming of the first full-fledged Longwood Circus, many years later to be transformed into the "Geist Festival;" and finally to evolve into what is now known as "Oktoberfest." Although the name has changed since 1927, the carnival atmosphere, the festive spirit, and the sense of cooperation found among the student body as it prepares for the annual event, has remained the same.

The main changes in the event have been the recognition each year of outstanding students to headline the activities and the adoption of a German festival theme.

Origins In 1920's

The first mention of a campus event of this sort came in 1925 in the November 3 edition of THE ROTUNDA. What is now known as "Oktoberfest" originated as a carnival held early in December in the school's gymnasium and sponsored by the Farmville Chapter of the Alumnae Association. This was to be a "repeat performance" of yet another carnival sponsored years before by the Association in which all the organizations in the school who wished, took part. It was such a success that they decided to repeat it in 1925. Little mention was made about the outcome of the 1925 carnival. It wasn't until 1927 that the Circus was recognized as a main event in the list of campus activities.

Unlike today, the Circus was a one-night presentation, held in December instead of October and held inside the Gym instead of outside. One of the outstanding events of the evening was the crowning of the Queen of the Circus. Elected by the student body, her identity was not revealed until Saturday night when she made her "mysterious, attractive appearance in an unusual way suitable for a circus queen's entrance." After the circus, those who wished to dance could do so in a "roped-off" section of the gym. Music was furnished by the Hampden-Sydney Orchestra.

Changes Over Years

In the years to follow, changes were made in carnival activities. It was not until 1935 that the Circus was first held in October. Also in the 30's, responsibility for organizing the Carnival was assumed by members of Alpha Kappa Gamma, a national leadership fraternity on campus. In choosing students for the honored positions of Ringmaster, animal trainer, and carnival chairman, emphasis was put on selecting girls who had demonstrated intellectual ability, leadership and spirit.

In the late 1940's, the carnival began to have guiding themes — "Gay Nineties," "Southern Belle," and "Mardi Gras" were just a few. The carnival was expanded to two days, a parade through Farmville was added and it was held outside except for the 15-minute skits in the auditorium. Usherettes were chosen from each of the classes in 1950, to help the Ringmaster and Barker in conducting the activities of the weekend.

Geist Formed

In 1966, a major revision was made in the composition of the annual festival. Newly initiated members of AKG along with Dean of Women, Ruth B. Wilson, Assistant Dean, Frances Brown, and Dr. Carolyn Wells founded an honorary campus organization, its purpose being to "recognize and encourage leadership, promote college loyalty, preserve ideals and traditions of the College and to foster high ideals of service and scholarship." This organization was Geist, Geist is the German word for spirit and imagination. It was this organization which was to assume the responsibility of the Circus now to be called the "Geist Festival." Added to the activities of the October weekend were an art show, a water show and a hockey game. Competition between classes increased. "Mistress of Ceremonies" and "Midway Marshal" replaced the traditional titles of Ringmaster and Barker.

A new theme for the annual event was announced at the Geist Festival assembly in October of 1968, Oktoberfest, a traditional German festival, was to be the new theme.

Junior Dillard Vaughn was tapped as the first Festmeister and Sophomore Patricia Cloonan was the new Mittenmeister. Two usherettes from each class were also chosen.

Geistmaster Named

In continuation of a tradition that has become an integral part of Longwood life, 11 girls who will play a major role in Oktoberfest 1971 were recognized for their promotion of the Longwood spirit. These students include:

Geistmeister for 1971—Verona Leake, Verona is a senior English major from Charlottesville. She has shown her support of the college by her participation in many campus activities. This year Verona serves as vice-chairman of Judicial Board. She has also been a class officer, an orientation leader, and a Colleague as well as a member of Alpha Delta Pi Sorority.

Fran Morton will serve as the 1971 Festmeister. Her main duties will include acting as mistress of ceremonies for the weekend. This is the highest recognition that Geist gives a member of the Junior Class. Fran has served as co-chairman of Freshman Production as well as chairman of Sophomore Weekend. While being active in campus events, she has maintained a high academic average which made her eligible for membership in Alpha Lambda Delta, the freshman honor society. Fran, from Richmond, is a speech pathology major. Her other activities include participation in intramural sports, serving as a hall president, Colleague and orientation leader as well as being vice-president of Alpha Delta Pi Sorority.

The 1971 Mittenmeister will be Donna Hicks, a sophomore from Roanoke. Donna has shown her support of the College in many ways. Serving as Head Colleague, she worked this year with the Orientation program. She is also very active in the BSU, working with the folk group and on the Freshman Council. Donna, attendant to the May Court last year, will supervise activities on the Midway. The position of Mittenmeister is given in recognition of a sophomore who has shown both spirit and loyalty.

In addition to these three positions, Geist also tapped eight girls, one from each class, to serve as usherettes. Those chosen were: Val Callis, Bobbi Hope, seniors; Mary Lou Glasheen, Sandi Oliver, juniors; Linda Gill, Joyce Moren, sophomores, and Susie Beidenbender, Elvira Beverly, freshmen.

Val Callis is an elementary education major from Hampton, Va. She has worked with Orientation both as a Student Assistant and an Orientation leader.

Golfers Top William and Mary Gain 11½ Points In Match Play

The Longwood Golf Team again showed their fine ability by defeating William and Mary last Wednesday. The team did not let the threat of rain bother them as they won the tournament 11 1/2 points to 1/2 points.

Penny Stallins played number one for the Longwood team and received 2 1/2 points for Longwood. Becky Bailey, Ann Santore, and Louise Moss, Longwood's second, third, and fourth golfers respectively, each defeated their opponents and together added a total of 9 points to Longwood's score.

Even though William and Mary only brought four golfers to the tournament, Longwood's second team played a match among themselves. Each of these girls, Cartie Keene, Ann Welsenger, Peggy Lynch, and Margo Stoneking, turned in excellent scores.

The tournament was played by match play. In match play, the golfer with the lowest score wins the hole. The match is then over when a player has won a greater number of holes than there is left to play. A golfer can receive a maximum of three points for her team. The golfer winning the most holes for the front nine receives a point. The second point is awarded to the golfer winning the most holes on the back nine. The golfer winning the most holes during her match receives a third point.

All the team members were excited over their victory even though they agreed that everyone could have played better.

Closely guarding their opponents, Longwood's hockey team practices defensive tactics.

Intramural Tennis Begins Competition Among Classes

Intramural tennis singles have begun. Rules governing these matches are as follows:

- (1) Matches must be played by the date given;
- (2) Each player must provide her own balls;
- (3) Play will be a Pro Set of 8. The winner must win eight games, but need not win by eight games, so the final score should never be more than 8-7;
- (4) The winner must record name and score right after the match.

Some games have already been played, with the final play off games to be completed soon.

Freshmen

Marie Ventura beat Susan Wagner 8-3. Carol Hersh stopped Lori Schaperjohn. Bev Burg beat Bye. Ellen Broderick beat Cathy Sims, 8-0, while Diane Dull defeated Daryle Driskill, 8-6.

By October 5, Marie will have played Carol Hersh. The winner of that game will go on to play Ellen Broderick, who won her game against Bev Bury, 8-0.

Sophomores

Becky Bailey defeated Ellen Morrison, 8-0, while Barbara McMillan won over Wanda Wallace. Graham Meldrum beat Bye and Lisa Dixon defeated Cynthia Kendrick, 8-2. Paula Williams was defeated by Debbie Amme, 8-2.

Juniors

Diane Weymouth beat Cindy Cain, 8-2 and Betty Baker beat Bye. Carol Chory was defeated by Dottie Bohannon, 8-7. By October 5, Diane should have played Betty Baker, with the winner playing Dottie by October 12.

Seniors

Ellen Cahill defeated Bobbi Hope, while Andy Lassiter won.

Golf Team Captures Tournament Trophy Opens 1971 Season Defeating Madison

Last year the Longwood College Golf Team, coached by Dr. Barbara Smith, captured the team trophy in the Virginia State Intercollegiate Golf Tournament. With the beginning of school, Longwood's Golf Team lost no time in proving that they plan to repeat this performance.

Returning from that state meet to play again for Longwood this year are juniors Louise Moss, Ann Santore, and sophomore Becky Bailey. Also strengthening the team this year are seniors Cartie Keene, Ann Welsenger, and sophomore Peggy Lynch. Penny Stallins, a transfer from Ferrum Junior College, and freshman Margo Stoneking are the two newest additions to the Longwood Golf Team.

This team proved their ability by winning their first tournament against Madison College and the College of William and Mary.

The tournament was held at the Lakeview Country Club in Harrisonburg. Penny Stallins, playing number one for Longwood, defeated both her opponents and received six points for the team. Playing number two for the team, Becky Bailey also won both her matches and added six more points for Longwood. Louise Moss, Longwood's number three golfer, added five more points to the team's score. Not to be out done by her teammates, Ann Santore provided an additional four points for Longwood's team. The final score was 21 points - a definite victory for Longwood.

Madison attempted to catch Longwood but came up short with only 13 points with William and Mary collecting two points. Also participating and winning their matches were Longwood's second team consisting of Cartie Keene, Peggy Lynch, and Margo Stoneking.

Aid Available On Yearly Basis To Needy Longwood Students

By TINA MOODY

Approximately $250,000 was furnished by state and federal programs last year as financial aid to Longwood students. This year's figures, which will be available later in the month, are expected to be about the same or a little more than before. This was explained by Mr. Gary Groneweg, Financial Aid Officer of the college.

When asked how aid is awarded Mr. Groneweg outlined his system: "Each application is reviewed and a budget is worked up for the individual. The expected family contribution, which includes amounts from the parents' income and the student's summer earnings, is deducted from her budget to determine her 'need figure.' Starting with sophomores, juniors, and seniors in the lowest parental income level, $0-$3,000, aid is awarded in a package. The needs of freshmen in the lowest income bracket are provided for next. Then the finances of upperclassmen in the $3,000-$6,000 income bracket are taken into consideration and on to the freshmen until all funds are exhausted."

The budget that is currently allowed for any Longwood student seeking financial aid totals $1,980 for the year. This includes $1,545 for tuition, room and board paid to the college, $100 for books, and $335 discretionary money for transportation, personal expenses, and entertainment.

In explanation of the types of aid granted, Mr. Groneweg said, "Loans are alternated annually with unrepayable scholarships and may be combined with work on campus. In some cases a person needing a lot of money must draw from all three of these sources at once."

Among other areas, Mr. Groneweg hires girls to work in the Campus School, the English Department, the Registrar's office, the dining hall, and the Library. He reports that, "So many jobs are now available that I am able to find work for those students in the higher income levels who are seeking financial assistance."

Several students who worked as waitresses last year found they would be unable to return to their jobs this September. This was a result of two factors according to Mr. Groneweg. "Because of the fluctuation in incomes and the size of the freshman class there is a certain variation of aid," he said, "All financial aid is on a yearly basis; so no one can be guaranteed the same job year after year."

The other reason why some waitresses were not rehired is that the dining hall was over-assigned last year. Some people were not getting to work the twelve hour limit. This year it was underassigned to make sure they would receive the money they were promised. Last week it was determined that 20 more waitresses were needed than the 100 who were hired. These positions have been filled from a waiting list of those next in line for aid.

At the present Longwood is unable to get more financial aid. It is in an unusual position because it has an increasingly high percentage of students in the $9,000-$10,000 income bracket. This is the dividing line at which state and federal aid is no longer available. Instead of coming to four-year institutions like Longwood, students of lower income families tend to stay closer home and enroll in community or junior colleges.

Student Voting

will be allowed to register for the Nov. 2 election and any others that may arise until further litigation is concluded.

The American Civil Liberties Union, which represented the students, not only asked for an extension of the registration deadline, but called for a panel of three federal district court judges to decide whether residency requirements for students in Virginia are constitutional. Merhige has asked U. S. Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals Chief Justice Clement Haynsworth to appoint the three judges.

Because the case originally appeared in his court, federal procedure requires that Merhige sit on the panel. It is speculated that the other judges will be Albert V. Bryan, of Alexandria and John P. Butzner of the Fourth Circuit Court in Richmond. Bryan was in Richmond Friday and sat on the bench when Merhige gave his ruling.

If the panel rules in the students' favor, all students who meet state requirements will be allowed to register in their college communities without any arbitrary decisions of local registrars.

Oz And Family Seek Recognition From LC Publications Board

By LINDA McMORROW

OZ, the magazine published last year by Family, is trying to obtain official recognition as a student publication from the Publications Board of Longwood College.

Family is a group of Longwood and Hampden-Sydney students who joined together last year with the idea of creating a publication which would combine the features of a newspaper and a literary magazine. It was to serve as a source for student participation and expression outside of the recognized campus publications.

The first issue of OZ appeared last spring and featured stories, poems and opinion articles. It was sold for ten cents or a copy could be obtained by trading an item of comparable value, such as pencils or paper. Enough copies were sold to accomplish Family's aim of "breaking even" and paying the printer. Since that time, Family has had itself incorporated as a non-profit organization; therefore, selling OZ for a profit would be illegal. Advertising and a minimum charge per issue will cover the cost of publishing.

OZ was distributed on the Longwood campus last year through special permission granted by the Publications Board. In seeking to become a campus organization, this permission would not only be unnecessary, but Family feels it would stimulate student support and contributions. Family wants OZ's base to be at Longwood because the bulk of student participation will come from there; however, the magazine will be open to Hampden-Sydney and students there will be encouraged to contribute their work.

A further objective for OZ is to get as many students involved on a voluntary basis as possible. When asked if they felt OZ would compete with the Gyre or Rotunda, Family replied that besides art, literature and news, personal interviews on interesting topics would also be included. They added that the staff has also enlisted the help of professional writers and photographers in contributing work.

Although OZ will be Family's main concern, they have planned other activities which they would also like to see take place this year. Included in these projects would be rock concerts, chartered trips to areas of interest, a kite flying contest, a free computer dating service and lectures by outside speakers on topics that students would indicate an interest in. Family hopes to use OZ in promoting these activities, but stresses that they can only be accomplished through the joint cooperation of the community and college.

Longwood Plans For Radio Broadcasting System In '72

By CHRISTINE SHARPE

A radio station at Longwood! Although it is not yet a reality, the speech and drama department are tentatively planning to begin broadcasting in September of 1972.

The FM station will be an educational station as required by the FCC and the National Association of Broadcasters. Broadcasting will be in a five to six mile radius including the Farmville community and Hampden-Sydney College.

The college station will be a clearing board for information. One regulation placed on this by the FCC is the prohibition of certain topics, such as birth control and the advocacy of drug abuse.

Telephone lines will connect the station with the auditoriums, the Gold Room, and other areas on campus. This will allow more flexibility for students by giving them on the spot campus news. Instructors will also be able to make tapes to be played on the air. Music, news, and educational material will all be played. The station should fulfill Dr. Willett's goal of communicating among all factors of the college community.

Located on the third floor of Jarman, the monophonic station is equipped to be used only needing a transmitter to operate. The license for the station must still be applied for. The financing for one full year of broadcasting must be guaranteed before the National Association of Broadcasters' will give the campus a license.

The station will be student operated by a radio organization which will serve the broadcasting needs of the station as the Longwood Players do for the production of plays throughout the year. The station will probably be budgeted by student activity fees.

The operating times have not yet been decided. It was first thought that the station would broadcast from early in the afternoon until 11 p.m. Now the prevalent thought is to let the students decide by a questionnaire.

Dr. Lockwood of the Speech and Drama department said that the college wants someone in the department to take full responsibility of faculty advisor to the station.

At one time, joining with the Hampden-Sydney station that is forming was considered. Unfortunately Hampden-Sydney has a stereo transmitter while we are only equipped as a monophonic station. The tower required to transmit stereophonic would also be expensive and require the purchasing of land for both stations to receive equally good reception.

The FM station will be a first in radio broadcasting at Longwood. It will provide an outlet for student opinion, campus information and listening pleasure for the students, provided by their peers.

Group Speaks On October 11

BY VALERIE BLANKS

A new concept of meditation, called Transcendental Meditation (TM) is spreading in use over the U. S. as more and more people discover its value. Meditators of TM say this technique "unfolds a person's full mental potential and in turn brings greater clarity and peace of mind." On October 11 at 7:30, a couple, trained in teaching TM, will be in the ABC Room of Lankford to present an introduction of TM to any interested students and faculty members.

TM is an ancient technique used in India, which Maharishi Mahesh Yogi introduced to the Western World twelve years ago. He has since organized the Students' International Meditation Society (SIMS), for spreading TM. This nonprofit educational organization has chapters on over 500 campuses in the U.S. Presently, there are about 100,000 meditators in the U. S. and 300,000 in the world.

SIMS describes Transcendental Meditation in this way: "TM is a natural technique which allows the conscious mind to experience increasingly more subtle states of thought until the source of thought, the unlimited reservoir of energy and creative intelligence is reached. This simple practice expands the capacity of the conscious mind and a man is able to use his full potential in all fields of thought and action."

Larry and Linnea Wardwell, the trained "initiators" of TM from Charlottesville, who will speak on this technique, stressed that "it is not a religious philosophy with a set of beliefs and moral codes but a simple and easy technique for expanding the conscious capacity of the mind." Larry said that "the normal person uses only 10-15% of his mental potential, and that TM helps him tap this reservoir of creativity and intelligence."

Besides the mental changes brought about, according to scientific investigation of this state, changes occur in the body which correspond to this refined mental activity. The inference drawn from this research done by Dr. Robert K. Wallace, of the dept. of physiology at the University of Calif., is that the body gains a profoundly deep state of rest, while the mind is fully awake and able to respond to stimuli. Those practicing the technique report that the resulting deep rest provides a basis for increased energy and effectiveness in daily activity.

"William Tatham" Speech Topic For Dr. Herman Friis, Oct. 11

BY VALERIE BLANKS

The Institute of Southern Culture is a program set up at Longwood to promote the study of traditional aspects of Southern civilization. Its overall theme for 1971-72 is The South; Land, Man And Culture. Dr. Herman R. Friis, the first speaker for the season, will present his talk on Oct. 11 in Jeffers.

In explaining the purpose of the Institute of Southern Culture, Mrs. Jo Sneller, chairman of the faculty committee for the Institute, said, "We want to give the students a feel for real scholarship."

The Institute, established at Longwood in 1956, is currently sponsoring a series of lectures by visiting scholars.

"Traditionally," Mrs. Sneller continued, "scholars have worked long periods of time studying a person or a subject area and then written papers that are carefully documented. Later, at a given time and a given place, they have presented their papers for interested persons to hear and comment upon."

"The people hearing the scholar speak benefit from this method because the speaker puts forth ideas that are challenging or exciting to them. After the speaker has concluded his talk, these persons have an opportunity to question the speaker's ideas."

"By attending such a lecture the student not only learns something new himself, but also contributes his support in a very concrete way to the whole scholarly effort," Mrs. Sneller said.

Dr. Herman R. Friis, Director, Center for Polar Archives, National Archives and Records Center, will discuss his topic, "William Tatham: A unique and little-known Southern personality in the early history of U. S. geography - 1769-1819." On Oct. 11 at 7:30 p.m. in Bedford Auditorium, Dr. Friis has spent many years studying the life of William Tatham, which involved trying "to trace by bus, car, train, and on foot" Tatham's many travels.

Victorians Institute To Center Around Dickens On October 23

BY VALERIE BLANKS

The Victorians Institute, made up of educators, writers, and others interested in Victorian literature and related subjects, will hold its second annual meeting on Saturday, October 23. The day-long meeting will be held in the ABC Room of Lankford Student Building, and its program will center around Dickens.

The Victorians Institute was established last year when Dr. Rosemary Sprague, professor of English at Longwood, with other Victorian scholars formed the group which "brought together faculty members and students from colleges in Virginia, North Carolina, and the Washington area interested in the Victorian Period."

The success of the Institute last year encouraged the group to hold another meeting this year for the purpose of forming a permanent Institute. The program this year will consist of four Victorian scholars, three speaking in the morning and one in the afternoon, presenting papers which they have written after much study and research. Interested listeners may absorb these ideas, thus increasing their knowledge, or share their own ideas on the subject with the group in a discussion and question period which will follow the papers.

All faculty members, Longwood and Hampden-Sydney students, as well as the general public are invited free of charge to attend. But a Registration fee of $3.00 must be paid by October 16 if plans are made to attend the luncheon sponsored by the Institute.

Lise Worthington, a student attending last year's Institute said, "On the whole, the speakers were both entertaining and informative. The Institute was intellectually stimulating and shouldn't be missed this year."

More Construction Underway For New Utility Buildings

BY STEPHANIE SIVERT

Construction is scheduled to begin this month on a new maintenance and warehouse building to be located at the corner of South Street and Redford near Curry Dormitory. The purpose of the building is to provide modern working facilities for campus tradesmen and adequate storage space for college maintenance equipment and tools. At the present time, much of the maintenance and shop department is located in the laundry building.

An important part of the new building will be an automotive maintenance shop staffed with an experienced mechanic. With this new shop, equipped with a pump and tank, the College will be able to service its own state vehicles instead of having to rely on the State Highway Department as it does now. In addition, a parking area will be provided for state cars at the new building, allowing parking spaces now occupied by the cars at the Lankford parking lot to be used for student parking.

It is predicted that the new maintenance building, which will cost approximately $440,000, will be completed and ready for use late next spring.

Fraternity Dispute

CHARLOTTESVILLE - The Afro-American Student Association at the University of Virginia has requested a public apology from Kappa Sigma fraternity because one of the brothers allegedly asked eleven black students to leave an open rush party. The black students claim they were dancing when Phil Cooke pushed them aside and asked them to leave. Cooke left and returned a few minutes later, they said, with the doorman, who then ordered them to leave. Cooke claims that the students were dancing in front of the band and he asked them to spread out to make room for others. He also said he waited outside while the doorman talked to them and, while he could not remember ever asking them to leave, the doorman may have. At the end of the week, action against the fraternity was being considered by both the Student Council and the Inter-fraternity Council.

Election Change

LYNCHBURG - The Sun Dial, the newspaper at Randolph-Macon Woman's College, has come out in opposition to the manner in which officers for the freshman class is elected. The paper feels too much pressure is placed on the newly arrived girl who is elected class president and that she cannot be expected to do the job required of her well. Instead, the paper has proposed the creation of a Freshman Board to handle the duties for the first year. The freshmen would elect representatives from their dorms in proportion to their number in the whole class. The board would name a chairman and then each board member would have a specific duty to perform.

Freeze Violated

BOONE, NORTH CAROLINA - The Student Judiciary at Appalachian State University has filed a complaint with the Office of Emergency Preparedness charging that the university has violated the President's wage-price freeze by raising the parking fees on campus. The increase amounted to six dollars more for students and a new two dollar fee for faculty members. The measure was passed last May; however, the judiciary officials claim that the first cars were not registered until September 8, which was after the President's starting point of August 15. The university claims that information they received from the Cost of Living Council permits the increase, but, if the case is ruled against it, the university will be forced to refund the money.

Review Committee

WILLIAMSBURG - A new Publications Council has been established under the order of President Thomas A. Graves, Jr., of the College of William and Mary. The duties of this council will be to supervise financial affairs of the publications and the college radio station, WCWM, and to set standards for "editorial freedom of expression" and "responsible journalism." Besides appointing editors and managers, the council has the power of review and to take disciplinary action. Thenew council arose out of suggestions made by a special committee set up to investigate the Flat Hat, the college paper, after obscenity charges were leveled against it.

Judicial System

changed to blue in order to alleviate the severe appearance some students had complained of. They will also continue their policy of having the student remain in the infirmary overnight if the trial is not completed in one sitting. This is done in order to make it easier for the student to endure whatever tension may arise from the trial. The student is allowed to have one or two friends with her, and, in cases where it seems advisable, the Dean of Students may give her permission to spend the night on her own hall.

The most controversial point brought up last year has not been altered. The Judicial Board will still maintain a policy where the accuser does not have to face the accused unless she wishes to. Dr. Tinnell felt this was important in order to protect the accuser from harassment by other students. He said he knew of cases where a student, who others suspected of turning in a friend, had been intimidated to the point of leaving school. Joan tried to explain it from a student's standpoint when she said, "If everybody had to face the person they're turning in, a lot wouldn't do it." As far as affecting the future of the honor system, Dr. Tinnell added, "I could cite you instances where this confrontation has been made a part of the honor system and it's fallen apart over several years."

Questions Welcome

that students should familiarize themselves with the information on Judicial Board contained in the handbook; then, if there are any questions, any member of the board or Dr. Tinnell would try to answer them or refer the student to someone who could. Verona said she was "very happy to see what we have now as compared with the past" because it not only clarifies ambiguous points, but protects the accused and the board.

Dr. Tinnell summarized the results of last year's review and the feelings of Judicial Board: "The main outcome of all the material last year was to set down the procedures that we follow, so that there wouldn't be so much mystery involved with our action and also to set down the rights of an accused student in writing . . . We received some very constructive ideas and will always be open to further ideas from the students."

Art and Psychology Departments

Gain New Faculty Members

By VALERIE BLANKS

Among the new professors added to Longwood's faculty this year are an Art Professor, Miss Margaret Violette, and a Psychology professor, Mr. Edward Smith. Both professors are currently working on and hope to soon earn their Doctorate degrees.

The Art Department has added a new member to its faculty, Miss Margaret Violette. Miss Violette teaches Ceramics and Art for Elementary Majors.

Although she was born in New York, Miss Violette has lived most of her life in Miami, Florida. She earned her Bachelor and Master degrees at Florida State University in Tallahassee.

Miss Violette taught nine years in Miami and one year at Madison before coming to Longwood. At present, she's working on her Ph.D., which she hopes to receive from Pennsylvania State University by this winter.

Besides teaching art, Miss

Violette stated she likes to make batiks and woven wall hangings. She also said she "likes Longwood's students, its talented Art faculty, and new Art facilities."

Mr. Edward D. Smith is a new member of the Psychology faculty this year. The courses he is teaching include Developmental, Educational, and Experimental Psychology.

Mr. Smith is a native of Cleveland, Ohio. After obtaining his Bachelor of Arts degree at Heidelberg College in Tiffin, Ohio, he earned his Master's degree at the University of Hawaii in Honolulu.

He then spent two years teaching at Frederick Community College in Portsmouth, followed by two years at Kent State working on his Doctorate. Now, while teaching Mr. Smith is working on his dissertation which he hopes to finish by December or January.

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first article in a series on new faculty members.

Richmond Symphony Season Opens Oct. 25 With Houtmann

By LYNNE PIERCE

The Richmond Symphony Orchestra will open its 15th season on October 25 with its new musical director, Jacques Houtmann, conducting an all-orchestra concert.

Houtmann succeeded Edgar Sherkman, who had directed the orchestra for 14 years and was the only conductor they had ever known. He came to Richmond from a position as the conductor of the Rhones-Alpes Symphony of Lyons in France. Houtmann has served as a guest conductor on three continents, always receiving critical acclaim, and served for a year under Leonard Bernstein.

The season will feature two series which will present guest artists. The Matinee Series will consist of three Sunday afternoon concerts on December 12, March 5 and April 9 and will feature

Robert Shaw, Mrs. Linwood Holton and Armando Ghitalla. The Monday evening series will feature six concerts on October 25, November 22, January 17, February 14, March 27 and April 24. Sergei Luca, Masuko Ushoda, Berry Tuckwell, Misha Dichter and Florence Robertson will perform this series.

Robert Shaw will be a guest conductor and will not only conduct the symphony, but also a chorus of 200 local voices in Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis."

Mrs. Linwood Holton, the wife of Virginia's governor, will narrate Prokofiev's "Peter and the Wolf" on March 5.

The performances of Misha Dichter and Masuko Ushoda are expected to highlight the Monday series. Dichter will be a piano soloist on March 27. Though only 25, he has attracted international attention since he took first place at the Third International Tchaikovsky Piano Competition in 1966 as the United States' representative. Miss Ushoda is a violin soloist who appeared with the symphony last year. She also won in her field in the Tchaikovsky Competition in 1966 and since has traveled all over the world as a guest performer.

Of the other performers included, Luca will be a violin soloist, Tuckwell and Ghitalla are french horn and trumpet soloists, respectively, and Mrs. Robertson will play piano.

News Briefs

Confidence Vote

SAIGON — President Nguyen Van Thieu was elected to another four-year term in a one-candidate election last week which produced the largest voter turn-out in Vietnamese history. Although there were reported incidents of demonstrations and harassments, tallies indicated that 80 per cent of the eligible voters came to the polls, Thieu received 95 per cent of the vote, with very few people destroying their ballots, which would have indicated they did not support his government. Gen. Duong Van Minh and Vice-President Nguyen Cao Ky, the original challengers in the election, refused to vote and challenged the legitimacy of the election. Ky will remain vice-president until Oct. 31 when the new government takes power.

Peking Visit

WASHINGTON — It was announced by the White House last week that Henry A. Kissinger, President Nixon's national security adviser, would go to China late in October to conclude the arrangements for President Nixon's visit to Peking. Recent disturbances of an unexplained nature in China had caused speculation that the trip might not take place. Kissinger stated, however, that both governments are continuing negotiations to show the seriousness with which each views the visit.

Phase II

WASHINGTON — President Nixon has announced wage-price restraints that he hopes will stabilize the yearly rate of inflation at 2 to 3 per cent by the end of 1972. Phase II, as the plan is commonly called, includes the establishment of two new, quasi-independent bodies whose major decisions will be subject to veto by the government. A 15-member Pay Board will set wage guidelines and prohibit, reduce or defer pay hikes that are inconsistent with its standards. A Price Commission will be established to administer price and rent restraints it formulates.

Britons Expelled

MOSCOW — Four British diplomats and a businessman have been expelled by the Soviet Union in retaliation for Britain's ouster two weeks ago of 105 Soviet representatives. The Soviets have also canceled the visits of several important British representatives, including a visit planned for early next year by Sir Alec Douglas-Hume, Britain's foreign secretary. Meetings between joint Soviet-British commissions have been suspended also. Although the British government lodged a formal complaint, it was generally felt that the reprisals were mild. The general assumption is that Moscow wanted to avoid crippling the British embassy's ability to function.

Ivory Tower Atmosphere Ending Says Governor

GOVERNOR LINWOOD HOLTON

Governor Linwood Holton held a press conference for college newspapers on October 5, which was attended by approximately 55 representatives of student papers and broadcasting media.

"We see some ending of the ivory tower atmosphere in our colleges," Holton began as he opened the meeting. He spent the first few minutes telling about his hopes for the future of Virginia colleges and universities. Included in this was the fact that he is proud that colleges are no longer isolated segments in their communities, but are becoming active participants through the involvement of students and faculty members, which is helping to eliminate the image of intellectual snobbery connected with most schools. Holton then turned the meeting over to the students for questions.

The major concern of the students was the monetary appropriations that Holton will ask for from this General Assembly. The questions covered increased appropriations to individual schools, an over-all increase in loans and scholarships and how the General Assembly could use the threat of loss of state funds to control a school. He declined answering questions on increased funds to schools and students on the grounds that, although he favored both, he had no idea what could be done until he began working with his advisors on the new budget. Priority is being placed on building educational facilities, but the governor would not say if this would bring a tax increase. Regarding the General Assembly's threats about loss of money, Holton said the representatives were "only humans" and were representing the views of their communities. He felt that students could ease this tension by creating a better image in the community, but warned they must be prepared to pay for arousing community anger.

The students also expressed an interest in the governor's view of tolerance of marijuana and inquired about what the state is doing to help heavy drug addicts.

Holton answered that, as long as marijuana is illegal, it cannot be tolerated, but added that programs are now functioning to deal not only with this problem, but also hard drugs. The Governor's Council on Drug Abuse has been concentrating on rehabilitation of addicts and is now supporting methadone centers. There is also an effort being made to train teachers on the elementary and secondary levels about drugs, which has so far met with cooperation from 97 per cent of the state teachers.

The governor expressed a particular concern about public education when questioned. He feels it is important to bring it up to the times and insure quality education for all students. Holton felt one way of accomplishing this would be by consolidating schools in the counties and rural areas. Larger student bodies would make it possible to offer a greater variety of subjects and better classes. Vocational schools also received his support. Holton suggested beginning guidance counseling in the fifth grade and greater emphasis being placed on the need for people to fill jobs that do not require college training. He emphasized that education would be an important issue in this General Assembly.

When asked about the recent charge of racism at the University of Virginia, Holton replied he felt people were giving "disproportionate attention to symbols and words." He said "those symbols represent an exercise in free speech protected by the First Amendment of the Constitution of the United States," but added that people should avoid incidents that would knowingly offend others. "The South has a great opportunity to help others understand that people can disagree without being offensive," added Holton.

In regard to this, Holton was asked if he would appoint blacks or students to Boards of Visitors of Virginia institutions. The governor replied that he has done both before and that he would have to consider the situations and attitudes of each school on an individual basis in the future.

Governor Holton made brief statements on two issues, censorship of college publications and the Bateman Resolution, which arose during the General Assembly's meetings last year. Holton does not agree with censorship of publications, but said it might be necessary in some cases where public opinion is aroused against the publication. He felt that student papers in particular had a responsibility not only to the college community, but to those outside who might read the paper. He attributed the passage of the Bateman Resolution, which condemned visitation privileges, to this same public opinion. If students are going to do things which the community cannot understand or approve of, Holton said, they must expect criticism.

Gov. Holton made a brief allusion to the wage-price freeze when he answered a question about salaries of college instructors. The money will be there for raises when the freeze is lifted, he said, and any money that is not used could possibly be ap-

Presentation Of Chinese Brush Painting Tonight

The Art of Chinese Brush Painting will be the subject of a lecture-demonstration to be presented in Bedford Building Auditorium on Wednesday, October 13, at 7:45 p.m.

I-Hsuing Ju, Instructor of Fine Arts and Artist-in-Residence at Washington and Lee University, will speak to the Central Virginia Chapter of the Virginia Museum, according to C. P. Baber and Miss Barbara L. Bishop, co-presidents of the arts group.

The program is presented under the auspices of the Virginia Museum through its Confederation of Affiliates and Chapters. During his lecture, Ju will demonstrate the intricate process of Chinese Brush Painting to his audience, utilizing the centuries-old tools of rice paper, ink stick and brushes.

Born in China in 1923, Ju is the holder of a B.A., B.F.A., and

M.A. degrees. Many exhibitions of his work have been held in China, in the Philippines, where he resided for 22 years before moving to the United States in 1968, as well as in Japan, Hong Kong, Canada and the U. S. In 1968, he was a visiting scholar to four New England state universities and how he is an instructor of fine arts and artist-in-residence of Washington and Lee University, Lexington, Va.

I-Hsuing Ju is considered to be one of the few painters who can blend two worlds of style, technique and idiom to produce an appealing picture, modern but Oriental. His philosophy is that the Chinese artist must aim at being not just a painter, but also a poet and philosopher, because his aim "is to depict a whole sweep, a continuity of life," which would have the same meaning for his children as for himself. The general public is cordially invited to attend his lecture-demonstration.

"Hot Hands" On The Books

How many times have you gone to the library and looked for a book on a shelf and found it missing, or, have gone down to the stacks to look at magazines and found three-fourths of the collection gone?

This unfortunately is a common occurrence in the Longwood Library. It seems that some students find it easier to "lift" books and magazines from the shelves rather than check them out through the main desk.

This problem of "book borrowing" is not a new one, nor is it just confined to the Lancaster Library. But what makes this situation more irritating here is that the steps that should be taken to alleviate the problem are still being bandied around in committees.

What can be done? A new check out system can be instituted.

Our system of checking out books is outdated. Every library I have ever been in has found a way to check your books as you left. This was often done by a man, and even more innovative, by an electrical spotter that registered your books on a graph.

It has been argued, and used as a stalling device, that any type of enforced checking of library books would be questioning the honor of the Longwood student. Since when have we become so sensitive of the Longwood Lady's sensitivities?

For the student's own sake, a new check out system should be initiated. Perhaps more students will use the facilities of the library if they be reasonably sure that the material will be on the shelves.

"There Is A Sucker Born Every Minute"

By NANCY CHASE

The month of October is the time of year for falling leaves and autumn colors. But more than this, it's the time of year when everyone who is willing to open his eyes can observe the gaiety and silliness of "Longwood Kiddies." It's the time of year that drives most sane students into clowns and jesters, with hoots and howls (or perhaps silent laughter), by all noncollege onlookers and those who wish they were.

Baby greens and baby reds merge into mama blue. But I always thought that the mixture of green and red resulted in a muddy brown.

The freshman's integration into Longwood tradition is perhaps at a peak during this month, but what of the juniors and seniors, who after a few years of college revel at the excitement of an one-stay-here-weekend-a-year event? Then perhaps the seed of maturity was not imbedded soon enough to grow, or on the other hand, maybe it hasn't been nurtured and fertilized enough by its surrounding environment.

It's a time of year when academics are cast aside and forgotten by many. The excuses are not one-half as valid as Senior Slump and Spring Fever. Instead, professors are blasted with shouts and screams of plays, and practice, and building props. A professor dare not test the knowledge of a student who is in the midst of avid preparations for fear of squelching the mounting enthusiasm that is seen so infrequently on this campus. The professor should appreciate the fact that his students are capable of getting involved in something even if it's not the subject he is being paid to transmit — a subject which will enable the student to progress in the future. But what Longwood Lady is concerned with the future when there is so much to do during this month?

Any observer can walk around campus and be blinded by the pomp and glamour of the weekend decorations. Most major and minor organizations compete to show their true spirit. But perhaps in many cases this is only a pseudo-spirit, and more of a capitalistic venture, W.C. Fields has been quoted as saying that "there is a sucker born every minute," and if this is true, then turned into monetary terms, it is proven every year, I don't think that anyone can deny that vast profits are there for the making and any organization, if they are willing to put out the least bit of effort, can definitely have their palms greased with the currency of any class.

October is usually a time of ghosts and spooks, and a parallel situation exists on this campus.

The ghost may be the mystic Chi, who prevails through the year to throw the pixie dust of spirit of enthusiasm upon the admiring student. The spooks merge in the form of the non-organization Cahoots, more accurately this group spoofs the antics of the organized tradition and spirit on this campus. Cahoots, with a halfway concerted effort seems to attempt to counteract and nullify the rah-rah disease that malignantly consumes our better sense and desire for higher things.

Beware — Oktoberfest is coming, Oktoberfest is coming . . .

Library: Plan Vs. Purpose

Reprinted from THE CAVALIER DAILY by Brian Siegal

EDITOR'S NOTE: The concern of U.Va. students involves expanding and providing additional library space — Longwood students lack not only concern but respect for Lancaster.

Since Alderman Library was built in the 1930's, it has become increasingly evident that one large library can no longer serve the University community. Many of the major institutions — Harvard, Stanford, Berkeley, Illinois, and North Carolina, for example — have new undergraduate libraries on their campuses.

Controversy over the size and design of the new Law School was widely publicized last year. However, a proposal to convert Clark Hall into an undergraduate library, if indeed it was only a proposal, received no student attention at all. It is odd how students are absent from the bargaining process when they are so involved in the planning of all new structures at the University.

Since the term "undergraduate library" is nebulous at best, student interest should be avid on this plan. It is most certainly in the interest of the undergraduate student body to express whether it wants its own separate library facilities and, if so, what these facilities should include.

Assuming for a moment that everyone eagerly anticipates the coming of an undergraduate library that will offer additional reader space and perhaps several special services such as an audio-visual center, is Clark Hall necessarily the best place for it?

Seat Shortage

Someone definitely thinks so, according to the University's present plans. The truth is, as with so many other things here, Clark Hall is already too small for the planned undergraduate library. And the Law School has not even moved out yet.

At present there are approximately 7,500 undergraduates at the University who require 2,500 library seats to meet the standard of seating one-third of them,

According to a report on the library made last year, up to 1,000 of these seats should be provided in Alderman.

At any rate, a modest estimate of the number of seats needed in an undergraduate library for a student body of the present size is 1,500. This means that at the standard of 25 square feet per reader, an undergraduate library would require 37,500 square feet of reader space for today's student body.

To point out that this 37,500 square feet of area does not include any space for stacks, offices, or any special services is unnecessary since the net total area of Clark Hall is only 34,500 square feet.

The possibility remains that Clark Hall can be "opened up" — that is, completely torn apart and remodeled inside — to provide the extra space needed for an undergraduate library.

In 1963, Russell Bailey was retained by the University to make a general survey and recommendations for the growth of the University library system. Bailey's recommendation was that the undergraduate library should be placed next to Alderman, on the site of the old Biology Building.

Everywhere that new undergraduate libraries are being built, they are located near the main library building. There are very practical reasons for this, Stay Close

If the undergraduate library is close to the main library, the cost of duplicating materials is less and the probability is greater that the undergraduate collection maintained can be much smaller.

If the undergraduate library is in close proximity to the main building, it is more convenient for undergraduates to go beyond its limited collection to the larger, more extensive graduate collections.

In addition, it would be a convenience to faculty and graduate students who must search out second copies of the books kept in Alderman.

Speak Now

All departments in the library need more room immediately and for future expansion. It is not clear why anyone would propose a facility that would not alleviate our present needs, much less those that are anticipated in the near future.

Now, everyone who has ever tried to study in Alderman knows of the University's urgent need for more library space. The questions remain: what kind of facilities will we get? How much will we get? And when will we get them?

Since time is essential in planning this new facility, we must be careful to plan as thoroughly as possible, judging all the alternatives. As the planning progresses, alternate plans will be foregone, leaving little room for change in the later stages.

It may be easier to wait and demonstrate against a firm plan which can be criticized for its weaknesses rather than to demonstrate for an idea of what you think is needed. The outcome, however, will not be in your favor.

Bicycle Riding Is Growing Symbol Of Alternative To Auto

Bicycles are making a comeback and the increased population of bikes is noticeable in the cities and on campuses. No longer are American bicycles confined to the realm of paperboys and children.

An increasing number of people are discovering the practical beauty and simplicity of bicycling. America's rising traffic and ecological problems have brought to light the need for radical change in man's future transportation ideals.

Stewart Udall, former Secretary of the Interior, said bringing the bicycle back to the cities has today become more urgent and practical than the proposed Supersonic Transport System.

Udall said the draining of petroleum resources and pollution by the internal combustion engine are the basic points that convinced him the automobile is fast becoming impractical as America's major form of transportation.

Alternative To Cars

Bicycles are an alternative which sacrifices prestige and speed, but according to one cyclist philosopher, it helped him gain an appreciation of the natural things around him. The slower you travel the more time you spend seeing your route of travel, he said.

Already bicycle clubs have formed in the cities to lobby for bicycle lanes on major streets and highways. Around campus overcrowded bicycle racks indicate students are finding the bike especially suited for campus life.

Whatever the reason for purchasing a bike as a means of transportation, it is evident that more and more people are riding bikes now. And contrary to yesterday's cyclists, the bike buff today has a larger selection of bikes from which to choose, varying from a one or two-seater of the old reliable one-speed pedal brake type to the sophisticated 10-speed models with or without hand brakes.

This variety in styles can be seen in the many different types on the Longwood campus. With the growth of the campus, bicycling is becoming not only a pastime for students, but a necessity. Students are reminded that regulations concerning bicycle riding are listed in the handbook.

Festival Of Arts Concentrated Study Program Planned

By DIANNE GROVES

Preparation for a Festival of Arts at Longwood College in the near future has begun under the direction of faculty members Miss Barbara Bishop and Mr. Allen Wier.

Tentative plans divide the activities of the Festival of Arts into two major categories, art and literature. Workshops, student shows and gallery talks will be included in the concentrated study of art.

Creative methods and ideas will be among the topics discussed at literary workshops and lectures. Plans are being made to have established writers come to Longwood to read and interpret their works at the festival.

A reception and panel discussion serving to tie the two categories together will conclude the Festival of Arts.

Anyone interested in helping with organization of the festival, contact the Gyre Room in the Lankford Building between seven and ten on Wednesdays.

The Don Cossack Chorus and Dancers to perform tomorrow night in Jarman Auditorium.

Don Cossack Chorus And Dancers To Present Folk Songs And Dances On Oct. 14

By TINA MOODY

The world famous Original Gen. Platoff Don Cossack Chorus and Dancers will appear Thursday, October 14 at 7:30 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium. As a feature of the Artist Series, the program will include Russian liturgical music and folk-songs, Cossack melodies and American songs, as well as the Cossack Knife Dance and authentic dances of the Cossack regiments, "Kazatchok."

The performers are a group of 25 men dressed in the bright, former military uniform of the Cossack Soldiers. Although the members of the Chorus are native Cossacks from the region of the Don in South Russia, they are now all naturalized American citizens. Cossacks were among the pioneers in the fight against world communism.

The Chorus, which was organized in 1931, in Prague, Czechoslovakia, has appeared in 65 countries and has given nearly 5000 concerts in America alone. While the 1970-1971 season marks their thirtieth anniversary New York Times states that they "still stand among the best choral groups now to be heard in our concert halls."

Dr. Lockwood To Present The Tempest In The Original Shakespearean Setting

Mr. McIlwaine holds major role in upcoming production, 'The Tempest.'

By BELINDA BRUGH

Arriving to interview the venerable Dr. Lockwood, concerning the forthcoming production of 'The Tempest,' I expected but was nevertheless unprepared for a singular interview:

Reporter - Could you briefly summarize Shakespeare's 'The Tempest'?

Dr. Lockwood - No.

Following a brief pause to regain my composure, the interview, greatly enhanced by the mellifluous voice of the learned Lockwood, proceeded successfully.

The Tempest is a strange mixture of fantasy and reality used by Shakespeare as a vehicle for social commentary. The play was written originally for the wedding festivities for a daughter of James I. "Shakespeare's play was only one in a series of evening entertainments. In fact, it appears that the set which he used was in actuality built for The Masque by Ben Jonson which was performed the preceding evening." Shakespeare apparently felt that his play did not require a specialized set and could be performed on the set already provided. "There are certainly references throughout the play to a setting which is almost identical to (the setting) of The Masque. There are references to caves, mountains, and to all sorts of specific scenic embellishments which were found in the preceding performance."

"The Tempest is mainly a play to entertain - it's a comedy. Just how funny the play was from beginning to end is debatable. Certainly, most contemporary productions stress the serious scenes between the courtiers. The repartee, the playing with language, the fun within the scenes of the court" lose their humor. "We're trying in our production to make them funny by a number of devices. You must come to the play to see how we accomplish this."

Music and dance will be an integral part of the production. "Choreography is not one of my skills or at least it is one I would approach with considerable caution; so, I have asked Miss Bowman to be the choreographer. There are two rather complex dances within the play. One is 'The Dance of the Shapes.'" The other dance, not as frightening, is a celebratory dance performed by "certain nymphs." In addition to the formal dances, there are several dance sequences where the dancers portray mariners waves, wind, and sea nymphs. The music will include two numbers specifically written for the original production of The Tempest. "These were written by Robert Jonson who was a court musician of James I. Scholars have also found a manuscript entitled The Tempest by Robert Jonson which is very appropriate for the 'Dance of the Shapes.' The rest of the music was written within two or three years of the original production by people who either worked in the court or knew Shakespeare."

The production of The Tempest will not rely heavily on technical aspects. "I have designed a very simple set with the hope that it will not distract from the serious business at hand which is the play. Frankly, I think that the lines of the play and the actors art should be of central concern."

The Tempest will be presented October 21 - 23 at 7:30 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium.

LC Proven Economic Asset For Community

By NANCY UNDERWOOD
Since its' founding in 1839, Longwood College has become a major economic influence in the community.

Jimmy H. Paul, Business Manager and Treasurer of Longwood College and John E. Carr, Vice President for Administration estimate that between $33 and $37 million are spent annually in the community as a result of the college. The actual breakdown of expenses for last year is shown by the fact sheet compiled by Mr. Carr during his fund-raising campaign for the college. Mr. Paul said that Longwood is the largest employer in Farmville with there currently being 485 local employees on campus.

Aid To Banking

William G. Whitter, Vice-president of Fidelity National says the bank is affected directly and indirectly by Longwood. Many students do their banking at Fidelity using both checking and savings accounts, loan services, and credit cards. The faculty and staff also use many services of the bank, particularly the loan service used for financing a home or car.

Another direct effect is the bank account of the college which is on a rotating basis among the three banks in Farmville. Fidelity National also has funds from the Longwood Foundation on deposit plus the Treasury of Virginia account at Longwood.

An indirect effect of Longwood on the bank is the amount of sales in Farmville because of the College.

Business Views

"Students do business with merchants in town who in turn do their banking with us," Mr. Whitter said. "For example, Vepco which furnishes utilities for the college maintains an account with us. Without Longwood, business wouldn't thrive and deposits wouldn't be as much."

Mr. Whitter also said the caliber of people at Longwood is an asset to the community.

Fidelity National maintains a mailing list each year of accepted freshmen inviting them to open an account at FNB. This year there were 56 new accounts opened by freshmen plus accounts reopened by upperclassmen.

Mr. Crute of Crute's at the corner of Main and High Streets attributes 25 per cent of his business to Longwood. Mr. Crute said he furnishes the college with school supplies and is possibly the largest supplier in Southside Virginia. Each year Mr. Crute holds a sale on school and art supplies during September, which is primarily to get the attention of freshmen.

Bob Mason of Gray's Rexall Drug in town said that Longwood gives him more customers, and there is a definite difference during the summer when most of the girls are on vacation. The largest selling items in the store are cosmetics and cards.

J. W. Owen, manager of Rose's, said he could also see a difference during the summer months but that summer students helped take up the slack. He had no idea of the amount of retail sales coming from Longwood but said that the store gets as many checks from students as from regular customers, referring to adults in the community.

"The only way to estimate business is seeing students in the store and by the number of checks received."

Mr. Eric Robinson, president of Virginia National Bank said the sources of the largest deposits in the bank were Longwood and Hampden-Sydney colleges, Vepco, and farmers. Many of the bank services are Longwood related and the drive-in branch of VNB adjacent to the campus are conveniences offered to all students, faculty, and employees.

Mr. Robinson was enthusiastic about Longwood's economic importance to the community.

"Farmville would be a different place without Longwood."

Monroe Evans, manager of Baldwin's, estimates 30 per cent or more business comes from Longwood students. He said that Baldwin's caters to LC students and would be hurt without their business. He also notices a sharp decline in summer.

Shopping Center

Favors

Managers of stores in Farmville's shopping center did not seem to feel that their nearness to the campus was responsible for sales to any great extent.

John Falkiewicz, manager of Grant's, said at least ten per cent of his business comes from Longwood. Largest selling items include hosiery, candy, and school supplies. At the beginning of each school year the drapery and linen departments do a good business as girls are furnishing their rooms.

Brantley Jefferson of Gray's Rexall Drug in the shopping center said that Longwood's effect on his store is wonderful and he can tell immediately when school is out. He also said that a prosperous business is enjoyed by both stores and suggested that the school "should be on a twelve month basis."

Golfers Defeat Randolph Macon Attend Va. Invitational Tournament

By LOUISE MOSS

The Longwood Golf Team continued their winning ways by subduing the Randolph-Macon Woman's College golf team. So far this season, Longwood's team has run over each of their opponents by a large score, and Wednesday was no exception. When the tournament ended, the final score was Longwood 10 1/2 points to Randolph-Macon's 1 1/2 points. Collecting a total of nine points for Longwood's team by defeating each of their opponents were Penny Stallins, Becky Bailey, and Ann Santore. Since Louise Moss and her opponent tied their match, the three possible points were split evenly between the two teams. The remaining golfers on Longwood's team, Carti Keene, Ann Weisinger, and Peggy Lynch, played a match among themselves since Randolph-Macon only brought four golfers to the tournament.

After this outstanding victory, the team was looking forward to the 13th annual Virginia Collegiate Invitational Golf Tournament on October 9. This tournament was hosted by Mary Baldwin College and played on the Ingle-side Golf Course.

The invitational tournament was played on the basis of medal play and as an individual tournament. Thirty-nine golfers representing seventeen colleges participated in the tournament. Dr. Smith and four golfers, Louise Moss, Ann Santore, Penny Stallins and Becky Bailey, left for Staunton on Friday to play a practice round. The golfers and their coach played until the cold weather and darkness forced them off the course.

Saturday, everyone was up early since the golfers started teeing off at 8:00. The tournament proceeded smoothly and rapidly. By 2:00 p.m., everyone was finished their tournament play, and the winners were announced.

When asked about the tournament, Dr. Smith had the following comments: "I only wish that we could have taken more golfers, but because there was an entry fee, we could only afford to take four golfers. Even though we did not bring back any of the trophies, the girls played excellent golf, and I was very proud of them." Dr. Smith can also be proud of the fact that of all the schools, Longwood had the most golfers at the tournament.

Teamates huddle together at halftime to discuss problems and offensive moves. Longwood won their first game by defeating William and Mary.

LC Tops Hockey Opponents Starts Season On Right Track

By JANE BENNINGHOVE

In the first game of the season, Longwood's hockey team did a fine job of defeating William and Mary by a score of 3-1. The forward line played well, out-matching the tactics of the opposing defense. Our defensive players, Nancy Fowlkes and Beth (Yogi) Cobb, fullbacks, and goalie, Dana Hutcherson, played a tremendous game, holding back the forceful attacks of William and Mary's offense.

Longwood's second team also outplayed William and Mary. Good stickwork and teamwork were two of our advantages, but the score, 3-3, was no indication of the team's ability.

This past weekend the team traveled to Norfolk to play Old Dominion University. Even though ODU was defeated by a score of 8-2, the first half of the game was very sloppy. The competition by the Old Dominion inners kept Longwood's defense alert. Calming down in the second half, Longwood played much better as a team, preventing further score.

Longwood also won the second game by a score of 5-0. The game was one-sided with ODU's second team offering no competition. All five of Longwood's goals were scored in the first half, four by the offense and one by Diane Padgett, halfback. In the second half of the game, repeated offside were called hindering Longwood's chance of scoring.

As the season progresses, Longwood's first team has scored 11 goals to their opponents' 3, and the second team, 8 goals to their opponents' 3.

Hockey players used good defensive tactics as they kept William and Mary from scoring more than one goal in the first game.

Fencing Clinic Draws Few Coaches Top U.S. Fencers Give Instruction

Longwood College was represented at a fencing clinic for coaches and varsity team members at Mary Baldwin College this past weekend. Miss Sally Bush and Miss Anne Huffman, Longwood professors, and Mary Frances Baldwin, varsity member, attended the annual meeting.

Denise O'Connor and Emily Drompore were guest instructors for the clinic. Miss O'Connor is a member of the National Fencing Team and Miss Drompore recently returned from the Pan American competitions with a gold medal for the U. S.

Miss O'Connor broke the instruction down into three sections: skills for the beginning fencer, the varsity team member, and the competitor. She described progression drills for teaching the basic skills of advance, retreat, lunge, straight thrust, disengage, and compound attacks. Demonstrations of more difficult movements used by competitive fencers were given.

All fencers attending the clinic were given a chance to fence Miss O'Connor and Miss Drompore. Both these ladies gave helpful suggestions to each fencer on ways to improve their skills.

Although the turnout was poor, all gained much from the clinic. Those colleges participating were: Mary Baldwin, Mary Washington, Radford and Longwood.

Colleges In The News

Ban Challenged

CHARLOTTESVILLE — A suit challenging the University of Virginia's recent decision to ban Confederate flags at athletic events was filed Friday by the American Civil Liberties Union. The ban was a result of protests by black students at the school over a spectator waving the flag at a football game, which they felt had racial implications. The university had announced that all pennants, flags or banners had to be cleared with the athletic department before being brought into the stadium and that Viet Cong and Black Panther symbols were also banned. The ACLU, which filed the suit for Capt. Jerome J. Curtis, an instructor at the Judge Advocates General's School, claimed the decision restricts the plaintiffs' "rights of free expression" guaranteed by the state and federal constitutions.

Government Split

WILLIAMSBURG — A widening rift which has been developing in the student government at the College of William and Mary became evident with the resignation of Kay Rorer, Student Association President. Miss Rorer listed personal and private reasons in her letter of resignation; however, others in the government feel it was due to a difference in opinion between the leaders over the goals the association should aim for. Several key members of the student government resigned with Miss Rorer because they "had no confidence in" Andy Purdy, who as vice-president succeeded to the presidency.

Representatives Expelled

RICHMOND — The Student Government Association at Virginia Commonwealth University expelled fifteen representatives from the House of Representatives due to lack of attendance. This left only a rump government to represent students and consider a new constitution which will reorganize the entire student government system. The major changes of the new constitution would be a one-house legislature and two courts in the judicial system. President Paul Maosha plans to take the constitution and any amendments the Congress makes to a student referendum.

Drug Thefts

CHARLOTTESVILLE — A recent drug audit by the State Board of Pharmacy has shown that over four pounds of cocaine and other drugs have disappeared from the University of Virginia Hospital over the past two years. The cocaine alone has been valued at $50,000 or more on the black market. Police believe that most of the drugs were distributed through street sales and two former hospital employees were picked up in a drug raid in June. The State Board of Pharmacy has charged the hospital administrators with being extremely negligent in operating the two pharmacies and in maintaining a proper drug inventory. The board made ten recommendations to the hospital, most of which were implemented immediately. New locks have been placed on all drug cabinets and only a few key personnel will have access to the drugs. The hospital has also installed an alarm system, a computerized drug profile system and now has pharmacists on duty for twenty-four hours.

Oktoberfest is coming!

Oktoberfest Plans Are Underway For Annual Weekend

The excitement and suspense of the tapping of the Usherettes, Geistmeister, Festmeister, and Mittenmeister officially began the period of preparation for the Oktoberfest Festival. Many students are now busily preparing for the varied aspects of the week-end.

Hard workers from both colors, red and green, have put in many hours working on script and songs for the skit, ideas for booth entry on the midway, and plans for the floats for the parade. Many other organizations also sponsor a booth on the midway and ideas are being prepared for this event.

Clown try-outs are now being held to choose which girls will perform as clowns for the week-end. These girls will have to practice very hard to learn the routines and stunts which they will do.

Work is beginning for the Usherettes, Geistmeister, Festmeister, and Mittenmeister as well. The Usherettes will be practicing constantly before the Oktoberfest week end to perfect their dance which will be presented before the skits Friday and Saturday. The other girls are busy preparing their routine and duties as well.

The planning and organization for this gala festival involves much time and energy on the parts of many students and friends. The air of anticipation will be seen throughout the campus in the weeks prior to this annual event.

proportioned to the colleges. He is also considering cutting the time required for a bachelor's degree to three years in an effort to get a bigger student turn-over and more money into the colleges. The last few minutes of the meeting were devoted to questions on political aspects in Virginia. Holton expressed his extreme disappointment over Del. Richard Poff withdrawing his name for consideration as a Supreme Court Justice. He felt that despite the charges that had already been made against Poff, he would have made an "outstanding" addition to the Court. The governor said he felt the 18 year old vote was a "healthy thing" and reminded the students he had publicly supported such a change for the last six years. He added, "the fact that young people haven't learned it can't be done is a very healthy thing for the country," but warned the students not to expect a large trend in the young vote because it would probably be as split as that of their parents.

The meeting was concluded by Gov. Holton saying he had no plans for running for the Senate seat now held by Senator William B. Spang.

William And Mary Corporation Challenged By Administration

By LYNNE PIERCE

Students of William and Mary, Inc., the corporation formed last spring by the Student Association of the College of William and Mary, has been challenged as to its legality as a student organization by the college administration.

Students, Inc. (Stinc) was created to provide the student government with a legal existence. Robert English, vice president for business affairs, had previously been required to sign all contracts entered into by the Student Association and the purpose of Stinc was to eliminate this procedure.

The Articles of Incorporation require that the Board of Directors be composed of the president, vice president, secretary and treasurer of the Student Association, the speaker of the Senate and the president of each class. They also declare the corporation to be nonprofit and non-stock with the purpose of protecting the interests of the students at the college.

The dispute the corporation is involved in occurred when it tried to rent William and Mary Hall during Homecoming. Lester Hooker, director of the Hall, sent the contract to English for approval and he wrote to State Attorney General Andrew Miller, requesting an opinion on the status of the corporation as a campus organization.

English explained his actions by saying, "I just wanted to know what the status would be as to use of state buildings and so on." However, Corporation president Bill Brun was later informed that the Hall had already been rented by independent promoters for four concerts. Brun challenged English as to how he could hold the contract on the grounds that Students, Inc., is not a student organization when the Hall had already been rented to independent companies. He also objected to the delay because English's approval is not necessary for contracts taken by the organization.

Hooker finally agreed to sign the contract, but no decision had been received from Attorney General Miller. Brun felt the corporation would continue to have this problem until Miller responded.

Beyond the scope of Miller's reply, the foundations of the corporation are being shaken by a widening rift among the student government leaders. Kay Rorer, who, as President of the Student Association, was a member of the Board of Directors, resigned from her position over a dispute between the officers, Students, Inc., has been mentioned as one of the major causes of the split.

DR. HENRY I. WILLETT

By STEPHANIE SIVERT
President Willett held his first press conference of the year Tuesday, Oct. 5. Extension of sophomore auto privileges, reinforcement of the college's policy on narcotics and visitation regulations, and the possibility of selling beer on the Midway during Oktoberfest were some of the topics discussed.

In regard to extending sophomore auto privileges, Dr. Willett explained that it would be necessary to wait until student teachers returned in November before determining if more parking spaces for sophomores would be available. He also mentioned that those having a car on campus were required to purchase a parking decal.

Concerning drug abuse, Dr. Willett reminded students that no narcotics of any kind would be allowed on campus and that anyone suspected of violating this policy would be tried by Judicial Board with the possibility of 4 years suspension if found guilty. He also pointed out that if any student wanted help in overcoming a drug habit, members of the administration, Judicial Board and Dr. Sams, the college psychiatrist, would be available for advice and consultation.

When asked about the possibility of revising the present visitation policy, President Willett commented that as long as the Batemann Resolution involving restrictions on state colleges' visitation policies was still in effect he doubted if any action would be taken to change the present policy.

The question of selling beer on campus during Oktoberfest was also brought up at the press conference. It was mentioned that the German Club had considered selling beer at their booth on the Midway. Dr. Willett said that there might be some legal stipulations preventing the school from obtaining a beer license for a temporary event of this type. He also expressed the view that due to a number of objections that still existed concerning the new alcohol policy instituted this year and with the large number of parents on campus Oktoberfest week end it might not be "a discreet move."

Two Professors Added To The Home Ec. And Music Department

MRS. PATRICIA FLEENOR

By VALERIE BLANKS
New professors have been added to the faculty of the Music and Home Economics Departments for this year. Dr. Hilda Zahrt is the new Music professor and Mrs. Patricia Fleenor is the new Home Economics professor.

Dr. Zahrt, a native of New York, taught fourteen years in a public school near Chicago and six years at the University of Southern Mississippi before coming to Longwood. The experience she gained teaching at the public school, where she was supervisor of the elementary teachers, highly qualifies her for teaching the music for elementary education majors courses she teaches here. Dr. Zahrt describes Longwood as "a place I'd like to stay in." She and her husband are looking for a home near here.

Mrs. Patricia Fleenor, originally from West Virginia, previously worked in areas of food service and taught six years at Southern Seminary, a junior college in Buena Vista. She received her B. S. and M. S. from the University of Tennessee.

Mrs. Fleenor teaches courses in nutrition and food preparation, and is supervisor of the Home Management House Residence, a house where Senior Home Economics majors have set up house-keeping.

She and her husband live in Cumberland County and enjoy hunting and fishing together. They are especially looking forward to the deer hunting in this area.

Longwood Sororities Aid

Colonade Club In Film Series

Longwood College Colonade Club opens its series of children's films on Saturday, Oct. 16, in Jarman Hall. This year the showing time will be 1:30 p.m. Longwood College's sororities will aid the club in monitoring the children present; therefore, parents are not required to attend with the children.

Purpose of the film committee series is to provide selected movies not otherwise available that will not only appeal to children, but which will enrich their lives and broaden their exposure to the classics.

These films are provided on a nonprofit basis as a service to the children of the community. All children are invited to attend the shows.

The movie Saturday, the first of seven to be shown this year, is "Rumpelstiltskin." It is set in the enchanting scenery of Bavaria with its beautiful castles. In this classic fairy tale by the Brothers Grimm, a miller's daughter is forced to spin straw into gold. This she does with the help of an elf, who asks for a valuable and unusual gift in exchange for his services.

The club invites all children of the community to come and help make this year's series a success.

Rotunda Issues Questionnaire For Student Support

Questionnaire

1. Do you usually read at least 50% of THE ROTUNDA?
2. Do you feel the paper appeals to student interests?
3. Does the paper represent student opinions?
4. If the paper went on a subscription basis, would you or your parents be willing to pay to receive the paper?
5. Should salaries be paid to staff members? If so, which positions should receive money?
6. If the staff was to be paid, where do you think the funds should come from? (Check one)
  - A. College funds
  - B. Student fees
  - C. Subscriptions
  - D. Advertisements
7. If staff members are not paid, do you feel they should get credit in semester hours?
8. Which students should receive credit?
9. How many hours credit do you feel should be given for this work?
10. Would you be willing to work on the staff if it was paid or received credit?

Return this form to the box outside the post office or to the head table. Those readers from off the campus may mail theirs to Box 1136, Longwood College, Farmville, Virginia 23901

Have you ever wondered who makes it possible for you to be able to read the ROTUNDA every Wednesday night?

The preparation of any newspaper that is going to be worth reading requires that a great deal of time be spent in tracking down stories and people for interviews. Once the stories are written, many more hours must be spent in laying them out so that the paper not only has a unified appearance, but an appealing one.

In order for this much work to be accomplished, it is imperative that a staff exist that will be willing to devote itself to long hours. Should these students be asked to perform this task for absolutely no compensation?

Many colleges seem to think not. The staff of THE TIGER, the newspaper at Hampden-Sydney College, is paid from money raised by advertisements and subscriptions. Many public colleges either pay their newspaper staffs or allow the members to take a lighter academic load and they are given credit in semester or quarter hours for their work. Rutgers University is now in the process of sending out questionnaires to colleges all over the country, with the intent of getting information, so that they can reorganize their staff around one of these two plans.

Longwood makes no provisions for the members of THE ROTUNDA staff. Those students who are willing to work are expected to donate their time for the simple "honor" of seeing their names on their articles. At the present, there is a small group of students who are willing to work for this reason, but it is becoming increasingly difficult to find students with this dedication. Honor means little when you have to explain to an English professor that you could not do his paper because it took all weekend to lay out the paper. THE ROTUNDA could "get by" this way, but is that enough?

Perhaps you can help find a solution to this problem. Complete the questionnaire at the left and return it to the box outside the post office or to the head table. The results will be posted later.

"I haven't seen her for three weeks. Every night she's working on the ROTUNDA. Think of it. I'm competing with a newspaper and losing."

The newspaper business is 10% glamor and 90% grind. She works late hours to help produce the ROTUNDA, and so do several other dedicated people.

We are dedicated to a quality product - but we need help. There just aren't enough people to do all that must be done - newsgathering, writing, editing, photography, advertising, production - the works.

So we're asking for help. No experience is necessary; and experienced writers will coach new reporters. If you want to help, and are willing to learn, we can use you.

Maybe we can produce a topnotch paper to serve our students.

And maybe she can go home earlier each night.

There is no such thing as A TENDER TRAP

Consider the raccoon - one of the earth's friendliest, most lovable creatures. He is part of the woodland lore and wonder of nature. Favorite children's stories endow him with almost human qualities along with the otter, the fox, the beaver, the muskrat and other forest dwellers.

Trapping animals like the raccoon is neither a friendly nor lovable occupation. Forty million leg-hold traps are set out continuously in the United States and Canada alone. The cruel, jagged-toothed traps can crush an animal's leg, leaving him to bleed, suffer and starve for days before the trapper comes to deal the final death blow. The animals are so agonized that they often chew off their own feet.

It takes forty raccoons to make one coat for a human. Yet hundreds of defenseless animals may die before those forty pelts are collected. The traps snap at anything - turtles, eagles, groundhogs, porcupines, dogs and cats. A trap doesn't have any feeling about that and neither does a trapper.

You, too, can help in the crusade to stop the vicious killing of animals that keep our environment alive and give joy to our children. You can refuse to wear the skins of animals for prestige or pleasure. You can speak out against these ungodly trapping practices in the name of the animals that still survive. And you can make a TAX DEDUCTIBLE CONTRIBUTION to Friends of Animals which is doing something constructive about this wanton destruction. DO IT NOW and feel better immediately - in the knowledge that you are helping to preserve our natural wildlife heritage - for your children and their children.

News Briefs

Textile Limit Set

TOKYO — Negotiators for Japan and the United States agreed Friday night to limits to be set on the flow of Japanese textiles into the American market. The agreement ends a three year dispute between the two governments which had been threatening their relations. The agreement will stimulate President Nixon's economic plan and will fulfill a 1968 campaign promise to the American textile industry. However, Japanese politics have been aggravated and Premier Esaku Sato is under fire because the United States has made no concessions.

Nobel Prizes

STOCKHOLM — In announcing the first two Nobel Prizes for this year, the faculty of Karolinska Institute and the Swedish Royal Academy of Sciences have honored two Americans. The first was Dr. Earl W. Sutherland, Jr., a professor at Vanderbilt University in Nashville, Tennessee. He received his award, valued at $88,000 cash, in physiology and medicine for his basic discoveries in hormones. His work is expected to lead to the control of certain diseases, including cancer. Simon Kuznets, an economist and statistician, will receive the prize in economic science, valued at $90,000. Kuznets' award was for no particular work, but for his overall contributions to the field of economics.

Water On Moon

HOUSTON — Equipment left on the moon by Apollo astronauts has detected the presence of subsurface pools of water on the moon. The water has been found in vapor form which is coming from an undetermined point in the moon. Geochemists have already stated that the rocks brought back are not the type that harden in the absence of water. In the light of this recent discovery, they feel the moon is not completely dead, but is still experiencing volcanic action.

Foreign Aid Cut

WASHINGTON — The Senate Foreign Relations Committee acted Thursday in showing its disapproval of U. S. involvement in Southeast Asia by cutting $850 million from the administration's request for $3.3 billion for foreign aid. The committee still has to consider a third part of President Nixon's request, which asked $510 million for foreign military sales. A large cut is also expected in this area. The committee also considered an amendment by Senators John Sherman Cooper and Frank Church, which would deny the President the power to use U. S. troops to stabilize the military and government in Vietnam. The committee has delayed voting on this until the House has a chance to vote on a related Senate-passed plan of Sen. Mike Mansfield.

Eligible Organizations Cut In Half

By BECKY NICHOLSON

Each year those organizations on campus that provide a service to the college and its members meet the qualifications set by the Student Activities Committee and are permitted to receive appropriations from the committee. The Student Activities Committee has allotted $58,000 for the year 1971-72 to 18 organizations, which is half the number of organizations which received funds last year. Those groups which have not been included in the appropriations this year include the honorary societies, the organist guild, Orchesis, Lychnos, MENC.

the foreign language clubs, the Home Economics Club, Philakalia and the Political Science Club. The Publications Board is a new addition to the list.

The organizations must request an increase in funds each year because of the increasing number of people they must serve. The appropriation of $58,000 for 1971-72 exceeds the $39,830 allotted for 1970-71 by $18,170.

All of the decisions concerning monetary matters were at one time made by the administration alone. However, the administration came to feel that, in order to maintain some continuity on the committee, it would be necessary to have student representatives who would have an equal opportunity to voice an opinion on how the money was to be spent. Student representation on the committee has now reached enough strength that, if they feel the need to, they can in fact out-vote the faculty and administration representatives.

The committee consists of 20 members, four from the administration and faculty and 16 from the student body. Those members of the administration and faculty who serve on the Student Activities Committee include the Assistant Dean of Students, Dean Nuckols, the Director of Student Activities, Tim Brown, the Assistant Business Manager, Frank Williams, who is also the college treasurer and Dr. Frances Brown of the English Department, who serves as the faculty representative. The students on the committee include the President and Secretary of the Student Government, the treasurers of each of the four classes, a rising sophomore and a rising junior, with an additional two representatives from each class, who serve on the committee for the four years they are here.

Student Apathy To Elections Prevalent

By TINA MOODY

Apathy prevails on Longwood's Campus in regard to the upcoming election of Lieutenant Governor. Of 35 students recently questioned, 20 had not registered to vote. Only 3 of the 15 who were registered knew for whom they would vote, while four of them did not plan to vote at all. Few had taken advantage of the fact that the registration books were kept open an extra week in Farmville for Longwood students.

Nearly all those included in the polling expressed a general lack of knowledge about the candidates. Several girls said they would have to do some research before they could vote. Something in answer to their needs, short sketches of the three opponents in the race for Lieutenant Governor are presented:

Henry Evans Howell, Jr., of Norfolk is running as an independent. The one-time Democrat has been termed as the only liberal candidate. He has received the endorsement of the AFL-CIO running under the slogan "Keep the Big Boys Honest."

The 51 year old lawyer attended the College of William and Mary and Old Dominion University before receiving his Bachelor of Laws degree from the University of Virginia. He is a member of the Virginia Trial Lawyers Association and the Norfolk Chamber of Commerce. Howell served as a member of the Virginia House of Delegates in 1960 and 1964. He has been a State Senator since 1966.

The Democratic Candidate is George J. Kostel, age 43. After graduation from Hampden-Sydney he was educated for his Bachelor of Laws degree at Washington and Lee University. During the years 1951-53 he was a list

Lieutenant in the U. S. Marine Corps.

Professionally, Kostel is a practicing attorney in Covington and Clifton Forge. He acts as a director of the First National Bank and the First Federal Savings and Loan Association, both of Clifton Forge. For the past eight years Kostel has served in the House of Delegates. He has been active in the House Education Committee and Corporation, Insurance, and Banking Committee.

Republican candidate George Shafran is supported by Governor Holton. He was elected to the House of Delegates in 1969 and served on the Virginia Ports Study Commission, as well as the Committee on Roads and Internal Navigation.

The Arlington resident was educated at Bucknell and Brown Universities. A veteran Naval officer of two wars, he founded and is president of Better Homes Realty, Inc. He is also president of Realty Programming Corporation of Arlington.

Longwood students who choose to vote may follow one of two procedures for the November 2 election. Those students registered in their home districts must mail in absentee ballots to be received within five days before the election. Everyone registered in Farmville may vote from 6 a.m. to 7 p.m., November 2.

The registration of college students in the districts where they attend school is, as of yet, provisional. The three judge court appointed to decide whether such a registration is constitutional in Virginia has not met. Until this ruling is made the only Longwood Students eligible to vote are those who registered in their home districts.

Geist Is Forced To Define

Geist is an honorary leadership organization whose primary purpose is to recognize and encourage quality achievement in scholarship, leadership, and service. Membership in Geist is recognition of individual students who have excelled in many aspects of college life.

In addition to recognizing the efforts of students, Geist seeks to actively support the college—students, faculty, and administration, and the community through various services. One of the major projects of the year is the sponsoring of a bloodmobile each spring. Geist members try to promote interest and support not only at Longwood but also at Hampden-Sydney and in the Farmville community. The efforts of the drive were well-rewarded in that a state record of donations was made last year.

Geist members are called upon at various times throughout the year to render assistance in such areas as registration and Founders Day. Another major service to Longwood students takes the form of the Elizabeth Burger

Jackson Scholarship, awarded each spring to a deserving student. In addition to this annual scholarship, last year Geist sponsored a special scholarship in memory of Mary Beth Kienlen.

During the spring and fall of the year, Geist holds its Recognition Assemblies in which juniors and seniors are tapped for membership.

Another area in which Geist tries to serve the college is the sponsoring of the Oktoberfest Weekend. We feel that this festival is beneficial for several basic reasons:

1. Profits received by Geist are STRICTLY fed into the scholarship fund. Therefore, the weekend is a humanitarian effort, not a capitalistic venture.

2. All campus organizations are given an opportunity to supplement budgets in order to provide needed funds to maintain their primary functions and specific projects.

3. The Oktoberfest Festival also serves as a good homecoming weekend for alumnae and as an occasion when parents, guests, and prospective students may visit.

4. Because a person cannot spend every minute of his time studying, the weekend provides a chance for students to relax and enjoy themselves. The weekend activities are there for all those who wish to participate and for all those who wish to be entertained.

5. Since we realize that education encompasses more than academics, we feel that this weekend provides an opportunity for students to expand their educational experience in other facets of life. Students are able to learn more about co-operation and responsibility during the preparation for the weekend. Taking a responsibility now might very possibly alleviate problems in the future. Furthermore, through working on Oktoberfest, students are given the chance to get to know their fellow students, to show their spirit and enthusiasm, and to demonstrate a loyalty for their Alma Mater.

Sincerely,
GEIST

Superstar In Jarman

October 25

The American Program Bureau presents the original American touring company in Superstar on Monday, October 25, at 8:00 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium. Tickets will be on sale tonight after dinner in the Old Smoker. Students holding identification cards will be sold tickets for $2.50 and $3.00. All other tickets will be $3.00 and $3.50.

Daily Announcements

Dear Editor,

I cannot understand why the head table has decided to read the daily announcements to us at dinner. It seems to me that all of us at Longwood should be able to read them ourselves. I realize that perhaps people aren't reading the bulletin but don't you think that maybe that's because they aren't interested? If we continue this policy of reading all announcements that pertain to the student body, we are going to end up with the same situation we had before. I don't know about you but I don't come to dinner to listen to a lot of announcements, especially if they're the same ones I just read in the bulletin.

Sincerely yours,
Phyllis Dexter
Class of '73

Toleration Needed

Webster defines the verb toleration in this manner, "to recognize and respect (others' beliefs, practices, etc.) without necessarily agreeing." In our fastly changing society, this is a trait which seems to have been forgotten.

In thinking of Longwood's campus, it is a recognized fact that not everyone has the same ideas, interests, beliefs, or opinions. However, if we are to live together peacefully in a cooperative environment, it seems that we need to have an attitude of tolerance—an acceptance of other people, even though they may not think like us. Tolerance is so important in all human relations, it is a courtesy we give to others. We recognize and concede to their different opinions and beliefs while we also stand up for that which we believe.

Truly wise people recognize that not everyone is alike nor do they act alike. We would not wish this because how very monotonous life would be. Therefore, a person's individuality or the way he chooses to live is rightfully his own decision.

If every student at Longwood would only try a little harder to respect this right of the individual (as we would want others to respect what we believe) then perhaps we could all live more cooperatively together.

Sincerely,
Bev Aston

Oktoberfest Defended

In regard to the article in last week's ROTUNDA entitled, "There Is a Sucker Born Every Minute," we would like to express our concern. We regret that there are those who do not see the value of Oktoberfest. For many, this is a time when Longwood students can express their originality, while they learn to work with other people. This is an opportune time for all people, for it encourages friendship and self-confidence. These aspects are vital to one's life, not only during the four years at Longwood, but also in the future. However, we are mainly concerned about the tone of the article itself. We believe that Longwood offers much for all its students. It is expected that all people will not enjoy participating in all of Longwood's activities. Nevertheless, we feel that Longwood students should be mature enough to respect, or at least tolerate, the opinions and enthusiasm of others.

Sincerely,
Becky West,
Brenda Griffin,
Susan Davis, and other concerned
Green and Whites

Helpful Experience

Define your higher things, Nancy Chase. Oktoberfest can teach how to operate under pressure, how to work with people, how to make ideas change to reality. Oktoberfest is a chance to make friends, to give of yourself, and to learn to accept the consequences. Oktoberfest is, unfortunately, one of those few times—another one is called Christmas—when any of us is allowed to share, to be happy, and to give totally to something which is believed in without being labeled as immature. So what if it is called colors? It's only a name. Do you want a place where you don't have anything to give loyalty to? Go out and find it—it won't be hard. Go to a place where you can devote all your time to the higher things; but I can promise that unless you add the dimension of experience to it, the knowledge will do you no good.

You spoke of not looking to the future—do you not think the experience of working with something of this scope and the knowledge acquired of stage production, costuming, directing, organizing, and human relations... do you not think that these are not also parts of being a good teacher, a good social worker, a good community leader? Can you not see the two sides? If not, then you are as guilty as those who, sadly enough, live only for the red, green, and blue at Longwood. It takes both, living and learning, to make one a whole person. Even if you do not feel this is the way to express living, through the giving and sharing and working done in Oktoberfest, then at least don't condemn others for it. I ask you to look at both sides. Yes, the side you see does exist, but so does the other. Can you see the good?

Sincerely,
Susan Stutz

Will Be Exhibited October 18

The National Carl Schurz Association, Inc. has sent to the Bedford Gallery a series of German Expressionist prints. These lithographs, drawings and woodcuts will on exhibit beginning Monday, Oct. 18. Gallery Hours, 9 a.m.-6 p.m., 7-11 p.m., Mon. thru Thurs. and Friday, 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday, 2 p.m.-6 p.m. and Sunday, 2 p.m.-10 p.m.

Among the prints are works of Ernst Barlach, 1870-1938, a sculptor noted for his expressionistic interpretations of everyday life. Ernst Kirchner, 1880-1938, one of the founders of Die Brucke, is represented as are works by Otto Mueller, 1874-1930, Emil Nolde, 1867-1956, and many others. The works of these Germans show their emotional involvement with the realities of life before and after World War I. Their distortion of line and color stated a new reality which was difficult for their contemporaries to accept and which the Hitler regime could not tolerate.

The exhibition includes color slides and books illustrating the achievements of many of these German Expressionist and their relationship with the Bauhaus, one of the most influential forces in Twentieth Century Art.

Plot To Assassinate King Will Be Uncovered This Weekend

The Tempest cast irons out the fine points for upcoming production.

PROSPERO'S ISLAND (LP) - The harmony of this magical island has been disrupted. "Certain nymphs" have reported that the lives of Alonso, King of Naples, and Prospero, deposed Duke of Milan, are endangered. The informers implicated Antonio, brother of Prospero, and his lackey Sebastian in this murderous intrigue against Alonso's life. The nymphs believe that the ruler of this island, Prospero, is threatened by three conspirators: Trinculo, the royal jester, Stephano, a drunken butler, and Caliban, half-man, half-fish. The virtue of Prospero's daughter, Meranda, is also thought to be in jeopardy. The nymphs verified that the plots will be enacted under the code name of THE TEMPEST on the nights of October 21, 22, 23 at 7:30 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium.

Questions On Usage Of Library Answers Provided By Head Of Staff

By LYNNE PIERCE

"We don't have any way here to compile the actual number of students in the student body who use the collection," answered Mr. Charles Butler when questioned as to the number of students who use the library.

Mr. Butler, who heads the staff of the Dabney Lancaster Library, was approached after several questions concerning the library had been raised by faculty members and students. The questions covered such topics as usage of the library, the number of items which are stolen, and appropriations.

Mr. Butler stated that out of 122,000 books in the library last year, a little over 59,000 had been checked out. However, he added, "We don't count it book by book. One book could go out three times and the one next to it would stay there". Therefore, assuming that nearly half of the library was checked out would be a misconception.

"We haven't had a staff large enough to take a running inventory, which one would have to do to get a real idea of our losses," said Mr. Butler when asked how many books had been stolen. However, he estimated that of 3,500 books on open shelf reserve last year, two per cent or seventy volumes had been stolen. A limited number of titles among the periodicals are sporadically hard hit by thefts, but most are left intact, which Mr. Butler attributes to the fact that "students don't make as much use of the periodicals as many other libraries I've been in".

Mr. Butler said some sort of checking system would cut down on the losses, but he felt it would cost too much to have checkers at the three public doors of the library during the hours it was open. When asked if some type of electrical detection system would be cheaper than the loss of books in the long-run, he said he felt the initial cost of installation would be too great. Mr. Butler said the library has taken no steps to have any type of system approved and classified the situation as "just one of those unsolved problems".

When asked how he felt the monetary appropriations of the library compared with other areas of the college, Mr. Butler replied that he felt it was well handled and that this library fares better than many in the state. "Library support in an institution is judged on what percentage of the entire appropriation for educational expenditures the library receives," and he added that this was influenced by the increasing cost of books and increases in the number of faculty and students.

No system of priorities is imposed on the ordering of books according to Mr. Butler, although orders marked "rush" will be placed first. Mr. Butler said that giving each department an allotment had been unsuccessful because some would spend more than their share and others less. He said now "we keep an eye on requests and try to keep things in line".

The Inter-Library Loan System is considered a major asset to the library. Mr. Butler explained that according to the regulations of the American Library Association, the system was only to be used by faculty members; however, the University of Virginia and other state libraries interpret it widely to include students. If a student wishes to borrow a book from another library, she must fill out a form with the title of the book, its author and other pertinent information and have it signed by the professor whose class she will use it for. The library will then forward the request to the library most likely to have the book.

When asked to what extent Longwood had an archive, Mr. Butler replied that Seminar Two, in the basement, contained the "Longwood Archives". This consists of bound catalogues, college publications, minutes of meetings and miscellaneous information from the campus. He stated that the library had no intention at all of establishing an archives of important documents or gifts of papers which might be given to the school. He feels it will be necessary for Longwood to be of the stature of the University of Virginia or at least grant the doctorate degree before this type of archive will be useful.

Longwood Grows To Meet Student Demands

By STEPHANIE SIVERT

As you step over the pipes and make detours around the cement trucks in an effort to avoid the signs of "continuing progress and improvement" exemplified by construction on campus, do you ever wonder what Longwood might look like 5-10 years from now? Students who have been here for the past four years have witnessed the construction and renovation of a number of buildings on campus, Curry and Frazer dormitories, the Fine Arts complex, and the Coyner Home Economics building were all built to meet the needs of an expanding student body. A lot of changes have occurred regarding campus expansion in the past few years but even more are projected for the future.

New Physical Education Building

Projected for the immediate future, if the funds are allocated is a new physical education building to be located across from Curry and Frazer. This new building has been designed to include among other things, a swimming pool with an adjoining walkout terrace, four tennis courts, and a 110 space parking lot for students. The Administration is optimistic that funds for the project will be made available allowing construction of the new facility to begin in the fall of 1972.

As a result of this new building, some of the funds requested for the next biennium will be used to demolish the present swimming pool now located in French gymnasium and convert that section into a recreational activities area. With the new gymnasium in the physical education building, Her Gym will no longer be needed and will therefore be renovated, if the money is appropriated, for use as an academic building primarily for the History and Social Sciences Department.

In order to handle the heating capacity of the physical education building, funds have been requested for 1972 to convert two of the steam plant's coal fire boilers to oil fire boilers. This would also help to eliminate some of the pollution. Next year the college also hopes to get the funds to build a parking lot on Buffalo Street.

New Construction And Improvements

A number of improvements have been planned as well as new construction in requesting funds for the next biennium. Plans have been made to relandscape the entire campus and improve the lighting. Air conditioning for Grainger, Hiner, Stevens, and the Language floor in Ruffner has also been planned.

New construction includes an addition of two floors to the Mc-Corkle wing of the science building. These two floors will house additional laboratories and a planetarium.

New High Rise Dormitories

During the next six years, the college hopes funds will be allocated in order to add a wing on the Coyner Building. This new wing will include two additional home economics labs and the campus TV studio which is now located in Hiner. An extension of Bedford is also projected for the future.

If the enrollment demands it, a high rise dormitory complex similar to Curry-Frazer but equipped with a dining hall will be built between the Fine Arts complex and the campus school. During 1976-1978 only one of the dorms is expected to be completed; the other one would be built after 1978. Still another high rise complex is planned for the west side of campus between Ely Street and Race Street to be built after 1978.

In explaining the college's plans for future expansion in regard to the planned high rise dormitories, Col. Abrams, Director of the physical plant, stated that "neither the Board of Education nor the State anticipates or has the desire for the College to get that big but we are required to have plans in case it becomes necessary. The current feeling is that if another 400 resident student dorm was built during 1976-1978, the enrollment (of the college) would be considered by the Administration to be the right size."

Class of 1972, take a good look around campus before you leave in June. You might not recognize it the next time you come back.

Madison Rolls Over LC Hockey Team

Longwood's hockey team met their match as they bowed to Madison with a score of 4-1.

The LC second team held Madison's offensive attackers and kept them from scoring more than one goal. Final score was Madison 1, Longwood 0.

Riding Classes Very Popular

Students Learn Horsemanship

The art of horsemanship has become very popular with many college students. Longwood students are no exception. Because of their interest and the interest of faculty members, horseback riding is now offered in the curriculum of the Physical Education Department with credit.

This fall three riding classes, with a total of 25 students enrolled have been offered. Under the instruction of Miss Sally Bush, Longwood professor and Mr. Fred Linton, owner and manager of Hampden Stables, the students have begun their learning on a strictly beginner basis. Instruction has begun with the fundamentals of horse care as well as the basic skills of horsemanship, saddling, mounting, dismounting, sitting, walking, and posting the trot.

Future plans for the riding class include an interclass horse show in the spring when all faculty and students will be invited as spectators. Guest speakers, including a veterinarian, and demonstrations of shoeing and hoof care are planned. A riding club is hoped for in the future where students will participate in intercollegiate activities.

Students are being schooled in forward seat tradition. It is hoped that an advanced class of riders taking jumping will be formed later. Future plans for the stable include additional stall space, classrooms, and an indoor ring.

Riding will be offered again in the spring, so all interested persons should register for this class.

LC Golf Team Undefeated

Ties Hollins; Tops RMWC

On October 12 the Longwood Golf Team put their undefeated record on the line when they played their final tournament of the season at Lynchburg. The tournament was held on the Colonial Hills Golf course with Randolph Macon Women's College, Hollins, and Longwood participating. When all the matches were completed, the score showed Longwood 16 1/2 points, Hollins 16 1/2 points and Randolph Macon 3 points. This tournament was the closest one of the season for the four golfers, but they still remain undefeated.

Penny Stallins, playing in her usual number one position, received 1 1/2 points for Longwood. Ann Santore and Louise Moss, playing numbers two and three respectfully, each defeated both of their opponents and gave Longwood a total of 12 more points. Playing in her first match and as number four for Longwood, Peggy Lynch did an excellent job and added three more points to Longwood's score.

After the tournament was over, Longwood's golf coach, Dr. Barbara Smith, had high praise for her golf team. "I am extremely proud of all these girls, and the way they have represented Longwood during the season. They have worked hard and showed great improvement along with an excellent record of 5-0-1. I feel that the full potential of this team has not yet been reached, but by practicing during the winter, each golfer will play better by April when the season starts again. I am also looking forward to the State Tournament in May when the team will defend their title as the number one golf team in the state."

Colleges In The News

Banner Trial

CHARLOTTESVILLE — The Department of Athletics at the University of Virginia has pressed charges with the Judiciary Committee against five students because they violated the ban on flag waving at athletic events. The students displayed the banner, which read "Stop Expansion," at the Vanderbilt football game on Oct. 2 so that it would be seen by President Edgar F. Shannon and Governor Linwood Holton. Afterwards, the banner was presented to President Shannon, Howard Gordon, Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, said if the students were found guilty of disobeying the ban, they will not be severely punished.

Rift Widens

WILLIAMSBURG — The Student Association Senate at the College of William and Mary defeated a resolution brought before it last week, which called for a referendum on the campus of student confidence in the organization. There has been some contention as to whether the Student Association represents the students and Mike Karp, who sponsored the resolution, claimed the rejection proved that the government was afraid of student opinion. The students seemed to have found another way to express their dissatisfaction when less than thirty per cent of the student body voted in a special election for vice-president. Because so few voted, another election will be held and if no one is elected, the referendum will be held. Another incident developed at the same time as the resolution, Old Dominion Dormitory, which split from the SA, voted not to rejoin it and is challenging its authority.

Mini-Semester

STAUNTON — A committee at Mary Baldwin College is now considering a proposal that the college offer a short semester at the end of the regular year. The mini-semester would consist of three weeks of intense study in one area and regular credit would be given for the work. The idea behind the plan is to allow a student to accelerate a subject without having to give up most of her summer.

Protest Planned

CHARLOTTESVILLE — University of Virginia Student Council President Thomas Collier has led the Student Council in calling on the students to join a mass protest on October 18 and 19 against expansion of the student body. The student body has been concerned with the increasing size of the student enrollment coupled with no increase in facilities. University President Edgar F. Shannon has asked the Student Council to abandon its plans for the demonstration. He says it can only hurt the school's image with the people who control the needed aid.

Libraries

RICHMOND AND STAUNTON — The libraries at the University of Richmond and Blue Ridge Community College both made the news this week for totally opposite reasons. The University has been presented with a book collection valued at $2,000, which includes seven volumes that once belonged to John Randolph of Roanoke. The Community College is facing the loss of its accreditation if the library facilities are not improved 15 to 20 per cent by 1973.

Victorians Institute To Cover Variety Of Subjects

By VALERIE BLANKS

The Victorians Institute, to take place this Saturday, Oct. 23, will not be centered just around literature. Robert Schuettinger, one of the speakers, is a social science professor, and will point out other aspects of the Victorian Period.

Mr. Schuettinger is an assistant professor of political science at Lynchburg College. Prof. Schuettinger's presentation will focus on Lord Acton, a great historian of the Victorian Period. His political biography of Lord Acton has been accepted for publication and should be out next year.

Among the schools to be represented at the Institute include VPI, Old Dominion, Mary Washington, VMI, and William and Mary.

Also, in North Carolina alone,

Dining Hall Annexation To Include Student Banquet Room

By JUDY THORPE

As most students have probably already noticed, Longwood College is expanding the student dining hall. The purpose of this project is to accommodate the increasing number of students and to eliminate the existing overcrowded conditions.

The annexation will be built on two levels - the main floor and the downstairs level, and will seat approximately 450 additional people. One section of the new construction will be designed as a banquet room which will hold 100 students. Therefore, clubs and organizations may conduct banquets during regular meal time. Two doors will adjoin the balcony level of the old dining hall and the roof, which will be a patio, of the new addition.

Also, the entire dining hall will be centrally air conditioned and required fire escapes are to be built. Furthermore, the kitchens are to be painted and the appliances rearranged to improve efficiency. Dishwashing has presented a problem and to remedy it, the main dishwashing room will be rebuilt and enlarged.

Colonel B. B. Abrams, Director of the Physical Plant, reports that the construction will cost $450,000 and will be ready for use in September, 1972.

Two New Faculty Added To College's Education Department

By VALERIE BLANKS

The education department has added two new professors to their teaching staff this year. These two men are Mr. J. Lee Pemberton and Mr. David Blevins. Mr. Pemberton, who is from Richmond, received his bachelor's degree from Emory and Henry and his master's from UVA.

He has taught on an elementary level as well as being principal of an elementary school in Richmond. His last position was at a non-graded elementary school in Chesterfield County.

Mr. Pemberton is very much interested in this non-graded system on the elementary level. He said that the school in Chesterfield County was the first to initiate this idea in central Va., but that it is spreading rapidly. Under this program the child works at his own level of capacity, possibly advancing in one subject more than others.

The methods of teaching writing, creative, composition and handwriting, and reading in elementary schools are taught by Mr. Pemberton. He is also a supervisor for student teachers.

Mr. Pemberton and his wife live here in Farmville and have two little girls.

Mr. David Blevins whose home is in Arlington County received his bachelor's degree from Madison. He then taught subjects in the field of social studies for six years in Fairfax County.

During the two years before he came to Longwood, Mr. Blevins was a full time student at UVA, where he received his master's degree. He is now finishing up his dissertation and hopes to have his doctorate by this summer.

Mr. Blevins teaches classes in the methods of secondary education and is a supervisor of student teachers. In the capacity of this job he is "passionately committed to humanizing public education."

Besides teaching, Mr. Blevins has many outside interests. He has been to Europe six times and London is his favorite city. He is especially interested in music and plays the drums and guitar. He likes different types of music, "blues" and hard rock topping the list.

Astrology Investigated As Determiner Of Conception

Reprinted from Washington Post, Sept. 26.

Would you believe, birth control by astrology?

The Czechs are experimenting with a form of birth control by "cosmogram" which they claim is 98 percent effective - as effective as the pill, and no side effects, of course.

Moreover, they claim, "cosmograms" can be utilized to prevent miscarriages and birth defects, to choose the baby's sex, and to help sterile women bear children.

The author of this new system of cosmo-gynecology is Czech psychiatrist Dr. Eugen Jonas. In 1956, Dr. Jonas noticed in his practice that some women experienced heightened sexual desire in a recurring cycle. An astrologist by avocation, he began to correlate this cycle with birth data and astrologic charts.

Dr. Jonas decided that the position of the sun and moon at the time of a woman's birth offers the key to her fertility. It indicates the days on which she may conceive for the rest of her life. By abstaining from intercourse on these days she may avoid pregnancy; or, if she wants to conceive, she has only to choose these days.

Furthermore, Dr. Jonas claims, miscarriages and birth defects result when conception occurs at a particular junction of the sun, moon, and planets. Similarly, he believes, the sex of a child is determined by astrologic data at the time of conception. With knowledge of these periods, a woman can avoid tragedy and bear healthy children of the desired sex.

At the Astra Research Center for Planned Parenthood in Nitra,

Czechoslovakia, Dr. Jonas and his colleagues work out "cosmograms" for the thousands of women who write to them with birth control and fertility problems. So far, Astra claims 98 per cent effectiveness in planning birth control and 95 per cent success in sex prediction and other problems of pregnancy.

Skeptical scientists all over the world are now examining Dr. Jonas' system of cosmo-gynecology. UNESCO, the Max Planck Institute in Heidelberg, Germany, and the Leningrad Institute of Gynecology are looking into the subject. Meanwhile, in Czechoslovakia, birth control by astrology is widely and successfully practiced.

Administration's Position Explained On Vending Machines

The never ending question of the vending machine

By JUDY THORPE

Many students have issued requests and complaints concerning the vending machines on campus; however, administration feels that there are many problems which the students do not understand.

There are approximately 40 vending machines on campus which are furnished by the Lynchburg Coca-Cola Bottling Company. These number of machines comprise an investment for the company of about $50,000. Each new machine installation must carry with it a guarantee that it will be profitable for the company. If a machine is not profitable, then it is removed.

Requests have been turned in especially concerning the drink machines. Many people prefer bottled or canned drinks as opposed to cup drinks. Several problems are presented if such systems are used. A problem arises in the disposal of the drink cans and bottles. This situation creates an increase in the physical disposal, and also many times cans and bottles may be discarded in the buildings and on the grounds instead of in trash containers. The drink company would be required to charge 20¢ per bottled or canned drink to balance their investment. Each bottle costs the company 5¢ while the cup costs 1¢.

The Coca-Cola Company states that their margin of profit would be reduced 75% if machines vending bottles and cans were used. Several reasons contribute to this decreased profit. A cup machine can supply 1,000 drinks whereas a bottle machine supplies only 226 drinks. This condition would require more frequent trips by the service man and would ultimately necessitate an increase in salary.

Suggestions have also been made as to the installations of more machines such as sandwich machines and ice cream machines. If the machines are profitable, there is not available space or electrical service to supply the machines. If a machine was installed in one dormitory, it would be only equally fair to install them in all dormitories. Also, the town of Farmville has recently passed a tax on vending machines which will take effect on January 1, 1972. The machines are taxed according to their content following this scale.

(1) A tax of $20.00 a year is charged for all jukeboxes.

(2) A tax of $10.00 per year is placed on each washer and dryer.

(3) Taxes on other vending machines are set up as follows: Contents amounting 10¢ to 14¢, the tax will be $10.00 per year per machine.

Contents amounting 15¢ to 19¢, the tax will be $15.00 per year.

Contents amounting 20¢ to 34¢, the tax will be $25.00 per year.

Contents amounting 35¢ to 59¢, the tax will be $35.00 per year.

If any machine contains a combination of the various prices, the highest bracket of tax is paid. This tax set up by Farmville has to be paid by the Bottling Company which would further reduce the company's profits.

In addition to food machines, requests for charge machines have been received. If such machines were installed, each dormitory would receive one which would be 12 locations. Each machine costs $1,000 and would have to contain $200 in change. These machines would have to be purchased by the college and an amount of $14,400 would be incorporated into students' fees in order to pay for the change machines. Experience shows that the machines are operable only 50% of the time and an experienced serviceman would have to come from Richmond or one would have to be hired by the college. The administration feels that the college and its students cannot afford to pay for these machines and the salary of someone to service them. Change may be obtained now in the Information Office and in the Office of the Director of Lankford Building. The Administration is open to constructive suggestions.

Suggestions are welcome concerning the different types of machines located on campus and the ways in which the vending machines could be relocated and give the college its greatest return. The college receives 10% of the $50,000 profits and this amount is used for the students in some manner. The machines are installed to aid the students. Suggestions should be made to President Willett or Jimmy H. Paul, Business Manager and Treasurer.

New Elementary Education

Seminar Received Favorably

By CATHI O'DONNELL

Among the new courses added to the curriculum this fall is a seminar for senior Elementary Education majors, (Education 460). The major emphasis in the course is on the uses of the Inner-City Simulation Laboratory which includes a series of films through which the student is introduced to the school, the principal, and the faculty. The films also present various problems and situations within the school which are to be discussed. Each student also uses the SRA Participant's Unit which contains cumulative record folders, case studies, and sociometric data. An informal discussion is held with Mr. George P. Elliott, acting as "more of a guide than an instructor."

Another major emphasis is the scheduling of authorities in the field of education for the students to listen to and to question. The lectures will begin Nov. 15 and continue through Jan. 10 and deals with topics such as "The Problems of Appalachia."

Comments by the students are all favorable and full of enthusiasm. The students said that the seminar is giving them some practical experience because it places them in the role of teacher.

One student pointed out that they are made aware of various points of view and a variety of reactions and opinions through the informal discussion. Another student said that this course provided them with a real situation rather than an ideal one such as that of the campus school. In this course, which is an outgrowth of "Schools in the American Community (Education 453), they deal with underprivileged children and children from the ghetto.

Although the meeting time is MWF at 9:00, the class often continues longer than the 50 minute time period. The times of the sessions are very flexible to allow for overtime and double-sessions.

This seminar belongs to the students and it is up to them to decide how the class is organized.

Prisoners", which they attributed to problems with organization. Now they have allied themselves with the National Peace Action Coalition and together they issued a call for regional demonstrations in cities, including San Francisco and Washington, and a national moratorium on business as usual which was to coincide with Oct. 13, "Set the Date in '71". Representation at these rallies were reported to be much smaller than usual.

People's Armistice Day on Monday, Oct. 25, will begin People's Action Week. A ceremony to accept the 7-point Peace Proposal of the Provisional Revolutionary Government of Vietnam will be held at noon on the grounds of the Washington Monument in the Sylvan Theatre. The chief negotiator for the PRG at the Paris Peace Conference, Madame Nguyen Tgi Binh, is expected to address the group by telephone.

An Attica Memorial Service will take place at the White House on Tuesday at 11 a.m. Lafayette Park across the street will be the scene of a continuing presence throughout the week.

The Labor and Commerce Departments will be the scenes of lobbying and demonstrations on Wednesday which will support a guaranteed annual income of $6,500 for a family of four which has been demanded by the People's Coalition.

"International Brigades," divisions of the People's Coalition, are scheduled to march on the State Department on Thursday Oct. 28. The group will protest against the U.S. support it feels is being shown for the genocidal policies of West Pakistan's army against the people of East Pakistan.

Demonstrators will surround the White House on Friday to conclude the week and will attempt to stop all comings and goings in a show of massive civil disobedience. Since the People's Coalition has not applied for a demonstration permit, they expect massive arrests to take place.

WELCOME LONGWOOD STUDENTS & FACULTY

We're glad you're back.

CARTER'S FLOWER SHOP

PHONE 392-3151

One block from hospital.

Thirty-one Longwood seniors have been named as recipients in the nationally recognized "Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges."

Academic standing, service to the community, leadership in extracurricular activities, as well as a 2.5 average set the standard for each girl's nomination. The students are nominated by Department Chairmen, and the sponsors of Student Government. They are then voted on by the Committee of Administration which is headed by Mr. Dalton, and senior Geist members, who have one vote a piece.

All nominations are sent to Tuscaloosa, Alabama, where they are approved by the editors of the annual publication, "Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges."

One of the advantages of the Who's Who organization is that with the assistance of educational and business consultants, they maintain a student placement service that provides employment contacts for graduating students and prospective employers.

Those seniors elected for the 1971-72 school year from Longwood, listed in alphabetical groupings with their major are: Beverly Jane Aston, elementary education; Mary Frances Baldwin, physical education; Katharine Lynn Barclay, art; Anne Regina Becht, elementary education; Margaret Anderson Blair, English; Brenda Sue Bonham, Spanish; Cora Diane Bottoms, mathematics; Carolyn Ann Brown, English; and Patty Jolene Brown, Spanish.

The second alphabetical grouping includes: Patricia Anne Coogan, physical education; Ellen Cary Dunn, mathematics; Deborah Anne Ellenbrand, physical education; Susan Jane Fawcett, business education; Sally Marie Foster, elementary education; Nancy Catherine Fowlkes, physical education; Donna Marie Gibson, biology, and Nancy Leigh Gunter, elementary education.

The next alphabetical grouping includes: Teadye Susan Howell, English and drama; Lois Jean Hrubik, biology; Mary Tabb Johnston, biology; Barbara Alice Leahey psychology; Mary Verona Leake, English, and Margaret Theresa Lowry, physical education.

The last group of noted seniors include: Joanne Derring Mace, elementary education; Kay Powell Morton, elementary education; Amelia Mary Nespoli, Spanish and biology; Joan Elizabeth Putney, history; Carolyn Elizabeth Simpson, elementary education; Linsay Lewis Thomas, elementary education; and Margaret Diuguid Webb, elementary education.

An Apple A Day Keeps The Goblins Away

By VALERIE BLANKS
Today Halloween is celebrated with fun and merriment. But in years before, customs filled with superstition were held and believed in.

In the early 1900's, Ruth Edna Kelley related in The Book of Hallowe'en some of these old superstitions.

Just for fun it might be interesting to look at some of these customs. Who knows, you might be tempted to try some of them!

There are many mirror-tests. A girl who sits before a mirror at midnight on Hallowe'en combing her hair and eating an apple will see the face of her true love reflected in the glass.

Standing so that through a window she may see the moon in a glass she holds, she counts the number of reflections to find out how many pleasant things will happen to her in the next twelve months.

The actions of cats on Hallowe'en betoken good or bad luck. If a cat sits quietly beside any one, he will enjoy a peaceful, prosperous life; if one rubs against him, it brings good luck, doubly good if one jumps into his lap.

If a cat yawns near you on Hallowe'en, be alert and do not let opportunity slip by you. If a cat runs from you, you have a secret which will be revealed in seven days.

To induce prophetic dreams salt, in quantities from a pinch to an egg full, is eaten before one goes to bed.

If, after taking three doses of salt two minutes apart, a girl goes to bed backward, lies on her right side, and does not move till morning, she is sure to have eventful dreams.

Pills made of a hazelnut, a walnut, and nutmeg grated together and mixed with butter and sugar cause dreams: if of gold, the husband will be rich; if of noise, a tradesman; if of thunder and lightning, a traveler.

Lemon-peel carried all day and rubbed on the bed posts at night will cause an apparition to bring the dreaming girl twelvemonths. For quiet sleep and the fulfillment of any wish eat before going to bed on Hallowe'en a piece of dry bread.

News Briefs

Nominees To Court

WASHINGTON - President Nixon has nominated Lewis Franklin Powell, Jr. and William H. Rehnquist to the Supreme Court. Powell graduated from Washington and Lee's Law School in 1929 and has followed a profession as a lawyer in Virginia. Powell says he has never desired a position as a judge, but feels it would be wrong to reject a Presidential nomination. Rehnquist is an assistant attorney general in the Justice Department. He may come under fire from several members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, led by Senator Birch Bayh, for testimony he gave before the committee last March which supported wiretapping by the government.

Troops Mobilized

NEW DELHI - Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's government has ordered the mobilization of the Indian militia. At the same time, an order activating all army reserves was put into effect. The action was the result of increasing tension between India and Pakistan over Pakistan's efforts to crush the rebellion in East Pakistan. Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Nikolai Firyubin, the third ranked man in the Soviet government to visit India since August, arrived Friday to carry on discussions with the Indian government over the problem.

Peace Prize

OSLO - West German Chancellor Willy Brandt was unanimously elected by the Nobel Committee of the Norwegian parliament to receive the Nobel Peace Prize for this year. Brandt received his reward for his work in bridging the gap between East and West, particularly in Europe, and for his efforts on behalf of (Continued on page 7)

Shooting At The Clouds

With Barbed Arrows

Or

If The Shoe Fits Wear It

There have been no major campus riots this year. It has been relatively quiet on the college campuses. So, to prevent extreme boredom from setting in there have been on the Longwood campus undercurrents of discontent in the various departments. These petty rivalries serve as far as I can see, no useful purpose other than muddying and covering completely other major problems that need to be faced.

Certainly criticism of any kind is not pleasant. But, if one is not willing to accept a remark less than perfect then improvements on the Longwood campus will be slower and slower in coming. Certainly sensitivities of individuals must be taken into account, but the defense mechanisms on this campus are very hard to comprehend. The nervousness and defensive attitudes that many of the faculty members display lead ROTUNDA reporters and other interested bystanders to wonder what is being hidden.

Running to administrative members with petty problems, or running to committee meetings to denounce one group or one individual is in my opinion a waste of time. Certainly there are other pressing matters that should be discussed and acted upon. Perhaps if the collective "we" at Longwood were not so interested in covering up our own personal inadequacies "we" (again collective) could act "positively" in other directions. But, acting "positively" is a relative term, isn't it? LW

Caught In The Wheels

By DARCY MORRISON

The Longwood College judiciary system has always been a changing organization which makes college law an easier task. Unfortunately, the changes do not mark a large scale progress in college law.

To begin with, the court's purpose is to interpret law. Since judicial proceedings are secret and there are no available transcripts, the student sees college law in a narrow scope. I realize the secrecy is to protect the jeopardized student but a compromise of the two aforementioned concepts is easy. The judicial board can make transcripts available without using students' names. This way the school's courts become effective as well as protective.

It is rather ironic for a student to be indoctrinated in the philosophy of democracy only to have her rights, not just her privileges, taken away when she is being tried by the judicial board here at Longwood. I know that in Missouri, a court gave the schools the right to set up their own format of trial rights but it is hard to believe the court had in mind the denial of constitutional rights. It would be wise for the board to take a second look at the trial rights here before some irate student tries to take the school to a legal court of law or the matter.

Our judicial board's main purpose is to maintain a high degree of honor in the school. Does honor mean that the student must betray her fellow student by turning her in at every discrepancy? Our honor code says we must. Is this honor? I think not. There are far too many petty, insignificant "crimes" committed for girls to become tattle-tales. But there are a few people who deem it necessary to become secret policewomen. It is people like that who cause animosity towards the whole judicial system.

The first reaction to students who have opposition to our court system is to lash out at judicial board members.

I would like to point out that this is a rash action. Joan Putney did not draw up the plans for Longwood's courts; nor did any of the other girls. The fault of a poor judicial system lies in the apathy of the student body. How many times have you grumbled over the court system but have not raised your voice in any type of protest? Or when elections for the board are going on, do you listen to the candidate? Do you ever vote?

Longwood girls build their own reality and ignore what happens around them. Student courts are student courts, not Dr. W. W. Wille's courts, and students should care how we are being governed. When Longwood students become one solidarity group, then we can witness change; then can we witness progress.

Letters to the Editor

Discouragement

Dear Editor:

"How many students use the library?" was a question on a survey which was recently distributed in the Department of History and Social Science. Therefore, it seems that the tone of the editorial entitled "A Book A Year, Part I" was definitely out of order since it was based upon a question which was not asked. There was a general question at the top of the survey which indicated the purpose of the questionnaire (What is the degree of library usage by students?). Below it were two very specific questions relating to the use of the library which specifically referred to the primary appointments of a library such as books, journals, and newspapers. It is difficult to imagine that anyone who seriously read the questionnaire could have made the inferences cited in the editorial.

After having made a false statement as to the nature of the questionnaire the writer then asserted that the results will be used to "boastfully" proclaim that the library is used by a large percentage of the student body. Such an accusation is grossly unfair. The questionnaire was a part of a departmental self-study which is currently being conducted and had very limited objectives. The results certainly will not be used to make any sweeping and unsupported generalizations about the use of the library by students.

The appearance of such an editorial is indeed discouraging. Let us hope that future editorials will be written in a more responsible manner.

Touche'

Editor, THE ROTUNDA:

The editorial, "A Book A Year, Part I" in THE ROTUNDA of October 6, 1971, contains the following two sentences: "The figures from the Library indicate that on the average about 2% of the books were checked out last year. This means that every student checked out approximately one book."

To me, responsible journalism has always implied accuracy. The two sentences quoted are shockingly inaccurate. The actual number of items circulated for use outside the Library during the fiscal year 1970-71 was 59,162. There are 120,000 volumes in the Library.

Sincerely,
C. E. Butler

EDITORS NOTE . .

Let's cloud the issue. What is an item in relation to a volume. The editor said "students" and "books."

Thank you, however, for pointing out my "Shockingly inaccurate" statement. I am now convinced that the Library is over-used.

I do hope however that you will have the facilities to accommodate the now overcrowded conditions.

Trivia

Dear Editor:

We will make three comments concerning remarks which appeared in "Letters to the Editor," October 20 issue of THE ROTUNDA.

1. "Helpful Experience" from Susan Stutz refers to Oktoberfest as, "... unfortunately, one of those few times ... when any of us is allowed to share, to be happy ...". Another one of those times, says Miss Stutz, is Christmas. We personally have never found Christmas an unfortunate experience, and consider it a sacrilege to compare it with Oktoberfest.

2. "Oktoberfest Defended" spoke of maturity, respect, and tolerance of others' opinions. Yet the undersignees of that letter failed to exhibit their aforementioned criteria by criticizing another's criticism.

3. "Oktoberfest Defended" was signed by Becky West, Brenda Griffin, Susan Davis, and other concerned Green and Whites. If we were green, we'd be concerned, too.

Janie Sherrod
Deborah Tillett

P.S. If one feels these comments tend to be somewhat out of line, please consider how much time has been wasted composing recent letters which were equally as ridiculous.

EDITORS NOTE:

All letters sent to the Rotunda must be signed with the name of the writer. Letters signed, for example, "Disgruntled Freshmen," will not be printed.

Would you give "pennies" to help people? The Prince Edward County United Fund is in progress. Two of its thirteen dependent agencies are Little League baseball organizations. It costs nearly $40 per season per boy who plays. He is asked to pay only $3.25 of this amount. The remainder comes from the United Fund. It takes 200 pennies to buy one baseball and 300 to buy one bat.

From now until October 31 there will be a large container in the Dining Room for pennies you may accumulate by saving pennies from change for purchases. Let's see how many balls and bats Longwood can buy for little boys in the county with "PEOPLE PENNIES."

P.S. Help yourself to a book-mark compliments the United Fund.

If YOU do it, it WILL get done - The United Way.

Photographer On Photography'

ARTHUR SAWYERS

"A Photographer on Photography" is the topic of an illustrated lecture to be delivered to the Central Virginia Chapter of The Virginia Museum, November 17.

Arthur Sawyers, a highly successful and well-known freelance photographer from Richmond, will deliver the lecture under a program sponsored by the Virginia Museum of Fine Arts. His talk will be held in Bedford Building Auditorium at Longwood College.

A native of Washington, D. C., Sawyers has photographs in the collection of the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York and the Art Institute of Chicago. In addition, he currently has a one-man traveling exhibition which is circulated by the Virginia Museum through its State Services Department.

He has had one-man shows at the Art Institute, the Tacoma Art Museum, the Itec Gallery in Cambridge, Mass., DePaul University, and the Valentine Museum and has had his work published in several national newspapers and magazines.

Sawyers received a Fellowship from the Virginia Museum for his work on a project to develop and eventually publish a body of photographic work based on present day life throughout the State of Virginia. A selection of prints from the project make up his Museum exhibition entitled, "In Virginia: Photographs by Arthur Sawyers."

According to Miss Barbara L. Bishop and C. F. Baber, co-presidents of the arts organization, Sawyers' lecture to the Central Virginia Chapter of the Virginia Museum is scheduled to begin at 7:45 p.m.

The public is cordially invited to attend.

Auditions For "The Firebugs" Scheduled For October 31

Tryouts for the forthcoming Longwood Players-Hampden-Sydney Jongleurs production of Max Frisch's, "The Firebugs," will be held at 2 p.m. Sunday, October 31, at Jarman Auditorium. A second tryout session is scheduled for Johns Auditorium on the Hampden-Sydney campus at 7:30 p.m. the same day. Tryouts are open to anyone wishing to audition.

"The Firebugs" is scheduled to be presented in Jarman Auditorium Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights, December 9, 10 and 11.

The play calls for a large Chorus of Firemen, which will include both men and women, plus five individual roles for men, and three for women.

According to Douglas M. Young of the Speech and Dramatic Arts Department and director of the play, the Chorus will play as large an individual and collective role in the play as any of the individual characters.

"The play centers on the dilemma of Gottlieb Biedermann, a man of good standing in the German middle class," Young said. "Biedermann simply refuses to acknowledge the fact that he is harboring two arsonists in his attic. This refusal has implications that perhaps go beyond the question of arson."

Author Max Frisch is a native of Zurich, Switzerland, and though his work is well-known in Europe, his plays have seldom been presented in the United States. "The Firebugs" was written originally as a radio play in 1951. Frisch, who has a passion for revising, re-worked the play for the stage in 1953, and then again in 1959 and 1960.

The Swiss author is known for his theatrical innovations and his disdain for the theatre's commercial interests. In addition to "The Firebugs," Frisch's most successful plays are "The Chinese Wall" and "Andorra."

'The Tempest' Opens Theatrical Season On A High Note

By DAVID QUENTIN VEST

The theatrical season at Longwood opened on an astonishingly high note last weekend with Dr. Patton Lockwood's production of THE TEMPEST. Led by Robert McIlwaine's first-rate performance as Prospero, an unusually strong and well-balanced cast pulled off the best show seen here in some time. The players were greatly assisted by an excellent job of technical work: the set, the lights, the music and especially the costumes left little to be desired (only once or twice were the special sound effects a little too loud).

The play was enormously successful with the audience, who were well-pleased with the more outrageously comic scenes; but thanks to the fine voice and commanding presence of McIlwaine's Prospero, the more sober moments were equally effective. Deserving of notice also were John Chinn, Jr., Rick Vaughan, Bill Bush, Stanley Kelsey, Bob Williams, and Ro Rutherford. And Bev McGill's Ariel was especially good.

Purists will have many reservations over Dr. Lockwood's bold revisions and innovations in his attempt to save the play from an audience not prepared to receive the work in its traditional interpretation. I suppose his decision to play the little masque with the three goddesses as high camp deserves discussion among those familiar with the original spirit of that scene. But except for that, almost all of what he did worked.

A wonderful amount of the poetry was not lost. The acting was graceful when it had to be, and the supernatural atmosphere was convincing. One hopes that so successful and entertaining a production will attract more and more students to participate in the theatre at Longwood.

Student Union Becomes Campus Trend-Setter

By LYNNE PIERCE

"Student Unions have a way of influencing student opinion. But I wouldn't say we've gotten to that point yet. Student Union is not exactly the norm on this campus. We favor things a little bit farther out, more novel, than other groups on the campus. That comes in the nature of being a student union. You try to look for trends and try to pre-empt them, especially in concerts."

This was the description of the general nature of Lankford Student Union given by Timothy Carter Brown, Director of Student Activities and advisor to the Student Union.

Past History

The Student Union developed from the Lankford Student Committee which was created during the 1968-69 academic year with the purpose of regulating activities in Lankford. Brown assumed his position in July, 1969 and was approached by several students at the beginning of the school year who felt that, since there was no organized group on campus to correlate the various projects being held, they would like to do something to improve the social life on campus.

The Lankford Student Union was formed that year and took over the planning of May Day and the presentation of the film series from the student government. The next year an experimental college, tickets to special events in the Mosque in Richmond and a broadened film series were included. As the organization begins its third year, it has added the rental of refrigerators and an art show to its list.

Student Involvement

The policies and plans of the Student Union are determined by an executive committee composed of the officers, committee chairmen and dormitory representatives. These students decide what projects can be carried out and how they will be funded. Brown stressed that his job consisted of offering advice on projects and signing contracts the group may enter in to. He added that the primary reason for having his signature was that companies felt it was less risky dealing with a person in an available position than with a student who might be difficult to contact.

Although membership in the Student Union becomes automatic when a student pays her activity fee, participation in the group on the part of students has been very poor. The group feels it reaches approximately ninety per cent of the student body through its activities; however, the actual planning of these events is done by approximately fifteen people, mainly officers and committee chairmen. A membership drive was held at the first of the year under the slogan, "Make it a part of you to be a part of us," but response was minimal. Although all meetings are open to the student body, few people attend them. Students seem to approve of the programs offered, but, Brown added, "when it really comes down to the nitty-gritty of organizing something, I guess they don't want to do the work."

Appropriations

The Appropriations Committee approved a budget of $11,000 for the Student Union this year, an increase of $4,000. Brown explained that more money had been asked for, but this was all that could be spared. He justified the increase by saying that the Union wanted to improve the film series by adding European films. This has been accomplished through the recently held Festival Film Festival and will be continued in later festivals which will feature films by Orson Wells, Ingmar Bergmann and Antonini. They are also working on improving the concert series, of which they feel "Superstar" is an indication. Brown also said the extra money was necessary because "if we take a chance on something and do have a bad turnout, we can bounce back and still have money to run our regular run-of-the-mill programs."

When asked if he felt his presence as a member of the Appropriations Committee could have helped the Union get its allotment, Brown replied in his opinion it could not have possibly done so. The officers must come before the committee and justify their requests. He pointed out that he not only abstained from voting on the request, but also arranged for the Union's budget to be considered last so that all of the other organizations would be sure to get their money.

"The philosophy is we try not to lose too much. We have, for example, this year $11,000. The Student Union's aim is to spend all year losing that amount of money," explained Brown when asked if the group made any profit. The Union would like to provide entertainment free, but with limited funds, since films alone cost up to $100 each, a small charge must be made for some projects. Brown pointed out also that projects like the Experimental College and May Day are presented free and involve a great deal of expenditure. Although the Student Union did not go into debt last year, it was very close and money had to be borrowed from the business office to get it through the summer.

Students Incorporated

The student government at the College of William and Mary has incorporated its student union into a separate company with the officers as the board of directors. The students feel that since this frees them from the authority of the college, they can provide more appealing programs to the student body and also that it represents more student opinion.

Tim Brown felt there were two reasons why this system would not be feasible at Longwood. First, he noted that student organizations have priority on the use of college facilities. If the Union was not affiliated with the college, it would have to bow to any student group that wanted to use an area at the same time.

Also, the Union can get discounts on products it buys through the college and is able to use state cars to transport students to events. Both of these privileges lead to lower budget expenditures. He added, "I think we'd have trouble attracting money from the students to give us a financial base. I really don't think the students are going to voluntarily pay to a corporation outside the college when they come here in the fall with no guarantee of what they're going to get."

Student Government's Power

Some students have complained that the Student Union is taking over the power of the student government. In particular, they feel the Union has too much authority in making policies and setting the direction on campus.

Brown feels the Student Union has provided a social atmosphere and new experiences for the students which "is a very powerful direction builder for a campus. I think it's pretty safe to say the Student Union has changed this campus." He disagrees though that power has been taken away from the student government. He feels that the Union is under the power of the boards. The Student Union's constitution must be reviewed every five years by the student government and he feels that policy making is still under the complete control of the three boards.

Experimental College

One of the major projects of the Union last year was the Experimental College. It featured free classes on topics that students had expressed an interest in, including yoga, bridge and film making. The Union felt that, for the first year, the college was very successful. They were particularly pleased with the success of the film making class and hope to expand it in the future.

The Experimental College will be opened again during the second semester. The reason for the delay is that the campus is so busy the first semester that the college would be hard to organize and would probably have little success.

The classes will have a slightly different appeal this year. They will include groups centered around more substantive issues, for example, the role of women in America. There will also be more "how-to" classes concerning certain skills. Speakers on various subjects are also being planned to come in during the course of the college.

Future Plans

Tim Brown suggested several projects he would like to see the Student Union become involved in. He feels a symposium program featuring outside speakers, to which other colleges would be invited to send delegates, would be an asset to the college. However, he feels it must be supported by donations from outside sources and notes that housing for the delegates would be a problem. A program of this type requires two years to plan.

A definite effort is also going to be made to improve the concert series and to bring more outside plays to the campus. Brown would like to see live entertainment brought to the students on a regular basis at no charge. In describing the group's future goals, he said, "We're trying to gradually gain enough momentum to be able to go out and say 'he looks like he's going to be a hit' and get him on this campus while he's cheap. Professionally, his musicianship won't change for example. . . . We're just now getting to the point money-wise where we can anticipate something like that and take a chance on it. The problem now is trying to convince the student body they ought to take a chance with us."

Brown emphasized that these plans are for the future and that there are problems involved, the biggest of which will be money. "It's going to take some more money which I don't see forthcoming. I think $11,000 is all we're going to get unless the fee's raised and I don't think the fee's going to be raised."

LC Defeats Lynchburg Hockey Team

Longwood's hockey team got back into the winning column last week as they defeated Lynchburg by scores of 3-2 and 1-0.

Longwood's hockey team was again victorious as they downed Lynchburg College in a home game played recently on Barlow Field. The scores of the games were first team 3-2 and second team 1-0.

The first team played fairly well but were very weak on passing. Longwood had some close calls when Lynchburg's offense got the ball down to their goal. The game could have gone either way, but luck was with the Longwood team. Coach Davis stated that the first team "could have played much better."

Although the score for the second team was low, this did not reflect on the skill of the team. Longwood's second team really showed their potential. Their passwork was beautiful, and they had excellent strategy throughout the game.

Recapping the games from the previous week, we saw Longwood fall to Madison and defeat Bridgewater.

In the game against Madison College in Harrisonburg, both of LC's teams lost with scores of 4-1 for the first team and 1-0 for the second team. LC's first team was very sluggish and slow, and this proved their major downfall against the very strong Madison team.

Although the second team lost, they played a very good game. Miss Davis stated, "They could have scored many times, but just couldn't get the ball into the goal."

Longwood's first and second team played very well against Bridgewater. Scores for that game were first team 3-2 and second team 0-0. Both teams from Bridgewater were strong and Longwood found the competition a little rough.

Longwood's next home game will be Saturday, October 30 at 3 o'clock on Barlow Field against the Richmond Club.

Colleges In The News

Ban Rescinded

CHARLOTTESVILLE — Virginia Attorney General Andrew P. Miller ruled last week that the ban on flags at athletic games which had been imposed by the University of Virginia's athletics department was unconstitutional and suggested that the ban be lifted. Miller said the regulation was too broad and, in its present scope, it violated the right of free speech in the First Amendment. The University canceled the regulation, but added it would continue to encourage people not to bring flags to athletic events.

Appeals Denied

HARRISONBURG — Officials at Madison College have announced they will not readmit two students who were suspended for their parts in sit-ins held in the college's administration building in the spring of 1970. The protests had centered around the firing of two professors and other grievances. The students were notified that the period in which they could appeal their sentences had expired and they would not be allowed to return.

Fire Deliberate

RICHMOND — The office of the vice president for student affairs and the campus bookstore at Virginia Commonwealth University suffered extensive damage in fires that were apparently set on the campus by arsonists recently. The academic offices were located in the old President's House which contained several articles of art. A 19th century Gilbert Stuart copy of Benjamin Franklin was destroyed and a lithograph by Renoir suffered water damage. The university felt the greatest loss was the early 19th century Zuber hand-blocked wallpaper located in the foyer of the building. Mrs. John F. Kennedy had tried to obtain the paper, valued as high as $42,000, for the White House restoration. The total amount of the damage is placed between $100,000 and $200,000.

Accreditation Threatened

RADFORD — The teacher preparatory program at Radford College has received approval from the National Council for Accreditation of Teacher Education (NCATE); however, the group refused to grant accreditation to the college's master degree program. The college had sought initial recognition for its program which has only been open since 1964. NCATE based its refusal on the below par condition of the physical resources and a weak advisement program, which led to poor job advisement. NCATE also noted that the library budget appeared to be very low. The campus will be visited by NCATE again in the spring to reconsider the program.

Emergency Drug Center

BOONE, NORTH CAROLINA — Switchboard, a twenty-four hour emergency drug center is being planned by the Welfare Committee of the Student Senate at Appalachian State University. The project will be patterned after centers in Greensboro and Chapel Hill and will be staffed by people trained in emergency drug first aid treatment by members of the original organization. Switchboard will work with local medical organizations and hospitals and hopes to draw community and campus support.

Dr. Rosemary Sprague "sporting" her armor as newly elected president of the Victorians Institute.

Victorians Institute Held With Sprague Elected President

Dr. Rosemary Sprague, professor of English at Longwood, has been elected president of the Victorians Institute.

The Institute held its second annual meeting here at Longwood on Saturday, with about seventy people present.

Dr. Sprague was elected to this office during the organization meeting, in which the group decided to become a permanent organization. Others elected by the Institute were Dr. Hargrave as secretary and editor of their journal, Dr. McNally as treasurer, and Dr. Bailey as historian.

The organization meeting followed the luncheon, which divided the morning program from the afternoon program.

Three professors, from Virginia and North Carolina universities, spoke in the morning. Edwin Cheek, Mars Hill College, spoke on Dickens' presentation of his female characters paralleling Women's Lib. He noted that Dickens' early women were the completely feminine, docile type. But in his later works he created them with more independent and individualistic character.

Robert Scheutinger, of Lynchburg College, discussed the religious and political philosophy of Lord Acton, a famous Victorian historian. Lord Acton had moral ideas about government, and believed in Christianity and liberalism.

Harry Hargrave, of NC State at Raleigh, presented some parallels in the lives and writings of Dickens and Tennyson. Both men were looked to "for faith and guidance" by the Victorians.

After the three speakers had presented their papers, the audience directed questions at the speakers and each other to clarify and argue points which had been brought up.

Later, in the afternoon program, Dr. Arthur Adrian, professor of English at Case-Western Reserve University, told why Dickens is still relevant to our times. Even in this technological age, Dickens has value to us as an entertainer and as a prophet. Besides his use of a "unique blend of sympathy, humor and satire," Dickens has an "intuitive grasp of

McGinley And Webb Return With Their Doctorate Degrees

Among two of the professors returning with their doctorate degrees are Patton McGinley and Randall Webb.

Dr. McGinley received his Ph. D. in September after three years' work at Georgia Tech. The previous two years were spent in teaching here at Longwood.

His dissertation was done in the field of medical physics. It dealt with development of a new type of radio-therapy for the treatment of cancer.

Dr. McGinley teaches introductory and advanced physics.

DR. PATTON MCGINLEY

DR. RANDALL WEBB

Dr. Randall Webb returned this year after working on his doctorate for two years at the University of Southern Mississippi. He had previously taught at Longwood for three years.

Working in his field of mathematics, Dr. Webb said that working on his dissertation had helped him with his teaching; he "looks at things differently."

One interesting conclusion drawn from his studies was that "a student's attitude towards the course is the best predictor of the student's future achievement."

Note: Wedding bells will ring for Dr. Webb on Nov. 23.

New Sorority Complex Refused By Women In Williamsburg

A new $2.7 million complex at the College of William and Mary has been rejected by the sorority women, who the administration had planned on occupying the buildings.

Of the nine sororities living in the old sorority court houses across from the president's house on Richmond Road, only two voted in favor of moving into the new facilities. The two agreeable sororities live in houses built in the early 1920's which are in severe need of repair. Although the fraternities moved into new facilities, the sororities were told they were not required to move. However, J. W. Lambert, vice president for student affairs, stated that it was possible that the old houses would not be allowed to stay open for use much longer.

The women were told by the National Panhellenic Association that they would either have to remain where they were or move as a whole by a majority vote, even though the college administrators had decided they could move on an individual basis. The objections to the new complex stemmed primarily from financial considerations.

Each sorority would be responsible for forty-two rooms, whether they filled them or not. Each girl would be provided with a bed, chair, and a set of drawers, but all other furnishings would have to be supplied by the sorority. In connection with this, each group would be required to help furnish the apartments of the head residents.

The new facilities would require an increased rent of $100 to $120, which many girls would not be able to afford. Each sorority would be given $3,000 to help defray the cost of carpets and appliances, however, the women feel this is not nearly enough to provide everything they would have to for the number of members they have. Loans could be obtained for some of the old chapter houses, but for other sororities the move would mean financial ruin.

Panhellenic rules at William and Mary prohibit combining the sororities or opening the buildings to women not affiliated with an organization. For a sorority such as Phi Mu, which has only seventeen members, paying for the extra twenty-five rooms would be an extreme burden in the opinion of its president, Lynn Santorski, of Alexandria.

The administration had argued that moving into new facilities would strengthen the image of the Greek system among the student body. However, Becky Walker, president of Kappa Alpha Theta, feels the Greek system at William and Mary is unusual because instead of dividing the women, it gives them another group for unification. The sororities as a whole feel the new buildings would have little, if any, effect on their images.

Lambert has announced that since the sororities have decided not to move, the houses will be put to another use. The buildings were constructed so that they could be adapted to other than sorority use. It has been suggested that the complex be used for faculty housing, a music center, an honors complex or a language dormitory, but no definite decision has been made.

Maureen McHenry, a Junior sorority member, feels that, outside of the financial considerations, the sororities resented the fact that the college had ordered the construction of the complex without inquiring as to whether the women wanted to move. In the long run, she felt the sororities would feel that it was a bad decision not to move, but right now the sororities attached a lot of sentiment to their old houses and did not like the idea of being pushed into something they did not want.

GIs Pull Out

SAIGON — U. S. troops were pulled out of the only remaining American fire base, Fire Base Pace, on the Cambodian border after twenty-eight days of shelling by the North Vietnamese and two incidents in which GIs refused to go out on patrol. On October 9, five U. S. infantrymen refused to go out on night patrol because they felt it was an unnecessary risk. The company was replaced three days later; however, twenty men in the replacement company refused to go on patrol soon after arriving. The fire base and the four big guns there are being manned by a South Vietnamese garrison.

University Of Wyoming Survey Shows Need For Contraception

According to a recent poll taken by the Associated Women Students, sixty-nine per cent of the women at the University of Wyoming presently need some form of contraception. This is 29 per cent of the women polled. Sixty per cent said they anticipated the need for some form of contraception before they get out of college.

Surveys were put in the mail boxes of the women's residence halls and passed out in sorority houses. Four hundred women returned their surveys with the questions completed, and seven with them unanswered.

Sixty-seven per cent of all co-eds polled would use the services of a gynecologist if they were made available. A few women stated that they would use the facility only if it were kept confidential.

Eighty-one per cent of all women polled would use the services of a gynecologist if they were made available at the Student Health Services.

Many women stated that they believed something should be done concerning the problems mentioned in the survey, others who did not personally have the need for contraceptives thought that it would be a good thing to have on campus.

Others stated that they would like to have the services of a gynecologist for medical reasons other than birth control.

The Fort Lee Army Band will present a concert at 1:15 p.m. in Jarman Hall on October 30.

Day Students Are Different

The Day Students of Longwood College are a group that try very hard to combine the best of two worlds: living at home and going to school. But somehow they don't quite succeed. The home life they manage well, and getting in the studies and study time doesn't seem to create too many problems, but becoming a real part of the school is something which is not quite so easy.

Stop and think for a minute about the things that Longwood has that really mean something to you. What are they? When do they happen? I think you will find, if you really think about it, that the best things Longwood has to offer that are unique about Longwood all occur at night. Another important part of Longwood's personality is a result of the girls themselves. And let's face it, the place that we really get to know the girls is in the dorms. Sure we have classes together, but we really don't come alive until we're "home". I mean, the dorms where I get all my candid shots.

I know what you're thinking. Well, the Day Students can always come visit the dorms. And that's true. But let me just ask you, how many times do you leave your dorm to visit someone who lives in another? I'm not talking about Frazer girls visiting those in Curry. I'm talking about Frazer girls visiting someone in, say, Cox or Wheeler, or even Tabbar French, and vice-versa. many, huh? Why? You don't like to walk across campus at night; I bet they don't enjoy driving over here late at night either, especially if they live way out of town or are married with families of their own, and many of our Day Students are in this last category. That's why many don't participate in Longwood's activities. It's difficult to say the least.

And then to top it all off, there's communication. For some reason which I have not yet figured out, The Day Students are always the last to know about anything. Two girls I know didn't find out "Superstar" was coming till Tuesday. Tickets went on sale MONDAY!!! So you see that really makes it tough on the Day Student.

What can you do? At the very least you can go out of your way to get to know them. Go over to the Day Student's Lounge and visit sometimes, you've got at least as much time as they do. You can always invite them to come spend the weekend with you, especially if your roommate's going off for the week end. And by all means tell them what's going on!!!!

Excerpts From Longwood Address By Lewis F. Powell

Lewis F. Powell, Jr., President Nixon's nominee for the Supreme Court, delivered the Convocation speech last year on November 17, 1970. The following paragraphs are excerpts from Mr. Powell's address concerning his views on the state of the American nation.

As a former member of the State Board of Education, there was a time when I was a trustee of your institution. It was then famous as a state teachers college. Longwood is now even better known as a quality liberal arts college. I welcome the opportunity of meeting with you today.

If you find my subject depressing, I want to share some of the blame with your distinguished President. He invited me to speak about the revolutionary movement in this country—a subject which I have had occasion to study. As much of this movement focuses on the college campus, the subject does have relevancy for every student.

Our democracy, and the values which it sustains, are under broad and virulent attack. For the first time in America's existence, there is concern that our free democracy may be destroyed from within. It may sound alarmist to suggest that revolution could come to the most prosperous and freest country in the world. Viewed historically, the conventional ingredients of revolution simply do not exist. Yet the chilling fact remains that revolution is being planned and seriously pressed by determined white and black radicals, whose winning acceptance and support—not from workers or farmers—but from many students and intellectuals who join in the ideological assault on their own country.

The Radical Organizations
The organizations behind the leaders are difficult to follow. There is no single, monolithic revolutionary organization, as even the Communist party is fractured. But there is a world-wide leftist revolutionary movement, with increasing resort to terror and violence.

In this country, the leading exponents of revolution are the Weathermen and the Black Panthers. In varying degrees, these are supported by the CPUSA, SDS, Young Workers Liberation League (formerly DuBois Clubs), Progressive Labor Party, and the Venceremos Brigade. These organizations cooperate and work together to achieve their common end—the destruction of the American system. They share common hatreds and a common willingness to resort to violence. Although not always orchestrated by the Communist party, they receive its active support; they promote its ends and employ its techniques. Their heroes are Fidel Castro, Che Guevara, Ho Chi-minh, and Mao Tse-tung.

The movement concentrates its efforts in the great cities and on the college campuses. The terrorism of urban guerrillas is mounting. There have been hundreds of bombings across the United States, and the killing and wounding of police have reached unprecedented levels.

But the broadest thrust of the movement remains on the college campus. Led by the now fractionated SDS, there are some 200 New Leftist committees and groups consisting of 20,000 militant activists, plus an estimated 300,000 generally sympathetic supporters, chiefly among students, graduate students and younger faculty members. Although this is a relatively small segment of our student population of some seven million, it has an influence and a capability for evil and violence far beyond its numerical strength. The New Leftists and black militant groups are the cutting edge of revolution.

The Campus Base of Revolution
"The (New Leftists) . . . regard the universities as the soft spot in a society they are trying to bring down . . ."

In a relatively few years, frightening progress has been made toward radicalizing the campus. Beginning in 1964 at Berkeley, the movement has engulfed many of the most prestigious universities and is a recognized influence on almost every campus. Fascist techniques have been employed regularly. There has been widespread civil disobedience, accompanied by sit-ins, disorders, vandalism and arson. Colleges have been shut down; files looted; manuscripts destroyed and buildings burned. Freedom of speech has been denied, reasoned discourse repudiated and academic freedom endangered. The rights of nonradical students—to attend classes, to exercise freedom of choice, to hear moderate and conservative viewpoints, to participate in ROTC, and to enjoy the detached pursuit of truth and knowledge—have all been trampled upon.

The drive to establish the campus as the principal base of revolution continues to gain momentum. University administrators confronted with non-negotiable "demands," backed by threats of coercion and violence, all too often surrender or resort to self-defeating appeasement. But most administrators deserve sympathy and assistance rather than condemnation. Far too many faculty members, shielded by tenure and invoking academic freedom, support student demands and oppose sanctions. Nonradical students, curiously ambivalent and easily duped, rarely come to the aid of their beleaguered university.

Manipulation of the Nonradical Students

This rending apart of academic life on the campus could not have been accomplished by the radicals alone, even with the toleration and unwillingness to enforce discipline so often manifested by campus authorities.

One of the ingredients which gives credibility to the radical movement is the significant measure of support accorded by the nonradical students. The extent of such support has varied from campus to campus, and has depended much upon the tactical "cause." There has been general unanimity on issues relating to the Vietnam war and to alleged racism. There also has been surprising student support for spurious issues such as alleged repression, injustice in the courts, brutality by the police and machinations by the "military-industrial complex." On these and related issues many nonradical students and faculty members swallow the party line of the revolutionaries. There is an astonishing absence of critical analysis and little concern for truth. At times, campuses have been engulfed by mass hysteria in an almost total flight from reason.

It is evident that the modern university has failed in its historic task of training young minds to be skeptical of sloganeers, to question the glib huckster, and to seek rational rather than emotional solutions. Radical leaders have been able consistently to inflame, confuse, exploit and even radicalize tens of thousands of fine young Americans—almost as if they were untutored children.

The Attack on American Policies and Goals

There always has been debate and dissent with respect to national policies and goals. No thoughtful person would wish to inhibit even the most vicious criticism. As a lawyer, I am particularly sensitive to the preservation of these rights, which are rooted so deeply in our Bill of Rights and in the Anglo-American tradition. Dissent and divergent views have helped mold national character and policy, and they contribute vitally to the solution of national problems.

Thus, I make no suggestion that the present broadly based attack is beyond the limits of permissible dissent. It is appropriate to recognize, however, that it has new and disquieting dimensions. The attack is directed against policies and goals which most Americans have heretofore respected. It has a volume, intensity and intolerance which may be unprecedented. It condones coercion and encourages disregard of due process. Some elements of it, both in form and substance, reflect a notable parallelism with the Communist propaganda line against this country.

The second category of targets is more subtle. They relate to the most vital elements of what we call the American system. The targets here include both processes and values. The processes now being questioned seriously—for the first time in our national existence—include the very fundamentals of a representative free democracy: majority rule, checks and balances, due process and the rule of law itself.

The values which sustain these processes of representative democracy are also being questioned, ridiculed and twisted. They include such concepts as duty, loyalty, patriotism, honor, decency, morality, civility, respect, tolerance, and the dignity of work, and national pride—in America's past, present and future.

The Intellectual Base of Criticism

The most defamatory part of this criticism comes, of course, from the radical extremists who wish to destroy America. But the hard-core revolutionaries are a relatively small segment of our population. They would have little chance of achieving this goal without the participation by an influential spectrum of Americans who choose to attack and undermine, rather than defend, our basic values and institutions.

Many of those who join in this attack, in varying degrees, come from the most influential segments of our population: from among the communications media, and from among those who write and editorialize in our leading journals, who are prominent in the arts and theater, who preach in the pulpits and who teach on the college campuses. An increasing number of politicians seek to build their reputations by irresponsible indictments of their own country and society.

Perhaps few of these individuals consciously intend to support or encourage revolution, but their influence—unwitting as it may be—is nevertheless profound. They call themselves and each other "intellectuals." Their influence is strong in the media, in scholarly and popular journals, in the arts and theater, in the church and in education. Some are instrumental in arranging the unprecedented publicity—through the mass media and by invitation to write and speak—which is provided for revolutionary spokesmen, including many with criminal records. Others, including rich and famous people, contribute to radical causes and entertain Black Panthers and other extremists in their homes.

In short, we are witnessing what in effect is an ideological assault on the fundamentals of our system and our most basic beliefs. If this assault continues long enough, without a balance of strong and constructive responses, the forces which it generates and the persons whom it embitters could frustrate the processes of democracy and destroy our most cherished institutions. Indeed, this assault could pave the way for the anarchy and despotism which are the prime goals of the revolutionaries.

Despite the agonizing and intractable problems which concern, divide and frustrate us, and which must be addressed without most determination, America is still the envy of the world. The people of virtually every other country would like to emigrate to America. In other free countries, the millions who would like to live here are restrained only by our immigration laws. In all Communist countries the people, as if they were slaves and criminals, are restrained by walls and barbed wires—not merely from emigrating to America but indeed from leaving their Communist countries at all.

Let those who glibly mouth the Communist line slogans take a look at the Berlin Wall, a monstrosity which is an affront to the dignity of man and exemplifies the inherent repression of Marxist doctrine.

Taiwan Ousted

UNITED NATIONS—The United Nations voted last week to expel the Taiwan delegation and to give that seat to Communist China. The vote came as a major defeat for the Nixon government which has been pushing for a dual representation. Following the voting, there was a great deal of cheering by many of the delegates, which is reported to have angered the President and his staff. Nixon announced Thursday that he was extremely disappointed in the vote and the conduct of the delegates, many of whom receive a great deal of foreign aid from the U. S. He felt this would have a definite effect on any foreign aid voted in the future.

Foreign Aid Cut

WASHINGTON — The Senate took a surprising move Friday night by rejecting the Nixon administration's foreign aid bill by a vote of 41 to 27. The vote marked the end of the Marshall Plan which was created in 1948 to provide aid to American allies. There is enough money left from other foreign aid bills that the program will not die suddenly, but will decrease over a period of time. The vote came after ten hours of debate in which the United Nations' decision on China was mentioned. Senate majority leader Mike Mansfield said he felt the votes were separate, though, and that the foreign aid vote indicated a new concept of the position of the United States in the world.

Britain Joins Market

London — The British House of Commons voted 356 to 244 Thursday night to join the European Common Market. The vote was a major victory for the Conservative Party and Prime Minister Edward Heath. However, a large block of votes was provided by pro-market Labor Party members who split from their party on the vote. Britain had refused to join the Common Market when it was formed in 1951 or when it was reorganized in 1957. When they finally applied for admission in 1961, Charles de Gaulle of France vetoed the action. The veto was not lifted until a year after his death. The treaty of accession must still be ratified by Britain and six of the market members. An extended fight is expected in Parliament with the Labor members who split from their party rejoining the group.

Longwood Undergoes Self-Study

Accreditation To Be Determined

By TINA MOODY

Longwood is currently undergoing a two-year period of self-study. Faculty, staff, alumnae, and the student body are working together in this process of evaluation which is required by accrediting agencies for member institutions every decade. The college is seeking re-accreditation by the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools, which operates as one of five such regional associations in the nation. Re-accreditation is also being sought from the National Council for Accreditation of Teacher Education, which deals with departments and schools of education, judging them by national standards.

Re-Accreditation by the State Department of Education will be based on the two reports submitted to the above named associations. In addition to this, Longwood is seeking to be accredited by the Council on Social Work Education for its new social welfare program.

Mr. William J. Peele, Longwood's Coordinator of Admissions, Field Studies and Placement, is the self-study director. When recently asked about the purpose of the project, Mr. Peele replied, "A college seeks accreditation to insure its students that standards of quality in all phases of college life have been met on both a regional and national basis."

He further explained that the agencies to whom the evaluations are submitted maintain definite standards that a college must meet before receiving accreditation. For this reason a self-study has such importance to a school that it adds greatly to the work of all involved.

Longwood's self-study is being supervised by a policy making body called the Steering Committee. Its responsibility is to guide and direct the evaluative efforts of all involved. This steering Committee consists of seven members plus three ex-officio members.

The twelve committees that actually make up the Southern Association Self-Study are composed of members of the faculty, student body, and Administration. Those twelve committees are: Organization and Administration of the total college program, Educational Program, Financial Resources (business structure), Faculty, Library, Student Personnel, Physical Plant (physical facilities), Special Activities (institutes, foreign travel, special evening courses), Graduate Program, Research, Purpose, Planning for the Future.

Similarly, the NCATE self-study is composed of ten committees. The committees are: Curriculum for Basic Programs, Curricular for Advanced Programs, Faculty for Basic Programs, Faculty for Advanced Programs, Students in Basic Programs, Students in Advanced Programs, Resources and Facilities for Basic Programs, Resources and Facilities for Advanced Programs, Evaluation, Program Review, and Planning (Basic); Evaluation, Program Review, and Planning (Advanced).

In explanation of the schedule being followed, Mr. Peele stated, "Planning for the Self-Study began in January this year. Self-Study committees actually began meeting in the spring of 1971. This past summer was a time for gathering data and essential information necessary for a good fall beginning. The self-study officially began in September and will end in mid-April, 1972. The various (35) committee and academic departmental reports will be incorporated into two large college reports; one for NCATE and one for SACS. The editing and compiling of these final reports is another responsibility of the Steering Committee."

When the study is completed, Mr. Peele explained that, "Visiting committees representing NCATE, SACS, the State Department of Education, and the Council on Social Work Education will visit the campus on March 4-7, 1973. Members who make up these visiting committees are faculty members, and administrators from colleges across the south and throughout the nation.

Their responsibility is to evaluate the job Longwood College did in the self-study."

As its director, Mr. Peele has found that, "the total effort of faculty and student participants and the general atmosphere of the Longwood Self-Study has been admirable."

It is working to underscore strengths, analyze weaknesses, make recommendation for improvements, and make projections for the future in order to provide the best possible programs for students and the most desirable situation for the college community.

Circles of 'confusion' created for and by returning student teachers

On The Road To "Positivism"

On Friday the first student teaching block ends and approximately 150 prospective first year teachers will be returning to Longwood to complete their remaining college career.

The experiences and attitudes that these girls have come in contact with are probably just an everyday occurrence to these now groomed student teachers. But, for those students who have not yet gone out into the public school arena these experiences are still foreign.

Perhaps then in this light, and in an attempt to realize a Longwood goal of 1971 (Find even better ways to communicate with all groups) a symposium of some sort could be set up for interested students to hear and evaluate the experiences that the first block student teachers might be willing to relate.

The ways to set up a group of this sort are numerous. For example, an hour or two could be devoted to an organized meeting with speeches, or the time could be spent with informal suggestions and warnings to future student teachers.

Certainly a symposium or a group discussion of this kind will not tell you everything you will "run up against" but these girls are first hand sources of what the public school situation really is around the state. Certainly in a case like this only a fool would not accept helpful advice. Perhaps a symposium such as this could also help to realize another of the College goals, "Approach the job with a positive view - eliminate negativism. The relating of the first block student teaching experiences might dispel harmful rumors that the second block group might have. In any case, I think the effort of a group communication should be made.

Choice Of Faculty At Registration

By KADY DALE

Students are now approaching the middle of their first semester at Longwood, and soon will be faced with the task of registering for second semester courses. Many revisions have taken place within the past two years in order that the student need not be put through a day of sheer agony fighting the masses, to get their classes. One must admit that there has been a great deal of improvement. However, though it may seem easier for us, one aspect appears to have been forgotten by the administration. It is a flagrant denial of our rights as students to be unable to select those professors we wish to teach us. The abstention of faculty member's names next to the course hours forces students to pick at random and take what they can get.

Many fail to realize that there exists at Longwood, certain faculty-student relationships that are very strained. One cannot sincerely believe there is a harmonious relationship between all educators and their pupils. Personality clashes can appear in any given situation, and often times do. To be totally objective is very difficult in a classroom, no matter what side of the desk you are sitting on.

I am not only speaking of the teacher's attitude toward a particular person he may dislike, but also of the student who feels some sort of animosity toward her professor. In the former case, a hard working girl may have to settle for extremely harsh grading practices because the instructor has some grievance toward her. Grant it, he or she may not realize they hold this feeling but when it comes to evaluation it shows. The student is not blind, and in most instances realizes the problem but can do nothing short of withdrawing from the course, failing. Of course she has the right to have a conference with her professor, but in most instances it serves only to make matters worse.

In looking at the other side of the coin, the student may hold something against the teacher, thus creating a block between any communication that may occur. In this instance, both are hindered by the experience. Perhaps the instructor may bare the brunt of this, and his class will suffer.

With the ability to choose that person you wish to teach you, much of this conflict can be resolved. Of course, all will not be perfect, but the level of learning, as well as attitudes in class will be much greater.

Certainly, there would be some students who would use this privilege to select those professors they feel are easy graders, whereby they could slide through school without doing any work or receiving much of an education. I hate to think, however, that the majority of girls on campus would abuse this right and deny themselves a decent education.

I ask that those involved in registration please consider this proposal, for the betterment of both the professor and student at Longwood.

Letters to the Editor

Motto Attacked

Dear Editor:

I propose either a disposal or a revival of the section of the Longwood motto which so boldly states: "We Teach to Teach." Hopefully there exists today at Longwood College neither students nor educators who are willing to uphold this inane tenet. If so, the institution is surely based upon a false premise. While in the 1830's the predominate teaching practice with its reliance on the 3 R's, the rote method of learning, and other such veritable spoon feeding educational procedures was adequately exemplified by this assertion, the Longwood of the 1970's is, indeed, in a dire state of affairs if it still "teaches to teach." First of all, the motto is both banal and pragmatic. A clear dichotomy of minds is implied: the teacher reigns as superior and the student is placed on the level of a mere pupil, a passive receptor of ideas. The entire system, as intimated by the motto, emerges as a case of having the chicken without the egg. For, if the prime goal of education is "to teach to teach," the essential "heart of the matter" is de-emphasized and the humanities are callously and inevitably whittled away.

No one can be taught to teach! This capability comes only as the result of the evolutionary process of self-realization and fulfillment. It is only through repeated contact with varying experiences and with dynamic intellectual endeavors that one could even hope to be able to stimulate the depths of another's mind.

Feeling sympathetic towards a semiadherence to tradition, I began to wonder if I was not being somewhat harsh on Longwood 1971 for her motto; yet, with a look at several other colleges which are also steeped in tradition, I can feel no sympathy for our redundant and superficial code. Harvard, for example, has simply (yet meaningfully), Veritas for its motto. The motto of Kingsborough College in New York is: "Opportunity, Development, Achievement." Other more meaningful mottos include: Jamestown College: "Let each become all he is capable of being;" Mary Baldwin College: "Non Pro Tempore Sed Aeternitate;" Winthrop College (a state, female institution in South Carolina): "Veritas cum Libertate."

If anyone here still adheres to the motto of Longwood College, I would offer the admonitions of Mark Twain and William Blake: "Don't let your schooling interfere with your education;" and, "The tigers of wrath are wiser than the horses of instruction."

Janet Gilchrist

P.S. I am afraid that the Munchers would feel that a mock Octoberfest without beer is like a mock political convention without candidates!

Accusations

Dear Longwood Students and CHI, We, representing third floor Tabb, would like to make a statement concerning the remark during Alumni CHI walk. Several rumors blaming various third floor Tabb girls have circulated through the campus. We would like to request that these rumors cease. All parties are innocent until proven guilty.

We would like to apologize for the remark made from our windows. However, we would like to note that our windows are easily accessible to everyone. Others frequently use our windows - especially during CHI walks - because they offer an excellent view of the colonnade.

Please, fellow students, faculty, administrator, and parents accept our apology. We too, were upset by the incident, but we are also growing weary of these false accusations.

Thank you,
Susie King - Hall
President,

College Students

Dear Editor,

I will admit that some traditions are valid and useful. Chi, for instance, has helped increase school spirit among the upperclassmen and given a sense of pride to most students.

There is one tradition which I feel is wholly irrational. I am speaking, of course, of the green versus red paint battle. As I sit writing this letter, I hear outside the screams of "mature young ladies" as they douse their classmates with pails of paint. Is this college? Do 18 year olds come to an institute of higher learning so that they may express their class spirit in such a ridiculous manner? Wouldn't it be more profitable to take the money and time spent in such an immature venture and donate it to a scholarship for a deserving student, or to the Longwood Foundation?

True, every school needs some avenue of escape from academics for its students but must ours be so infantile? When are you going to grow up?

Sincerely,
Florence Richards
Judy Seay

One more gripe - must every such event take place in front of Wheeler dorm? There are students trying to study at night in said dormitory and the clamorings outside tend to distract needed attention. Wouldn't Stubbs Mall be a better place for screaming and yelling? If done near Lankford, the students in Stubbs wouldn't be disturbed and those interested can yell to their hearts content.

Disturbed

Dear Editor:

I am writing in reference to a recent "Blue and White" sing held on Wheeler Mall for Octoberfest. I think it was very inconsiderate of these girls to hold their "sing" in front of our dorm so late at night. It was impossible for those of us who had tests the next day to study with this noise right outside our windows. Why couldn't they have showed their school spirit in front of the Rotunda or Lankford where it would not have bothered our studying. The previous night the "paint battle" had been held and

Members Of Art Faculty Exhibit At Washington And Lee

A group of artists from the Longwood College Art Department Faculty are exhibiting works at Washington and Lee University from November 1 through the 14th.

The show consists of a variety of media and expression. Miss Virginia Bedford, former chairman of the Art Department, is showing examples of ceramics and enamels. In her work Miss Bedford combines a delicate quality of color harmony and arrangement of forms and patterns which intensifies and enlivens her pieces of pottery and enameling.

Miss Barbara L. Bishop, native of Roanoke, Virginia, and Chairman of the Art Department, exhibits a collection of prints, drawings, and photographs. Developing a landscape theme, Miss Bishop builds contradictions in spatial relationships with positive-negative reversals and fragmented overlays.

A combination of black and white and color photographs by Miss Elisabeth L. Flynn adds a dimension to the show. Depicting subjects as common as goldfish and as mysterious as a clouded sky, Miss Flynn interprets the "Life-Objects" in such a way to set them apart as fine art.

Drawings and sculpture are exhibited by Mrs. Nancy V. Leitch. With the precision of a draftsman and the patience of a sculptor, Miss Leitch has produced fine examples from the two and three-dimensional world of an artist.

Mrs. Janice Lemen contributes a splash of color to the show with her paintings and serigraphs. Reflective-like hues directed in space by linear design are evident in her works. Transparencies and overlays are characteristic of the delicate silkscreen prints by Mrs. Lemen.

An anti-war element can be seen in the thematic drawings and paintings by Mr. Paul Rouillard. Bold colors combine and contrast with the softness of drawn areas and create a tension in his works. The tragic hero lives again through the enhancement and depiction in these drawings and paintings.

Mr. Homer L. Springer, Jr. also submits drawings and paintings to the show. In his work, Mr. Springer achieves movement and balance between shape and intricate design. Using chiefly the figure as a motif, Mr. Springer breathes a classical air into his work with craftsmanship, and sense of design.

The ceramics and wall hangings of Miss Margaret G. Violette are innovative, "Wild and Wooly." To such an old art, Miss Violette has injected a newness, another-worldness. Creative designs and procedures make Miss Violette's art a different experience altogether.

Members of the art faculty exhibit their works frequently, both regionally and nationally. In the Art Department, the faculty strives to enhance creative learning and experimentation in the visual arts, emphasizing concept development, a foundation in art techniques is presented through experiences, studies, facilities, and the faculty. The Department of Art fulfills its commitment to the development of personal expression, the humanities, aesthetic judgment, and to the relationship of the content of art in the nature of learning and human development essential for a liberal education.

Art Department Busy With Various Shows

Miss Bishop and Mr. Springer are currently showing in the Roanoke Fine Arts Center Show for Area Artists. "On the Brandywine" is the title of Miss Bishop's print which depicts a series of trees in an illusion of space created by placement and positive-negative reversals in black and white. Mr. Springer's drawing is a delicate rendering which blends sensitivity for subject matter with concern for detail.

The Virginia Art Education Association convened on Friday, October 29 in Richmond. Attending the meeting from the Art Department were: Mrs. Lemen, Miss Violette, Mr. Springer, Mr. Rouillard, and students Shelley Moorer, Barbara Martin, Sherry Van Valkenburg, and Gayle Anderson.

Mrs. Leitch attended the Virginia Humanities Conference at Sweet Briar College on Saturday, October 30. The program consisted of a variety of films including "Koestler on Creativity," "Film and the Two Cultures: Closing the Imagination Gap," "Little Big Man." Student films, and others. The films were followed by discussions.

On display in the waiting room of Dr. A. B. Adams, Radiologist at the Southside Hospital, are works by students under Mrs. Lemen. Three students, Betsy Craig, Susan March, and Marilyn Sandige, have paintings exhibited while the following students have serigraph (silk screen) prints exhibited: Nancy Allen, Kathy Barclay, Mary Ann Bentley, Margaret Dow, Janet Lawter, Jane Matthews, Darcy Morrisson, Shelley Moorer, Janie Mosby, Cynthia Roller Todd, and Sherry Van Valkenburg.

Longwood Certification Program Recognized By 33 States

The State Board of Education recently announced that interchangeable agreements for teacher certification exist among 33 of our 50 states. Virginia is one of the states.

This information is very significant to persons planning a teaching career in as much as they can be assured that on meeting Virginia State Certification requirements their credentials will be recognized in the following states:

The key to this reciprocity rests in the fact that these states through state legislation or participation in the National Association of State Directors of Teacher Education and Certification (NASDTEC) reciprocity system (or both) recognize certification based on teacher education programs approved on the basis of nationally recognized standards.

Virginia adopted these standards in 1968. All of the teacher education programs at Longwood College meet or exceed these standards and are approved by the Virginia State Board of Education, a member of NASDTEC.

It is to be expected that other states will strive to achieve these standards and enjoy the benefits of reciprocity in the future. Experience has indicated that states not enjoying reciprocity accept the qualifications of a teacher applicant from states meeting these standards. In the recent past Longwood graduates have been certified by South Carolina, Texas, Louisiana, Alabama, and Mississippi. Any information or assistance in obtaining out of state certification should be directed to the Registrar or Director of Placement.

Superstar Provides Memorable Show For Longwood Audience

By FRED PEYTON HERNDON

"Were You There When They Crucified My Lord?" began a somewhat delayed version of Broadway's sensational hit, JESUS CHRIST SUPERSTAR. October 25 was a most memorable evening for many at Longwood, for it was that night that the Original American Touring Company brought to life some of Western Civilization's most memorable characters as they performed SUPERSTAR, slightly modified from the original, before a crowd of nearly one thousand more than satisfied viewers.

Unfortunately, the overall success of the production was marred by technical problems with the audio system. As one entered to take his seat for the evening, he was immediately stormed by explosive sounds that kept him from hearing the person by his side. Had only the volume been lower, perhaps the audience would have been able to understand and appreciate more the lyrics of this rock opera. Yet there were those few who were more fortunate as they followed song with Webber and Rice's libretto.

Although the physical surroundings may have been a hindrance, this troupe of young performers 'turned on' the audience with their exceptionally talented musical abilities. Backed up by a five man rock group, who continued to add to the making of a deafened society, this portrayal of the Easter season was highlighted by the dynamic role of Christ. Unlike the New York production, where Judas was played by a Black man, the reverse occurred with a Black Jesus, clothed in a suit of white — the traditional costume for the 'good guy.' His dramatic and musical portrayal was exceptional; his various facial expressions remained in the character who was greatly troubled about the future of his world. Judas, dressed in black, performed equally well, presenting in contemporary dialogue a character who received less of a villain's role which had traveled with him for the past twenty centuries.

Along with the roles of Christ and Judas goes a special rating for the character of Herod, who almost stole the show with a ragtime version of "King Herod's Song." His rhythmic movements as he displayed his modern style of the Charleston caused the audience to move as rhythmically in their seats.

SUPERSTAR received a standing ovation . . . a well deserved response for this musically talented group. Their breath control was less than desired, but with such an energetic performance, it's a wonder that each member was not literally out of breath. Their performance followed very closely to the Rice and Webber musical with slight alterations — ones which tried to give the production some continuity. Opening and closing with "Were You There . . . My Lord?" perhaps suggests a cyclic pattern of the never ending story of Christ and His crucifixion.

"Morning-After" Pill Under Study

A recently completed study at the University of Michigan Health Service on 1,000 women of child bearing age has verified the effectiveness of diethylstilbestrol on the "morning-after" pill.

Diethylstilbestrol is a female hormone like estrogen. It is not a new discovery but is being put to a new use. Administration of the medication must be begun within seventy-two hours of sexual exposure. The pill consists of twenty-five milligrams of diethylstilbestrol, which must be taken twice daily for five days.

Reason For Research

Physicians have often been faced in the past with the problem of providing post-coital help to female patients. The requests most often come from women who have been exposed to unprotected sexual intercourse, for example, rape, neglect to use prophylaxis or failure of prophylaxis, such as condom breakage. Formerly, the patient had been advised to wait until her next menses, however, the results of this could be an abortion or unwanted child.

One of the initial studies on affective postcoital antifertility agents was conducted by J. M. Morris and his New Haven research group. The experiments were conducted on animals and the antigotic action of estrogens has been known for several years.

1,000 Women

The study using diethylstilbestrol was begun at the University of Michigan Health Service in the fall of 1967. It was explained to each woman who applied that this was a new application of an already known drug and that a follow-up story would be conducted. Undesirable effects which might occur were discussed and the medicine was given only to consenting women. That this was an emergency type of treatment was emphasized and they were advised to find other means if continued contraception was necessary. In each case, a letter or interview was obtained to verify that the next menses came and the woman was not pregnant after ingestion of the pill.

Of the 1,000 women in the experiment, who had used no method of contraception within the twenty-four hours preceding intercourse, there was not one pregnancy. To evaluate this effectiveness, a study was done to determine the chance of pregnancy from one unprotected act of sexual intercourse. The results that Doctor C. Tulge was able to draw from available statistics was that the probability of conception in such an instance was between 1 in 50 and 1 in 25.

Data Gathering

The therapy concerned in the project came under the planning and direction of a gynecologist from the University Medical Center and the data was collected and compiled the staff of the Health Service under the direction of Lucile Kirtland Kuchera, M.D. The following tables include the separate conditions which were considered. When data is listed as "unknown," it is because the information was not noted on the patient's correspondence or the clinician did not put the information on the inquiry form. Tables 1 and 2 show the time exposure in relation to the menstrual cycle and the use of prophylaxis.

Side Effects

No side effects were usually noted before six hours after the pill was ingested. The reaction was delayed by administering enteric coated diethylstilbestrol, but it was not prevented. No serious side effect was noted in any of the 1,000 women under treatment and 45.2% had practically no reaction at all. However, in some cases, patients observed more than one side effect. Table 3 shows the type of side effects and their incidence.

Colleges In The News

Officers Resign

FERRUM — The officers of the Student Government Association at Ferrum College have resigned from office because they felt they were not serving the student body. The officers deliberated for five weeks before making a decision. Charles Ramsey, who was president, felt that too much distinction was being made between the officers and the student body.

"Gestapo Tactics"

RICHMOND — Students at Virginia Commonwealth University are protesting the recent actions and conduct of their campus police force. The police entered a class which was in progress and arrested a student over the protests of the class and professor. The student, James B. Thomas, was suspected of possessing marijuana with the intent of distributing it. Rutledge Dennis, who was conducting a class in African studies, charged that the officers burst into the room and, in the process of seizing Thomas, were rude to him. He claims this was because he is black. The police claim they followed normal procedure and, because of the nature of the arrest, could not wait until class had been adjourned as Dennis insisted. Thomas has since been released on bail.

President Resigns

NORTHERN VIRGINIA — The Associated Student Government of Northern Virginia Community College was plunged into controversy when its president, David Hafner, resigned. Because NOVACOCO has two campuses, this leads to a complicated shifting of student officers. The move came at the exact moment that the college was changing to a new constitution. The controversy developed over which constitution was in effect. The decision will determine which campus has control of the student government.

Citizen Pressure

ROANOKE — The presidents of seven major colleges and universities in Virginia have urged that pressure from state citizens be put on the state legislature to provide more funds for education. The speakers at a dinner being given in Roanoke included Edgar F. Shannon, President of the University of Virginia, T. Marshall Hahn, President of Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University, Ronald E. Carrier, President of Madison College, Wendell P. Russell, President of Virginia State College, Harold H. Hopzser, President of Virginia Western Community College, Grellet C. Simpson, Chancellor of Mary Washington College, and Charles K. Martin, President of Radford College. The men stressed that money will be needed to keep up the progress the schools made during the 1960's.

Letters To the Editor

no one could sleep or study. Girls not joining in the "sing" ran through other girls' rooms to watch the Howdy Dooey time on the mail. Excuse this letter if it doesn't make sense but I can't think for the noise outside my window.

Black Sheep

Who's Who And Who's Not This is actually a letter to the student body, not to the editor. I'd like to express my personal concern and also give some credit where much is due.

Since entering Longwood in the fall of 1968, I have seen many changes in this school. One of the biggest and best changes happened last year when the present editor and her co-workers took over the Rotunda. Suddenly our old blah school paper was doubled in size and at least tripled in interest. This didn't just happen. People, especially the editor, made it happen. And they put in long hours to make it happen. They also endured (and are still enduring) a lot of complaints and hostilities from members of the student body, faculty members, and members of the administration.

I hope the preceding paragraph explains my shock and absolute fury at the Rotunda editor's being excluded from this year's "Who's Who." After deciding to pour indignation into the "proper channels," I talked to Dr. Willett about my concern. That was an exercise in futility, but he directed me to Dr. Wells, who was more helpful. She almost convinced me that by the criteria used, there were reasons that Lise was excluded. But in looking at the list of girls chosen for "Who's Who," I see no one who has done a greater service for this college. Of course, as Dr. Willett pointed out to me, this is only my personal opinion. Is there anyone out there who shares this opinion? If so, I know you will join me in thanking Lise and her staff for a job very well done and a lasting contribution (if anyone can be found to continue this rather thankless job) to Longwood College. Lise's successes in journalism seem much more important to me than anyone's "school spirit." I'll bet Joan of Arc (the real one, not that simpering statue) would be proud.

Digest Reprint

Dear Editor,

Regarding the Reader's Digest reprint Why I Don't Smoke Pot that was distributed throughout the dorms last week — "A place for everything and everything in its place." Keeping students aware of pertinent social evils is a good and necessary movement on the part of the college. But to subject us to such "sentimental slop" is an insult to our intelligence. Statistical Data and like articles would be much more beneficial than such soap-opera trivia. "... And everything in its place." The place for this article is a fill-in for the above mentioned magazine — or better yet the trash can.

Prescription

Although most of the experiments have been conducted on animals, the drug has been approved for human use. A prescription must be obtained from a physician in order to get it. It is to be stressed however, that diethylstilbestrol is a method of preventing unwanted pregnancy from accidents instead of a regular method of contraception.

Mrs. Savage Elected Secretary Of Virginia Philosophical Assoc.

Mrs. Helen B. Savage is the newly-elected secretary of the Virginia Philosophical Association. This state organization met October 21-22 at Mary Washington College in Fredericksburg. The members of this convention listened to the reading of several papers such as "On Knowing For Certain That Other Persons Exist" by Professor William S. Cobb, Jr. from the college of William and Mary and "Patterns of Ethical Justification" by Professor Peter V. Synder from Mary Washington College. After serving as secretary, Mrs. Savage will automatically become vice-president of the organization next year and president the following year.

Major Discontinued This Fall

By LYNNE PIERCE

The German branch of the Foreign Language Department has undergone a major reduction this year. Although German is being taught, there is no longer a major being offered in the field.

German was first offered as a program before World War I, but as a result of that conflict, it was discontinued and not begun again until 1964. At this time, native teachers were brought over under the Fulbright teacher exchange program. One teacher was brought each year until Mr. Ben Sandigge was hired permanently in 1968.

High school enrollment in German classes in Virginia has increased faster than any other language. From 1959 to 1969, public schools showed a rise from 700 to 7,500 students. This was reflected at Longwood in the fact that in the fall of 1970, when the major, which was introduced in 1968, was only two years old, there were seventy German students, which included ten majors.

The administration announced in the spring that the German major would be ended this fall despite the fact that classes were growing. They stated as their reasons that there were too few students and that a subject with only one instructor would not pass the standards for accreditation. Radford College also has only one instructor, but its classes are slightly larger.

Although the German major is still being offered, the language is still being taught. Students who wish to study German for their B.A. requirements or to complete their departmental requirements may do so. There are also enough classes provided that a student may certify to teach German if she wishes. German will also be taught on this basis next year; however, no plans have been announced concerning the expansion of the plan if future needs should demand it.

State Students To Unite
Improve Political Clout

(Reprinted from the Flat Hat of the College of William and Mary)

Students at William and Mary, Virginia Polytechnic Institute, Old Dominion University, Virginia Commonwealth University, Radford College and Norfolk State College are creating a Union of Virginia Students to improve the status of students in Virginia.

The Union's proposed constitution states its main goals as the establishment of better communication channels between students and the state government, increased student participation in the planning and improvement of institutions of higher learning in Virginia, and formation of a united front on student issues.

Some type of local organization will be established at each college to serve as a base of operations and to publicize Union ideas and activities. In addition to working on the state level, this local group will also be involved with specific problems on campus.

For example, William and Mary students might concentrate on the areas of educational reform, student housing and social regulations.

Voter Registration Goal

One immediate objective of the Union is voter registration. By informing students that they can choose to register in either their college town or in the precinct in which their parents reside, local organizers through the Union will provide specific information as to how to go about registering to vote in Virginia.

Voting blocs resulting from substantial student registration in Williamsburg could influence local politics, organizers feel. For example, a united student opinion could be voiced regarding zoning and rental laws, ecology and requirements for bicycle and car registration in Williamsburg, according to local Union representatives.

One of the most important advantages of the Union of Virginia Students will be improved communication among state colleges and universities, according to Allen Waites, one of the William and Mary students involved in forming the Union. Background knowledge of student issues and activities on other campuses could provide helpful suggestions as to how to cope with problems here at William and Mary, he said Wednesday.

Statewide Lobbying Force
Organizers hope that colleges from all over Virginia will participate in the effort to make students a powerful lobbying force in the Virginia state legislature, another primary goal of the Union.

The Union of Virginia Students will be governed by an Assembly composed of representatives from each member school.

INCITE

Incite Presented Again

Incite, a magazine dealing with the social sciences headed by Mr. Stonikinis is again being circulated at Longwood. The first issue came out last spring and its purpose was to organize and encourage the social sciences among students. Incite is an effort to make the students more aware of more and his environment, past and present, and how this relates to today. The magazine is chiefly made up by articles written by Longwood students under the direction of Mr. Stonikinis.

Issues of Incite may be purchased for 25¢ from Robin Hill in Frazier 739 or Mr. Stonikinis in his office.

The people involved with Incite are presently concerned with further organization of the magazine and are tentatively planning a meeting in November to draw up a constitution and legalize it. This meeting will be open to all students.

Publicity has been the major problem, but for the most part, Incite has gone over fairly well. More student interest is needed, and copies have also been sent away to other colleges in hope of further recognition.

Incite hopes to publish two issues per year. Their next publication will deal with only one subject pertaining specifically to students.

Miss Hatch And Mr. Hendrick
Added To Longwood Faculty

By VALERIE BLANKS

Miss Marilyn Hatch and Mr. Roger Hendrick have taken on teaching positions at Longwood this year.

Miss Hatch, from Fairfax, is an assistant professor in the science department.

She received her bachelor's degree here at Longwood, and her master's at Indiana University. Miss Hatch is now working on her Ph. D., in the field of anatomy at MCV, and hopes to receive it by this winter.

Before coming back to Longwood, Miss Hatch taught a year at UNC at Charlotte and two years at George Mason College in Fairfax.

Miss Hatch is teaching General Zoology, and Anatomy and Physiology, as well as a Genetics lab.

She is interested in all types of sports and is presently helping coach our hockey team.

Mr. Hendrick, a native of Michigan, is a new professor in the geography department this year.

He received his bachelor's degree at Central Michigan University, after which he taught in public schools at all age levels for several years.

Last year he received his master's from East Carolina University, and hopes to work toward his doctorate sometime in the future.

Mr. Hendrick is a member of a team, made up of three professors, teaching geography for Elementary majors. He also teaches a course called Weather and Climate.

For pleasure, Mr. Hendrick has traveled around the U.S. and would like to go overseas. His interests also include all sports, especially basketball.

Oktoberfest Draws Crowd Of Visitors

By BEV ASTON

Many parents, friends and visitors were on hand this past weekend to celebrate the annual Oktoberfest sponsored by Geist, Friday night, the skits were presented to an almost full auditorium. Saturday proved to be an exciting day for all, even with the threat of rain. Luck prevailed, and the parade began at 11:00 led by the Usherettes and the Fort Lee Army Band. Floats were judged and the greens won 24 points while the reds won 16. At 1:15 in Jarman Hall the band presented an enjoyable concert. Everyone was present at 2:00 as Donna Hicks, Mittenmeister, was on hand to officially open the Oktoberfest Midway. Booths were open from 2:00 to 5:00 and there was much to be seen and done by all.

Many people enjoyed the hockey game, water show, and color rush. The greens were thrilled when they won the banner and 10 more points toward the weekend.

The skits were presented on Saturday night to a filled auditorium. Excitement ran high as the Usherettes presented their dance, the clowns showed their talent and spirit, and especially when the clowns presented their skits. The audience was delighted with the entertainment of the night and the judges were impressed with both skits as the reds won 56 points and the greens, 57.

The culmination of the week end was the presentation of the Oktoberfest cup by Jodi Mace, Oktoberfest Chairman, to Becky West, Brenda Griffin, and Susanna Fowlkes, Green and White Chairmen. The Blue and White spirit prevailed as everyone joined in to sing "Joan of Arc."

The week end was brought to a close with the cutting of the Oktoberfest Cake by the Usherettes and with the walk of Alumnae Chi on the Colonnade.

Arnold Ziffle Goes To College

By PAM ANDERSON

College is the place to get an education. Of what kind is hard to decide.

Having been here for two months, we, the freshmen, are learning so much from our upper-class sisters. For instance, take the manners of a Longwood lady. Where else could one learn the delicate, refined table manners so much practiced here?

The most difficult of all these graces to learn was the proper way in which to enter the dining hall. After all, it took cattle a few centuries to learn to stam-pede. And didn't you think that food was chewed, not inhaled? If you've been wondering why you have had to do flexibility exercises in Health Education, it's the training grounds for the Olympic competition in the field of arm extension, otherwise known as mealtime. Didn't you know that a person's arm could reach across the table? And you thought that you had already eaten that pork chop. Or did she? Or was it her?

With such training and experience it is easy to see why a Longwood lady is so named. Perhaps in three more years with a little hard work we, the freshmen, can also claim the title of a Longwood lady.

Amchitka Blast

Washington — The underground nuclear test planned on Amchitka Island last Saturday became a point of controversy between the Atomic Energy Commission and environmentalist groups. The AEC claimed that the test was necessary to determine the effectiveness of the bomb which will be part of the ABM system. Environmental organizations have protested the test on the grounds that it will cause tidal waves, earthquakes and radiation leakage into the sea. The governments of Canada and Japan, which lie closer to the island than the U. S., have protested the testing, but President Nixon refused to halt it on the basis of national security. The Supreme Court sat in special session Saturday morning to hear a plea by the environmental groups for an injunction against the test and voted 4 to 3 to grant it.

Representatives Named

United Nations — The People's Republic of China has named Chiao Kuan-hua and Huang Hua, two men knowledgeable in Soviet and American affairs, to head up its U. N. delegation. Chiao is the Chinese deputy foreign minister and will head the General Assembly delegation. Huang Hua, who was ambassador to Canada, will be a permanent U. N. representative and the delegate to the Security Council. The United States has announced it will continue quasi-diplomatic relations with Peking through the U. N. delegation.

Students Battle With Bookstores Over Prices

Mr. Wayne Harper has discovered that book sales alone cannot keep the bookstore in operation.

By LYNNE PIERCE

The bookstore at the College of William and Mary has been frequently under attack from the students because of what they felt were exorbitant prices for books. The administration has constantly stood behind the bookstore and defended it to the point that students felt they were being ignored. Consequently, the Student Association sponsored the sale of new and used textbooks this year. Because the bookstore is owned by the college, controversy has arisen over whether the Student Association should continue its policy.

The Lankford Bookstore is privately owned, but it also is continuously under criticism from students. Most of this criticism stems from the fact that many students feel that books and other articles are priced too high. Mrs. M. P. Farrier, a former owner of the bookstore, and Mr. Wayne Harper, the present owner, agreed to answer questions on the pricing of books.

Mrs. Farrier owned the bookstore for nine years before she sold it to Mr. Harper last year. One reason Mrs. Farrier gave up the store was that she could no longer run it on the profit she was making.

The book publishers set the price range of their books and allow up to a twenty per cent profit. However, Mrs. Farrier said, "If you don't get forty per cent profit for overhead, you can't stay in business, and added that most stores downtown get a fifty per cent profit. For this reason, the bookstore has to sell other items to make up the difference. Mrs. Farrier said she tried to handle only books and stay at the twenty per cent mark, but that she finally had to sell.

Mr. Harper also said he had found out that the profit from the books alone could not pay for the overhead of the store. The other items sold in the store cover a large part of this cost. Mr. Harper said that he makes only the twenty per cent allowed by the publishers, but he declined to disclose what his overall profit was last year.

When asked how students sometimes are able to find books at a cheaper price than his, Mr. Harper replied that the other store must have had the book left over from the previous year. Since the book had been bought at a cheaper price, less could be charged for it. The only control imposed on the bookstore by the college is the Bookstore Committee. This committee is composed of faculty and students and is supposed to insure that books are not overpriced.

Mr. Harper also explained his policy on returning books. He said some students had been buying their books, keeping them for two or three weeks and then would find a used book for a cheaper price and would want to bring the new book back. The only way that a student can return a textbook now is if she drops a course and brings the slip from the registrar with the book.

Miss Bishop Elected President Of VAEA

The Virginia Art Education Association held its fall conference Friday, October 29, at VCU. The VAEA is a department of the Virginia Education Association. At this meeting Miss Bishop, Chairman of the Art Department of Longwood, was elected president for 1972-1974.

The program focused upon the related or visual and performing arts and was titled, "Involvement in the Related Arts." The conference provided an opportunity for those involved in elementary, middle school, secondary, and higher education to "discuss and debate the value, feasibility, logistics, and results of dynamic related arts experience in art programs at all levels of instruction," according to Alan Landis, former Vice President, VAEA.

After registration and the election of new officers, the conference continued as Dr. John Mahlmann, Executive Secretary, National Art Education Association, spoke on "You Gotta Have Art (Visual and Performing)." His speech was followed by a demonstration and involvement in a Related Arts Presentation which concluded the morning activities.

LC Films Become Kiddie Matinees

By LYNNE PIERCE

The American Heritage Dictionary defines a lady as "a woman having refined habits, gentle manners and a sense of responsibility." If you add to this the idea that a lady also knows how to conduct herself in every situation, it becomes obvious that the term "Longwood Lady" is a misnomer for the students who attend movies on this campus.

Since the beginning of school, several movies have been shown on campus and although the quality of the films fluctuates, the audience reaction is always predictable and horribly the same. Perhaps these girls — girls because I seriously doubt that real young women would act in this manner — are trying to show that they really are releasing the tension from what they consider their heavy burden of homework. Certainly, a whole zoo of animals released from their cages could hardly make more noise to show their gratitude. These outbursts of noise always come at strategically planned points in every movie.

The first explosion can be expected if the projectionist is unlucky enough to start the film on the lead-in tape instead of directly at the beginning. Longwood students seem to feel challenged to prove that they can count backwards from 8. I can never understand if these gifted viewers think the rest of us cannot read or if they doubt their own ability. At any rate, I'm always glad to have most of them make it to one.

Another sure way to send these youngsters into palpitations is to provide them with a handsome leading man to drool over. (If my references to the audience seem to take on a more juvenile tone as I go along, it is because this is what seems to happen to these girls as the movie progresses.) There is a traditional picture of adult males and their conduct at stag parties or films. Certainly, their conduct cannot far surpass, if indeed it does at all, the conduct of the female wolf segment of the Longwood audience.

At a recent showing of "Bulet," this section made itself particularly vocal. Before Steve McQueen had even appeared on the screen, ripples of oohs and ahs passed over the group. When his face finally flashed up, the audience was racked by screams and loud sighs, which were accented by a continuous barrage of high-pitched whistles. The commotion eventually died down, but not until a considerable amount of the initial dialogue had been lost to those who wished to hear it.

Of course, one can always count on the "cute" comments that girls seem to feel compelled to make when any scenes hinting at love or sex take place. The recent showings of "La Dolce Vita" and "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?" were particularly good examples of this. There is always a constant tide of snickering and cries similar to "We know what you're going to do!" I would hope that by the time she reaches college every student would have some knowledge of certain areas of life.

The list of complaints could grow quite long, but the point would still be the same — Longwood students as a group simply do not understand how to behave during a campus movie. It is time you realize that your conduct is not only unbefitting of the title you have given yourself of "Longwood Ladies," but it is embarrassing to students who are unfortunate enough to bring guests on that night. Perhaps until the students learn better manners, the film offerings should be restricted to "Snow White" or "Bambi," where childish reactions are expected.

Support The Primaries

Underclassman do you want a strong student government for the 1971-72 session or a puppet show. The choice is yours. This Thursday the students at Longwood will be given an opportunity to exercise one of the privilege or rights (as the case may be) of voting in a student government primary.

Let me quickly make it clear that I am not in any way indicating that the student response in the past has been anything but enthusiastic, but I would hope that in this primary the students will show as much if not more interest in their student government. Interest should be shown, if for no other reason than this election is being run in a different manner. The campaigning policy has been changed in this election to permit campaign managers to put posters and signs around the campus to initiate more interest and familiarity with their respective candidates. If these girls can spend the time during the mid term testing session to make signs for the "hopeful student government girls then I think that the underclassman can certainly make an effort to support the primaries.

Support your student government. It might be too late tomorrow.

Letters to the Editor

Term Papers

Dear Editor,

I could hardly believe my eyes, but there it was on page three of the Rotunda (Nov. 3, 1971): an advertisement for "Termpapers Unlimited" complete with telephone number for speedy results. With the College currently engaged in a self-study for continued accreditation, I question the wisdom of such advertising. As a member of the faculty, I wonder if student use of these services might not be a violation of the Honor Code. As a former journalism student, I wonder if such advertising in a student newspaper is not a violation of the code of journalism ethics, a code as binding on student publications as on the public press.

Sincerely,
Elizabeth Etheridge

No Papers

Dear Editor,

This weekend between one hundred and one hundred fifty student teachers returned to Longwood a little bewildered and quite uninformed.

What is being built next to the dining hall? What happened during Oktoberfest? Have the new members of Who's Who been chosen? What new legislation have the boards passed? WHAT'S GOING ON?

In the past student teachers have received copies of THE ROTUNDA to keep them informed. This year we received none, and as a result we are eight weeks behind the times.

What happened?

Amoebic Monster

To the Student Body:

As you are walking around campus, marveling at the expansion that has taken place in recent years, do you ever think of what this means to Farmville? Monetary aspects are not what I am thinking about. The appearance of Farmville itself is more in my line of thinking.

Many of us complain because Farmville is a small town and its entertainment facilities are admittedly few. However, we all knew this before we arrived here. The college seems to have found an answer to this though in that it is slowly gobbling up the town.

Longwood is like some sort of amoebic monster from a science fiction film. It slowly sends out its tentacles and then with a sudden gulp another part of Farmville disappears. This is done under the guise that the college needs to expand to meet student needs and the size of the student body. For this reason, we are going to build another maintenance building, a physical education building, more athletic fields and parking lots. All of this while classrooms are going unused.

The most obvious expression of this expansion is the disappearance of small wooded areas around campus and the old beautiful homes that once stood in the area around Curry and Frazer. A perfect example is the piece of land between Curry and the Fine Arts complex. On top of that rise sits a comfortable but majestic home surrounded by huge shade trees. The possibilities of such a place as a spot of retreat for students from the sterile appearance of the campus are unlimited. Instead, it will all eventually be cleared to make way for a physical education building and a parking lot. Instead of looking out on trees, students will then be able to stare at blacktop.

The same thing is happening over by the new maintenance building. Those homes still bear signs of human habitation. A child's deserted toy fire engine sits in the front yard of one with only the wind ringing its bell.

I suppose this description sounds euphoric, but if it accents my meaning, then so be it. I am certainly no lover of Farmville itself because I complain about it as much as anyone. However, I think it's time the students realized that we, as well as the town, are paying for our progress. How many of you like to go for walks on Sunday afternoon just to get away from studying? Well, you'd better enjoy them, because, the way Longwood is expanding, the scenery won't be here long.

One last thing to consider — What's happening to the people who lived in these houses? Farmville's housing situation is limited at best. Of course, you say they could refuse to sell their homes, but I wonder how much resistance can be put up against a state institution bent on achieving its own ends? For a generation that's supposed to be so aware of the problems of others, we seem to be ignoring the mess in our own backyard.

Works Of Printmakers From Winston-Salem On Exhibition

The new practice organ offers music students a chance to refine their talents.

New Practice Organ To Be Shown At Open House

The Music Department of Longwood College received delivery of a new 6-stop tracker practice organ manufactured by Karl Wilhelm, Red'd, Designers and Builders of Mechanical Action Organs, St.-Hyacinthe, Quebec, Canada, on October 28. The installation, regulation and voicing of the new instrument was done by Mr. Christoph Linde of the Wilhelm firm.

In talking about the new organ, Mr. Paul S. Hesselink, Assistant Professor of Music and instructor in organ at the college, said,

"The acquisition of the Wilhelm organ gives the organ practice and study facilities at Longwood a new excellence. Though modest in size, the instrument is extremely versatile. In the quality of materials used, and in details of design and craftsmanship, every facet of fabrication was done with the utmost attention to artistic and aesthetic ideals. I know of no finer organ practice facility in the state."

The Longwood Student Chapter of the American Guild of Organists will host an open house, Thursday, November 11, from 2:00 to 5:00 p.m. to show and demonstrate the new instrument. The public is invited to attend. Visitors are asked to enter Wygal Music Building by way of the front doors where they will be met by student guides.

The work of Six Winston-Salem Printmakers will be exhibited in the Bedford Gallery, Longwood College, from Saturday, November 6, until Tuesday, November 23. (Gallery hours: Monday-Thursday, 9 a.m.-6 p.m.; 7 p.m.-11 p.m.; Friday, 9 a.m.-6 p.m.; Saturday, 2 p.m.-5 p.m.; Sunday, 2 p.m.-10 p.m.) In the study of 19th and 20th century artists' works, we find that they have made many contributions to the world of art in styles and techniques. One of the most interesting of the aspects of contemporary artists is their work in printmaking. This graphic technique has been used for many centuries by great masters such as Durer in his dry-point of 'Praying Hands', 1509, Holbein in his 'Dance of Death' woodcuts of 1523-1524, and Rembrandt with his many techings of Biblical subjects, c. 1650. Honore Daumier early in the 19th century discovered the many possibilities of lithography, and the German Expressionists of the 20th century used woodcuts as their technique for their powerful religious, political, and psychological statements.

Very few, if any, of the printmaking techniques are simple. Each requires the knowledge and talent of an artist plus extreme patience, great dexterity and visual foresight. Our Printmakers from Winston-Salem have organized their traveling show to share with the public the versatility of the graphic arts. Susan Moore's silver print drawings of 'Nude and Landscapes' are examples of a 15th century technique modernized by her economy and subtlety of line. Mary Goslen's painted woodcuts are essays on 'Love' which our early 20th century expressionists would have appreciated. Bright 'Poppies' and a 'Pear' are the subjects of Martha Malicoat Dunigan's linoleum block prints and dots in geometric patterns are the elements Anne Kesler Shields uses in her silkscreen studies in optic and kinetic movement. Virginia Ingram's woodcuts are subtle abstractions of trees and winter afternoon, while the woodcuts of Ann Carter Pollard are playful geometric studies in contrasts of black and white. The public is invited to view and purchase these fine works.

Miss Flynn Attends Symposium

Miss Elisabeth L. Flynn attended the Symposium in Caravaggio (1573-1610) and His Followers at the Cleveland Museum, Oct. 29 and 30. The five lectures on Caravaggio's Personality, St. Philip Neri and the Catholic Reformation, Geroges de la Tour (1593-1652), French Caravaggisti in Rome, and Caravaggio in Spain were followed by panel discussions by the leading art historians in the field from Europe and the United States. The Cleveland Museum borrowed masterpieces from galleries in the North Americas and Europe for this special exhibit.

Publication Code: Big Brother Or Paper Tiger

By LYNNE PIERCE

The William and Mary FLAT HAT and the Mary Washington BULLET, the newspapers at both colleges, found themselves in the center of controversy over their journalistic practices last year. The FLAT HAT and its editor eventually faced charges on printing obscene material. THE BULLET has had charges of irresponsible journalism leveled at it and is presently involved in several court cases.

The effect of these incidents on the Virginia General Assembly was to produce an intense interest in the publications of Virginia colleges and the codes which governed them. The investigation conducted concluded in a movement in the legislature to restrict the amount of funds given to the publications.

Longwood became susceptible to this when it was discovered that it had no code of ethics for its Publications Board. Although there was a statement on editorial responsibility in the college handbook, it was suggested that a statement giving the board's feelings on plagiarism and obscenity to be adopted as a protection for the publications. The code would also demonstrate to the legislature that the board is willing to take disciplinary action against a publication if it is needed.

Committee Action

When the suggestion was submitted to the Publications Board last year, they began drawing up a code and then turned their work over to a committee composed of Cookie Howell, the VIRGINIAN editor and acting chairman of the board, Dr. William Frank, VIRGINIAN advisor, Lise Worthington, the ROTUNDA editor, Mr. Douglas Young, ROTUNDA advisor, and Margaret Webb, who, as a member of Legislative Board, sat in to give suggestions.

The committee drew up one code which was approved by the Publications Board and submitted to Legislative Board at the end of the school year. The administration and the staff sent the code back to the committee with suggested changes which were incorporated into three revisions drawn up over the summer by an ad hoc committee of Cookie Howell and Dr. Frank. Legislative Board has never made any suggestions for any of the submitted plans.

The revisions were passed by the Publications Board, but more suggestions were made by the administration. After several more changes, a code was approved by Legislative Board and was adopted by the Board of Visitors at its meeting last Friday.

Real Authority

One of the major problems with the code is going to be who is going to enforce it. The Publications Board, as a subordinate board of the Student Government, has "next to no power" in the words of its chairman, Cookie Howell. Cookie said the committee originally proposed that cases involving publications be handled by the board, but this idea was rejected. The system eventually adopted requires that a reported violation go before Judicial Board, which will work in cooperation with Publications Board. Publications Board, however, will serve only in an advisory capacity and will have no vote in the trial.

Interpretation of the code is another expected problem. Obscenity, for example, is considered anything offensive to the "general readership of the individual publication." Cookie said that the code was made general to cover the scope of all of the publications, but nothing had been said about who would judge whether something was obscene or not. According to the code's wording, it is conceivable that a poll would have to be taken of the student body to reach an opinion.

Opinions

Mr. Allen Wier, advisor to the GYRE, felt that since there was the statement on editorial responsibility in the school handbook, he could see no reason for a code; however, he understood the point of wanting to provide some protection for the publications. He saw no controls in the code, though, and felt that it generally would have no effect on the GYRE.

Mr. Wier said that all material was accepted on the basis of its literary merit with some concern for the prevailing moral standards of the student body. He added that if he felt something would be challenged, he would advise the staff of it; however, they would make the final decision and the responsibility for printing it would rest with the editor.

Mr. Wier also felt that only the student body could judge obscenity in the GYRE since, according to the code, it is the general readership. Unlike the newspaper, the GYRE would not be distributed to be seen by the Farmville community, alumni or parents. Therefore, students, who he feels hold more liberal attitudes, should decide the limits of the magazine. Mr. Wier also pointed out that the statement in the handbook and the code were pointed at the purse strings of all publications and if they were independent, would be unnecessary.

"Unprofessional"

Mr. Douglas Young, sponsor of THE ROTUNDA, particularly objected to section three which calls for a statement on opinions expressed in the publication. He said "traditionally what is on the editorial page is taken as the opinion of the editor and anything labeled commentary is the opinion of the writer." Mr. Young feels that having to make a statement to that fact is "unprofessional."

Mr. Young also agreed with Mr. Wier that because of the statement in the handbook, a code was unnecessary. However, he felt that because the paper comes out more often, it will be affected by the code.

Lise Worthington, editor of THE ROTUNDA, had no comment when asked about the code.

Publication Code

The following is the Publication Code approved by the Board of Visitors on November 5.

The Publications Board offers the following guidelines with reference to the responsibility of the editors of each of the three officially recognized campus publications, the Gyre, the Rotunda, and the Virginian.

1. The Gyre, Longwood's literary magazine, is a compilation of student work including short stories, poems, essays, reviews, artwork, and photography. The Gyre tries to encourage serious writing on the campus and to produce a magazine of quality representative work.

2. The Rotunda, Longwood's weekly college newspaper, aims to keep students, faculty, administration, and alumnae informed of current affairs; to reflect campus opinions; and to serve as a chronicle of college activities.

3. The Virginian, Longwood's yearbook, gives an account of Longwood life, the academic and the social functions, the campus proper, and the Farmville community.

Either of the following shall be classified as plagiarism in student edited publication and shall be considered violations of the Honor Code and subject to the jurisdiction of the Judicial Board:

1. The use of written work from any source without proper acknowledgment;

2. The use of photographic prints or artwork without a re-

Longwood's hockey team has shown much progress and increasing skill and strategy from the first day when hockey practice officially began. Team work and good coaching aided the team in having a successful year.

Hockey Team Displays Ability Ends Season With 6-1-1 Record

Longwood's hockey team captured twelve places on the Tidewater Hockey Team and took the first place title in the Tidewater area at the annual tournament held this week end at the College of William and Mary.

These girls will journey to Potomac High School in McLean, Virginia, November 19-21 to play in the Southeast Field Hockey Tournament. Anyone winning a position on a team at this tournament will then go to the National Hockey Tournament.

At the tournament, Longwood fell to William and Mary 2-0, but came back to defeat the Richmond Club 2-0 and Westhampton 3-2 and capture the Tidewater Area Title.

Longwood College had a good season, ending with six wins, one tie, and one loss for the first team, and a five win, one tie, and one loss for the second team.

Recent games showed Longwood in the scoring columns. Mary Washington College was defeated 5-0 in first team competition and 9-0 in second team competition in a game played in Fredericksburg.

During Oktoberfest week end, Longwood tied the Richmond Club, which is made up of many Longwood alumni and area teachers, with a score of 2-2.

The most recent game was placed in Richmond against Virginia Commonwealth University. Longwood's first team won 3-0 and the second team followed with a winning score of 4-0.

The first team is coached by Miss Diane L. Davis and is managed by Miss June Beninghove.

Fencing Competition To Begin November 16

Varsity coach Sally Bush and varsity team members will serve as official directors for the competition. Anyone who would like to act as a timer or score keeper for the tournament should contact Mary Frances Baldwin in Wheeler 123.

Any fencing student is encouraged to come and see how much they still remember about the sport. Beginning fencing students are urged to participate. They can learn much in actual fencing situations. Varsity members are not permitted to compete.

Competition will continue every Tuesday and Thursday nights from 7 to 9 until a champion is determined. Prizes will be awarded.

No matter what skill level you are, come and join the fun. Spectators are welcomed to come and watch.

Colleges In The News

Diplomatic Immunity

Richmond — Sarah Helgason, a coed at Virginia Commonwealth University, was arrested by the campus police on three criminal charges and later released until it could be determined if she has diplomatic immunity. Miss Helgason is the daughter of Horour Helgason, counselor for Iceland in the United States. She was charged with assaulting, cursing and abusing a member of the VCU police, but she denies any guilt. A decision is being requested from the state attorney general's office to determine if she can be charged.

Open House Violation

Blacksburg — The dormitory council of Lee Hall at Virginia Polytechnic Institute has issued a statement calling for students to ignore the open house policy of the college. The council has charged that the policy was established with no regard for student opinion and against their wishes. They claim the administration has been negligent and the policy has proved detrimental in their eyes to student interests. Since they feel they can get no satisfaction from the administration, the council intends to draw up its own guidelines for visitation. Until they are completed, the students have been told to use their own discretion in entertaining coeds.

College Council

Radford — A college council composed of students, faculty and administration is being organized at Radford College. The committee was suggested by a study panel who reviewed the college last year and found a great need for better communication. The committee will be composed on a 50-50 basis with eleven students and eleven faculty and administration members serving. The president of the college will preside at all meetings.

Churches End Gifts

Richmond — The University of Richmond is going to lose between $35,000 and $40,000 in expected funds because 200 of Virginia's 1,471 Baptist churches and missions have voted to discontinue their gifts to the university. The Baptist General Association of Virginia voted to drop the university from its Cooperative Program last year after several churches lodged strong protests against the liberalized drinking rules that were adopted. The association will continue to fund the university, but due to reduced funds, its budget is being submitted for the fourth year with no recommended increase. Support by the association is being gradually phased out and is being replaced by a $50 million gift made in 1969 by E. Claiborne Robins, an alumnus. The churches represent three per cent of the university's total operating budget.

No Grade D

Williamsburg — Students at the College of William and Mary will no longer receive a D grade under a new policy aimed at conforming with the school's pass-fail system. Most of the teachers felt that a D grade was usually given to a student who was failing but that the teacher did not want to give a F to. Since the pass must be satisfactory, it was felt that there was no place for a D. The grade may still be used on an unofficial basis to warn the student of his standing in the class.

The infirmary features a new look this year.

Needed Improvements Made In College Infirmary Facilities

By TINA MOODY

Longwood's infirmary was taken over by carpenters and workmen this past summer and, as a result, many temporary changes had to be made. The displacement of drug cabinets and student files into the hallway, which also served as a waiting room, produced conditions bordering on chaos during sick call.

The patience of both the infirmary staff and the students was rewarded by several much needed improvements in the facilities. Of primary importance was the addition of a waiting room which can seat 15 people comfortably. This room was built in an area that was previously vacant space between Tabb Dormitory and the infirmary. Because of the new waiting room, the main hallway may now be kept clear to prevent fire hazards.

Renovations made inside the infirmary were designed to contribute to greater efficiency. A drug room was created so that all the drugs kept on hand might be stored centrally. Recently an air conditioner had to be installed, however, to keep the drugs at the proper temperature.

In another allocation of space, a separate, but small, examining room was partitioned off from the doctor's office. It provides greater privacy for the patient. Two lavatories, one for nurses and students and the other adjoining Dr. Wells' office, were made from space occupied by the old kitchen. Although the kitchen has been reduced in size, it maintains the same facilities. The loss of space has, nevertheless, done away with the nurses' rest area.

Of major importance in the interest of safety, fire escapes have been constructed both upstairs and downstairs. For the first time the infirmary has been furnished with emergency back exits, which may be reached through the sun porches.

Other than these recent changes, the infirmary boasts of approximately 35 permanent beds, 17 of which are upstairs. When necessary a few dozen cots may also be set up. The bell system operates from nearly every bed for the safety and convenience of each patient.

Dr. Sams, the college psychiatrist, has a very spacious office on the second floor. The room was remodeled for him when he joined the infirmary staff in September of 1970.

Age Of Majority Issue Of Hearing

The Age of Majority Commission headed by Delegate Ford Quillen, Gate City, will hold a public hearing at the State Capitol on Wednesday, November 10, 1971, at 9:30 a.m.

This Commission created by the 1971 General Assembly is studying the feasibility and desirability of lowering the age of majority to eighteen years. Since the legal age for voting in all elections, federal and state, is now eighteen, the Commission's job is to determine whether age eighteen should also be the legal age for such things as signing a contract, buying alcoholic beverages, or writing a will. The Commission's task is to report its recommendations to the General Assembly.

The public hearing is intended to allow interested citizens an opportunity to voice their suggestions before the Commission makes any recommendations. Persons unable to attend are invited to send a written statement of their views to the Commission in care of the Division of Statutory Research and Drafting, Post Office Box 3-AG, Richmond, Virginia 23208.

Other members of the Commission are Senator Hunter B. Andrews, Barry C. Bishop, Delegate Duncan C. Gibb, Delegate George Mason Green, Jr., Senator J. C. Hutcheson, Delegate Thomas W. Moss, Jr., Senator William F. Parkerson, Jr., W. Jackson Shepherd, Delegate Eleanor P. Sheppard, and Senator William F. Stone.

Phi Mu's Participate In HOPE Week

November 8-13 marks HOPE week on the calendars of Phi Mu's everywhere. They ask you to join them in support of this Health Opportunity to People Everywhere. Milk cartons have been placed at each sign out table to receive your contributions. Bandages, diapers, and medicine are just some of the necessities which they provide. An iron cow feeds thousands of people in isolated and neglected areas. A pint of milk or a pint of blood — either one is just as important.

Go back a couple of years to your childhood. Did you wish that red tricycle or a four-leaf clover or to be big enough to mail a letter — or to get one? Did you ever hope for something — hope and hope that that wish might come true? Have you ever wanted something so badly for someone else that you hoped and wished and suddenly that something became a reality?

In 1960, several hundred people wished upon a star and came up with a floating miracle, one that would float under every star and greet each man under the moon. This miracle, the U.S.S. Hope, has enabled many a brother to help another. But because every cloud has a silver lining, this project can only operate with your silver. Won't you, too, hope for another brother no matter the location of his star? Wish and wish and HOPE. After all, the load can't be too heavy — he's your brother.

The U. S. S. Hope brings medical care to underdeveloped nations. Why don't you help it?

Washington — Lewis F. Powell, the Richmond lawyer nominated by President Nixon to the Supreme Court, was introduced to the Senate Judiciary Committee Friday and continued his questioning Monday. The committee finished its initial questioning of the other nominee, U. S. Assistant Attorney General William Rehnquist, with an apparent fight developing over his legal views. Powell has been praised by the American Bar Association and several senators on the committee. No controversy is expected over his appointment.

By VALERIE BLANKS

Two new teachers holding positions at Wynne Campus School this year are Mrs. Gladys Seiwel and Mr. David Alexick.

Mrs. Seiwel is presently teaching the second grade at the Campus School. She has taught in several places but calls Richmond, where she was born and raised, her home.

Besides teaching, Mrs. Seiwel is working on her master's degree by taking night courses at VCU. She is also interested in the theatre, especially children's theatres, and attends whenever she can.

In noting a trend in her years of teaching, Mrs. Seiwel said that "the education system is always changing. Now children are exposed to life and life situations more."

She also noted that teaching methods have changed in that many more media — films, film strips, television, record players, and tape recorders — are used.

"The present education system helps widen the horizon of the child," she said.

As art director at the Campus School, Mr. Alexick teaches art classes for all seven grades.

Mr. Alexick grew up in Williamsburg and has lived in Virginia most of his life. He earned his Bachelor and Master degrees of Fine Arts at VCU.

He then taught at a junior college in York, Pennsylvania. For the past three years Mr. Alexick has been working on his doctorate at Penn State, which he hopes to receive in a year or two.

Mr. Alexick said he likes living in Farmville and working at the Campus School, and praised the well-equipped facilities of the school.

He is also pleased with the active attitude of the students. "Young children are more challenging to work with than older students," he said.

Either of the following shall be classified as obscenity in student edited publications:

1. The use of words considered obscene to the general readership of the individual publication;

2. The use of photographic work offensive to the general readership of the individual publication.

All student-edited publications must carry a statement to the effect that the context is the responsibility of the editor and that opinions of the editorial staff are not necessarily those of the student body as a whole.

Complaints or questions dealing with the content or editorial prerogative of any student edited publication should be directed to the chairman of the Publications Board in writing. (Normally, the Publications Board meets at 5:15 p.m. on the second Monday in Granger 108.) Plagiarism charges are dealt with by the Judicial Board in cooperation with the Publications Board. Appeals from Publication Board decisions will be directed to the College Review Committee.

Note: Since it is standard procedure for newspapers to use other newspapers and similar sources to provide their readers with news not available first-hand to staff reporters, such practice shall not be deemed plagiarism.

Seeing Double Becomes Common On Campus

By BECKY NICHOLSON

For centuries multiple births have fascinated people, but according to the eleven sets of twins on campus it isn't that unusual. Three of the sets of twins are day students. They are Janice and Joyce Foster, James and Thomas Nixon, and Maria and Mi-reya Silveira.

Most of the twins feel that the greatest advantage of being a twin is being able to share clothes. The second greatest advantage is as Leslie Schatz says, "You always have a friend along."

Debbie and Diane Amme are Physical Education majors from Virginia Beach. They are probably the most psychic of the group. Both of them remember people peering into their baby carriage, and when they were six years old they had the same dream. Both of them like the same things, and they use the same gestures and expressions. Their brother is the only one in the family who can always tell them apart. The only disadvantage of being a twin, to Debbie and Diane, is the fact that people notice them more.

Denny and Terry Moyer are education majors from Lynchburg. They are very close, and when one twin cries the other cries too. Their hobbies include sewing and, when they were younger, planting lollypops in their "candy garden" was a favorite pastime.

The Schatz twins are from Hampton, Virginia. Cindy is an English major, and Leslie is an Elementary Education major. They think alike and their mother says that the letters they send home are almost identical. The only physical difference in the two is that one is left-handed and the other is right-handed. Leslie says that it doesn't bother her when people get them mixed up unless it is someone they have known for a long time.

Sarah and Susan Smith are Math majors from Richmond. Their greatest interest next to Math is drawing. Sarah says that the greatest advantage of having a twin is that she knows the same situation and can understand better.

Charlene and Glenda Rice are French and Elementary Education majors, respectively, and they are from Richmond. Probably not half the people on campus know they are twins because they aren't identical. In fact, most people think Charlene and her older sister are twins. Their characteristics are as varied as sisters of different ages.

Irene and Josie Bonds are sophomore elementary education majors from Richmond. They think alike, respond with the same reactions, and even date the same guys, but they don't share the same friends. Their parents encouraged them to be individualistic. People don't usually get the two confused unless it's on the telephone.

Bobby and Debbie Ellin are from McLean, Virginia. Bobby is an elementary education major and Debbie is a double major in elementary and physical education. They like all sports, especially tennis. Bobby is interested in oceanography and Debbie enjoys music. Their friends say that they are completely different. Bobby is right-handed and Debbie is ambidextrous. Bobby says that the disadvantage of being a twin is that others think of them as one instead of separate individuals.

Betty and Patsy Garland are elementary majors from Roanoke. They have similar interests, but their reactions aren't always the same. Betty says that the greatest disadvantage of being a twin is that people try to compare them. Like Betty, most of the twins agree that it's certainly not as weird being a twin, as people might think. To most twins it's no different than having a regular sister.

Double vision is a common occurrence on the Longwood campus.

The John P. Wynne Campus School provides an education for its students and Longwood girls.

By CATHI O'DONNELL

All of the students at Longwood College know of the Campus School, but do you know what it is? Do you know its function and how it can help you?

The primary purpose of the school is to provide "an individualized program of instruction" for all pupils it serves. Another function is to serve as a laboratory for the pre-service education of students enrolled in the various teacher-education programs offered by Longwood College. As a third function, it is used as a resource center and is organized to be used through various activities which include participation, observation, demonstration, research, and in-service education for teachers and supervisors and administrative personnel.

The John P. Wynne Campus School offers a program in observation and participation for the Longwood student.

The freshmen and sophomores are allowed to observe activities of the school. The observation can be accomplished in two ways.

The first is through request either by the professor or the student. A student is allowed to call at any time, and, if it is during open observation, the perspective teacher can go to the school and observe whichever activity she has requested.

Another way to observe is via the televisions located in each of the classrooms. If the professor wants his class to observe writing in the third grade, his students can view the class live as they attend class in Hiner. That particular class can be taped so that it can be shown to another class meeting at another time. The tape can be observed by an individual or in mass.

Currently the Science, English, Art and Education classes are using television for observing.

In her junior year, Elementary Education majors are required to spend two days per semester at the campus school. The first day is usually spent grading papers, running errands, and becoming familiar with the program, the teacher and the students. On the second day, each teacher assistant is given the chance to actually teach. It may be that she will read a story or teach arithmetic to the fourth grade class.

This experience gives the elementary education major an opportunity to be in front of a class and actually teach before the formal student teaching period.

The campus school is an educational model for the nation and we are very fortunate to be able to take part in such an extraordinary program.

Dr. Land says that he is very pleased with the students' attitudes and behavior when they take part in the program.

The observation and participation program is a valuable aid and an opportunity that students should be made aware of.

Greeks Active As Formal Rush Approaches

Informal Rush enters its final phase with the last Coke Parties. These parties are to take place in all the chapter rooms on Thursday, November 11, from 7 to 10 p.m.

Longwood Panhellenic Council will hold a reception on November 16, from 7-8:30 p.m. in the Gold Room. At that time all girls who plan to go through Rush must register and pay the $3.00 registration fee.

News Briefs

Hardin Replaced

WASHINGTON - Clifford N. Hardin, the Secretary of Agriculture, who has received much criticism from farmers, has resigned from the Cabinet. He is the fifth member of the original Nixon Cabinet to leave office. Hardin has been offered a private position with the Ralston Purina Company. His successor, Earl L. Butz, is a director of the company. Until Butz is approved by the Senate, the Undersecretary of Agriculture, J. Phil Campbell, will head the department.

Pay Board Action

WASHINGTON - The Pay Board has announced several policies that deal with Phase II which began last Sunday. A new agreement is that yearly raises negotiated after the beginning of Phase II cannot exceed 5.5 per cent. Agreements made before then may exceed this level but they may not be unreasonable. The Board has also announced exceptions to its policies and how it intends to deal with retroactive pay. All five members from organized labor on the board have come out in opposition to the policy. AFL-CIO President George Meany is going to submit the question of support to the AFL-CIO convention to be held soon.

Prayer Measure

WASHINGTON - The bill in Congress which would have given constitutional approval to prayer in public schools was defeated 240 to 162. The supporters were trying to reverse the Supreme Court decision made in 1962. Although the bill got a majority of the votes, it required two-thirds to be passed. The bill may become an issue in the 1972 elections.

Okinawa Treaty

WASHINGTON - The Senate has ratified a treaty to return Okinawa to the administrative control of Japan by 84 to 6. This represents the last political issue between Japan and the United States which stemmed from World War II. The 1951 peace treaty provided for administration by the United States, but recognized the sovereignty over the island of Japan. The new treaty allows the U. S. to maintain its military bases with the permission of Japan. The Japanese government will pay the U.S. $320 million over five years and in return will take over the defense of the island by July 1973. The treaty must still be approved by the Japanese government and President Nixon. Nixon has said he will not approve the treaty until the Japanese Diet guarantees that the U. S. can continue to have its bases.

Sophomores To Have Cars On Campus

By LYNNE PIERCE

Dr. Henry Willett opened his monthly press conference on Thursday by announcing that all sophomores will be allowed to have cars on campus. A study conducted on the number of cars brought back by the student teachers showed that there would be ample parking spaces for sophomores. Most of these spaces will be in the Lanford and Bedford parking lots.

Gynecologist Infirmary

At the student retreat that was held before the beginning of school, it was suggested to the administration that the services of a gynecologist be made available to the students. Dr. Willett and Dean Heintz formed a committee which met with Dr. A. J. Munoz, chief-of-staff of Southside Community Hospital, to discuss the possibilities and decided to prepare a list of physicians to be made available to the students. Dr. Willett said that although there is only one gynecologist in Farmville, many of the doctors are licensed to practice in that area.

Dr. Willett also announced a new policy concerning the infirmary. Students no longer are required to check with the infirmary before making an appointment with a local doctor. He felt that any student with a serious illness, for example, diabetes, still should register this with the infirmary, so that if she became ill, someone would know what was wrong. In the case of an emergency, Dr. Willett also feels that there will be a quicker response if a call is made to the campus police or infirmary; however, he stressed that if neither of these could be reached, the student should call the hospital herself.

Two questions were posed concerning the policy by students present. One concerned whether the school insurance policy would cover treatment by a local doctor. Dr. Willett said he would have to check into the answer and announce it later. Another student wanted to know if a student under 21 had to have her parents' permission before she could have an examination or receive birth control pills. Dr. Willett cited the ruling of Attorney General Miller last April 28 saying this is unnecessary.

Vending Machines

Legislative Board has been asked by Dr. Willett to make an investigation of the problems concerning the vending machines on campus and trying to cash checks. He said he had received many complaints and suggestions on the subject and he felt "the time has come for us to take a total and complete study of it."

Academic Affairs

Academic affairs were the next topic of the press conference. Dean Blackwell said he hoped any student who was having a personality conflict with a professor would talk to the instructor to try and work out the problem. He added that if the student felt she could not talk to the teacher, she should go to the department chairman or the dean's office for help. The Academic Affairs Committee will be available for general complaints concerning policies and procedures in the classroom.

Col. Gilchrist announced that each class will be divided into four groups for preregistration and order within the group will be alphabetical. Each class was split into equal groups, which were then pulled in a random order. The groups will be rotated each time registration takes place, so that the same people will not always occupy the same position. Registration for second semester will take place December 2. The instructors' names will be provided for each class this time, but the administration sees little chance of doing this for next fall.

Publication Code

The last topic of the press conference was the Publication Code adopted by the Board of Visitors recently. Dr. Willett reaffirmed his position that the code was necessary in order to prevent the state legislature from prohibiting the use of student funds for the publications. He acknowledged that there had been some disagreement on the part of the Publications Board, but he feels there is going to be a code on every state campus within two years.

Dr. Willett stated two points of disagreement between himself and the board. The board felt that a statement that opinions were those of the editor and her staff was unnecessary. Dr. Willett said he disagreed because many people who read the publications feel that the views expressed represent those of the college.

The other point of contention was the involvement in plagiarism cases by the Publications Board. The board wanted to handle these cases by itself, but Dr. Willett felt this would be inadvisable. The board will work in close conjunction with Judicial Board on the cases, but will have no vote at trials.

Faculty Pressure

Darcy Morrison questioned Dr. Willett and Dean Blackwell about whether the faculty members have been cautioned about what they say to the Rotunda. Dr. Blackwell said that three faculty members had been called in during the Judicial Board dispute for derogatory comments they had allegedly made against some student government officers. He said, however, that they had denied the charged statements and nothing more was said. Dr. Blackwell expressed his hope that faculty members would be as cooperative as possible.

Results Of Major Elections Announced

New Officers

By VICK BOWLING
A tie vote and run-offs characterized the 1971 major elections, held Thursday, November 11, in the dorms.

Tie For Major Office

The race between Debbie Chapman and Mary Lou Glasheen for Legislative Board Chairman resulted in an exact tie. Longwood students had to go to the polls a second time to decide who the next Student Government president would be.

Currently the corresponding secretary for Legislative Board, Debbie wants to see more student involvement in the Student Government. She advocates progress in a changing government. Debbie was also Head Colleague and a member of Freshman Commission.

Mary Lou is the present recording secretary for Legislative Board. She was secretary for her freshman class, vice-president for her sophomore class, and secretary of the Colleagues.

Mary Lou would like for more students to bring suggestions and problems directly to the Board. More effective use of the Board committees is also one of her desires.

As far as the Board itself is concerned, Mary Lou said, "I'd like to see the offices strengthened. Students don't realize how important they are."

Primary Votes

In the primary vote for Chairman of Residence Board, the winners were Terry Jones and Cathy Scully.

Terry is secretary of the present Residence Board. She is a former dorm president and colleague.

So that they might function more effectively, Terry would like the dorm councils better organized. She also suggests monthly dorm meetings with Board members.

Cathy is the current Fire Warden. She has been a Colleague and a dorm representative to the Student Union.

Cathy believes that the Residence Board can be a link between the student body and the administration.

A primary vote was also held for president of the Athletic Association, with Terri Gadsby and Becky Jennings amassing the most votes.

Terri has been a representative to AA for two years. She has been active with its committees, intramurals, and the AA demonstration for freshmen.

With more representation by the students and more participation from non-members, Terri feels that the AA can be strengthened. She also feels that more publicity is needed for AA events.

Becky is secretary for the AA. She is also involved in its many activities.

The AA can't be successful without student involvement, Becky thinks. She wants to make the AA belong to the students.

Sandy Oliver is the new Chairman of Judicial Board. Presently a member of the Board, Sandy believes that the progress the Board has made recently should be continued.

Other Major Offices

The new Orientation Chairman is Becky West. Becky feels that

Shredded Wheat For Thanksgiving

Each year Slater Food Service provides the Longwood girls with a turkey at every table for the Thanksgiving meal. Not only do they provide turkey, but they serve dressing, cranberry sauce, rolls, and other regulars that most of us are used to eating again during the Thanksgiving holidays. For us, this kind of meal is no longer something really special for we have come to expect it just like we expect candy at Halloween or presents at Christmas. But, what we don't realize is that many of the needy families in Farmville will have little or no Thanksgiving meal. That is why Chi has asked the student body to support the drive by contributing nonperishable items that will be distributed by the Welfare Department.

In the past many of the students have filled the fund drive boxes with cereal packages and other items gathered in the dining hall. These items are, it is true, nonperishable but the YWCA girls can easily go over and ask the Slater Service to donate packages of Sugar Pops, Rice Krispies or whatever brand is more popular. Why not care a little more this year, and go to the Safeway and pick up a canned goods item? The expense would be very slight, perhaps not even as much as a snack bar coke. If every girl contributed, the turnout would not only be spectacular but also very gratifying for some needy family in the Farmville area. We should remember as we are eating turkey for the second time during the holiday season that it is awfully hard to be thankful on an empty stomach. LW

Emergency Conference For New Voters

As college students, we are almost all 18-24 years old, which means that the twenty-sixth amendment to the Constitution entitles us to do something we have never done before - vote for a candidate for President of the United States. We are eleven million in number and we possess a political potential greater than almost any other single group in the country. Organized, we could have a remarkable impact on politics next November, but the opportunity is about to quietly slip away.

The situation in the two major political parties indicates that neither party is particularly anxious to welcome the young, newly enfranchised voters as full participants in the politics of 1972. It is quite possible that both the Democrats and the Republicans will simply fill their "youth slots" on their national convention delegations with young party hacks - thereby fulfilling their numerical obligations, without changing the philosophical base of the parties whatsoever. We cannot allow that to happen.

The Emergency Conference will mark an end and a beginning in the politics of 1972. It will see the ending of the bipartisan voter registration efforts of the past six months and the beginning of the struggle for delegate power in the nominating conventions of the Democratic and Republican parties. It is in Chicago that we must set the national strategy by which young people, in cooperation with the already formed minority and women's caucuses, can formulate a caucus of our own - the Youth Caucus - to insure that one or both of the national parties nominates a candidate acceptable to the young and the poor in this country.

Those of us who worked for Eugene McCarthy and Robert Kennedy in 1968 learned that the structure of the old politics buckles under hard pressure, correctly applied. The power elite did not deny us the Presidency in 1968; an assassin did, and while the tragedy of Robert Kennedy's death is still incomprehensible, it does not convince us that the political system can repeal all efforts to change it.

Only by a concentrated effort in Chicago can we hope to rival the power and organization of the political machines which run our political parties. But the process must begin now. Serious reform in the parties is dependent upon the mass numbers which only young people can bring to bear and in many states delegate selection will be effectively finished by the end of February. If you care about using the 1972 elections as an effective mechanism for change in America, we invite you to join us in the work of the Emergency Conference for New Voters, December 3, 4, & 5, at Loyola University in Chicago. Come to Chicago and cooperate in the planning and organizing which alone will give us real power inside the convention halls of 1972.

- Duane Draper, Chairman of the steering committee for the Emergency Conference, and President of the National Association of Student Governments in Washington, D. C.

Letters to the Editor

"Incite" Comments

To the Rotunda Staff:

The students of "Incite" would like to thank you for your time and concern in the publication of the article in last week's newspaper about our journal. The article has proved to be helpful in familiarizing the students with "Incite" as well as the sales of our journal.

In reading the article we have found a few items that need to be made more specific in relation to the journal and the student. First, anyone can submit articles to "Incite." We only ask that they pertain to materials that are along the lines of the social sciences. Secondly, our goal this year is to finish the selling of the journals we have on hand, and to begin working this spring on an issue that will be ready for publication in the fall of '72. Thirdly, the articles deal with issues and subject matter that is prevalent today in our society, keeping in mind some of the current thoughts and ideas we feel the Longwood students would like to know more about.

Once again we would like to express our gratitude for your time and concern.

Sincerely,
Robin S. Hill
"Incite" worker

Fund Drive

Dear Editor:

Each year the YWCA sponsors a Thanksgiving food drive on the campus. This year's drive is now under way. Students may participate in the drive by placing non-perishable foods in the boxes provided on each dormitory hall. At the end of the drive the boxes of food are collected and distributed to needy families in the Farmville area through the Welfare Department.

Chi would like to urge each student to support the food drive. We feel that there is no better way of giving thanks for one's own good fortune than by sharing with others less fortunate than ourselves.

Sincerely, Chi

Mr. Editor:

As the supposed voice of the students of this campus I would like to voice my student opinion to this paper.

I feel that restricted dormitories are an insult to my maturity and intelligence. As a college student, I as most others have come to the conclusion that for most courses I take, passing requires studying. To have me come in at an assigned hour to insure proper amounts of studying in the insult to my intelligence.

To reason that conduct that would be judged improper is the only activity after the so called decent hour of one is the insult to my maturity. This rule assumes I am not able to make judgements concerning my own life.

This school could possibly attain higher scholastic standing if it would concentrate on education rather than motherhood.

Thank you,
Patricia Joiner

A Commentary:

LC Wasteland Of Entertainment

By LYNNE PIERCE

Wasteland: land that there is a failure to take advantage of; uncultivated or uninhabited land

- Webster's Dictionary

Members of the administration, faculty and student body are always complaining that too many students go away for the weekends and do not take part in weekend activities. However, talk is all they ever seem to do about it. Many of us have already faced the fact that Longwood and Farmville combined form a rather large entertainment wasteland. Unfortunately, although people are aware of the problem, the conditions seem to be getting worse, instead of improving.

At one time, there were regular dances on campus where, if the band lacked in talent, girls at least had an opportunity to meet students from other colleges. There were often small, free concerts by lesser known personalities. All of this was in addition to the movies which were most often shown free. All of them have practically disappeared except for the movies, few of which are free.

A common excuse given for the lack of entertainment on campus is the fact that Longwood is a small school with few funds. I find this hard to balance against other schools the same size which have a regular schedule of concerts and dances. Lynchburg College recently had Brewer and Shydzley in concert, which was only one weekend in their series which has been going on since school started. Some of the groups at Longwood have had to cancel their projects because students were going away to events on other campuses.

Concerts and dances could also be supplemented with famous speakers on national topics. Randolph-Macon Woman's College presented Bernadette Devlin last year and Ralph Nader and Sen. Birch Bayh appeared on several campuses. These are people the students will go to hear and who certainly must be obtainable. The need for this type of attraction at Longwood is particularly great.

The point is that no one can expect a student to remain around a campus which is not going to provide her with some means for diverting her attention. The Student Union boasts that it is filling this need, but the evidence is small to prove it. Until some positive action is taken, Longwood will continue to be a weekend wasteland.

Miss Margaret Violette Attends Mini-Conference At V.C.U.

On Friday, November 12, Miss Margaret Violette, assistant professor of art, attended a Mini-Conference on Higher Education at Virginia Commonwealth University. Dr. Kenneth Beittel, a prominent researcher in the field of art education, from PennState, spoke on the topic of his current endeavors to find out how people perform in art.

His experiments involve non-art major students who are told to draw while being photographed, taped, and observed. The student is taught nothing but allowed to proceed at his own pace and in whatever style of fashion he chooses. Art majors are not researched because their original style is likely to have been influenced by teachers and others.

The student's development is traced over a period of 10 weeks after which examination of date and evaluation is begun. All factors are analyzed — video tape, recordings, written observations, personal interviews, etc., — in an effort to reach a valid conclusion of how a person develops an idea and carries it out through art.

Dr. Beittel "opened new doors and avenues" according to Miss Violette, for interested researchers in the field of art education. By explaining his techniques for observation and evaluation, Dr. Beittel relieved some of the previous "fears" of statistics and dealings with technical data which hinders the researcher in art education.

The all-day session at VCU was attended by faculty from all over Virginia plus graduate students of VCU. Many questions were raised and answered in reference to the application of this type of research to teaching. People left the conference realizing that there is a method in making inquiry into the origins and development of art in the individual.

Student Teaching-A New Experience

By LYNDY VAN HORN

Bells ringing, having to show up for every class, perpetual lesson plans--these are only a few of the things student teachers have to cope with and become accustomed to.

Last week brought many things to Longwood--cold weather, midterms, and returning student teachers came the traditional stories and from those who have not yet had the "experience" came the seemingly never ending question, "How did you like it?"

Likes And Dislikes

For many it is not easy to determine immediately whether the student teaching experience is likeable. It is unique and that respect it is likeable finally to be out in the world working, for it definitely is hard work. In many respects it is difficult to imagine anything involving as much effort to be likeable, but most student teachers spoke of their experiences favorably. Of course as in all aspects of life, there are those who responded vehemently in the negative direction.

One student teacher said, "Being able to meet and deal with so many different people was the best thing about it (student teaching)." Other listed such things as being independent, feeling like an adult and not having to take classes as the one most important advantage to student teaching.

The few contacted that did not like the last weeks gave such things as being away from husbands, having to adhere to routine, and discipline problems as their main reasons for disliking student teaching.

Discipline Problems

Many students who have not yet student taught seem to be avidly questioning those who have about discipline. Did you have many discipline problems? How did you handle it? Were you scared? These are typical questions fired at the student teachers immediately upon their return. After talking to several student teachers, however, it can easily be seen that no two teachers had the same problems and that almost all problems were handled differently. Disciplining also differed greatly according to the grade level being taught.

One student teacher who taught first grade and kindergarten said she had to handle children who were not "bad or mean kids" but who simply liked to talk and play. She said that keeping the children busy and interested proved effective in keeping her class under control.

On the junior high school level discipline often became more complex and essential. A history major teaching on this level said she had to handle students who admittedly disliked her class, those who slept through her class, and students coming from disrupted homes who were adversely affected. She said she found that "getting to know each student individually" helped her in understanding her classes and handling discipline problems.

A student teacher who taught all seniors said that she had no discipline problems but had to cope with some students who resented having a student teacher. "Some of those kids thought they should not be forced into having a student teacher since they were seniors and not much younger than I was," she said. She said though that after she took on the total role of a teacher the students were more respectful and were not as resentful.

One thing almost every student teacher, especially those that taught on the secondary level, mentioned was the students' curiosity concerning the student teacher as a person. "They all wanted to know how old I was, my first name, where I lived and practically everything else about me," one girl said. Another said, "They asked me how many times I had been divorced." Many student teachers did tell their students such personal things as names and ages on their last day of teaching.

Advice Given

When asked if they had any advice to oncoming student teachers, almost every former student teacher had a different answer. One secondary English major stressed the importance of good, workable lesson plans. "Going into the classroom confident and knowing exactly what you are going to do is half of student teaching." Others also said that good lesson plans and well thought out lesson plans were important. "We learn in education class," one girl began, "that good lesson plans are vital in order to do a good job in teaching, but I don't think we ever believe that until we go out to student teach and are faced with presenting actual lessons to real students."

Another student teacher had different advice. "The most important thing to remember when you go out to student teach is that you have to be yourself. The kids can spot a fake in a minute and so there's no real reason to try to be something you're not. Besides they respect you as a person and a teacher when you act like a real person and not just in the teacher image."

On similar lines, another girl stressed the important of a good sense of humor. "Don't be afraid to laugh with them and at yourself," she said. "There's a time for fun and laughing as well as seriousness and studying."

Still another student teacher said flexibility was the key to successful teaching. "Teaching is a give and take affair. You have to learn to be flexible, to make changes, and easily admit and correct your own mistakes. Most students like you more for being able to say you were wrong instead of continuing the lesson red-faced or ignoring the situation."

Mixed Feelings

Most student teachers will agree that the eight weeks went by fast and that it seems strange to no longer make lesson plans and walk to the front of the room and teach. Most will also agree that they returned to Longwood with mixed feelings. In many cases it was not easy to give up the new life style and friends but still in many ways it was good to have it end and know that it could be done.

To those on campus who still have the experience to look forward to it will remain a puzzle until it is actually happening or perhaps not until afterward when for them too it can be viewed with mixed feelings.

Fencing today has gained popularity in many Virginia Colleges, but is still slow in its formation in Virginia high schools. Clinics are held annually for the purpose of instruction of ways to improve the teaching and coaching of fencing.

Fencing-Combat And Dueling; A Sport

By MARY FRANCES BALDWIN

Fencing is one of the oldest sports known to man, however, it has not always been a sport. Originally it was one of the required skills of war and personal combat that all young men had to master. The weapons used have reflected the purposes and types of combat of each era. They have ranged from the heavy two-handed sword used in the Middle Ages to the light rapiers with sharp points and sharp edges.

After gun powder was introduced, the defense with the sword lost its flavor. However, the aristocracy continued to use Fencing as a means to settle personal affairs of honor. So, the nobility spent much time in learning and perfecting the art of fencing.

In the fifteenth century, dueling was banned in Spain and fencing became an art. Jugglers were the first to teach the art of fencing. During the sixteenth and mid-seventeenth century, sword play approached an organized and systemized sport. The style of fencing began to shape into the present style used today.

The tragic number of injuries and the deaths of valuable countrymen, caused nations across the world to banish the sword as a weapon. Nevertheless, the early morning secret dueling, fought until death, still continued.

During the fourteenth century, the Germans made a move to use fencing as a sport, and threw out dueling. They were the first to devise a blunted practice weapon and the first to use a director or official to supervise the contest. The official decide the winner, thus ending the fight to death.

For a long time other countries would not accept the German's theory on fencing. Gradually, the monarchs began forbidding dueling, and the German concept became wider known.

There was no uniform weapon or style of fencing. The English used a broad blade used for cutting and thrusting while the Italians used the rapier, a two edged sword with a narrow pointed blade. The Germans adopted a light rapier in place of the two handed doubled edge sword. The French kept the short sword, similar to a dagger except longer, as their weapon, while the Spanish used all types, depending on their specific needs.

As fencing as a sport gained wider support, fencing masters formed schools and wrote books, but each had his own styles and methods concerning the sport. The French concentrated on finesse, dexterity, and speed. They demanded fine movement with good finger and wrist control. In contrast, the Italians relied on strength with wider movements. The Spanish combined the two and developed a more scientific approach of combat.

The formation of the Amateur Fencing League of America in 1891 and the Intercollegiate Fencing Association in 1894 gave necessary leadership to competition and league formation in the United States.

Beginning in the twentieth century, the French developed the foil, epee, and sabre, the three weapons used today. In 1896, individual competition began in international games. Now all types, individual and team competitions are a regular part in the olympics.

Women became involved in fencing when the protective equipment was developed. Ladies are only permitted to use the foil as their weapon, where as men may use foil, epee, and sabre.

The target area in foil fencing is somewhat limited from that of years ago. Today the target area goes from the collar and shoulder seams to the groin lines in front, and from the collar to the hips in the back. A bout is won by scoring four valid, on target hits against your opponent, or by being ahead at the end of five minutes, whichever comes first.

Today fencing is widespread and the U. S. is gradually catching up with the rest of the world, as has been shown in the recent Pan American games. Fencing was a thing of the past, but has great promises of becoming a big thing in the future.

Home Economics Majors Attend Workshop On Business Matters

The weekend of October 29-30 found nine of Longwood's home economics majors at VPI for the Fall Workshop of the Virginia Home Economics Association (VHEA). Those attending were Janice Perry, Eleanor Munt, Jackie Wilson, Deborah Hall, Audrey Oliver, Alice Davenport, Sandra Harris, Lou Ann Wunnenberg and Jean Dunnivant.

The purpose of the workshop, held every year at a different school, was to allow students members of VHEA to get together and discuss business matters pertaining to their organizations.

Janice Perry presided as secretary over the general business meeting and attended executive meetings at various times throughout the workshop. Deborah Hall won one of the nominations for president of the student section of VHEA. Elections will be held at a later date.

The Longwood chapter is in charge of the state project which will be a compilation of articles on the different field of home economics into a pamphlet. These will be distributed to high schools and used to inform students of the ramifications of the field. Audrey Oliver is the chairman of the project. She presented a rough draft of it at the general business meeting which was approved and funds were voted to continue work on it.

In all, the weekend was very successful and the girls are anxiously awaiting the Spring Convention to be held at the John Marshall Hotel in Richmond April 12-15.

WILHELM PAUCK

Wilhelm Pauck To Speak On Christian Churches Thursday

By JUDY THORPE

Wilhelm Pauck, professor of church history at Vanderbilt University, will speak to Longwood students on Thursday, November 18, 1971, at 1:00 p.m. Professor Pauck's topic will be "The Present Situation of the Christian Churches."

Dr. Pauck is a Fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences and a past president of the American Theological Society. Also, he is the author of "Luther's Lectures on Romans" and "The Heritage of the Reformation."

Mr. Hevener, Longwood professor of English, who will introduce Dr. Pauck highly recommends this noted scholar. Dr. Pauck's main concern is the acceptance of Christianity in the world.

Student Government Investigates Ideas For Broader Scope

By PAM ANDERSON

Student involvement is very much apparent in the legislative board. A recent flurry of activity has brought forth many new and promising ideas which hopefully will broaden the scope of student life.

The possibility of obtaining a gynecologist, either on a full or part time basis is being looked into. Mary Lou Glasheen has made an appointment with Senator Herbert Bateman to discuss the open house legislation. Also the possibility of changing curfew regulations is being considered. Ideas are being gathered by writing various colleges about their curfew restrictions. A committee composed of legislative board members and interested students will be set up to raise funds for some community project.

Juniors and Seniors may have the chance to be exempted from exams. The legislative board is trying to get optional exams for those Juniors and Seniors having A's. However, this would be done only if the entire department consented.

There will be an open forum for all interested students in the very near future. The time and place will be announced later.

Yearbooks Away!

Longwood Becomes Member Of State Interfaculty Group

By BECKY NICHOLSON

Longwood College has become a member of the Faculty Senate of Virginia, which is an interfaculty group representing all the institutions of higher education including private, public, junior, and community colleges in the state. This organization has direct contact with the people who make the decisions in the state. Longwood's first representative was Dean Gussett, but due to his new position with the administration he is no longer eligible. The present representative is Dr. Patton Lockwood of the Drama Department, and the alternate representative is Mr. McCombs of the Music Department.

The Faculty Senate of Virginia consists of faculty members from fifteen Virginia institutions of higher learning. They are VPI and SU, VCU, ODU, Norfolk State, Christopher Newport, Radford, Clinch Valley, Hampden-Sydney, Hampton Institute, Virginia Union, Virginia Wesleyan, Marymount, Sullins, Presbyterian School of Christian Education and Central Virginia Community College. Only two other states have faculty senates, and they are New York and California.

A group of delegates met in Richmond during March of 1970 to begin the drafting of a constitution. The organization expresses the views of the faculty of Virginia. The first meeting was held in Richmond on February 20, 1971. The preamble of the constitution states the following objectives:

(1) To achieve a representative voice for college faculties and to aid in forming academic and educational policies.

(2) To serve as a forum for the exchange of ideas and to encourage an academic environment conducive to the enrichment of education.

(3) To contribute to the intellectual and cultural advancement of the Commonwealth and to act in an advisory capacity.

The officers of the organization are: William E. Blake, Jr., of VCU - President; Wylie Krantze of VPI and SU - Vice-President; Peggy Whitaker of Marymount College - Secretary, and William Larsen, Radford College - Treasurer.

The hope of the organization is that state officials will turn instantly to the Faculty Senate for information and advice.

Follow-Up Report Lists Results Of Suggestions From Retreat

At the retreat held at Longwood Estate September 10, there were several suggestions made concerning different aspects of the college. The following ideas are some of those which were acted on.

Legislative Board and interested students have been meeting with Dr. Willett and Dr. Tony Munoz to discuss the possibility of having a gynecologist on campus. It was decided to provide a list to the students of those physicians in the area who are qualified to practice gynecology.

The membership of the Bookstore Committee has been increased to aid in setting policies for the store. The committee is presently in the process of investigating several suggestions made at the retreat.

A committee with a chairman and vice-chairman has been elected by the Day students, with the help of Legislative Board. The purpose of the committee is to improve communications between these students and the rest of the student body. The vice-chairman of the committee will also serve as a member of the elections committee.

Daily Bulletins will continue to be placed on the dining hall tables by the Public Relations Office; however, only emergency announcements will be made on the public address system.

Dr. Willett has been discussing the availability of teaching jobs at his meetings with each of the classes. A list concerning the supply and demand of the positions has been distributed to the students.

Dr. Blackwell has reminded faculty members to give their absence policies for each class and to announce their office hours. Each department has also been asked to appoint a curriculum committee with student representatives.

The Calendar and Curriculum Committees have been meeting periodically to discuss several questions brought up. The Calendar Committee is discussing having examinations before Christmas and the Curriculum Committee is considering exempting seniors with an A average from exams. No decision has been made in either case.

New Teachers On Faculty At Campus School This Year

MRS. BECK MISS FOWLKES

By VALERIE BLANKS

The Campus School has these two new faculty members holding teaching positions this year: Miss Betty Jo Fowlkes and Mrs. Harriet Beck.

Miss Fowlkes received her bachelor's degree in biology from Longwood. She then taught general science in a public school in Henrico County before entering graduate school at MCV. She received her master's degree in Genetics last July.

In the way the Sixth and Seventh Grade classes are structured, Miss Fowlkes teaches math and science to the Seventh Grade students. The classes are set up in a system similar to high school, where the students change classes.

Her future plans being uncertain, Miss Fowlkes said she wasn't sure whether she'd continue teaching. She said she might get her Ph. D. and go into research.

Miss Fowlkes said she liked the large amount of parent-teacher interaction that takes place at the Campus School. With this she said she was better able to see the students as individuals with unique personalities and problems.

Mrs. Harriet Beck teaches the Fourth Grade at the Campus School. Before this she taught in New Jersey, Maryland, and at other schools in Virginia. She received her bachelor's degree from Towson State, outside of Baltimore. She finished working on her master's at Longwood in August and will receive her degree in June.

Mrs. Beck said she liked working at the Campus School because she had "more freedom and independence here." She added, "Teaching is a lot of work but it's worthwhile because you see the result in the children."

This past week Mrs. Beck had a Longwood student, acting as a teacher's aide, observing and helping her out in the classroom. "In this two day program Junior elementary education majors are exposed to the practical part of teaching," Mrs. Beck said as she approved of the program.

Up until the Civil War, pot was frequently used by Americans to season food, and as a medicine to cure insomnia and impotence, and to reduce tension.

Presidential Marijuana

(EPS/CPS) - Seven U. S. presidents once smoked marijuana, according to Dr. Burke, a consultant for the Smithsonian Institution. George Washington grew it on his plantation, as did Madison and Jefferson. James Monroe started smoking marijuana and hashish when he was in France and continued when he returned to the United States. Andrew Jackson, Zachary Tay-

Colleges In The News

Visitation Challenged

BLACKSBURG — The male students in Lee Hall, Monteith Hall and Pritchard Dorm at Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University have voted to create their own policies considering room visitation by women and to ignore those of the administration. The administration policy presently allows a period of hours on the weekend and requires that doors be left open six inches and guests be registered. The administration has said that anyone who violates the policy will be held subject to the normal disciplinary proceedings required by the policy. The Virginia Tech Coalition was formed by the students to push for a new policy.

Kent Petition

CHARLOTTESVILLE — The Student Council at the University of Virginia has agreed to help a former student at Kent State in circulating a petition on the campus calling for a federal grand jury investigation of the events there in 1970. The previous grand jury refused to indict any of the Guardsmen present at the incident, but did indict twenty-five people who took part in the demonstration. Gail Hughes, now a student at the university, is going to take the petitions around the campus soliciting student support.

Statement Rejected

RADFORD — The College Senate at Radford College has rejected a statement by the NSP to the Faculty Assembly which expresses a lack of confidence in President Martin and his administration. The statement charges that Martin has shown a lack of candor in communicating facts concerning the accreditation of the masters program to the faculty. The Senate has come out in defense of Martin and claims that he has issued accurate and complete statements on every development in the incident.

Freshman Dormitory

WILLIAMSBURG — The Board of Student Affairs at the College of William and Mary has suggested that a new dormitory complex recently turned down by the sorority women be used to house freshmen. The board has suggested that the housing presently being used for freshmen be closed. The new housing is in the inactive part of the campus and it is felt will draw the freshmen into the campus life. In connection with this, the board has suggested that the freshmen women be allowed to participate in the "late" system. The complex would be alternating male and female units, with part of it reserved for a sophomore experimental program sponsored by the Honors Committee. The old housing has been suggested for use by graduate students.

Appropriations Lacked

CHARLOTTESVILLE — A recent survey conducted by the National Association of State Universities and Land-Grant Colleges shows that the University of Virginia is not receiving sufficient funds to continue its operations. The association has figured that a university's appropriations should increase ten per cent each year, but U.Va. has increased only 9.15 per cent. U.Va., however, is not below the minimum per cent increase required by the association.

DR. JAMES GUSSETT

Dr. James Gussett Assumes Position As Assistant Dean

By CATHI O'DONNELL

Dr. James C. Gussett has recently been promoted to the office of Assistant Dean of the College.

Dr. Gussett has been a math teacher at Longwood College for the past six years, and continues to teach two classes this year in addition to his new duties. In his new position, he is mainly concerned with academic counseling. This includes help for those who are having trouble with a course, assigning tutors, arranging schedules, and working with transcripts.

His new job, Dr. Gussett says, has given him a view of the overall campus and this broadened perception has helped him in dealing with the students. Many times, a student needs someone to talk things out with and someone who can offer a solution to her particular problem. Sometimes there is no easy solution, which makes this job a challenge.

Longwood College has a rare quality in today's world of higher education. This concerns the personal approach and individual counseling available. Dr. Gussett emphasizes that the student should be aware of this fact and not hesitate to ask questions and seek help from her individual instructors, or someone else in a position to help.

Faculty Advising For Student Registration

Now In Progress

Registration is once again upon Longwood students. The advising period for students will take place Monday, November 15 through Wednesday, December 1. During this time, girls will decide the courses that they wish to take second semester and make out preliminary schedules of such desired courses. Unlike first-semester the schedule of classes offered will include the subjects and also the respective professors. Pre-registration will take place on Thursday, December 2.

At the present time, Dr. Gussett's interests are divided between teaching and advising. He teaches two math classes in the mornings, but from 1 to 5, Monday through Friday, he is in his office on second floor South Ruffner to advise and help anyone he can. The assistant dean considers his job new, different, and exciting. Dr. Gussett enjoys meeting people and working with them. He feels that his new position provides for more communication between the administration and the student body. With the increased enrollment at the college this year, more students are seeking help, therefore, more people are needed to help them. Dr. Gussett, in his new position, provides this additional advice, counsel, and help to students in all academic activities.

Reading Course

Available For

Slow Readers

A course is being offered this semester for students who have a reading deficiency. This reading course is being taught by Miss Pam Eubank under the direction of Mr. Gresham.

It is designed to develop comprehension skills, as well as to improve and increase the reading rate of slow readers.

This non-credit is still open for any student who wishes to take it this semester.

Any student, or advisor or faculty member knowing of a student, who may profit by this may contact Dr. Frank, Chairman of the English Department, or Mr. Gresham for further information.

An informational meeting for all interested English majors will be held on Monday, Nov. 22, at 7:00. This open question and answer period will take place in the C Room of Lankford.

Job Interviews Source Of Question For Graduates

By STEPHANIE SIVERT

With hopes of obtaining a job after graduation, many Seniors have signed up to attend job interviews with prospective employers visiting on campus. Some students are apprehensive concerning what the interviewers might ask and are curious as to what information they can expect to obtain from attending an interview.

Mrs. Francis D. Brooks, Director of Admissions, who has worked with student placement believes that before a girl attends an interview she should think somewhat about her personal philosophy of education. Especially if she has done student teaching it would be to her advantage to decide, on the basis of her experiences as a student as well as a teacher, what she considers the purposes of education to be and her approach to education. This question is frequently asked by interviewers for it helps them to determine in some ways a girl's attitude towards teaching.

An interviewer may also make-up a classroom situation and ask the student being interviewed how she would handle the hypothetical situation. Besides being neat in appearance and on time for the interview it also helps to show enthusiasm. A prospective employer tends to be more impressed with someone who shows a responsive, enthusiastic attitude towards her occupation than with someone who does not really seem interested.

When asked what information can be learned from attending an interview Mrs. Brooks replied that while all interviewers are different most of them tell the students about the advantages of their school system and the community in which it is located, benefits and the availability of jobs. She encourages girls to go to as many interviews as possible and not to limit themselves to localities that appear the most popular. She pointed out that some areas that students often exclude have been found to have excellent working conditions and high pay scales.

Department Heads Adopt Faculty Evaluation Forms

By LYNNE WILSON

An "Effectiveness of Teaching" form providing for faculty evaluation by department heads was adopted at the November 1, 1971 faculty meeting.

This standardized form, which includes student-teacher relations, testing techniques, preparation, teaching skills, objectives, personal qualities, and professional contributions will be used this year. Each department head will use the standardized form, but he will adopt his own methods for evaluation. Ideally, all department heads will observe their teachers and review tests, plans, and scoring techniques. They will also schedule conferences with the teachers to constructively discuss the evaluation.

After the evaluation forms are completed and all conferences have been held, the forms will be given to Dean Blackwell for perusal.

The form was developed by a committee of both students and teachers. The student members, who contributed a summary entitled "The Effective Professor," were Ruth Chandler, Joanne Chueck and Patsy Herling. Faculty members included Miss Huntz, Mr. Kovacs, Mr. Lane and Mrs. Silveira, with Mrs. Parrish acting as chairman.

New members have joined the committee this year to review the present form. After determining its clarity and effectiveness, they will suggest necessary changes. The new committee members include Mr. Harbaum and Mrs. Tinnell from the faculty, and student members, Ann Booth and Diane Weymouth.

VPI Students In Three Dormitories

Disregard Room Visitation Regulations

VPI students in 3 dormitories have voted by overwhelming majorities this week to disregard the university administration's regulations on room visitation by members of the opposite sex and to create their own policies regarding visitation. Many other dormitories have announced plans to take similar actions within the next week. The dormitories that voted so far for autonomy from the dorm regulation of the administration represent over 1,500 students. Lee Hall, the first dormitory to vote on the issue, voted 451 to 51 with 30 abstentions Monday night in favor of disregarding the official regulation on visitation and rewriting their own policies. Monteith Hall then followed with a similar vote Tuesday night. Pritchard Dorm, the largest men's dorm on campus, voted Wednesday night in favor of creating their own policies, independent of the administration's regulations. The statements issued by the dormitories call for students to use their own discretion on conforming to or violating the administration's regulations until the house councils, the dormitory governing bodies, rewrite the policies.

The current regulations allow room visitation by members of the opposite sex during only a few hours each week end and require that all students hosting visitors leave their doors open at least six inches. Registration of guests is also required. These regulations, when passed by the administration last spring, sparked six days of demonstrations, petitioning, marching and a few incidents of window-breaking and the burning of an office building.

This small group of students have disobeyed the regulations but, for the most part, have not been given disciplinary punishment by their Resident Advisors. At the Governor's Day football game October 16, several thousand students "booted" VPI President T. Marshall Hahn, and drowned out his speech, when he spoke at halftime, as a public display of their disapproval for the administration's "open door" policies. The recent actions by the dormitory students represent the first time this type of call for massive violation of the policies has occurred.

The students plan to implement their own visitation policies, which may include allowing "open house" hours at least several hours every day of the week and allowing closed doors when entertaining guests.

The dormitory students that have passed the statements of "open house" policy autonomy have formed a group, the Virginia Tech Coalition, which seeks, as Mr. Terry Adams, president of the men's dormitory council, stated, "The VTC has been formed not at the whim of an elite minority group rather it was born in the dorms and is growing from the demands of the students in the dorms. The Coalition's purpose is to first educate the student of their rights as guaranteed by state and federal laws. It will also serve to inform the students of actions taking place in the various dorms by students and the administration. Most important the VTC is a working force of students solving the problems of students through the only legitimate democratic means offered by the university."

The president of the Student Government Association, Fred George, the editor of the Collegiate Times, the school newspaper, and the general manager of WUVT, the school radio station, have all released statements supporting this week's actions of the three dormitories. As Fred George, president of the S.G.A., stated, "We wholeheartedly support this act of self-reliance and self-responsibility on the part of the students. It's time the State got out of the business of regulating the morals of its citizens."

For further information call the Student Government Association office at 552-2251 or the Civilian Interdormitory Council at 552-5930.

Faculty Follies

The Faculty Follies, a program produced by members of the faculty and administration every fourth year, has been postponed from November 17, 1971, until February 23, 1972. The reason for this postponement is due to the time-consuming self-study program in which the faculty are now engaged. Faculty Follies will be sponsored by the Junior Class to help finance Ring Dance.

Project Lend A Hand

Saturday morning, November 13, 1971, was the first big day for Project Lend A Hand. The project is being attempted in co-operation with the Human Relations Council of Prince Edward County.

Students from Hampden-Sydney, Longwood and any others who are interested in helping, make up the work force of this project. The goal of it is to help those people who cannot help themselves. The families we help ask for our assistance through the Human Relations Council. We work with the families in their homes making minor repairs where needed.

I was extremely disappointed as far as Longwood's turnout went because I know that there are many more people who are interested in social action. It is not as if the project hands out help or even forces it because of guilt or self satisfaction. It is merely a period of time in which one helps his fellow man become himself.

The project needs Longwood's help too. It cannot continue its work in Prince Edward County without the girls' cooperation.

Major Elections

there is a need for improvement in orientation, with special consideration for transfers and day students. She would like to shorten the program and make more activities optional.

Vice-president of her freshman class, Becky also worked on the Freshman Commission and Freshman Production. She has been an Usherette for Oktoberfest, and is currently a Pea-Picker.

Dragon Chandler was elected Chairman of the Student Union. She was vice-chairman last year and has been acting chairman for the past two months.

"We've got a lot of things going on," Dragon said, referring to the Experimental College, the upcoming Bridal Show, and plans for a small, concert-type coffee house.

In addition, Dragon remarked, "There will be a slight modification of May Day to make it more reflective of the student body."

Brenda Griffin, the new Chairman of YWCA, has been actively involved in its activities since her freshman year. She feels very confident about the upcoming year.

"It seems like the YWCA has been dragging," Brenda commented, "I do think that enthusiasm needs to be put back in it."

Run-off elections for Legislative, Residence, and Athletic Association Chairmen were held Monday, November 15.

News Briefs

Pullout Ignored

WASHINGTON — The House of Representatives passed a defense appropriations bill last week to provide $7.1 billion to the Pentagon; however, it included a rider that American troops should be withdrawn promptly from Indochina and be subject only to the release of prisoners of war. Originally, there was an amendment which called for a troop pullout by June 1 which the House refused to pass. President Nixon signed the bill into law, but announced that he would disregard the pullout rider. The Senate is expected to attach an amendment to its defense bill which will allow the President to use the funds only for the withdrawal of troops.

Thai Coup

BANGKOK, THAILAND — Premier Thanom Kittikachorn, who is also supreme commander of the armed forces of Thailand, led the forces in a bloodless coup d'etat last Wednesday night. He dissolved the Council of Ministers and both houses of Parliament and declared the country under martial law. The coup was staged because of growing unrest in the country and disruptions in the government over what relations Thailand should have with China. Thailand has been a U. S. ally and is expected to remain so.

Candidate Jackson

WASHINGTON — Senator Henry Jackson, a Democrat from Washington, has announced that he will seek his party's nomination for president. Jackson said that President Nixon is not trusted by the public and that the other Democratic candidates are too far out for the people. Therefore, even though he is an underdog, he feels he has a chance of winning. The state of the economy will be the major issue in his campaign.

AFL-CIO To Fight

BAL HARBOR, FLORIDA — The AFL-CIO has decided through its representatives to file its national convention to fight President Nixon's economic program through the Pay Board. The group's three representatives to the board will refuse to vote on most matters before the board. The federation also will not tell its member organization to abide by the board's decisions. This could lead to labor unrest and strikes. The labor representatives will remain on the board, but they will vote only if they think it will help the unions' call for justice. The teamsters and United Auto Workers, who also have representatives on the board, had no comment on the action. When President Nixon addressed the convention Friday, he expressed his wish that they could work together, but said he would implement his policy without labor's support if necessary.

Geist Taps New Members

Dr. Gordon Moss, Former Dean, Headed Program

By LYNNE PIERCE

Geist tapped six new members in its fall recognition assembly Thursday night. Dr. Gordon Moss, who served as the dean of Longwood from 1960 to 1968, spoke to an audience of slightly more than one hundred people on "A Way of Life or a Plan of Living." The actual tapping of the new members took place after Dr. Moss's address. Those tapped were:

Carolyn Simpson, a senior from Gretna, Virginia, who attended St. Mary College in Xavier, Kansas, and the Heidelberg, Germany division of the University of Maryland before coming to Longwood last year. Carolyn is an elementary education major and was Chairman of Residence Board during summerschool. She is now president of the Newman Club and was named to Who's Who in American Colleges this fall.

Cookie Howell, who comes from Henrico County, is a senior English and Drama major. She also made Who's Who and is presently Chairman of the Publications Board. Cookie's activities include the Longwood Players, editor of last year's Virginian, Chairman of Judicial Board in summer school and membership in Alpha Psi Omega and Pi Delta Epsilon.

Debbie Ellenbrand has been on the varsity hockey and gymnastics teams and is this year's vice president of the Athletic Association. She was also chosen for Who's Who and is the secretary of Delta Psi Kappa. Debbie is a physical education major from Virginia Beach.

Debbie Hyatt, the Junior Class President, is an elementary education major from Fairfax. She has served on Legislative Board, the Academic Affairs Committee and the Infirmary Committee. Debbie was chosen Miss Longwood during her freshman year and is presently a member of Zeta Tau Alpha.

Mary Lou Glasheen is a junior math major from Hampton and has been elected president of the 1972 Student Government Association. She was secretary of the freshman class, sophomore class vice president and is presently recording secretary of the SGA. Mary Lou was also a Colleague and is a member of Sigma Kappa.

Board Of Visitors Prohibits Off-Campus Living

By VICKI BOWLING

The Publications Code was the main area of discussion at the meeting of the Longwood College Board of Visitors, held here on November 5.

The code had been a source of controversy on the campus. Dr. Willett explained that it is actually a mechanism to handle problems, should they arise.

"Almost all state institutions adopt Publications Codes," he said. "It is not unique with us."

The question of whether or not a residential institution can force its students to live on campus was brought up.

Dr. Willett, The Board, and the staff all feel that two-thirds of college experience concerns the dormitories, and therefore students should live in the dorms. Exceptions to this are day students and married students. The legality of this measure was upheld by the Supreme Court in a case concerning Louisiana.

Only a few students have approached the administration about living off campus. Realistically speaking, Dr. Willett mentioned, there is little or no housing in Farmville in which Longwood students could live.

The Board was extremely pleased with the Campus School, which the members watched via closed circuit television. They are making plans to visit the school at their February meeting.

The President's Advisory Committee of Faculty Members, which consists of elected representatives, met with the Board. The main topic here concerned wages. The Board will do all that is legally possible about pay increases that were affected by the Wage-Price Freeze.

Regret was expressed at the illness of Mr. Henry G. Chesley, Jr., vice-rector of the Board of Visitors. It was noted that Mr. Chesley was a very active member. Mr. Chesley died Tuesday, November 16.

The Board also welcomed its new member, Mrs. Mary Ellen Mitchell. This should be particularly interesting to Longwood students, as Mrs. Mitchell is a 1959 graduate of Longwood College. She received her Master's Degree from William and Mary.

While at Longwood, Mrs. Mitchell was a member of Pi Delta Epsilon, the Student Education Association, and Sigma Sigma Sigma Sorority.

Mrs. Mitchell has taught school in Henrico County and Newport News. She is presently principal of Luttrell F. Palmer, Sr. Elementary School in Newport News.

PETERSBURG, Va. (CPS)--In a new twist on the Princeton plan, students at Richard Bland College were excused from classes to campaign for conservative Democratic Delegate W. Roy Smith (Petersburg) in his reelection campaign for the Virginia House of Delegates early this month. Smith is Chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the lower house of the Virginia legislature.

School officials refused to say whether the two-year predominantly white branch of the College of William and Mary had actually urged students to campaign for the reelection of Smith, who was a leader in the unsuccessful effort to make Bland a four-year college, rather than merge it with predominantly black Virginia State University, the other state school in the city. The U.S. Supreme Court voted unanimously in late October to uphold U.S. District Judge Robert Merhige's opinion that enjoined Bland from becoming a four-year school. He said that the plan would interfere with the desegregation of Virginia State.

David Harris, vice president of the student government association, said it had been agreed that students who wanted to work for Smith would not be marked absent from their classes. On the Nov. 2 election day, students from the college were reported at every voting precinct in the city and in neighboring Dinwiddie and Prince George counties distributing pamphlets and urging voters to cast their ballots for Smith.

Informed sources in Richmond said that Smith originally had asked Bland President James M. Carson to release students for campaigning, after several of the few black students on the campus circulated a petition supporting the write-in candidacy of Florence Farley, a black instructor at Virginia State. Smith denied the charge, saying that it was "a racially motivated challenge directed against me because I've tried to develop Richard Bland."

Aside from fewer than 50 black students, Bland's student body of 1,500-2,000 is comprised substantially of soldiers and dependents from nearby Army Quartermaster headquarters Ft. Lee.

During the student strike of May, 1970, both the University of Virginia and the College of William and Mary voted in favor of some form of Princeton plan allowing students to take time off without penalty to campaign for candidates for public office. However, during the Fall, 1970, semester, the plans were not implemented due to administrative pressure and student lack of interest.

Letters to the Editor

Victorians Institute

Dear Editor:

Recently I had the opportunity of attending the second meeting of the Victorian's Institute. I found the speakers to be highly informative and academically stimulating. I was pleased to find that an institute of such value and merit was the creation of several of Longwood's faculty under the leadership of Dr. Rosemary Sprague. The fact that it was drawn up and will be perpetuated is an indication that there is academic interest on this campus among the faculty.

I have heard several students express the opinion that they would like to see such institutes begun in other fields. It would seem that the science department could provide a particularly wide scope of interest and opportunity for such a project. Symposiums could be held in various fields including space science, medicine, genetics, botany, astronomy, and the physical sciences.

With the realization that the preparation of such projects requires much time and interest and that the faculty is limited in quantity, it is feasible that several departments could combine to form one institute. For example, the English, social sciences and foreign language departments could unite to form a humanities institute. Or, the music and art departments could begin a fine arts institute.

An added asset to this suggestion would be the utilization of student creativity in the formation of a program. I am sure there are other students on campus who would be delighted to see such projects started, and even though the facilities are limited, consider the possibilities.

Empty

Geist, the organization that recognizes and encourages quality achievement in scholarship, leadership and service, seems to be in a severe decline. Or, so it would seem from the turnout Thursday night at the Geist recognition assembly. It can very plausibly be debated as to whether there were more girls in the audience as opposed to those on stage.

This poor turnout should indicate to those old and new Geist members that the worthwhile ideals of the organization are not being transmitted to the rest of the student body.

It is also very obvious that Geist is falling short in one of its primary purposes, "to foster understanding and cooperation between students and faculty." If students don't support this organization, then it has little reason for existence.

One last thought might be worth considering. Perhaps the student support is so poor because they feel that the members in Geist are not the individuals who have shown "quality achievement in scholarship, leadership and service."

Colleges In The News

Coalition Formed

CHARLOTTESVILLE — Several members of the Student Council and the President of the Residential Board at the University of Virginia have formed a coalition to run for the coming Council elections. The group, called the December Coalition, claims they got together so that students they felt were qualified to run would not be kept from doing so because of a lack of funds. The coalition has come under fire from other student leaders, however, because they feel it discourages other students from running. They have also charged that the CAVALIER DAILY, the student newspaper, has conspired with the group to give it more coverage than any other candidates. The CAVALIER DAILY has stated that they will give complete coverage to any candidate who makes news and, although staff members were asked for their opinions on possible candidates, the paper has no connection with the coalition.

Visitation Committee

BLACKSBURG — The Women's Int dormitory Council at Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University has formed a committee to investigate and report on the open house policies of other Virginia colleges. Interviews will be conducted by members of the committee with the administrators of various schools, including Virginia Commonwealth University, the University of Virginia, Old Dominion University, William and Mary, Radford and Longwood. The committee also hopes to set up an interview with state senator Herbert Bateman, the author of last year's open housing resolution, to discuss his opinions. Letters will be sent to the parents of women dormitory residents over the Thanksgiving holiday to get their responses to closed-door open house. Those parents who do not respond will be written until they do so.

Government Abolished

RICHMOND — The student government at Virginia Commonwealth University has been temporarily abolished by a referendum passed by the students. The referendum was included on the ballot used for SGA elections and, although the college has 13,000 students, only 302 voted. The present executive officers decided on the action because they felt the SGA was doing nothing. Many of the officers will continue in their positions and SGA functions will continue, but no legislative meetings will be held.

Negro Enrollment

CHARLOTTESVILLE — The enrollment of Negro students at the University of Virginia has increased by 98 over last year's enrollment, according to a survey released by the university. Five years ago, the university had 71 Negroes enrolled, which included 19 in the undergraduate level. For the 1971-72 session there are 334 Negro students, 197 undergraduates and 137 on the graduate-professional level, from a total enrollment of 12,351. The College of Arts and Sciences has the largest Negro enrollment of the undergraduate schools, with the School of Engineering and Applied Science next. The School of Education has the highest enrollment of the graduate schools, with the School of Law next.

Rotating Loan Fund Established

To Aid Longwood Students

By BECKY NICHOLSON
"The Longwood College Foundation — Alumnae Association Student Loan Fund" or Rotating Loan Fund has been established here at Longwood by the joint effort of these two organizations. The financial aid office will administer this loan to needy students who maintain a 2.0 cumulative average.

Students do not begin repayment of the loan until after graduation. The rate of repayment will be $15 per month with an interest charge of 3 per cent per year. The maximum loan will be $400 per year per student. If funds are available, the loan fund will include an additional $5,000 a year for a four year period, making a total of $25,000 in the fund.

Firebugs To Strike Jarman

On November 9, 10 and 11

THE FIREBUGS by Max Frisch will be performed December 9, 10, and 11 at 7:30 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium.

Directing this play is Mr. Douglas Young, assistant professor of speech and dramatic arts. Nell Skinner, the student director, and Patsy Butler, the stage manager, are assisting Mr. Young.

Appearing in the major roles of Gottlieb Biedermann and his wife Babette are Bob Shield and Cookie Howell. David Blevins, an instructor in the education department, and Dickie Moore are cast as the intruding firebugs. Supporting roles will be performed by Janet Baker as the maid, Ed Koffenburger as the Ph.D., and Joyce Saunders as Mrs. Knetchling. A chorus of firemen also play a major part in the production. The chorus helps to create a number of special effects and induces audience participation. Chorus members are: Bill Bush, Joe Crockett, Janet Beazley, Linda Collins, Stanley Kelsey, Jeff Butler, Dianne Rourke, Bridgett McKillop, Ann Cope, Jean Wisely, Kay Burcher, Kathie Sweet, Chris Sharpe, and Bill St. Claire.

THE FIREBUGS is a comedy of menace. Using the technique of black humor, Frisch presents a series of situations which evoke from the audience incongruous laughter. Originally written as a reaction against German War crimes, THE FIREBUGS draws no conclusions. Both characters and audience are forced to examine motives for the inevitable arson. The audience must resolve for themselves such questions as, "Who is guilty?", "At what point in the play, if any, could Biedermann have prevented the arson by expelling the firebugs from his home?", "What is the political significance of the characters' actions?", "What is the identity of the firebugs?".

Suicides Common On College Campuses

By LYNDA VAN HORN

Your friend says she is going to kill herself — should you take her seriously? Tragic deaths in colleges are on the rise.

Suicide is the second leading cause of death on the American college campus. Though emergency hot lines and similar places to call for help have sprung up throughout the country, the suicide rate has continued to increase. Each year more than 100,000 students threaten to kill themselves and more than 10,000 actually do kill themselves.

Causes

Much research is currently being done as to the causes of these student deaths. Research has shown that the stresses of college life seem to be a main factor contributing to the rising suicide rate. Not only the strain to excel academically but also the strain to be accepted socially in college is listed as a primary cause of suicide.

In an article in this year's May issue of "Contemporary Education" Robert Osmond discusses the distinguishing characteristics of those who have attempted suicide.

"There is at least one social factor by which the students differ," he writes, "that is the excess of unmarried individuals. Another factor is the college system seems to 'break' the university into a number of self-containing, somewhat isolated communities. Moreover, the high standards and the lack of a rigid schedule of work are also thought to be important. The incidence of mental illness among students is probably no higher than in the comparable sample of general population, but the demand for psychiatric treatment has been found to be greater among them than among their age mates working in business or labor."

Characteristics

He also writes that it is often the college student that achieves the highest mark that is the suicide victim. He says, "Frequently, the bright students too often demand far more of themselves than either their professors or the university."

The desire to belong is a strong one in humans. Isolation and loneliness are often causes of suicide. Dr. Paul Popenoe, chairman of the American Institute of Family Relations (AIFR), notes, "Everyone has some feelings of inferiority and inadequacy, but in extreme cases they become pathological and lead to disaster."

Dr. Popenoe also stresses that college women attempt more suicides than men and that 98% communicate their desires to end their lives. Often the suicide victim has previously threatened to kill himself several times before he actually attempts it, but unfortunately, he is rarely taken seriously, and he is willing to help.

Ways To Recognize

How can the potential suicide victim be recognized? Again, experts agree that withdrawal and isolation are the most prominent danger signals. Severe depression is also another sign. According to sociologist Jerry Jacobs, "Progressive isolation from meaningful relationships," is the basic cause of suicide. Homosexuality and failure to relate effectively with the opposite sex are also listed as contributing factors.

Prevention

What can be done to deter the heavy college suicide rate is not easy to say. In a poll taken by the AIFR of college students who had attempted suicides, most agreed that not enough trained professionals capable of dealing with potential suicides were available to the students. They also agreed that colleges are not taking enough interest in the individual student or providing sufficiently for the needs of the student.

Dr. Jacobs reports that the "dichotomy between what the social system of the college offers and what the student needs may be basic to the high rise of college suicides."

Psychologists, sociologists, and college officials agree that suicide is a very real problem on today's college campus and it is the duty of the institution, the professor, and the student to work to keep down and perhaps end the rise of campus suicides.

Dr. William Frank, head of Longwood's English Department, was elected Executive Secretary-Treasurer for the Association.

Glasheen To Head Student Government

M. GLASHEEN

By JUDY THORPE

The run-off elections for Student Government offices were held November 15. Mary Lou Glasheen was chosen chairman of Legislative Board and Terry Jones was elected Residence Board Chairman, and the newly elected President of the Athletic Association was Terri Gadsby. Voter turnout was even greater for the run-off elections. The total number of voters were 1675-660 of which were freshmen and 1015 were upperclassmen.

Elections for vice chairman of the major offices were conducted on Wednesday, November 17, 1971. The new vice chairman of Judicial Board was Kay Oliver. Debbie Chapman was chosen to the office of Legislative Board Vice Chairman. Residence Board Vice Chairmen was Denise Morris and Faye Pool was elected Vice President of the YWCA. Becky Jennings will serve as the new Vice President of the Athletic Association. There was no Vice Chairman candidate for the Student Union. For this particular election 550 freshmen and 810 upperclassmen voted making a total number of 1360 voters. The voter turnout was considered excellent this year for barely 1,000 voters came to the polls during last year's elections.

T. JONES

Besides major elections, minor elections are also held. Conferences for the minor elections will be held Monday, November 22, in the Gold Room of Lankford. Voting for candidates for minor offices will take place on Monday, November 29, 1971.

News Briefs

Premier Assassinated

CAIRO — Prime Minister Wasfi Tal of Jordan was assassinated November 28 by members of the Black September movement while he was on a mission to Egypt. The Black September movement was formed to avenge Palestinian guerrillas who were killed in fighting with the Jordanian army in September 1970. Tal, who had been an adamant foe of the guerrillas, had led the army in the fighting. Three Syrians were immediately arrested and their action has been condemned by the major guerrilla group, the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Rightists Protest

SANTIAGO, Chile — Protests erupted in Chile last week which led to President Salvador Allende declaring a state of national emergency. The riots began with demonstrations by women over the shortage of food. These demonstrations were followed by protests by Anti-Marxists who used the present government and the visit of Cuban Prime Minister Fidel Castro as their targets. The riots are being led by university students and housewives who have clashed with police.

War Declared

INDIA and PAKISTAN moved into full scale conflict Friday night when Pakistan declared war against India. The fighting had escalated when Indian forces invaded Pakistan Monday without orders to penetrate as far as the Pakistani gun positions which had been shelling India.

Dollar Devaluation

ROME and LONDON — The dollar plunged to record lows on the European exchanges after Treasury Secretary John Connally suggested the dollar may be devalued. Connally was speaking at an economic conference of the Group of Ten, which consists of the United States, Britain, France, West Germany, Belgium, Canada, Italy, the Netherlands, Sweden and Japan, and stressed that he was only making a suggestion and not a recommendation. The group agreed to meet in Washington December 17-18 to make a decision. Meanwhile, conditions in the Paris and London markets were described as hectic as speculators rushed to get rid of their dollars. The state banks in both countries began buying large volumes of dollars to stop the rapid decline. All of the European markets have put restraints in effect to stem the rapid disposal of dollars. The markets did reflect some optimism about a final solution being arrived at after 3 1/2 months of crisis.

World Divides Over Undeclared War

Since the British left India in 1947, India and Pakistan have been uneasy neighbors. The friction between the two nations centers around the fact that India is inhabited by Hindus and Pakistan by Moslems. Each side has found it impossible to live with the other and this friction has resulted in 24 years of skirmishes.

The current crisis began in March when East Pakistani troops crushed an uprising for independence in West Pakistan. West Pakistan is primarily Hindu and has long felt religiously oppressed.

In the fighting with the Bangla Desh guerrillas, millions of Pakistanis were sent fleeing into India. When India came out in support of the rebels, the present trouble erupted.

U.N. Actions

The Security Council met late Saturday about the India-Pakistan crisis and a dispute arose immediately over whether to invite a representative of the East Pakistani rebels to speak.

Soon after the council convened by request of the United States and eight other countries, Soviet Ambassador Jacob A. Malik proposed that it "invite a representative of Bangla Desh" — the rebel-proclaimed East Pakistani state — and hear him.

Chinese ambassador Huang Hua and U. S. Ambassador George

ISRAEL: Soldiers stand guard over captured Pakistani tank.

Bush joined opponents of the proposal.

Huang said to invite "the representatives of rebellious elements in East Pakistan to participate in the debate . . . would be tantamount to asking the Security Council to interfere in the internal affairs of an independent state "such as Pakistan."

State Of War

Indian troops, tanks and planes struck in East Pakistan Saturday in a bid to permit the rebels there to set up an independent state.

Pakistan said "a state of war exists" and India accused its enemy of declaring war.

Air and ground fighting also broke out on the border with West Pakistan, 1,000 miles to the west, and the Indians conceded the loss of some territory. Air battles were far-ranging and an Indian government spokesman reported that two Pakistani fighters appeared over New Delhi's airport but were chased away.

In the first 12 hours of fighting in East Pakistan, at least 150 Pakistani troops were killed, an Indian military spokesman in Calcutta claimed. He did not disclose Indian casualties.

The Soviet Union supports the Indians and the Chinese support the Pakistanis. The Americans, like the Chinese, were critical of the Indians.

Campus School To Perform

Enjoy the Christmas season . . . hear students from Longwood's Campus School present a preview of their forthcoming performance at the Pageant of Peace and Children's Concert at J.F.K. Center for performing arts in Washington, D. C.

On December 17, the students will perform at the J.F.K. Center and on Dec. 18, they will present a program of music before the Napon in the Pageant of Peace, the center of the national observance of the Christmas season.

The preview performance will be Dec. 14, at 1:00 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium.

The only admission is a request of a donation of canned goods or toys to be given to needy families in the area. This performance is sponsored by Chi, in cooperation with the Campus School and with the assistance of Freshman Commission.

First Semester Exams Begin January 17

Examinations for first semester classes will begin Monday, January 17. Each exam is scheduled according to the first day of the week on which it meets. If a class meets at 9:00 on MWF, or any other combination which begins with Monday, for example, that class will have its exam Friday, January 21, at 9:00. If a class meets at an irregular hour, it will have its exam at the time set for regularly scheduled classes. For example, a 12:45 Monday class will be scheduled as a 1:00 Monday class. Night classes will have their exams on the evening of the regular class meeting during the exam period. Those periods with an asterisk are alternate exam periods. Instructors may use these periods in addition to, but not in place of, regular periods. Some classes do not have scheduled alternates so that plans will have to be made by the instructor. The use of the alternate period is the sole prerogative of the individual instructor.

Longwood Girls: Stealing And Cheating Are Not Acceptable Behavior.

Diaper Days

Editorializing in a small town college newspaper could be much more dramatic where there are issues of major concern to everyone, issues other than those of the ordinary trivia one finds in abundance these days.

One would expect the usual exhortations in high school newspapers on cheating, lying and stealing to be commonplace. However, recent events at Longwood have prompted a need to briefly return to such things.

As supposed adults in an institution of higher learning we are all aware of the ramifications of cheating and stealing. But, somehow in the Christmas rush students have forgotten and cheating on exams, stealing registration cards, and infidelity has become commonplace. This childish behavior does admittedly keep judicial board in business but it somehow negates all philanthropic ideals, and arguments of corruption. Thus, in the light of such major issues, the student justifies what has become the micro situation. Upon this, the misdemeanor is compounded with a felony through more complicated rationalizations until there is created the very antithesis of the "young and innocent," a far cry from usual student upset over the state of affairs.

Protests can be of considerable value when the participants can maintain a reasonable amount of consistency through their actual performance of their espoused creeds. In other words, quit.

The Major Powers Know Of W.W. III

As of this writing, war has not been formally declared either by India or Pakistan. It is not too late to construct a peace in this area of the world either as long as the major powers are not committed partially to stabilizing matters.

To this point both the US and the Soviet Union have to share much of the guilt for the intensity of the conflict, for it is they who have supplied the arms. In particular, the US has been supplying arms to both India and Pakistan to bolster their roles in self defence against "Communist aggression." It was only late last week that the US suspended aid to India pending reevaluation of India's role in the war.

India has been at war in the past, once in 1948 and in 1956. China, it may be recalled made an incursion into the northeastern sector of India in 1965. No major international conflagration developed from these incidents, and after arms and ammunition were spent, the combatants withdrew to their respective countries. Then, it was the Kashmir dispute over the Hindi language. Now, it is India's support of the Bangla Desh province.

The Soviet Union, true to form, vetoed in the Security Council Saturday a resolution calling for a cease-fire. China still supports West Pakistan's attempt to quell the rebellious Bangla Desh state. Both India and Pakistan have vowed to fight to preserve their "national honor."

World War One, and its sequel Two, started essentially in the same fashion . . . mobilizations which no one could control, misunderstandings, and "national honor."

The US must take credit for its aid withdrawal, but there must be a resolve among the major powers to abstain from support for any of the belligerents. If this is the case, then the conflict can be localized, and perhaps enough pressure can be brought to bear to effect at least a temporary cease-fire before the situation gets completely out of control like it did in 1914 and in 1939.

Christmas Concert

Dear Editor:

This letter is to announce a Christmas concert to be held here at the University of Virginia. We are very fortunate to have booked Rod Stewart and the Faces for this concert on Wednesday, December 15. Undoubtedly, one of the most rapidly progressing artists of this year, Rod Stewart and the Faces are sure to put on an excellent performance. I take this opportunity to invite all of you to attend the concert, which will be held in University Hall at 8:00 p.m., on the previously mentioned date. Tickets are available for $3.50 in advance or $4.00 at the door.

Thank you.

buy their annuals for this year. What they seem to have forgotten is that we have never received last year's edition.

We've been told that material was lost in the mail and that there were delays in finding some to replace it. There always seem to be plenty of answers, but no annuals. I'm beginning to wonder if any real effort is being made to produce one.

Now we are being asked to put out money for another book. We are supposed to trust that this one will arrive on time. Why should we? It isn't reasonable to expect students to turn over that amount of money when they have no guarantee of receiving the books. Produce the 1971 Virginian first; then we'll consider 1972.

Sincerely,

Student Volunteers

Dear Editor:

On behalf of the Housing Committee of the Prince Edward Council on Human Relations, I would like to thank the students and faculty who participated in the Work Day on November 13. We would particularly like to thank Sarah Frederick, Mike Crookshank, John Rendzio and Jim Phillips who took upon themselves the responsibility of student recruitment.

There were over forty students who volunteered for this project. We repaired such things as steps, windows, flues, roofs, walls, and painted eight rooms. Of the six families we assisted, four own their homes, and only one family had an able-bodied man in the family. Our efforts will undoubtedly make their winter living conditions safer and more comfortable.

Some of you asked about future projects of this type. We anticipate continuing such projects throughout the school year, and have started several since the work day, using small groups of volunteers. If you as an individual or organization would like to assist in such projects, please contact us at 392-5757, or 223-4458, or contact the students named above.

Again, many thanks for your help.

Very truly yours,
Carolyn J. DeWolfe

Longwood Stockyards

By LYNNE PIERCE

Several weeks ago, THE ROTUNDA printed a humorous story on the manners of Longwood girls in the dining hall. We made the effort in the hopes that students would realize the picture they present to others and would do something about it. Unfortunately, the article had an effect that had not been considered. Apparently, one segment of the school took the story to heart and decided, if Longwood students are told they eat like animals, they should be treated as such. The area I am referring to is the dining hall and some of its more recent policies.

I doubt that few of us have ever actually been through a stockyard; however, due to the westerns, most of us are at least familiar with their appearance. One shot that the director never neglects is when the cowboys bring the herd off of a long drive and force the cattle down a chute-like walk into a pen.

This must be a favorite scene of the hostesses in the dining hall because they have seen fit to utilize the method on Sunday nights. For those of you who have not participated in this meal since the new policy was begun, there's a treat in store.

Admission is only allowed through the doors of the Rotunda which leads to the build-up of a crowd. There is the normal pushing until you reach the doors when you will suddenly find yourself faced with a chute. It is designed so that no more than two people can walk abreast of each other. After much jostling, the crowd thins down to a line and slips through the door. Since we are counted as we come through the door, I often wonder how much they have been offered per head.

Another principle the dining hall seems to abide by is that animals do not need much room

"The Firebugs" Provokes Thoughts Of Audience

THE FIREBUGS by Max Frisch will be presented in Jarman Auditorium on the nights of December 9, 10, & 11 at 7:30 P.M. The play is being directed by Douglas Young.

By-BEN SANDIDGE

Try to imagine, if you can, a farcical, absurdist MARAT/SADE, set not in de Sade's 19th Century French mental hospital but in the home of a 20th Century capitalist. That's what you'll get, in a sense, when you go to see the Longwood Players' performance of THE FIREBUGS, written by the highly successful Swiss-German playwright, Max Frisch. Since it is full of good comedy bits, THE FIREBUGS is a play whose message you'll enjoy getting. On the other hand, you will probably make the disconcerting discovery at some point during the play that you are actually laughing at yourself, which may, in turn, raise some interesting questions. And as far as Frisch is concerned, that's what drama is all about:

I would consider my task as a playwright quite fulfilled if one of my plays ever succeeded in posing a question in such a manner that, from that moment on, the audience could not go on living without an answer — without its very own answer, which it can only give in real life. (Translated from Frisch's diary by the author.)

While it hardly seems likely that the lives of the Longwood audience are going to be radically affected by the questions raised in THE FIREBUGS, there will undoubtedly be a stirred imagination here and there. The original title of the play, translated into English, is BIEDERMANN AND THE ARSONISTS and carries the subtitle "A Didactic Piece Without a Teaching". It's all about a kind of Babbitt, Gottlieb Biedermann, whose name, in German, connotes something like "good Christian law-and-order man". Although Biedermann likes to consider himself quite a humanitarian, he naturally doesn't let any of his ideals get in his way when it comes to business. He has struck it rich with a cure for baldness which, as he himself puts it, does no more for the scalp than pouring one's own urine over it would. Oddly enough, though, Biedermann's humanitarianism turns out to be his Achilles' heel. By capitalizing on his desire to project the image of a generous person, arsonists manage to talk him into letting them stay in his attic. Gradually, they amass a huge supply of gasoline and explosives in their new quarters, yet their host refuses to recognize the impending doom. Finally the ultimate absurdity: the incendiaries seem to have thought of everything but the matches; but no worry, Biedermann cheerfully supplies them to his guests as the supreme gesture of confidence — and naivete. What happens after that, you will have to see to believe.

By this time it has, no doubt, become evident that this is all somehow allegorical. The equation of Biedermann to the German people during Hitler's rise to power is an obviously inviting one, and Frisch did write a special "Epilogue in Hell" for the play's German performances. Still, as is so often the case with Frisch's plays, it is not so much an historical allegory as it is a psychological model, in that it very cleverly demonstrates a phenomenon which has occurred and will continue to occur over and over again, as long as our civilization is dominated by materialism and as long as there are hypocrites like Biedermann around to thrive on the system. It turns out that the inherent weakness of the system is precisely the element of hypocrisy which is necessary for its operation: to get where he is, Biedermann has had to deceive (hair tonic). In the process, he has of necessity blinded himself to the unscrupulousness which has permeated his every action, to the point that he is no longer able to distinguish morals from the mere slogans which he has used as blinders. It is not surprising, then, that he should fall prey to his own deception, when actually confronted by evil.

This is, of course, nothing new — many writers have noted

The chorus of The Firebugs will provide insight into the play.

this phenomenon before. The point is, what conclusions do we draw? Is Frisch saying that we ought to destroy the system? If so, then we would expect him to side with the firebugs, which is, however, not the case. What they do amounts to destruction for the sake of destruction, with no hope of improvement. Or are we to conclude that Biedermann — we ourselves — ought to bring about a change in the system? But how can any significant change be effected as long as self-deception is the very basis of that system? Perhaps it is a question of degree. To the extent that we are able at least to remain honest with ourselves about the moral compromises we make, we retain our ability to make moral judgments. The idealists among us will hardly be happy with this solution. True to form, Frisch doesn't give us an answer, and it looks like a toss-up. Hence the comparison with MARAT/SADE: neither the hypocritical establishment (restored nobility Biedermann) nor revolution (Marat one of the firebugs referred to simply as "Ph.D.") nor destruction for its own sake (de Sade the other arsonists) seem to offer a viable solution.

If nothing else, this cursory look at THE FIREBUGS will have made it apparent that you needn't expect an evening of good escapism fun when you go to Jarman Auditorium on Thursday, Friday or Saturday evening. Nevertheless, one can hardly imagine a more enjoyable way of having one's mind bogged.

Governor's Youth Council Sets Conference At Longwood

By SARA FREDERICK

The Governor's Youth Council will sponsor a conference on youth here on December 11 in Lankford. Registration will be held from 9:00 a.m. to 10:00 p.m. The rest of the morning and the afternoon will consist of speeches and discussions. The meeting is expected to end between 2:00 p.m.-3:00 p.m.

Youths from many areas have been invited to this conference for the purpose of discussion. They will have a chance to discuss the problems of their region and possibly come to a decision as to how to solve them. The youth will be hearing speakers on the problems of drug abuse, volunteer action, race relations and regional recreational facilities. Two of these speakers will be Rev. James Forbes, who will speak on racial problems, and James L. Hunter, Director for the Virginia Commission on Children and Youth.

The conference is a first step in forming a regional Youth Council in this area. Each council would be based on regional planning district lines and would serve as an advisory committee to local and regional government.

Art Show Draws Satiric Comment

For fanciers of stoneware candlesticks and interwoven batiks as a product of area artist's stream of consciousness, there is a craft display in the Longwood Fine Arts building which will be on view until the 17th of December.

In fact, if the fancier is interested in paying discount prices in the two and three figure range for what seems to resemble semi-stuffed replicas of distorted birds, and half dyed butterflies, then the work of Nadara Goodwin should not be missed. In addition to these rather strange apparitions there is a charming set of stoneware handy work from the Potter's Center in Richmond allowing even the most casual observer to appreciate the varieties of form that pottery can take. The highlight of this part of the show are the Raku pieces which are pleasingly decorative.

Mrs. W. F. Robertson picks the show up with her excellent collection of enamel plates and pictures, the most outstanding piece labeled, The Forest Sleeps. This carefully constructed work is not only extremely realistic, but also very imaginatively designed.

Finally, even the most skilled of the Navajo Indians could remark at the dexterity that was involved in the weaving of the hundred plus dollar rug hanging prominently in the gallery with its orange, brown, yellow, and red pattern. Other loom pieces on view include a mohair and wool neck scarf, and several acrylic yarn hand bags.

In spite of the rather negative approach to the show as a whole, and no matter what the intentions of its promoters are, or may have been this show should not go unseen. It will in any event provoke some kind of response from every viewer. See it for yourself.

Liberated Student's Goal—To Think

By LYNDA VAN HORN

God is dead — tradition is wrong — war is immoral — or so think many liberally minded college students of today. Liberated students are not limited strictly to college but can be found more and more in today's high schools.

The goal of much education today is to teach the student not to accept the values and beliefs of his parents and ancestors but to eternally question these values and determine his own values and beliefs through study and research.

Students are exposed to such writers as Camus and Sartre at a very early age and hence expected to start their questioning at this early age. They are taught to believe in nothing unless some foundation for "Truth" can be found.

Search For Truth

Constantly they ask, "What is Truth?" and continually they come up with the answer that truth is something other than that in which their parents believe. As one high school teacher put it, "They come to school with the prejudices of their homes and the church and they don't think. It's our job as teachers to challenge them, to start them thinking."

To this teacher it is apparent that he wants to "challenge" students to think of opposing views of their parents — that their parents and the church are prejudiced and wrong and that the students should learn to think about such things as the possibility of atheism and the stupidity of marriage.

These are views not uncommon among educators of today. Instead of questioning the soundness of traditional ideas, students are taught to cast off immediately these ideas and question tradition altogether.

What has all this questioning got the student? Students want truth. They have already cast off the traditional values of their parents and their churches but are not willing to accept blindly the more radical views of their teachers or professors.

John Avey discusses this in his article, "How To Survive A Liberal Education." He blames campus disturbances on students' incapacity to find the truth.

"Part of it comes from the realization on the part of many students that they have been 'had.' They were told at age fifteen the virtues of questioning, but no one ever told them to question the worth of eternal questioning. They knew that one was supposed to have an open mind — but they discovered that a consistently open mind soon became a hole in the head."

Student's Transition

Before a student enters college or before at least his last two years of high school he is passive. He willingly adheres to the standards of his family, his church, and his community. This usually means that he accepts these standards without considering any other point of view. He has not learned to question and he responds in the traditional way to such words as God, patriotism, law and order.

Then the student goes on to college or comes in contact with — through friends of the mass media — the college life and community. It is here that he is usually taught to question his own standards and values. No longer is he able to respond openly to patriotism, the church, etc., but is taught that he must examine his thoughts.

This is where the problem lies. Too often he sees that his parents' ideas are "old-fashioned" and sees too for the most part that they are not founded on facts but on what his parents call "faith."

Compared to his parents' views and tradition he sees his college professors' agnostic views and comes to admire their method of acquiring these ideas — reasoning, documentation, research, and the like — and directly begins to admire the views as well. Thus he has given up the unfounded views of traditional society and takes on the founded views of liberated educators even though to him these views may still be unfounded.

Thus as says Avey in his article "... a college student is confronted with what seems to be an insurmountable problem: If he continues to hold on to the method of belief of his parents, he cannot live with himself, for he knows that such a method is intellectually disreputable; yet how can he also hold on to the content of their belief, since his professors, day in and day out, demonstrate that if one is to think intellectually, "one arrives at certain conclusions about God (he isn't there), patriotism (it's a sham), and right and wrong (there are only shades of gray — except the war — that is immoral)."

The Solution

What then is the college student to do? he looks at the dogmatic standards under which he has grown up and finds them vulgar, irrational, and for the most part, stupid. He looks then to his professors' well-founded standards as the alternative. He feels that he must flee from the clutches of one into the clutches of another and he is all too willing to do so without asking why or in fact without questioning as he has been taught at all.

What is needed, then, is for the students to come to the conclusion that if his parents' ideas are not acceptable because they are not based on documented fact, then his professors' views should also be unacceptable to him since they are based on facts which have not been personally analyzed and documented.

The student then has come to the height of his intellectual career. He has come from the prejudices of his precollage days, through the leftist skepticism of his early college experiences, finally reaching a rational form of intellectualism that is basically in tune with the views of his parents and the working class and with generally the Western world at its height.

Viewed in this light the so-called liberal education received by many students is not at all what the liberal educators had in mind. In his article on liberal education Avey presents the rationalization of professors.

"Their argument has always been that they must present 'the other side of the argument' (the origin of the idea that an argument has only two sides is a fascinating historical puzzle) because, after all, the students have received the 'other side' from parents and church and school. It is — say the professors — only their intellectual duty to help shake these kids up, to have them question the values they bring to school."

No one disputes the worth of teaching this kind of questioning, but what about the standards imposed by the professors? Who will teach students to question these values as well? The student is forced to come to this conclusion through independent self-study.

He sees that there ARE more than two sides to the question and that the third (or fourth or fifth) side includes ideas and methods of both the other two.

Gymnastics Team Gets New Members, Experience - Skill

The 1971-72 gymnastics team has been chosen and practices have begun early in hopes of having a successful season, which begins in February.

The Longwood team, who in past years has shown much skill and form, has returning veterans of many competitive meets, Martha Hicks, a senior, leads the list of veterans, followed by Curry Pettis, junior, and Linda Burgdolf, Carolyn Paxton, and Suzanne Stewart, sophomores.

Junior transfer, Jo Smith, shows much promise as she brings her excellent body control, movement and experience from the gymnastics team at the University of Massachusetts.

New freshmen on the team include Diane Covington, Karen Smith, Marsha Spear, Carol Stewart, and Sharon Berryman. The team is coached by Miss Judy Fath.

Martha Hicks practices her routine on the horse while Miss Fath and Dana Hutcherson spot.

Hutcherson and Bunting Play In USFHA Game

By VALERIE BLANKS

Dana Hutcherson and Loretta Bunting, students at Longwood, were chosen as representatives of the United States to play in the national tournament of the Field Hockey Association.

Also chosen for the tournament were two Longwood alumnae, Jane McCaffrey and Barbara Snellings. The national tournament was held on November 25-28 at West Chester State College in Pennsylvania.

Dr. Elizabeth Jackson, a member of Longwood's science faculty, was one of 24 honorary members honored at this tournament which marked the 50th anniversary of the association.

This past summer, Dr. Jackson was also chosen as one of two delegates from the United States to attend the international conference and tournament of the Field Hockey Association. A fifteen member team accompanied the delegates to the conference at which 32 countries were represented.

Though the conference was held at New Zealand, the 600 players and the delegates traveled to Ceylon, Australia, Malaysia, Hong Kong, and Japan, as well as New Zealand, where the games were played.

Commenting on the United States' placing 8th out of 16 teams, Dr. Jackson said that the games were played for competition, not for determining a winner. "Overall, Netherlands had the best team," she said.

The 1971-72 schedule of meets is:

Feb. 4 (Fri.) - 4:00 UNC-CH (H)
Feb. 9 (Wed.) - 9:00 Radford (H)
Feb. 18 (Fri.) - 7:00 Radford (A)

McCloud Tops All Fencers In LC's First Open Event

For the first time in the history of Longwood College, an open fencing tournament was held between first semester beginning fencing students and past fencing students.

Winners in the competition were: McCloud, first; Joyce Miller, second; and Linda Duncan; third.

The tournament, which drew twenty-four contestants for three classes, was held each Tuesday and Thursday night until a winner was declared.

The competitors were divided into three pools of eight, and each person in the pool fenced one another. The top three fencers from each pool were then grouped together to form the finals round.

Official directors for the tournament were Miss Sally Bush, fencing coach, and Temple Harvey and Mary Frances Baldwin, varsity team members.

It is hoped that next year the fencing tournament can be held as an intramural sport and points be given by the Athletic Association.

Basketball Teams Prepare For A Successful Year

Longwood College will start their basketball season this year with many new and old faces on the team. After a very good season last year, coaches Jean Smith and Pam Oliver are expecting this year's team to be even better since the team will have much more experience behind them.

Varsity members include: Dotie Bobannon, Cindy Bradley, Debbie Carneal, Daryl Driskill, Nanette Fisher, Janet Ford, Bee Johnson, Margaret Lowry, Sue Monahan, Diane Minor, Lucy Sale, and Bernice Stanley. These girls will be coached by Miss Jean Smith.

Bettie Baker, Sue Craven, Diana Dull, Marilyn Dull, Nancy Fentress, Sadie Hawthorne, Dana Hutcherson, Donna Johnson, Cathy Sims, Freda Sutton, and Katherine Tolley make up the junior varsity team. They are coached by Miss Pam Oliver.

This year's schedule includes:

LC Fencers Compete In Penn State Open

Mary Frances Baldwin, a senior at Longwood, and Miss Sally Bush, fencing coach, recently attended the Penn State Opening Fencing Tournament at Penn State University in State College, Pennsylvania.

Competing with fifty other fencers, the Longwood duo fared very well. Mary Frances progressed to the semi-finals round, and Miss Bush advanced to the second round.

The tournament was fenced round robin. In the first round there were seven pools with six and seven fencers to a pool. Miss Bush placed first in her pool of six and Mary Frances placed in her pool of seven. Both moved up to the second round, with the top four from each pool making up the second round competition.

Five pools of five and six fencers made up the second round competition. Mary placed second in this round and was one of three from each pool who moved up to the semifinals round.

The Penn State Open drew fencers from North Carolina State University, Cornell University, Brooklyn College, Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Penn State, and Longwood.

Such known fencers as Denise O'Connor, national fencing competitor and former Olympic Team member, Clare Tate, Virginia Intercolligate Single's Champion, and Penn State alumni, and Niki Tomlinson, New York star fencer were competitors in this event.

Many students in past years have enjoyed the friendship and competitive spirit gained through membership on the swim team. Why will there not be a swim team this year?

Colleges In The News

Presidents Warned

ROANOKE — State Senator William B. Hopkins has charged that the presidents of state colleges "have been playing a game with the General Assembly for years" in order to get more money for their schools. He said that money was hard to get in the 1940s and 1950s, so that presidents began asking for much more than they really needed in order to get sufficient funds. During the 1960s the state legislature became aware of the colleges' needs, he said, and were generous with money, but the presidents continued to ask for money they did not need and are still doing so. According to a study he has done, the schools could only spend $61 million in the next biennium, but they have requested $500 million, Hopkins; views are held by several other state senators who feel taxes should not be raised to cover the excess. The senators particularly criticized the requests of Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University and the University of Virginia.

Protest Canceled

WILLIAMSBURG — The Student Association at the College of William and Mary cancelled a demonstration they had planned to have in front of state legislators over a proposed enrollment increase. The protest had been intended to take place at the Burgess Day Luncheon which many legislators annually attend. The Association announced its decision after being told by administration officials that such action could lead to a cut in funds which would affect not only future enrollment but the size of the present student body as well. The students are now considering testifying before the appropriations committee meeting of the General Assembly next year and a demonstration directed toward the administration.

Housing Dispute

CHARLOTTESVILLE — The Student Council at the University of Virginia had condemned the intention of the Director of Housing, Ralph Main, to make social regulations for the dormitories. The Council claims that Main has interpreted the "Terms and Conditions of Residence," the contractual agreement, too widely and that his duties involve only the maintenance of the dormitories. A resolution has been sent to the Chairman of the University Committee on Housing requesting that Main be deprived of any jurisdiction over social or personal use of the dormitories.

Code Challenged

FREDERICKSBURG — Controversy has arisen at Mary Washington College over the effectiveness of the Honor System there. One segment of the student body has charged that an honor system is unnecessary in an academic atmosphere and, since the present system is ineffective in their opinion, it should be abolished. The system has been defended by the majority of the faculty and student body members, but a committee has been set up to investigate the problem.

Sears Donation

FERRUM — Ferrum College has been named the recipient of a $1,000 grant from the Sears-Roebuck Foundation. Ferrum was chosen as one of 28 privately supported colleges and universities in Virginia that will receive more than $32,000 in grants.

Convention Of Southern Colleges Attended By President, Dean

By VALERIE BLANKS

Pres. Willet, Dr. Blackwell, Mr. Dalton, and Mr. Peele attended the annual meeting of the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools held Nov. 27 - Dec. 1 in Miami.

The 4500 delegates attending the convention represented colleges and public schools all over the Southeast.

At each convention formally structured meetings were held related to the particular job functions of the delegates. Just as important as these meetings were the discussion of problems and exchange of ideas that took place outside of the meetings.

The main objectives of the group attending from Longwood were to obtain ideas from association officials and other administration members on how to carry out Longwood's self-study program, as well as to learn about the standards Longwood must meet up to to receive reaccreditation.

The Southern Association is the main accrediting agency in the south. To fulfill this job it must set up the standards for education in the south, and by periodically judging the education programs of the schools, make sure these standards are being maintained.

Longwood, as each college must do every 10 years, will come up for reaccreditation in 1974. As part of its preparation for this, Longwood is setting up a self-study program. Among its objectives are to define what Longwood's purposes are and how they are being fulfilled. Mr. William Peele is directing this self-study program.

Even Comic Books Must

Undergo Censorship

(CPS)--The next time you buy a comic book, take a look in the upper right hand corner. The little stamp that proclaims in dark letters that the comic has been "Approved by the Comic Code Authority" is an indication of what you can expect to see inside the four-color pages.

The Comic Code Authority is a censorship board under the leadership of attorney Leonard Darwin which was founded in 1954 to protect the comic reading public from discovering the realities of life.

In the fifties, Dr. Fredric Wertham published a book entitled Seduction of the Innocent which pointed out the ills of comic book literature. Through various studies, Wertham came to the conclusions that Batman and Robin were fags, Wonder Woman was a lesbian and Superman was the prototype of Nazism. Documenting many case studies, Wertham showed how many disturbed youngsters had been affected by unconscious symbols in comic books.

Wertham's book sparked a congressional hearing as outraged parents sought to protect their children from the evils of comics. To avoid government censorship and to try to quell the waves of protests from the buying public, the major comic companies agreed to submit to a self-censorship board of regulation to be known as the Comics Code Authority that would inspect each script and each panel of artwork to appear in the comic book.

Among the directives of the Code are the following:

Crimes shall never be presented in such a way as to create sympathy for the criminal, to promote distrust of the forces of law and justice, or to inspire others with a desire to imitate criminals.

Policemen, judges, government officials and respected institutions shall never be presented in such a way as to create disrespect for established authority.

New Minor Officers Comment On Duties For Upcoming Year

By JUDY THORPE

Elections for minor offices were held Tuesday, November 30, 1971. Positions filled by these elections were Corresponding Secretary, Recording Secretary, and Treasurer for Legislative Board; Secretary of Judicial Board; Secretary and Fire Warden for Residence Board; Secretary and Treasurer for the Athletic Association, YWCA, and Student Union.

Bobbie Bannin was elected Corresponding Secretary of Legislative Board. Her main responsibility will be to correspond with other schools. She advocates the discussion or thorough investigation of the possibility of restructuring the Student Government. This change would bring about a greater representation from the student body. In addition, Bobbie would like to see more cooperation between the three major boards.

The new Recording Secretary of Legislative Board is Becky Bailey. In addition to her usual job of taking and keeping the minutes, she also communicates with the student body. Becky feels that the minutes should be publicized so that students will be aware of the activities and discussions of the Board.

Serving as Treasurer of the Legislative Board will be Gerry Sue Davis. Gerry Sue uses the nickname "action board" to describe the legislative board. She wants to see not only the members of the board represented, but the entire student body as well.

Cindy Crisp, new Secretary for Judicial Board, wants to see continued student interest in the Board. She feels that changes could be made but that too many changes would weaken the Board. Besides maintaining records and taking minutes, she also informs the administration concerning judicial activities and assists the chairman and vice-chairman on investigations.

Elected as Secretary of Residence Board was Debbie Waldren. Debbie believes that communication between Residence Board and students should be strengthened. Publicizing the minutes is also one of her goals.

As Fire Warden, Paula Williams would like better organized fire drills in the dormitories. She suggests a fire drill in the dining hall, better equipment in the older dorms, and frequent checking of fire extinguishers. Paula feels that each girl should be able to operate a fire extinguisher.

Anne Reilly, Secretary of the Athletic Association, and Brenda Price, Treasurer of the organization, wish to see students other than Physical Education majors taking an active participation. This change would make the Athletic Association more successful.

Donna Hicks was chosen Treasurer of the YWCA. Her goals are to make the YWCA an organization in which all students will want to participate and to better serve the student body. She feels that through greater involvement, the organization will grow. Through more communication with Longwood students and with other schools, Diane Perkinson, the newly elected Secretary of the YWCA, feels that growth will be the result.

Serving as Secretary of the Student Union is Jennie Metcalfe. She wants to see more activities planned for the weekends. Jane Anderson, Treasurer of the Student Union, believes that participation and interest in sponsored activities will enlarge the treasury. The increased treasury will benefit the students by additional activities.

More Tutors Needed In Some Subjects

By KADY DALE

The academic year affects different students in different ways. For many, the days of classes seem to fly by. However, the rest complain that they feel as though they had been here all their lives. One must expect such remarks from those at Longwood or any other school.

Perhaps, the discouragement of many students is the result of trouble they find they are having in a couple of their courses. For this reason they aren't looking forward to sitting through a whole semester in a subject they cannot grasp. Many reasons can account for their inability to "catch on" in a certain course. Perhaps the major reasons are, that either the student doesn't understand the material or her study habits are such that she is unable to comply with the requirements of her instructor.

Now, something can and is being done to alleviate the problem and give aid where it is needed. Longwood is starting a volunteer tutoring program, headed by Mr. Thomas Hamilton, Assistant Registrar at the College. Mr. Hamilton stressed the fact that the main objective of the program will be to make each girl a self-sufficient student, and to improve her study habits -- not to aid her in getting through exams and realizing higher grades.

The first phase of the program started at registration last Thursday. Girls had the opportunity to fill out a form if they wished to be tutored, or felt they were able to tutor another student. The areas designated to give and receive help were broken down into the following numbers and areas: 18 asked for help in the Social Sciences, while 7 volunteered aid in that subject area; 18 requested aid in Math, and 8 offered to tutor in that subject; 1 person asked to be tutored in a Foreign Language and 8 offered to tutor in that field; 6 requested aid in Biology and 10 offered to tutor; 4 asked for help in English, while seven offered to tutor; 2 requested help with Chemistry and one person volunteered to tutor that course; finally, four asked for help in the other sciences and 1 in Psychology, but there were no girls who signed up to tutor in those areas.

While this appears to be a good start for the program, it is also very evident that more tutors are needed, especially in Math and the Social Sciences. The 37 girls who signed up to tutor are not sufficient to aid those girls who felt they needed help in various subjects.

Mr. Hamilton explained that those girls who volunteered to tutor this semester will be notified Tuesday, Dec. 7, and a meeting with him will be held at 5:00 p.m., Thursday, Dec. 9, 1971, in the Tabb Lounge. Another meeting will be scheduled sometime in early February for those girls who will be tutoring second semester. At these meetings he will explain what the duties of each tutor will be, and give to each girl the names of those students she will be tutoring. It is important to note that in this program the responsibility for contact and continuous aid is placed upon the tutor. It is up to her to get in touch with the girl as often as she feels necessary and be willing to give her 2 or 3 hours of time each week. It is not the responsibility of the girl to be tutored to get in touch with that person helping her.

Mr. Hamilton will be checking from time to time with each tutor to see how far they are coming with each student, and check on any problems that may occur. If anyone realizes a conflict within the program they may get in touch with him at any time so that it can be resolved.

Anyone who has not yet had the opportunity to sign up either to tutor or be tutored can do so at anytime by seeing Mr. Hamilton in his office, 107 Tabb, and filling out the proper form. He will ultimately be handling all students in the school who request a tutor, regardless of whom they notify in the administration about receiving aid.

Again, we would like to stress that the objective of this volunteer tutoring program is to make each girl a self-sufficient student and improve her study habits. It is not being formed to prep girls to make higher grades and pass their final exams. This should be realized, after the tutoring, by each girl, individually.

A program such as this has been needed at Longwood for quite some time. It would be a shame if it folded because of lack of interest by those students here on campus. The school is not asking for much to make this work, but it can't be done without your help. This is just the beginning of something that we hope will continue on at Longwood, indefinitely. Hopefully, with everyone's interest and cooperation, it will continue to increase such that the overall academic learning ability of each student will improve.

and Key Biscayne, Fla., said what the United States wants is council action to get a cease-fire and military withdrawal.

Aid Suspended

The State Department blamed India Saturday for the fighting with Pakistan.

In so doing, a high State Department official also said the huge U. S. economic aid program for India is under review. The State Department earlier last week announced suspension of the small-scale arms shipments to India.

The official authorized direct quotation of this statement:

"We believe since the beginning of the crisis that Indian policy in a systematic way has led to perpetuation of the crisis, a deepening of the crisis, and that India bears the major responsibility for the broader hostilities which have ensued."

Soviet Vote

The Soviet Union vetoed a resolution in the U. N. Security Council calling for a cease-fire and withdrawal by both sides Sunday night. In casting its negative vote, Soviet Representative Jacob A. Malik accused India of provoking war. Meanwhile, Indian forces swept into East Pakistan with periodic bombings.

Longwood Stockyards

to keep them happy. Once students manage to get into the pen, they find that over half of the tables are closed. Those that are not closed turn into a mess after the first fifteen minutes and hopes that a waitress will descend from heaven to clear away some of the clutter are, to say the least, dim. I had a rather difficult time reconciling the lack of space when, at the meal before, a hostess had remarked to me how surprised she was that so many students had remained on campus last weekend. It seems that nothing will provoke the staff to open a few more tables for the students' convenience. After all, we only paid for the meals.

The greatest insult, however, seems to have taken place the night of the Thanksgiving dinner. For those of you who missed them, there were hostesses stationed at the doors to insure that students were properly dressed. Those who were not were asked to leave. This included a student who had a physical education course until just before dinner and who had no chance to change. My question would be, what right do these girls have to turn another student away from a meal that she paid for? The answer is obvious -- none.

Let's try to be realistic. Granted that the crowds on the weekends are big and rough, something should be done. However, it would make more sense to increase the number of lines and open more tables to provide quicker service. As for birthday dinners, considering the attitude of most of the students towards the dining hall food, the hostesses should be glad anyone even shows up. At any rate, anyone connected with the dining hall should remember, though their actions may not always show it, Longwood students are still human and deserve better treatment than herding.

Charlie's Trip Ended In Darkness

Reprinted from THE NATIONAL OBSERVER

Last January Charles Innes and Robert W. Rettman were arrested in a Baltimore suburb and charged with possession of cocaine. On May 14 undercover narcotics detectives, acting on a paid informant's evidence, obtained warrants to search Innes' and Rettman's residences.

When two plain-clothes men confronted Innes in the back yard that evening, he bolted into the house, grabbed a 35-mm. film can, and swallowed its contents.

What Did Charlie Eat?

Officer James Dugent recalls that all the way to the station Innes repeated slogans: "PCP . . . LSD . . . Peace . . . Right On . . ." He was taken from the police station to Union Memorial Hospital, where his stomach was pumped. He was kept overnight, and released the next afternoon on $3,000 bail, charged with possession of marijuana. (Police say they found some residue in a homemade pipe in his kitchen.) The charge was later dismissed.

What did Charlie eat?

To this day, Jim Dugent believes that it was pot laced with LSD. In the police file is a lab analysis indicating traces of LSD in the gastric material pumped out of Innes at the hospital.

But Innes insists that he ingested neither pot nor LSD, but parsley cured with "PCPA" — enough "to get at least 30 smokers high."

He describes PCPA as a derivative of PCP, an animal tranquilizer, but with "an extra molecule" that nobody knows much about. Once he referred to PCPA's mysterious aphrodisiac quality; several times he described its ability to stimulate the senses: "It was like being born again . . . like everything was new . . . like your mind is completely open . . . I was energized." Other effects were "complete ego loss" and "intensive audio and visual hallucinations."

Back Into Custody

Between 6 and 7 p.m. on May 19, four days after Innes got out of the hospital, Patrolmen Frizell Bailey and John Denholm were ordered to check on a nude man acting strangely on the back porch of an apartment building on Bolton Street. When the scout car pulled up in the alley, a crowd of young people was staring and giggling at a muscular man with wild sandy whiskers, but not a stitch on his stocky body. The two uniformed officers climbed the rusty metal ladder to the landing, then coaxed the man into the apartment. The man was speaking nonsense, so the officers wrapped a blanket around him and called for the wagon.

Bailey rode with Charles Innes. "He wouldn't let my hand go," recalls the 27-year-old black officer. "And he was talking the whole time: 'I'm Charlie Innes . . . you're Frizell Bailey . . .

you are my friend . . . Charlie Innes' likes his friend.' He would say things like that and repeat them backwards and forwards."

At police headquarters Bailey got a call from his partner, who had stayed behind to question the tenant, a young woman named Mindy who was Charlie's girlfriend; she told Officer Denholm that he had taken an overdose of a drug a few days ago. Denholm told Bailey what she said.

Bailey decided to take his prisoner, still swaddled in a blanket, to nearby Mercy Hospital for an examination. A senior resident physician examined Innes, but apparently found nothing physically wrong. But on the physician's report, a copy of which was given to Bailey, "psychoneurosis" is written in the column labeled "Impression," and "advise psychiatric evaluation" is in the "Treatment" column.

He Was Physically Normal

Was the decision not to hos-pitalize Innes that night justified? This is one hospital official's rationale: "Our responsibility was to see if he was physically well or if there was an acute psychiatric emergency. The examination indicated that he was physically normal. And there was no evidence in the examination that he was intending to harm himself."

Frizell Bailey, for one, didn't like the idea of taking Charlie Innes back to jail in his condition. "It was never my opinion that he should have been put in that cell," Bailey says. "I think the doctors should have requested that he stay in the hospital under observation."

Yet there was nothing else for Bailey to do. After they had locked Charlie in Cell 2, Bailey went back to say good-by. Bailey recalls: "I said, 'You take care of yourself; I'm going to talk to the judge tomorrow morning and see if he can send you some place where you can be helped.' And he was holding my hand and saying, 'You're a good man, Frizell, you're really a good man.' He was standing there holding on."

About three hours later Charles Innes quietly blinded himself.

Compounding

Treatment's Problems

The problem of treating a spaced-out kid is compounded when nobody knows what he got loaded on.

Officer Dugent still believes that Charlie Innes gobbled an overdose of LSD — laced pot, Charlie insists that it was parsley sprinkled with PCPA; that's what the dealer told him it was. But there is strong circumstantial evidence that both are mistaken. What ripped Charles Innes was almost certainly "angel dust" — PCP.

There is widespread confusion about PCP and PCPA in the drug culture. Despite what he knows about chemistry, Charlie seems to hold some of the common misconceptions, including the one that PCPA is a derivative of PCP.

PCP: It Spells 'Danger'

They are, in fact, totally different kinds of drugs. PCP is an anesthetic that in small doses can produce a moderate "high" but in drug darts can immobilize a rhino.

PCP, or "PCPA," hasn't been available in Baltimore, Charlie has been told, since he freaked out. Kids elsewhere are still eating and smoking it, though, whether they realize it or not. Many dealers and customers heard the macabre story of the hippie who gouged out his eyes, but counterculture sources say that not many believe it. The prevailing view is that the story was just another drug-scarehoax promulgated by the "nars."

That's one reason to hope that Charles Innes realizes one of his ambitions: to become a drug counselor. For anybody who looks into those dead eyes sees that Charlie has been where nobody wants to go.

Charles Innes tells his story so that others may learn from his experience.

'I Roamed Baltimore With Charlie In The Mid-Sixties'...Today?

By JEREMY HORNE

Charlie was friendly; he was helpful; he was everything that any Boy Scout leader would be proud of. This was the Charlie I knew, the Charlie with whom I used to roam about Baltimore in the mid-sixties. He was always the life of the party . . . and so appreciative of life.

Charlie is now blind. A very good friend of mine who entrapped himself in the world of narcotics (I do not know how) can no longer do the thing he and I used to enjoy . . . motorcycling.

Outlook

For Charlie a few years ago, life could not be taken too seriously. Sure the world was perverted in many ways; the air was polluted; poverty abounded, and life could be pretty miserable if one wanted to try his hand at making it so. Even our jokes about the numerous rats we saw in the city didn't seem to phase him much.

Just a bit of grass now and then would keep pleasure in good stead. But Charlie needed money, too. Mom and Dad, political activists from Massachusetts would not ante up enough money, even for his basic survival. He hated to borrow from me, so he alleviated his guilt partially, by repairing my bike transmission for $15.00. It was a pittance for even a weeks food expenses. Charlie was desperate for money, not because of an addiction but because tuition at Hopkins was expensive. Working and studying was out of the question, too.

I really didn't know too much about his background. He told me once that he came from a fairly "well-to-do" family, but the rest of the details remained a mystery to me. It really seemed that he didn't want to discuss the subject very much.

Proud Family

Charlie's grandfather established the first night law school in the U. S. in Boston in 1911. Boston's Huntington Avenue overpass bears his namesake today. Following in his father's footsteps, Charlie's father practiced law, and devoted 23 years of his life to being a representative in the Massachusetts State legislature. Late in October of this year, the State Senate passed a resolution praising him for his legal scholarship and his position as counsel to the State Senate since 1956.

In the tradition of his parents, Charlie traversed the Massachusetts social circuit, meeting the Kennedy's and the Nixons. After attending private schools in Massachusetts, he went to Harvard, but failed. Charlie then entered Johns Hopkins, while that school was experiencing its first wave of radical protests.

Drug Arrest

One morning, he asked me whether the dean of our school maintained a list of the suspected dope peddlers on campus. Not having familiarity with such activities, my answer was "no." Despite my intermittent associations with some peace movements on campus, I was somewhat abashed at learning that dope was becoming widespread at school. Nonetheless, there was probably no ostensible reason for alarm. How was I to know of its long-range psychological effects?

Several days after questioning me about the dean and the peddlers, I learned of his arrest in Boston on charges of possession and distribution . . . of one and a half kilos of grass, or so a friend told me.

I never heard from him again. However, what happened to him afterwards was even worse than any arrest could possibly be. In order to understand how such a decent guy as Charlie could be trapped in such a crisis, one must have to understand Baltimore. Baltimore is corrupt, to say the least; it abounds with drugs and peddlers to match. The police are corrupt, for the most part, and there is very little understanding by the suburban community of what goes on in the city. It is the typical "inner city" syndrome. For the most part, only a jailhouse awaits the apprehended drug user.

The Peddler

The peddler is ruthless; he will "pad" his product with anything that can be inhaled, injected or swallowed. Ignorance on how to handle drug users is rampant. Like the alcoholic, the drug user who has overdosed is at the mercy of the whims of untrained hospital and prison staffs. Needless to say, the problem is not diminishing. The ghetto and its cesspool of dope is constantly expanding, as the 1967 Baltimore riots plainly demonstrated.

As to Charlie, he really never did attend class much. Most of the time, he was either on his bike, or down at the motorcycle shop in east Baltimore.

Final Result

One would never suspect from his appearance that he was articulate and well-read. His was a life of carefree reaction to his background; he repulsed the phoney social life to which he had been accustomed. In fact, he tried to forget it. I never knew him to be active in politics, though the above article mentioned his involvement elsewhere. Perhaps, when he returned from Boston, he became entangled.

In any event, he got hooked and the above tells the results. Six years later, after an earlier, more healthy friendship, I am reading the article about, somewhat in disbelief. To you readers, he is just another guy who found out a bit too late.

News Briefs

New Justices

WASHINGTON — The Senate approved the appointments of Lewis Powell, Jr., and William Rehnquist as associate justices of the Supreme Court last week. The only vote cast against Powell in the 89 to 1 tally was given by Sen. Fred Harris. He claimed Powell is an "establishment Virginia lawyer" without true feelings for the little people. Rehnquist was approved with less opposition than had been expected and has already been dubbed the most conservative member of the block. These appointments bring the conservative block appointed by President Nixon to four, including Chief Justice Burger and Justice Blackmun.

Pakistan Split

CALCUTTA — India gained a complete victory over Pakistani forces in East Pakistan last week. The Indians had driven the Pakistanis into a circle around Dacca by Sunday and were moving in more troops. The Pakistani commander offered to surrender on the East Pakistan governor's behalf, but this was rejected by Pakistan's national government. Foreign residents were being evacuated by air all week as the fighting intensified. All attempts by the United Nations to halt the fighting have failed and India has recognized the People's Republic of Bangla Desh as the legal government in the East.

Pact Signed

BERLIN — A pact was signed Saturday by East and West Germany that will permit West Berliners to go through the wall to visit East Berlin. Easier access will also be provided for West Germans to go to Berlin. In return for these concessions, West Germany will push ratification of its treaties with the Soviet Union and Poland which are aimed at reconciliation with the East. The East German government has announced, however, that there is not sufficient time to make passes through the wall available to West Berliners for Christmas this year.

Child Care Vetoed

WASHINGTON — The House of Representatives gave its final approval to a child care bill last week that it knew faced possible presidential veto. The bill provided day care centers, medical, nutritional and social services for all children. The very poor would be given free service while other families paid according to their ability. The plan was to be administered by local groups with the federal government paying up to 80 per cent of the costs; however, Nixon vetoed the bill Thursday. Despite the fact that the bill provided services he had called for and had backing from many groups, Nixon claimed the bill was radical, reactionary and unworkable.

Two Sides Of Christmas

Bev Aston was chosen this year's Madonna.

The Christmas tree in the Rotunda was decorated by the Freshman Commission.

The YWCA presented its annual Christmas pageant tonight in Jarman. The program featured dancing by Orchestis members which included a presentation of "The Night Before Christmas." Each segment was done in a motif depicting Christmas carols. Freshman Commission began the pageant with a skit and Christmas carols.

As another aspect of the pageant, the presidents of the organizations on campus presented donations to the White Christmas Fund at the end of the program. This fund is used to provide money for dental care for needy children in the Farmville area. Although the total for this year is unknown, in previous years between $200 and $250 has been raised.

This year's Madonna was revealed during the last segment of the pageant. Each year the student body chooses a senior they would like to bestow this honor on. The Madonna this year is Bev Aston. Bev is an elementary education major from Portsmouth and has been Orientation Chairman, a member of Legislative Board and a member of Geist.

Registration Key Subject Of Press Conference

By VICKI BOWLING

Registration was the key subject at Dr. Willett's press conference, held Tuesday, December 7, in the Gold Room.

Dr. Willett preceded the questioning on registration by explaining the problem with scheduling.

According to a ratio set up by the state, Longwood is allocated 148 faculty members. In addition, Longwood has one professor paid with federal funds, and three deans who also assume teaching duties.

The number of faculty positions must be divided between the various departments, which brings about the number of courses each department is able to offer. Even though Longwood has four more acting professors than what is allotted by the state, it is still faced with scheduling problems.

With pre-registration rather than registration one day and classes the next, problems can be studied and early solutions can be worked out. It is impossible, however, for each student to get every class she wants at the time she wants.

Every course each student takes should lead to graduation, Dr. Willett said. If any student feels she has a problem here, she should see the dean or the registrar.

A pre-registration was tried this time with the English department. This helped the department in its scheduling of classes for its majors. If there were not enough students interested in taking a particular advanced course, that course was cancelled and another section of freshman or sophomore English was added.

Dr. Blackwell explained that this procedure can work in some departments. In departments such as the education department, it could not work.

Registration dates for next year have not been set. The staff is considering a Saturday, or a day before or after a holiday for registration. It is felt that a day in the middle of the week interferes with classroom instruction.

There is presently a state committee to review state requirements on general education. Dr. Willett is serving on this committee. He said that although there is a trend in more flexibility of the program, Longwood will not change its requirements unless the state does.

Dr. Willett announced the formation of two committees on campus. Student members of the vending machine committee are Betsy Craig, Dragon Chandler, and Rosie Davis. The safety committee is headed by Miss Jean Smith of the Physical Education department. Any questions or suggestions concerning these areas should be directed to the committees.

Dr. Willett and Dr. Blackwell both emphasized the Seven-Day Period. With the exception of block courses, no paper or test which requires extensive preparation during the seven days preceding may be given.

This policy cannot be enforced unless students report violations. A student should talk to one of the deans or the department chairman if there is a violation.

Dean Herbert Blackwell expressed satisfaction with registration at the press conferences.

Eat Your Easter Candy At Christmas

THE ROTUNDA went out into the streets the other day looking for Easter bunnies and other decorations. Why not? Christmas decorations were up before the 26th of November this year in Farmville; they were adorning Washington area stores by the 5th of November.

Yes, Christmas time is here, again, the time when all the stores light up their windows to display their wares to an over-consumerized society. College students with their meager savings scratch their heads in desperation just like their parents, in search of something to buy, nothing in particular, but just something.

Hurry . . . hurry . . . hurry . . . Hurry up and wait for those long lines of others doing the same thing . . . and think of what the merchants take in for a profit! It is Christmastime at Every-thing Department Store.

"Is this what Christmas is really all about," lament millions of bleary eyed Americans as they trudge through those revolving doors of America's commercialized fantasyland. Think of their grandparents who thought it sufficient to express the spirit of Christmas by a simple devotion to their Creator, followed by a small token of esteem for their loved ones, a token, let's say of not more than fifty cents or a dollar for those still engrossed in figures.

There is hope, however, for every American who buys a load of loot for each and every person he or she knows there is another American who is seriously considering the value of all the commercialized Christmas rush.

THE ROTUNDA staff is worried. Are you? LW

Only One Opinion Premitted

By LYNNE PIERCE

It has long been known that the easiest way to prevent individuals or groups from spreading their opinions is to harass them until they feel it is safer for them not to say anything than to express an idea. The peculiar fact about harassment though is that the person doing it seldom realizes that he is, but the one receiving the pressure always knows it. Interpreting what is happening then becomes a matter of the stories of those involved. The following are two recent incidents which you can interpret for yourself.

At President Willett's press conference, the major topic of discussion was the registration which had just taken place. When questions were asked for, I inquired as to why some students had their class cards pulled ahead of time and I mentioned that I had heard of one girl who had every class reserved in advance. Dr. Blackwell explained several cases where students had such a rigid schedule that they had to have classes reserved to insure that they would get them. Although I was not completely convinced, I assumed the question to be answered and forgotten.

After the press conference, however, I was suddenly approached by Mr. Hamilton, the assistant registrar, who said he wished to speak to me about my question. I interpreted this to mean that he was planning to take action about card pulling in general; however, he began to question me, in what a nearby student later described as a belligerent manner, about the one girl whose cards had been pulled. I tried to explain that my point was not to criticize the student, but the system and, although I could name several courses where this had been done, Mr. Hamilton insisted on finding out about this one student. He insisted that nothing would be done to "the teacher's pet," as he referred to her, but that he wanted to "catch" the teacher who was responsible. After our conversation, I was surprised at the way injustice to the mass of students could be ignored in order to crucify one professor.

The other incident occurred in the dining hall at lunch Saturday. I had gone in early to help my sister set her tables up as it was late and she would not have been ready if I hadn't. As I was early, I was approached by a student whom I assumed to be a hostess, although in all fairness to this group, I later found out she only works in the office. She informed me that I had broken a rule and, if she ever caught me doing it again, she would have to take disciplinary action of the most severe type. (I assume I'll have to stop eating.)

In any case, I felt I had been justly rebuked until I realized there were at least twenty other girls, including two at the hostesses' table, who had done the same thing and yet had not been spoken to. I couldn't help but wonder if my commentary last week brought this selective wrath upon me.

The case is for you to decide. These are isolated incidents, but they represent rumors that we all hear and ignore until we are directly affected. Let me pose this question: In what is supposed to be a community of intellectual and individual freedom, is it possible that there are some who cannot tolerate a difference of opinion?

Letters to the Editor

Chi Congratulates

Dear Editor,

These last few weeks have been a busy time for many of us on campus. We do hope that the number of events has not overshadowed the importance of them. CHI would like to congratulate all of those major and minor officers who recently won their positions. Also a hearty thank you is in order for all of those who ran for leadership positions. CHI would also like to congratulate Geist on it's new members. CHI feels that each of the new initiates is most outstanding and thus deserving of such a honor.

Art Show

Dear Miss Worthington:

As chairman of exhibits in the art department, I question the article titled "Art Show Draws Satiric Comment" in the last issue of THE ROTUNDA.

First, let me state that the article is a review and not an announcement of our craft show. If a commentary, it should have been reviewed by a knowledgeable individual in the arts, and it should have been signed! It was not signed!

I resented comments like "half dyed butterflies . . ." They were not half dyed, they were complete in the vision and concept of the artist.

May I remind the reviewer of his choice of adjectives, "half," "semi," describing the skills of the craftsman.

Professional artists always appreciate reaction to their work, whether in a negative or positive vein when they are aware that the reviewer is an intelligent and articulate person.

Sincerely,
Paul Rouillard

Those Who Know Respond Epilogue: Longwood Stockyards

Dear Editor,

I feel that the commentary in last week's issue, "Longwood Stockyards" has done a grave injustice to the dining hall, particularly the hostesses. I would like to explain the present policies under which the dining hall operates.

1. The writer stated that the new method for entering the dining hall was the work of the hostesses. This is not true. Residence Board in cooperation with the dining hall approved the new policy now in effect. Any complaints or suggestions should be directed to the dining hall committee which is composed of class representatives, one waitress representative, Mr. Carbone, Mrs. Trout, Dean Wilson, and the Vice-Chairman of Residence Board.

2. Admission through the main doors of the Rotunda has sound reasoning behind it. Because of the construction, two entrances to the dining hall are closed. It is a state safety regulation that there must be at least two exits in case of fire. Since only three doors are available now, that leaves only one door to be used as an entrance.

3. The hostesses and ARA Slater Services are not responsible for students' behavior outside of the dining hall. Since on occasion some students see fit to push and jostle one another, that is their privilege. The students themselves must take the responsibility to act as mature individuals, able to control their elementary urges to push and shove.

4. The sentence which states that over half of the tables are closed on weekends is not necessarily true. The number of tables open per meal usually varies, depending on the estimated number of people on campus. As some of the readers may recall, students used to have to fill out pink slips for weekends several days in advance, in order to get a dining hall count for the weekend. When this policy was ended, the dining hall had to rely on estimation based on the number of students coming to a particular meal and the number of students at the previous cafeteria meal. Unless the students would again like to fill out destination slips by Wednesday of each week, the dining hall has to rely on estimation.

5. The students have paid for the meals they eat, but they are given a reduced rate based again on a number of meals that the average student attends. On a 7 day, 21 meal a week basis, each student pays $1.61 per day for all three meals, $.54 per meal, which is extremely inexpensive. The "we paid for it" argument is no excuse to disregard school and dining hall policies.

6. The correct attire for birthday dinner is stated in the handbook as Sunday attire or pantsuits. To enforce this rule at birthday dinner, members of Residence Board, not the hostesses, asked students who were not properly dressed to return to their rooms and change. Prior to Birthday dinner, Residence Board asked for student opinions

'The Potential Audience Deserved A Better Play'

By FRANCES BROWN

Warned by signs and a sheet of directions to the nearest exits handed out at the door with the red-printed program, the rather sparse audiences ambled into Jarman Hall to meditate upon a bizarre and highly effective stage set, before the action of The Firebugs began on the evenings of December 9, 10, and 11. Action it was, ably directed, well choreographed, and making as much sense as The Theatre of The Absurd ever does.

The play itself suffers from an overabundance of ideas, any one of which could have tantalized the playwright into another whole production. The focus here was on the essential stupidity of man who muddles through life toward inevitable disaster, doing his bumbling best to help the disaster along in spite of numerous and vigorous warnings which he cannot hear. However, there are intriguing side paths provided in the play for speculation on why Truth is never believed, what goodness actually is, which is Sham and which Reality, how salutary Repentance ever is or ever can be — to name only a few. Answers of course are never given though the implication is plain that they would have to be blackly and blankly negative. It is a diffuse, provocative drama but rather a strange choice for the Christmas season.

As Sepp Schmitz and Willie Eisenring, the two characters representing all joyful arsonists as well as the downtrodden poor, Dickie Moore and David Blevins did excellent jobs. Bob Shield's constant wriggling and the sameness of his gestures were distracting in the main role of Gottlieb Biederman which is an unbelievable role anyway. Cookie Howell's Babette, Biederman's wife, was appealing in her portrayal of light-brained fragility. The fireman-chorus, used by the playwright for interpretative purpose, was well drilled but spoke so quickly that some of their words, and their leader's also, were lost. The maid Anna, convincingly played by Janet Baker, lent some sanity to the scene which the nearly silent Ph. D., Ed Koffenberger, did his best to offset in his brief appearances by his looks alone as did the mournful Widow Kneekling, Joyce Saunders.

All in all, the production deserved better audiences but perhaps the potential audience deserved a better play.

"The House of Bernarda Alba" was presented this afternoon and will repeat tomorrow night.

One Act Play To Be Shown Thursday

Dr. Patton Lockwood's Play Production Class will present "The House of Bernarda Alba" on December 15 at 3:30 and 16 at 7:30. Directed and produced entirely by members of the class, "Bernarda Alba" is a one-act play depicting the lives of fourteen women completely under the domination of the mother and head of the household, Bernarda Alba. Contributing to plot complications are things like the eighty-year-old grandmother who wants "a horse and a man," five ugly daughters and a suicidal hanging. The play will be staged in the studio theatre, in a theatre-in-the-round atmosphere which allows greater involvement between the actors and the audience. So take a break from studying or packing to treat yourself to a night at the theatre.

Jessie Reiter and Lawrence Smith enact scene from one act play.

The Campus School Chorus will perform in the Senate Rotunda instead of the Kennedy Center.

Kennedy Center Performance Cancelled

The John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts has been forced to close its doors to tourists due to a lack of funds necessary to maintain operations. The Center has been the victim since it opened its doors of souvenir seekers and vandalism. Tourists have been stealing chandeliers, wall decorations, and anything they can grab. Only the theaters, box offices and restaurants will remain open as before.

Due to the closing, the Center has had to cancel the series of twelve Christmas programs they had planned to make free to the public. The performance by the John Wynne Campus School Chorus had been planned as one of those programs which were cancelled. Instead, the students have been invited by Sen. Harry F. Byrd, Jr., to give a mid-day performance in the Rotunda of the U. S. Senate. Following the performance, the students and their parents will join the senator for lunch.

Civilisation Enters Last Weeks Series Draws Favor From Campus

"Civilisation," written and narrated for the British Broadcasting company by Kenneth Clark, documents the ideas, events, and particularly the art of Western Civilization from the fall of Rome through the twentieth century. Lord Clark, two producers, and a three-man camera crew spent two years traveling through eleven countries to create the series. In Lord Clark's words, they tried "to define civilisation in terms of creative power and the enlargement of human faculties."

"Civilisation" had its U. S. premiere at the National Gallery of Art in Washington, D. C. in 1969. Nearly 20,000 people came the first day for a showing in the 300-seat auditorium. Since then there have been a hundred complete showings of the series at the Gallery drawing more than 275,000 viewers. The films have also been shown on various educational television networks.

Longwood College is showing the series under a distribution program of the National Gallery made possible by matching grants from the National Endowment for the Humanities and from Xerox Corporation. The films are shown on Sundays in Bedford Auditorium at 4:30 p.m. and 7:30 p.m. through January 23.

SIR KENNETH CLARK

After the tenth film, as fewer and fewer viewers attend, mixed impressions have certainly been made. Although undoubtedly an excellent series, "Civilisation" has its pitfalls. In many of the sequences the photography seems very forced and obvious of trying for a dramatic effect. Camera angles are awkward especially those panning from close-ups of toes to wide-angle, all-encompassing views.

Students have complained of too much Kenneth Clark with his crooked and stained teeth. The tonal quality of the soundtrack and clarity in enunciation are frequently very poor.

Only three films remain to be shown in the series. Overall, "Civilisation" has been a rewarding educational experience, providing information and entertainment to both students and members of the faculty, staff, and community.

Students Support New Film Series Cinema 71-72

By DONNA DAVIS
Cinema 71-72 is a series of films shown once a month on various Monday nights in the Bedford Auditorium. They are under the direction of Dr. C. Hooker, who is accompanied by Mr. Stewart, Miss Bishop, Stella Simon and Margaret Blair. The purpose of showing these pictures is to bring to the campus something special that might otherwise not be shown. So far they have received a terrific response. The season opened with "Birth of a Nation," Alexander Nevsky, and "Citizen Kane," some of the best films of all time. Fortunately for us, 1972 will bring such exciting films as "Branca," "Exterminating Angel" (directed by Bunuel, the same director of "Viridiana" which you may remember from last year), "Charlie Chaplin's Gold Rush" and others.

These films are of the best of the past and of the current day and bear the title, classics,

Dullness Is The Spice Of Life

By LYNDIA VAN HORN

Facts! Constant, important, detailed, undetermined, unfounded facts. Is this all the American system is based on?

Are students in school to become automations in society, to be living, breathing resource books full of facts. Is it good that college classes are dull lectures that compel the student to take endless notes, or should something more be demanded?

Is not the college experience supposed to guide the student to think as well as memorize straight facts?—Whether the latter is necessary at all is debatable.

Change Sought

Many students agree that it is time—in fact overdue—for a change in the collegiate educational system. Students are no longer willing (many students at least) to sit placidly in a classroom while the almighty professor stands in the front of the room spouting knowledge which the students are to transfer into a spiral notebook.

Should not learning be a cooperative effort made by student and professor to work together, to come up with ideas—perhaps opposing—, and to discuss these ideas together? Cannot a student learn as much from his fellow students and from voicing and actually hearing his own opinions as he is able to learn from the professor?

Of course there are times when a professor must explain and present certain facts. This is especially true in such classes as math, music, and physical education where a technique must be mastered before the student is able to work on his own creatively. But, does it not follow that there should also be time in class devoted to presentation of ideas of both student and professor that can be analyzed by the class as a group.

Stimulation

Too often it is heard that the students do not care about studying or even thinking, and professors readily cast the blame on the incompetent, uninterested student.

It is true of course that some students are more intellectually excited than others, but perhaps if professors would actively self-evaluate they would find that they could stimulate even the most non-caring, shy person into voicing his opinions.

This is not in any way an easy task. The professor must be willing to devote time into the planning of invigorating lessons and thought provoking questions.

The student too must assume part of the burden. He must study and research foundations for his statements and ideas. He must not be afraid to verbalize any position which he may take. And, he must be willing to argue and defend his position.

State Classes

Too often classes are stale because the professor has presented the same material the same way over a period of years.

When students start to sleep in class, it is time to change the manner in which the class is taught so that the educational concepts will be fresh both to the professor and the student.

The college class is set up on a contract basis with both the professor and the student having to give in order to receive. If a professor stands blandly in the front of a desk telling his students in a monotone that they must be vital, inquisitive people, how can he expect his students to be anything more than he himself is. After all, the professor does hold certain distinction because of his position and the student cannot help but mimic some of his traits whether good or bad.

If though, the professor sits with his class asking and answering questions together and is personally excited about what he is teaching, then some of this excitement, this vital experience of learning is bound to rub off on the student.

Professor Attitude

Then there is the professor who is entirely devoted to his subject matter who does not even know if the student is there nor does he really care. His subject is so totally important to him that he presents it to a classroom of desks whether empty or full.

There are professors who are fully aware of the student and are excited about their topics, but feel they know their own subject so well that any position contrary to their own is unintelligent, uninteresting, and worthless. No wonder he thinks his students are puppets if he will not allow them to hold any opinion but his own if he will not allow them to think.

Education is of course means transmitting knowledge from those that "know" to those who want to. But, it should also include a transmission of ideas, of opinions, of arguments, of coming up with theories that can or cannot be proved.

Suggestions

How then can education be changed to become a truly meaningful experience? Is there no hope for the "hopelessly ignorant, unthinking student?"

Perhaps educational revolution should begin in high school—or even earlier in junior high school. It is here the young student must be encouraged to think—to be creative. Too often the young imagination is stifled and it is no wonder high school graduates come to college with closed mouths and closed minds.

The college professor then has the ability if he has the initiative to stimulate these once vital minds into functioning, questioning entities. By first of all being prepared and organized for his class, by having questions to provoke thoughts, as well as questions of his own, and by willingly accepting the ideas of others he will not only stimulate his students but may in the process stimulate himself to newer if not better heights.

On college campuses throughout the country as well as others, one may hear students complain that college is a "grand review" of all of high school, that it is dull, and that it is irrelevant. How sad that this educational system must be based on rote memory and repetition.

Students who come to college are at least expected to read. Yet, many professors feel the necessity to waste this time as well as the students' by reading directly from the text and even in instances, resorting to reading of Monarch notes or some comparable series.

It cannot be said whether these teachers feel their students are so ignorant they cannot read or comprehend the text or if the professors themselves know nothing more than what the text presents and thus can present no more.

Affirmative Aspect

Having thoroughly exhausted the negative side of current education something must be said affirmatively. Fortunately, there are professors who are invigorating and "special" educators.

These are the people who give of themselves and are willing to listen. These too are the people who deem education a worthwhile institution.

Hope lies in that the future may hold forth more of these people and more students who demand this kind of teacher.

Unfortunately much of society assumes the attitude of Sir William Berkeley early governor of Virginia when he said, "Thank God there are no free schools or printing; . . . for learning has brought disobedience and heresy into the world, and printing has divulged them . . ."

Longwood's junior varsity basketball team edged by the Deep Creek Dolls by a score of 35-32.

LC Defeats Dolls By Narrow Margin Plays Poor Game

Longwood's junior varsity basketball team defeated the Deep Creek Dolls from Chesapeake by a very narrow margin with the score 35-32.

The junior varsity team showed lack of teamwork and on the whole, played very poorly, Miss Oliver, coach, remarked, "I did not even recognize my own team." However, the first game is no indication of how the season will turn out.

Spectators saw a lot of fouls committed, which also hindered the Longwood team. Five LC girls and two Chesapeake players fouled out. A total of forty-two fouls were committed, which is a bad factor for any team.

The Deep Creek Dolls, who are high school students, had several good ball handlers and some height to some of their players.

Longwood led in all four quarters, Donna Jackson, Dana Hutcherson, Kathy Talley, and Joy King were some of the scorers for Longwood. Dana also did a good job of rebounding, Miss Davis and Miss Obenshain officiated.

Many fouls were called against LC's basketball team, which kept them from playing a successful game.

Orchesis To Present Dances Arranged To Christmas Music

Orchesis, Longwood's dance club, will present a Christmas program tonight, immediately following the YWCA Christmas pageant in Jarman.

Under the direction of Miss Sandra Gustafson and Dr. Betty Bowman, dance instructors, the group will present their meaning of Christmas through dance movements to various types of Christmas music. The music will vary from religious Christmas hymns to music arrangements by Henry Mancini.

Many of the dancers have choreographed their own dance and have been practicing to perfect technique and style since before Thanksgiving.

The program will begin at 7:30 after the Freshman Commission leads the audience in Christmas carols. Four dances will be presented, including: Variation on a Christmas Tree, Joy of Christmas, 'Twas the Night Before Christmas, and The Carolers.

Those members of Orchesis who will be performing are: Suzanne Painter, Mary Frances Baldwin, Debra Funkhouser, Tomi Thibodeaux, Donna Davis, Vickie Fritschle, Martha Knoop, Jeffrey Hudson, Nan Pace, Sally Carson, and Kathy Ballowe.

Also, Nancy Frank, Deb Sours, Mary Plecker, Sandra Bugg, Dea Alexander, Mary Lou Glas-hun, Barbara Penick, Jo Smith, Annette Faggi, Linda Maris, and Marji Leyshon will be dancing.

Nell Skinner, Brenda Griffin, and Susan Davis are in charge of staging, lights, and music.

Lack Of A Coach Causes Swim Team To Be Nonexistent

In last week's Rotunda, the question, "Why will there be no swim team this year?" was asked. The staff would now like to answer this question.

In years past, Miss Sally Bush was in charge of coaching the swim team as well as the fencing team. There was no conflict in practices or meets, because swimming season began around late October and fencing started in February.

With a regular full teaching load, Miss Bush did not feel that she could spend sufficient time for practicing and coaching with both teams. It would be impossible to produce two successful teams when one had to be in two places at one time. Many of the meets, including the state tournaments for both fencing and swimming, had been scheduled for the same day.

Miss Bush decided to take the fencing team, but who would take the swim team? That question is still unanswered.

Several other physical education instructors had been asked to coach the team, but were all too busy to add more to their load. This was very discouraging news for the freshmen and for former varsity members.

Who will fill this vacancy, or will they find anyone? Let us hope something can be done soon, for February meets will come soon and practices must begin. We'll keep you informed!

Colleges In The News

Students Represented

WILLIAMSBURG — The Board of Visitors of the College of William and Mary has amended its by-laws so that student committees may be invited to attend its meetings. While meeting at Christopher Newport College, a branch of William and Mary, the Board heard recommendations from Student Association President Andy Purdy and the student liaison to the Board, Stewart Gamage, on why the students should have the same opportunity to be heard as faculty committees. Under the new rules, student committees can be invited to present matters of interest to them and a standing committee can be set up for when the Board wants student recommendations or opinions on matters.

Student Regulation

LEXINGTON — Freshmen at Washington and Lee University have been given permission to entertain women in their dormitories at all hours on weekends. The students will decide among themselves what visitation hours they will maintain, although week-day visitation is controlled by college rules. Upperclassmen have had the right to entertain women at any time, with certain controls, for some time.

Appointment Urged

NORFOLK — A committee, consisting of the newspaper editor, student government president and the public relations director for the student caucus, from Old Dominion University spoke with Gov. Holton last week about appointing a student to the board of directors. At the moment, the board at the University of Virginia is the only one with a student member. Six members of the ODU board have terms that expire in July and Holton said he will consider anyone the students feel is qualified.

Activities Fund

STAUNTON — The Alumnae Association of Mary Baldwin College has established a student activity fund of $500 which is designed to offer students help in going to events which would ordinarily be impossible to attend. The fund resulted from the work of individual chapters and the Student Activism Conference held last October.

Judicial Reforms

CHARLOTTESVILLE — The Judiciary Committee at the University of Virginia has suggested changes in the Judiciary Constitution. They have proposed changes that would make it possible for students to serve more than one term and would give the students the right to reopen cases if new evidence is presented. They have also suggested that "ungentlemanly or unladylike conduct" because the old form made a distinction between the sexes.

Newspapers Protected

RICHMOND — U. S. District Judge Robert Merlinge has announced that he will restrict Virginia from printing abortion advertisements through loss of funds. Fifteen students at George Mason College brought their case to court with the statement that the state had tried to pressure them to prevent such advertisements from appearing in their paper, the Broadside.

Students Discuss Community Problems At Conference

Human relations, drug abuse, and student activism were the leading topics of discussion at the regional Youth Conference held Saturday Dec. 11 in Lankford. Students from area high schools and colleges met for the day to discuss problems they considered relevant to the youth of their community and to try, through communication with other students, to reach some solutions to these problems.

Participants in the conference also made plans for the forming of a regional youth council. Both the Youth Conference and Council are sponsored by the Governor's Youth Advisory Council which met for the first time during the summer of 1970.

During this time the Council made a number of recommendations to the Governor expressing their convictions on such topics as education, environment, equal opportunity, dissent and drugs. The Council was such a success that it was decided to expand it to include local and regional divisions as well.

Before breaking up into discussion groups Saturday, regional Conference members heard three speakers: James L. Hunter, George Morton, and R. David Jones.

Mr. Hunter, executive director of the Virginia Commission for Children and Youth outlined the history of the Youth Council concept explaining how Virginia was the first state to have a council of this sort.

Mr. Morton spoke on human relations pointing out what youth can do in improving human relations.

The problem of drug abuse in rural high schools was discussed by Mr. Jones.

While the conference members did not expect to reach solutions to all the problems they discussed, most of them agreed that many worthwhile suggestions came out of Saturday's meeting.

Woman Candidate For President On Campus January 4

The Young Republicans' Club of Longwood College will present Mrs. Lillian Harvey, who is currently a Democratic candidate for President of the United States, at its meeting on January 4 at 1:00 p.m. in the ABC Room. The Young Republicans are presenting Mrs. Harvey because they feel that students at Longwood should be exposed to all available candidates, even though there is no political science club or Young Democrats group active on campus.

Mrs. Harvey, who is a resident of Roanoke, has worked for the past twenty years as a real estate broker in her own firm. In connection with her work, she has developed a certain basic knowledge of the law over the years. Mrs. Harvey believes in what she calls "the Renaissance of Women." She maintains that women are just as capable of running the office of President as men are and only need the opportunity to prove it.

The smoke stack on one of its "clean" days

Plans Proposed To Eliminate Stack As Pollution Maker

By JUDY THORPE
Many questions have arisen concerning the smoke stack on Longwood's campus and its pollution factor. To alleviate the problem, the college has made requests to the General Assembly for funds to purchase two oil boilers which would replace two of the four coal fired boilers presently installed. The college mainly uses two of the boilers with the remaining two being used in case of extremely cold weather.

Until next biennium coming in July, at which time the college's requests will be considered, other measures are being taken. For example, gauges in the plant, which give information concerning the amount of ash deposited into the air, are read three times a day and entries are made into logs. Experts have said that Longwood's coal boilers are 98% effective; that is, only 2% improvement could be made considering the type of fuel used. This improvement could be accomplished by the installation of a device which would eliminate some of the pollutants, which would cost approximately $150,000 to $200,000. However, it would be advantageous to purchase the oil boilers instead.

In trying to eliminate the pollution caused by the coal boilers, it is necessary to consider all angles including cost and availability of the fuel. However, definite plans have been made,

Male Students Admitted From Hampden-Sydney And Area

By VALERIE BLANKS

As well as offering courses to students from Hampden-Sydney, Longwood began a policy of admitting full-time male day students to the college this year. Both groups of students were asked their opinions on attending classes here.

Because of the widespread use of the community college system throughout the state, many students are seeking four-year institutions in which to finish their education. The fact that Longwood is the only state institution in the Southside area motivated the Board of Visitors to admit male students on a junior level.

This new policy has made it possible for four male students, who live off-campus but within commuting distance, to attend classes to work towards obtaining their degree.

Besides the full day students, 14 Hampden-Sydney students are taking classes here this semester. This cooperative policy between the two institutions allows students of each school to utilize the facilities of the other school as it befits their needs. For example, it is possible for Longwood students through attending classes at Hampden-Sydney to seek a major in Latin, Greek, and Government.

Most of the male students when asked how they liked attending Longwood, had similar opinions. As Dave Johe from H-S said, "I like it. It's a welcome change from being in a class of all boys every day."

The boys said they all felt inhibited at first, especially if they were the only boy in the class. But gradually they were drawn into the flow of the classroom and sex didn't make any difference. Claude Thomason, another H-S student, said one reason for this is because "the teacher treats both boys and girls as equals."

Another student had a differing view on equality as far as class participation. In his class the girls would not take part in class discussions that call for their opinion on subjects. On the other hand they would freely feed-back facts to the professor.

Vance Shields, another H-S student, felt this was true because being a liberal arts school, the general courses offered at H-S offer a broader background of knowledge. "Another difference in the courses at the two schools is the greater amount of self-study or outside work involved at H-S," he said.

Jackson Chandler, a full day student at H-S, said:

A Personal Remark On Project Do-It

By SUSIE CARTER

Project Do-It is a group of students who assemble on Saturdays to help paint and repair homes in the community. The project is run with assistance from Mrs. Vassy and Mrs. DeWolf who are cochairmen of the Housing Committee of the Human Relations Council. It seems to be going very well according to students and one family we interviewed. One woman (anonymity is respected) was satisfied and happy with the work done. She said about 16 girls and boys came to her home and spent the day helping her and her six children repair it. The students were able to repair the front and back steps and part of the front porch. They also fixed many broken windows and now the house stays much warmer.

The children in the family and the students painted three bedrooms and the dining room. The children's mother was fascinated with the paint brush roller and helped with it all afternoon. She told us the students were very friendly and really "seemed to care about what they were doing." Her neighbors came to inspect the work and she was able to show off her newly painted dining room.

This project is for people who care. If anyone is interested in helping, contact Sarah Fredrick, the Longwood recruit or see either Mrs. Vassy or Mrs. DeWolf.

Project Do-It students find difficult conditions when they visit some local homes.

Mary Washington To Split

From University Of Virginia

The Board of Visitors of the University of Virginia has petitioned the State Council of Higher Education to consider a proposal made by them that Mary Washington College be established as an institution separate from the university. This represents the first major step toward independence for the predominantly women's college at Fredericksburg.

Mary Washington was originally established as the women's undergraduate division of the university and had served as such until two years ago. At that time, the university began admitting women on a coeducational basis.

The board has asked the state council to study the "future relationship" between Mary Washington and the university. They were asked to keep in mind the higher education needs of the state and the possible "further development of the educational quality and stature" of the liberal arts college, which now has an enrollment of 2,500 students.

"It's time the (separation) question was brought out into the open for an open and free discussion by all the people," said Dr. Grellet C. Simpson, Mary Washington's chancellor, last Saturday. Dr. Simpson said he felt the board had made a wise decision in considering the question.

A report by a 1965 higher education study commission and the self-study completed earlier this year had recommended to the board that "new dimensions of development" should be sought. This included separation from the parent university.

The General Assembly will have to make the final decision on the issue, but the machinery has been put in motion for a state council study of the independence question. The state council is being asked to determine what the role of the college is in the overall state program of higher education and if it can be carried out through the university board of visitors or a separate board.

The board issued a resolution saying that the growing cost of higher education in Virginia and the expectations of the people can only be achieved if there is sound planning and efficient operation of the higher education facilities.

Simpson said, "When we were the women's undergraduate college for the university, the board of visitors was very responsive. We were part of the overall program of the university as a whole." He added, though, that things had changed radically with the pressure of urban growth in Fredericksburg and with both schools coeducational.

A separate board, Simpson felt, would direct all of its attention to the college and would produce more creative ideas. He would like to see a local board of visitors set up to plan the future of the college within the guidelines of the state's plans for higher education.

student, who is the only boy in all six of his classes, had this to say, "I feel I have to study a little more to fulfill the male image of being a leader in class discussions." Another student, presenting his opinion, said this situation should provide more initiative or challenge to the girls and they should want to put forth more effort.

It would seem from these statements that the classes of mixed sexes would be conducive to learning, but this cannot be generalized upon. Some of the reasons which cause the classroom situation to vary are the different professors, how the class is structured, what the course is, and what the individuals within the classes are like themselves.

The men did agree that they would like to take more classes here at Longwood.

New Gv't Papers See U.S. In 'Nam', In '30's

By JEREMY HORNE

A series of recently declassified Department of State and Defense documents has revealed that the U. S. was heavily involved in Indo-Chinese affairs since the early 1930's.

American involvement in this area began when the U. S. exerted extreme pressure upon the French to give this country an economic equality with the French.

As even the most cursory reader of Vietnamese history knows, the French government colonized in the mid-1800's what is now known as North and South Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos. This region, known as French Indo-China before 1954 was to be the focal point for US strategy in the World War Two China Theater, a strategy that was both economic and geo-political.

Shortly after we handed the French its diktat in the early 1930's, the Haiphong Commercial Directory showed some 200 US corporations making economic entry into the region. From that point until the Japanese formally took over the French colony, the US gained its ascendancy.

State Department documents reveal that the French placed orders for some 25 million Indo-Chinese dimes as early as 19 October 1939. This was to continue up until the latter part of 1941, long after the Japanese gained a foothold in the region. This form of economic manipulation of the Indo-Chinese currency was "business as usual" in this area of the world.

Between the two world wars, China saw Germany, Great Britain and the US, among others, gain dominance within her borders. By 1938, however, Japanese military advances, along with Mae Tse-Tung's forces overtook virtually the whole eastern coast of mainland China, and had driven the pre-American Kuomintang army under Chiang Kai-Shek far into China.

To complicate the situation further, Japan was able to capitalize on Hitler's defeat of France in June, 1940 by assuming political control of Indo-China through puppet dictators. At this regarding the rule, The majority of students who were concerned enough to reply, as well as the members of Residence Board, were in favor of retaining Sunday attire for birthday dinner. If the majority of students want any rule changed, they have representatives on the Board who will consider their opinions on any subject.

I hope this will clear up any questions concerning the Dining Hall. If the school did not provide us with a dining hall service, each student would be responsible for her own meals at a much greater expense. And considering the expenditure of energy that the students use to get inside the dining hall, the food must be worth it. ARA Slater Food Services provides us with special birthday dinners, picnics with entertainment, exam breaks, take-out meals, baking services, etc. These are above and beyond their contractual obligations. If Longwood students would use a few words of courtesy meal times will be a pleasurable occasion. Each student's attitudes must mature before the group actions change.

point, US and French control was greatly diminished.

With the state of the US armed forces in disarray, as demonstrated by the Pearl Harbor debacle in 1941, the question, now, was one of strategy needed for regaining control of both Indo-China and China, with primary focus upon what is now North Vietnam.

On 26 January 1942, John J. McCloy, appointed liaison with China, received from Dwight Eisenhower a memo stating that the US must not allow French claims to get in the way of US

Shek, his brother-in-law, T. V. Soong, and the Banque d'Indochine, the sole operative bank in Indo-China, which was, of course, under the tutelage of the Japanese. This arrangement concerned the supplying of arms to the Japanese via Soong, a part of the directorship of the bank. Chiang accepted large amounts of arms and material from the US ostensibly to fight the Japanese in China. Chiang, not being too unfriendly towards Japan, gave the arms to Soong, who, in turn, sold them to the Banque d'Indochine. Thus, Chi-

Along with these two prominent sympathizers, other institutions lent their hand in their own small way to early pro-Japanese sentiments. Listed among the prominent stockholders in the Banque d'Indochine were such stalwarts as the Chase Manhattan Bank, Standard Oil Company of New Jersey and some one hundred other large US corporations.

A published report on these escapades still defies current US official secrecy. Andre Laurent, a one-time member of the Board of Directors of the Banque d'Indochine in his work LE BANQUE D'INDOCHINE reveals the complete array of events which so closely involved so many prominent American corporations.

It was through this three-cornered arrangement that the US was able to maintain liaison with Vichy Indochinese authorities. This, plus continued friendship with Chiang-Kai-Shek was to help insure the US a position in this region of the world after World War Two. However, friendship with those in the Japanese financial hierarchy did not insure the same with political and military authorities, and it was on this basis that the US had to proceed with some form of plan in Indo-China.

Today, it is fairly well known, as most written accounts affirm, that the US aided the late Ho Chi Minh, the most effective leader of the Vietnamese independence movement before and during the War. Most of these writers, the most well-read being Bernard Fall, has omitted salient details of our Indo-China strategy. Even Fall admits in his THE TWO VIETNAMS that little is known about US policies during this time.

Although we did aid Ho, our support was scant. The US repeatedly bombed northern Indo-China throughout the War. The French fled across the northern border of what is now North Vietnam, leaving only the Vichy (pro-Japanese) French and Ho Chi Minh's conglomeration of diverse nationalist groups.

Who were we to support; what were we to do? More poignantly, what were our objectives? China's industrial raw goods were abundant. The US had a heavy economic investment in the country, and this investment had to be protected.

With the coast of China completely blocked off by the Japanese and Communists, and with the Japanese in control of Indo-China, the only real supply route available was the now-famous air route over Burma. However, this offered only limited possibilities, as the more heavy equipment, such as tanks, could not be readily flown into China, the assembly area for later outward advances towards the Chinese coast. More precisely, it was in Yunnan province in southern China that was to be the focal point for subsequent US military build-up. A land route had to be found in lieu of the Burma "Hump." The most obvious weak point in the whole system of Japanese coastal defence was through the Red River Valley in North Vietnam.

The problem, then, was what to do with Northern Indo-China, and there seemed to be only a limited number of alternatives. First, we could allow the former French colony to become independent with Ho Chi Minh being the main political personage of this movement. Second, another major power could "hold down" Indo-China for the US in a sustaining action until more military might could be brought to bear in the area. Third, the US could allow a re-armed France to attempt re-entry, thus resuming her former position in the colony. Fourth, the US could invade and occupy the area. The next installment in this series will demonstrate how the US was to deal with the situation.

support for Chinese invasion of Indo-China. McCloy turned to China on 6 February 1942 and relayed Ike's message, adding "... Chiang Kai-Shek is commander of an area which includes Indo-China."

Chiang declined US invitations to invade the territory and told President Roosevelt that the Indo-Chinese peoples would not assimilate into the Chinese population. With this pronouncement, the US was left with the choice of only a rearguard action throughout most of the war years in Indo-China.

Although Chiang's excuses had historical justification, in light of long-standing hostilities between China and Indo-China, there seemed to be other extenuating circumstances which contributed to his decision. 1944 Justice Department report stands behind one published report of pro-Japanese activities on the part of Chiang.

Involved was a three-cornered arrangement among Chiang Kaiang was receiving a massive amount of money, plus assisting his Japanese friends, while keeping his in-laws on good terms.

To add insult to injury, Office of Strategic Services (forerunner to the Central Intelligence Agency) reports were full of incidents of Chiang's army contingents attacking US convoys of arms shipments along the southern Chinese border during these war years.

Resistance to Japanese aggression in the Far East was not very intense in some home circles, either. For instance, this same Justice Department report laments that the late George Sokolsky of the defunct NEW YORK SUN acted as a go-between for the Banque d'Indochine and certain US corporations. Precisely why Sokolsky was chosen by the Japanese as "bag-man" is still uncertain, but it was no secret at that time that he had pro-Japanese sympathies, as did his comrade William Randolph Hearst.

Space Shuttle

SAN CLEMENTE, CALIFORNIA - President Nixon gave his approval Thursday to a six-year, $5.5 billion project to build a space shuttle, which will help to bolster the aerospace industry. The craft will be designed to make repeated trips between earth and an orbiting space station. European interests have expressed a desire to share 10 percent of the development costs and many others are seeking agreements to send their scientists aloft when the flights begin. NASA sees this as the first step to international cooperation in space.

Bombs Found

Police in New York, Chicago and San Francisco removed bombs from eight banks scattered around their respective cities Thursday. Each group received handwritten, special delivery letters giving the location of each bomb and the proper way to disarm it. The letters said the bombs had been planted several months before to demonstrate a plot to free political prisoners. A ninth bomb, which had been planted in San Francisco's Bank of America, exploded prematurely in September, but caused minor damage. The bombs had been placed in safe deposit boxes and at least one had been planted in each of the great financial centers: Wall Street, LaSalle Street in Chicago and Montgomery Street in San Francisco.

Okinawa Settled

SAN CLEMENTE, CALIFORNIA - President Nixon concluded his summit talks with Prime Minister Eisaku Sato of Japan last week by agreeing to return Okinawa to Japanese control on May 15. The United States had sought a date six weeks later. Emphasis was also placed on the state of economic ties between the two countries. The United States had pressed for lower trade barriers, but no specific Japanese concessions were announced at that time, though officials claimed agreements had been reached.

Sheik Released

RAWALPINDI, PAKISTAN AND NEW DELHI, INDIA - The Pakistan government released Sheikh Mujibur Rahman, President of Bangladesh, after he had been imprisoned for nine months. Pakistani President Zulfikar Ali Bhutto had announced previously that the release would be unconditional and would take place because it was the will of his people. Rahman flew to London where he was expected to fly to Bangladesh. Sunday was declared Sheikh Mujib Day by Prime Minister Tajuddin Ahmen. Meanwhile, India gave a direct rebuff to the United States by establishing full diplomatic relations with North Vietnam.

Resident Gynecologist Rejected At Forum

By VALERIE BLANKS

The possibility of securing a gynecologist and exam exemptions were two issues reported on at the Student Government Open Forum.

Held on January 4 in Jeffers, the open forum for all students was attended mostly by representatives of the six major organizations on campus.

The forum consisted mainly of the presenting of committee reports on issues that the Legislative Board has been working on this 1971-72 year.

Listed in order as they were discussed, the first report came from Debbie Chapman who headed the committee of students looking into the possibility of securing a gynecologist. It was found the expense would be too great for this purpose.

But, clarifying some points related to this matter, it was made clear that students do not have to go through the Infirmary before seeing one. The committee is presently in the process of making up a brochure listing the available gynecologists in the area.

The Curfew Visitation Committee, headed by Mary Lou Glasheen is in the process of asking other schools how their curfew systems are handled and how they've deleted curfews.

Departmental exams exemption is being looked into by the committee headed by Jody Mace. The proposal is that the head of each department be allowed to waive a certain exam if he feels a course or its subject matter does not deem it necessary.

The Vending Machine Committee, headed by Rosie Davis, found that it would be too expensive to obtain more vending machines, as well as change machines.

Margaret Webb and her committee have looked into getting a new YWCA travel bulletin board. The new board will be larger, offering more places and the places that are most traveled to.

The new board will be placed in a place more readily available to the general student body, possibly near the mailboxes in Lankford. This project is being worked on by Mr. Dalton's office.

Kathy Barclay and her committee are looking into the suggestion of the student government picking one fund-raising project, after studying the many possibilities, to sponsor each year.

The Ad-Hoc Committee for the Academic Calendar is the group, headed by Frankie Brown, who handed out the questionnaires before Thanksgiving. It was found that the majority of the students are in favor of starting school two weeks earlier than usually scheduled and getting exams done before Christmas.

This suggestion is still being worked on, but at the present time, it does not seem likely that it will go into effect next year.

In commenting on the Open Forum, Frankie Brown, president of Legislative Board, said, "I would like to suggest that student government should have at least two Open Forums a semester: one at the beginning to air complaints and give suggestions, and the other one towards the end of the semester to follow up the progress of these suggestions."

She feels that these forums would be beneficial in informing the six boards as well as the general student body as to what the major issues on campus are and how they can be acted upon.

Glasheen Installed As Chairman

VICKI BOWLING

Installation of officers for the 1972 Student Government was held Wednesday, January 5, in Jarman Auditorium.

Following an inspirational by Jody Mace, Frankie Brown, chairman of Legislative Board, explained the purpose of Student Government. She stressed the fact that the incoming group of officers must receive encouragement and help from the student body.

All of the new officers to the major organizations, as well as class representatives to the three boards, were installed.

Dr. Willett congratulated all new members of Student Government. He also praised the three boards and other major organizations.

On behalf of the college, Dr. Willett presented gifts to the outgoing board chairmen - Frankie Brown, Joan Putney, and Mary Tabb Johnston. These girls deserve praise and recognition, he said, for after all problems and blame have gone through channels, "the buck stops here."

Mary Lou Glasheen, as the new chairman of Legislative Board, performed her first official duty by dismissing the assembly.

The New Student Government Association Officers stand on the stage of Jarman with the outgoing officers, headed by Frankie Brown. Mary Lou Glasheen, Terri Jones and Kay Oliver will be the chairmen of Legislative, Residence and Judicial Boards respectively.

Exams Exemption Policy Stated

By LYNNE PIERCE

An exemption policy for exams was adopted by the faculty at its meeting on January 4. The policy was the result of a proposal made by the Student Government Association to the faculty last spring that students with A, and possibly B, averages be exempt from taking examinations. The proposal was referred to the Curriculum Committee, which, after conferring with various faculty members, presented its recommendations to the meeting for approval.

Dr. Carolyn Wells, Associate Dean of the College, said the committee had not favored an exemption based on grade average or class standing because some courses require that all of the information for a semester be tied together in order to show that the material is understood. Dr. Wells cited the genetics class as an example of this and said that a final exam was the only way of testing the student's grasp of the concepts presented in the class. However, the committee also realized that some courses are tested so frequently that the student's performance is established before an exam is given. An example of this would be Artistic Photography. Other courses do not lend themselves to evaluation by examination at all.

Therefore, the following policy was recommended by the committee and adopted by the faculty:

Written examinations shall be given at the end of each semester to each student enrolled in courses in the College during the period designated in the College calendar. The head of each department may waive upon request of the instructor this regulation for any course within his department if the content of that course does not lend itself to evaluation by examination, or if evaluation in that course is sufficient during the semester to determine adequately the student's performance without examination. If there are multiple sections of a course, the policy must apply uniformly to all sections. A list of exam-exempted courses must be kept on file in the office of the Dean of the College.

The policy will begin with the semester which opens on January 31, but Dr. Wells stressed two points. First, that application of the exemption will be based on the interpretation of the class instructor and if he feels there is a need for an examination or not. Secondly, most instructors have already planned their next semester classes with an examination included, therefore, the policy probably will not be felt on a wide scale until the fall semester of 1972.

A Time Of Change

THE ROTUNDA is in the process of acquiring a new editor and it is customary for a statement of policy to be published in the first issue. There will be few changes in the form and publishing policies of THE ROTUNDA but there are certain points which students and faculty members should keep in mind.

The staff will be meeting on Monday and Thursday nights, which means that those people who will be interviewed will be contacted between those times. The staff's policy will be to present the facts of each story as accurately and fairly as possible. In return we will expect the cooperation of everyone involved.

Organizations or individuals may turn in stories, but the final deadline for these will be 5:00 Friday afternoon. This deadline will be enforced rigidly. The only exceptions will be emergencies, which will be determined by the editor.

Students and faculty alike are encouraged to use THE ROTUNDA as a source of communication and a place for an exchange of ideas. Letters should be typed and must be signed. Commentaries from students and faculty will be particularly welcomed. The opinions of all people will be of equal value.

Let me emphasize that THE ROTUNDA seeks to be a link between all facets of campus life. We do not want to be an isolated body that sets out to gun down another segment of the campus life each week. Condemnation and commendation go hand-in-hand. However, THE ROTUNDA can only be as effective as the rest of the school will help us to be.

A Commentary:

I Wouldn't Want To Waitress

BY LYNNE PIERCE

There is an old adage, which I am sure we have all heard, that goes something like, "There are two sides to every story." Last week end, as I was attempting to eat a piece of blueberry pie, I heard the other side of a story that I had written a few weeks before.

I happened to be seated at a table with several waitresses who, during our conversation, took exception to a statement I had made in a commentary entitled "Longwood Stockyards" (December 8). My reference had been that students were being optimistic in hoping that a waitress would descend from heaven to clear off tables during buffet meals. After talking to these girls, I was made to see that any waitress who was able to do this would be rather than descending from heaven, struggling out from under an almost impossible burden.

There are few students here who have not, at one time or another, complained about the service that a particular waitress was giving. I wonder how many of us would continue to complain however if we had to face the same type of job these girls do? For example each waitress is expected to set up her tables, serve the meal and then clear off her tables for a set pay each meal. Whether the job takes her an hour or two hours, she is paid the same amount. I had to agree that this was highly unfair to them. If a student works in an office or at a dormitory desk, she gets paid for each hour she works and not a set amount no matter what the time length is.

The waitresses complained that they are often kept working much longer on a meal than they would have to because students decide to use the dining hall for a social gathering. Students sit at the tables and catch up on all that has happened during the day. This means the waitress is delayed in clearing off the table, which is particularly difficult for girls who have classes after meals.

In commenting on buffet meals, the waitresses pointed out that students tend to use certain areas of the dining hall more than others. Therefore, if they keep clearing off their tables, girls whose areas are on the main floor may end up clearing off three times as many plates as those stationed under the balcony.

After listening to their grievances, my first thought was to ask them if anything had been done to talk to the proper people to have the problem settled. They told me that, though girls had been to see the dean and had talked to the dining hall managers, nothing had been done. When they requested that a Time Study be done on the dining hall to determine if their pay really is off balance with the time they work, they were turned down on the basis that it would be too time consuming.

I do not believe it is fair of the waitresses to leave their tables dirty or give poor service to the students because they are not paid enough. However, it seems that a sense of harmony would be more easily established if students would consider themselves in the same situation and would act as they would like to be treated. Also, something should be done on an administrative level to see that these girls are paid for the time they work. After all, one of the nicer things about school is that there are no dishes for most of us to worry about after meals.

Kent State Tragedy Exhibited In Paintings

Paul Rouillard, Assistant Professor of Art at Longwood College, is currently exhibiting a collection of paintings in the Bedford Building Gallery.

The paintings are large, bold, and illustrative of the Kent State tragedy. As reinterpretations, Mr. Rouillard sensitively depicts the encounters not only as specific Kent State episodes but also as universal themes of agitation, brutality and sorrow.

New Year

To The Student Body:

As you return to campus from what we hope was an enjoyable holiday, I would like to take this opportunity to wish all members of the college community a rewarding beginning on a new year.

As we anticipate the opportunities and accomplishments of 1972, may we reflect for a moment with gratitude on the past — the past which was enriched by your enthusiasms, by knowledge and experiences gleaned from within and without the classroom, by new and renewed friendships. The faculty, staff, and I would like to join with you in looking forward to 1972 as a year for incorporating the best of the past with hope for the future.

May 1972 and the years beyond be your best ever!

Help Needed

Dear Editor:

I had the unfortunate experience of witnessing the accidental drowning of an eighteen year old male last summer. Although mentally I am capable of putting it out of my mind, I do not wish to do so. This experience has sparked a great deal of concern within me. Too many times disaster strikes before people become aware that they are doing dangerous things.

I am concerned presently with trying to get the laws governing life preservers in any type of water-vehicle changed. As the law is presently, life preservers must be present in a registered boat for each passenger aboard. A registered boat is specified by length, width, if it has an outboard motor, etc. (i.e., a fairly large boat).

Now I ask you, "Do you think you have more chance of a 'registered' boat tipping over or a small canoe? Obviously canoes have much more of a chance of tipping over, so why doesn't the law govern canoes and similar small boats? This is why I believe a change is needed in the present law.

To top that off, the law doesn't even require the life preserver to be worn in any kind of a boat. It merely says "present".

I believe the law should be that a life preserver is to be worn for each passenger in any type of water vehicle. They need to be worn. In the time of a crisis one doesn't think first of getting a life preserver. And if one gets knocked on the head or gets an arm crushed by the overturned boat, what then? I realize that a life preserver is an inconvenience and is confining, but this is but a small price to pay for safety.

I have consulted with State Senator J. Harry Michael, Jr., and asked him what I must do to get this law changed. Although nothing can be done until the General Assembly reconvenes in January, 1972, he advised me to write a letter to each newspaper in Virginia asking all concerned people to send a letter expressing their support to this proposed plan. Then, in January, Senator Michael can explore the possibility of introducing legislation and can show from your letters that there is sufficient support from citizens of the Commonwealth.

If this has you concerned, please write your letters to me at my home: 1629 Meridian Street, Charlottesville, Virginia 22901.

A Recommendation

Dear Editor:

President Willett's article, "We Are Number One", appeared in the November issue of Journal of Virginia Education Association, is one of the best of its kind written in recent years. Unlike many other American visitors, who often blindly praise Russia and criticize our own, Dr. Willett has presented a clear, concise, and significantly, most objective analysis of the Soviet educational and political systems. The Russian preparation for war is invaluable pointed out by the author and this will no doubt have the effect of waking up many of us who have been fooled by the Communist propaganda on the so-called 'peace' movement. It is hoped that, after reading this article, we shall be more alert and not fall into our future enemy or enemies' trap by having our national defense weakened by any means. Unless he is not patriotic, every young American is urged to read this fine article and relate its content to some possible solution to our present social problems. The intellectuals and 'liberals', who have no experience of being in the Bolshevik atmosphere or dealing with the Commies but merely denounce our systems, should learn a lot from reading "We Are Number One".

Presented Before Full House

By DR. FRANCES R. BROWN

A packed house in Jarman Hall Thursday evening, January 6, greeted the National Shakespeare Company's production of "Romeo and Juliet," proving once again the magic of the bard of Avon's name. That the magic of this well-loved tragedy of the young lovers did not measure up to the best standards of Shakespearean performances was due in part to the relative inexperience of the actors, in part to the management of the production, and in part to the exigencies of a touring company.

Neither Romeo nor Juliet was able to project the maturing development of character which Shakespeare so subtly and masterfully delineates from their early callow and unawakened stage, through their deep passion for each other, to their determined and tragic ends. Their first encounter at the ball seemed almost mechanical and hurried in spite of the slow pace of the production as a whole. The balcony scene lacked the deep tenderness that Shakespeare's soaring poetry should have evoked. Yet in youthful grace and appeal both Sharyn Martin as Juliet and James Lavin as Romeo had much to commend them. More stage experience may teach them to quiet their somewhat frantic movements and prevent their distracting the audience with such trivia as speculation that Juliet might tumble head over heels from her rather precarious balcony perch.

Acting honors go to Mercutio, Tybalt, and the Nurse though the latter was deprived of one of her most delightful scenes with Juliet by the way the play was cut, some of Mercutio's saucy wit was lost in hurried delivery, and the sword play throughout left much to be desired. That the philosophically important first speech of Friar Laurence was almost a total loss was due more to audience restlessness than to any fault of the actor. In fact, audience restlessness was a distraction throughout the play, revealing considerable unfamiliarity with Shakespeare and considerable immaturity in general on the part of at least a portion of the full house which, in spite of this — or was it because of this? — gave the production a standing ovation.

Management or direction of the play also failed to bring out nuances in the characters of Capulet and his Lady, both of whom Shakespeare portrays as persons of some depth and a good bit of ambivalence toward their only daughter. The cutting out entirely of the minor part of Lady Montague was a good stroke in shortening this long play. Had some further judicious cutting been done, the early scenes with Beuolio, Mercutio, and Romeo might have sharpened Romeo's stage of development at that point as well as brought the length of the performance closer to Shakespeare's own prescription of two hours.

A touring company has to contend not only with the wear and tear of prodigious traveling and one-night stands, which perhaps accounted for the rather mechanical air of much of Thursday's performance, but also with having only a very small number of actors for spectacular crowd scenes and with severe limitations on scenery and costumes. The costumes for this "Romeo and Juliet" were unobtrusive and well done. The single set was interesting and well constructed except for the narrowness and lack of suggested depth of the balcony. Creating an entrance to the Capulet tomb by bar-like ropes was ingenious as was also the staging of the apothecary shop scene, surely one not heretofore duplicated in Shakespearean production!

All in all, this performance of a young touring company brought Shakespeare alive for many who had never seen a stage production of any of his tragedies though it fell far below the great performances of "Romeo and Juliet" in our own and in preceding centuries. It is to be hoped that demand for this company will continue and that their interpretations will grow in strength and depth.

Miss Bishop Exhibits

Sunday, January 16, marks the opening of an exhibit of prints by Miss Bishop, held at the Roanoke Fine Arts Center Gallery in Roanoke. The show consists of twenty prints including recent photographic silkscreen designs.

On Monday, January 17, Miss Bishop will deliver a lecture on printmaking at the Roanoke Center.

A radio station at Longwood is being planned with great enthusiasm but faces major problems.

'New' Radio Station

By SUSIE CARTER

It was hoped that Longwood could begin its own educational FM station early last September. But problems arose which were disappointing to the Speech and Drama Department.

According to Dr. Lockwood, chairman of the Speech and Drama Department, in order to run the station, the college needs a qualified licensed operator. This is the first problem since the General Assembly has placed a restriction on new faculty members. The Speech and Drama Department lost one member last year but has been told that he would not be replaced.

If a new member could be approved, the college would then apply to the Federal Communication Commission for a license. This, however, causes a second problem. If the license is ob-sculpture is among 25 art objects devoted to the subject of space in the Virginia Museum Artmobile exhibition, ENCOUNTER I: SPACE.

Artmobile To Explain Concepts

Behind Creating "Modern Art"

The subject of the creation of space in paintings is examined in an exhibition currently touring Virginia aboard the Virginia Museum's Artmobile I. Entitled Encounter I: Space, the exhibition is the first of a new series that will deal with a number of the concepts that go into the creation of a total work of art.

With the use of 25 art objects augmented by two slide programs accompanied by a taped narrative, the exhibition offers a viewer greater insight into the problems faced by an artist in his work. Persons who have difficulty understanding much of the art form commonly referred to as "modern art" should find the explanations most interesting and informative.

The Artmobile will beat Longwood College beginning Monday, January 10 through Friday, January 14. It will be displayed at the Fine Arts Complex parking lot and the vehicle will be open to the public on Monday-Thursday at 9-12 a.m. and 1-5 p.m., on Friday at 9-12 a.m., and on Tuesday and Thursday at 7-9 p.m. The visit is being sponsored by the Central Chapter of the Virginia Museum.

A Brazilian Version Of The ### Typical Western To Be Shown

Cinema 71/72 will present the revolutionary folk-epic "Antonio das Mortes," a motion picture directed by Glauber Rocha, on Monday, January 17, at 7:30 p.m. in Bedford Auditorium.

"Antonio das Mortes" is a Brazilian version of the typical Western, but it also includes the "religious, the sexually rapacious, and a social consequence," Antonio is a Hired Gun for a villainous landowner who represents the love for material wealth and the tyranny over the common people. While he is employed by the greedy landowner, Antonio begins to suffer from what appears to be Old Gunfighter's Malaise: sadness and lethargy caused by a decline in abilities, as well as the realization of an empty life. However, Antonio is young and at his gunfighter peak. His malaise comes when he kills a cangaço (guerrilla) chieftain whose death lasts through the film's ending. Through a cultish religion part Christian, black magic, and folklore, Antonio's soul is possessed by a cangaço folk-hero. The change causes the gunfighter to become a revolutionary also. He begins to see that "he has been serving a corrupt Establishment, that he has been a hired-killer animal rather than a social animal." Thus the question of the responsibility of the professional is asked: "Does Antonio have a responsibility to question the orders and money that impel him?"

The film is in color and was produced in 1969. The photography and acting add to the mood of the story suggesting the "brink of wilderness" and the lack of the sentimental.

Fifty cent donations at the door will be gratefully accepted. (The direct quotes are from "Politics by Magic: Antonio das Mortes" by Jack Fisher.)

Paintings On Exhibit

Janet Hirshman, a senior art major, responded, "The show is presented in such a way and at such a time so as to create a completely different feeling than it would have several months ago, I like the format."

In November, 1971, the works were exhibited at the Dulmont Gallery of Washington and Lee University. The director of the gallery and Chairman of the Art Department wrote to Mr. Roulliard: "Whatever one's feelings were on the subject, few could ignore your forceful statements. It was good to see a show which made people think."

The exhibit continues through January 29 and may be seen during regular gallery hours.

Student Art Work On Display In Bedford This Week

Throughout exam week there will be student art work on display in the Bedford Building hallways. Beginning January 14 and continuing through the 26th, work of students enrolled in independent studio courses, Design 120, and Sculpture 381 will be on exhibit.

Independent studio works will include paintings by Nancy Allen, Brooke Baxter, and Carol Hess; prints by Brooke Baxter and Mary Ann Bentley; jewelry, enamels, and metalwork by Kathy Barclay, Elaine Ford, Sharon Jefferson, and Mrs. Joe D. Smith; and ceramics by Janet Hirshman.

The Design class is currently showing modular color projects in the second floor hallway. Sculptural pieces will be in first floor hallway.

tained from the FCC, it is with the guarantee that the station agrees to run one full year. The college must back this guarantee.

Dr. Lockwood has been working with Col. Carr on these problems and has found the administration "very enthusiastic about it," and both feel it would be a great addition to the college. The main problem is just when and if the legislature will approve a faculty member to the department.

Under the direction of Dr. Lockwood the radio equipment in Grainger was moved to the top of Jarman Auditorium. At this time the "new" studio is being used by Mr. Woodburn's Radio and Television class. Once a week they produce a program, "SRO," which is aired over

A Diploma Does Not Guarantee A Job

By LYNDIA VAN HORN

The time for job consideration is now. In less than two weeks many Longwood seniors will be leaving the confines of this school system and entering the world of money making. Many will be seeking jobs within other educational systems mostly as teachers but perhaps some also within the realm of business.

Each year college graduates hear of the shortage of jobs not only in teaching but in other aspects of business. Not only should seniors be concerned but also other college students who must face the job rush soon enough.

Perhaps the best indication of the job crisis — if indeed it can be called that — for college graduates can be indicated by last year's figures in hiring. With so many new college graduates entering the job market every year there is an overflow of qualified people to staff many jobs.

According to recent figures published in the May 24, 1971 issue of TIME job bids between March 1970 and March 1971 for B. A.s have dropped 78 per cent. Last year produced the largest graduating class in the history of the nation — 816,000 — and this year's class promises to top even that weighty figure.

No longer does an undergraduate or even a graduate diploma guarantee a job. "The high ranking seniors of 71 — at least from the best colleges — will have no serious trouble finding employment. But they may have to work harder at selling themselves to an employer; the job may not be the one they had hoped for, and the salary may be lower than they like. They will certainly not, as in the past, have jobs conferred upon them."

New Trend

But what will happen to the majority of students who do not fit into the category of "high ranking" and who have not attended the best colleges?

One trend among college graduates from the past few years has been to calmly disregard the rush of the traditional world of business and seek a job which offers less money but more personal enjoyment and fulfillment.

Says Edward Dreyfus, a counselor at U.C.L.A., "In the '50 and early '60's, most students' faith in careerism was nearly as tenacious as their faith in the American dream. Today undergraduates tend to view a job as only part of their total person. Their identity is not going to be contingent upon their employment."

This could be the reason for the continuation of such programs as VISTA, the Peace Corps, and The Teacher Corps which still attract annually about 15,000 people.

These misplaced college graduates look to a chance for helping others instead of a chance to strike it rich as a prerequisite to job hunting.

Placement Programs

Some colleges have recently set up programs of placement for these types of jobs. Michigan State University now publishes a newsletter listing unique job openings. In "Vacations for Social Change" are listed such jobs as a $70 a week position as an organizer to work in Louisiana with sugar-cane laborers, a $50 a week plus rent position for a female counselor at the Runaway House in Washington, D. C., and also was once listed from a retired accountant from Far Rockaway, N. Y., who wanted to finance a combination school and commune set up by two "real dropouts."

Many feel it is the job of the placement offices in colleges to guide students toward jobs which will be both rewarding and satisfying. This is the view of Felix C. Robb the director of the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools, the South's regional accrediting agency for elementary and secondary schools, colleges, and universities.

"This judgment," he says, "is based on years of observing one of the most inefficient and least justifiable situations in education: a young person who, after 16 years or more of formal preparation, haphazardly predisposes his career and invites underutilization of his valuable talents by literally walking the streets and knocking on doors in an unstructured search for employment."

He continues his discussion in his article "The Three P's." "It is conceivable that instruction in colleges and universities will change more in the next 30 years than in the past 300. But will changes in instruction be matched by an equivalent modernization and utilization of the too-long-neglected placement services of the academic community? What is needed is not minor tinkering but a dynamic, imaginative new alignment of resources and services that will guarantee the individual student full utilization of career information."

Longwood's Situation

John Fleenor of Longwood's placement department thinks much the same thing. He feels that placement is perhaps one of the most important on campus to help the student especially the about to graduate senior.

He lists eight different areas which he feels are covered by the placement office. These include advising by instructional staff, orientation to college life, personal counseling, housing services, health services, extracurriculum, financial aid, and job placement.

Since about 75 per cent of all students enrolled in Longwood are in some form of education, the most important area of job placement is in the teacher work force. This continues to be a difficult job as the need for teachers decreases proportionately with the declining birth rate.

Another reason it is hard to find teaching as a career opportunity is in the increased number of graduates turning to this profession. More and more men are also looking to teaching as an alternative job. That is they decide to teach when they cannot acquire another position in their fields.

The education requirements for teachers has also increased. In many areas of the nation only teacher candidates holding a master's degree are hired. As the need for PhD's in some science and technical fields decrease, these people also often look to teaching often in the high school system as an alternative.

In a chart from the above mentioned issue of TIME, listing the possible possibilities for employment in the future, it is estimated that the per cent of growth in the next ten years in the elementary and secondary school systems will grow only a total of eight per cent. On a university or college level however, and this includes the ever rising community colleges, the estimated growth is at 38 per cent.

Perhaps college students and placement officials should look to the future in deciding courses of study and life vocations.

Mini-Semester

STAUNTON — Mary Baldwin College will begin offering intensive instruction for three week periods in 13 courses on May 22. The classes will be taught by the regular faculty and will meet for three hours a day, five days a week. The comprehensive fee for on-campus courses will be $330. Three credits will be given for most courses and they may be taken on a pass-fail basis unless they satisfy an area requirement or count toward a major.

Rights Questioned

WILLIAMSBURG — The Board of Student Affairs at William and Mary has been challenged by the senior class president, Bruce Shatswell, to deal with the issue of parental permission versus student rights as adults. Shatswell has objected to the wording of a recent proposal by the Environmental Committee, which has set up four categories of open housing. The proposal first states students will be given a chance to exercise their rights as adults, then adds that any hall can have a more relaxed system if each student obtains parental permission. Shatswell urged that the legal aspects of the question be checked and reminded the Board that, if the age of majority is lowered to 18, permission will not be necessary. His main argument was that the college is not responsible for the moral well-being of students.

Code Challenged

CHARLOTTESVILLE — The honor code of the University of Virginia is being challenged for the second time in its 130 year history by a student who was expelled. Richard Carmona, a senior in the college of arts and sciences, was convicted Nov. 11 of shoplifting $2 worth of merchandise from a drug store. On Dec. 4, the Honor Committee found him guilty of a violation of that part of the code which calls for expulsion for acts of stealing. Carmona has charged that there were procedural errors by the committee and that his offense was not serious enough for expulsion. He had been ordered readmitted to his classes by the local courts pending a hearing on his case.

Honors Program

WILLIAMSBURG — William and Mary will initiate an experimental honors program for selected sophomores next fall. "Project Plus," as the program is called, will consist of seventy-two sophomores and twelve upperclassmen who will also be counselors. Living arrangements will be combined with a program of study, with the students living in a residence hall and doing their academic work under faculty members who will teach in the residence itself. Classes each semester will center around a focal theme and instructors will be drawn from several fields to give it a broad treatment. Each student must take two residential courses, which will be offered on a pass-fail basis. The counselors will complement the work of the faculty members and will serve as instructors. They will be supervised by resident couples who will administer the program. The program will be housed in the four dual residences rejected as housing by the sororities. (There is a story on changes in Longwood's honors program on page 5.)

BY LYNNE PIERCE

The faculty has approved revisions to the Honors Program which were presented at their meeting on January 4 by the Honors Committee. Miss Carolyn Craft, chairman of the committee, says the basic result of the changes is the clarification of the procedures a student must follow to enter the program.

The changes include the student knowing the composition of her examining committee from the beginning and that her department chairman must appear with her before the committee instead of submitting his or her approval in writing. There is also now a prerequisite average of 2.7 overall and 3.0 in the major field. This requirement was added because the committee felt a student should not graduate with honors unless her overall work is of high quality, stated Miss Craft.

The program was begun in 1930 to allow students to study in depth a subject which they have a particular interest in. Part of the object of the program is to acquaint the student with research methods, the use of materials and their organization, and the presentation of results in a scholarly manner.

Junior and senior students in all departments are eligible to participate in the Honors Program. The student first chooses an instructor who has specialized in her field of interest to act as her advisor and sponsor. She then submits a written proposal to the chairman of the Honors Committee stating her thesis, intended method and scope of research and an initial bibliography. After doing this, she appears before the committee with her department chairman and sponsor to discuss her proposal.

After permission for the project is given, the student will enroll in Honors Research 498, and 499 later. An examining committee of three faculty members will be chosen and will be available for consultation. After she has submitted her final paper, the committee will administer an oral examination to her. Their recommendations will be submitted to the Honors Committee for final approval.

To receive honors, the student must maintain her grade average, pass Honors Research with an A or B, pass the oral exam and any individual requirements of her department. Miss Craft stressed however that, if a student did not receive the committee's recommendation or decided not to take to oral, she would still receive six hours credit, three each for 498 and 499, for her work.

Further information on the program is on pages 51 and 52 of the college catalogue and any member of the committee is available for questions. Besides Miss Craft, the faculty members are Mr. Robert Blasch, Mrs. Mary Cristo, Mr. I. B. Dent, Dr. Anita Ernout, Dr. Elizabeth Flynn and Dr. Wayne Tinnell. Student members are Becky Bailey, Mary Bounds and Shirley Chappell.

The Religious folk groups give Longwood student a chance to work together to serve the community.

Longwood's Religious Folk Groups Stay Active

BY VALERIE BLANKS

The members of the three religious folk groups on campus are busy people. But as Donna Hicks of the BSU groups says, "The experience makes us happy, and we want to share this genuine happiness with everyone we meet."

The "New Sounds" has presented programs of music at different Catholic churches in the area. Their present efforts are on having a folk mass every other Sunday at St. Theresa's Catholic Church during the 10:30 Mass.

Made up of eighteen members, Diane Weymouth, Robin Wallmeyer, Linda Blaton and John Sannik accompany them on the guitar. Also when needed, Dr. Kathleen Hosey plays the organ for them.

The group's leader, Meg Atkinson, said they hope to go back to the churches in Meherrin and Blackstone where they have sung before, as well as the Holly Manor Nursing Home here in Farmville.

The Wesley Choir, under the direction of Cathy McCanless, is affiliated with the Methodist Foundation. With Judy Poates playing the guitar, this group varies its music from folk to sacred.

Last year the choir sang periodically in church and did two deputation programs dealing with the Christmas theme. Among recent activities was a program presented in Clarksville.

"Tafara" is the official name for the sixteen freshmen and sophomores who make up the Baptist Student Union Folk Group.

The group's leader, Donna Hicks, explained that it's name is the African word meaning, "We are happy."

The group's three guitarists are Marie Wiemer, Mary Beth Pearson and Vicki Webster. Joyce Morene and Carolyn Chambliss play the piano when needed, and demonstrating the versatility of their music, the group sometimes uses maracas and a tambourine.

The group has been busy fulfilling their purpose of "sharing Christian happiness" this year. They have sung for the YWCA Installation Service, for a Coffee House program in Keysville, and for civic activities as well as church services in the area.

Their future plans include singing for a Baptist associational meeting, and doing contemporary worship services in the Farmville, Keysville, Crewe and Blackstone Baptist Churches.

An idea of "Tafara's" which might interest the students in general is having folk sings in the Rotunda for everyone to attend.

Public Indecency

Reprinted from THE TALON, the newspaper of Bridgewater College.

"A BUSTY young lady, nude from the waist up, strolled down the streets of Copenhagen while window shopping. She had been hired by a local newspaper to determine just what would constitute an 'outrage to public decency,'" reports a Danish sex tabloid. She wasn't arrested. Copenhagen police inspector Viggo Christensen said there's no reason to arrest a person who walks the streets nude unless a crowd gathers and traffic is disrupted. "Who is to say what offends public decency? That is an individual matter."

Purpose Of March Of Dimes Defined

EDITOR'S NOTE: The month of January has been designated as the kick-off month for this year's March of Dimes Campaign. This is the first in a series of five articles which will tell about various projects that the foundation applies its money to.

by Neil R. M. Buist, M.B., Ch.B.
Associate Professor of Pediatrics and Director
March of Dimes Metabolic Clinic, University of Oregon Medical School

The body's chemical processes fit together in an intricate pattern. If one crucial step is off, the whole well-being of the human involved is often tragically affected.

This is what happens with a metabolic disorder. The body's chemistry has been distorted. Such disorders are called "inborn errors of metabolism" because they are inherited.

Inborn errors can be all the more dangerous than the birth defect that puts a child on crutches, since children with metabolic defects often look perfectly normal. The damage only starts to occur after birth, when they don't have access to their mother's blood through the placenta.

Some of these disorders cause severe bodily or brain damage within a few weeks of birth. Others are more subtle and may lie hidden (or latent) for months and sometimes for many years. In such cases, disorders that are undiagnosed get no treatment or the wrong treatment.

Lack of hormone

A group of students at Randolph-Macon Woman's College is planning a study program in Rome and Florence for the coming summer — 1972. The program involves six weeks of study followed by two weeks of independent travel in Europe. The time schedule runs from mid June to mid August and six college credits can be earned. The cost will be $1200 including transatlantic transportation and room, board and tuition for the six weeks of study, but not including the cost of the two weeks of independent travel.

Three courses will be given by Randolph-Macon faculty members: Renaissance Art History; Classical Civilization; and Conversational Italian, each for two hours credit with all work on a pass no credit basis.

Full information about the program and application blanks can be secured by writing:

chemistry and see that they get the hospital care and follow-up they need.

It is becoming increasingly possible to correct this kind of error. One of our patients, Tonya Fronatt, produces a low level of human growth hormone (HGH) in her pituitary gland. She is 10, but she is tiny and looks much younger. The lack of this hormone has also been the cause of the hypoglycemia that has sporadically thrown her into severe convulsions since she was three days old.

HGH is rare because it must be extracted from human pituitaries. The HGH from about 2,000 human pituitary glands would be needed to help her grow to normal size. But regular injections of the chemical have brought an end to her convulsions and she is now growing very well on it.

Buying time

The other side of this treatment coin is to deny the body any substance that results in damage. For three-year-old Robert Cecil, this means a special diet.

Robert was born with a birth defect of his kidneys. These were so underdeveloped that they were only five per cent as efficient as normal kidneys. The metabolic derangements caused by the kidney failure were so severe that two years ago the boy was near death because he could not eliminate his waste products. With a diet that restricts his intake of proteins, we have been able to reduce the amount of waste products that his kidneys must process.

This diet is keeping him alive and postponing the time when he must face a transplant. In the time we are buying, he will grow stronger and kidney transplant techniques will be improved. Then we may be able to give him a healthy kidney by transplant.

his total environment is not considered.

Take Rex McCollam, admitted two years ago when he was 11, apparently with acute appendicitis. His appendix was removed. When the anesthesia wore off, this nice, quiet little boy suddenly became violent. He was vomiting and uncontrollable and he stayed that way for two weeks. Then he went back to being a nice little boy again and was sent home.

A month later he was back at the hospital with the same symptoms of acute appendicitis. Again he was violent and uncontrollable and this time he nearly died.

A nurse took some of the boy's urine and started for the lab to have it analyzed. On the way she stopped for coffee. When she came back for the urine, it had turned pink.

That started us toward a new diagnosis, porphyria, the disease that is believed to have made King George of England insane. There is still no cure. It is known that attacks of porphyria can be triggered by alcohol, by certain sedatives and by a number of environmental agents.

When we diagnosed the porphyria, we understood that the anesthesia had prompted this boy's postoperative attack. But what sent him back to the hospital a month later? Malnutrition brought on the second subsequent attack which left him with partly paralyzed legs.

So here is another element of therapy: You can't treat a chemical disorder completely unless you look for the sociological and psychological implications. That is why the March of Dimes also supports our social worker. She adds to what is the real value of this clinic: comprehensive care tailored to the needs of each child afflicted by these subtle, but deadly, inborn errors of metabolism.

'71 Vietnam Policy Made In '44

©Copyright, 1972
By JEREMY HORNE

Mr. Horne did his research in the spring of 1969 from classified documents belonging to the State Department and Department of Defense. In addition, he has had numerous interviews with former participants in the 1931-1947 period and spent the summer of 1969 in Paris, researching the Banque Indochine files for supplementary material. Mr. Horne's work is now being submitted to publishers to be printed in book form.

Throughout the war, the US had been operating several intelligence groups within Indo-China, the most notable one being the Office of Strategic Services, under William J. Donovan. Many histories of Vietnam mention Donovan, but few have gone into any detail regarding his activities and their purpose. It was the OSS, and these other intelligence groups which were to formulate early US policy towards Indo-China.

The OSS, though somewhat unsophisticated had much in common with its protege, the infamous Central Intelligence Agency. One of their main sources of information was the Christian and Missionary Alliance, whose ostensible purpose was to spread the Gospel to "uncultured, backward" peoples.

The Alliance had been operating in Indo-China for a number of years, but when it became evident that its missionaries were in danger from the Japanese, US rescue operations began. In this process, the OSS made effective use of the Alliance's adherents as intelligence agents. This was to lay essential groundwork for the US policies that were to follow.

In conjunction with the infiltration of the Alliance, the OSS established several commercial enterprises to act as intelligence fronts.

On 26 May 1941, Mr. C. K. Moser, Chief of the Far Eastern Unit of the Department of State, learned of the Japanese seizure of goods belonging to the Far Eastern Trading Corporation and the North American Syndicate. He directed correspondence to Mr. Raymond Geist, Chief of the Commercial Affairs Division of the Department of State to the effect that there was no record in the State Department files on the two. In fact, the US Department of Commerce denied the two companies Certificates of Incorporation on 29 August 1940.

However, the North American Syndicate apparently had no difficulty in conducting business. A State Department memo of 27 May 1941 stated that "The Company is Chinese owned (North American Syndicate) and its function is to give an American facade."

As to the Far Eastern Trading Association, a State Department memo of 12 August 1941 said that it was making itself available for intelligence activities.

It was during this latter 1941 period that the US was able to obtain a substantial foothold in Indo-China. The Japanese had not fully penetrated into the internal life of this region, and the US was still attempting to make last ditch attempts at fabricating peace. As late as 8 December 1941, the French Indochinese were still making attempts to maintain rubber trade with the US, and the latter was not making any sizable effort to stop this. Further Japanese attempts at making peace allowed US missionaries to remain free in Indo-China. OSS's comment on this in April of 1945 was the Japanese's "probably secret understanding with DeGaulle's Government."

As US attempts to negotiate with Japan over the latter's seizure of American goods failed, other means to deal with the

to be protected in such an event. Through this early 1942 the US made it known to Chiang Kai-shek that there would be no objection to his invading Indo-China. The US simply didn't have the armed forces to support such an invasion on its own. Besides, at least for the War Department, China had no territorial ambitions in the area.

China, however, apparently didn't want to invade, so the US started and maintained bombing

First of all, as to the native Vietnamese, "They don't want independence. They know that they are too weak to stand alone." Secondly, "It would be very unwise to return Indo-China to China." Third, "The Annamese (Vietnamese) are docile if not driven. For these Annamites, the allies mean Americans." The OSS concluded that the Vietnamese "... would like a status similar to that of the Philippines ..."

It was becoming evident that the solution was to be American, in character. The Chinese seemed to have territorial designs on the region. Besides, according to the OSS on 30 November, 1943, the Chinese were selling material to the Japanese in Indo-China.

In early 1944, it was clear that there was growing native and French resistance to the Japanese occupation, and as the US war effort inched closer to the Indochinese mainland, some substantial plans had to be made regarding this former French colony's postwar status.

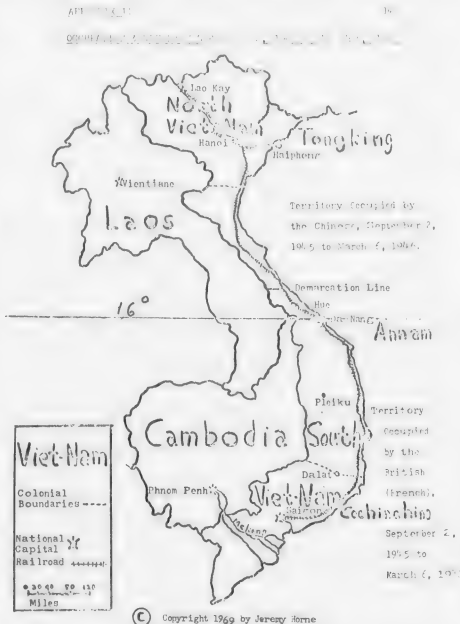

On 19 June 1944 the OSS noted that China will support any move against the French in favor of Annamite Government. "The general trend of the Indo-Chinese is towards the Pacific and not towards France, thus making the US first choice as protector." However, it would be too obvious for the US to directly seize Indo-China for itself. An intermediary for US control had to be found. The State Department was panicking and correspondence was shuttling between US consular offices in China and Washington during mid-1944.

Finally, on 26 July 1944, it broke, US Consul Gauss in Chung King, China, sent a memo to the secretary of State lamenting the lack of US policy in Indo-China. "Thus, we have Miles and Tails (Chinese Secret Police Chief), OSS and Gordon, the United States Army; (sic) we have the French Military Mission going to the Army and the French Delegation coming to us with problems; and no one seems to know what anyone else is doing or what should be done." After reiterating his concern about Chinese designs on Indo-China, Gauss states, "Lack of clear-cut American policy in regard to Indo-China has undoubtedly encouraged the Chinese in this hope. We do not of course cavil against ... such pronouncement (of self-government for Indo-China) for subject peoples such as those in Indo-China, but we feel that such pronouncements should be tempered by making it clear that we are not working for the separation of Indo-China from the French State ..."

Finally, American policy was formulated on 8 August 1944 in a memorandum from William R. Langdon, American Consul General in Kunming, China. In a heretofore unpublished memorandum, still kept under wraps in the State Department, the core of US ambitions in Indo-China was laid out.

Langdon started off his report by naming France as the chief villain in exploiting the Indochinese people for so many years. In addition to this, China had no situation had to be devised. Pearl Harbor, of course, was the death knell.

On 11 January 1942, the War Department's Chiefs of Staff sent a memo to the Secretary of War, John J. McCloy, stating: "With reference to your memorandum dated January 10, 1942, I suggest that Mr. T. V. Soong (Chiang Kai-shek's brother-in-law and intermediary between the US and Chiang) be informed as follows: The Asiatic boundary of the Southwestern Pacific Theater was so established as to place occupied portions of Thailand and Indo-China under the supreme command of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek." Then, on 26 January of 1942, Dwight David Eisenhower sent a note to McCloy saying that Indo-China is in enemy hands and the "allies are justified in striking back through that territory when and if such action appears desirable." However, French property would have operations over Indo-China from 1942 to the end of the war.

Starting from the end of December 1942, the OSS received indications that "there is a certain body of Chinese opinion which incorporated into China after the war." This was cause enough to completely alter the US outlook towards China's role in Indo-China. While the late President Roosevelt was contemplating his international trusteeship idea for Indo-China, other elements in the rapidly growing foreign policy-making bureaucracy were developing other things.

Among some of the conditions for a solution to the Indochinese problem were that there had to be substantial indigenous support for US actions against the Japanese, US corporations had to be guaranteed a foothold in any post-war economy there, and any post-war government had to be stable.

A 10 November 1943 OSS memo was quite blunt on these matters, legitimate claim to Indo-China. Because of these things, plus "... the almost single-handed role we have been playing and probably shall play in the defeat of Japan ... we shall be morally free at the peace table or earlier to dictate how Indo-China shall be disposed of," Langdon recognized that the US couldn't blatantly take over the region. However, there were "... three ways in which we might dispose of the country: give it independent status, give it internationally protected and controlled status, or give it dependent status." As to the first, the "natives" weren't ready for independence. Trusteeship was not within the bounds of "practical policies." Besides, it would be opposed by the other major allied powers. That left the dependent status, and this creative Consul-General settled upon France for "practical reasons." If France was to recapture Indo-China there ought to be "... the imposition of certain American conditions to such continuation." Continuing, Langdon said, "The best way, no doubt, to ensure for American enterprise a position of equality with French enterprise in Indo-China would be the conclusion of a special Franco-American convention relating to Indo-China." To ensure "this competitive position," twelve conditions had to be met by the French before reentry into their former colony. As a sop to the "natives," some form of quasi-independent administration would be given them, supervised by the French. After the French had signed these accords, both American and Chinese forces would be withdrawn. With Chinese participation in this "holding down" exercise, it would appear that postwar occupation of Indo-China, pending French Acquiescence to our demands, would be a joint allied venture.

The OSS in a memo on 11 August 1944 supported Langdon's views, and added, "Only if the above provisions are achieved can American business men extend their activities with splendid prospects for success."

Secretary of State Cordell Hull sent a memo to Langdon on 7 September 1944 highly praising the August memo and stating that the "... desirability of further similar reports is suggested."

Two days later, OSS saw increased resistance activity in Indo-China, anticipating "... quite an upheaval in French Indo-China in the very near future." However, the US was one step ahead of the game. "... the Air Ground Aid Section (military intelligence division of the infantry) have extensive plans afoot for work in French Indo-China," according to this memo.

US plans for Indo-China were solidified on 19 September 1944, as the State Department gave Langdon's memo "... the grade of excellent." The next day, Langdon amplified his previous statements in saying "... the time to take up these questions with the French is now, when the French still need us and still feel beholden to us."

On 16 November 1944, the War Department got the word from the State Department not to breathe a word about the new policy. On the 26th, lesser officials in the State Department were told "... don't bother FDR on the Indo-China policy question."

So, according to plan, the Chinese forces entered Indo-China, under the direction of the US. No forces left until accords were signed between the Chinese and the French, giving full commercial rights to the Chinese. Since the Chinese were our "middlemen," these "rights" were those of the US. A quick comparison of this treaty with the Langdon memo of 8 August 1944 reveals that both are nearly identical in content. The US got what it wanted for American industry, the French were nominally reinstalled as administrators of Indo-China, and the only problem remaining was the status of independence forces under Ho Chi Minh.

This issue was resolved in the early part of 1946, when the chief of the OSS, William Donovan, went to Hanoi to negotiate with Ho on the status of his forces. At that time, the US had not begun to execute its Langdon plan, and there was still a hope that we could install a facade of independence under Ho, while continuing to manipulate the political affairs of the region. Donovan offered to Ho the rebuilding of all his defense facilities in return for acceptance of the Langdon conditions of US economic dominance. Ho refused, and the aid we had been giving him throughout the war was cut off. It was Ho Chi Minh to whom we had to answer ultimately, and it was this last untied end which led to the rapid deterioration of the French regime we had reinstalled in 1946. The rest of the modern history of the Vietnam conflict from 1946 on is common knowledge.

News Briefs

British Embassy Destroyed

DUBLIN — The British Embassy in Dublin was destroyed Wednesday, February 2, as the Irish Republic observed a National Day of mourning for the 13 civilians killed in fighting January 30. A huge march had been organized by the trade unions and it marched peacefully through Dublin to the embassy building. At the embassy, the crowd waited peacefully for about an hour and then started throwing rocks, which soon led to the fire bombs.

Israel To Negotiate

JERUSALEM — The Israeli government decided Wednesday, February 2, to begin a new set of negotiations with Egypt aimed at reopening the Suez Canal. This long-awaited decision had followed weeks of discussions between the Israeli ambassador, Yitzhak Rabin, and the American assistant secretary of state, Joseph J. Sisco.

Lottery Completed

WASHINGTON — The 1973 draft order was picked Wednesday, February 3, in the lottery. March 6 was number 1 with March 7 coming in as number 2, putting those men born in 1953 first in line for next year's callup. Draft Director Curtis W. Tarr stated that they do not know what the call will be for the remainder of '72, but that it will be lower than it has been in recent years. According to Secretary of Defense, Melvin R. Laird, there will be no calls, at least not before April.

Dollar Drops

LONDON — The dollar sank to a new low and the price of gold rose nearly $50.00 an ounce in Western Europe. Doubts are growing about the health of the U.S. economy, according to the dealers, and some holders are trying to get rid of their dollars.

Political Pollution Possible

SAIGON — Immediate discussions with the Saigon government toward a political solution of the war could be started, according to the Viet Cong, if President Nguyen Van Thieu resigned now and the United States set a date for troop withdrawal. Calling for Thieu's immediate resignation, a National Liberation Front radio said that Thieu and his oppressive machinery are the main obstacle to a political solution. According to the broadcast, once these provisions are met, the Viet Cong's Provisional revolutionary government would be ready to discuss establishment of a new government and to organize an election for South Vietnam.

Registration Highlights Press Conference

Legislative Board does not feel they can endorse scheduling pre-registration on Saturday. They feel, in representing the Student Body, that students would not be in favor of it.

Statement drafted by Legislative Board at its January 31, 1972 meeting

Dr. Willett discovered that many students had questions and objections to the proposed registration policy for next year.

By VICKI BOWLING
Disagreement over Saturday registration highlighted Dr. Willett's press conference, held last Thursday.

Although the decision is not yet final, pre-registration next year will probably be held on a Saturday. Previously, it has taken place on a weekday. Dr. Willett said that the general consensus among faculty and staff members is that this interrupts the continuity of classes.

Legislative Board has formally stated that it does not endorse the idea of pre-registering on a Saturday. Members of the board feel that the majority of students oppose the suggestion. They reached their conclusion through talking with various students on campus. After the reading of the statement, it was asked if a compromise could not be reached.

According to Dr. Willett, whenever a change in the academic calendar is made, both convenience and what is best academically are considered.

"Whenever there is a conflict between convenience and the academically sound, the academically sound must take precedence," he said.

Dr. Blackwell pointed out that students are not the only ones concerned with registration, and that the faculty and staff must also be taken into consideration. He said that no alternative has been found to interrupting class activity, other than having registration take place on a Saturday. Several suggestions were given in regard to registration, such as holding registration on a day directly before or after a holiday. Dr. Blackwell said that class continuity would still be interrupted.

Junior Dianne Derrick asked if a poll had been taken at a formal faculty meeting to determine the faculty's feelings on the matter, and if a majority of faculty members had been present. Dr. Willett answered that the matter had been discussed at an informal meeting of the faculty.

Legislative Board is considering looking further into the situation.

Dr. Blackwell said that dates for pre-registration will be announced and publicized well in advance. The final decision as to which Saturdays registration might be held has not been made. Activities such as football season are being taken into consideration.

Another aspect of the academic calendar, the possibility of having the fall semester end before Christmas, was discussed. Dr. Willett announced that there is a committee looking into this and other changes.

Although it would be impossible for this fall, he said, there is a good chance that some arrangement of this type could be made for the fall of 1973. The main problem is student teaching, for which plans must be made early.

The majority of Virginia colleges are leaning towards this type of calendar, he added.

The problem of parking near Curry and Frazer will be eased somewhat with more parking spaces. A lot across from Curry is in the process of being cleared, which will result in an additional 40 parking spaces.

The academic calendar, parking problems and State Teachers' Scholarships were some of the other topics discussed at the press conference.

Following the completion of this new parking facility, there will be a one-hour parking limit imposed on curb parking in front of Curry and Frazer. Dr. Willett emphasized the fact that this limit will not be enforced until the new area is finished.

The third major area that Dr. Willett discussed concerned the budget. In a meeting with the House of Appropriations, representatives from Longwood must defend Governor Holton's budget recommendation, and ask for more.

Allotment for new buildings must be considered in the budget, along with the new faculty members. Longwood will be getting next year.

Dr. Willett mentioned that the possibility of eliminating the State Teacher's Scholarship was being discussed, but he added that there is a greater possibility that the awarding of the scholarship may be gradually moved so that it will be given only to juniors and seniors. It is hoped that the money for the scholarship will not be eliminated entirely.

The question of what happened to last year's yearbooks was raised. Tim Brown, director of the Student Union, explained that the holdup involves the printing (Continued on page 5)

Pre-Registration Questions Are Resolved

By LINDA STONE

Will preregistration for 1973's spring semester take place on a Saturday next fall? This question has caused an abundance of rumors about what Dean Blackwell or legislative board has or has not done.

In late October or early November, the academic calendar for the following year is compiled. However, this year the administrative faculty was not able to agree on a date for pre-registration of classes. The faculty feels that preregistration cuts unjustly into class instruction time which is very valuable.

In November, the Student Government was contacted by Dean Blackwell and asked for suggestions. The two factions considered several possibilities:

One possibility discussed was to have registration the day before classes begin. This does not seem practical since everyone would be tired for classes the next day, and the entire first week of classes would be a state of confusion with schedule changes and with uncertainty looming.

Another method discussed was to computerize preregistration where students would simply fill out what courses they needed; the registrar's office would, in turn, fit the classes in at any time they had available. Dean Blackwell felt that this would defeat what Longwood tries to accomplish because this method would leave the students with no voice concerning their class schedule. The college does not have the necessary equipment for such registration either.

The possibility of a night time preregistration does not seem plausible because it would probably run into the early morning hours.

The problem was discussed further at an informal meeting of the faculty in December. At this meeting it was agreed upon by the majority of the faculty that to have preregistration on a Saturday seemed to be the only feasible solution. Dean Blackwell did add that tentative plans were being made to preregister all students who would be registering for their last semester at Longwood, such as premedical students and seniors, before registration for regular students took place, since their courses are mandatory. This would eliminate a lot of people from the lines and preregistration would actually begin with the juniors.

Given these limits, Dean Blackwell asked legislative board to pick a preferable Saturday (Continued on page 7)

What if they gave a REGISTRATION and nobody came?

Credibility Gap

In an age when people are struggling to keep the right to determine their own futures, it's easy to understand why this principle is losing ground when we examine the present pre-registration controversy.

Was a majority of the faculty present when the policy was established? Is Legislative Board representing a majority of the students? These were two of the questions asked at the press conference which deserved more attention than they received. Can an informal meeting of approximately sixteen instructors establish a policy that many other faculty members claim they know nothing about? How can Legislative Board speak for a student body that also was largely unaware of this policy?

One student charged that the communication lines had broken down, but what really seems to have developed is a credibility gap on both sides. The most important question to be answered sums up the situation - What if they gave a registration and nobody came? - students or faculty.

Letters to the Editor

Pre-Registration

Dear Editor,

The administration is planning to have pre-registration for second semester next year on a Saturday in late November or early December. Legislative Board is opposed to the Saturday registration. The board has come up with numerous alternate dates, all of which have been turned down by the administration.

Last time at registration we used the quartile system, despite Legislative Board's veto. I feel that in order to have a working student government, the administration and Legislative Board (representing the student's views) should be able to compromise on these and all issues. It seems to me that in the case of Saturday registration, the administration is not considering the student's views with as much weight as the faculty's views.

Sincerely,
Susan Clark and other concerned students the face for the students. It seems the faculty and administration are saying "You may decide anything you want to, as long as it doesn't inconvenience us." If this is the case, isn't the purpose of a student government defeated?

Parking Problem

To the Editor:

I would like to use this column as a place to express my concern over the growing parking problem on the Longwood Campus. I think allowing sophomores to have cars on campus was a nice gesture, but it presents an obvious problem. It is quite discouraging to come back from the weekend late Sunday evening and not be able to find any vacant parking place except a block away, and then have to drag your luggage to the dorm.

It seems to me that at one time, having a car on campus was a privilege, and now it is nothing but a hassle. Why isn't a proper paved parking lot offered to Curry and Frazer students? How can the Campus Police issue parking tickets when they are fully aware (?) of the parking problem? How can the college charge the students $5.00 for the right to fight for a place to park? And lastly, what will happen in the future, when the next group of student teachers return in March? I present these questions to anyone who can answer them.

Camille Primm #72

Grades

Dear Editor:

For people who are supposed to be living in a fast moving world, I am beginning to wonder about Longwood College and its systems.

At the date of this letter, four days have passed in the new semester and still we are without our grades from the fall semester. Some may want to drop classes and take a lesser course schedule or others may want to add courses, yet they are unsure as to the hours accumulated or their possible grades with an individual professor. Some students will continue in a hyphenated course, yet may not proceed in the second half if failure occurred during the first half, or at least this isn't advised. There are students who are working on campus, such as waitresses, who must have a 2.0 average. In some cases, these students need to know their averages. In this way, a week in which extra studying could be accomplished would not be wasted working, only to discover that they must resign from their position.

I was curious concerning the matter and I inquired at the Registrar's Office, which I felt was a proper channel, as to the problem. I was told that the computer broke down on Friday afternoon (the day grades were to be in the hands of Data Processing) and that it was impossible to fix it until Monday. As of Wednesday, Data Processing had completed the grades of those from A to L but the others still were not complete. The prediction was that we would receive them on Friday - an entire week after the beginning of a new semester.

This plan seems totally inadequate on behalf of the administration and faculty. I feel that the magnificent computer, which holds the entire responsibility for this great delay, should be thoroughly examined to be sure of no missing or degenerate parts and even if the individuals involved were required to work an entire weekend, these grades should be in the hands of the students by the date of arrival or the first day of classes.

Waiting,
Betsy Minor

Head Table

Dear Students:

Now that a new semester has begun, new faces can be seen at the Head Table. These new officers of the Student Government were elected by you to lead - not control - student policies. They cannot do this without the help and cooperation of every member of the student body.

Chi urges you to support these new leaders; and to each new officer, Chi wishes you much success throughout the year.

Sincerely,
CHI of 1972

Bless the Beasts & Children

'Beasts, Children' By Kramer Called Another Boring Film

(From NORTH TEXAS DAILY, DENTON, TEXAS)

"Bless the Beasts and Children," Columbia, directed and produced by Stanley Kramer, screenplay by Mac Benoff from novel by Gordon Swarthout.

It's doubtful you will see another film this year to equal "Bless the Beasts and Children," and for that we can all breathe a sign of relief.

Stanley Kramer's latest effort reaches depths of boredom I didn't think were possible — even from the man who gave us last year's most boring film, "R.P.M."

During the last few years, Kramer has tackled such subjects of social relevance as interracial marriage ("Guess Who's Coming to Dinner") and campus unrest ("R.P.M."). He now focuses his attention (and unfortunately his cameras) on six social outcasts from a boys' camp and their efforts to prevent the senseless slaughter of a herd of buffalo.

In this film, as in the others, the choice of subject matter is valid, even admirable. But Kramer is not a director who merely presents problems; he assaults them head-on. And here, as always, the film's message is forced, almost shoved down our throats.

It is an awkward, heavy-handed film, but oddly enough that is not its major weakness. Apparently no one, from the director to the screenwriter to the actors, was certain if this was to be a serious film or an exercise in stupidity. So in the final analysis the movie fails simply because it has no sure course to follow.

The characters are sketched briefly by way of a series of flashbacks which should earn Kramer the Otto Preminger award for clumsiness. The boys' problems all stem from bad relationships with equally rotten parents — strictly a one-sided situation.

The young actors involved might show some promise if they were given the chance, but in a film as contrived and calculated as this the opportunity never affords itself.

As if all this were not enough, "Bless the Beasts and Children" suffers from an abundance of stereotyped characters (inept camp leaders, a couple of rednecks who hate long-hairs), jokes paced so you can time the punch lines, flashforwards, flashbacks, slow motion and a contradictory stand on nonviolence (shades of "Billy Jack").

But perhaps the most disturbing thing about the film is its reception abroad. Prior to its American release, it received standing ovations at both the Moscow and Berlin Film Festivals. Perhaps it's time we asked ourselves if this is the image American filmmakers wish to create with foreign audiences.

When I saw the film at a private screening in Dallas, it was rumored beforehand that Kramer might be present after the showing to discuss his work. He didn't show. Unfortunately his film did.

Opportunity Given To Enter 'Silver Opinion Competition'

During the months of February and March, Reed & Barton are conducting a "Silver Opinion Competition" in which scholarships totaling $2,500 are being offered to duly enrolled women students at a few selected colleges and universities.

Longwood has been selected to enter this competition in which the first grand award is a $1,000 scholarship; second grand award is a $500 scholarship; third grand award is a $300 scholarship; and seven grand awards of $100 each scholarship. In addition there will be 100 other awards consisting of sterling silver, fine china and crystal with a retail value of approximately $85.00.

In the 1972 "Silver Opinion Competition," an entry form illustrates twelve designs of sterling with eight designs of both china and crystal. The entrants simply list the three best combinations of sterling, china and crystal from the patterns illustrated. Scholarships and awards will be made to those entries matching or coming closest to the unanimous selections of table-setting editors from three of the nation's leading magazines.

Miss Lynda Collier is the student representative who is conducting the "Silver Opinion Competition" for Reed & Barton at Longwood. Those interested in entering the "Silver Opinion Competition" should contact Miss Collier at 318 Cox for entry blanks and for complete details concerning the competition rules. She also has samples of 12 of the most popular Reed & Barton designs so that entrants can see how these sterling patterns actually look.

Through the opinions on silver design, expressed by college women competing for these scholarships, Reed & Barton hopes to compile a valuable library of expressions of young American taste.

An Atmosphere Of Music To Be Provided For Students' Use

By VICKI BOWLING

"Music Without Distraction," an evening of music for the enjoyment of the student body, is coming to Longwood.

Members of Sigma Alpha Iota, honorary music fraternity, will play records every Wednesday night in the recital hall in Wygal. The program will begin February 16.

All types of music will be played. Girls may come and go as they please. They may read, study, write letters, or do anything else they wish while listening.

"All we ask is that they make no disturbance, and that they follow the regular rules of Wygal," says Dr. John Molnar, chairman of the music department. This includes signing in and out of the building.

Dr. Molnar explained that this will afford the students the opportunity of studying or relaxing in a pleasant, informal atmosphere.

He got the idea from a similar program at St. Paul's Cathedral in London. It is very popular there, as well as in other parts of Europe. Dr. Molnar reported that people go in and out all day.

"I don't know what the response will be," Dr. Molnar said. "We won't know until we try it." He is very enthusiastic about the program.

Members of Sigma Alpha Iota were receptive to the idea of "Music Without Distraction."

Cheryl Brown, president of SAI, said, "We're willing to give it a try. The girls are willing to give one night a week. We'll wait and see how it goes."

Student Union Plans Told

By JANE CRAWFORD
"There's nothing to do" is the old complaint on the Longwood campus.

Student Union, in seeking to combat boredom, juvenile delinquency, and study cirrhosis, has coordinated a widely varied rehabilitation program.

Dragon Chandler, president of Student Union, reports that the program opened Tuesday, February 8, with a "Total Look of Today" fashion show at 8 p.m. in the ABC rooms. Free, the show sponsored by Miller and Rhoads of Richmond, Longwood girls, including Susan Smith, Debbie Hyatt, and Janet Howard, modeled the latest in fashion and hair styles.

Another program planned will be the multicourse Experimental College. Revitalized from last year, the course curriculum includes yoga, bridge, macramé, personal finance, basic auto repair, modern dance, and current problems faced by the Longwood student. Brochures with further information will be available in the dining hall.

Any student interested in membership in Student Union should attend the 6:45 meeting held on Wednesday nights.

How do you tell a 6-year-old you don't know where his daddy is?

A YOUNG boy whose father is missing can't understand when he hears people saying things like... "the prisoner-of-war question is a political issue"

"this is not a war so how can there be prisoners of war?"

All he knows is that his father is "missing in action" and that nobody can tell him where his father is and how his father is

This message to Hanoi — this message to the people of the world — is in behalf of the children, the wives, the fathers and mothers of Americans being held in secret captivity in North Vietnam, South Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia.

Of course, we all want the war to end and the prisoners to be released as soon as possible.

But meanwhile there is no need for Hanoi and its allies to delay even a day in answering this plea:

Let official neutral observers into the prison camps to see who the prisoners are, how they are, where they are and whether or not they are being humanely treated according to the standards of civilized nations.

It is so human for little boys to ask.

It would be so humane for Hanoi to answer.

Drugs - How Much, Who And Why?

PHOTOGRAPH

NEW YORK LAW JOURNAL,

DECEMBER 6, 1971

By LYNDA VAN HORN

Are drug college campuses on the rise? Have recent efforts to control the amount of illegal drugs coming into the United States been successful? And, what is being done to prevent more people from using and abusing dangerous drugs?

Drug abuse has become a subject of national concern. Our courts are crowded with cases relating to the use, possession, selling, or consequences of drug taking. It instills fear in those concerned about their personal safety and safety of home or family.

Survey Results

According to several recent surveys, drug use and/or abuse is also becoming a serious problem on college campuses.

In the Gallup Poll of college students last year (the new figures have not yet been released) 42 per cent said that they had experimented with marijuana. This is almost double the figure for 1969 which was 22 per cent and eight times the figure for 1967 which was five per cent.

More than one fourth of the number responding or 28 per cent said they had used the drug within the 30 days preceding the interviews, and approximately 17 per cent or one student out of six said they had used marijuana an average of four times a week during this same 30 day period.

Besides the Gallup Poll, other polls and independent questioning is being done to determine the spread of marijuana usage on American college campuses. William H. McGlothlin a researcher of the University of California at Los Angeles estimated that as many as 62 per cent of West Coast college students have used marijuana but says the percentage for the East Coast is lower.

Another survey of college students conducted by the National Commission on Marijuana and other Drug Abuse reports that 39 per cent of the college students interviewed had at some time used marijuana.

A similar poll conducted by PLAYBOY MAGAZINE indicated that 60 per cent of the college students participating in the poll have used marijuana.

Which of these estimations is closest to being correct? No one can really say. Such things as fear of being 'found out', locality, and type and age of students interviewed always effect the reliability of such estimations.

Poll On Campus

At Longwood a similar poll was conducted through the office of Dean Mary A. Heintz. The results of this survey which included members of all four classes show that 17 per cent of those responding have at some time in their lives used illegal drugs. In most cases the only exposure to such drugs was with marijuana.

This figure compares exactly with the figure received last year (17 per cent) from a poll taken on campus through Health Education 341.

What kind of person experiments with drugs? It is not always the student from a low income bracket or slum dweller. Nor is it only the "hippie type" or revolutionist.

According to a booklet distributed by the National Clearinghouse for Drug Abuse Information, the location and type of those using drugs varies according to the drug in question.

Marijuana was former used primarily in disadvantaged areas, in certain Mexican-American communities, and in some musician groups. Today marijuana users and smokers are found throughout America especially in middle and upper class young people.

The "Why" Of Drugs

The rise in the use of drugs is attributed to several sources. The National Clearinghouse booklet notes several reasons often given for "turning on" with drugs. The easy access to various types of drugs, the large number of people disillusioned or dissatisfied with the present social system, and the tendency of people with psychological problems to seek shelter through drugs are just a few of these.

Donald Louria author of three books on drugs and acclaimed drug expert said in a lecture last year at the University of Iowa that it is not the war in Southeast Asia or a dissatisfaction in American society that caused young people to turn to drugs, but boredom.

"If there is one single motivational reason that has propelled young people to drug use over the last few years," he said, "It is boredom."

Others insist that since young people since early childhood have seen their parents and other adults use drugs to suppress coughs, to calm tension, and to induce sleep, it is not extraordinary to expect that these same young people will experiment with drugs on their own whether legal or illegal.

Still, the facts remain elusive as to why so many college students and other young people are using drugs as a natural part of their lives. What then would be done to avoid turning college campuses into total drug cultures?

On Grass Legalization

Lester Grinspoon in his article "Marijuana: An Argument in Support of Legalization" suggests that if marijuana were legalized it would take it out of the streets and smokers would not be as easily exposed to other more dangerous drugs.

He goes on to say that there has been no proof that marijuana is addicting or that it in itself leads to stronger drugs. It is not harmful unless abused and today's laws are "irrational".

Drs. Henry Wechsler and Denise Thum take the opposing view. They conclude that there is "evidence to suggest marijuana often leads to stronger drugs." In a study of two Massachusetts towns, results show that progress from marijuana to hard narcotics in the rule rather than the exception.

Dr. Vincent P. Dole, senior physician at Rockefeller University and co-founder of the methadone maintenance treatment, says that the drug problem could be cured in five years. It has not been done, he goes on to say, because of the "absence of social leadership, fears, and prejudices bar reforms to reach the causes of addiction."

Suggestions

The National Clearinghouse suggest that (1) factual information should be stressed rather than attempts to frighten people, (2) efforts to detect manufacturers and large scale traffickers of illicit drugs should increase, and (3) further research in prevention, education, and treatment techniques should be carried out.

Most experts agree that more research and more public education on drug use and abuse will help to curb the ever growing dependency on all kinds of drugs. Many feel that threats and scare techniques will not work on today's youth but will tend to make them more resentful and more apt to turn to drugs.

No longer can anyone ignore that the drug problem exists and is very real. Individual choice and responsibility will determine whether or not the current drug problems will continue to grow.

ings. The dining hall committee of Residence Board has distinguished itself to us as being the most disorganized group on campus. At the every semester ritual of signing up for tables, six of us, five juniors and a sophomore transfer, signed up for a table which the dining hall committee saw fit to move from main floor up to the balcony with the seniors. We were informed of this when we looked for our nonexistent table on main floor.

Leaving and returning student teachers make it understandably necessary for the balcony tables to be reassigned every eight weeks, so we had to hassle with signing up again. Since non-seniors were to sign up at 8:00 p.m., we were in the Rotunda at 7:45 p.m. hoping to sign up early — after all, the reason for our having to sign up again was not our mistake in the first place. The members of the dining hall committee pleasantly surprised us with the news that we'd be split up because most underclassmen had already signed up. When we asked them why everybody else signed up early, they explained that they had announced an earlier sign up time in the dorms. Our dorm, Frazier, was an exception—it wasn't announced there. (This is perfectly understandable since Frazier is one of the smallest dorms on campus). So the six of us were split up in three's. At the next meal we discovered that our table, number 59, was the one which is used by the almighty committee to seat the guest faculty member and those who sign up to sit with him every day at lunch. Last night we were informed that we were only to sit at our table during birthday dinners — table 59 is to be used for guests and girls with dates. So our table is closed every meal except birthday dinners. (We really appreciate this once-a-month privilege). Can't you people get a little more organized?

Movie Behavior

Dear Editor:

It has been said before, but I must say it again. There is no excuse for the way that "Longwood ladies" act at movies. One would think he was in a theater with two hundred mentally deranged, giggling thirteen year olds. It is impossible to enjoy any movie shown on this campus. "They" do not allow it. Aside from talking while a select few are straining their ears trying to hear the words, they giggle whenever the slightest thing intimate or even serious happens. If these girls cannot stand anything more complicated than cartoons, why don't they save their 25¢ and watch television on Saturday mornings? I am sure that is all the challenge they need!

Honors

Dear Editor:

Thank you very much for the excellent and lengthy article on the Honors Program in the current issue of THE ROTUNDA. There is, however, one error to which I would like to call your attention: the new regulations replace and supercede the current catalogue statement on pages 51 and 52 (cf. first sentence of your final paragraph). The new regulations are currently posted on the bulletin board outside the Dean of Students' office and in the smoker. Every faculty member should have a copy of these regulations which will also be included in the next catalogue.

Again, thank you for the prompt coverage.

Sincerely yours,
Carolyn M. Craft

Committee

Newman Club

Dear Editor:

On behalf of Flotilla 37, the Farmville unit of the United States Coast Guard Auxiliary, I would like to take this opportunity to extend our thanks to those members of the Longwood Newman Club who so generously gave of their time to assist our organization in its preparations for the local Christmas parades; it would not have been possible to win first place in Farmville and third place in Crewe without their aid. We are also most grateful to the Newman Folk Group which provided spirited entertainment at our Change of Watch Dinner on January 14.

It is heartening to find that the Newman Club, devoted to the service of church and neighbor, is willing to assist our group which is also, through its efforts to promote water safety, devoted to the service of our fellow man.

Very truly yours,

Legislative Board Considers Registration And Statement

By BECKY NICHOLSON

The date for registration and the approval of the Publications Board Policy Statement highlighted discussion at the Legislative Board meeting January 31.

The Publications Board considered its old policy statement vague and noted that it failed to include it in provisions allowing for a greater representation of students at board meetings.

Cookie Howell, Chairman of the Publications Board, and Tim Brown worked on several policy drafts which they submitted to the Publications Board for debate before bringing it to the legislative board for approval. This new policy statement establishes rules or guidelines which give editors and other officials of the board a clearer idea of the job expected of them.

The former duties of the Publications Board included serving as publisher of the ROTUNDA, GYRE, VIRGINIAN, and other student publications. The board also elected editors-in-chief and business managers of the publications, reviewed criticisms and promoted interest of the various publications on campus. The new duties of the board include serving as an advisor to the Student Activity Fees Committee concerning fees allocated to the publications, and advising the Judicial Board in cases of obscenity and plagiarism in the publications.

The members of Publications Board are the editors-in-chief and the business managers of the publications, the faculty advisor for the ROTUNDA, VIRGINIAN, and the literary and art advisors of the GYRE. The policy revision calls for the addition of four student members selected at large and appointed by Legislative Board and the Treasurer of Legislative Board, and the Publications Board Chairman. The policy statement originally stated that corresponding secretary of Legislative Board would be a member of Publications Board. Monday night Legislative Board approved the statement on the condition that corresponding secretary be replaced by treasurer of Legislative Board as a member of the Board.

The officers of Publications Board include the chairman and the secretary-treasurer. The new stipulation is that secretary-treasurer will be appointed by the chairman from the at-large membership of Publications Board (nonmember of publications). The Board is to meet bi-monthly at a time and place agreeable to the members.

In Article III of the by-laws of the statement, the duties of the editors-in-chief and the business manager of the ROTUNDA, GYRE, and VIRGINIAN are listed. The editor-in-chief has such duties as setting up programs of apprenticeship to keep staff members informed about publication processes, and naming staff members. These duties or guidelines are established only to benefit the officials by allowing them to know what is expected of them, and not as a format for censorship, the Board said.

Longwood's Publications Policy has been evaluated and revised in order to bring more organization and student representation to the board. The effort has been made to clearly define the duties of the organization in order to design a better Publications Board in which to serve the students.

Colleges In The News

Student-Owned Store

BLACKSBURG — After much protest by students over the high prices that the College and town bookstores were offering, Tech students have started their own Campus supported store. The Virginia Tech Student Cooperative Association officially opened what has become known as the Co-op store on January 18. Robert Hobbs, general store manager and member of the Board of Directors for the Co-op, explained that the students established their economic impact last spring through the Program of Alternate Choice. Over 2,900 shares of stock have been sold on a charter membership basis and only students at Virginia Tech can become shareholders. Stock certificates, in the form of credit cards, will be received by all shareholders in about four weeks. These cards along with the student's I.D. enable them to purchase books and other articles at low discount prices because the store makes only a slight profit on their merchandise.

New President

RADFORD — Dr. Donald N. DeCimon, 40, will take over as the fourth president of Radford College "as soon as he can" without inconveniencing Marshall University, where he is vice president for academic affairs. The Radford board announced last August that Dr. Charles K. Martin, 61, president of Radford the last twenty years, would become chancellor in July, 1972, but it had not been expected his successor would be named so quickly. Dr. DeCimon, one of thirty-six persons interviewed by Radford's presidential search committee since last August, said he hopes he can take over before the end of the academic year.

College Voters

HARRISONBURG — The city where officials have been said to fear a heavy vote by students that could cost local officeholders in the coming municipal elections has been identified as Harrisonburg. Harrisonburg Mayor Roy Erickson admitted Harrisonburg faces such a problem. He said a heavy registration of newly enfranchised voters at Madison College and a large voter turnout in May could significantly affect local elections. "We've been worried ever since the Berkeley incident" when several student radicals were elected to City Council, Erickson said he feared the effect of the student vote during referendums that might involve large sums of money for bond projects. It was suggested that changing the date for municipal elections from May to June might eliminate the problem, since most college students then would be off campus and thus have diminished influence in elections in college towns and cities.

Traditionless College

MINNEAPOLIS — Fifty persons, all with some previous college experience, have enrolled at Minnesota Metropolitan State College, which opens today with no courses, grades, campus or athletic teams. The new four-year college was established at the 1971 session of the legislature as a nontraditional school primarily for junior college and vocational-technical school graduates, as well as adults who wish to begin or continue their educations.

"Orchesis" has changed its name to better define its functions as a group.

'A Quality Group' Describes Longwood Dance Company

By VALERIE BLANKS

"The Longwood College Company of Dancers," formerly called "Orchesis," has changed its name to better define its image. The dance group, with its new director, Miss Sandra Gustafson, intends to become more active this year.

"The word Orchesis itself is a typical name for dance groups, reminiscent of the 1940's," said

Miss Gustafson. "We wanted a new name that would convey what we aspired to be—a quality group. Another purpose of our new name fulfills is to identify the group as part of Longwood College."

The dance group has presented only one concert prior to this year, but now the Dance Company has planned two concerts. They have already presented their Christmas Concert and are making plans for their Spring Concert.

Miss Gustafson, who in the past has taught in Baltimore and at Randolph-Macon, noted two reasons for these changes. "We hope to build our reputation, and to do quality productions."

The Spring Concert, which will take place on April 20, will consist of four dances. Three of the dances, to be choreographed by students, will consist of a contemporary modern dance and a ballet. The dance that Miss Gustafson will choreograph will be a dance drama. It will involve acting and dialogue as well as dancing.

The newly-elected officers of the Dance Company are: Jo Smith, president; Dea Dea Alexander, secretary-treasurer; Mary Lou Hlasheen, publicity chairman, and Jeffree Hudson, wardrobe mistress.

Basketball Scores Show

Varsity Working As A Team

By VALERIE BLANKS

The Longwood Varsity basketball team has a record of three wins and no losses after defeating Westhampton Thursday night, 55-44, and Eastern Mennonite Saturday, 48-30.

Their first game was played against Lynchburg College on January 11. Lynchburg had a 3-0 record coming into the game but this did not phase Longwood, who defeated them 55-47. High scorers for this game were Dottie Bohannon with 19 points and Nanette Fisher with 16 points.

Even after a three week lay-off, Longwood was able to break the jinx which had prevented them from beating Westhampton for the last three years, and who, incidentally, was the only team they didn't beat last year. The score was close all through the game and Westhampton acquired the lead in the fourth quarter, but Longwood was able to pull ahead and win by eleven points. "The team is beginning to put the pieces together," Coach Jean Smith said.

Nanette Fisher was high scorer for the game with 16 points and 30 rebounds. "Bee Johnson, who has not seen much game action, also played a very good game for Longwood," said Miss Smith. Though she scored only four points, she played an excellent floor game.

The game against Eastern Mennonite was the first home game for Longwood. Miss Smith described it as "a very good game in which every member of the team contributed to the victory. Even though there was a low shooting score," she said, "it was a good defensive game, and what's most important is that they looked and played like a team."

Dottie Bohannon led scoring with 13 points, and Nanette Fisher brought down 13 rebounds. Miss Smith also noted that Lucy Sale and Janet Ford played especially good games.

Special note should be made of the team's next game, with Bridgewater, which will be played here at 2 p.m., Saturday. Bridgewater is undefeated and is reported to have one of the best teams in Virginia.

The Bloodmobile will be on campus February 14 from 12 to 6 p.m. in the ABC room of Lankford. Geist is sponsoring the visit again this year and has offered to give $1.00 for every pint of blood that is donated. The money will go toward The Elizabeth Burger Jackson Scholarship that will be presented in May by Geist to an outstanding Sophomore or Junior who has rendered dynamic service to the College.

The sororities on campus are also competing in the Bloodmobile. Each sorority has agreed to donate $3.00 towards a prize that will be given to the sorority with the largest number of donors. A sorority member is ineligible to give if she weighs under 110 lbs. or is anemic.

Last year Longwood broke state records with over 300 pints of blood being donated in less than five hours. A larger unit will be brought this year to compensate for the large number of students that had to wait or were turned away and Geist encourages and hopes each eligible student will participate.

to hold registration. One Saturday that has appeared in discussions is the first Saturday after the Thanksgiving holidays. However, this date is only tentative. Legislative board feels that because they are representatives of the student body, they can not choose a Saturday since that would implicate the endorsement of Saturday preregistration which the student body objects to. No definite date has been set for preregistration.

Dean Blackwell Announces Appointments And Promotions

By LINDA STONE

Dean Herbert Blackwell's office has released three new faculty appointments for the 1972-1973 school year. Two appointments were made in the Department of English where Miss Elinor Douglass will be retiring at the end of the year and Mr. Allen Wier will be resigning so that he can devote more time to writing and to finishing a collection of short stories while simultaneously working on his Master of Fine Arts degree.

One of the new appointees is Mr. Jerry Brown who holds a B.A. degree in journalism from Auburn University, plus one of the rare Masters Degrees issued to males from Hollins College. He expects to receive his Ph.D. degree in June from Vanderbilt University.

Mr. Brown has also had two previous years of experience in college teaching in addition to teaching on a part time basis while at Vanderbilt.

The other appointee is Mr. Otis Douglas who holds a B.A. degree from the University of Richmond, a M.A. degree from Auburn University, and a Master of Fine Arts degree from the University of Iowa. Mr. Douglas has previously taught at Old Dominion University, University of Iowa, and Auburn University. At Longwood he will specialize in creative writing.

The third new appointment is in the Music Department and will fill Mr. Paul Hesselink's position while he is on leave of absence to complete his Doctorate De-

Waitresses At LC Dining Hall Express

Desire For Pay Raise Through A Petition

By JANET LYNN TENNYSON

Some waitresses at the Longwood College Dining Hall have expressed a desire for a pay raise. Sue Davis, who is a senior and has worked in the dining hall as a waitress for four years, posted a petition on the dining hall bulletin board for the waitresses to sign if they are in favor of the pay increase. The wording of the petition states that "due to the nature of the work (harassment, criticism, manual labor) the waitresses should receive higher wages than other workers."

Mrs. Jo Trout, supervisor of the waitresses, said she would allow the petition to be placed on the bulletin board for the signatures. Mrs. Trout also said there is a time study in the planning to determine if the time allotted to the waitresses for meals is adequate. Currently the waitresses are timed at one hour for breakfast and lunch, and one hour and fifteen minutes for the dinner and all buffet meals. Mrs. Trout stated that she was flexible about wages, especially when something that was not the waitress' fault comes up to prevent the waitress from doing her job efficiently.

According to Mr. Gary C. Groneweg, director of financial aid, he has not been officially approached by any organized group of waitresses. Last semester, he did have several girls ask about pay raises and he brought the suggestion to an administrative staff meeting at that time. The staff voted not to increase wages because it might result in a different pay scale for all workers, Mr. Groneweg said. He noted the job of waitressing is physically harder than a clerical job, but "the library and office assistants usually have more responsibility and actual mental work."

There are 120 waitresses employed by the college. If waitresses were given a ten cent an hour increase for twelve hours work each week, the increase would be $18,000 a year, Mr. Groneweg stated. So rather than raise tuitions, the money would have to be taken from other students who need financial aid. This would be depriving some students to help others, Mr. Groneweg said.

All work scholarship positions are considered by the college as a mutual benefit to both the college and the students. The position allows a student a means of earning her college expenses and at the same time perform a necessary function for the school. Mr. Groneweg expressed sympathy for the waitresses and said he would consider suggestions for change, and bring these to the

Your girlfriends can get you pregnant faster than your husband.

Sometimes it looks like there's a conspiracy to get you to have children.

You're married and it's great being alone with your husband, discovering each other and feeling free to do whatever you want.

But already your girlfriends are telling you how wonderful children are and how selfish it is to wait and anything else they can think of to make you feel guilty.

Actually the girls are only part of it.

Let us not forget the future grandparents, bless their impatient hearts.

There's an awful lot of pressure on you. It becomes hard to resist.

But if you want to, you have to know the facts of birth planning. (Lots of people who think they know, don't. Research statistics show that more than half the pregnancies each year are accidental.)

As for the pressure from relatives and friends, just remember that if you're going to have a baby it should be because you really want one.

Not because you were talked into it.

March Of Dimes Nurseries Aid Critically Ill Children

EDITOR'S NOTE:

The March of Dimes concentrates most of its funds in projects to aid children. This is the second in a series explaining some of those programs.

by Abner H. Levkoff, M.D.
Professor of Pediatrics and Director of Newborn Services, Medical University of South Carolina

If communities could provide the critically ill newborn with the life-saving support of more intensive care nurseries, our shocking infant mortality rates would be cut in half.

Without the educated scrutiny of specially trained staff, backed by modern monitoring equipment, the baby whose life is threatened has a much poorer chance of survival. If he does survive, he also faces greater risk of physical or mental damage from undetected complications. Immediate intensive care is crucial because the risk of dying during the first 24 hours of life is 10,000 times greater than during any other day of life.

An intensive care nursery operates on the same principle as an intensive care unit for adults. Around-the-clock care is the rule. Most of our patients are prematures and low birth weight babies born at full term but who weigh less than five and one-half pounds (2500 grams).

The Isolette becomes the baby's total environment. It maintains a constant skin temperature of 96 degrees and signals any change in normal levels. Portable Isolettes from the March of Dimes can be used when a newborn has to be rushed in from another part of the state. These transport incubators provide life-saving warmth and oxygen. They are battery operated but also can be plugged into a car's cigarette lighter as another power source.

Life-Saving Watch

Changes in these frail, tiny infants come almost imperceptibly. To detect them instantly and accurately, the staff must be trained in biochemical monitoring. This is particularly true of nurses. They are with the babies constantly and often develop acute sensitivity to danger signals, no matter how faint.

During the three years our nursery has been in operation, we have trained registered nurses and licensed practical nurses to know, through observation and diagnosis, when something goes wrong in a small baby. And, in the small baby, it is that high index of suspicion that makes the difference — not only between life and death, but between a healthy baby and a damaged baby.

Observation is the watch word. It means observing with your eyes, with monitoring machines and, at our hospital, with the March of Dimes microchemistry laboratory. Many newborns have been saved by swift diagnosis at this laboratory.

One of the reasons that we distinguish between a premature low birth weight baby and a low birth weight infant born at term is that they are susceptible to different diseases.

Preventing Birth Defects

A full term low birth weight baby is not as apt to have hyaline membrane disease as the premature. But he is more likely to develop hypoglycemia-low blood sugar levels. This can have disastrous effects upon the brain. The qualified nurse knows that she must test the baby's blood sugar routinely to catch any drop in the level at the earliest moment. When tests show anything out of the ordinary, she notifies a doctor. If extra glucose is needed, he will give the order.

Instead of just looking to see if a baby is jaundiced, we encourage nurses to take a drop of blood from the baby's foot and measure its bilirubin. This is certainly more accurate than guessing with the eye. The same is true when she thinks a baby is suffering from lack of oxygen. Why guess? Take blood samples and measure the blood gases. A doctor is called at once when special treatment is necessary.

Biochemical monitoring means detecting abnormal chemical levels in the blood that can cause brain damage or some other permanent defect. It is essential to know about bilirubin levels because severe problems may occur if this chemical builds up excessively in the brain. Blood oxygen levels also must be watched. Too much oxygen can harm the retina of the eyes and the lining of the lungs. Too low a level can jeopardize brain development. We also measure the acidity of the baby's blood because it gives an instant playback on whether the heart and lungs are working normally.

Hospital Training Program

Our intensive care nursery is the only such unit in South Carolina. Since we cannot care for every baby in the state who is at high risk, we ask community hospitals to send nurses here for training in the routine care of small babies who are not in distress. These nurses come in for a week or more and we show them basic optimal care that they can manage in their own hospitals. If an understaffed hospital cannot release a nurse, our staff will try to visit there and explain what can be done for these babies with the facilities available.

What matters most about an intensive care nursery is that it not only saves a baby, it can send the child home able to build a strong, healthy life.

LONGWOOD COLLEGE, FARMVILLE, VIRGINIA WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 1972

NO. 14

Q — How many students are there on campus now? There seem to be more than before the student teachers left, D.E.L.

A — Col. Gilchrist, the Registrar, says that he does not have the final totals for this semester yet, but that there are approximately the same number of students as in September, give or take 25 students. The September total was 2,373, which included 81 graduate and 29 special students. Col. Gilchrist will notify the Catalyst when he has the final totals.

Q — How many hours does it take to graduate? A.P.

A — Col. Gilchrist says many students are confused on this point and find out their last semester that they do not have sufficient hours to graduate. The required number is 126 hours. Col. Gilchrist reminds students that they are responsible for keeping track of their hours and if they have any questions, they may consult the catalog or his office.

Q — What are the rooms on the second floor of the library, called carrells, used for and why can't they be used for study rooms? The study rooms downstairs are not heated, D.E.L.

A — The rooms on second floor were originally to be used by faculty members working on their dissertations and have been expanded to include use by graduate students. Mr. Butler said he wasn't aware that the heat in the study rooms was not working and that he would check into having it repaired immediately.

Merger Planning Shifted

RICHMOND — April 10 is the date set for the appeals hearing agreed upon by 4th U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals. However, planning by the State Board of Education must continue to avoid unnecessary delay.

Chief Judge Clement Haynesworth overturned the merger timetable laid down by District Court Judge Robert R. Merhige. Under Merhige's plan the state and county defendants who opposed the merger were to appoint an acting metro school superintendent and school board. However, under the Circuit Court's order, the merger planning lies with the state board. The state board may form a provisional school board and bring in other administrators and assistants, if they feel the need. Both parties involved feel the

Glasheen Only Student At Legislature

By LYNDA VAN HORN
From Student Government President to the General Assembly? Well, maybe. In any case Mary Lou Glasheen got a good start by appearing before the House of Delegates on February 8.

Mary Lou originally went to Richmond to appear with President Henry Willett and others before the House Appropriations Committee asking for appropriations for next year.

"It was Dr. Willett's idea," she said, "to show the committee that the students are concerned about their college, too."

Longwood was one of six colleges presenting their requests for additional funds for the next year. Of those represented, Madison, William and Mary, Radford, Norfolk State, Virginia Union, and Longwood, only Longwood had a student representative, and Mary Lou feels it may be a first.

Not only did the committee get a chance to feel the student concern, but the student got a chance to view first hand the problem of getting money.

"The committee members are really sharp," says Mary Lou.

MARY LOU GLASHEEN

"They want to know where every penny goes."

One of the committee members was Delegate Richard Bagley, of Hampton, Mary Lou's hometown. After the committee meeting Mr. Bagley extended a personal invitation to Mary Lou to sit in on a session of the House of Delegates.

This was the highlight of the day for Longwood's Student Government President. Of the entire Longwood delegation only she could enter with the House Delegates since a personal invitation was necessary for admittance.

Mary Lou was first introduced to the rest of the Hampton delegation and then Delegate Bagley rose to ask that she be recognized by the entire House.

How did she feel? "I just sat there and blushed the whole time," admits Mary Lou.

During the business of the meeting several of the Delegates came to speak with her. Mr.

Walther Fidler from Warsaw was one of those, and as he shook her hand he gave her a card. On the back of the card was written his best wishes on acquiring appropriations. It seems he has a daughter who is a sophomore at Longwood.

What were her overall opinions about the eventful day? "I have never been treated like such a lady," says Mary Lou. "Everyone was so nice, and so willing, and really happy that a student was showing concern for her school."

Miss Nuckols Named Assistant Dean Of Students

by VICKI BOWLING

Miss Margaret Nuckols, newly named assistant dean of students, likes working at Longwood for the same reasons she enjoyed being a Longwood student.

"There is an open receptiveness here," Dean Nuckols explained. "Communication is always open and free."

"I go to a number of professional meetings," she continued, "and I have yet to run into an administrative setup as favorable as ours."

Right now she is mainly interested in getting experience working with both the administration and students, but, she said, "I have never felt that my youth or inexperience was held against me."

She admitted that she was a-fraid at first of being known as the "Baby Dean." This hasn't happened, she said.

What was the biggest adjustment she had to make? Having a secretary! She had never had one before, and it took awhile for her to get used to having Miss Ownby do her typing and other such duties for her.

Representatives from Longwood first approached her last year about being the acting dean for one year, replacing Dean Holt. When Dean Holt decided not to return, Miss Nuckols was promoted to assistant dean.

Dean Nuckols plans to return to school eventually to work on a doctorate in student personnel.

Her graduating from Longwood in 1970 really doesn't make her any different from the other deans, she thinks. She rapidly adjusted to "being on the other side of the desk."

The students are very conscious of the fact that she's not a student, she finds, particularly the ones who were fellow students.

"They're not sure how to address me," she explained. "They wonder if I've changed, if I'm the same person they knew. It's very interesting to see their responses!"

"You don't look like a dean," is a frequent comment by students. To this she comes back with, "What does a dean look like?"

Students aren't the only ones who have trouble recognizing her as a dean. She related an incident which happened not long ago. While in the bookstore looking at the book for the psychology class she teaches, she asked Mr. Harper a question. He asked her who her professor was!

Saturday Registration Confirmed; Reason Given For Grade Delay

By LYNDA VAN HORN

Saturday registration for classes will become a reality for next year. This decision was reached February 10 by the administrative staff of the college. Dr. Herbert Blackwell, Dean of the College, said he felt the decision was "best for the academic program."

The first Saturday registration will take place next fall on the first Saturday after the Thanksgiving vacation. This is a time when most students are on campus anyway, Dr. Blackwell feels.

"There was of course no unanimity on the part of the faculty," says Dr. Blackwell, though he feels the majority was for it.

Dr. Blackwell also spoke of the delay in receiving grades for the last semester. A breakdown in machines which, according to Dr. Blackwell, are already "slow-moving" and "unsophisticated" was the cause of the delay.

Longwood does not have access to a computer system and "the cost of such a high speed computer system would be tremendous." The problem should be resolved though, says Dr. Blackwell, if the major change in the academic calendar causing exams to fall before Christmas vacation does take place.

Until that change is made though, Dr. Blackwell urges faculty members to post grades, though this policy is optional with the individual faculty member. Students may also provide self-addressed, stamped envelopes to professors if early receipt of grades is desired.

HAMPDEN-SYDNEY BUREAU

THE ROTUNDA will add a new feature this week in the addition of a Hampden-Sydney News Bureau. The purpose of the bureau will be to report on items of interest to Longwood students which are occurring on the H-S campus.

The members of the bureau are John Guthrie and Robert Sells. John is a Senior English major from Round Hill, Virginia. Lawrenceville, Georgia, is Robert's home, who is also a Senior majoring in English.

The bureau will begin this week with a feature story by John on state appropriations to private colleges and a story by Robert on the faculty production planned at H-S.

The Easy Way Out

A common complaint voiced by "student leaders" is that not enough students volunteer to help with projects or to work on committees. They always include apathy and disinterest as the reasons, which I'm sure they are to some extent, but where do these causes come from? To a great extent they're caused by the leaders themselves, of which the first letter to the editor is a prime example.

Organizations on this campus remind me greatly of the industrial scandals in this country in the late 1800's. At this time, it was common for several big companies to have exactly the same men on their supervisory boards, with a different man as chairman of each. This led to vast monopolies of power being established. If you look at the list of Longwood organizations and committees, you see the same names over and over again. One girl will be chairman of one group and a member of another.

Perhaps this can be justified by saying these girls are willing to work and will do a good job. This can't be denied but neither can the fact that they are friends of the people making the appointments be put aside. Why should students volunteer when they know that someone's friend is going to get the position or even worse, if they are appointed, there is a good chance that the committee or group will not function? How can the efficiency of the job they will do be judged if they are never given a chance to show their capabilities? After a system like this exists for long enough, it is a wonder that any interest in organizations exists at all.

We should all be aware by the time we reach college that one person can only do so much work and do it well. The more jobs one person has to do, the less efficient she becomes. The time should be past when students get honors or positions because they are someone's friend. It's time for the "leaders" to get out and actively cultivate student interests on a personal level. Of course, it isn't easy, but then I've never read a definition of leadership that included the word "easy" either.

Vital Support Needed

(EDITOR'S NOTE: This editorial comes from the December 3, 1971 issue of THE TIGER AT Hampden-Sydney. If you replace THE TIGER and H-SC with THE ROTUNDA and Longwood in the appropriate places, the message remains the same and just as important. There is nothing I can add to Bill's statements to make them any more potent.)

By BILL WATSON

The motto of THE TIGER used to be "The Student Voice of Hampden-Sydney College." Although the motto changed, the spirit did not, hopefully. THE TIGER has been and always should be a student organization. This gives students a stimulating freedom, but it also gives them a responsibility to turn out the best possible newspaper.

This year has, regrettably, seen some issues of THE TIGER that were less than exemplary. Part of this is my fault, but a significant part is the fault of the student body. The apathy that we hear about so often on the campus has seriously affected THE TIGER this year; finding people to work on the newspaper has been at times impossible. At best the number of workers has usually been no more than adequate. The newspaper has therefore necessarily sometimes been deficient in quality.

A solution to the problem is obvious and would seem easily attainable. Everyone in this college can write in sentences, and many are talented writers in the literary sense. With these facts as a basis, it is correct to say that anyone here could be easily trained to be a good newspaper writer. Training for the numerous nonwriting jobs on THE TIGER would similarly be short and would produce a horde of students who could help the paper. With the reservoir of student talent at H-SC and the relatively simple know-how required, there is no excuse for us not to have a consistently top-grade student newspaper.

Theory is useless, however, if the possibilities are not realized. If THE TIGER continues to get the insufficient support that has been characteristic so far this year, there is no way that the staff can make a quality newspaper a reality. The handful of nonstaff students that have taken an interest in the paper have done wonders, but many more are needed. THE TIGER provides opportunity for expression by everyone on the campus, and in turn it needs a majority of students to take this opportunity for expression by everyone on the campus, and in turn it needs a majority of students to take this opportunity to make it an exceptional paper.

It is essential, therefore, that a change take place in general student attitude toward the paper. Everyone should take a vital interest in making THE TIGER a better paper. It's your paper and you have the power to make it whatever you want it to be. With student support, THE TIGER could easily be an excellent college newspaper; with the lack of support that has prevailed so far, it can only degenerate into a meaningless jumble that will be of no use or pride to the students.

Letters to the Editor

Why Volunteer?

Dear Editor,

A few weeks ago Legislative Board announced that students interested in working on its committees should sign up on a list in the smoker. At this time, I signed up to serve on a committee and expected to be notified about it shortly. Last week I saw a listing of the newly appointed committees and noticed that my name was on none of the lists. When I asked about this at the head table, I was told that the committees had been appointed and that my name must have been overlooked. Although the answers were rather vague, it now seems that I will not be working on any committee.

Why did Legislative Board ask people to volunteer for committees if they are not going to let them participate? Also I served on a committee last semester which never had one meeting. Why are students placed on committees which do not function? These seem to be very important questions to me.

Broken Toilet

Dear Editor,

On Wednesday, Feb. 9, my table was closed for dinner so I sought a place elsewhere. The company was friendly and quite humorous. It became even funnier when one girl told us that her toilet had been broken since November. (November ?!) Fortunately, the suite next to them was generous. It was hysterical to hear the problems of nine girls sharing one job. One of the girls has moved out so now it's only eight. Whoopee!

In talking with these girls it seemed apparent that they had tried every channel open to them but one. One of the girls' mothers was supposed to call Dr. Willet. They were hoping that he might exert the proper pressure to get the toilet fixed. As of this writing, I do not know whether it was fixed or not.

The fact that those girls have been waiting since November is disgusting. They reported the failure of the flush and visited a dean. Why shouldn't they have seen some real action long ago? They pay for room and board, and I've always assumed, perhaps erroneously, that a functional toilet was included.

Community Service

Dear Editor,

For those students whose interests center around community action, an organization, designed to coordinate volunteer interests with community needs, has been formed. The committee is made up of students from Longwood and Hampden-Sydney and has been named Students for Community Services.

The organization has been divided up into five particular areas, each of which is under the direction of the head coordinator, Bob Williams, a student from Hampden-Sydney and is advised by Rev. William Vassey. The five divisions are headed by 2 coordinators from Longwood and Hampden-Sydney. 1) Housing - Robin Hill and Jim Phillips; 2) Tutoring - Lance Vandecastle and Moogie Terrell; 3) Recreation for Deprived Children - Chris Yates, Wendy Burkhart and Sara Frederick; 4) Companionship Therapy - John Rendzio; 5) Day Care - Barbara Radford.

We hope to involve students from Hampden-Sydney and Longwood in community services through these five areas. If you wish further information either write to, "Students for Community Services" at Box 282, Hampden-Sydney, Va. 23943, or call 223-4381 extension 98. Our office is on 2nd floor Johns Auditorium at Hampden-Sydney and the hours are from 2-5 p.m. Monday through Friday. If you need to reach us at night, please call 574-6521.

This is your chance to become involved, please contact us if you are interested. There are many improvements that need to be made in Prince Edward County, that have been delayed. Through Students for Community Services, the opportunity to help is now available.

The equestrian painting by Thomas Sully, dated 1848.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: The following is a joint release from Public Relations and the Art Department concerning the acquisition of the Sully Gallery. The background material on the Sully letters was researched by Miss Elizabeth Flynn.)

Longwood College has recently been named the recipient of a gift from Mrs. Jeanne Sully West of Gravel Hill in Buckingham County and New Orleans, Louisiana.

Included in the gift are four pieces of art work combined with a generous sum of money to be used toward establishing what will be called the Sully Gallery. This gift will be used to perpetuate the name of Thomas Sully (1783-1872), the leading portrait painter of Philadelphia in the middle of the 19th century, and to enrich art programs here at Longwood and in the state.

The valuable art objects - an equestrian painting by Thomas Sully and three letters written by the artist to Mrs. West's grandfather, G. W. Sully - will be exhibited in a showing to be held in the Bedford Art Building in the spring of 1973. The college is presently seeking other paintings by Sully and his contemporaries to include in the exhibit.

Mrs. West's contacts with Longwood originated through her father whose business partner was a brother of Frank Stone, head of the architectural firm who designed the Weyanoke Hotel and several buildings on the Longwood campus. This contact has been continued through mutual friends and activities involving the college.

Active in the world of art for a number of years, Mrs. West was secretary of the Delgado Museum (now called the New Orleans Museum of Art) and has continued to support that museum by giving them Thomas Sully's portrait of his older brother. She has also donated a self portrait (Thomas Sully by Himself) to the Smithsonian Institute.

The painting by Sully, a 19th century "fancy painting" of a cavalry officer on a white horse, is signed with the initials TS and dated 1848. Only 20" by 15", the oil on canvas-board painting is a good example of Thomas Sully's composition of equestrian subjects. The artist has managed to convey the idea of the space of a rolling countryside and the dark hills in the background through color and composition. The artist's use of color is even more fascinating than his composition of masses. Soft pinks combined with browns and reds provide an appealing visual ef-

The reverse side of this canvas had been used by the artist as a sketchboard and palette, and the painting has been framed in such a manner as to display both views. The combination on the back side of a drape, hand with curling fingers, and a lacy sleeve adds to the interest of this view by providing what could be termed a touch of 20th century expressionism.

The letters of Thomas Sully to his nephew George W. Sully of New Orleans are dated September 13, 1850, October 1, 1850, and June 15, 1851. In this correspondence, Sully mentions his portrait of Andrew Jackson for which the General posed shortly after the battle of New Orleans, and his equestrian painting of George Washington. In the first of these letters, Sully asked his nephew if anything had transpired concerning the sale of his painting of Washington and requested that the correspondence with the officials of Washington City be returned to him. In the second letter, Thomas Sully had received the correspondence and said it "had come at a good time" but gave no further particulars.

It would seem from this correspondence and from the notes in the biography of Thomas Sully by Edward Biddle and Mantle Fielding (1921) that the equestrian painting referred to is the famous 'Passage of the Delaware' now owned by the Boston Museum of Fine Arts. Sully had been commissioned by the North Carolina Legislature to paint a portrait of Washington. The Legislature wanted something rather large but did not tell Sully the exact size. Sully began the work in 1818, and not having heard to the contrary, painted the scene on a canvas 17'4" by 12'5". The dimensions were too much for the Legislature and Sully was left with the painting. After several years, he sold it to a frame-maker in Boston for $500, who in turn sold it to the old Boston Museum and Theatre.

Also included in Mrs. West's gift are a print by Whistler; a line drawing by her father, Thomas O. Sully; a small sketch of Thomas Sully by John Neagle; and a sketch of Robert Sully by his friend John Neagle. Both sketches were done in Philadelphia around 1823.

The establishment of the Sully Gallery here at Longwood College will be the first such gallery devoted to Sully and his contemporaries in the state.

Freshman Class To Present 'Something Fishy' February 17

By BECKY NICHOLSON
"Something Fishy Is Going On" is the theme for this year's Freshman Production. D. A. Taylor is "Goldy Fish", the star. Goldy Fish is from a Midwestern Pond and is the "homey" type. She meets different people (fish) such as militants, and is influenced by them. Goldy's finale song is "My Way," and the cast ends the show by singing "I've Got To Be Me."

The cast provides a variety of entertainment during the ten acts. Nan Pace performs a dance to the music from "Love Story", and Tommy Thibideux tapdances to "Yankee Doodle"; Irene Pearson dances to "Thoroughly Modern Millie"; Cindy Parr plays "Tara's Theme" on the piano; Melony Taylor is the Production's "One Man Band"; Bridgette MacKillop sings "The Sea Gull" which she composed herself, and Nancy Minick, Diane Covington, Ro Rutherford, Mariette Zucchi, and Karen Smith also perform various acts.

The sponsor of the Production is Mr. Meshejian with Debbie Martell as chairman. The co-chairmen are Janice Pool and Susan Davis. The play will be preceded by some "Green and White" songs provided by their sister class, the Juniors. The Freshman class has been planning and working since Christmas, especially the past three weeks. The Production will have its debut on February 17 at 7:30 in Jarman Auditorium. Admission is $.25 for each student.

Independent Colleges Ask For Assistance

By JOHN D. GUTHRIE
Hampden-Sydney Correspondent

(EDITOR'S NOTE: The bill for aid to private colleges was approved by the State Senate Friday. It now goes to the State House of Representatives to be voted on before it can become a law.)

The Council of Independent Colleges in Virginia, which includes Hampden-Sydney College, is asking the 1972 General Assembly to establish a program of Tuition Assistance for Virginia students who attend private colleges in the state.

The Council believes that state aid to students wishing to attend one of Virginia's 26 private colleges and universities will prove beneficial to the college student, and that it will also relieve the current problem of over-enrollment in the state institutions.

Need For Aid

The need for financial aid to students desiring to attend private colleges and universities has been growing steadily in recent years. The tuition charges at public colleges at present average only $301, while at private colleges in Virginia the tuition charges average $1,585. For example, Longwood College is charging $400 for tuition during the school year 1971-72, Hampden-Sydney College, in comparison, is charging $2,000 for tuition for the 1971-1972 school year.

Affects Enrollment

This widening gap in tuition charges has had its effect on college enrollments. In 1964, one-third of Virginia's college population was enrolled in private institutions; in 1970, these same private colleges accounted for only one-fifth of the total state enrollments.

Mr. John H. Waters, Director of Admissions and Financial Aid of Hampden-Sydney College, in an interview concerning the decrease in applications for admissions over the last four years, said, "We have not lowered our academic standards of acceptance. What has changed, due to the decrease of applications, is that we have taken more of the borderline student applicants in order to maintain a reasonable college enrollment."

Reasons For A Gap

An explanation for this large gap in tuition charges can be found in considering the sources of funds which sustain the operations of colleges. Operating revenues for a private institution come from tuition and fees, earnings from endowment, and gift income from various sources. The only source over which the institution has any real effective control is tuition.

The public college, on the other hand, draws operating funds from tuition and fees, legislative appropriations, endowment earnings, and gift income from private donors. The sources subject to effective control here are tuition and legislative appropriations.

Plea For Aid

Faced with this need, the Council of Independent Colleges in Virginia is asking the 1972 General Assembly for state aid to each Virginia student at a private college based on the subsidy paid to students attending public colleges from the General Fund for the annual operating costs (not capital costs). Last year, this subsidy was slightly over $800 per student for the 26 public colleges. Awards for the assistance of students attending private colleges would be given only to institutions whose primary purpose is to provide collegiate or graduate education and not to provide religious training or theological education. No student would receive assistance for more than a total of four years.

Evaluation Of Proposal

In evaluating this proposal, one realizes that it will affect all citizens of Virginia. There are 16,000 Virginia residents attending Virginia's 26 private colleges and universities. There is unused capacity in these institutions that would permit them to accommodate several thousand more Virginia residents without additional expenditures for capital improvements of physical facilities. To the extent that Virginia's private institutions relieve the State's public sector of the necessity of accommodating this significant fraction of the state's college population, there is an important cost savings potential for the Commonwealth and its citizens, say the private colleges. The amount of the award the state would make to residents attending private institutions would be determined so that it would be no more than the state would have spent for operating costs for students attending public institutions. The state also would be relieved of the large capital expenditures which the pressure of those students at public institutions would necessitate.

Outlook

The outlook for the private colleges of Virginia today is limited to two possible solutions should higher tuition rates continue: they may try to recruit more non-Virginians, or they may abruptly, or by a slow debilitating process, close their doors.

In either instance, the private colleges feel that Virginia and its citizens may be the real losers. They believe that a wider variety of choice in educational opportunity would be lost if private institutions began to shut down. They feel that one solution to the problem is the moderation of differences in tuition costs between the public and private colleges, and they believe that the proposal now before the General Assembly will help to provide that solution.

A "Personalized" Atmosphere For Out-Of-State Students

By DEBBIE BASTEK

In keeping with Longwood's "personalized" atmosphere, a series of meetings has been held with out-of-state students in order to find out how things might be made more comfortable for them on campus.

Mr. Hamilton, Assistant Registrar, held luncheons with students from Maryland, New Jersey, and New York during December to discuss the particular problems facing these students at Longwood. Those brought up during the informal luncheons included problems dealing with transportation home, week end activities, knowing other out-of-staters, and making the transition to Longwood.

In order to help ease the situation, Col. Abrams has arranged for free transportation to the Richmond airport for students beginning with spring vacation this year. A list of all out-of-state students has been compiled and will be distributed this week to help solve the problem of who to contact for rides to specific areas. Some students felt that since out-of-state students were such a small percentage of the student body, their special input to Longwood would go unnoticed. Others mentioned the transition from a suburban environment to Longwood's as the most important problem facing the out-of-state student.

As a result, a meeting was held on January 6 with Dean Wilson, Dean Blackwell, Mrs. Brooks, Director of Admissions, Mr. Hamilton, and 10 students. Topics discussed were those listed above, the general social atmosphere on campus, and some academic issues. From the discussion came various suggestions, including opening dorm recs on Saturdays to provide some place other than Lankford in which visiting friends might be entertained. Dean Wilson pointed out that this was a matter to be decided on by the individual dorm, a fact many students were not aware of. Immediate action was taken in North Cunningham, that rec is now opened to family, friends, and dates between 1 and 5 p.m. Saturdays.

Dean Blackwell asked the students if they saw "a role for yourselves here?" as out-of-staters. Mary Frances Dunn, a sophomore from New York, felt she had something to say to those interested in social welfare having been born and reared in New York. Lesley Franclemont, a freshman from Maryland's Washington suburbs, said she felt she could contribute her experiences in the suburban classroom to prospective teachers.

The students expressed a desire to become involved in all aspects of campus life. Notes have already been sent to those interested in working on next fall's orientation program. A ride board indicating out-of-state as well as Virginia rides was also suggested. The suggested availability of buses traveling to places of historic interest on week ends is now being considered.

U.S.S.R. Near Pact

WASHINGTON — According to President Nixon, the U. S. and the Soviet Union are on the verge of a first-phase agreement on the limitation of strategic weapons. This agreement could slow down or stop the arms race without endangering national security. However, Nixon warned that if the Russians continued missile deployment and threatened national security, he would increase spending on strategic forces. The agreement was part of Nixon's foreign policy report sent to Congress February 9.

Campaign Spending Limited

WASHINGTON — President Nixon signed legislation on February 7 to limit political advertising expenses and to seal campaign finance - reporting loopholes. Nixon hailed the bill as "realistic and enforceable." The law goes into effect in 60 days and will limit to $8.4 million the amount a presidential candidate can spend for radio and television advertising.

D-Day Dies

BELFAST — D-Day for Disruption which was called by Roman Catholic civil rights leaders to paralyze Northern Ireland with 24 hours of civic chaos collapsed in confusion. There were a few flareups, but basically business was carried on as usual.

The Catholic Civil Rights Association had called for massive protests against the government's policy of confining suspected gunman without trial. Even with these pleas, thousands of Catholics ignored them.

The only real evidence of a protest was a march through the city of a group of 500 children chanting, "Free the Internes."

Waitresses Present Petition To Raise Salary And Hours

By JANET LYNN TENNYSON

A petition with 181 signatures in favor of changes over the present situation of waitressing was given by a group of 20 waitresses to the financial aid office. The waitresses presented the petition after lunch on Tuesday, February 7, to Mr. Gary C. Groneweg, director of financial aid.

The waitresses aired several gripes, pertaining especially to salary. At this meeting, it was stated that most of the girls are receiving only ten hours of work; the scholarship calls for an average of twelve hours of work a week. Though there is dissatisfaction with the current pay, the waitresses would be more content if they would receive the full working hours and pay.

"Mr. Groneweg, who goes over the time cards, said he was unaware of the shortage," said Sue Davis, who is leader of the group. "He also asked us to write down any criticisms we have so that he could be aware of these," she said.

Mrs. Jo Trout, said the time would be conducted and the results turned into Mr. Groneweg. The waitresses suggested that Mr. Groneweg ask if the group could appear at a staff meeting to present their grievances. Mrs.

Trout also has started having meetings during the waitresses' meals to learn the gripes of the girls and to recommend changes.

"I am trying to go through the correct channels to have changes made," Sue Davis said. "I want to take our gripes to the right people," she concluded.

The situation concerns all students, because the meals in our dining hall are affected. If nothing else, the waitresses have made known their grievances and have taken official steps to change things and find a better way.

LC Represented At Conference Held For Virginia's Colleges

By DEBBIE BASTEK

Debbie Chapman and Kay Oliver recently attended a formation meeting of the Union of Virginia Students, held at Old Dominion University. The Union of Virginia Students is to be a lobbying group composed of representatives from Virginia colleges. The purpose of the meeting was to organize the Union and to lay down basic ground rules. When asked why she attended the conference, Debbie said it was out of curiosity.

The program of guest speakers for the conference included one whom Debbie found particularly interesting. This speaker, Baxton Bryant, who was near his fifties, had white hair down to his shoulders, a long white beard, and was wearing a buff colored jumpsuit with a red, white, and blue scarf. Debbie said he looked like Uncle Sam. This was the only similarity Mr. Bryant and Uncle Sam shared. Debbie said Mr. Bryant's speech was a virtual condemnation of the United States. He berated the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution, said America was stagnant, and attacked the Christian religion.

After Mr. Bryant's speech, the conference began to discuss problems on today's college campuses. Topics dealt with included voter registration on campus, curfew, tolls some Old Dominion students have to pay going and coming from school, and strip mining. When asked how she felt these things pertained to Longwood, Debbie said she felt Longwood was fortunate in not having these problems. Debbie also said that at the conference it became obvious that the Union of Virginia Students was going to deal mainly with problems found on larger campuses. It was this that caused Bridgewater College to leave after the first night's events. Other schools represented at the conference were Mary Washington, George Mason, Virginia Commonwealth, Virginia Tech, Northern Virginia Community College, Tidewater Community College and Emory and Henry.

Proposed Budget For 1973

Viewed By Board Of Visitors

By LYNDIA VAN HORN

Discussion of the budget for the 1972-73 year was the main order of business at the February 3, Board of Visitors' meeting.

The Board could only review the proposed budget, as its acceptance is based on Governor Holton's recommendation and action on the part of the General Assembly.

Several items have already been recommended by the Governor. Nine new faculty positions are in the plans for the 1972-74 biennium. Dr. Henry Willett, President of Longwood, voiced his hope that these positions would help eliminate the problem of having to close classes.

Also in the proposed budget are plans which have been recommended by the Governor for a new Physical Education building and a plan to convert the present coal heating system to oil, eliminating the pollution problem now caused by the heating.

In other business the board passed the "Proposed Policy on Campus Advertising, Distribution, and Solicitation." This proposal passed earlier in the year by Legislative Board aims to "protect the campus community" against unauthorized sales and advertising.

Dr. Willett said he felt approval of such a proposal was necessary since students have been "beseiged by merchants and advertising." He also said the proposal was "a lot directed toward the faculty and staff."

The Board in further business approved 14 faculty promotions, and 18 faculty members were granted tenure. The Board also approved three new appointments for the 1972-73 session. These include Mr. Jerry E. Brown, Assistant Professor of English; Mr. Otis W. Douglas, III, Assistant Professor of English; and Dr. Arthur Poister, Visiting Professor of Music.

Election of officers for the Board of Visitors for next year resulted in the reelection of Dr. Duvahl Ridgway-Hull as Rector, the elections of Mr. William E. Daniel, Jr. as Vice Rector, and Mrs. Raymond M. Brown, Jr. as Secretary.

Members of the Board present at the President's Press Conference of the same day also commented on the action that took place there. Dr. Willett said he felt it was "one of the most rewarding experiences for the Board members since serving on the Board." The Board members, he went on to say, were impressed with the students' fairness in presenting views opposing those of the administration.

Concerned Student Teachers

Demonstrate Varied Emotions

By PAM WATSON

Getting up two hours early in order to travel to school by bicycle . . . Writing a long forgotten relative asking if she has a spare bedroom . . . Spending many a night alone grading papers or studying.

These may have been some of the thoughts of students last Wednesday night when the locations for those student teaching first block next fall were posted. After dinner a line quickly formed in Hiner to see the results of this long-awaited list.

One girl who had signed up for Chesterfield, Henrico, or the city of Richmond seemed puzzled, but at the same time she wondered how things were going to be in Roanoke. Another walked away in a trance and kept repeating to herself, "But I've never even been to Danville."

Finally, there was one girl who would have no problem with travel, or a spare room, or grading papers, or a disappointing placement. After searching carefully through the list of names and places, she turned away with a smile and said, "They forgot my name."

Sex Discrimination

CHARLOTTESVILLE — Following an honor society's refusal to accept women as members, Tom Collier, President of Student Council at University of Virginia has discussed means to alleviate sexual bias in the Jefferson Society, the honorary societies, and Alpha Phi Omega, a service organization. Members of Student Council met last Wednesday to make suggestions to eliminate sex discrimination by enforcement of a Virginia state law requiring that organizations not discriminate on the basis of sex in order to use University facilities. A proposal supporting enforcement against these particular organizations or a blanket ruling covering all student organizations (including even fraternities and football) will be voted on at their next meeting.

Newspaper Investigation

RICHMOND — The Media Board of Virginia Commonwealth University has voted not to take any disciplinary action 'at this time' against the editor of the school's student newspaper for the publication of an abortion advertisement. The Jan. 6 issue of the newspaper, the Commonwealth Times, carried a paid advertisement that gave information on an abortion clinic in the District of Columbia. Under state law, it is a misdemeanor to publish advertisements that promote abortion. The editor of the newspaper, Bill Royall, contended that the notice that appeared in the newspaper was not an advertisement but an informational notice. Royall said the newspaper printed the notice because "we wanted to provide the information and we wanted to test the law."

Student Forum

RICHMOND — The state's second student-legislator forum will be dedicated to the memory of J. Sargeant Reynolds who played a major role in the organization of the first forum. Gov. Linwood Holton and Lt. Gov. Henry Howell, Jr. will serve as honorary co-chairmen for the forum, which is expected to draw about 200 student representatives from the state's 68 colleges. The forum which was envisioned as a means of opening communication between campus and General Assembly, produced lively exchanges at times between students and legislators in regard to the roles of students and state government.

New President

WILLIAMSBURG — Dr. Thomas Ashley Graves, Jr., 46-year-old former associate dean of the faculty at Harvard University's Graduate School of Business was inaugurated Saturday as William and Mary's 24th president. The new president who took office September 1 has already made a number of changes including new appointments in administration and alterations in student affairs. In his address Dr. Graves said that "William and Mary must remain essentially a small, residential, full-time university and will continue to place primary emphasis on its undergraduate program. He also said the college should involve itself more in community activities and noted that excellence in the future requires the capacity to change, and William and Mary is of a size and character whereby change is still possible.

Majority Of Sports Events Show Longwood Teams Victorious

In the meet held Saturday, Feb. 12, at Mary Washington, Joyce Miller won 3 and Chris Pruitt won 2 out of the 4 bouts they each played.

Their coach, Miss Sally Bush, said she was pleased with their fencing so far, since the girls are new to the team and inexperienced.

Their next two meets are here at home, the first against Randolph-Macon on Wednesday, Feb. 16, at 7:30 p.m., and the second against NC State on Saturday, Feb. 19, at 9 a.m.

Experimental College Offers

A Varied Curriculum Of Courses

By JANE CRAWFORD

Did you ever wish you could take a class just because you wanted to and without the threat of a grade?

Student Union and Hampden-Sydney's Free College Committee have organized the second annual Experimental College for this purpose. Described as a college within a college, the extra-curricular school purports to offer students a curriculum not available in their day to day schedule.

Dragon Chandler, of Student Union, and Mike Crookshank, of H-S's FCC (Free College Committee) define the experimental college as "their answer to the students' demand to participate in areas outside their major field. It is designed to give one the opportunity to utilize his creative energy."

Course curriculum includes macrame, the art of knotting. The purpose of the class is to show students how to convert a basic skill into a method of making belts, wall hangings, and purses. Another course for the artistically inclined is Visual Aesthetics. Appreciation of art, with emphasis on light and shadow, perspective, composition, color theory, and line as they apply to form and space, is the major objective.

Not all courses are in the area of "the arts." Awareness of the present and relevancy to today are commonly sought goals. Current Events, Current Affairs, and Birth Control are all topics which students expressed an interest and concern in. Such areas as foreign policy, Vietnam, domestic affairs, student discontent, contraceptives and abortion will be under discussion.

Experimental College is concerned with the physical and spiritual aspects of student interest. Karate-Judo and Tae Quon Do, the Korean art of hand and foot fighting are open for those people seeking instruction in self defense. The more spiritually minded person may find interest in Yoga or Mysticism, as a religious phenomenon.

Other offerings include: Auto Mechanics, Bridge, Personal Finance, Future Repercussion of the Computer, Short Novel, Guitar, Modern Dance, and Environmental Studies.

Classes are offered on a free, noncredit basis. There are no requirements. Dragon stresses that "we have attempted to structure classes so that it will be a learning experience to both instructor and student."

For further information check the course offering booklets available in the dining hall or call Lankford at 392-5475.

munity affairs.

Residence Board Proposes Opening New Recreation Halls

By JANET LYNN TENNYSON
A proposal to open the recreation halls in French, North and Main Cunningham on Saturday afternoons will be presented for the head residents' approval. Residence Board made this proposal and plans to take the suggestion to Legislative Board and the dean's office for consideration. The only stipulation is that girls would have to greet their dates and then enter the recs through the proper doors. This was decided during the board's meeting on February 7.

The board will be sponsoring a paper drive for the Humane Society of Farmville, Mrs. Jean W. Carr is an active member in the society and suggested the drive be held. Terry Jones said, "Boxes will be placed on each hall for old newspapers and magazines." Students are urged to donate paper for the society's work of caring for lost and stray animals.

Fire Marshal Paula Williams stated that there would be more fire drills this semester. Weather permitting, the plan is to have at least two fire drills a month.

At a previous meeting, the board stated, "Residence Board will be in charge of complaints concerning waitresses," Denise Morris, vice chairman, asked that the statement be revised to include all complaints concerning the dining hall. The members passed the change. Denise Morris also explained that a box would be placed on each hall so that dishes and silverware that were removed from the dining hall could be placed in these boxes and returned. She added, "No one will be punished if the dishes are returned."

Denise Morris asked dorm presidents to tell their dorms that no pie plates, even the thin aluminum ones, are to be removed from the dining hall. She said Slater felt that to allow some dishes to be taken would cause other dishes to disappear.

It was stressed that for Sunday dinner no blue jeans would be allowed and that persons who are wearing such will be asked to leave the dining hall. Girls are also asked by the board not to wear hair curlers during meals. The board passed a resolution to discontinue sorority tables.

Terry Jones asked dorm presidents to think about handbook changes and suggestions. She also stated that the board officers would meet to discuss changes and additions to the handbook. A permanent meeting time was selected to be on each Monday night at 7:00 in the student government room. Residence Board meetings are open and students are allowed to attend all sessions.

Legislative Board Elects Committee Officials; Donates To A Charity Fund

By BECKY NICHOLSON
Various committee officials were elected at the Legislative Board meeting Monday, February 7. Certain projects such as the Charity Fund Raising drive, also interested members.

After much discussion the Legislative Board decided to give donations to the Meherrin Day Care Center. In addition, they will still maintain their contributions to the Heart Fund at basketball games.

The officials and members of various committees were appointed at this meeting. Lee Sharr was appointed Chairman of Evaluations Committee; Joyce Moreno was appointed Representative for the Artists series, Virginia Metcalf, chairman of the Book Store Committee; Cindy Parr and Debbie Bastek were appointed to Student Activities Fees Committee; Becky Bailey, Chairman of the Academic Curriculum Committee; Becky Payne and Ellen Morrison were appointed to the Committee on Scholarships and Financial Assistance. Robin Glascock was appointed as Chairman of Academic Affairs with a committee including Kay Oliver, Becky Bailey, Ruth Dobbin, Karen Grub, and Susan Clark. The Registration Committee included Melony Stevenson, Cindy Bradley, and Mary Alice Noel. The Legislature Board decided to eliminate the title of Ex-Officio members from the Standing Committees.

Ginger King was appointed editor of the Student Handbook for the summer edition.

The Board also discussed grade point averages for its officers. An officer of the Legislative Board must have a 2.5 cumulative average while a representative must have a 2.2 cumulative average, at the minimum. The board decided, since it was not discussed in the handbook, that if an officer or representative gets on academic probation, she should relinquish her office and seat on the board. The grade average of dorm presidents was referred to Residence Board.

The final issue on the agenda was concerned with the Virginia Union Conference which was held at Old Dominion University. Debbie Chapman and Kay Oliver represented Longwood at the conference. Mary Washington, VPI, Emory and Henry, and George Mason were represented at the conference also. Longwood's representative felt that the points of discussion did not concern Longwood College (for example, Toll Fares). Since it was vague as to whom the Union represented — the desires of the college as a unit or the desires of a group of individuals — Longwood decided not to join this union. Longwood will watch the progress of the union as an observer for the present time.

Works By Wier For Publication

By LYNNE PIERCE
Allen Wier, a member of the English Department, has had two short stories and a poem accepted for publication within the next month. "An Elegy," one of the stories, will appear in the winter issue of the CAROLINA QUARTERLY and the other story, "Bob and the Other Man," will appear in the GEORGIA REVIEW in March. "January on State Street," a fantasy poem, is being published in "Spirit Magazine."

Mr. Wier described "An Elegy" as a short fiction which uses the standard form of an elegy and depends heavily on language devices. The story is a nostalgic view, told partly in flashback, of a person of great potential who is forced into a domesticated life by the birth of his first child. The story contains a triple elegy centered around the father, baby and the narrator.

"Bob and the Other Man" is about a boy growing up in Texas and his make-believe friend, who is actually his alter ego. The theme of the story is the "blood catch," a phrase coined by Mrs. Wier to describe the obligation most people feel to love their parents and other relatives. The story was inspired by one of Mr. Wier's earlier poems entitled "1883 in the Heat." The first lines of the story and the poem are the same and much of the material is autobiographical.

In "January on State Street," a man is speculating about his lover's childhood in the Bayou country of Louisiana and is trying to imagine himself in that context. The poem developed from Mr. and Mrs. Wier taking the same idea and seeing how each would develop it.

The stories, along with two which were published last year, are part of a collection of stories which Mr. Wier is compiling for future publication. The collection will also contain a section of a novel, STOPPING PLACE, which Mr. Wier wrote for his thesis at Louisiana State University.

Scholarship Money Offered In "Silver Opinion Competition"

Reed & Barton is sponsoring a "Silver Opinion Competition," in which selected colleges are asked to participate. Longwood has been asked to compete for the scholarship money totaling $2,500.

The competition consists of an entry form illustrating twelve designs of sterling with eight designs of both china and crystal. All you have to do is list the three best combinations of sterling, china and crystal from these patterns. Miss Lynda Collier is the student representative on campus for the "Silver Opinion Competition" and she has entry blanks and complete details concerning the contest. She also has Reed & Barton designs samples so that you can see the sterling patterns.

First grand award is $1,000 scholarship, second grand award is a $500 scholarship, and third grand award is a $300 scholarship and there are seven grand awards to be made of $100 scholarships each. In addition, there will be 100 other awards of sterling silver, fine china and crystal.

Scholarships and awards will be made to those entries matching or coming closest to the unanimous selections of table-setting editors from three of the nation's leading magazines,

Through the opinions on silver design expressed by college women competing for these scholarships, Reed & Barton hopes to find out the ideas and tastes of the young American person.

SUMMER WORK

The Financial Aid Office will certify twenty students for off-campus work study during the summer of 1972. Students will earn $1.80 per hour and will work forty hours per week, and may work from eight to twelve weeks. Earnings for the summer will range from $576 to $864. Students will be placed in jobs within commuting distance of their homes; therefore, they can live at home and incur reduced living expenses. Maximum effort will be exerted to place students in work situations where they have academic or vocational interest so that summer employment becomes an extension and complement to classroom studies.

Students who are eligible for financial aid under the College Work Study Program and interested in summer employment, should contact Mr. Gary Groneweg, Director of Financial Aid, before March 1.

Bible Study Groups Offer Insight Into Biblical Literature

By JANET LYNN TENNYSON

Are you interested in Bible study? Have you ever wondered where to meet with people to discuss ideas on religion? The YWCA sponsors several Bible studies and prayer services throughout the week.

The newest is the Bible Study Program held on Thursday evenings from 9:30 until 10:00. The Rev. Willard Kiser from the Wesleyan Methodist Church of Farmville leads the discussions in the Biblical literature. Students and members from the Fellowship of Christian Athletes at Hampden-Sydney College meet jointly with students from Longwood in the YWCA Room in the Lankford Building.

Each evening at 6:45 at the Episcopal Church in Farmville, the "Y" holds vesper services. The fifteen minute meetings commemorate the closing of the day.

Another gathering for religious consideration is on Sunday night. There is a prayer meeting from 8:30 until 9:30 in the YWCA Room in Lankford. The meeting consists of singing, prayers and Bible study.

These studies and services are part of the YWCA's program to emphasize religion during the week. The meetings are devoted strictly to discussion and study and students from all denominations are welcome.

Yearbooks To Arrive In March; Delay Causes Canceled Contract

By VICKI BOWLING

The 1971 VIRGINIAN should arrive in March, says Tim Brown, director of student activities, following a delay of several months.

In addition, a letter has been sent to the printing company canceling our 1972 contract.

"We felt that the company was at fault with the delay and wouldn't represent us faithfully," Mr. Brown said.

The problem with the delay began last summer when several pages were lost in the mail, he explained. About that time Mr. Frank Doyle, the area representative of the printing company, the American Yearbook Company, was hospitalized as a result of an accident. There was no communication between Mr. Doyle and the yearbook staff.

Last fall it was discovered which pages were missing, Mr. Brown continued. During the next few months these pages were replaced and sent to the printing company. Shortly afterwards, Mr. Doyle reported that the pages still had not been replaced.

Meanwhile, a different sort of problem arose. The company with which Longwood had a contract sold its Cambridge plant to another company and moved to Topeka, he said. The Longwood yearbook had to stay in Cambridge.

Last week Mr. Doyle came to Longwood to discuss the problem. He reported that 84 pages were missing. According to Mr. Brown, these are the same pages that were replaced.

Mr. Brown said that the pages might have been sent to Topeka instead of to Cambridge. If this is the situation, the pages can be regained.

He and Joyce Saunders, editor of the 1972 VIRGINIAN, went to Cambridge earlier this week to see exactly what was missing from the yearbook, and to determine what needed to be replaced.

The printing company has promised delivery three weeks after the book is completed, which should be in March, he reported.

Hampden-Sydney Faculty Players Rehearse For "Anything Goes"

By ROBERT H. SELLS

Hampden-Sydney Correspondent

The Hampden-Sydney Faculty Players are busily rehearsing for this year's production of the Cole Porter musical, "Anything Goes," under the direction of Mrs. Nancy Iverson, wife of Philosophy Professor Dr. Vincent Iverson. Enthusiasm is running high this year among the Players, according to Reference Librarian Ronda Simms, after a very successful production last year of Farquhar's "The Beau Stratagem." Parts have been cast for the production scheduled to be presented on March 15 and 16 in Johns Auditorium on the campus.

Some 44 faculty members and administrators and their wives have turned out to participate in the production. Those who do not have acting roles are busy with behind-the-scenes work in make-up, props, lighting, etc.

Musical accompaniment for the play is being provided by Mr. Amos Lee Laine, Professor of History, and Mr. Frank Archer, a junior at Hampden-Sydney.

Junior Class Discuss Plans For Long Awaited Ring Dance

By SHARON CURLING

The Ring Dance was the major topic of discussion at the Junior Class meeting on Tuesday, February 8.

It was announced that the "Royal Kings" will play for the dance. Having Open House over the Ring Dance week end at certain times was discussed, however it will have to be presented to and approved by Residence Board. It was also voted on to have individual programs printed and to do away with favors. Food for the dance was discussed and agreement was reached to have drinks, mints and nuts. The dance shall be semiformal with certain clarifications being made. Termination of the receiving line was also talked about.

The junior class members were urged to help with Faculty Follies, especially with writing the skits. The Follies will be held Wednesday, February 23. According to the committee, there seems to be adequate faculty participation.

Elected to fill the vacancy of Dining Hall representative was Mary Ann Booth.

Discussed also was whether to help pay for the May Court dresses. It was decided to wait and find out how much money is made off of Faculty Follies before reaching a final decision.

Other business was the nomination of girls to the Miss Longwood Pageant. Those girls nominated were Gail Thompson, Gail Bagly, Brenda Griffin, Diane Derrick, and Kathy Webb.

First Lady Of H-S Meets Mrs. Nixon

By ROBERT H. SELLS

Hampden-Sydney Correspondent

Mrs. Marie Reveley, wife of Hampden-Sydney President W. Taylor Reveley and a 1940 graduate of Longwood, was among a number of wives of educators who were guests of Mrs. Richard Nixon at the White House on January 21. The afternoon tea given by Mrs. Nixon entertained some 100 ladies while their husbands attended the National Educators Association meeting in Washington, D. C. While in Washington

Mrs. Reveley also attended a panel discussion led by Dr. Ruth H. Osborn, Director of Continuing Education for Women at George Washington University.

Commenting on her trip to the White House, Mrs. Reveley stated that the practical aspects of running a large home in which there is much entertaining done was especially interesting to her. She noted specifically the cordiality and efficiency of Mrs. Nixon and the Official Host and the Aides and the beauty of the fresh flowers in each room and the landscaping.

Students And Stylists Present

"Total Look Of Today" Show

By PAM WATSON

Hair stylists, the latest fashions, and somewhat reluctant Longwood volunteers set the stage for the Student Union's presentation of the "Total Look Of Today" held Tuesday, February 8, in Lankford. Almost 300 students gathered for a free show given by "Canned Ego," a nationwide chain of beauty salons geared to the youth.

The show began as five volunteers came out dressed in bright green smocks with dripping wet hair. As the stylists began cutting their hair, however, the girls seemed more and more reluctant to see the final results. All had looks of surprise when they were finally given a mirror to view their 'total look.'

Miller and Rhoads furnished the latest in fashions that were modeled by Longwood girls during the styling demonstration. Completely unrehearsed and thoroughly interesting to college girls, the program proved to be quite different and most enjoyable for the large turnout.

According to Dragon Chandler, President of the Student Union, this show is the first in a series of student-oriented programs to interest the student body. Miller and Rhoads of Richmond will also sponsor the Union's Bridal Fashion Show on March 23 and the formals for the May Day Court.

Sophomore Week-End And Parent's Day Are Scheduled For March

By BECKY NICHOLSON

Sophomore week-end was the focal point of interest at their class meeting last Thursday night. Bobbie Bannim is the chairman of Sophomore week-end, which will take place on March 3, 4, and 5. A pajama party is scheduled in Lankford on Friday, March 3, with doughnuts provided Saturday for those who attend. The Sophomores will spend Saturday afternoon at the Meherrin Day Care Center. Saturday evening, there will be a concert with a $25 admission fee. Sunday, March 5, will be Parents Day with a banquet at 1:00 in the downstairs dining hall. Admission to the banquet will be $1.25 per ticket for all those except students. Sunday afternoon a skit will be given in Jarman Auditorium with a reception afterwards for parents, faculty, and administration.

During the meeting Becky Bailey was elected chairman of the Sophomore Roadshow on April 27. Susan Clark was elected chairman of the Senior Banquet. The Sophomore class gives this banquet in order to honor the seniors who are their sister class.

People are not just the cause of the "population problem." They're also the victims.

Traffic jams. Overcrowded schools. Inadequate housing. Increasing unemployment. Pollution. Almost any urban, social and environmental problem you can name is fast becoming a nightmare.

And in one way or another affects us all.

Of course, these problems would still exist even if population growth were zero, because population growth is not their basic cause. Therefore solving them must obviously become society's number one priority.

However, the pressures of an ever-increasing population tend to intensify our problems. And make them harder to solve.

(By the year 2000, Census Bureau projections estimate our population could grow close to 300 million. That's about 100 million more people to house, transport, educate, feed and clean up after!)

This intensifying of problems by sheer numbers of people can also occur in individual households. For just as "too many people" make society's problems more difficult to solve, the problems of raising a family are not made easier when there are "too many children."

Under the circumstances, we feel there's only one reason for a couple to have a child: because they really want it.

And are ready for it—emotionally, and not just financially.

There's also only one time to have that child: when it's wanted. When it can be a welcome addition rather than an accidental burden.

Unfortunately, research has consistently shown that not enough Americans (from every walk of life) are aware of the benefits of family planning.

Or even how to go about it. That's what we're all about. And frankly, we can use all the help we can get.

Especially from thoughtful people who understand how unplanned pregnancies can intensify the already severe problems society has still to solve.

People who will, at the very least, help others understand that the population problem not only has a cause. It has victims.

"Woman's Lib, or What'll We of the formal lecture given by Father Walter Burghardt in Bed-last visit to the campus was three years ago when he spoke to several classes and at Hampden-Sydney.

"I cannot prove to you that
I'm an M. C. P. - Male Chauvenist Pig" were the opening words of Father Burghardt's lecture as he explained that he would discuss three basic questions: Has woman really been oppressed? If so, what lies behind this oppression?

What shall we do about it? As he finished his last question, the lights momentarily blinked out.
"They usually do that a little later," quipped the priest.

Father Burghardt went on to explain the characteristics which he felt indicated that women are oppressed, including their traditional roles as domestic animals and sex objects. He also pointed out that television plays a major role in dictating the image of what a woman should be; however, he added that tele-

"In spite of all we did," Mr.

pages we couldn't replace."

Early last week he, Joyce Saun-

the printing company in Cam-exactly what was missing from the book. They took with them all available pictures that could be used as replacements.

It was discovered that the material which had been sent to replace the originally missing pages had also been lost in the mail. Neither set of pages had been found. Several possible sections were completed.

According to Mr. Brown, there were several pages of the organizations which were impossible to replace. They worked around this handicap and relaid much of the yearbook. It was officially completed as of Feb-

The printing company has made two promises to Mr. Brown.
First, that the books will be delivered four to five weeks fol-delivery date about March 15.

Second, the books will be shipped specially, not just sent routinely.

About these promises, Mr.
Brown said, "I'm really going to push them."

Yearbooks To Arrive In March; Delay Causes Canceled Contract

By VICKI BOWLING

The 1971 VIRGINIAN should arrive in March, says Tim Brown, director of student activities, following a delay of several months.

In addition, a letter has been sent to the printing company canceling our 1972 contract.

"We felt that the company was at fault with the delay and wouldn't represent us faithfully," Mr. Brown said.

The problem with the delay began last summer when several pages were he explained. Meanwhile, a different sort of problem arose. The company with which Longwood had a contract sold its Cambridge plant to another company and moved to Topoka, he said. The Longwood yearbook had to stay in Cambridge.

Last week Mr. Doyle came to Longwood to discuss the problem. He reported that 84 pages were missing. According to Mr. Brown, these are the same pages

LONGWOOD COLLEGE, FARMVILLE, VIRGINIA WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 1972

Q - Do any of the other college newspapers have a column like the Catalyst? C.N.H.

A - Radford once had a column that students could submit written questions to, but it has not been appearing recently in that paper. From the papers that we receive, the best that we can determine is that at the present, no other paper has a column of this type. Also, though commercial newspapers often have a telephone service, this system is unique at Longwood for colleges.

Q - Whatever happened to the committee that you could contact when teachers violate academic policies, for example, tests during the seven day period? How do you contact them? D.E.L.

A - When Dr. Wells checked out this question for us, she found that she is the chairman and sole member of the committee. A committee as such has never existed, but if you bring your complaints to the dean's office, they will check to see if a violation has taken place. Dr. Wells says you may have confused the idea of a committee with another one for students to report to when they feel they have not been graded fairly. This committee has not been formed yet because everyone is so involved with the self-study.

Q - I'd like to know why we can't have beer in the Stubbs and Curry chapter rooms. C.D.

"I like Longwood. I like the students, and I get along well with the administration and staff. I'm very satisfied here."

So says Mr. Joseph Carbone, ARA Slater manager, recently commended by the Board of Visitors "for his invaluable services."

Mr. Carbone came to Longwood in June, 1970, after previously working with Slater at Hampden-Sydney, Washington and Lee, and the University of Richmond.

"I find the girls rather easy to please," he says. But, in comparison to the men at the all-male institutions at which he has served, "the girls are more selective."

Longwood is the only one of the four schools that has family style meals. The others have cafeteria style.

"You can do more with family style," Mr. Carbone thinks. "The girls are much more pleased with it. They would rather come in, sit down, and eat, rather than stand in a long line."

His wife often comes over to eat in the dining hall, he added.

He has "no real major problems here." He classifies the labor force as perhaps his biggest problem giving as an example the fact that many employees have been out lately with the flu.

MR. JOSEPH CARBONE

Mr. Carbone doesn't get many complaints about the food. Most complaints concern table closings. He thinks that the majority of students understand and accept the fact that to keep costs down, tables must be closed.

He is always glad to have students come to him with their questions and complaints so that he may help them personally.

"The girls come to me when they're unhappy about something, and I appreciate that," Mr. Carbone said. "They also come to me when they're happy with something, so it works both ways. It's not a one-sided affair."

1971 VIRGINIAN Will Arrive In Mid-March

By VICKI BOWLING

The long-awaited for 1971 VIRGINIAN will soon be delivered.

Tim Brown says that the yearbooks should arrive in mid-March, probably around March 15.

Unfortunately, some pages that were missing to begin with stayed missing.

"In spite of all we did," Mr. Brown said, "there were some pages we couldn't replace."

Early last week he, Joyce Saunders and Debbie Gilbert went to the printing company in Cambridge, Maryland, to determine exactly what was missing from the book. They took with them all available pictures that could be used as replacements.

It was discovered that the material which had been sent to replace the originally missing pages had also been lost in the mail. Neither set of pages had been found. Several possible places had been searched, including branches of the company, with no luck.

Using the extra pictures, the three worked to replace the missing parts. Parts of a few sections, such as faculty, class, and panhellenic, were redone, and the sections were completed.

According to Mr. Brown, there were several pages of the organizations which were impossible to replace. They worked around this handicap and relaid much of the yearbook. It was officially completed as of February 15.

The printing company has made two promises to Mr. Brown. First, that the books will be delivered four to five weeks following completion, making the delivery date about March 15. Second, the books will be shipped specially, not just sent routinely.

A Cautious Appreciation

Optimism is a trait which I have never been credited with possessing much of; however, there are times when I can't overlook the brighter side of a subject. This has been the case with the reception ROTUNDA reporters have been receiving from people on campus thus far.

I can remember a time when a reluctance to speak to staff reporters made it impossible to get the complete facts of a story. This attitude seems to have relaxed to a great extent in the last few weeks. Administration and faculty members and students have been very cooperative in giving stories to reporters. This has meant that we have been able to get more stories to the school community and contributed to the increase of four pages in this issue.

This is a delicate balance, however. It could be upset at any moment if a controversial story should arise on campus. Although THE ROTUNDA hopes to maintain its favorable relations, it isn't putting itself in anybody's camp. Its purpose will continue to be to act as a source of information for the students and an instrument of constructive criticism.

I can only hope our optimism isn't premature and extend, on behalf of the staff, our cautious appreciation of the response we have received. Our goal is to keep everyone informed. The easier this task is made, the better the job will be.

A Commentary: Board Reorganizes Committees

By MARY LOU GLASHEEN

It has been brought to the attention of Legislative Board, by questions from students and a recent editorial in the Rotunda, that students are unaware of what Legislative Board is doing to improve the effectiveness of its committees. At one of the first meetings of the semester it was decided that all committees of Legislative Board will be required to meet at least once a month. Each committee will appoint a secretary who will record the minutes of the meeting and submit them to Legislative Board within a week of that committee's meeting. Previously, committees have not been required to meet and students complained that their committee was not doing anything. It has also been a recent policy of the board in making committee appointments that no student will serve on more than two committees. Student government and class officers will be permitted to serve on no more than one committee and no more than one member of Legislative Board will be permitted to serve on any one committee — unless she is required to be a member of that committee by virtue of her office. This will give more students the opportunity to work on a committee and will result in a better representation of the opinions and ideas of the total student body. Committee appointments are based on interest and capability shown, and recommendations made by students already on these committees. The committees of Legislative Board are: Academic Affairs, Artist Series, Car Committee, Organizational Evaluations Committee, Infirmary Committee, Elections Committee, Student Activities Fees Committee, and Summer School Handbook. With the exception of the Elections Committee and the Student Activities Fees Committee, there has been no limit set to the number of students who can work on any one committee. Committees of the college are different from Legislative Board Committees in that they are not a part of Legislative Board or Student Government. Recommendations for students to serve on these committees are made by Legislative Board to the Dean of the College. In some cases, all students who sign up for or show an interest cannot be placed on these committees due to the fact that they are composed of a certain ratio of administrative, faculty and student members. However, no student who has signed up for a committee is overlooked. If it is not possible to place her on the committee of the college for which she has signed up, she will be asked if she wishes to serve on another committee which interests her and which has not yet been filled. There are presently twenty-nine committees of the college. A list of these committees and their purposes can be obtained from the chairman, vice chairman, or corresponding secretary of Legislative Board or the Dean of the College.

Our committee appointments should be completed by the February 21 meeting of Legislative Board. However, if you are still interested in working on a committee and have not yet contacted a member of Legislative Board, please do so and we will do everything possible to place you on a committee. Interest and help is always needed and appreciated. Our committees, whether Legislative or Committees of the College, can be a constructive means of communication and change. Committee members should take their jobs seriously.

Any suggestions for ways to improve our committees are welcome. Their effectiveness and success depends on the students who work for them!

Dinner Music

Dear Editor,

We would like to thank those responsible for the music which recently has been played in the dining hall during lunch and supper. This music has been of a classical or easy listening nature, and though some may giggle, it has a quieting effect and is more conducive to good digestion. We have noticed that when music of an easy listening nature replaces rock music a more leisurely atmosphere is created in the dining hall. Students are less inclined to slurp and gulp their food and no longer feel the necessity to speak loudly in order to have themselves heard over the uproar of music. Although we enjoy rock music, the dining hall is not a place where one can simultaneously "get into it" and digest food. Groove baby—peace and love.

Responsibility

Dear Editor,

Two incidents occurred recently that caused me to wonder about the wisdom of the administration and the maturity of the student body.

The first incident involved residents of Frazer dorm. It seems that some girls have been writing obscenities on the mats in the elevators. Removing these obscenities is a costly cleaning job. Because of this, residents of Frazer were issued an ultimatum — stop writing on the mats or the elevators would be cut off.

When I asked why such a rash measure was being established, I was told if the students acted childish then the administration had to treat them as children. Therefore if a few students continue to deface mats, all the residents of Frazer will be punished for the actions of a few. The logic of this eludes me. There must be a better solution to the problem. One suggestion I heard was to use plastic mats, such as the ones in Curry's elevators. These are far easier to clean.

The second incident involved nighty watch guarding freshly poured sidewalks from girls wishing to write in them. The mere fact that a campus police had to spend his time watching sidewalks was funny, yet in a sad way. Either the girls at Longwood are so destructive that it was necessary to call nighty watch "out on guard" or the administration greatly distrusts the student body. Which ever the case it is a sad commentary on Longwood College.

Education Is Learning The Skill Of 'Meaning Making' Approach Teaching

By DEBI K. ABERNATHY

(Delta Books, 1969; $2.25)
"Thank God there are no free schools or printing; . . . for learning has brought disobedience and heresy into the world, and printing has divulged them . . . God keep us from both."

Such was the fanatical statement of Sir William Berkeley, Governor of Virginia in 1677. Despite the degree of freedom we have today in public schools and the press, much classroom instruction remains as archaic as the aims of Berkeley. TEACHING AS A SUBVERSIVE ACTIVITY by Neil Postman and Charles Weingartner defines current problems in education which teach students to despise school — rote memorization and busy-work. They emphasize that education is more than facts and irrelevant data; it is learning the skill of "meaning making."

"Meaning making" involves a student-centered, question-centered, language-centered approach to learning. The goals of education are to increase students' and teachers' abilities to make choices and find solutions in life. Postman and Weingartner say, "Meaning is in people. Without people, there are no meanings." Kelley sums up their argument to develop a curriculum which does not require a specific, limited set of answers in saying, "The student will listen and build what he hears into his own scheme of things, relating it uniquely to what he already uniquely holds as experience. Thus he builds a world all his own, and what is really important is what he makes of what we tell him, not what we intended."

The authors desire to create stimulating school environments where Emerson's "man thinking" can grow by simultaneously discovering himself, others, and the world. Unlike traditional educational approaches in which the student is a passive receptor of "knowledge" from the teacher, Postman and Weingartner propose changes in the system, urging students (and teachers) to question the relevance of material, to develop "built-in shockproof crap detectors." They recognize the problem of MINDLESSNESS in schools today, i.e., the bland acceptance by both students and teachers of traditionally taught courses. Very few ask WHY it is essential that they learn or teach a specific subject. Tradition has somehow been equated with truth and value. Wiener, recognizing the need for change, states: "We have modified our environment so radically that we must now modify ourselves in order to exist in this new environment."

As more people become aware of this need for change, they will inevitably ask the question the authors raise — "What's worth knowing?" There will be greater emphasis on realistic problems and open-ended questions which involve individual students and their experiences. Questions of this type are: "What do you worry about most?" "What, if anything, seems to you to be worth dying for?" "What seems worth living for?" "What does MEANING mean?"

The authors make seemingly bizarre suggestions for transforming the educational system from one of drudgery and apathy to one of stimulating exchange of "meanings." Among these are the proposals that students create their own textbooks, that teachers be required to teach in areas other than their "major," and that teachers be limited to three statements and fifteen questions per class. With each proposal, they challenge the reader — students and teachers alike — to think dynamically and creatively to propose solutions more workable than those they have presented. To meet their challenge will be to end the stagnation of symmetrical categories and proper labels to begin a system of educating which values objectivity, open-mindedness, flexibility, resourcefulness, and spontaneity.

Follies Show Tonight

"Faculty Follies" will be presented in Jarman Auditorium tonight at 7:30 p.m. The admission fee is 25¢.

"Faculty Follies" is a variety show presented every three years in which the faculty does all the performing. This year's Follies is being sponsored by the Junior Class to raise money for the Ring Dance. In previous years it was sponsored by Geist. The student chairman for the production is Faye Pool, while Dr. James Gussett is the Faculty Chairman.

The skits were written by a combined student and faculty effort. Among the many acts to be presented are a musical combo composed of Dr. Patton Lockwood and Mr. Wayne Meshejian, the Dating Game with Mr. Fred Herndon, Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs portrayed by the Physical Education Department, an "Oldies but Goldies Hour" and many more surprises. A few of the faculty members participating are Dr. Henry Willett, Dr. Mary Heintz, Dr. Carolyn Wells and Miss Margaret Nuckols.

H-S Faculty Members Busy At Work

Writing And Publishing Books

ROBERT H. SELLS
Hamden-Sydney Correspondent
"The last thing Biology needs today is another 'traditional' General Biology book," says Dr. Tully Turney, head of the Biology Department of Hampden-Sydney College. Dr. Turney recently completed work on his forthcoming Biology text which is tentatively scheduled for publication by January 1973. Dr. Turney is among several H-S faculty members who have recently published books or who are presently at work on books. Among them is Dr. James McClellan, Associate Professor of Government and Foreign Affairs, whose book, JOSEPH STORY AND THE AMERICAN CONSTITUTION was published this year by the University of Oklahoma Press. Dr. McClellan co-authored THE POLITICAL PRINCIPLES OF ROBERT A. TAFT, with Russell Kirk in 1967.

Hurt Professor of English, Dr. T. E. Crawley published his first book last fall. THE STRUC-TURE OF LEAVES OF GRASS was published by the University of Texas Press and was chosen as a selection for the Scholars' Library of the Modern Language Association. Dr. Crawley is now at work on a book on Edgar Allen Poe.

Dr. William Wendell Porterfield, Professor of Chemistry at H-S has just had his CONCEPTS OF CHEMISTRY published by Norton. He and Dr. Turney presently plan to begin using their texts next fall at H-S.

Several H-S professors have previously written books.

Linda Burton Protrays Lead In 'Jean Brodie' Play

By BELINDA BRUGH

Rehearsals are currently underway for The Prime of Miss Jean Brodie to be presented in Jarman Auditorium on March 16, 17, and 18.

The play should be of particular interest to faculty and students. It concerns the relationship between an unforgettable teacher and her equally unforgettable students — her set, Jean Brodie, having reached the "prime" of her life, seeks to supplement the special talents of her set by imprinting upon them facets of her own personality.

Making her first appearance on the Longwood stage, Linda Burton, a biology major from Charlottesville, portrays the role of the dangerous Miss Brodie. Helen Ball, a freshman from Williamsburg, plays Headmistress Mac-Kay, Miss Brodie's antagonist, Jessie Reiter, from Richmond, enacts the part of Sandy Strangier, Miss Brodie's "dependable" favorite. Playing Miss Brodie's lover, Teddy Lloyd, is Rick Vaughan, who has previously appeared in several Longwood productions. Miss Brodie's lover from a more recent affair, Gordon Lowther, is played by Larry Smith. Another well-known figure is Belinda Brugh as Sister Helena who narrates the play.

Playing other members of the Brodie set are Amy Fluckiger, Suzanne Curry, Cindy Baughn, Jean Ann Wisely, Pam Anderson, Marj Legshon, Kathy Taylor, Connie Gills, Bev McGill, Kathy Rippberger, and Jeff Hudson; Fred Herndon plays the reporter, Mr. Perry. Patsy Butler makes a cameo appearance as Miss Campbell.

Dr. Alexander Theroux Publishes First Novel

Dr. Alexander Theroux, Associate Professor of English, has recently published a novel entitled THREE WOGS through Gambit, Inc., Boston. The book deals with racial prejudice in England, a "wog" being any member of a minority immigrant group—in this case a Chinaman, an Indian, and an African. The stories relate their individual experiences with various Englishmen, who prove paradoxically that they are the real "wogs."

Upon being asked where he got the "idea" for the novel, Dr. Theroux replied, "Observation of the human condition and the inevitable impulse to write." He has traveled to England four times, and has "seen, as travelers inevitably do, that prejudice stands as both foreign and domestic."

Dr. Theroux describes THREE WOGS as being a highly stylized and ornately written book, a method of writing not fashionable today. "The reason the prose is extravagant is to indict the characters and their asinine and bigoted language with an articulate language that has its source in St. John's gospel and the Holy Spirit."

Generally well received by the critics, THREE WOGS has been reviewed in PUBLISHERS WEEKLY, BOOK WORLD (the WASHINGTON POST), the LIBRARY JOURNAL, the NATIONAL REVIEW, and the BOSTON GLOBE.

Dr. Theroux is currently working on a new novel which he describes as being about "the irreducibility of the Catholic Church. Oddly enough, it's a murder mystery, the plot of which has its point of departure in the absurdity of all heretical religions." He has also published in the TRANSATLANTIC REVIEW, NATIONAL REVIEW, the LONDON MAGAZINE, ESQUIRE, and the GEORGIA REVIEW.

Dr. Theroux, who was once a novice in a Massachusetts Trappist Monastery, has been a Fulbright Scholar (to England), won the Schubert Playwriting Fellowship, the MCA-TV award, and a Woodrow Wilson Grant. In 1968 he received a grant from the National Endowment of the Fine Arts in Washington, D. C. He has traveled to Russia, Poland, East Germany, Greece, France, Italy, Ireland, Czechoslovakia, and Great Britain.

Copies of THREE WOGS may be obtained through Longwood's bookstore, Lancott's, or ordered directly from the publisher (Gambit, Inc., 437 Boylston Street, Boston, Mass. 02216) at a cost of $5.95.

Controversial Publications Bill Before House

By LYNDIA VAN HORN

A bill designed to eliminate support of college publications through student funds seems destined to be killed in the House Education Committee according to a recent report in the Richmond Time-Dispatch.

The bill proposed by Delegate Benjamin H. Woodbridge, Jr., of Fredericksburg states that no student funds or state appropriations unless so designated by the General Assembly would be used to support any college publication. This includes not only newspapers but yearbooks and literary magazines as well.

Woodbridge, an open critic of the Mary Washington College newspaper the BULLET, insists that the bill is not designed as censorship. He says, according to the Times-Dispatch report, that he feels it unfair for students to have to support "publications which they find offensive."

sive."

Dr. Roy E. McTarnaghan, director of the State Council of Higher Education, student editors, and the Virginia Press Association were on hand at the February 15 committee meeting to oppose the bill, infringements of freedom of the press, discrimination against publications, and trustees' rights to determine how students funds are spent are reasons given for opposing the bill.

Dr. Henry Willett voiced his hope that the bill would not be passed. "I frankly think it would ruin all three of our publications," he said, "particularly in the form that they presently exist." He felt the student handbook, although a student publication, would not be affected.

Dr. Willett also told of plans to go to Richmond on February 17 "to talk to two or three people" concerning the issue. He was optimistic, however, that action would not take place to pass the bill.

Debbie Hyatt watched as a student gave blood when the bloodmobile visited last week.

Teach." It remained this way until sometime in the 1937-38 academic year when the motto was changed to "Forward With God." This was supposedly Joan of Arc's motto. The original motto is now only used on the school seal. The motto has apparently always been in English, but we could not find any reason why.

Q - Why can't you live off campus at age 21? Why do you have to wait until you're 23? (initials omitted)

A - Col. Carr says that the idea is that as long as you are undergraduate and not living with your family, husband or another close relative, you must live in the dormitory. The question has been before the Supreme Court, which ruled that dormitory living could be considered part of the educational process of a college. The final decision was left up to the individual school with the Dean of Students having the power to make an exception. The shortage of adequate housing in the Farmville area may also be considered as a factor in this decision.

Q - What does the little man on the top of the paper stand for? D.E.L.

A - The habit of putting a character on the paper was begun last semester by the past editor, Lise Worthington. No one is sure why she did it except that she likes rabbits. A deep meaning could probably be given to the little man by saying that he is a figure meant to mock the American educational system in what it stands for and produces; however, the truth is that Lynne was looking for a substitute for the rabbit and thought he was funny. Incidentally, he will be rotated soon with some other figures that have been found.

Q - Why don't Longwood students have to have a physical each year before returning to school? D.C.

A - Dr. Heinz said this would be extremely desirable, but that it has been opposed by students in the past. She added that this same question was proposed by a student at the last meeting of the Infirmary Committee. If any student would like to comment on this question or any other topic dealing with the infirmary, Dr. Heinz urged that they contact any member of the committee.

Q - Who was the original architect of the Rotunda, the beginning and finishing dates and contractor, years of renovations, the company that did them, the dimensions of the building and where can you get information on it? M.O.B.

A - This was quite a question! After talking with the library staff, it was agreed that any of this information could probably be obtained in the archives in the bottom of the library. They do not normally allow students to use the archives unsupervised, but Mrs. LeSturgeon said if you will see her, she will see if some method of finding the material can be worked out.

Professor Writes Plays Designed For Children

By VALERIE BLANKS
Have you ever picked up a newspaper, looking for the movie listings to find a film to take a child to, and come out with a blank face, or more probably, a frown? This is the situation Mrs. Nancy Anderson, a teacher of speech and drama here at Longwood and mother of four boys, found herself in.

"It is a problem," said Mrs. Anderson, "but I understand that the theaters in Farmville have to cater to the Longwood and H-S students."

Mrs. Anderson's answer to this problem was to write and present plays which children could understand and derive pleasure from. These plays have been presented in Jarman the last two years for the public's viewing.

She wrote the first play, designed to be shown to area children, last year, and it was presented on February 18. Dealing with the theme of patriotism, this date was picked specifically, because it comes between the birthdays of Washington and Lincoln. "In 'Man's Four Freedom's,' I wanted to show children that the rights and privileges of their citizenship bring responsibilities with them," she said.

"Backtrack to Broadway" was the play she wrote and presented this year. The plot revolved around stories involving children. These stories were derived from such musicals as "The King and I," "The Sound of Music," "Mame," and "Mary Poppins," as well as other Walt Disney stories as "Snow White" and "Cinderella."

That Mrs. Anderson has achieved her purpose of producing entertainment designed for children can be seen in the number of children who have turned out for these productions. Encouraged by the enthusiastic response, she has already decided on a theme for next year - "Folklore in the U.S.A."

Fencing Team Drops Two; LC Cagers Are Successful

By VALERIE BLANKS

The fencing team lost two meets this past week, one to Randolph-Macon and the other to NC State.

In the meet played last Wednesday, Randolph-Macon won 12-4, Joyce Miller and Robin Fekety each won two of their four bouts, NC State overcame Longwood by a score of 15-10 in the meet held Saturday.

Again in this meet Joyce and Robin were lead scorers, Joyce won all of her bouts; Robin won four of her five bouts, and Chris Pruitt brought Longwood's score to 10 by winning one bout.

The Varsity Basketball team demonstrated Tuesday night that they plan to continue their winning streak, as they defeated VCU 67-33.

Dottie Bohannon and Nanette Fisher made the most points for the team, Dottie making 26 and Nanette 23. Nanette was also lead rebounder with 18 rebounds.

In commenting on the game, Coach Jean Smith said, "Longwood finally hit a shooting streak from the floor. But I couldn't single out individuals because the teamwork was great."

H-S Hosts Rugby Tournament; Competes With U. Va., Others

By JOHN D. GUTHRIE
Hampden-Sydney Correspondent
The Hampden-Sydney College Rugby Club is hosting a Rugby Tournament this Saturday, at 10 a.m. on the athletic fields of Gammon Gymnasium.

There will be 32 teams that will compete in the quarter final eliminations. The winners of the quarter finals will compete as semi-finalists in order to establish the two teams who will play for the tourney championship. Some of the teams that have been invited to the tournament are Princeton, Rutgers, Kentucky, Wheeling College, Syracuse, and the University of Virginia.

Dr. John C. Hinchcliff, coach of the Hampden-Sydney Rugby

Squad, said, "Last year Hampden-Sydney was beaten by the University of Kentucky in the quarter finals. The winning team was Wheeling College which beat Princeton in the finals."

"I have the feeling," he continued, "that we have a much better chance this year because we have much the same team. For us, the important competitors will be U. Va., Princeton, Wheeling, and Kentucky."

"We hope that Saturday will be as pretty a day as we had last year," Coach Hinchcliff said. "The continuous action of the Rugby Tournament and the good weather brought a large crowd."

What Is "The Woman's Liberation Movement?"

By LYNDA VAN HORN

Do you feel oppressed as a woman? Are you tired of being a second class citizen? Is there a woman's liberation movement in process at Longwood and if there isn't, should there be?

These are only a few of the questions that came to mind after hearing Father Burghardt speak on Woman's Liberation on February 15. The main point Father Burghardt stressed is that woman's liberation should be a personal action rather than a crowd-following, bra-burning celebration.

What is woman's liberation all about? Unfortunately or perhaps fortunately depending on your point of view "The Woman's Liberation Movement" has done much in alienating both women and men from its cause. To many the movement is labeled just another radical ineffectual movement that is doomed to fail.

? Oppressed?

Often leaders and followers in the movement are labeled as unfeminine, and their assertions that women are oppressed, unwarranted. They are thought of as rejects of the feminine gender who try but fail to make it in the masculine world and are thus left somewhere in between, wherever that may be.

As one man put it, what is there to be liberated from? Shouldn't women be happy that they don't have to fight the rat race of the business world, that all their role calls for is for them to stay at home, raise the children, and watch soap operas on television all day? What are they complaining about?

That is certainly a good question to consider. So what if women are looked upon as inferior beings both physically and mentally, women don't have to handle any responsibility either, except of course the responsibility of raising a family, budgeting the household money, and keeping house, and the first two of these are generally shared by the husband.

The problem arises because for many women this is not enough. Unfortunately society has been able to mold woman into thinking her place is in the home, but it has not been able to make her stop thinking or functioning as an intellectual being.

Problems Raised

The days when women played house all day are coming to an end — at least for many women. Women are anxious to go into the world of business and education and many look forward to the time when they can share the responsibilities of their male counterparts.

Of course this is posing new problems. What will happen to the traditional family unit and the institution of marriage? Can children be raised effectively with both mother and father out of the home working all day? What will the new society that ensues through this setup be like?

Tradition states that man works outside the home and comes home at the end of the day to a home-cooked meal and a well-kept house. With the wife working all day as well, does the husband still have the right to expect this? Is not the wife just as tired as the husband?

In the "new society" both men and women will have to give up many of the traditional values if equality is to be reached. Men will have to assume much of the responsibility for keeping house and the woman will have to assume much of the burden and worries of finance which, until recently, were assumed by the husband. This is assuming, of course, that the institution of marriage is here to stay.

"But," one man complained, "I haven't been raised to cook or wash dishes." This is unfortunately very true but in many cases his college educated wife was not raised to do these things either. She was educated to be a productive person in society just as he was but because of old values imposed by society she is labeled the "housekeeper."

Longwood Speaks

Is this then truly what the educated woman of today wants? Various thoughts and opinions were aired as Longwood students were asked some of these same questions.

Students from every class were asked and it was interesting to note that more seniors felt oppressed as women than any other class. One sophomore explained, perhaps justifiably so, that seniors are faced more with the prospect of going into the business world and being sexually discriminated against. Sophomores, she said, are more sheltered and aren't forced to be concerned about that yet.

But is it just the working woman who is discriminated against? What about the bright female student who is denied entrance into a predominately male college or into a male honor society? Isn't this a form of sex discrimination, too. And if so shouldn't women of all ages be concerned?

Would you, other qualifications being equal, vote for a woman for President? Another Longwood sophomore was quick to respond negatively to this question. "Women are too emotional and not strong enough to make decisions that a President must make."

This is another society imposed myth that is being changed by concerned women. Emotions are not something determined by sex but by personality. Some people are more emotionally stable than others and their sex has little to do with it. As for strength, the fact that woman's life expectancy is longer than man's should indicate something, or as one sarcastic senior said, "What man could stand the pains of birth?"

"A woman should be allowed to work until she starts to raise a family, and then a woman's place is in the home," a Longwood freshman answered in response to another question. Many girls agreed that the woman's first role is as mother and wife and then take whatever is left.

Many girls also agreed that they would think ill of a man who wanted to do housework and of a woman who wanted to be the breadwinner of a home.

Solution Sought

But the answer does not simply lie in a reversal of traditional roles but rather a merging of roles so that both man and woman are thought of as individual personages rather than as symbols of their respective sexes.

The Woman's Liberation Movement is far from over in the United States. Neither is it a new thing that women want to be treated as people and as equals. Hints of struggle against female oppression date as far back as history — Aristophanes' "Lysistrata" is a good example.

The woman's role in America is changing. Women no longer want to be nothing more than domestic servants and nurses. No longer do women want to be thought of as intellectually lacking, physically weak, or in any way inferior. Women want to be people first, women second, and they will not stand for oppression — or will they?

Colleges In The News

Career Planning Program

STAUNTON — Taking exams before Christmas and thus extending the holiday vacation proved to be most helpful for 25 Mary Baldwin students. As participants in a January work orientation program, the students visited 11 local and national firms. The director of career planning and placement of the college organized the program "in order to expose interested students to big business." Volunteers were placed in various industries, where company officials arranged orientation programs or projects. Reports from the companies involved have been favorable and student participants echoed the success. The program was new to most of the industries, and many students noted the enthusiasm and interest by their hosts. Most programs involved orientation sessions where industry officials introduced the background and basics of the company and as a result several of this year's participants have developed interests for permanent future employment.

College Newspapers

RICHMOND — A bill to take student fee money away from newspapers at state-supported colleges was introduced last Tuesday at the House Education Committee. Fredericksburg Del. Benjamin Woodbridge insisted that this bill was not designed to censor newspapers or any other publications (the bill includes yearbooks and magazines too). It's not fair Woodbridge stated for students to have to support 'publications which they find offensive.' He is primarily incensed about articles that contain explicit discussions of sex and abortion. The publications could still be financed individually by the General Assembly under his bill, Woodbridge said, or they could support themselves through ads and subscriptions.

Commercial Term Papers

MICHIGAN — Two University of Michigan students are facing expulsion for using a commercial term paper writing service. The service sold both students identical papers, who unknowingly, turned them in to the same English professor. The company told each student that he received an original term paper which would be the only one at the university. In addition, in May of this year two Harvard students were found to have used this service. One was expelled and the other suspended for the year. Chairman of the English Department at the University said "only the student stands to lose by using this service" and added if the students can buy term papers "why don't we sell them course credits or degrees?"

New College Voters

Three fourths of the nation's 1,634,000 college freshmen say they plan to vote in the 1972 Presidential election, according to a newly released survey conducted by the American Council on Education. Researchers for the Council said that over 90 percent of those surveyed in the newly eligible 18-20 age range, thus contradicting almost all other political pollsters who have been predicting a low voter turnout for this age group.

Legislative Board Considers Committees, Handbook Changes

By BECKY NICHOLSON

When the new officers took their respective positions this year, Mary Lou Glasheen said that they felt that there was a need for improving the effectiveness of the Legislative Board committees.

On February 7 the Board decided that these Committees must meet at least once a month, and the secretaries of these committees must turn their minutes into the Legislative Board within a week after the committee meets. This only applies to committees which come under the Legislative Board such as the Infirmary Committee, whose newly elected chairman is Lynn Sheratt. The Legislative Board can elect as many members as they wish to committees under their authorization, whereas Committees of the College come under Dean Blackwell's authorization. The Legislative Board can only suggest members to these committees, and these committees will not necessarily meet once a month.

Several people were suggested for Committees of the College last Tuesday night at the Legislative Board meeting. Judy Wimmer, Sue Robins, and Susan March were suggested for the Committee for the Purchasing of Art Objects by Contemporary Virginia Artists. Susan Lewis, Becky West, and Daryl Driskill were suggested for the committee to Study the College Calendar. The Board also suggested Donna Hicks to serve on the Committee to Suggest Names for Unnamed Buildings.

During the past two sessions, the Legislative Board has been making revisions in the Longwood College Student Handbook for next year. One of the main revisions concerns readjusting the handbook in order to include Sophomores in the privilege of having automobiles on campus. If a Freshman violates the car regulations on campus, she will lose her Sophomore car privileges. If she violates the regulations a second time, she will lose her junior car privileges. Previously the punishment for car violations resulted in losing junior and senior privileges.

Another point which brought about a great deal of discussion was meeting requirements for Freshmen. On page 63 of the student handbook, under Assembly Regulations, Freshmen are required to attend Convocation. This requirement has been deleted along with compulsory attendance of at least two cultural affairs. According to Freshmen representatives of the Legislative Board, the penalties for missing one of these mandatory assemblies are not being enforced.

There were also some minor readjustments to the handbook, such as the addition of Phi Kappa Phi to Longwood's list of honorary societies. This honorary society is mainly for people interested in teacher education. In addition, the Senior Banquet Chairman has been added to the list entitled Miscellaneous Activities on page 59 of the handbook. The girls who serve as chairmen of these activities must have a 2.2 cumulative average. Another revision of the College Handbook concerns ordering birthday cakes from Slater Management. In the succeeding handbook students may order a cake one week in advance between 5 P. M. and 7 P. M. Formerly, two weeks advance notice was required for ordering a cake.

Another change was made in respect to wearing curlers on campus. Presently, girls may wear curlers on back campus after 9 P. M., except in Lankford Building. This rule is found on page 69 under General Regulations in the handbook, but the new rule will allow students to wear curlers on back campus from 6 P. M. on, except in Lankford.

A more pleasant side of the meeting concerned entries to the Miss Longwood Pageant. After a brief discussion, Jane Howard was chosen as the Student Government's representative to the pageant.

After the handbook changes were passed, the board members passed the Curfew and Visitation Opinion Poll which was initiated by Residence Board. Certain girls out of each dorm will be selected to participate in this poll.

Pat Perry Completes Reign; Returns As Student Teacher

By JANET LYNN TENNYSON

"I'll never forget my year as Maid of Cotton," said Patricia Dianne Perry, "my daddy kept scrapbooks during the entire time."

Pat Perry finished her reign this past December as the 1971 Maid of Cotton and now is in Danville completing her student teaching. At the invitation of Dr. Henry Willett, Pat was in town to speak at a luncheon of the Rotary Club of Farmville. The luncheon was held February 17, at the Hotel Weyanoke.

Pat, who is a senior home economics major, began her speech by saying, "Mrs. Griffin of the home ec. department gave me the application to enter the competition." After being selected from among twenty finalists, she was chosen as the 33rd Maid of Cotton on December 30, 1970, in Memphis, Tennessee.

"My first official duty was to ride on a special float in the Cotton Bowl parade," said Pat, "Then I left on a tour of twenty-five cities in the United States and Canada."

Leaving from Alaska, Pat and her assistants went to Korea, Japan, Taiwan, Hong Kong, Indonesia and India.

"In India, we spent eleven days and I got to meet Mrs. Indira Gandhi and sight-see at the Taj Mahal." Then the tour went to Paris, London and back to the United States.

"This time I met President Nixon," added Pat. Next she returned to Virginia to rest, and closed her reign by traveling to Memphis to crown her successor.

"My duties through out the year for the American Cotton Industry consisted mainly of promoting and encouraging the use of cotton," said Pat.

She appeared in fashion shows, on radio and television and in magazines all around the world modeling cotton clothes. The people from all countries were interested in the industry and were always asking controversial questions, she said. On the question of woman's liberation movement Pat said, "I enjoy being feminine and I don't want to be treated equally in all respects."

Pat Perry, 1971 Maid of Cotton

Col. Ray Gilchrist, an active member of the Rotary Club, escorted Miss Perry to the regular Thursday meeting.

"This isn't the first time I have spoken with the Rotarians," Pat said, "the club in Memphis sponsored a luncheon for the cotton finalists, so I seem to keep running into the club."

Miss Perry returned to Danville to prepare to leave on a trip to Texas. She will be speaking to the members of the Phi Mu sorority in Texas as well as modeling cotton clothes for the group. Pat is a member of the Phi Mu sorority on campus. Then she will return to her student teaching in her hometown of Danville, Virginia.

"My students always want me to talk to them about my tour; my supervisor even wanted me to give a talk to all the students," said Pat. As a final note, Pat added, "I have three block courses to take and then I'll graduate from Longwood in June."

Dining Hall Addition Heads Residence Board Meeting

By JANET LYNN TENNYSON

The new dining hall addition will be ready for use by students when the Fall semester begins. Denise Morris, chairman of the dining hall committee, gave a report on the new addition to the building at the Residence Board meeting held Monday, February 14.

"The banquet facilities will seat 150 people," she said. "Col. Carr wants suggestions of what to go into the banquet room in the way of decor."

Lt. Col. John E. Carr, III, vice president of the administration, said, "There will be no changes in the number of tables, but there will be more room for the girls." There are two levels — a basement extension for tables and a main extension for the banquet room and meeting rooms.

"The major feature is," said Col. Carr, "the air conditioning in the old and new sections."

The top roof of the addition has been made of special material so that it will be possible to have an outdoor French cafe effect during good weather. The roof and other new sections will cost $400,000.

Other business discussed by the board included the paper drive, fire drills, handbook changes and general complaints. The paper drive sponsored by the board will be held February 21 until March 3.

"The drive will be held for two weeks and Mr. Hendersen from Buildings and Grounds will pick up the papers," Board Chairman Terry Jones said.

A fire drill was held at 1 p.m. Tuesday, February 8, in the Cummings and "it took the girls four minutes to get outside," said Paula Williams, who is the Fire Marshall. However, it was noted that in Main Annex the noise system was faulty and that Mr. Hendersen will see to it that something is done.

Complaints included one by the Main Cunningham dorm president who asked if residents of South would please not use Main as a thoroughway to the outside.

Another complaint noted that head residents are checking cards and looking at blue slips before curfew. Terry Jones said head residents are allowed to check the outside card, but before curfew the blue slip should not be seen. Dorm presidents were asked to inform students that one clip on a sign in-sign out card means staying out overnight but returning on Sunday before curfew, that two clips mean return on Monday and three clips mean return on Tuesday.

Several handbook changes were proposed and will be taken under consideration by Residence Board. The main idea was to delete unnecessary words and give clear meaning to the rules.

Honor Society

Some men live in the cages of routine, others fly in the open skies of the spirit. Puzzled by the contrasts we see in our lives, we ask the question "Why?"
Why poverty in a land of plenty? Why loneliness in a world that would join hands? Why war when the impulse of the heart is to love?
The aching chasm between the real and the ideal everywhere provokes the question . . .

Day Care Center Volunteers Have Transportation Problem

Mitchell Resigns

Attorney General, John N. Mitchell retired to take command of President Nixon's re-election campaign. Richard G. Kleindienst was quickly nominated to succeed Mitchell.

Kleindienst is an Arizona conservative who is promised close questioning by the Senate. However, early indications are that his nomination will gain Senate approval.

Nominated also, was Louis Patrick Gray III to take the number 2 Justice Department Post being vacated by Kleindienst.

Pact Signed To Bar Dumping

Twelve European countries signed a pact designed to end the dumping of poisonous waste by ships and planes.

Prohibited in this pact would be the dumping of dangerous substances such as mercury and cadmium. Only with special permits could other less harmful substances such as arsenic, lead, pesticides, scrap metal and tar be dumped.

This has been described as "the biggest single step yet taken to fight sea pollution."

Those European countries signing the pact are Belgium, France, Denmark, West Germany, Finland, Iceland, Netherlands, Portugal, Spain and Sweden. The Soviet Union and Poland were invited to sign, but declined.

Trade With China Relaxed

Trade with Communist China was opened a bit more, putting it on equal footing with the Soviet Union.

According to Press Secretary Ronald L. Ziegler, the "across-the-board" parity in trade regulators for Communist China and the Soviet Union and other Eastern European countries will permit the flow of a larger number of non-strategic products into China. Ziegler added, "We hope that the People's Republic of China will be receptive to this step to further open communication with us."

Under the new regulations, China will be able to import a long list of items previously banned including, locomotives, construction equipment and other equipment.

Bomb Kills 17 In Manila

Seventeen persons were killed when a powerful bomb in a plastic factory blew up. The factory was next to a school and 8 of the 17 dead were children. About 20 homes were demolished.

By LYNNE PIERCE
"I had no idea this many people would show up," said Barbara Radford when thirty-seven students gathered in the Curry Commons Room.

The students were there to enroll as volunteers in a project being sponsored by the Students for Community Service. The students will be working at two day care centers, Bright Hope and Meherrin, which are meant to be low tuition, nursery-type schools for children three to six years old.

The object of the centers is to provide pre-school experience for the children. The student volunteers were told that they would be expected to set up programs to teach the children subjects, such as math and science, each time they go to the centers. Since the children's mothers work and pick them up whenever they get off work, Barbara said it would be impossible to set up regular classes. She suggested projects similar to those featured on Sesame Street for quick learning.

The volunteers were told that their groups would be under their own supervision, but that they would also be responsible for getting things done. They were also told that they would each have to have a blood test to check for syphilis and a chest X-ray to check for tuberculosis before their health certificates could be signed and they would be allowed to work. Barbara is planning for the group to go to the Public Health Center, where the tests will be done for free, but added that students can have them done by their family doctors.

When asked what the major problem she is encountering is, Barbara replied, "transportation definitely." The centers are staffed on a full day basis by teachers who cannot come in to pick up the volunteers who only work in the afternoons. State cars cannot be used because Students for Community Service is not an officially recognized organization at Longwood. Transportation is necessary because Bright Hope is a thirty minute drive from the campus and Meherrin is approximately twenty.

Barbara has tried to team the volunteers with students in Sociology 334. Some of these girls are working at the centers as their class projects and therefore are able to use state cars. The other volunteers, for the moment, are left to finding transportation the best way they can. Barbara said she hoped that, since so many students volunteered for the project, some method of regular transportation can be set up through the college.

Applications For Counselors Available From Dean Heintz

By VICKI BOWLING
Are you understanding, sympathetic, cooperative, and interested in the problems of others? Are you willing to give time and energy to helping freshmen?

If your answer to these questions is an enthusiastic yes, perhaps you should consider being a Resident Counselor for the 1972-73 school year.

A Resident Counselor is generally a sophomore or junior who lives in a freshman dorm. She does exactly what her title denotes - she counsels freshmen students.

There is no set number of hours which a Resident Counselor is required to spend on her duties, although 10-15 hours each week is suggested. Each counselor decides for herself what is necessary for her particular group of freshmen.

The present salary for a Resident Counselor is $55.55 per month for nine months.

Any student applying for such a position should possess all of the qualities mentioned above. In addition, she should be aware of student and or freshman problems and be willing to talk about them.

Dean Heintz suggests that students who participate in many extra-curricular activities probably would not have the time to devote to this position.

Any girl interested in applying for a position as a Resident Counselor, or who would like to recommend a student for a position, should obtain an application form and schedule an interview at Dean Heintz's office. Applications are available now and should be completed by March 1.

DR. MacKENDRICK

Dr. MacKendrick To Speak Here On Ovid, Golden Age

By SHARON CURLING
Professor of Classics at the University of Wisconsin, Dr. Paul L. MacKendrick will speak at Longwood next Tuesday at 1 p.m. Dr. MacKendrick's topic will be, "Love in a Golden Age: Ovid." Dr. MacKendrick received both his A. M. and Ph. D. from Harvard University. Before coming to the University of Wisconsin he held faculty positions at Philip Academy, Andover and Harvard University.

Twice, MacKendrick has been to Italy on research fellowships. He is a member of the Board of Trustees of the American Academy in Rome and was for 3 years professor in charge of the school of Classical Studies. In 1965-66 he was visiting Professor of Classics at the University of Ibadan in Nigeria.

A few of the organizations that he is associated with are the American Philological Association, American Council of Learned Societies, American Association of University Professors, and Chairman of the Board of Directors of the National Humanities Foundation.

MacKendrick is the author of numerous articles in journals and the author of the book, "The Ancient World." He is also the co-author of a number of books.

The Alpha Phi's launched a campaign the first of this month to raise money for the local heart fund drive. Since their national Philanthropic project is the heart fund, these sorority members have volunteered their time and services for the past few years during the month of February which is National Heart Fund Month. They are assisting Mr. John J. Mitchell, Director of Public Relations at Longwood, who is head of the local heart fund drive in Farmville.

On most days of the week friendly volunteers can be seen soliciting money and giving out pamphlets on many of the street corners downtown and at the Farmville Shopping Center, or walking door-to-door throughout the neighboring communities. Last year Alpha Phi Sorority raised more than $250 in donations towards the fund and this year they hope to be even more successful in their efforts to raise money.

Enchanted by the thoughts of hearts and flowers, the Sigma Kappa sorority entertained with a formal Valentine's Dance last Saturday night for their members, pledges and their dates. The Wedgewood Country Club proved to be most appropriate for entertaining invited alumni and special guests including Dr. and Mrs. Willett, Mr. and Mrs. George Bristol, Mr. and Mrs. Anthony Cristo, and Mr. and Mrs. Donald Stuart. Surrounded by the music of the Merchant's Row, the Sweetheart Dance seemed complete and the evening proved to be most successful and enjoyable for everyone.

2,500 Letters Pile In Each Day For Students

By JANET LYNN TENNYSON
"There's nothing more exciting than seeing a girl receive an unexpected package," said Mrs. Mary Franke.

"I wish I had a letter to give to each girl who doesn't receive mail," said Mrs. Bess P. Daniel. These two ladies have the job of receiving, counting, sorting and placing into the 1,160 boxes all the mail that is received at Longwood College. The office is strictly a section of the college and not a federal post office. However, Mr. Noten Webb, Jr., superintendent of the mail in the Farmville office, said, "We have a fine agreement with the college, and we work together in getting the mail to the students."

How much mail is there? Well, according to Mr. Webb, the student mail runs about like this: 2,500 letters, 60 parcels, 300 magazines and third class mail and 500 newspapers, all in an average day.

The mail is delivered to the college about 8:30 each morning and usually by 10:30 all mail is delivered to the boxes. The two hours also includes writing approximately 150 notices telling students whether they have packages or postage due letters waiting to be picked up.

Mrs. Frank and Mrs. Daniel, both agreed that Wednesday is the heaviest day for mail this year. "Monday seems to be the lightest," said Mrs. Daniel, "except for the Sunday papers."

For mail going from the students to out of town, the average, Mr. Webb said, "is 1,000 letters a day, I guess because girls have time to write on the weekends and Sunday nights."

The college post office is open from 11 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday, to sell stamps, mail parcels, but this office does not insure packages or send registered letters. For this type of business, the Farmville Post Office is the place to deal.

"Maybe in the future," Mr. Webb commented, "there will be an official post office at the school, but for now our office handles all the college mail."

But whether it is the official or unofficial post office apparently makes little difference to Longwood students as long as the mail comes through. And for those who receive no mail, Mrs. Bess Daniel will continue to wish she could help them.

Radford Professors File Dismissal Suit

By LYNDIA VAN HORN

Dr. Charles K. Martin, Jr., President of Radford College, has been named defendant in three cases involving dismissal of faculty members.

In the most recent suit, Ralph Flynn a history professor at Radford, charged that his contract was not renewed "because he wears a beard, has actively supported Jervey's (another Radford professor filing suit) cause, and helped form a chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union on campus." Official reason for Flynn's non-renewal was his failure to acquire a doctoral degree.

Flynn also charges in his suit that Martin has "autocratically abused his power as president of the college, both toward faculty and students, causing fear of dismissal for exercise of the most fundamental of constitutional rights."

Also filing suit against Martin are Mrs. Mary Holliman, an English professor at Radford, who charges "she was dismissed without sufficient cause" and Dr.

Edward D. Jervey.

Dr. Jervey did not lose his contract due to tenure but he charges in his suit that "he was denied salary increases and other privileges because he wrote a letter to a national magazine praising an article on premarital sex."

Response on the part of students and faculty has been varied at Radford. One faculty member whose contract was not renewed also demanded in a letter to the GRAPURCHAT, the Radford College newspaper, that "the actual reasons for my non-renewal be revealed."

Though Frances Keys, Student Government President at Radford, said she wished to make no comment at the present, she did admit that student sponsored petitions had been presented to the Board of Visitors.

Also she says, "Most kids aren't worried about Martin; he's going to be out in a month anyway."

Martin, due to become Chancellor of the college in March, will be replaced by Dr. Donald N. Dedmon.

Meetings On Drugs Feb. 28 and March 20

On Monday evening, February 28, 1972, Mr. David Jones, Special Investigator for the Virginia Department of State Police, District III, will speak to members of Student Government Association and dormitory personnel and conduct a discussion session on drugs. The meeting will be held at 7 p. m. in the BC Room, Lankford Building.

On Monday, March 20, 1972, a second meeting will be held at 7 p. m., in the Gold Room in Lankford Building, for Dorm and Hall Presidents, Resident Counselors, and all representatives of Student Government Association. At this time suggestions for leading small group discussions, types of questions often asked about drugs, and other related topics of interest will be discussed.

Mr. John Kelly of the Virginia Drug Control Board will attend this meeting to discuss various conditions in the State at the present time. Investigator Jones will also be here for this meeting.

L C Council Met To Discuss Problems

The Longwood College Council met last Tuesday at an informal luncheon in Lankford. Serving as an advisory group to the President, the Council was organized two years ago and meets at least once every two months.

Members of the council include five members of the faculty elected by the faculty for staggered three year terms, the Dean of the College, the Vice-President for Administration, the Dean of Students, the Business Manager and the Director of Special Services.

Student members consist of the president of student government, the chairman of Residence Board, and the presidents of the senior, junior and sophomore classes.

The purpose of the council is to acquaint the faculty with the student leaders of many of the school's organizations on an informal basis. Current problems and ideas are brought up by the students and faculty to see each other's reactions before they are presented to the student body.

Father Burghardt

vision does not create an image, but only spreads the one that already exists.

An explanation of why women are oppressed began with an anecdote about a banner Father Burghardt had seen at a Women's Lib march which read "Eve was framed." He said that women's status had been determined by a long progression through history and a mixture of many cultures. He added that the banner "may have been closer to the truth" than its bearer suspected.

The lecture concluded with methods which Father Burghardt felt might be used to end the oppression of women. He said he felt that the liberation movement would end in tragedy if it played down marriage and that it should instead "seek new patterns" for marriage. "All of us will be liberated together or none of us will be liberated" were his closing remarks.

In addition to his lecture, Father Burghardt led two "free" discussion groups and performed mass at St. Theresa's Catholic Church. He also spent time speaking to individual students and one was heard to remark, "I've never met anyone like him."

Curry Elevator Captures A Passenger - Bussard

By VICKI BOWLING
A stuck elevator? In Farmville?! In Curry?!!
Don't be ridiculous! Everyone knows that elevators only get stuck during power blackouts in cities like New York and San Francisco, Or do they?

Senior Ladonna Bussard can testify to the fact that the elevators in Curry really can be stuck, trapping inside helpless, innocent victims.

Last Friday seemed like any other Friday to Ladonna. Nothing unusual was going on. She had been to see a friend on fifth floor Curry. It was when she entered the elevator to return to her room on the ninth floor that IT happened.

Just before the doors shut, she remembered that she had forgotten something. She immediately pushed the button marked "Door Open." The doors didn't open! Nor would they close all the way! Ladonna yelled to her friend for help. After her friend got over her laughing fit, she went for Mrs. Crandall, who in turn called Building and Grounds for help.

"I was scared at first," Ladonna admits, "but when I knew help was coming I felt better."

Meanwhile, amused and concerned bystanders stood by to keep Ladonna company. Between her own fits of laughter (hysterical?) Ladonna chastised her companions for laughing!

Her helpful friend decided that Ladonna needed guiding literature to help her while away the time. Through the crack between the doors, she passed such works as "How To Have a Happy Day," "What To Do When," and "Great Messages for Christian Living," all by Norman Vincent Peale. Finally help came. At first it seemed that the help wasn't helping. The two men instructed Ladonna to push certain buttons. Nothing happened. They tried to pull the doors open, and they tried to push the doors shut, Nothing happened. They used the key to the elevator. Nothing happened. Caught up in the humor (?) of the situation, one man offered to push a package of crackers through the crack to Ladonna. He also suggested that she could sip a coke through a straw.

At long last, with Ladonna pushing the right set of buttons and the men applying the right amount of pressure to the doors, the doors opened. Out walked a relieved, embarrassed Ladonna. What was Ladonna's response to the whole situation?
"After this I'll walk!" she vows.

Amchitka Island's Blast Causes Sea Otters' Death

(CPS) — News reports now estimate the number of sea otters killed by the AEC's Cannikin test at somewhere between 900 and 1,100 animals, according to the preliminary surveys made by the Alaska Department of Fish and Game and a biologist under contract to the AEC to do sea otter studies. The original Cannikin environmental impact statement had asserted that fewer than 20 sea otters would suffer measurable physiological effects from the blast. Scientists state that the Bering Sea side of Amchitka Island is "80 to 90 per cent" devoid of sea otters.

Debbie Arvin Takes Part In Ground Breaking

By BECKY NICHOLSON
On Valentine's Day Miss Longwood, Debbie Arvin (Dee Dee) participated in the groundbreaking ceremonies for the new bank, Citizens Savings and Loan Association, which is to be located in the west end of Farmville.
"It was really an exciting affair," Dee Dee said, "and there was a reception afterwards."
Instead of using the traditional shovel at the ceremony, a bulldozer was used. The Mayor of Farmville, Mr. George E. Ferguson, Jr., operated the bulldozer, and at the end of the ceremonies the Mayor gave Dee

Dee a "Piggy Bank."
This new bank is a branch of a larger one in Bon Air, and it will be constructed by the White Building and Supply of Keysville. If the building goes as schedule, the bank should be completed by July. Some of the participants at the event included Mayor George E. Ferguson, Jr.; J. E. Causly Davis of Bon Air, who is President of the Association; Larry Roark, manager of the Farmville office; S. W. Putney, Jr., member of the local advisory board, and Paul Schember, President of the Farmville Chamber of Commerce.

How to understand the most important part of the POW problem.

Pretend you're 12 years old and your father's a Prisoner of War in Southeast Asia.

YOU won't understand the maneuvers of the bargaining table. You'll be baffled by the cries of "political issue" or "prolonging the war."

You'll want somebody, somebody believable, to tell you your father's all right, that he's being decently treated.

This message to Hanoi and its allies is acting as spokesman for all the boys and girls, wives and parents whose fathers, husbands and sons are being held in secret captivity in North Vietnam, South Vietnam, Cambodia or Laos.

Of course, they all want the war to end and the prisoners of war to be released as soon as possible.

But meanwhile there is no need for Hanoi and its allies to delay even a day in answering this plea:

Let neutral observers into your prison camps to make sure that American prisoners are being decently treated, according to the standards of civilized nations.

There's nothing political about that. There is something very, very human about it — big enough, transcending enough to be understood by a 12-year-old boy or girl.

And understood, we hope, by Hanoi.

By acting swiftly on this issue they can earn the gratitude of millions of Americans...and respect from all the world.

Rubella Vaccine Prevents Birth Defects

EDITOR'S NOTE: Rubella poses a great threat to pregnant women. The March of Dimes concentrates much of its time on this project every year.

by Arthur J. Salisbury, M.D.

"If only I had known" is a phrase many a young mother murmurs when she learns that her baby's birth defects were caused by rubella (German measles)—a disease she caught in the early months of her pregnancy and may not have been aware of it. The National Foundation-March of Dimes, whose goal is the prevention of birth defects, has launched education programs to increase public and professional understanding of the urgent need for mass vaccination of children against German measles.

In the near future there will simply be no excuse for not having all children from ages 1 to 12 vaccinated either at school clinics, public health departments or by one's own doctor. The vaccination should be as automatic as immunization against smallpox, diphtheria, measles and polio. Some parents, unfortunately, think that a vaccination against regular measles also protects against rubella. It does not because German measles and regular measles are two distinct diseases. In the epidemic of German measles in 1964-65, some 50,000 babies throughout the country were handicapped or destroyed. This figure includes about 30,000 fetal deaths and 20,000 live-born babies who were born with blindness, deafness, heart defects and mental retardation. But if the rubella vaccine is given the widest possible use, this source of congenital damage can be eradicated.

Public Concern Vital

Small children, between kindergarten and second grade, are the most likely carriers of the disease. They can transmit it easily to their mothers or the mothers of their friends. If these children are immunized against rubella, they will not be able to pass it on to women of child-bearing age.

The most inaccessible part of the population which must be vaccinated against rubella is also highly vulnerable—preschool children. Others not yet vaccinated include many school-age children in rural areas and in ghettos.

The effectiveness of the Rubella vaccination of preschoolers is an essential part of the campaign to eliminate birth defects caused by German measles. The March of Dimes sponsors educational efforts to make the public aware of this need.

vaccine is suggested by the number of reported cases of rubella in the first six months of 1971. It is 25 per cent less than in the same period in 1970. Instead of this decrease, an increase had been expected. This preliminary indication of vaccine effectiveness provides hope that the vaccine can head off or blunt the next epidemic which could come as early as 1972.

We would like to be able to say "when and if," but it is too early to justify such optimism. Rubella cannot be totally wiped out unless the hard-to-reach preschoolers and others missed so far are vaccinated. Ultimately we hope to achieve what is called "herd immunity," which means that the number of susceptible persons is reduced below the level necessary for transmission of rubella.

Hard to Reach

In the first two years of availability of the vaccine, more than 22 million doses of rubella vaccine have been administered in public programs. This represents 48 per cent of the target population which numbers 47 million children aged 1 through 12. It is estimated that an additional 4 million doses have been given by private physicians. Thus, approximately 55 per cent of the target population has been vaccinated—a signal achievement but far less than the level required to wipe out the disease.

There is a great need for public awareness about the life-saving benefits of the rubella vaccine, and for public action. To encourage maximum use of the vaccine, March of Dimes chapters are working closely on educational projects with local health departments and medical societies and are assisting in many ways to organize and conduct vaccination clinics.

7 wrong reasons for having a baby:

1. "You're married a year now. When are you going to give us grandchildren?"

2. "You want to have a kid, Evelyn? All right, we'll have a kid. Maybe that'll patch things up."

3. "Why knock myself out working when I can have a baby?"

4. "I bet my parents would send us money if we had a baby..."

5. "Heh-heh, hey Frankie, what are you and Margie waiting for?"

6. "We only want two kids. But if we don't have a boy we'll keep trying!"

7. "Sure I want babies. What else is a woman for?"

These are just seven of the many wrong reasons for having a baby.

There's only one right reason: because you really want one.

And the right time is when you want one. When the baby can be a welcome addition, not an accidental burden.

Unfortunately lots of people who think they know how to go about birth planning don't. (Research statistics show that more than half the pregnancies each year are accidental!)

That's not having babies for wrong reasons.

That's just being wrong.

LONGWOOD COLLEGE, FARMVILLE, VIRGINIA WEDNESDAY, WEDNESDAY, MARCH 1, 1972

NO. 16

Q - For the weekend of pre-registration, will the meals in the dining hall be seated? L.W.

A - Mr. Carbone feels that since a large number of students will be on campus for that day that it will be necessary for meals to be seated for the weekend.

Q - What is the reason for the bookstore not having the books that are required for classes when they are needed? Does the registrar send the bookstore approximations? A.R.

A - Each professor tries to estimate how many students will be in a class from the number that pre-register. After the instructor places an order with the bookstore for the number of books he thinks he will need, Mr. Harper, manager of the bookstore, and the department chairmen try to decide how many new books should be ordered. Often students buy new books and because Mr. Harper cannot return many of the books that he orders, he loses a great deal of money. Actually, Mr. Harper was only off in his estimations in six classes this semester. Often the shortage of books is due to the negligence of the instructor. A deadline of December 16 was set for ordering books for second semester, but the records that Mr. Harper showed us show that most of the faculty did not order their texts until January. Some instructors even waited until the day classes started to order. It takes two weeks at the minimum for books to arrive, so when they are ordered late, they will arrive late. Mr. Harper has also had instructors order twice as many books as there were students in the class and he can only return 20% of the total order to the publishing company. For example, if 60 books are ordered and 30 are sold, this means Mr. Harper can return 12 books, but he's stuck with 18 that he may not be able to sell. Mr. Harper says any student who has a question about a book should come to him and he will explain why it was not there.

Q - What are the possibilities of Longwood ever becoming co-ed? B.C.

A - Dr. Willett served on a committee several years ago which considered this idea and gave us the following statement on their findings:

Should Judicial Board Handle Stealing?

Mary Lou Glasheen opened the meeting before turning it over to the students.

By LYNNE PIERCE
Legislative Board held an open forum for students last Thursday to discuss the proposed extension of Judicial Board's jurisdiction to cover events which occur downtown. The meeting was opened by the board's chairman, Mary Lou Glasheen, who called on Sandy Oliver, chairman of Judicial Board, to explain why the proposal had been made. Sandy gave three basic reasons for Judicial Board's support for the proposal. One reason is that bad public relations are created for the college if it continues to allow its students to steal and takes no steps to correct the problem. The second reason for their support was that, if a student is suspended by Judicial Board, nothing goes on her permanent record to indicate this. However, if a civil court convicts her, she carries a record for the rest of her life. The third reason for supporting, according to Sandy, is to relieve the merchants of a fear of repercussions from the students. The merchants do not punish students, Sandy said, because they are afraid their stores will be boycotted.

When the discussion was opened to the group, the first questions concerned whether or not the merchants would follow this policy and enforce it. There was also a question as to whether it would be double jeopardy if a merchant were to prosecute in a civil court if Judicial Board suspended the student. Dr. Willett said there was no way that it could be guaranteed that the merchants would comply with the rule. He said, even if they all signed an agreement, there was no way they could legally be held to it. Prosecution of a student by a merchant is unlikely, he feels, but, if it occurs, the courts and attorney general have ruled that the dual system is not double jeopardy.

Many of the students present voiced the opinion that handling this problem is the responsibility of the merchants and not the college. They felt that the students should not be "pampered" or receive special treatment because they attend college. One student summed up the general feeling in saying: "It seems like the question is, is the student first a citizen and then a student, or is she a student who just happens to have the right to vote?"

"I can't argue with you over the fact that they ought to perhaps do more than they're doing. At the same time, I'm saying what is the realistic situation. We've got no control over what the merchants do. I think if we do it, it puts us judicially in a better situation," said Dr. Willett. Sandy added that, once a student has a criminal record, she loses many of her rights as a citizen, including voting and holding government jobs. In light of this, she felt suspension was a much lighter penalty.

Several questions raised during the session concerned how

Longwood College Phi Kappa Phi

by LYNDA VAN HORN
"Let the love of learning rule mankind" is a translation of the motto of Phi Kappa Phi, newly initiated honor society at Longwood.

No, Phi Kappa Phi is not "just another honor society" but a society recognizing outstanding scholarship among undergraduates, placing it on the same level as Phi Beta Kappa. In fact, the only distinction between the two honor fraternities is that Phi Beta Kappa has chapters on campuses that are strictly liberal arts.

In 1897 the Universities of Maine and Tennessee and Pennsylvania State joined together to form a nationally recognized fraternity which honored those students who excelled academically but did not attend liberal arts colleges. It was not until 1900, however, that the society adopted its present name, Phi Kappa Phi, which are the Greek letters of the words in the organization's motto.

The society's primary purpose is as stated in its constitution "to emphasize scholarship and character in the thought of college students, to foster the significant purposes for which institutions of higher learning have been founded, and to stimulate mental achievement by recognition through election to membership."

Longwood's chapter is the 136th chapter to be founded but only the third such in Virginia. The process of founding a chapter at Longwood has not been an easy one though. In fact efforts to get a chapter at Longwood were begun in 1970 with the college being rejected once before its recent acceptance.

In order for a chapter to be founded, a college must have certain qualifications including a certain number of faculty members who are members of either Phi Kappa Phi or Phi Beta Kappa.

Ten members of the Longwood faculty representing approximately 20 Phi Kappa Phi and Phi Beta Kappa members on campus presented a petition for membership to Dr. George L. Robertson the regent of the national society.

The petition was officially accepted by the National Executive Council of Phi Kappa Phi in October of last year but it was not until February 24 of this year that the chapter was installed on campus.

Dr. Robert Blasch, professor of music at Longwood, who was recently installed as president of Longwood's chapter of Phi Kappa Phi thinks that the two years it took to receive a charter at Longwood is not an exceptionally long period. "We were fortunate; sometimes it takes much longer," he said.

Thursday's installation ceremonies included the official installation, a dinner for participants, and a reception for faculty and students.

The signing of the charter was the high point of the installation ceremony which also included a brief discussion of the

A Commentary:

Student Union Desperate For Help

by DRAGON CHANDLER
Chairman of Student Union

Make it a part of you to be a part of us. Have you heard our slogan? Maybe so, but did you take heed? The student union by its very name implies a group of students. Our present difficulty is the size of that group.

The union has high hopes and ambitious plans for this semester and next year. We have scheduled varied activities in an attempt to provide at least one event to appeal to any given student. We are planning to have one concert and a mixer each month. In addition, we plan to have as many other events as we are able to handle. We are also working toward programming on weekends. This is an attempt to keep students on campus and to provide for those that stay at present.

All of these are present plans, however, the possibilities outnumber them by far. For example the student union is looking toward a Coffee House. This would help toward achieving our weekend planning. Yet, we would be remaining within our budget.

Also, a symposium has been discussed as a possibility. A symposium is a week long lecture series based upon a central theme. It would take two years of planning to initiate this idea. Students would have to develop a theme, select lectures, and enlist financial support from various areas to fund such an activity. A symposium is not simply a dream. With a core of hard working students it could be a reality.

Any organization has a certain amount of growing pains when it changes as rapidly as ours has. However, we are now facing up to them and looking for solutions. Communications has been one of our biggest problems. To help resolve this a student union room has been made out of the game room in Lankford. Here messages can be left concerning any aspect of our programming. Information on various groups and next year's film catalogues have been laid out. These are placed there for all of the members of the student body, not just the representatives from the classes. Messages or suggestions left here will be assured of reaching their destination. If you have been one of the many students that have complained about some aspect of our activities, it has probably been with good reason. This is your opportunity to make your feelings known.

This is not a plea to the students to get involved in our activities. I think every student should know by now how essential this is to the Union. Rather we want the student body to know that we have reached a leveling point in our growth. From here the speed and amount of our growth will depend upon you, the students. Decide what you wish for the future of the Union to be. By your action or inaction, it will come to pass. MAKE IT A PART OF YOU TO BE A PART OF US.

The Courts Have Ruled

Anyone who attended the open forum Thursday heard the above phrase used frequently, but it is one which all Longwood students should be familiar with by now. Anytime a procedure comes into question, we hear it. It makes me wonder if the courts are doing nothing but ruling on cases that Longwood is interested in.

It now appears that "the courts" have smiled favorably on the type of system that Judicial Board wants to set up to cover stealing by students in Farmville. After all, we were told at the meeting that it would not be double jeopardy because both civil authorities and Judicial Board will have the power to penalize us, if the proposal passes. It seems that students have a "standard misunderstanding" of that concept.

Judicial Board and Dr. Willett tried to assure the students that a double prosecution would not occur, but they admitted that there is no way to guarantee that the merchants will agree to the new policy. Even worse, if they do agree, there's nothing to keep them from prosecuting against students if they feel like it. A student could quite possibly find herself with a fine or imprisonment from the courts and suspended or expelled from school by Judicial Board.

There is one way to insure that this won't happen. The Judicial Board proposal must not be passed. It is not the function of a college to regulate the lives of its students when they are off campus. Criminal cases should be left to the authorities set up to deal with them and should not be meddled in by institutions trying to protect an image. Being a Longwood student should not be a soft pass to a gentle hand-slap instead of the punishment prescribed by the law. Students should know by the time they reach college that stealing is wrong and that they will have to pay just like anyone else for breaking the law.

Unfortunately, because of our lapse in printing time, it is impossible to know at this moment what Legislative Board will decide at its meeting Tuesday. It is in the future now, but will be past when THE ROTUNDA comes out. This is a dangerous precedent that will be voted on. The idea that the college can intrude itself on the students' lives elsewhere is frightening. For this reason, THE ROTUNDA stands opposed to every facet of this proposal now and will in the future. We also feel that the majority of the student body stands with us on this issue. Needless to say, we will be very interested in the decision that is made by Legislative Board.

Responsible?

Dear Editor,

A letter appeared in this column last week about the campus police having to guard the new sidewalks so that girls would not write in the cement. It pointed out that it was silly for the police to have to do this and said that the students should be mature and responsible enough that this isn't necessary.

The letter must have had some effect, because the campus police stopped guarding the new walk at the back of Lankford. Unfortunately, as soon as they did, the students took it upon themselves to prove the letter wrong. If it had been one or two names, it might be chalked up to a few irresponsible students. However, the whole walk is lined with names and initials. The only thing to admire about it is the speed with which the students were able to accomplish their task.

I've heard other students say it was ridiculous to prevent students from writing in the cement. They point out that it's been done on other walks and that they like reading what is written. None of those are the point of the policy however. The point is that the college, for some reason known to it, did not want the walk written on and took measures to prevent this from happening.

Well, the students have proven once again, in a small way, that they can't be trusted. Granted this was a small offense. But small offenses have a habit of lumping together and proving, in the eyes of others, that students aren't capable of handling bigger responsibilities.

SAI Members Advocate Music Program In Wygal

By VICKI BOWLING

Music without Distraction, an evening of pleasant, relaxing music, will be presented again tonight in the recital hall of Wygal from 7-10 p.m.

This is the third time that the program has taken place. Members of Sigma Alpha Iota (SAI) volunteer to play the record selections.

While the response so far has been small, SAI members agree that the people who have attended Music Without Distraction have enjoyed it.

Sharon Lee, SAI member who has worked the program, said that some girls came and stayed the entire time that music was played.

"Most students who came stayed for about an hour," she said. A few girls asked about the possibility of requests being played. While no requests are played now, Sharon said, "If there is a demand for them, we'll look into it."

"The variety of the selections offered provides appeal for all those who will take advantage of the program," commented SAI member Nina Garrison.

Students and faculty alike are invited to come and listen to music without any interruptions. They may read, study, or just sit back and listen.

"I think it's a good idea," offered Jimmie Lu Null, also an SAI member. "It's a wonderful opportunity to take a break or study and enjoy music."

Anyone may come and go as he pleases, but may not eat, drink, or smoke in the recital hall, and they must not disturb others.

GYRE Sponsors First 'Longwood Festival Of Arts' On April 5, 6, 7

THE GYRE will be sponsoring the first Longwood Festival of Arts on April 5, 6 and 7. The festival, which they hope will become an annual affair, will feature readings by visiting writers, informal discussions with the writers, workshop sessions in the A B C Rooms and a panel discussion which will include some faculty members as well as the writers. A student art show and a visit by a practicing painter who will discuss his work is also being planned. The release of the 1972 GYRE is planned to coincide with the beginning of the festival.

One of the writers who has agreed to attend is Erica Jong, a Manhattan poetess who teaches at the famed 92nd St. Y in

New York. She is the author of FRUITS & VEGETABLES (Holt, Rinehart & Winston) and had nine poems published in "Poetry Magazine" last year. Besides holding degrees from Barnard College and Columbia Graduate Faculty, she had also studied under Stanley Kunitz and Mark Strand at Columbia School of the Arts. Presently she is completing her second book of poems and a novel, as well as publishing in various magazines.

David Madden, writer-in-residence at Louisiana State University, has also agreed to attend the festival. Mr. Madden has authored two novels, THE BEAUTIFUL CREED and CASSANDRA SINGING, THE SHADOW KNOWS, a collection of short stories, and has written numerous plays, articles, poems, essays and theater reviews. Besides writing for several magazines, he has had selections chosen for THE BEST AMERICAN SHORT STORIES OF 1969 and the 1970 volume. His third novel, BROTHERS IN CONFIDENCE, will appear in August and he is currently completing a new novel, BIJOU.

Some of the works by these authors are being made available in the bookstore for interested students and faculty. Before the festival begins, Childrey Farber, editor of the GYRE, says the staff hopes to attract other artists and to recruit students to read their own works.

Silent Film Features Charlie Chaplin As 'The Little Tramp'

By MARGARET BLAIR

Cinema 71/72 will present "The Gold Rush" (1925), a silent film great written, produced, and directed by Charles Spencer Chaplin on Monday evening, March 6, at 7:30 p.m. in Bedford Auditorium. Charlie Chaplin also stars in the film as The Little Tramp, a legendary character in cinema folklore with the familiar baggy trousers, oversized shoes, bamboo cane, moustache, bowler hat, and waddling side-to-side gait. In this episode The Little Tramp becomes a lone prospector of the Alaskan Klondike.

Charlie goes from near starvation caught during a snowstorm in a Klondike cabin with a delirious prospector to becoming a wealthy man. In the meantime, there are some of the funniest and most pathetic moments. The most unforgettable happens when the starving Charlie eats stewed shoe with all the characteristic manners and gracefulness belonging to The Little Tramp. Even with the slapstick comedy Chaplin films are noted for, The Little Tramp receives the sympathy of the viewers when he falls in love with a beautiful dancehall girl. He painstakingly prepares a New Year's Eve dinner for her and the other saloon girls only to have his invitation forgotten. The story has a happy ending when Charlie shares the gold found with his prospector friend and then meets and makes up with the girl who is unaware of his newly found wealth.

Charlie Chaplin in "The Gold Rush"

Even though the film is seemingly simple, it has a theme revealing the struggle for survival. Chaplin fully exposes all the elements in the character of The Little Tramp. When the film was released, THE NEW YORK TIMES wrote "Here is a comedy with streaks of poetry, pathos, tenderness, linked with brusqueness and boisterousness. It is the outstanding gem of all Chaplin's pictures."

Students Attend Entertainment Conference In Kansas City Feb. 12-16

by VICKI BOWLING

"Entertainment." Something diverting or engaging, according to Mr. Webster.

But think of an organization to which entertainment means "anything occupying a student's free time," and you have a wide range of ideas to consider!

The National Entertainment Conference (NEC) happens to be such an organization. The NEC deals with concerts, travel, lectures — anything and everything in which a student is interested.

Dragon Chandler and AnnScott, Student Union chairman and vice-chairman, respectively, participated in the NEC convention in Kansas City, Missouri, February 12-16. Mr. Frank Williams of the Business Office accompanied them. Longwood is one of six Virginia schools which belongs to the NEC and sends delegates to the conventions. Other Virginia members include Madison, VPI, VCU, the University of Richmond, and Old Dominion.

The convention, Dragon explained, primarily concerned the booking of entertainment. "There was something going on every minute," she said.

During the day, workshops were held on such aspects of entertainment as programs, contracts, and the setting up of exhibits. Showcases, in which performers gave "mini-performances," were held in the evenings.

In addition to the workshops and showcases, there were also display booths in an exhibit hall. The different agencies which handled the performers set up these booths. Stereo tapes and video viewers (similar to television) enabled anyone to hear and see performers which the agencies were trying to promote. They promoted both big name entertainers and up-and-coming young performers.

Through this convention, colleges were able to book the talent which they wanted to perform on their campuses. Many schools in the same area will "book book" a group or single entertainer, that is, different schools will book the same act for consecutive dates. This cuts down on travel and expense for the performer.

The convention offers acts at a reduced rate to encourage booking, particularly block booking, Dragon said. It is also felt that students from one school will talk to students from other schools in their area and will publicize the performers they see.

"You could book almost anything you wanted," she said, "because most agencies were represented."

Regional conventions are also held every year. Dragon and Tim Brown attended the convention last fall in Charleston, South Carolina.

"There was some showcasing," Dragon reports, "and a lot of student talent was presented."

Through the national or regional conventions, Longwood has booked Jonathan Edwards and concerts, too much money is involved, and security is a problem. Also, students are asking for smaller, more intimate concerts.

These new performers, she went on, will play two-hour concerts, and will come out and talk with the audience.

The NEC offers much more than just musical performances. Films may be obtained. Travel programs are featured. While Longwood doesn't offer travel plans now, Dragon said that they are looking into the program, and the possibility of going in with other small schools. Longwood is also studying the possibility of setting up a coffee house in the future.

One excellent feature offered by the convention is lectures. Dragon explained that Longwood has obtained the tapes and video viewers to a set of ten lecture-interviews with such politicians as Senators Edmund Muskie and Eugene McCarthy.

Students did the interviewing for this series, which will be here in March, and they could ask anything they wanted. The agency did not edit the film.

Other lectures available include such topics as the feminist movement.

There were approximately 2000 people at the convention in Kansas City, Dragon said, about 1500 males and 500 females. She said that she and Ann didn't mind the odds a bit!

She has enjoyed the conventions which she has attended immensely. She has gotten to know a lot of the people who attend, and communicates with them. Since she does know quite a few students from other schools, she feels at ease asking them for their opinions and advice on certain aspects of entertainment.

As an example of the cooperation among the schools, Dragon cited the ease with which Longwood can publicize its mixers.

"I just call the guys from the Student Union and tell them about the mixer. We usually have no problem getting guys here," she said.

The Student Union is planning on sponsoring a mixer and a "mini-concert" each month next year. Dragon has heard all of the performers for the concerts, either in person or on tapes.

There will be a bridal show in March and a beachware show this spring, she said.

Any student who would like to work with the Student Union should contact Dragon. Any and all help will be greatly appreciated, she says. "We need people!"

Miller and Burton for the Junior Ring Dance, JESUS CHRIST SUPERSTAR, presented last fall, THE FANTASTIKS, a musical to be presented this spring, Gove on March 1, the Trinidad Tripoli Steel Band for May 6, and Chet Nichols and Tim Weisberg for next fall.

Dragon said that she tried to talk Longwood into booking Jonathan Edwards last fall, before his hit record "Sunshine" came out. He had been featured at the conventions last year and had impressed her. Because he wasn't well known, she couldn't convince people that he was worth booking.

Madison College presented him in concert, and also tried to talk Longwood into having him. When Longwood finally booked him for Ring Dance Weekend, Dragon said, his fee was three times as much as before! The people from Madison really like to rub it in, she laughed.

Miller and Burton are a folk duo who will perform before Jonathan Edwards.

"We needed someone to build the audience up for Jonathan Edwards," she explained.

Gove is local talent, hailing from Virginia Beach. Other Virginia schools have also booked him.

The Trinidad Tripoli Steel Band has as its only instrument steel drums. According to Dragon, the sound produced is "just like a symphony orchestra," playing everything from calypso to pop.

"By next fall, people will have heard of Chet Nichols," she says, confidently.

Tim Weisberg is a jazz flutist with full accompaniment. His sound is very different and new, which Dragon described as "heavy!"

"The big schools are getting away from big pop concerts," Dragon said, "and are going to smaller, more personal ones. They're leaving the big concerts to city coliseums."

Reasons for this trend are many, she explained. With big

Abraham Brothers Perform Religious Emphasis Week

by JANET LYNN TENNYSON

"He's the real thing!" is the theme of the YWCA's Religious Emphasis Week, coming March 6 through 10.

"The next will begin Monday night with an old-fashioned revival," said Brenda Griffin, chairman of YWCA. Featured speaker will be Steve Abels, who is a junior at Hampden-Sydney College. He is currently a Bible major who plans to become a religious leader.

The highlight of the week comes with Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday evenings. "The nation's youngest male gospel group," the Abraham Brothers will perform in a concert of religious music. The group is composed of four young men — Bob Finney, Ed Finney, Gary Abraham and Don Abraham. The brothers' hometown is Youngstown, Ohio, but they travel extensively, especially in the southeast.

The Abraham Brothers have recorded two records and the latest is "One Way." The gospel group will entertain the students by singing several selections in the dining hall at Tuesday night dinner, including their latest record.

At the Farmville Baptist Church, the group will perform on Wednesday afternoon. The concert is for the students attending Prince Edward Academy.

The brothers will be guests of the college while on campus and they will be staying at the Alumni House.

During the Religious Emphasis Week, each evening there will be vesper services held at the Episcopal Church in Farmville. The Newman Club and Baptist Student Union are in charge of the services.

The YWCA will also give different blessings at all the meals during the week. On Thursday, the blessing will be sung in a traditional form of praise.

"We want to change this week to meet the needs and demands of the students," said Brenda. "The whole week will be casual."

Religious Emphasis Week will be a week of singing, prayers and study. "The week's activities are open to all students and we hope to have many people share in the fun," added Brenda.

Our best estimate would be that we would have less than 20% males, probably even as little as 10%.

Q - Would you please outline the purposes of Chi?

A - Miss Bishop, Chi's advisor, was out of town last week and unavailable for consultation. Therefore, since we are not knowingly acquainted with any Chi members, we will have to refer you to the handbook. The handbook states the purpose is to "promote and maintain a spirit of cooperation among students in every phase of college life. It is our aim to foster respect for Longwood and loyalty to its academic program and extracurricular activities." We understand Chi has been reorganized some this year, so if there is a member out there who can answer this question better, we're waiting to hear from you.

Q - How many girls attending Longwood College are engaged in premarital sex? C.S.

A - Dr. Heintz said that many of the students who were polled at the beginning of the year indicated a reluctance to answer this question. They felt it was their private business and a question the college should not delve into. However, of the 513 students, which is 23% of the student body, who answered the question, 145, or 29% of those polled, indicated they had had premarital relations. 363 students, or 71% of those polled, indicated no premarital relations, but this number could possibly include students who were reluctant to answer the question.

Q - When do seniors who graduate in summer school send out announcements? Is there a summer commencement and when do you apply for your degree? S.L.

A - The college only holds one commencement program during the year which is the one in June. Students applying for a degree must have their completed forms in to the Dean of Students at least 90 days before she finishes her work; however, the sooner she has her forms in, the quicker they can be processed and less chance of a mistake exists. Students who finish their degree in summer school will receive their certificates for teaching right away, but will not receive their diplomas until the next June. Diplomas are always held for the first June commencement after the degree requirements are completed.

Longwood Loses First Basketball Game To Roanoke College, 32-43

By VALERIE BLANKS
Roanoke College gave the Longwood Varsity basketball team their first loss of the season last Tuesday, Feb. 22 with a score of 43-32.

Roanoke led until the third quarter when Longwood took the lead. But they were unable to hold it and scored only one point in the fourth quarter.

Two of the team's starters, Nanette Fisher and Janet Ford, were unable to play due to injuries.

Dottie Bohannon and Sue Manahan were lead scorers, and Sue Manahan and Daryl Driskill brought in the most rebounds. Commenting on the game, Coach Jean Smith said, "We just couldn't play Longwood basketball."

Swimming

Swimming - The Westhampton varsity swimmers visited Longwood last Wednesday for a swim meet and were overpowered by the Longwood team 78-34.

The Longwood team took first place in 12 of the 13 individual and multiple member events in the meet. Those swimmers taking a first place were, in alphabetical order: Debbie Acker, Becky Burch, Eleanor Challen, Kathy Kutsher, Sarah Todd Lewis, Kathy Umbdenstock, Pam Walker, and Robin Wallmeyer.

The swim meet goes to Mary Washington for a meet tonight.

Fencing

Fencing Team - The Radford fencing team defeated Longwood 10-6 at a meet held Tuesday, Feb. 22. In scoring, Joyce Miller won 4 out of 4 bouts, Robin Fekety, 1 out of 4, and Karen McLeod, 1 out of 2.

The Longwood fencing team placed second in a Tri-Meet held Friday with Lynchburg and Madison.

The team defeated Lynchburg 12-4 with Joyce Miller and Karen McLeod both winning 4 out of 4 bouts, Robin Fekety and Jeris Folk won 2 of their 4 bouts.

But Madison defeated Longwood 10-6 with Joyce Miller winning 4 out of 4 bouts and Robin Fekety, 2 out of 4.

The Longwood team will compete against Hollins College here Tuesday.

Karate Class Has 80 L.C. And H-SC Students; Mr. Ed Smith Is Instructor Of The Art

By SHARON CURLING
CAROL DIROSA
LEIGH PIERCE

Have you noticed something strange about your roommate lately? Does she jump around the room and kick the furniture? Does she continually chop the air with her hand and elbows? Does she enter the room by kicking the door in? Is she always on the defensive? If you have noticed any of these peculiarities in her, it may be the result of her karate class.

This Experimental College class meets every Tuesday and Thursday from 7:00 to 8:30 in Frazer rec with their instructor Mr. Ed Smith, an instructor in the Psychology Department. The karate class has proved to be one of great interest to the student body. There are nearly 80 participants, including approximately 15-20 students from Hampden-Sydney.

Mr. Smith first became interested in karate about seven years ago while in college. His interest was renewed four and a half years later while he was at Kent State, where he received his black belt. It takes two and a half to three years to earn a black belt.

Mr. Smith is teaching the class because many people had expressed an interest in karate. He seemed pleased with the enthusiasm and progress that his students have made in a short time. He plans to continue the classes past the end of the Experimental College for as long as students indicate an interest in it. Lessons will also be given during the summer to those students who are on campus.

Each member of the class has been asked to buy a gi, the traditional dress of karate, since the class will run indefinitely. A gi resembles a two-piece pajama outfit, with white pants and a white buttonless jacket. The jacket is held closed by the belt.

The immediate concern of the group is their need for a larger practice area. Originally, they met in Iler Gym, but they were forced to move to Frazer because of intermural basketball games and practice sessions for the basketball team. The rec has proven to be inadequate but will have to be used until larger facilities are available.

Several students were asked their opinions of the class. When asked why she was taking the class, Brenda Elford replied, "for self-defense," but quickly added that she did not think she would need to use it at Longwood. "This is one of my most interesting and challenging courses and a type I've never taken before," Faye Cunningham replied when asked how it compared with her other classes. The general feelings of the class were summed up by Judy Rider when she said, "It's hard work but a lot of fun!"

What About "The Crippled Generation"?

By LYNDY VAN HORN

(Editor's note: Bob Smith wrote in his book THEY CLOSED THEIR SCHOOLS about the trauma in Prince Edward County after the federal court ruling that the county must integrate its public schools. Lynda Van Horn, Rotunda feature writer and reporter, in a two-part series looks at what happened to some of the young people who received no formal public education after the county closed its schools for four years. This is the first of her articles.)

"Carol lives with a great-aunt; leaves home each Sunday afternoon and returns to Farmville on Friday evening. Today while unpacking Carol's laundry bag, her mother found tucked in a dress pocket this carefully drawn note: 'I want to go home now. Mother, I love you so much I want to go home, I want to go home now.'"

Yet, according to Helen Baker in the July 16, 1961 issue of "The Farmville Herald," Carol is one of the lucky ones. She is only one of about 400 Negro children who were sent away from their homes just in order to be able to attend school. The other 13,000 children remained at home to get what little education they could.

When the Prince Edward County public schools closed in 1959, refusing to have the schools integrated, 17,000 Negro children were denied any form of education in the county. Most of the white children, though certainly not all, were sent to the newly built Prince Edward Academy—the segregated private school built by the Prince Edward Foundation.

The Effects

What effect did the closing of the schools have upon the Negro school population who were forbidden admission to the Academy and upon the white children who for some reason did not attend the Academy? The effects were crippling and could only be determined through long range study.

Dr. Robert Green, a member of the education department at Michigan State, who came to Prince Edward County to try to salvage black education, writes of the conditions: "Early school deprivation may have irreversible effects," he wrote in his report. "If this is the case, then the rate of subsequent development should be substantially different for children who have experienced severe early deprivation. Terminal skill development of these children would never attain a normal level."

Still, there were the lucky ones like Carol. Several remedial programs were begun to help these children. In the summer of 1961 the Virginia Teachers' Association began a remedial program using teaching machines and concentrating basically on reading. This program affected 425 students.

Crash Programs

In the summer of 1963, members of the American Federation of Teachers began a similar "crash" program. These programs lasted about a month each but were able to expose more Negro children to at least basic professional education.

According to the records of Rev. L. Francis Griffin, leader of the desegregation effort in Prince Edward, over 600 children attended one of the training centers set up mainly through private funds during the first three years of the school-closing.

One such center is remembered by Bob Smith in his book THEY CLOSED THEIR SCHOOLS. Two classes were being taught in the same room at the same time, the result being chaos. Neither of the two teachers held any professional degree or claimed any professional experience. The better educated of the two had finished the eleventh grade. They did the best they could, teaching only a minimum.

According to Smith there had been ten centers in the first year and fifteen in 1960-61, but only five remained by 1962 with total enrollment dropping to about 350 children. The centers turned out to be more child care centers than schools.

The best program initiated in these years was unfortunately the one that aided the fewest number of blacks. This was the American Friends Service Committee's programs. Sixty-seven children were sent to ten communities in eight states during the years the schools remained closed.

The children were boarded out with both black and white Northern families. Only those who showed intellectual promise were chosen and the educational advantage to these children was great.

There were also those children such as Carol who were sent to live with relatives so that they would be able to attend schools in other counties. "Bootlegging" of children to other counties' schools also became a common practice.

Negro teachers would fill up their cars with children and take them to nearby counties to enter school and take up their work with the other children. Though the teachers and in some cases the principals of these schools knew what was going on, they tended to close their eyes and allow the children a tuition-free education.

Some parents who had no relatives to send their children to and whose children were not lucky enough to be chosen by the American Friends, resorted to teaching their children themselves. The results of this are hard to determine, but it is generally thought that little of value came about through this parent-child tutoring program.

Only 11,000 Of 17,000

Still, estimates Green, only about 11,000 of the 17,000 Negro children involved received any formal education during the four years in which the schools were closed.

Most educators outside of the county were shocked by what they saw as they entered Prince Edward County. Writes Richard Parrish organizer of the American Federation of Teachers' project in his report issued August 12, 1963: "It is obvious that there are gross needs. The most serious needs are in the county areas as distinguished from the Farmville metropolis. In the hinterlands you can run into a 16-year-old girl who can't read a first grade book and children 10, 11, and 13 operating on a second grade level."

Dr. Green writes of similar findings and says in his report that some of the youngsters had lost the ability to manipulate a pencil.

In an extreme case, one Longwood College professor remembers that he tested a child on a standardized IQ test who had never ever seen a picture.

Lost Generation

These children are of the lost generation or as more commonly called the "Crippled Generation." Parent tutoring and haphazard private programs could not be expected to fill in the terrific gaps left in the children's education.

If the schools were to remain closed, something must be done on a federal level that would start these children back on the road to education.

The children were discouraged. If anything were to be done to get them in school and keep them there, it would have to be dramatic and immediate.

Males Run For May Queen

BOONE, N.C. — For the first time in the history of Appalachian State University, male students have been nominated to run for the ASU May Day Court. Thus far, out of eleven students who have registered for the elections, seven are male. As one male May Court candidate explained, "I am running for May Court because the way it is done now is a farce for it discriminates against minority groups. The fact that males are running for May Queen underscores the stupidity of beauty pageants; they are plastic and external. If a guy is elected, it will show student contempt for beauty pageants." These males contend that there is little student interest under the current beauty pageant election system and they just serve to build up egos. The money that is spent on pageants could be put to a more useful purpose.

'Rat' Investigation

LEXINGTON — Gen. Richard Irby, the superintendent of Virginia Military Institute, disclosed last week that he is investigating "a celebration on Feb. 17 in which several 'rats' or freshmen received minor injuries including some that required stitches." The celebration was the traditional ceremony that marked the end of ratting. The investigation was ordered after it was learned that several rats were injured when seniors tried to traditionally stop them from reaching their fourth-floor rooms in the barracks. Although the rats that were questioned emphatically had responded that they liked this hazing a probe into the matter is still continuing.

Key Bill

RICHMOND — The Virginia House dealt with a key measure last Tuesday — that is, a measure concerning keys. Delegate John Dalton of Radford, proposed a bill that would make the unwarranted possession or duplication of keys a misdemeanor. The bill was introduced as a modest proposal to prevent Virginia Tech students from borrowing a key to a building and having it duplicated. School officials had asked for the bill.

New College Formed

BOONE, N.C. — Appalachian State University is combining its regional service programs into the College of Continuing Education, a new college that has just been formed to take the University to people who need its help. This field of continuing education is a brand new wave of education. The new college will be made up of several previously existing programs plus some new areas that will help fulfill Appalachian's public service obligations. Established programs that will be made more effective as part of the separate college include the divisions of extension and field services, summer sessions, speakers bureau, educational campus, and the ACTION antipoverty program. Proposed programs that ASU hopes to incorporate in the new college include: An external degree program that will allow students to earn degrees primarily away from the campus; An educational television system that would serve homes and schools in Appalachian's region;

Faculty Follies proved to be an evening of varied and entertaining acts. Some of the above pictures show Dean Nuckols as a cheerleader, Mrs. Anderson as the sex symbol of the Dating Game, Dean Blackwell as a maintenance man and Dr. Willett as the leader of a rock and roll group.

Shoplifting Proposal Before Board

by BECKY NICHOLSON

A new proposal for the Student Handbook dealing with shoplifting within the corporate limits of Farmville, resulted in much discussion at the Legislative Board meeting February 21.

The new proposal would allow Judicial Board to handle shoplifting cases involving students at Longwood rather than having their cases dealt with my civil authorities.

A decision on the proposal was postponed until the next meeting so that Legislative Board could discuss it with the student body. (See other story on Page One.)

The Board concluded that the merchants of Farmville are not pressing charges against girls who have stolen items from their stores because of the poor relations it would establish with the college. The possibility was brought into the discussion that merchants might be afraid of a student boycott, if they prosecuted a college student. Since the merchants are not taking any steps to alleviate the problem, the Judicial Board representatives stated that the College must take steps to curb the downtown stealing that is attributed to Longwood students.

In response to this, several Legislative Board members said they felt that as college students we should not be pampered, but we should be held under the law as other citizens are.

Later, the discussion was turned to another handbook change in regard to Judicial Board trials. During trials in the past, the accused was placed in the infirmary overnight until the trial was resumed. Now, the accused will have the option of staying overnight or going back to her dormitory. All Judicial Board changes were passed by the Legislative Board except the provision concerning shoplifting.

In other business, the Board discussed the use of motorcycles on campus. The administration said that due to the noise, the danger (not being able to see an approaching motorcycle in the region of Curry and Frazer), and the general layout of the campus, motorcycles and hondas are forbidden on campus. This rule does not apply to streets owned by the town. Therefore Legislative Board allowed the rule to stand as it is, but to clarify it by adding that motorcycles are prohibited on CAMPUS PROPERTY.

All constitutional changes were accepted by the board, and now they must be ratified by the student body. There must be a two-thirds majority vote by students before the constitution is finally approved.

The student leaders at Longwood College will be attending special meetings on Drug Use And Abuse on February 28 and March 20. Mr. David Jones, Special Investigator for the Virginia Department of State Police, District III, will be the speaker at these meetings. The purpose of these meetings will be to provide the student leaders of Longwood with sufficient information about drugs.

lion," is starting the month off in a fury. Gove, a pop folk singer, will be presented in concert on March 1 at 8 p.m. in Jarmon Auditorium. This is one of many mini-concerts planned by Student Union.

Richard Gove Scrivenor, hailing from New Haven, Connecticut, first arrived on the Nashville scene in September of 1969 and signed as a writer and recording artist with Acuff Rose and TRX Records. His album, featuring seven songs written by Gove, did not do well on the market due to limited distribution.

Student Union stumbled upon Gove at the National Entertainment Convention in Philadelphia in October. Various members of the union have heard him since that initial discovery and all comments are favorable.

"Gove on stage is the personification of his music. The phrasing is a part of the total commitment that Gove makes to his material."

The 5:08 To Los Angeles

By DR. FRANCES BROWN
Probably many of you, as do I, chuckle over some of the cartoons in the NEW YORKER which often brighten a whole week and once in a while give one food for thought. Some time ago one of these cartoons pictured an abandoned country railroad station beside a grassed over track. The usual bench on the station platform, however, was filled with the local inhabitants, watches in hand, who were gazing rapidly at a powerful jet zooming by overhead. The caption below the drawing read, "Well, there she goes - the 5:08 to Los Angeles. Right on time!"

I laughed, too, and then I began to wonder if there wasn't something symbolic about that casual picture. Aren't those village yokels, clinging so tenaciously to the ingrained habit of years, too much like all of us in this spinning age and particularly like those of us whose business it is to help the young become educated? While all of science is moving so fast that the technical training of one year is out-moded the next and even time itself has different concepts, are we running desperately and futilely, trying to keep up with the latest educational theories and jargon but looking wistfully back to the old 5:08 to Los Angeles? Where should we look - forward, backward, down to the present at our feet?

Alvin Toffler, in his provocative book FUTURE SHOCK which he says he wrote to "help us survive our collision with tomorrow," states categorically that "our schools face backward toward a dying system, rather than forward to the emerging new society." Affirming that we are already far beyond the Industrial Age and well into the Age of Super-Industrialization, Toffler urges that educators realize the need for new skills in three crucial areas: learning, relating, and choosing. Far from denying the need to learn about the past, Toffler would add to such knowledge the lessons of that past, - in his words "to learn how to learn."

In the other two areas which he calls, as I have said, relating and choosing, he is less specific though very emphatic in his belief that educators must find new ways to cut through the present widespread alienation of group from group and individual from individual, and that education must much more overtly help its participants to identify and clarify their values in full cognizance of the shifting patterns of society.

He concludes his very thought-provoking chapter on Education in the Future Tense by stating that the cardinal task of education is to create curiosity and awareness of the future, using of course all the heritage of the past but shifting the focus to the future tense.

Now obviously one does not have to swallow Mr. Toffler's theories hook, line, and sinker, any more than one is forced to accept the premises of other thoughtful people, past or present. But it seems to me he is right in charging that most of our entire educational set-up, from physical facilities to curriculum and the hierarchy of personnel, is geared too much to the past. (And I say this nostalgically because I am a dyed-in-the-wool traditionalist!) How often are we satisfied with just the hard enough task of trying to cram facts - be they of English Literature, or Geology, or any other field of knowledge - into the heads of our students? How often do we really try, however fumblingly, to go the step beyond and relate those facts not only to the present but to the indefinite future?

To bring this down to earth, let me be quite personal and tell you what I tried to do with my freshmen in a beginning college English course this past semester, though I am sure most of you do much the same kind of thing in your various fields. I dumped them into the middle of a collection of very contemporary essays on such subjects as pollution, race relationships, politics, war, outer space. They read, they wrote, they groaned, they argued. They eventually got curious about the past out of which these problems arose and about what in the future might solve perhaps a small portion of some of them. At least a few of those freshmen began to think in broader terms than they had before. Some of them, of course, just opened their pores and sat. But, although I was sometimes ready to climb the walls, the majority did begin to relate things backwards and forwards, to do some really creative thinking. Even 50-50 success I certainly do not claim and also certainly I did not introduce them to very much of our cultural heritage of the past, but hopefully they gained some tools to use in exploring that past, some pressing reasons for doing so, and considerable exercise of their own thinking mechanism.

A hundred years ago Matthew Arnold told us that the educated man must "know the best which has been thought and said in the world." Ten years ago John Gardner stated in his discussion of Excellence: "It is the sacred obligation of the schools and colleges to instill in their students the attitudes toward growth and learning and creativity which will in turn shape the society." A little more than one year ago Alvin Toffler tried desperately to alert us to the crashing speed with which that society is hurtling toward the 1984 of George Orwell's gloom and the years 2000 plus, a speed that is leaving much of the educational system far behind.

Can we perhaps with profit combine these ideas? While we are learning and teaching the best of the past, can we and our students see in that past analogies to the present and the future? Can we learn how to learn, so that quick obsolescence in whatever the field can never defeat us? Can we foster in ourselves and in our students that creativity which comes only through conscious and continuous use of our imaginations to project thoughts and plans and dreams beyond the bounds of present time and space?

I've subjected you, and most of all myself, to a lot of questions in the past few minutes because such an organization as Phi Kappa Phi is and must always be concerned with the quality and the orientation of our educational institutions, with their excellence in dealing with subjects of and attitudes toward the past, the present, and the future. Most of us are too prone to relate the 5:08 to Los Angeles only back to the good old train of the past instead of to both that train and whatever might replace that jet in the future. We need to make sure that all of our students, as well as those prospective Phi Kappa Phi college juniors who are in the top 5 per cent of their class and the seniors who rank in the top 12.5 per cent achieve their highest level of competence and that they do so not just because they are so grade conscious that they have been able to give back to the professor what he or she wanted but because they have grown in intellectual depth and breadth and have learned to stretch their creative, imaginative faculties.

history and purpose of the organization by Dr. James T. Barrs, vice-president of the Eastern Region of Phi Kappa Phi.

Dr. Barrs who teaches at Northwestern University, said he was pleased to take part in the ceremony at Longwood and emphasized the importance of the society. "We claim to be as good from the standpoint of scholastics as Phi Beta Kappa," he said. "There have been many cases where a student has been taken into Phi Beta Kappa and not accepted into Phi Kappa Phi."

Mary Lou Glasheen, Student Government president, said that she was very impressed with the installation ceremony and said the installation of Phi Kappa Phi at Longwood is probably "the highest honor a school of our caliber will ever receive."

Guest speaker at the dinner following the installation ceremony was Dr. Frances Brown whose speech entitled "The 5:08 to Los Angeles" was well received. "It was an excellent speech," said Mrs. Henry Willett, "and a very good message for this group."

Besides members of the faculty and administration, student members of the honor societies on campus were present at the reception. One student remarked that she was glad to be a part of the excitement and that she was anxious to find out who the first members would be.

Only juniors and seniors will be considered for membership. For consideration as a junior, a student must rank in the top five per cent of her class, and seniors must rank in the top 12.5 per cent of their class. The total election from any class, however, cannot exceed 10 per cent of the candidates for graduation.

The first installation of undergraduate members to the Longwood chapter will takeplace later this spring.

Dr Scott Participates As A "Visiting Scholar"

By DEBBIE BASTEK

Dr. Marvin Scott, Chairman of the Department of Natural Sciences, is currently involved in a "visiting scholars" program in Virginia high schools. Sponsored by the Virginia Academy of Science, the program tries to get various scientists into the high schools, giving them the opportunity to see science programs offered in high schools firsthand, and in turn acquaint the students with the science programs offered in college.

Dr. Scott traveled to John Marshall High School in Richmond on February 16. Marshall has approximately 1700 students, and, as Dr. Scott was interested in what was being done in the science curriculum in larger schools, gave a great deal of insight. There he spoke to five classes on the subject of ecology. On the 23rd, he was invited to speak at Goochland High School by Mrs. Janet Bland Taylor, a Longwood graduate who teaches both biology and mathematics there. Dr. Scott noted that Mrs. Taylor is not certified to teach math, exemplifying the need for broadened teacher preparation here at Longwood. He feels that prospective teachers should be certified in a second field in case of situations like that at Goochland. Physics majors, Dr. Scott stated, would have a difficult time finding a job teaching only physics, even in a school the size of George Mason where only two physics classes are taught.

Dr. Scott spoke at Collegiate High School today on "Viruses: Past, Present, and Future." He feels the "visiting scholar" program offers valuable insight into what is being done in the high school science subjects.

On February 18-19, Dr. Scott, Dr. Lane, Dr. Allen, and Mrs. Magnifico attended an organizational meeting at Randolph-Macon Woman's College to see what could be done at the primary, secondary, and college levels to train competent science teachers, and to make suggestions to the National Science Foundation for programs to be used throughout Virginia.

Physical Education Fraternity Initiates New Members

By PAM WATSON

Delta Psi Kappa, the national physical education fraternity on campus, initiated four new members and recognized new officers for the coming year at a ceremony held last Monday night in the Honors Council Room. The fraternity recognizes those eligible juniors and seniors who encourage and maintain high standards of scholarship and professional ethics for women in physical education. The newly elected Chaplain, Gail Gossage, conducted the ceremony in which Carol Chory, Terri Gadsby, Becky Jennings, and Liza Potts became members. Those attending were Mrs. Eleanor Bobbitt, their sponsor, faculty members of the department, and the newly elected officers who are Diane Derrick, President; Boni Longley, Vice President and Secretary; and Barbara Cridlin, Treasurer.

The fraternity has been busy on money-making projects and selling refreshments at the basketball games in hopes of sending a delegate to the National Convention that will be held in Houston March 21-24 this spring.

Dr. William Finch, the new administrative consultant for the Spring semester at Hampden-Sydney College, believes that co-educational institutions have definite advantages over colleges that limit enrollment to either male or female students.

Dr. Finch, president of Southwestern University in Texas for 11 years, and president of Emory and Henry College for six years, talked about the advantages of co-educational colleges in a recent interview.

"For forty years I have been in co-educational institutions," Dr. Finch said. "In evaluating the two institutions of either the co-educational college or the single-sex college, my sympathies in general would lie towards the co-educational institution; I think there are very distinct advantages. Hampden-Sydney College is the only four year senior college male institution in the State," he continued, "and that might be reason for it to remain so."

When asked about the Longwood students who attend classes at Hampden-Sydney, Dr. Finch said that he was pleased to see as many girls from Longwood attending classes here.

"I think one of the steps in the direction of Hampden-Sydney at least opening the door can be seen in the Longwood students attending classes here, and the Hampden-Sydney students attending classes at Longwood."

"Today," he added, "we are living in a pluralistic and two-sex society where the women are just as important as the men; the majority of college institutions are reflecting this change by going co-educational."

Table Assigning Procedure Proposed By Residence Board

by JANET LYNN TENNYSON

A new procedure for the signing up of dining hall tables was proposed at the Residence Board meeting held February 21. "All people who have eight filled places at their table will be allowed to sign up first," suggested Denise Morris, chairman of the dining hall committee.

It is planned that two nights be set aside to start the new procedure. The first night there will be tables of eight people starting with the seniors, then juniors, sophomores and finally freshmen, the second night will be for tables of seven or less. People from different classes will be allowed to sign up together with the person of highest class rank. Returning student teachers and people in the balcony will be reassigned at second block.

Sweet Briar President Whiteman Notes

Greater Numbers In Women's Colleges

From News Stories

by PAM WATSON

Is there a sexually based difference between man and woman that influences the learning process?

If there is a difference, is it genetically controlled or culturally induced?

And if there is a difference, is it a significant difference?

These questions were posed by Dr. Harold B. Whiteman, Jr., president of Sweetbriar College, at a talk he gave to the Kiwanis International in Richmond last week, on "Women's Education in the Seventies." The questions remain as yet unanswered, but an organization of women's colleges formed under the structure of the American Association of Colleges, will be studying these questions in an attempt to ascertain the best educational process for women.

Dr. Whiteman said that "all is not quite right in women's education" and he sees "a direct link between this fact and a resurgence of women's colleges today." Women's colleges are making a strong comeback with enrollments higher than ever before. A restraining factor in co-education is the culturally based thinking of how a woman is supposed to be. He said that "her competitiveness, aggressiveness in a coed setting is subdued because women aren't supposed to be competitive or aggressive."

"The woman's movement has greatly influenced redefining of women's roles as they seek greater equality with man, and more options for their lives, but women still occupy second-class status as students, educators, and workers." He also added that although women are being admitted to higher education in larger numbers but women are still losing out as students and as faculty members in almost equal proportional terms. In 1950 there were exceedingly more women professors and administrators than men but women comprise only 19 per cent of that total now.

In addition, 20 per cent of all college-educated women are working as secretaries in offices, and the median salary of all working college-educated women is equal to that of a man who has no more than an eighth grade education. The thinking still prevails, he said, "that a woman is nothing more nor less than a defective man."

As the president of an all-girls college, Dr. Whiteman said "the mission of women's education is the same as for all education - to instill, nurture, and bring to fulfillment human freedom, intelligence, and human rights."

Capt. Browning Explains Women's Army Corps

CAPT. JUDITH BROWNING

By DEBBIE BASTEK

Have you ever wondered what the military had to offer you? Captain Judith Browning of the Women's Army Corps was in Lankford last Wednesday to answer this and any other questions students might have about their opportunities in the Army.

The Army currently offers two programs to college women. The first, the College Junior Program, is open to juniors and first semester senior applicants. Each year 150 students are accepted into the program, and sent to Fort McClellan, Alabama, for a four week orientation program and introduction to the military. During this period, they receive corporal E-4 pay, $340, and full military benefits. At the end of the four week period, students may apply for acceptance in the Student Officer Program, although, Captain Browning stressed, the students are never under any obligation to enlist. If selected, students receive a monthly gross pay and allowances of a corporal while a full-time senior at college. Students are given all military benefits, including exchange privileges and free medical and dental care. Six months before graduation, the student applies for her commission as a second lieutenant, which is received after graduation. If the Army does not grant a commission - for medical, academic, or other reasons, the student is honorably discharged with no further obligation. At no time during her remaining college career does the student have to attend reserve meetings or wear a uniform.

The second program offered is Direct Commission. Open to seniors and graduates, applicants agree to serve two years, and are commissioned as second lieutenants upon graduation.

Students interested in further information may contact Captain Browning at the U.S. Army Recruiting Main Station, Defense General Supply Center, Richmond Virginia, 23219.

Nixon Visits China

PEKING - President Richard Nixon and Mrs. Nixon were welcomed Monday, February 21, by Premier Chou En-lai. The welcome was subdued, with neither leader making any formal statements. Only a few hours after his landing in China, Nixon talked with Mao Tse-tung in an unexpected meeting. "Frank and serious" was the way in which the hour-long discussion was described, indicating disagreement.

Cost Of Living Increases

WASHINGTON - The cost of living moved upward in January for the second month following the price-wage freeze. However, it was lower than in December.

Consumer prices increased 0.1 per cent in January according to the Labor Department, a month when they usually decline.

The major offenders against price stability were meat and new cars. The upsurge in meat amounts to 1.5 per cent, while new car prices jumped 1.6 per cent.

Busing Compromise Offered

WASHINGTON - Legislation was offered in Congress last Wednesday that would prohibit busing to achieve school desegregation if it would endanger the health of the children or retard their education.

Radford Professor's Jervey's Suit Continues In Court

by JANET LYNN TENNYSON
Radford College President Charles K. Martin, Jr., testified in U.S. District Court in Roanoke last week that he changed his mind about a raise for History Professor Edward D. Jervey because Jervey wrote a letter to Redbook Magazine that was interpreted by the college rector as defending premarital sex. Jervey's suit against the college board of visitors, Dr. Martin, and the college rector, Leonard C. Muse, is asking for $150,000 in damages.

After three long days of trial, U.S. District Judge Ted Dalton ruled that the only question to go to the jury is whether Jervey was deprived of about $23,000 in raises, benefits, and summer school employment after his letter to Redbook was published in 1968. Dalton ruled out $50,000 in punitive damages and the personal liability of Martin, Muse, and the other board members. Left intact is $100,000 in compensatory damages, now solely directed against the college.

Jervey, who is an ordained Methodist minister as well as professor with tenure, sued the college 33 months ago charging that his academic freedom in the classroom was jeopardized because he exercised his constitutionally guaranteed rights of freedom of expression outside the classroom. Martin, when questioned in court, charged that Jervey, who has preached in the Radford area and written widely on the history of the Methodist church, was "immature," Martin said this "lack of maturity" was displayed by trying to scare a student with a toy snake; by playing bridge "excessively" with students; by failing to report to the president that freshman students proposed to "demonstrate" in 1964; by criticizing the way a Radford high school class was taught some years ago; and by writing this letter to the Redbook editor.

The college's defense lawyer has taken the position that Jervey has been using books with four-letter words and pictures of nude men and women in his classes. Jervey's lawyer then subpoenaed more than 200 books and publications on Jervey's reading lists in the Radford College library to show that Jervey has a wide range of views and opinions, far right as well as far left, available to his students. Jervey, when taking the stand stated that he was never guilty of "advocating anything against the institution of marriage."

Professor Jervey is accused of promoting premarital sex in his classes at the 3,500 girl school and using a certain book that is too dirty to use at Radford. However, the college librarian, Joe Mitchell, testified that the book was in the college library well before Jervey made it available to his students.

On the subject of language, Dean Irvin Silverman said that Jervey used "profane and vulgar" language. Defense lawyer, Robert Brooks wanted the exact words. "Do you want to say them in front of ladies?", asked the dean. The words "goddam" plus another four-letter word covering bodily functions have been used freely throughout this trial.

"Black history" was another issue. Jervey was asked to teach the subject and he countered by proposing that Radford find a capable black historian. "I tried eight colored schools and couldn't locate one," Clifford C. Norse, who is a history professor.

"When evaluating the work of a professor which is more important: what the students think or rumors from local business community?" questioned Philip C. Hirschkop, who is Jervey's lawyer. Martin replied, the businessmen have "far more judgment" on who makes "a contribution to the community." Numbers of both students and ex-students have testified they rate Jervey highly as a teacher.

Genetics Clinic Goes on Road To Take Counseling To People

by Dr. Charles J. Epstein Director, March of Dimes
Genetic Counseling Clinic
San Francisco, California

A burst of public interest in genetics has followed the announcement of recent dramatic advances in this relatively young science.

Amniocentesis has made it possible to predict with certainty months before birth that an expected baby will be born with or without certain genetic diseases.

As a result, genetic counseling, a form of applied human genetics, can now give parents hard facts in cases where before it was possible to give only odds.

But one problem is delivery: How do you make genetic counseling available to the people who need it?

Genetic counseling clinics are part of the answer. With support from the March of Dimes we have established a clinic here at the University of California Medical Center in San Francisco.

This genetics clinic is unique because it is the only one in the country—as far as I know—that travels far into outlying areas to carry genetic counseling to the people.

Our routes take us over the Golden Gate Bridge and north to Marin County, across the Oakland Bay Bridge 60 miles west into the San Joaquin Valley, and more than 200 miles south to Santa Barbara and San Luis Obispo.

Computing Odds

People from all economic levels, from the wealthy to the poor, come to the clinic. Sometimes they have heard about it from a friend or read about it in newspapers, but usually they are referred to us by their doctor or a public health nurse.

For many couples who have a history of a genetic disease in their family, any pregnancy they undergo will run a certain risk of producing a child with that disease and we can compute the odds. If we find someone who is a carrier of a chromosome defect that can be transmitted to their offspring—a relatively rare occurrence—then we do a chromosome analysis on everyone in the family. Then all who are carriers will be aware of it.

The majority of couples we see have had a child with a defect and their fears have raised questions: What are our chances of having another child with this same disease? If we have normal children, what will be their chances of having children with this disease?

Fetal Cell Study

For the woman who has had a child with a serious genetic defect—one form of mongolism, for example—and finds herself pregnant again, the anxiety can be overwhelming. Many couples in this position don't believe themselves able to cope with another child with the same defect. It is for them that amniocentesis has particular value.

Between the 12th and 16th

In Santa Barbara, Calif., more than 200 miles south of San Francisco where his day started, Dr. Charles J. Epstein sets up his March of Dimes Genetic Counseling Clinic and studies the reactions of 6-month-old Andrew Herman and then his brother Robert, 3. Both have congenital nerve deafness.

week of pregnancy, fetal cells can be withdrawn in the amniotic fluid surrounding the fetus. A study of these cells can determine whether there are chromosome abnormalities and some of the enzyme deficiencies that will produce malformed or mentally retarded children. When these diseases are diagnosed, the parents will need to decide whether to have such a child. When the tests indicate a normal fetus, the relief and joy of the parents promotes a healthy attitude for the duration of the pregnancy.

In nearly all cases, the people we see are happy to get a straight story—good or bad. It takes some of the speculation out of the very hard decisions they have to make.

Research Effort

When we are not seeing people in our clinic we are continuing our research, supported by the March of Jo Smith took first place in tumbling with a routine consisting of a well executed back somersault and two aerial moves. Carolyn Paxton as All Around competitor from Longwood surpassed the All Around competitor from Radford. This means in competing in each event on the four Olympic pieces, she had the higher total score of the two girls.

The Longwood team will take part in Gymnastics Regional at Memphis State University this week end.

Dimes, the federal government and some private agencies. We are looking for the basic chemical differences between normal and chromosomally abnormal cells. Understanding how the metabolism of a defective cell differs from a normal cell should help us understand how chromosome errors cause birth defects.

We are also investigating the very early development of the embryo after fertilization, and the development of sperms and eggs before fertilization—anything that could go wrong and lead to an aberration of birth.

The number of diseases that can be detected before birth will grow in the future. Better ways will be developed for screening for carriers, especially for those genetic diseases that are concentrated in specific population groups, such as sickle cell anemia in the blacks and Tay-Sachs disease in those of Jewish ancestry.

As the medical community becomes more aware of which diseases have a genetic basis, much of the kind of counseling we do in our clinic will be done by the physician at the local level. In the meantime, clinics like ours will fill part of the gap.

- ( ) I want to be a teacher. How can I discourage kids from smoking when I smoke?
- ( ) I know my father's been trying to quit. How can he with me still puffing away?
- ( ) I want to wake up feeling fresh and clean again. I've had it with nicotine hang-over in the mornings.
- ( ) The thing that appeals to me most is: If you quit for good, in most cases it can be as if you never smoked.
- ( ) Somewhere in the back of my head I've been nursing the illusion that smoking is really only dangerous for men. I've just seen the latest statistics. The death rate for women who smoke is more than 20% higher than for women who don't. We've come a long way baby, but I'm not going any further.

An unexpected child can really rock the cradle.

Don't get us wrong.

We think children are priceless, too.

But if a child happens to be unplanned, it could mean financial pressures.

You see, a child is not just an extra mouth to feed. It's a whole other life to be provided for.

And that takes money.

Fact is, the cost to raise a child to age 18 ran around $25,000 (more for some, less for others, dependent on family income) in the mid-60's. And what inflation will do to the cost in the future is anybody's guess!

But no matter what the amount is, it's easy to see that the cost of rearing children is an economic reality one can't ignore. That is, if each child is to get what he or she deserves.

Which is why we advise every couple to plan how many children they want. And when they want them: when they can be a welcome addition rather than an accidental burden.

Because, as we all know, it's awfully hard to give with a full heart when one's pockets are empty.

Free College Is Successful On Hampden-Sydney Campus

By ROBERT SELLS
Hampden-Sydney Correspondent

Hampden-Sydney's first experience with the "free college" concept has been extremely successful, according to Project DIG (Dynamic Intra-Student Growth) coordinator, Wayne McAllister.

The free college program initiated this year by H-S in conjunction with Longwood, seeks to offer courses not usually taught in colleges or universities on a noncredit basis. Thus the students take only those courses that interest them.

The eight courses currently being offered at H/S are taught voluntarily by professors and/or students. They include Environmental Studies, Visual Aesthetics, Short Novel, Guitar, Art, Bridge, Mysticism, Auto Mechanics, and Tae Quon Do (the Korean Art of hand and foot fighting.)

According to Mike Crookshank, a Project DIG sponsor, "The program is designed to add an extra dimension to the traditional educational concept, thereby enriching those programs offered at H-S."

McAllister is very optimistic about the popularity and effectiveness of the program to date.

"We feel that it will motivate students to a greater awareness and appreciation of education, utilize untapped resources in both the community and the college, and bring about a closer relationship between students and faculty," he says.

With classes already meeting, McAllister said that initial response has been excellent, with an increase in participation expected. Of the courses being taught at H-S, Auto Mechanics has proved most popular to date, effective the proposal would be as a deterrent to students to stop stealing. Sandy said she felt it would have this effect, but when asked if the rule in the handbook had stopped stealing in the dormitories, she admitted it had not and agreed that stealing is increasing. Bobbie Bannon said, "I would consider it a greater deterrent to see in there (the handbook): Students are reminded that stealing in the town of Farmville is not in the jurisdiction of Judicial Board and they may be turned over to civil authorities."

Judicial Board

Many of the rest of the questions concerned the policies that would be established if the proposal is passed. Several students wondered how the board would decide what offense is serious enough to draw suspension and they questioned if this is not a moral question. They also questioned whether the board was taking too much work on itself.

Sandy said the cases would be handled like all others that come before the board. Each case would be thoroughly investigated and if any reasonable doubt existed, it would be dismissed. Each student would also be allowed to have a student counselor. As to making a value decision about cases, she pointed out that they do that now and that each case must be decided on its individual aspects. Sandy also said that, since they had turned many social regulations over to Residence Board and did not anticipate a great increase in shoplifting cases, she felt the board could handle the work with no great problem.

Two questions that were often asked were: If the proposal is not passed, can students found guilty by the courts be suspended? Do students have to turn other students in?

Sandy answered that since there would be no statement in the handbook, Judicial Board would have no authority to suspend convicted students. Students would be expected to follow the statement in the handbook that they should turn in known violators of the Honor Code.

Kay Oliver, a Judicial Board member, said that putting the proposal in the handbook is also a way of "thinking of the future." She said that, if the stealing continued, many students would find it difficult to cash checks and receive credit as the merchants reacted. "They're not giving you any evidence," challenged one student. "I don't see how you can say that it's been all Longwood students doing it. I mean, you're not saying it, but you're saying, if we do this, a lot of stealing will stop. How do you know?" Kay said she had not meant a lot of students are shoplifting, but that she wants to stop the ones who are.

Dr. Willett concluded the forum with a statement lauding Legislative Board for the way it had handled the question in throwing it open to the student body. He said it was "a perfect example of the way a legislative board ought to operate."

Virginia Private Colleges Now Eligible For State Aid

By JOHN D. GUTHRIE
Hampden-Sydney Correspondent
The Student Aid Bill was passed by both houses of the 1972 Virginia General Assembly last week. The bill makes every Virginia student who attends a Virginia private college eligible for a loan that he does not have to repay if he stays in school and makes satisfactory academic progress.

Debate centered on the fact that the bill makes no distinctions about the financial needs of students. Every Virginia student taking undergraduate studies in a Virginia private college is eligible for a loan no matter how large or small his family's income might be. The amount of the loan cannot be any higher than the average state appropriation per student at the state-supported colleges in Virginia. This average amount is about $800.

The Council of Independent Colleges in Virginia proposes starting the loans with the entering freshman class in the fall of 1972. The full financial impact of the program will be felt in 1976, the cost of the program being $13.8 million.

The bill now awaits Gov. Holton's signature. It was passed with more than a two-thirds majority in both houses of the General Assembly.

One side of the POW question is not complicated. That's the human side.

ALTHOUGH the prisoner-of-war question is often complex and even confusing, one side of it should be very simple. That's the part that deals with the treatment of prisoners of war. That's not a political issue, but a human issue.

Of course, we all want the war to end and the prisoners of war to be released as soon as possible.

But meanwhile there is no need for Hanoi and its allies to delay even a day in answering this plea:

Let your POW camps in North Vietnam, South Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos be visited by neutral observers.

Let the world know the names of the men you have held so long in secret captivity.

Assure the world through unbiased official observers that you are treating American Prisoners according to humane standards long practiced by civilized nations.

That's the issue.

It's that simple.

It's that non-political.

It's that human.

Hanoi can open its prison camps to neutral observers without bargaining, even without consultation.

By doing so now, Hanoi would earn the gratitude of millions of Americans and find new stature in the eyes of the world.

Concerned Students Travel To Richmond

Kathy Moffet and Sandy Oliver board the bus for Richmond.

By LYNNE PIERCE
"Budget Cuts Hit Colleges Hard"

That was the headline in the Richmond Times-Dispatch last Wednesday morning that shook the foundations of Longwood's financial structure. It eventually led to approximately 40 students boarding a bus for Richmond to try and convince the Senate Appropriations Committee to restore some of the money.

Rumors began to spread around campus by Wednesday afternoon that Longwood had lost part of its requested appropriations, but the seriousness of the cut did not reach the students until Dr. Willett called an emergency meeting with Student Government officers and other students for Wednesday morning. At the meeting he explained that over $400,000 had been cut from the budget by the House of Delegates. This means that the new physical education building can not be built, faculty members cannot have raises, six new faculty positions cannot be filled and tuition will be increased.

After explaining the problem, Dr. Willett informed the meeting of his intention to send a delegation of students to talk with the Appropriations Committee for the Senate. He explained that if these men could be persuaded to work in Longwood's behalf, it might be possible to regain part of the money. The trip was originally scheduled for Thursday morning, but was changed at the last moment to Friday in order to talk to the committee members just prior to a meeting they had scheduled. In the meantime, those students whose senators are on the committee were divided into delegations of approximately three so that they could visit them.

A letter writing campaign was begun in the dorms Thursday night and, when the students arrived at the Senate office building at 8:45 a.m. Friday, these letters were carried to the men they were addressed to. The delegation spent half an hour talking to members of the committee and other senators who happened to be in. Several students expressed disappointment over the fact that their senators had not been in, but Debbie Hyatt and Dragon Chandler had a different complaint.

When Debbie and Dragon visited their senator, he asked them to explain their purpose for coming. After telling him of the need Longwood had for the money that had been taken, they were told that he was "for Longwood." As they left, a member of their delegation, Becky Bailey, saw the senator throw the letters that had been written to him in the trash can.

Q - Why do we have such an archaic way of checking books out of the library? B.

A - Mr. Butler, director of the library, has answered this question several times for the paper. He feels that having checkers at the door would be too expensive for the college to maintain. When asked previously about the installation of electronic detectors, he said he felt that the initial installation fee would be too great to compensate for the books that were not stolen. The library has taken no steps to have another system approved and views the check-out system as an unsolved problem.

Willett Withdraws Judicial Board Proposal

Mary Lou Glasheen and Dr. Gussett listen to a student opinion at the Legislative Board meeting.

By BECKY NICHOLSON
 "Dr. Willett has withdrawn his proposal to Judicial Board," said Mary Lou Glasheen, Chairman of Legislative Board, after receiving word Thursday that he wanted to observe the rate of shoplifting in Farmville. The decision came after a week of controversy among the students concerning whether the proposal should be adopted and which produced a split in the student government.

When Legislative Board met last Tuesday night to vote on the proposal, there were a large number of students present to express their opinions. Many of the ideas echoed those presented at the open forum held the preceding week, but some new ideas were presented. One student pointed out that if the merchants do not want to prosecute, it is not the duty of the college to offer them any recourse.

Mary Lou injected into the discussion some new information, which she had received from a judge in Newport News. He said that the courts usually dismiss shoplifting cases for the first offense, and it would not be placed on the individual's record. He also felt that the courts were more qualified to handle such cases since other factors, such as psychiatric help, might enter into the case. After continued debate, Debbie Chapman came forth with the thought of defining the Honor Code, "Is it personal? If it is a personal matter, then should the Judicial Board have the power to handle it?" she asked.

When the proposal was finally put to a vote, the board was split in a 4-4 tie. This left two alternatives: either the decision could be tabled until another meeting, or Mary Lou, as chairman, could break the tie. When Mary Lou asked the board for a decision, Debbie expressed the feeling that an issue of that importance should not be passed by one person's vote. After much debate, a motion was made and carried to submit the question to the student body for an opinion vote. The voting was to be optional for students and would aid Legislative Board in making its decision, but would not be binding. (Due to Dr. Willett's decision to withdraw the proposal indefinitely, the poll will not be taken.)

The board also discussed the proposed changes from Residence Board concerning signing up for tables in the dining hall. Briefly, they include setting up two nights for the process with those with eight people signing up one night and everyone else the next. Residence Board also recommended that it be made clear in the handbook that it is the student's own responsibility to see that her Head Resident is notified when she is on an overnight trip.

An emergency meeting of Legislative, Judicial and Residence Boards called for the next morning by Dr. Willett brought the meeting to an end. The purpose of the meeting was to discuss the crisis at Longwood concerning the 10% cut in the college's budget by the state government. (See story above for details.)

Religious Emphasis Week Highlighted By Gospel Group

By JANET LYNN TENNYSON
 Tonight and Thursday night, the "nation's youngest male gospel group," the Abraham Brothers, will be performing in a concert of religious music at 7:30 p.m. in the Gold Room of Lankford. The Baptist Student Union and the Newman Club will entertain during the evening's intermission with a group of selected folk songs.

The Abraham Brothers are appearing as part of the YWCA's Religious Emphasis Week. The week, running March 6-9, began Monday with an old-fashioned revival and a chalk artist. The traditional week is also highlighted by special Vesper Services at the Episcopal Church in Farmville at 6:45 each evening. At all the meals during this week there have been different blessings to draw attention to the YWCA's effort to emphasize religion in the students' lives.

Both of the gospel group's performances will be informal and students are invited to come dressed in a casual manner.

A Commentary:

Day Of Silence Proposed For Future

By ROBERT H. SELLS
Hampden-Sydney Correspondent
Shhh!

Various forms of environmental pollution have been exposed to a very revealing degree recently in the various media. Columns upon columns, documentaries, editorials, lawsuits, academic courses, and Nader's Raiders have all served to insure that the major concern of the American citizen is the condition of our environment. Phosphates has become a household word, while scarcely two years ago phosphates were of interest only to chemists — a very small part of the population. Any political figure who is at all serious about getting on a ballot can ill afford to be silent on this vital issue. And he certainly cannot be against the fighting of pollution; indeed he must campaign diligently against the ravages of pollution. This is good — and it is certainly typically American, and yet fanaticism is dangerous.

At the risk of being labeled a fanatic, I would like to speak about an often neglected manifestation of pollution — noise pollution.

Living in an advanced technological society is a noisy endeavor. The sounds of industry, automobiles, sirens, and horns bombard the ears of metropolitans incessantly. This cacophonous symphony seems to have come to an ear-splitting crescendo in the last five years, and yet, rarely does one encounter an avid enthusiast who is ready to denounce this omnivorous dissonance.

Admittedly, most of this noise comes from machines that are vitally necessary if we are to continue to enjoy the prosperity to which we have become accustomed. Prosperity is American — it is as indigenously American as the Puritan ethic that encouraged prosperity in the colonies.

A simple answer to such a pervasive problem is not to be found, but perhaps if one day a month, or even one day a year, was designated as a day in honor of Silence, perhaps then Americans would realize that this is indeed a problem that should be given imminent priority if future generations are to know what Silence really is.

"Go placidly amid the noise and haste and remember what peace there may be in silence."

Letters to the Editor

A Call To Arms

There is a very good possibility that you, if you are a student reading this, will not be able to return to school next year. If you are a faculty member, I would suggest you begin counting pennies, because your budget is going to be very difficult to balance. And if you are a physical education major, you had better get used to having someone's elbow in your eye because there isn't enough room to move around.

By now everyone should know about the cut made in Longwood's budget by the House of Delegates. You should also know that it means no new construction, no pay raise for faculty members and increased tuition for students. Add to this the fact that new professors can't be hired and financial aid will be more difficult to obtain. You should have a picture of a real financial crisis because that's exactly what is in the future for Longwood unless something is done.

What can be done? Plenty! Students and administration officials have been urging people to write, wire or call their state senators to ask them to restore part or all of the funds. It's time that the students especially wake up. You have the power to vote now and this is the most direct way to make it felt. In the time it takes you to tell how ridiculous it is, you can write a short note or make a phone call.

It's time for everyone at Longwood to respond to the call to arms and make their influence felt in Richmond. If you don't and Longwood loses this money, then you won't have the right to say a word next year when funds are really tight.

Judicial Board

Dear Editor,

In regards to the question of whether or not Judicial Board should handle criminal cases committed off campus, I feel that it would be detrimental to the students as well as the basic concepts that our country tries to uphold.

First may I correct Sandy Oliver's statements on the consequences administered by a legal court in regards to stealing. If a student steals an object whose price value is less than $100, the crime is termed a misdemeanor, a student still has her rights and privileges.

To continue, my arguments against the proposal, I would like to emphasize the fact that, although not legally bad in reality, a student does face double jeopardy.

Thirdly, where as a student immediately may be expelled from Longwood under the proposal, if the case were to be tried legally, there is an excellent chance that her course of study would not be interrupted since due process of law is slow, and the courts would probably impose just a fine and possibly disregard jail sentences.

Trust

Dear Editor,

On March 1, 1972, the Student Union presented "Gove" in concert. There were just over 150 people at this performance. Various members of the Student Union worked very hard to inform students of the type and quality of music he played. However, obviously in vain.

The problem as I see it is one of trust. This is not restricted to Longwood. It is just more serious here. At present, students are not willing to take a chance on an unknown performer. Someone must have a name to be worthy of their attention.

This is a sad situation. When I asked other schools how they overcame this problem, they told me that after a few poorly attended events the situation improved. This may be possible at a large school, but not here. The Student Union can not justify a series of costly events that are poorly attended.

The activities for the remainder of the semester are as good as Gove was. Members of the Student Union have either seen these performers live or carefully reviewed their albums and tapes. If you will put a little faith and trust in the Student Union, we will bring you quality entertainment. Ask those that attended Gove!

Dragon Chandler

Editor's Note: As one of the students who attended the concert, I have to agree with Dragon that 2,000 students missed a great opportunity. Longwood students complain constantly about there never being anything to do on campus, but, when a program is offered, no one attends. With an attitude like this, we're only getting what we ask for.

Positive Action

Dear Editor,

If ever there was a time when Longwood students demonstrated their spirit, enthusiasm and general concern for the welfare of their school, it was this past weekend. In response to the recent budget cut made by the House of Delegates, over 150 letters written by Longwood students were hand-carried to the state Senators in Richmond by the 41 students who paid a personal visit to the members of the Senate Finance Committee. This does not include those students who sent letters by mail, called their Senators, or urged their parents to do the same.

The students' response to this crisis showed their degree of responsibility in being able to work together and think to the future. The student concern was focused on areas besides the possible rise in their tuition. Their letters showed an interest in maintaining the standards of quality education through the hiring of new instructors and providing pay raises for the present faculty. Those students who would not be directly affected by a raise in tuition, made a general plea for those who would be faced with this problem in the future.

The Senators should recognize the impact of this effort of students going through the proper channels for action. A demonstration? Yes, the students demonstrated that they recognized their rights as citizens to appeal to their representatives. This is one time when students' parents, faculty and administration worked in unison for a common cause. If this enthusiasm could be captured and directed into other areas, the goals of Longwood would be better realized.

Gove and his dog "Fella"

Gove In Concert Proves To Be Maxi Performer

By LYNDA VAN HORN

If the Gove concert was anything, it was not mini. Though the size of the audience could be classified as mini and the setting and formal preparations could be called mini, the performance itself was nothing less than maxi.

Richard Gove Scrivenor, who chose his middle name as his stage name because "it's different," sang, played the guitar and the harmonica, stamped his feet, and "just talked" to a small but enthusiastic audience in his concert on March 1.

Walking casually on stage carrying a guitar, waving to the audience, and being followed by his dog "Fella," Gove plunged into his first number featuring the harmonica and feet stomping. This unique beginning was followed by 90 minutes of more uniqueness and excitement.

Labeling the music that Gove shared with the audience is not easy. Country, folk rock, heavy, all of these adjectives can be applied to his music. His singing reached all levels from soft ballad to rowdy rock, and he often seemed to be pulling the music from his guitar which he aptly said was his home.

Tom Donahue, who wrote the wripteup on Gove's album "Heavy Cowboy" says, "From a point of view of singing style and selection of material this is an awful hard man to bag." It is impossible to play the "he sounds like" game with this entertainer. "His influences vary from Howling Wolf to Roy Orbison," Donahue writes.

The songs performed in concert by Gove ranged from an instrumental called "Blueberry Jam" which included portions of familiar Christmas carols, to his final song "The Titanic" which he explains was written by a black man who was happy no black people were on the ship "Titanic" when it sank. The song was marked by some fast action by the performer to match his music.

Gove admits that he is not trying to be philosophical but just likes to conduct bull sessions with his audiences. "They make the show," he says. "Playing mostly in coffee houses brings him closer to audiences, he went on to say.

The Longwood appearance was only the second time he had played on a stage as such, and he said he really enjoyed being on campus. "I'd like to come again, really," he said.

Student reaction was as warm toward him as he seemed toward the audience. "I thought it (the concert) was really great and the students who didn't come really missed something," said one listener. "It's time the students realized that the Student Union is working hard to give the students what they want."

Another student agreed with his opinion. "I think 2200 students missed out on something tonight," she said.

'Miss Brodie's' Magic On Stage March 16, 17, And 18

By JOYCE SAUNDERS

THE PRIME OF MISS JEAN BRODIE, adapted by J. Allen from Muriel Spark's novel is a liting, bonny story of a school-teacher who is dedicated to her girls. Or is it? After all, she is "the dangerous Miss Brodie."

Miss Brodie carries with her a secret power that beautifies or taints everything around her. What is it that forces people to be so dependent on one another? It is Miss Brodie's magic.

The actors have spent six weeks developing their characters and dealing with the ambiguities. In the first scene Sister Helena, who is one of the "Brodie set" grown up, says that Miss Brodie was "very guilty and very innocent." Belinda Brugh, who plays Sister Helena, says that "during the course of the play she (Helena) has come to understand Brodie in a different way."

Photography Shown By Dr. Wells In Bedford Building

Dr. Carolyn Wells, Professor of Biology and Associate Dean of the College, is currently showing a collection of her photographs in the first floor hallway of the Bedford Building. Dr. Wells coteaches photography in the Art department. She combines technical ability with artistic sensitivity to demonstrate various procedures and approaches to photography in the 22 piece exhibit.

The show includes portrait studies of her nephews, Robert and Andrew, along with puppy portraits, studies of textures, toning, high contrast, combination prints, and more; the show serves as an excellent educational supplement to Basic Photography 355 and for anyone interested in photography.

The show will continue through March 24 and can be seen during regular gallery hours.

Tryouts For "Medea" To Be Held March 9

Tryouts for "Medea," the Longwood Players-Hampden-Sydney Jongleurs final production of the year, will be held at the Jarman Studio Theatre on Thursday from 2-5 p.m. and 7:30-9:30 p.m.

"Medea" will be presented in Jarman Auditorium Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights, May 4, 5 and 6.

One unusual feature in this production of "Medea" will be the idea of having women play both the female and male roles. The one exception will be the role of Jason who will be played by a male.

"He's so vile and detestable I couldn't see a woman playing his part," said Director Douglas Young of the Speech and Dramatic Arts Department.

Five of the seven women required for the play are likely to find themselves playing in the female chorus and doubling in a male role.

Mr. Young will use the Robinson Jeffers' adaption of the Euripides play, plus some additional material dealing with the role of women in society in Greek times and now.

Educational Attempts Since School Closing

(Editor's note: This is the second of a two-part series dealing with the crisis in public education when Prince Edward County closed its public schools for four years to avoid integration. Writer Lynda Van Horne continues the story of what happened to many of the children crippled educationally by the school closing.)

PART II

By LYNDA VAN HORN

Could the crushing effects of four years be remedied? Or were these children destined for a life without education and intellectual growth?

These are typical questions asked by educators who came into Prince Edward County to help those children facing a stunted intellectual growth due to the four years the public schools remained closed.

Free School

There were those who were willing to undo the disastrous effects of the closed schools. Earliest efforts for salvage fell to Dr. Neil V. Sullivan, a pioneer in non-graded teaching, who began the one year program called the Free School in Prince Edward in 1963-64.

Dr. Sullivan equipped with about $1 million in private money raised through the offices of the Kennedy Administration and through the help of former Virginia Governor Colgate W. Darden, set out to find the best teachers for this teaching experience.

The job was finished on September 16 when the schools were scheduled to open. Four former public school buildings were used including the white Worsham High School.

Teachers came from all over the country and were successful in initiating team teaching and the most modern devices for cramming a lot of education into a short teaching span.

Dr. Sullivan established a non-graded system where children of different ages were placed together according to ability. The result was that teenagers were often found in the same classes as 6 and 7-year-old children.

A sprinkling of white children enrolled in the Free Schools causing a reverse integration that did not go unnoticed. "But," wrote Sullivan, "if the schools were a disappointment from the standpoint of integration — only eight white students attended them — they were a godsend educationally."

Reporters often wrote of the ridiculous effort to cram three or four or five years of missed schooling into a single year. "Four years will never be made up entirely. All I've said is that we'll narrow the gap," says Sullivan. The success of the school is generally acknowledged.

Writes Dr. Sullivan in a report at the conclusion of his program: "Progress made by a vast majority of our children, substantiated the confidence I placed in the team arrangement and in the non-graded organization. These innovators had worked well in the sophisticated suburbs in the North. They worked equally well in the destitute tobacco country of southside Virginia."

The Free School closed in August due to the court-ordered reopening of public schools in September, 1964. The late Justice Black of the Supreme Court went so far as to say the county could be forced to provide funds for operating these public schools.

Schools Opened

Virtually the same students who attended the Free School were the same students entering the opening public schools in the Fall. The schools were then almost entirely segregated. One of the white students who enrolled in the newly opened school was Richard Moss, son of Dr. Gordon Moss, the Longwood College professor severely criticized for his work toward school integration.

There were those who criticized the reopening of the schools charging that the sudden switch to graded classes would produce a drop out tendency especially among the older students. The effects of the Free School could not easily be told, even though Sullivan and others showed such optimism.

Rev. L. Francis Griffin was not as optimistic. At the end of the first year of required public schooling he writes in a letter: "There is still a group of children too disadvantaged from their educationally deprived years to even make a beginning," he reported. "The principal of the system has predicted that at least 75 per cent will drop out, a nearly lost generation involuntarily illiterate."

Through work by Dr. Moss, Rev. Griffin, and others, the Prince Edward County Action Group was founded and received a $90,000 federal grant for a summer catchup reading program.

Woolman Method

Dr. Myron Woolman, who had established the Institute of Educational Research in Washington, was called into Farmville to put into action his "Reading in High Gear" program.

The Woolman method divided the children into small groups for different levels of learning. According to his report given at the end of the program, "The most important thing," Dr. Woolman said, "is that they (the children) become convinced that they can beat the society and system in which they have never achieved."

Instructors were recruited mainly from Virginia college students, but included some high school students. The 54 instructors had at their charge 476 youngsters, whose educational loss was so great that they were considered certain drop outs.

The course was to last for eight weeks and was taught in 10 makeshift centers throughout the county.

"The kids were unwilling to respond at all first," Dr. Woolman said later, "due to a pattern of failure. Once they reached success they began to respond. Some of these kids were working in the fields, taking extra time to devote to the program. I thought they did fine. I was humbled by these kids."

At the onset of the program, Dr. Woolman hoped to advance the children a grade and a half in reading. Because of not enough hours and various other problems, however, the Stanford Achievement Test given just after the program, set the mean gain at two months and paragraph meaning at five months. For all of those who gained, though, the mean was set at eight months for words and one year for paragraphs.

One drawback of the program was that the high-IQ pupils in the group gained very little and in some instances even lost ground, a factor Woolman attributes to not being pushed hard enough.

Student's View

Most of the involved educators believe all of the programs from the Free School on were of great value to the majority of Negro students. One of the educators tells about one of the students helped.

Elvira Dove, a slim, attractive girl of 17 missed education during all four years of the school-closing. She believes the Free School year was invaluable, and she progressed so well in Operation Catch-Up that she became an instructor ambitious to go to college. She is still only a tenth grader. She will be 20 before she can go, and 24 before she is through. "I'm not kidding myself," she said, "It's a long hard road."

It is now eight years since the beginning of formal education with the opening of the Free School. Surely many students have fallen by the wayside during this time. It was only through the work of dedicated men and women that so many children were educationally "saved."

Today Dr. Ronald Perry, superintendent of Prince Edward County Schools, describes the school system as being of the "highest quality in Southwest Virginia." Indeed Prince Edward County High School has recently been accredited by the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools, and honor which few if any other schools in the area can boast.

County's Progress

Integration in the schools has also become a reality. Compared to the dozen or less white students enrolled in the public schools when they were first opened, there are currently enrolled approximately 150 white students in the county schools. Also, according to Dr. Perry, about 40 per cent of the schools' staffs are white.

Even though the schools have made giant progress since the time they were first closed, school administrators do not plan to stop now. Future plans call for increase in staff and building including three new elementary schools that are to be completed within the next two years. Goals are high and says Dr. Perry, "We are going to continue to improve the quality of our staff, our curriculum, and our buildings."

Though Prince Edward Academy is still operating and still segregated, the Prince Edward County Public Schools are also operating and prospering in spite of opposition, and they are trying to offer the best in education.

U.Va. To Celebrate Bicentennial

CHARLOTTESVILLE — Tom Collier, president of Student Council at U. Va., informed council members of plans to celebrate the United States Bicentennial in Charlottesville, which will mean approximately thirty thousand tourists to the University of Virginia and the city per day, Charlottesville has been selected as one of three sites in Virginia and most likely will be one of the 15 official U.S. sites. The plans for Charlottesville include building an amphitheater, a new museum of Virginia history, eight new hotels and motels, and renovation of the Rotunda.

Defense Funds Threatened

WASHINGTON — Rep. Edward Hebert, chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, threatened Friday to cut off all defense funds to colleges and universities not cooperating "one thousand per cent with the military." Addressing a convention of the Reserve Officers Association, he used the strongest language yet in a growing controversy over where military officers can go to school. "Any university that throws us (ROTC) off campus will not have any defense money for education,"

Senate Ends Sex Bias

WASHINGTON — The Senate voted last week to deny federal funds to certain colleges and universities that discriminate against women. While less sweeping than that sought by feminist groups, the Senate ban on sex discrimination in student admissions and faculty staffing is far stronger than one approved by the House last year. As approved by voice vote, the amendment to the pending higher education bill seeks to end sex bias on all public and private graduate schools and most public undergraduate colleges and universities.

Drug Reform Requested

WASHINGTON — The National Commission on Marijuana and Drug Abuse will soon recommend that criminal penalties for use and possession of marijuana by individuals be abolished. Full legalization of marijuana is not sanctioned by the report, because it favors criminal penalties for sale of the drug. The commission will present its unanimous recommendation in a report to Congress and President Nixon this month. According to reliable sources, the generally conservative commission became convinced by 50 reports and testimony of hearings during their one-year study that the cost of the stiff penalties to the American public surpassed any dangers of liberalization of drug laws. The commission's action may produce a striking change in public attitudes toward legal status of marijuana. Their surprisingly liberal conclusions were influenced by three points found in results of studies: that marijuana is not addictive and cannot be shown to cause physical or psychological detriment, even after long use; that it does not appear to lead to use of harder drugs; and that it does not lead to crime.

Investigator Speaks On Drugs In Virginia And The Methods Of Usage

By JANET LYNN TENNYSON
"The main city in the United States for importation of illegal drugs is Norfolk, Virginia," said state investigator David Jones. New York previously was the innum foil.

Recently the laws concerning marijuana were revised. Possession of the drug now constitutes a misdemeanor, whereas before it was a felony.

State investigator David Jones spoke at the drug forum sponsored by Judicial Board.

city for the largest drug traffic, but 900 customs agents have been employed there to cut the illegal imports.

Mr. Jones was on campus, at Judicial Board's request, to speak to students on the drug problem. "The full spectrum of drug use in Virginia has gone from 78 investigated cases in 1968 to 1,827 investigated cases in 1971," said Mr. Jones during the February 28 meeting.

Marijuana is "readily available to you," began Mr. Jones. Although it is illegal to grow the plant in Mexico, 80 per cent of the weed comes from there. A kilo of grass, approximately two pounds, sells for five dollars in Mexico. When it crosses the border, the price for the grass brick jumps to $350. Individually it sells for five dollars for a nickel pack which is four grams of marijuana, Jones said.

Hashish is the resin from the marijuana plant and it has a high content of hallucinogen. Hash is not produced in the United States. It burns very hot and has to be burned in a water pipe or a regular pipe lined with alum-

"LSD is currently off the scene," said Mr. Jones, "and street pushers are calling it anything to be able to sell it."

LSD causes paranoid behavior for the first six hours after ingestion, he said. The effects from an LSD trip can last for up to two years. It is a hallucinogen in which images are distorted and vision is impaired.

Amphetamines are stimulants and barbiturates are depressants. Speed or amphetamines cause people in severe depressions to again face their problems. This drug is used for medical purposes and it is usually effective. Barbiturates are also used extensively in medical instances. However both of these drugs can and do kill, especially when barbiturates are mixed with alcoholic beverages.

"Heroin and hard core drug addiction is rising in Virginia," said Mr. Jones. The opiates are grown in Turkey and shipped to France, where first morphine and then heroin are extracted from the plant. The price is about $22,500 for a 100 per cent pure kilo. This kilo is then cut with milk, sugar and quinine to make it 5-8 per cent pure.

Mr. Jones explained the three ways of getting a drug into the body. One way is snorting or sniffing the drug into the nostrils. Usually the nose becomes red around the upper lip and nose area. Intramuscular injection is done by injecting a drug into the forearm, biceps and upper back. However the trend to hide needle marks has caused users to inject a drug in the bottom of the feet, between the toes and fingers, and in the gums. The third type is by injection directly into a vein.

A full-fledged mainliner could start at one shot a day and progress to injections every two hours, both day and night at five dollars each.

The use of drugs has moved off the campuses into the streets and apartment complexes.

"More young people between the ages of 18-27 are ending up in morgues from drug overdoses," said Mr. Jones.

Judicial Board has scheduled another meeting of this type for Monday, March 20. Dorm presidents, hall representatives, resident counselors and students are urged to attend this meeting at 7 p.m. in the Gold Room of Lankford.

Mr. Cullen Dalton's office is sponsoring the event as a special service rendered to high schools in the state. The operation of the tournament is under the direction of Mrs. Nancy Anderson and Longwood professors and students as well as area residents will be acting as judges. Approximately 45 trophies will be awarded in the afternoon to

Movie Rating Bill

The Virginia House of Delegates voted 72-30 Thursday to establish a state Motion Picture Review Board to fix ratings on all movies shown in Virginia. The new board, according to the bill, would not be able to censor or forbid the showing of any movie. It could require that all movies shown in Virginia carry a state rating. The bill's sponsor, Del. George N. McMath, D-Accomack, suggested that the proposed board include a college student, a housewife with at least two children under 15 years of age, a member of a minority group, a single or divorced male and a grandparent. The bill now goes to the Senate for their vote.

Extra Tax Killed

By a one-vote margin, the House of Delegates killed an additional one per cent local option sales tax Wednesday. The bill, offered by Del. Robert E. Gibson, D-Chesapeake, died in a 45-46 show-of-hands vote at its second reading, and thus the House refused to carry it to the final stage when a roll call is recorded. If the bill had become law, the sales tax in some localities could have totaled five per cent.

Student Joins Board

The first student member of the Fairfax County School Board and the only one in the nation with a vote and full salary was sworn in Wednesday. Paul Freeman, 18, a Herndon High School senior, is the 15th student in the country to be included on a school board.

Senator To Visit China

The White House announced Tuesday that Sen. Mike Mansfield of Montana and Sen. Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania, the Democratic and Republican leaders, would visit China at the invitation of Premier Chou En-lai. Scott, who is an authority and avid collector of Oriental art, said that the visit would probably be scheduled for the summer. Speaker Carl Albert and the House Republican leader, Gerald R. Ford, protested Wednesday because only Senate leaders had been invited to China. Albert said the House would take "appropriate action" if the White House did not arrange invitations for House leaders as well. Exactly what kind of retaliatory action the House might take if the majority leader, Hale Boggs, and Ford were not invited, too, Albert did not specify, except to point out that "cooperation is a two-way street."

concluded it must have something to do with eating because the motto was "Eat and Grow Thin," the password was "When Do We Eat?" and the colors were pea green and bean yellow. The group existed from 1923 until 1933 and each of the officers was referred to as some type of boss, for example, the president was "Head Boss." Besides this, there does not seem to be any other information on them.

Q - In some old pictures of CHI, some of the members are facing forward and the others are turned around. Why aren't they all facing forward and why are they called Orders? D.C.

A - The library staff felt it was obvious that those members facing forward were seniors and the others were junior members who could not be revealed until the next year. The title the Order of CHI comes from the term 'order' being used synonymously often with the terms 'organization' or 'society.' The staff mentioned as an example the Fraternal Order of the Masons.

Q - Will students be allowed to live in apartments? A.N.

A - There was a question in last week's Catalyst on why students cannot live off of campus. The college feels that dormitory life is part of the student's educational experience and requires campus residence unless she has close relatives living nearby. The Dean of Students can make exceptions in unusual cases, but this is done infrequently because of the shortage of housing facilities in the area.

Q - What is the average number of students who eat in the dining hall when we have meat loaf as compared to a regular dinner? L.C.

A - Mr. Carbone said that there is not an overall average for meals in the dining hall, but by averaging them together, he found that when we have meat loaf, we use approximately 20 tables less. For those who don't like meat loaf, he said that because of the budget it is necessary to have a cheaper meal like this once a week in order to make the money balance out.

Longwood Basketball Team Defeated

In Close Game At State Tournament

A Longwood player and ODU player jump for a ball during the tournament game.

By DEBBIE BASTEK

The Longwood Varsity Basketball Team, which had been seeded in first position, was defeated in its first game in the state basketball tournament by Old Dominion University. The final score of 57-52 indicated how closely matched the teams were. At several points in the game, Longwood pulled within one point of ODU, but the team never did manage to get on top. The loss resulted partially from shots made from far out on the court and missed, and the accurate shooting of the ODU team from the foul line.

The Virginia Federation of Intercollegiate Sports for College Women (VFICSW) held the annual tournament at Virginia Commonwealth University (VCU) in Richmond March 2, 3, and 4. Teams competing in the 1972 tournaments were seeded according to their won/lost percentage of in-state games. Longwood was seeded first out of fifteen competing teams, followed by Radford in second place, and Roanoke in third.

The games were played in both the new and old gyms at VCU, the preliminary rounds on Thursday, the quarter and semifinals Friday, and the consolation and

Gymnastic Team Finishes With Undefeated Season

By SHARON CURLING

The gymnastic team finished the season undefeated by pulling off two big wins. On February 22, Longwood participated in a tri-meet with the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and Wintrop. Longwood defeated them both by a score of 67-95, with the University of North Carolina finishing with 42 and Wintrop 39. In the final meet, Longwood defeated Duke University 57.98 to 30.85.

High scorers for Longwood in these two meets were as follows: floor exercises, Jo Smith, Suzanne Stewart, Carolyn Paxton, and Dianne Covington; vaulting, Jo Smith, Carolyn Paxton and Linda Burgdorf; beam, Jo Smith, Suzanne Stewart and Carolyn Paxton; bars, Carolyn Paxton and Carol Stewart.

championship games on Saturday. Longwood was given a bye for the preliminary rounds, did not have to play on Thursday and lost to Old Dominion University in the quarter finals.

The varsity squad is coached by Jean Smith, and managed by Penny Stallins. The scorekeeper is Wanda Schuller. Members of the varsity team are Dottie Bohannon, Cindy Bradley, Debbie Carneal, Daryl Driskill, Nanette Fisher, Janet Ford, "Bee" Johnson, Margaret Lowry, Sue Mahan, Diane Minor, Lucy Sale, and Bernice Stanley.

By losing the game with ODU, the Longwood team was eliminated from any further competition in the tournament.

Longwood Fencer Places Third In State Championship

By SHARON CURLING

On Saturday, February 28, Longwood's fencing team traveled to Duke University to participate in the North Carolina Open State Championship. The competition included varsity collegiate team members, college coaches, North Carolina alumni and graduate students who had fenced on varsity teams.

Joyce Miller, the team's number one player, and Coach Sally Bush fought their way through two elimination rounds to the finals. Joyce won her first round 3-1, while Miss Bush took hers with no losses, 4-0. In the second round, the two finished 3-1 and 2-2, respectively. In the final round, which consisted of the top six in the tournament, Joyce finished with a lead strong enough to give her a third place in tournament standings. Miss Bush finished fourth in the tournament.

This Friday and Saturday, the fencing team will travel to Madison College to compete in the Virginia State Collegiate Tournament.

Double-Dual Meet Hostessed By LC

By SHARON CURLING

A double-dual meet hostessed by the Longwood swimmers was held on Monday, February 28. The two schools participating were Randolph-Macon and Old Dominion University. Actually, a double-dual meet means that there are three separate meets with each school swimming against each of the other schools.

Longwood defeated Randolph-Macon by a score of 73 1/2 to 37 1/2, but was upset by Old Dominion by a score of 76 to 36. Therefore, Old Dominion had two wins, Longwood one win and one loss and Randolph-Macon, two losses.

In the competition against Old Dominion, Longwood took three first places. The first place winners were Robin Wallmeyer, diving; Kathy Umndenstock, 50 yard freestyle and 100 yard backstroke.

Ten first place awards went to the Longwood swimmers against Randolph-Macon. The girls winning were Robin Wallmeyer, 50 yard butterfly and diving; Kathy Umndenstock, 50 yard free style, 100 yard individual medley, and 100 yard backstroke; Eleanor Challen, 50 yard breast stroke; Kathy Kutcher, 100 yard freestyle and Pam Walker, 100 yard breast stroke. Longwood also won the 200 yard medley relay and the 200 yard freestyle relay.

Longwood Defeats Madison In Final Basketball Game

By SHARON CURLING

In the final game of the season on February 28, Longwood's basketball team defeated Madison by the close score of 46-44.

Longwood's free throw percentage of 60% attributed to their victory, as did a field goal sunk by Doty Bohannon with three seconds remaining on the clock. Nanette Fisher made an outstanding 19 rebounds for the blue.

Longwood finished up the season with a record of 8-1 and Miss Smith credits this to teamwork.

H-S Volunteer Firemen See Action

Voluntarii Adversus Incendia
Instituti Hampden-Sidnienses.

This is the Latin translation of Hampden-Sydney Volunteer Fire Department, Hampden-Sydney College is one of the few colleges in the country that owns and operates a volunteer student fire department. Last week the Hampden-Sydney Volunteer Fire Department responded to three fires in Prince Edward County. This marks the first action that the student firemen have seen this year.

The department was renewed last year when the antiquated equipment was replaced by two trucks bought through ArmySurplus. One truck was a pumper with six-wheel drive, and the other truck was an oil tanker which carries 850 gallons. The students, in their spare time, went to work in adapting these trucks to fit the demands of fire-fighting. After all improvements were completed, the students spray-painted the green Army trucks with the traditional fire-engine red enamel. The insignia Voluntarii Adversus Incendia Instituti Hampden-Sidnienses was stenciled on the doors of the pumper. The Latin serves to remind the public that this is no ordinary fire department; this one is manned by Hampden-Sydney College students.

The distinctive insignia, however, is not the only feature that reminds the public that college students operate the equipment. The first fire the volunteers answered lends ample evidence to the inexperience of the students. The fire was a brush fire near the campus. In the fever of excitement, the only student who knew the location of the fire valiantly drove off with the fastest truck, loaded with eager volunteers. The driver and riders on the other truck, however, soon realized that they had no idea where the fire was, and furthermore had no idea which way the lead truck had gone. En route to the fire, the frantic waving of bystanders made the second truck stop; the driver learned that he was going the wrong way. They finally found the fire.

The fire department is a campus student organization gov-

Trip To Richmond

Other members of the delegation related incidents of being asked how the college could afford transportation to Richmond and how the students received permission to miss classes. However, the general atmosphere of the delegation when it reassembled was that their visit had had some impact on the senators. Several of the students mentioned with amusement the reactions of the senators when they realized that the students are voters.

The State Senate is expected to vote this week on the budget sent from the House of Delegates. The delegation members have been encouraging students to write to their senators and to have their families do the same. Dr. Willett, in speaking with some of the delegation members later, said he could not predict how the vote would go, but that he was "very encouraged" by the response the senators were having to the students' visit.

not to exceed 16 members. The applicant must be in good physical and mental health, and he must have a safe driving record. Use of drugs of any kind is prohibited. The applicant must also take and be accredited in Standard First Aid taught by the American Red Cross.

The immediate challenge of the Hampden-Sydney Volunteer Fire Department is to assist the Prince Edward Volunteer Fire Department located in Farmville in protecting Prince Edward County during the academic year. In the event of any house fire or brush fire, or of any fire south of Hampden-Sydney, the aid of the student volunteers is summoned. The six-wheel drive - Hampden-Sydney pumper is often the only truck that can reach a fire in a remote place. Likewise, if there is a fire of any nature on the Hampden-Sydney campus, the Prince Edward Volunteer Fire Department will assist the Hampden-Sydney department in extinguishing the fire.

It is the goal of the Hampden-Sydney Volunteer Fire Department to provide better protection in limiting loss due to fire in Prince Edward County during the academic year. The student volunteers find that fulfilling their duties as members of this fire department is time-consuming, but they also hasten to add that helping people in a time of emergency is a very rewarding experience.

Brodie Starts March 16

ent way than she did at first. She realized the innocence of the guilt. Miss Brodie saw her effect in an idealistic way . . . not knowing it would be fatal."
Linda Burton, who portrays Jean Brodie, agreed, "True! She was guilty and innocent. Brodie can't have an adult relationship, so she lives through her girls. It's unfair . . . she is fanatically idealistic!"

If Jean Brodie for some reason cannot cope with an adult relationship, what of the men in her life? Larry Smith, who plays the godnurtured music teacher Gordon Lowther, says "Brodie is insecure and Lowther is insecure. It's not so much a case of 'the blind leading the blind' because Brodie knows she's using Lowther, more, the blind leading the stupid."

"Teddy Lloyd is difficult to play because there is little in the script to give sign of a definite character," said Rick Vaughan. "He genuinely loves Jean Brodie; all of his paintings look like her. He is fond of Sandy because she is a Brodie girl." "Both men allow her (Brodie) to feed her fantasies," concluded Larry.

And what of Sandy, the intuitive, "dependable" student? "She can't figure Miss Brodie out, but she loves her," says Jessie Retter who plays the young girl. "In the third act she realizes Brodie prefers Jenny, but she needs Sandy because . . . Sandy is her spy."

A strange little story, not quite so lulling anymore. There are needs, desires, dreams, and as Walter Kerr said, little girls "growing up and growing old dangerously." "But," says Linda Burton, "it's better to encounter an unusual person even if he's harmful." And the play about a teacher who "imposed beauty rather than multiplication tables" is unusual.

"The Prime of Miss Jean Brodie" will be presented March 16, 17 and 18.

the top winners in each of the categories.

The tournament was started as a competition between Farmville and the neighboring county high schools but did not offer adequate practice when competing in much larger contests. The tournament was then extended to the larger city and county high schools throughout the state to have more and better competition. Schools in and surrounding Roanoke, Richmond, Lynchburg, Farmville, and the Tidewater area will be well represented in the contest.

Mrs. Anderson says the purpose of the tournament is to encourage forensics in high schools. She feels that the contest will improve the quality of student's presentations before competing in larger district and state contests and will acquaint high school students with the college atmosphere and particularly with Longwood.

Four Purposes Of Longwood Represented On Rotunda Dome

By VICKI BOWLING

Rest, study, recreation, and meditation. These are the four purposes of Longwood College, as represented in the murals on the Rotunda dome.

This information, along with other interesting facts, was brought to the ROTUNDA's attention by Dean Wilson, following a question concerning the history of the dome which appeared in the CATALYST.

The Rotunda dome was completed in 1905, Dean Wilson said, a few years after Dr. Joseph E. Jarman became president of the college. E. Malfaconi, an artist from Richmond, was commissioned to do the painting. Besides the murals already mentioned, there are four portraits in the dome, Dean Wilson explained.

Thomas Jefferson, the third President of the United States and a Virginia educator, is represented. The Longwood Rotunda is copied from the Rotunda at the University of Virginia, which he designed.

Another educator portrayed is Horace Mann. Mann was from Massachusetts, and Dean Wilson believes he is known as the "father of public education."

Closer to home, there are two men connected with Longwood who were painted. Dr. J.L.M. Curry was president of the first Board of Trustees, and Dr. William Henry Ruffner was president of the college from 1884-1887.

Dean Wilson mentioned that this information is given every year in her orientation speech to new students. It is taken from a pamphlet entitled A HISTORY OF LONGWOOD COLLEGE (vol. XLIII, January, 1957).

"Periodically since 1905, specialists have been employed by the college to work on the dome, cleaning the pictures and portraits and retouching when needed," she said.

Music Scholarship Established In Dee Dee Arvin's Name

By VALERIE BLANKS

Even with her year of reign fast drawing to an end, "Miss Longwood," Deborah (Dee Dee) Arvin, is still having new and rewarding experiences. The most recent event was the setting up of a terminating scholarship in her name.

The scholarship resulted from the part Dee Dee played in the ground breaking ceremonies for the Citizen's Savings and Loans Bank of Farmville. In gratitude and to promote future relations with the students, this group gave Dee Dee some money to give to her favorite scholarship fund at Longwood.

Being a music major, she decided she'd like to give the money to the Music Department; however, there were no existing scholarships in this department. Therefore, with the help of Mr. J.H. Paul, the business manager of Longwood, a terminating scholarship fund bearing Dee Dee's name was established.

Presently, Dee Dee and Dr. Molnar, chairman of the music department, are in the process of deciding on the requirements for receiving the scholarship. It is planned that this scholarship fund will go into effect this fall.

LONGWOOD COLLEGE, FARMVILLE, VIRGINIA WEDNESDAY, MARCH 15, 1972

NO. 18

Q - Why are the mid-term reports sent home if they are to show the student where she stands? D.A.T.

A - Dr. Blackwell said that the college tries to get the grades to the students' homes while they are there for vacations so that the students will have an opportunity to confer with their parents on how they are doing.

Q - In reference to the change in policy concerning students using state cars and the bus, why must students pay for their use this year? The administration used to pay for this. I.S.

A - Mr. Williams, Assistant Business Manager, said that organizations have always been required to pay for state cars except for the Athletics Association. The AA was excluded because of a ruling the state had that money from tax dollars could not be put into athletic organizations. Since then, the AA has been given an appropriation and now also pays for the cars it uses. The state places any regulations which exist on state cars or buses because they are loaned to the school. Any organization on campus that is recognized by the student government can use a state car, but it will have to pay 9¢ for each mile it puts on the meter. Any trip that is sponsored by the college or a particular department, for example the English Department, will be paid for by the administration or the department concerned. Further questions on this matter should be referred to the Business Office.

Q - Why were the funds for all clubs cut out and who gets this money? I.S.

A - Tim Brown, who is Director of Student Activities and a member of the committee in charge of allotting the money, said that funds were not cut off to all of the campus organizations. Brown said that, since the money comes from fees paid by the entire student body, the money a club receives must be spent on providing activities that all students can take part in, this does not include Oktoberfest booths or field trips. A number of organizations have not been doing this, but have been using their money for things such as buying their sponsor a gift, having teas for the members

Budget Problem Keynotes Conference

By VICKI BOWLING

The budget proved to be the main topic of discussion at Dr. Willett's press conference, held last Tuesday in the Gold Room.

Students first wanted to know if their efforts to restore part or all of the $460,000 in operating expenses and $2 million for a physical education building had had any effect.

When asked if he thought the students who had traveled to Richmond to talk to some of the senators had done any good, Dr. Willett said, "My overall view is a positive one."

He has personally heard from three senators who were "very impressed" with talking with the students.

"I have received dozens of letters in the past two days from senators who were contacted," he said.

There was one incident which Dr. Willett termed "unfortunate." He said that as two Longwood students were leaving a senator's office, he threw the letters which they had brought him into the trash can.

In regards to getting some of the money restored, Dr. Willett said, "Quite frankly, I'm not optimistic."

He explained that there had been virtually no indication from the House that the cut was coming, and that many colleges in Virginia were hit harder than Longwood.

He expects that if any money is restored, it will be to those schools that were affected the most.

The House Appropriations Committee did what is being done in many states, Dr. Willett said, "It is trying to develop a type of formula budget whereby institutions of the same size and scope would get the same amount of money per student."

He went on to say that in the past, Longwood has received more money than schools such as Radford, Mary Washington, and even Old Dominion.

Students then were concerned with what will happen if the money is not restored.

The Board of Visitors will arrange for a special meeting, Dr. Willett said.

"We haven't had one in the four and half years I've been here," but he added that the time was right for one.

The Board and business personnel must decide what can be done about saving money and what has to be done about fees.

"We are going no further in increasing finances than we have to," he emphasized. Although some increases were coming anyway, Dr. Willett said, "If we don't get the money back, we are going to do everything we can to keep your charges down."

Despite indications that the money will not be restored, Dr. Willett believes that the efforts by the students have done some good.

The House will have a special session within the next year, he said, and "If we don't get it back now we're going to work on getting it back at this special session."

"We'll start work immediately," he continued, "to make sure our budget looks better the next time around."

There was a large turnout for Dr. Willett's Press Conference although it was publicized very little.

Dr. Willett referred questions concerning financial aid to Mr. Groneweg, who said that there was a slight increase in money for financial assistance. But, he said, if fees go up, the need for money will also go up.

The money in the budget for State Teachers Scholarships is the same amount as last year, Dr. Willett pointed out, but the scholarship can now go to students attending private colleges.

More money could be available if the plan is adopted where only juniors and seniors are eligible for the scholarship, he said, for the money would have to go to four-year institutions, eliminating two-year schools competing for the money.

Although the legislation has been passed which would allow state funds for private schools, Dr. Willett explained that there will be a test case of $1,000. This will allow the courts to decide whether or not the act is constitutional, and it will also provide a "chance for reflective thinking."

"Please don't think that because your efforts or letters have not been answered in the way you wanted that it has been wasted effort," Dr. Willett appealed.

Mr. Groneweg said that in terms of tuition, out-of-state students can do nothing. The only thing they can do is "recruit more out-of-state students!"

As a final note concerning the budget, Dr. Willett said, "I don't think a lot of legislators have realized that 18 year olds can vote. The next time around (Continued on Page 8)

Va. Senate Votes Additional Funding To Four Colleges

The Virginia State Senate acted March 9 to restore about $2 million to the appropriations for higher education. The money was said to be provided for additional operating costs to four colleges. Longwood was not among these.

Along with the inclusion in the budget the Senate approved $750,000 to provide financial aid to the students attending private colleges in Virginia.

The student government president, Mary Lou Glashen, said, "We haven't given up yet. There's still the meeting in January and we'll try to get more money then." Mary Lou was speaking of the fact that the Assembly now meets every year instead of every two years.

Mary Lou also spoke of plans to ask students to help in organizing ways to influence the Assembly into granting Longwood more funds then.

Letters to the Editor

A Thanks

To the Editor:

Dear Longwood Students,

I would like to thank all of you who so generously and wholeheartedly welcomed the Abraham Brothers to our campus this past week for Religious Emphasis Week. I thank God for the Abraham Brothers, their testimonies, and especially for the rededications and decisions made for Him. Our Lord is truly great and there is no doubt that "He IS the Real Thing."

Thank you again from the Abraham Brothers and me.

To God be the Glory —
Brenda Griffin

A Message

Dear Editor,

After hearing the Abraham Brothers for the past three nights, we would like to take this time to thank Brenda Griffin for all her hard work. The music was not truly beautiful but their message was touching. It is almost impossible to describe anything that impressive. We realize that some considered their invitation a "farce" but we feel that if one person out of the whole group found the happiness that they so vividly expressed through their singing, then it was worth it. Obviously it worked for more than one person and changed a few students' way of life. If you can't feel Jesus in your life now then we pray that one day you will find him as many did this week. Then it will be you crying for happiness.

We have one more favor to ask of Brenda. Please bring them back this spring. We're sure the girls will support it financially if funds can not be found. Thank you again Brenda and God Bless You.

In Answer

Dear "Catalyst,"

In response to the question to the "Catalyst" in the March 1 ROTUNDA, the purposes of Chi are as previously quoted from the handbook — "It is our aim to foster respect for Longwood and loyalty to its academic program and extracurricular activities." Chi fulfills this aim in various ways. Projects of Chi of 1972 have included a program encouraging students to vote in state, national, and college elections, sponsoring a Christmas musical by the Campus School students with proceeds going to the Prince Edward County Welfare Department, encouragement of Honor during exams, reminders of the Bloodmobile, a contribution to Sophomore Auction, and support of Junior Ring Dance. Throughout the year, letters of recognition have been sent to students, faculty, and organizations encouraging them to continue their involvement in college activities and academics.

Further evidence of Chi's work is the establishment of an emergency scholarship fund, which is available to students who need financial assistance in order to continue their education at Longwood.

In making changes in the symbol, robes, and song of Chi, it is not our intended purpose to forget the past; but to utilize the valuable aspects of those experiences that have enabled Chi to "promote and maintain a spirit of cooperation in every phase of college life," another purpose of our organization.

Chi, as a representative group of the student body, depends upon the support of each student and welcomes suggestions for additional ways in which Chi can serve Longwood College.

Sincerely,
CHI of 1972

"Religion" Is . . . ?

"Religion" is a difficult word to define. If you ask someone to try to do it, they will almost without fail mention a belief in God in their first attempt. But is it? We use the same word to refer to a person who gets up at the same time every morning or who insists on a set routine that must be followed every day. Certainly this has nothing to do with any god. What is it then?

If we try to find a theological definition, it becomes easier to define the word by knowing what it isn't. Religion is not being Baptist, Catholic, Protestant, Christian, Jewish, Buddhist or any other convenient label that has been created for people with similar ideas! It is not a group of people claiming they are closer to their "god" than any other group or that they have a monopoly on "salvation". But most importantly, it is not being told that you must follow a certain group's ideas or you are doomed.

And yet, Religious Emphasis Week is just past and we have been told that it is many of these things. If you attended any of the activities, you were told that if you didn't accept the person speaking's "god", then you were doomed to never achieve their "salvation". There was no consideration given to the fact that you might have your own "salvation" that they are doomed from achieving. In fact, no consideration was given to other people's beliefs at all.

This point has always seemed rather terrifyingly humorous to me when I apply it to an event like the Crusades. Men spent years fighting and killing each other and claimed it was for their religion. But they believed in the same god. Jehovah, Allah, God... they're all names for the same essence. In some way, these people are expressing some type of belief in a supernatural being greater than themselves. My point isn't that I think that Longwood is headed for a Crusade, but that too often pressure and conflict develop between different groups, not because their goals are different, but because they use different languages.

I doubt that anyone would deny that the people who appeared on the campus last week were talented and probably sincere in what they believed. They proved the first and gave the appearance of the latter. However, it is not the part of an entertainer at a college function, open to people of various beliefs, to inform the people in his audience that if they don't accept his religion as he sees it, they are doomed to whatever horrible fate he foresees. Religion is a matter which is personal to each individual and should not be dictated to by anyone. The performers should have considered that the concert was being financed by money paid by the student body as a whole and this encompasses many different "religions". At the least, the students sponsoring the concerts and events should have been alert to the feelings of their fellow students.

Religious Emphasis Week made great strides this year and those responsible for planning it and carrying it through deserve all of the congratulations they have received. For the first time since I've been here, students took an active interest in the event. Unfortunately, it was extremely narrow in its scope. While it impressed many people, it turned many students off completely. They felt their beliefs, whatever they were, were being attacked and degraded. Some of them were hurt and offended by the way they interpreted what was said to them. I hope this was just one of the growing pains of launching an active annual event on campus. Hopefully, next year the emphasis will be placed on finding a viable meaning and purpose for the word "religion" instead of showing up the differences in sects.

A Light Musical Comedy, Will Be Presented Here

By PAM WATSON
 "A fanciful, sophisticated, innocent musical that has been an international success in 14 languages" cleverly sums up the entertainment that the Student Union has lined up for next Monday night. THE FANTASTICKS, a musical comedy in two acts, will be presented March 20 at 7:30 p.m. in Jarman by the same national touring company that produced STOP THE WORLD — I WANT TO GET OFF here last year.

According to a review from "The New Yorker," the off-Broadway musical deals with a young man and the girl next door, whose parents have built a wall to keep them apart. The youngsters, nevertheless, contrive to meet and fall in love. Their parents, meanwhile, are congratulating themselves, for they have erected the wall and staged a feud in order to achieve a marriage between their willfully disobedient children. The songs are very pretty and the lyrics are frequently clever. On commenting about the show, Dragon Chandler, chairman of the Student Union, said that the group is professional and they have been touring at different schools across the country since the beginning of this year, doing this play. She met Jackie Warner, the director of the touring company, at the National Entertainment Conference in Kansas City during February, Warner said he has been very pleased with the musical's success and this particular group of actors. Tickets for the show will be on sale in the smoker before and after meals for $1.50 for Longwood students and $2.00 for all nonstudents.

Cole Porter Musical To Be Presented By H-S Faculty Players

By ROBERT H. SELLS
 Hampden-Sydney Correspondent
 "Anything Goes," Cole Porter's hit musical comedy, will bring a reminiscent touch of yesteryear to the stage when the Hampden-Sydney College faculty players present the musical at the college March 15 and 16 at 8 p.m. The time of the play is the flapper era of the late 1920's, and the action takes place aboard the S.S. American during a trans-Atlantic voyage from London to New York.

Action throughout the play centers upon romantic attachment between two young couples, Billy Crocker, a "jack of all trades," with Teno Sweeney, a night club performer, and Sir Evelyn, a British aristocrat with his intended bride, debutante Hope Hancourt. Billy is played by Jim Simms, Reno by Anne Moore, Sir

"Reno Sweeney," played by Anne Moore, and "Billy Crocker," played by Jim Simms, have two of the lead singing roles in ANYTHING GOES.

Evelyn by Robert McIlwaine, and Hope by Winnie Morgan. Nancy Iverson is directing the play. Mrs. Iverson also directed last year's production of Farquhar's "The Beaux' Stratagem."

To complete the cast of characters, another lively couple, a gangster and his gun moll, enter the plot and become intertwined in a hilarious series of mistaken identities. "Moonface," a gangster trying to flee the country, is played by Al Elmore, and his gun moll, "Bonnie," is portrayed by Jaqui Beard.

The entire cast, which includes a chorus and major and minor characters, numbers 34, and with all other persons involved in the endeavor in behind-the-scenes work, over 60 persons in the college and the Hampden-Sydney community have part in the production.

There will be two performances, Wednesday and Thursday, March 15 and 16. Curtain time is 8 p.m. and tickets are on sale at Gray's Drug Store in the Farmville Shopping Center, and at the Information Center and the College Shop at Hampden-Sydney. There will be no reserved seats.

Ticket prices are $1.50 for adults, $1.00 for students, and 50¢ for children under 12.

The Afro-American Dance Ensemble will perform Tuesday night as part of the Artist Series.

Afro-American Dance Ensemble Will Perform Tuesday In Jarman

By DEBBIE BASTEK
 Arthur Hall's renowned Afro-American Dance Ensemble will perform March 21, at 8 p.m. in Jarman auditorium. The Philadelphia based group has traveled throughout the country performing their own interpretations of Black Soul on college and school campuses, television, dance festivals, theatres, and night clubs. Arthur Hall was born in Memphis, Tennessee, and moved to Philadelphia with his family at age 17. There he began his study of dance at the Judimar School. He also studied with John Hines in Philadelphia, Katherine Dunham and Percival Borde in New York, and with such distinguished foreign visitors as John Eshun, from Ghana, Obediah Craig from Nigeria, Olantunji, and for three years with Saka Ackyue, now Minister of Culture in Ghana. This past August Mr. Hall opened a Black Humanitarian Center in Philadelphia, also named "Ile Ife" after the legendary African capital. The center teaches a gamut of Afro-related subjects, including dance, music, languages, and crafts.

Commended by Pennsylvania's governor Milton J. Shapp, newspapers have said of the group, "The Afro-American Dance Ensemble is teaching worlds of people about their cultural heritage — and that includes both black and white worlds, who might equally respond to the dancing drums of Africa or the cakewalk and jitterbug of the American experience."

In addition to the dance program, the group will display various objects of African art, including hand made objects, masks, and jewelry from Ghana, Morocco, and Nigeria before the performance. All proceeds from articles sold will go to the state chapter fighting sickle cell anemia, a crippling disease which affects only blacks.

Senior Voice Majors Will Present Recital In Wygal

By VICKI BOWLING
 Cheryl Brown, senior voice major and pupil of Mr. James McCombs, will present her senior recital on Sunday, March 19, at 4 p.m. in the Wygal Recital Hall. Brian Holsopple, a senior voice major at Bridgewater College and pupil of Mr. Phillip Trout, will also participate in the recital.

Cheryl will sing selections ranging from "I Heard a Piper Piping" by Norman Peterkin to "L'Heure Exquise" by Reynaldo Hahn to Recitative and Aria from "Le Nozze di Figaro" by Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart.

Brian, a tenor, will sing selections which include Recitative and Aria from "Elijah" by Felix Mendelssohn and "The Thought" by Gustav Holst.

To conclude the program, Cheryl and Brian will perform a duet from the musical "West Side Story" by Leonard Bernstein.

This Story Is About The End Of The World

Reprinted From The VILLAGE VOICE

By ROSS GELBSPAN

The end will come within the next 100 years, under the weight of population and industrial overgrowth, according to a team of MIT scientists, unless we stop all growth within the next few years. Otherwise civilization will collapse sometime in the 21st century and the majority of us and/or our children will die of hunger, pollution, disease, and perhaps 100 other grotesque and terrifying catastrophes that accompany the collapse of civilization.

The team, headed by Professor Dennis Meadows, presented the findings of an 18-month study on the predicament of mankind at the Smithsonian Institution Thursday. Having studied the report and digested the concepts—without having had time to investigate opposition from the scientific and business world—I must say it seems very real to me.

Computer Report

The report is based on computer analyses and projections of five global factors: accelerating industrialization, rapid population growth, widespread malnutrition, the depletion of non-renewable resources, and the deterioration of the environment. Each of these is growing at an exponential rate—that is, a rate of geometric progression in which a thing increases by a constant percentage of the whole in constant time periods.

The concept of exponential growth is most important to understand. Imagine you had a penny on the first day of the month. On the second day, you doubled it. On the third day, you doubled that. Sit down with a pencil and paper and figure out how much you would have in a month. And while you are calculating the increase, imagine that all around you people are being born, factories are increasing, resources are being extracted, pollutants being generated—all at the same rate of increase as your penny. The most important thing to understand about exponential growth is that its impact is felt all at once. It is not until you get to the 25th or 26th day that the sum really begins to get out of hand.

Projected World Model

In terms of the world model constructed by the MIT team, this means that after about 1985 it will be too late to reverse the final stage of exponential growth which will cause the collapse of natural and social life-support systems. But the actual impact will not be totally felt until the mid-21st century, when the price of food suddenly skyrockets out of reach, the industrial base collapses, and the masses of population begin to die from starvation and disease.

The model shows merely the gross over-trends, and while it requires a lot of refinements, the authors of the report say the basic behavior modes appear to be so fundamental that "we do not expect our broad conclusions to be substantially altered by further revisions."

Finite Earth

What it all comes down to is: the planet earth is finite. It has only so much space, so many resources, and so much tolerance for integrating the effects of industrialization. Man's activities—interns of population (most of the Third World) and in terms of economic growth (Europe, America, Russia, Japan)—have accelerated exponentially into a pattern of infinite and self-perpetuating growth. And you cannot grow infinitely in a finite environment. Something has to give.

In 1650, there were half a billion people on earth. In 1970, there are 3.5 billion. By 2000, there will be seven billion and the rate of increase would go on from there except that much of the world's population will begin to die at that point. Capital output, which itself helps boost population as well as deplete resources and generate pollution, is increasing at a higher rate than population.

Feed Back Loops

The model details the relationships between the various factors in a pattern of positive and negative feedback loops. A positive feedback loop shows how two accelerating factors inter-act to keep reinforcing each other's growth. A good example of a feedback loop is the wage-price spiral which, only a few months ago, threatened to take off at such a destructive rate that Nixon felt he had to impose controls which are ideologically abhorrent to most of his constituency.

State Of Equilibrium

On a world basis, all the factors are inter-related—so that industrial output increases agricultural capital which increases food which increases population which increases resource depletion, etc.

The scientists ran various combinations of projections through the computer and the only one which worked—the only system under which humanity would survive intact—is what they call a state of equilibrium in which the birth rate equals the death rate and the rate of capital growth equals the rate of capital depreciation.

Merely to control one of two of the factors—by, for example, pollution and birth control—would not alter the inherent process of exponential growth which is leading us very quickly to the point Meadows calls "overshoot and collapse."

All this is by way of a simplified explanation of the report. But if its results hold up, it means we must decide fast on what kind of a society we want to have under an equilibrium state and how to attain it. A UN official, working on economic development in Third World nations, says any such equilibrium must include re-distribution of the world's wealth. Otherwise, a state of equilibrium is totally unacceptable to the majority of the world's population for it would lock the poor of the world into a state of permanent poverty.

What This Means For Americans

The equilibrium state goes against a fundamental American instinct—the drive for growth.

The changes that will be required in our mentality are staggering. It means we must be willing to give away much of what we have. It means the whole world would be living at about the same standard of living—approximately that of middle-class Europeans—if we act quickly. It means that people will probably be working only a scant portion of the hours they now work. It means a tremendous shift of capital from material and industrial goods into service areas—education, health, the arts, sports, etc.—which do not yield increasing capital dividends. It means the end of the marketplace economy, the equalization of wealth throughout the world. It means a totally new global consciousness which is as remote from the mainstream of American thought as Copernicus' conception of the universe was from the church-dominated mentality of his time. Only we have a very few years to make the adjustment.

Media Help

Edward P. Morgan, ABC's senior commentator, called for a total media barrage about the findings. Barring a convincing refutation of the report by the scientific community in the next few weeks, I completely agree. But the media's handling of the information must be very careful. I imagine the response of most people will be to turn off, to reject emotionally the reality of imminent world destruction. Many people who do hear it will be driven into hysteria. Others will sink into a state of very deep apathy. One of the first things I would suggest—and I am utterly serious about this—is that the government institute some ad hoc safeguards on the stock market so that, as the realization of the extent of the crisis dawns in the public mind, there is not immediate panic. I imagine a lot of politicians will respond merely by calling for stricter pollution controls. But this is not the issue. We are not in danger of dying from pollution. We are in danger of dying from growth.

Do We Stop Voluntarily

The MIT study was sponsored by the Club of Rome, a group of leading world industrialists and scientists who got together in 1968 to study the predicament of mankind. The head of the Club, Aurelio Peccei, a director of Fiat and former president of the Olivetti Company, told the audience of senators, ambassadors, and Pentagon and HEW officials that man must begin immediately to re-appraise his cultural values if a new society is to be hatched in time to avert collapse. This appraisal must include the relation of men to other forms of life on the planet, the relation between the weak and the strong, the rich and the poor, the relation between our generation and the next. Pretty basic decisions. Meadows reinforced the effect by reminding us that it is no longer a question of whether we choose to stop growing. "We are certainly going to stop. The question is, do we do it voluntarily in accordance with our values, or do we let nature take its course?"

Results Of No Action

Taking no action, according to the report, is equivalent to taking strong action. Every day of continuing exponential growth brings the world system closer to the ultimate limits of growth. The longer we grow, the fewer options are left us on how the world can be re-structured.

The urgency of the report is underscored by two graphs: one shows levels of population, food, pollution, resources, industrial output if stabilization is achieved by 1975. The second graph shows corresponding levels if stabilization is achieved by 2000. In 2,000, the equilibrium state is no longer sustainable. Population and industrial capital reach levels high enough to create severe shortages before 2100.

Can The World Be Controlled?

And 1975 is three years away. Can America and the world be brought under control? I don't know. The first thing I would suggest to anyone who cares is to read "The Limits to Growth," a Potomac Associates Book which will be released in a few days. And keep track of your emotional reactions. It will help you imagine what this country may be going through in the coming months.

Colleges In The News

Honor System Challenged

CHARLOTTESVILLE — A challenge to the 130-year-old honor system at the University of Virginia has been defeated by the Student Honor Committee. The Honor Committee rejected a proposal submitted by four law students to adopt an alternate honor penalty of suspension that would have modified the time-honored system of expulsions for any honor offense. The committee also turned down a proposal to submit the question to a University-wide student referendum. The report by the students contended that "the present single sanction of expulsion is a major factor contributing to the decreased effectiveness of the system. Many students refuse to report honor violations because they feel that certain acts though dishonorable are not dishonorable enough to warrant permanent expulsion from the University. If the student proposal had been approved, a student could have been expelled or suspended for one year, depending on the offense. The student-administered system now calls for any act of stealing, lying or cheating. The proposal also included special rules to ensure that a student convicted of an honor offense near the end of semester could complete exams before suspension became effective.

Graduate Programs Dropped

RICHMOND — The State Council of Higher Education has decided to recommend that six state colleges, including Longwood, drop 29 graduate degree programs that have had no degree recipients for at least three years. The five other colleges are the University of Virginia, William and Mary, Virginia Commonwealth University, Virginia State College, and Virginia Polytechnic Institute. Both masters degrees and doctoral programs are involved. Complaints about the unproductive programs have been aired in the council for more than a year. Council members were also told this week that the colleges have asked for appropriations on the basis of the programs. Recommended to be dropped by Longwood would be the granting of masters degrees in elementary education.

Student Runs For Council

HARRISONBURG — Lorne Gurne, a 23-year-old Madison College junior, filed here Monday as an independent candidate for Harrisonburg City Council, and acknowledged that his supporters have already begun drives to register large numbers of high school and college students in his behalf. In late January, Harrisonburg petitioned the House Committee on Elections to move the date for municipal elections from May to June, when most college students would be away on summer vacation. City Council said it was concerned that students at Madison might register en masse, and that their votes could significantly affect local elections if they were held May 2 as scheduled. Gurne, a social sciences major, said he had decided to live in Harrisonburg and that if elected he would serve a full four-year term.

Gymnastic Take Second Place In Meet

By SHARON CURLING
Longwood's gymnastic team took second place at the Regional Meet held at Memphis State University on March 4. Longwood made a score of 69.55 and was edged out of first place by Memphis State University with a score of 72.5. The states included in this region are Virginia, North Carolina, Kentucky and Tennessee.

First place was won by Jo Smith in the All Around event, with Carolyn Paxton taking second place. The scores were 24.6 and 22.85, respectively. The All Around winner is determined by the total scores earned in floor exercise, balance beam, uneven parallel bars and vaulting.

In the individual events, Jo Smith took a first place in vaulting, scoring a perfect 8.0 for a "beautifully executed handspring vault." Carolyn Paxton also scored a first place in uneven bar competition with a score of 6.25. Jo Smith and Carol Stewart tied for fourth place in the same event. Suzanne Stewart won second place on the balance beam with a score of 6.3. According to the coach, Miss Judith Fath, Suzanne's routine was "highly original and impressively performed." A fourth place was also won by Jo Smith on the beam with a score of 5.6.

Jo Smith is Longwood's Top gymnastic performer.

Jo Smith Receives Award In Gymnastic Meet

Longwood was well represented in the recent regional gymnastic meet.

Jo Smith was awarded first all-around in the Division of Girls and Women's Sports Regional Qualifying Meet held on March 4 at Memphis State University.

Longwood's team came in second in the entire meet behind Memphis State. Other members of Longwood's team who were present at the meet were Suzanne Stewart and Carol Stewart.

Jo, who has been working in gymnastics since the seventh grade, is a junior transfer student hailing from Richmond, Va.

Those clubs which have not been using their funds properly were warned over a two year period and, if they had not amended their procedure by this year, the amount of their funds was cut sharply. Any organization whose constitution is approved by the Evaluation Committee of Legislative Board can apply for an allotment from the student fees. A - The library staff is presently in the process of evaluating the checkout system and investigating other possible methods. No change is expected before the end of next year because of the time and money that making such a change would incur.

He said it might have been a truck from the wholesale grocery store he deals with and the dogfood sign could have been an advertisement. Slater deals with Armour and Swift packing companies for its meat and to Mr. Carbone's knowledge they do not make Dash Dogfood.

Reaction

The manholes around campus are painted black and white (a question in last week's Catalyst) because of a survey which is being conducted by the State Division of Engineering and Buildings. Col. Abrams said that the state is required to resurvey its property every few years in order to update its books. This is done on a staggered basis and Longwood was done in the late 1920's. This survey is quicker to do by taking pictures from the air and with facilities painted in this way, they show up more clearly in the photographs. When the survey is completed the markings will be removed.

In replying to a question in a previous Catalyst, Dean Wilson wishes to announce that completed forms regarding graduation should be sent to the registrar. Information concerning graduation invitations or announcements may be obtained from Senior Class President Nancy Fowkes, who is presently student teaching, or from Margaret Lowry in South Ruffner 337.

People's Posters Said 'Lewd'; Removed From LC Campus

By ROBERT SELLS

In compliance with orders allegedly originating with Dr. Henry Willett, President of Longwood College, Rob Tedrow, owner of People's Products on Third Street in Farmville, said he has removed certain posters from the Longwood campus.

When reached at his home Sunday night for comment, Dr. Willett said that he had no knowledge of any such action.

"I don't know of anything specific done against the store. There is an overall advertising policy whereby people cannot indiscriminately come on campus and post advertising. We told a lot of people this. The policy was drawn up by the Board of Visitors and Legislative Board,"

Dr. Willett said.

"I'm not familiar with the place," he added.

"I removed the posters which he said were lewd," Tedrow said. "He said they suggested intercourse." One poster showed two lovers who were nude, but Tedrow said that he did not think the poster suggested intercourse.

The posters advertised People's Products. Tedrow said that he removed them because he did not wish to lose the Longwood business.

Tedrow said that he did not wish to reveal who had relayed Willett's orders to him. He did say that his source was reliable and that he had no reason to doubt that the orders were true.

Monday Leg. Board Meeting Yields Five Major Proposals

By BECKY NICHOLSON

Five proposals including a change in the Alma Mater, dating in motels, a secondhand bookstore, and a beer party for Juniors, were suggested during the Legislative Board meeting last Monday night. Many Longwood girls find the Alma Mater hard to learn, and since it isn't sung often, it was suggested that it be replaced by "Joan of Arc." There was no opposition by Board members on this matter because they feel "Joan of Arc" is more popular with the student body. A member of the alumnae wrote the Alma Mater in 1893, and some opposition may arise from alumnae members, but no definite decision was made.

A suggestion that an exchange center be set up for the purchase of secondhand books resulted in several questions from Board members. The Board wanted to know what organization would have the time to help. Another problem is the fact that the college has a contract with the Bookstore in Lankford. Under this contract only the Bookstore manager has the authorization to sell secondhand books. This led to the question, "Is it breach of contract if it's a non-profit affair?" The decision on this issue was postponed until board members could gather some information.

The possibility of changing the rules so that students may date in motel or hotel rooms within the corporate limits of Farmville was discussed. Many married couples find it hard to get overnight rooms in the area. Since the local inns won't allow dating in rooms, the Board felt that it was futile to make any ruling on the matter.

Judicial Board asked Legisla-

New Hampshire Primary

Senator George McGovern not only ran a strong second to Senator Edmund S. Muskie in Wednesday's New Hampshire preferential primary, but he apparently won a share of New Hampshire's delegation to the Democratic National Convention. Muskie received some 48 per cent of the vote cast, while McGovern received 37 per cent.

Virginia Budget

The Virginia Senate gave unanimous approval Wednesday to a $5 billion state budget for the coming biennium. The Senate took about 2 hours and 45 minutes to adopt the bill which is now about $119 million slimmer than the original budget recommended by Gov. Linwood Holton at the beginning of the session.

War On Drugs

Senate-House conferees reached agreement Thursday night on a $1 billion, three-year plan of attack on drug abuse. The comprehensive program, aiming some funds on target areas with large numbers of addicts, creates a temporary special office under the President to bring together scattered federal antidrug programs and set uniform policy.

Air Security Ordered

President Nixon has ordered the nation's airlines, hit by a series of bomb hoaxes, to implement tighter security controls in the tense aftermath of a $2 million extortion plot against Trans World Airlines. Nixon ordered on Thursday "immediate steps by every carrier to prevent or deter weapons or explosives from being carried aboard its aircraft; to prevent or deter unauthorized access to its aircraft; to tighten its baggage checking procedures, and to improve the security of its cargo and baggage loading operations."

Gas Tax Hike

The State Senate added its approval Thursday to a two-cents-a-gallon increase in the state gasoline tax. The gas tax bill was passed by a 30-10 vote and now goes to Gov. Holton for his signature.

Candidate Sanford

Former Governor Terry Sanford of North Carolina said Wednesday that he will seek the presidency, beginning in North Carolina's preferential primary May 6.

The 54-year-old president of Duke University said he will campaign in a program of alternate courses that would "earn the support of the deeply troubled American public."

New Sign Out Procedure Being Considered By Residence Board

By JANET LYNN TENNYSON
There is now under consideration by Residence Board a new procedure for signing out in dormitories. At the Board meeting on March 6, a delegation of supporters presented the new system to the board members. "The system would consist of a file box with nine boxes labeled with "Monday", "Tuesday", "Wednesday", "Thursday", "Friday", "Saturday", "Sunday", "Infirmary" and "Indefinite", said Betsy Minor, speaker for the new system and a hall president in Frazer Dorm.

Dr. Breil Receives Grant

Dr. David Breil, professor of biology here at Longwood, has received a grant from the Scientific Research Society (Sigma Xi) to aid him in his study of liverworts.

At the end of March he will be going down to Florida to collect these plants, which are related to mosses.

All the research he is doing is a continuation of his doctoral research on liverworts. He hopes to eventually publish a book on this subject.

"We want the system instituted in Frazer for the remainder of the semester on a trial basis, if it doesn't take effect immediately", she continued.

The procedure would simply consist of signing out regularly, taking the card from the rack, and placing the card in the file box marked with the day of return. This would supposedly take care of the chance of clips being knocked off and the wrong card being turned to "out."

The board has been looking for a new procedure in this area", said Terry Jones, board chairman, "and I feel the members are in favor of the change".

The procedure will now be presented to head residents and Dean Heintz for approval.

Other business at the meeting concerned fire warden's report, the paper drive, reminders and a judgement made by Residence Board.

After an investigation of a student who was 25 minutes late not including leeway, the board gave the student six days campus.

Paula Williams, fire marshal, reported there was a fire drill held February 28, in Tabb, French and Ruffner dorms. The drill at 11 p. m. took six minutes to vacate the buildings. However, "French dorm re-entered their dorm too soon after the drill".

The paper drive held for the benefit of the Farmville SPCA is still continuing. It was reported that so far $125 has been raised from the papers collected so far.

Terry Jones reminded dorm presidents to tell students that pets are not allowed to be housed in the dorm. Students with pets will be given one week to place the animals somewhere other than the college campus.

The Abraham Brothers performed in the Gold Room for three nights and presented their kind of religion for Religious Emphasis Week.

Abraham Brothers Present Their Style Of Gospel Music

By VALERIE BLANKS
With their longish hair and contemporary clothes, they looked like a typical rock group. But when the Abraham Brothers began to sing songs like "Jesus Is Coming Soon" you knew they were different.

This unusual group performed here for Religious Emphasis Week, March 6-9, in the Gold Room of Lankford. They proved that their musical theme for the three nights, "The Sweet, Sweet Song of Salvation," was a versatile one. As well as singing the familiar gospel songs such as "Jesus Is Coming Soon" and "He Touched Me," they also presented their rendition of some contemporary rock songs, such as "Bridge Over Troubled Waters" and "Color My World," by Chicago.

Many young people are turned off by gospel music but the Abraham Brothers present it in a way they hope their audience can enjoy. As Gary Abraham said,

"Many people have a misconception about gospel music. It has the same rhythms, melodies and harmonies as other music. The only difference is gospel music has a message."

This message came across with intensity as they sang, portraying the depth of their own religious beliefs. Gary voiced this in speaking for the group, when he said, "We sing songs we feel inside." And later, after presenting his version of "Bridge Over Troubled Waters," his brother, Don said, "I sing for God."

Besides Don, 18, and Gary, 17, the other two members are also brothers, Bob and Ed Finney. Bob, 16, plays the piano for the group, and Ed, 17, sings first tenor. They all hail from Youngstown, Ohio, and have been traveling together as a full-time professional group since September of 1971.

Since they are on the road most of the time, performing (Continued on Page 8)

Ring Dance Week-end Features A Concert By Jonathan Edwards

The Junior Class will sponsor the annual Ring Dance Weekend April 7-9. Friday night will open the weekend with a concert by JONATHAN EDWARDS. He will be singing his recent hit "Sunshine" plus many more songs of his own composition. The Student Union is also presenting Miller and Burton in this concert to double the entertainment. The concert will begin at 8 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium. Tickets will cost $3.00 per person and will go on sale Monday, March 20, for all Juniors, and Wednesday, March 22, for the remaining student body. Tuesday, April 4, tickets will be sold to Hampden-Sydney and the local area.

Saturday night is the traditional Ring Dance. The theme this year will be "Rollin' on the River" and will feature a New Orleans motif. The ROYAL KINGS of Roanoke will be the entertainment for the dance in the downstairs dining hall from 9-1. The attire is formal for the belles with coats and ties for their dates. The price of admission will be $5.00 a couple.

A special combination ticket may be bought this year. The price for a couple to go to the concert and dance will be only $10.00. When you buy your tickets be sure to ask for this bargain.

The Juniors will have two private functions. Friday night, all Juniors are asked to eat in the downstairs dining hall. Dates may come and the price for their meal will only be $1.25. Then after the concert the Juniors are having a "Keg Party," tentatively set for 10:30 in the Commons Room. Admission will only be $.50 for all you can drink - Beer or Pepsi - and a good party. All Juniors are invited to come. There will be records, cards, guitars, (if you bring yours) and anything else you want to bring. Juniors are asked to read the wires next week to sign up for the dinner, keg party, and figure.

Press Conference

they'll realize it even more!
"That's an indirect plea for you all to register to vote," he said.

In other business, Dr. Willett announced that he has asked Legislative Board to table indefinitely his proposal that Judicial Board should be given the power to handle cases of stealing in town.

He said that the matter of Longwood students shoplifting in town will be carefully looked at in the future. If it becomes a problem, the proposal will be considered again.

There will be an open meeting concerning registration on Tuesday, March 21, at 1 p.m. in the BC rooms in Lankford. Dr. Willett said that he hopes those who attend will come prepared with concrete suggestions about the registration procedure.

He also announced the availability of a list of doctors in Farmville who are qualified to practice gynecology. The local hospital compiled the list, which may be picked up from Dean Heintz's office and from the information office in the library.

In regard to the mysterious markings on the manholes on campus, Col. Abrams said that the state is conducting a survey of college property. The survey is being done from the air, and the markings are necessary for aerial photographs.

In an informal period before the press conference, Dr. Blackwell answered questions about spring break. Classes will resume at 1 p.m. on Monday, April 3, he said.

Dean Wilson reassured students who needed to return early that the dorms will open at noon on Sunday.

Chalk Artist Is Sponsored By YWCA As Part Of Religious Emphasis Week

By JANET LYNN TENNYSON

The man is a chalk artist. He felt God called him to preach and sing and he stumbled on to it. The man is Damon Wyatt.

So what is a chalk artist? "It's another way to bring the gospel to people," said Mr. Wyatt. In Georgia, he was traveling with an evangelist and saw a demonstration by a chalk artist. "The next night I was doing it," continued Mr. Wyatt.

Mr. Wyatt and his wife appeared as part of the Religious Emphasis Week activities, sponsored by the YWCA.

Mr. Wyatt explained that there are three mediums essential to his artistry. They are the drawing, the lights and the music.

He first tones the board with a yellow and blue background. He then draws his scene using from five to ten colors of chalk.

Some of the chalk is fluorescent and glows when he uses the black light to illuminate his picture. The last medium is the music. His wife, Vivian plays the piano, softly at times, and both of the Wyatts sing hymns to coincide with the drawing.

Mr. and Mrs. Wyatt live in Portsmouth, Va., where he has used his talent for eighteen years. He started out drawing cartoons for the Norfolk naval yard newspaper. He now is a recognized artist who uses chalk and oils.

He recently won a blue ribbon in the Portsmouth Art Show, and plans on entering several pieces of art in the Virginia Beach show.

REV. DAMON WYATT

"I have appeared on television and at one time had my own program, however I concentrate now on personal appearances and my own radio program," added Mr. Wyatt.

When asked if all his subjects were religious, Mr. Wyatt replied, "All of my work is spiritual in nature." As one student expressed it, "The whole experience was so moving."

Mr. Wyatt proved that even with such a simple tool as chalk, an artist can move the spirit.

Open Registration Meeting

Is Scheduled For March 21

By LYNDIA VAN HORN

An exchange of ideas is the purpose of the open registration meeting to be held March 21 at 1 p.m. in the BC room in Lankford.

The meeting set up by the registration committee should serve to answer questions as well as discuss new ideas.

Dean Carolyn Wells, chairman of the committee, spoke of the meeting and other registration matters. "The more we can know about the problems people have with registration, the better it will be," she said.

Registration for classes next fall will take place Tuesday, April 25, and as in the past no classes will be held on that day. The April preregistration will be marked by a few significant changes, however.

Early registration of first block student teachers on April 13 will help lessen the number of students involved in regular registration. This time prospective student teachers will have more choice in their scheduling since they will participate in a mini-registration similar to regular registration but involving only student teaching candidates. This is a change over the last registration when student teachers were registered through the Dean's office.

A change in MWF classes is another new procedure for next year. Period seven will be from 3 to 4:15 on MW, with an option to the professor of holding class MF, instead of from 3 to 3:50 on MWF as this year. The same is true of period eight that will be held from 4:25 to 5:40 with the same professor option. Dean Wells explained that the option is necessary especially for those professors who also act as student teaching supervisors.

Dean Wells also explained that the committee is trying to limit the 3 to 5 MWF classes to a minimum. "We are trying very hard to get the schedule of classes spread evenly," she said,

"but it isn't easy."

Before planning for registration all students who are thinking of changing majors should do so before registration time. Dean Wells also recommends that students planning to attend summer school decide which courses they will take in the summer and plan the fall semester accordingly. The summer school bulletin is due to come out the first week in April.

tive Board to select members for a proposed Judicial Advisory Committee, who would advise students of their rights before coming to trial. Judicial Board would set up the criteria for the Advisory Board. It will be possible for those to serve who have been before Judicial Board and are back in school again. Legislative Board hesitated on this proposal because they felt unqualified to select members since they were unfamiliar with all duties of this Advisory Board. The proposal was tabled for a future meeting.

The Junior Class asked Legislative Board to grant them the privilege of having beer at their party April 7, which is Ring Dance Week - end. The Board granted a proposal that the Juniors can have their party in the commons room from 10:30 p.m. to 1 a.m. People can only drink the beer provided at the party, and there will probably be an admission fee.

The future plans of the group include adding two more members by the end of July. Besides the piano and guitar they now use in their performances, they plan to add drums and bass. So far they have done their albums independently, two of which are on the market. But by the end of May they will sign a recording contract.

The Abraham Brothers plan to continue indefinitely their ministry through music. In speaking of their mission, Gary said, "America, as well as the world, is in bad shape. The answer to America's problems is through God. We're trying to help this situation, and we feel that gospel music is our medium for helping people."

LONGWOOD COLLEGE, FARMVILLE, VIRGINIA WEDNESDAY, MARCH 22, 1972

NO. 19

Q - Does the dining hall put salt-peter in the food and, if so, do they think they have the right to curb our sexual desires? N.N.

A - The dining hall does not put salt-peter in the food. This is a rumor that has been circulating on campus for years. The story about the substance curbing anyone's sexual desires is an old wives' tale and has no scientific basis.

Q - As a form of recreation, why can't the jukebox be free to students? S.S.

A - The snackbar was originally outfitted by the Alumni Association and is maintained by Slater. The jukebox is installed under a contract with a company based in Richmond with a stipulation that a certain percentage of the revenue made from the machine is given to the Alumni Association.

Q - Is it the policy of Longwood to let House Mothers make their own rules? (No initials)

A - Terry Jones, Chairman of Residence Board, says that Head Residents are not allowed to arbitrarily make their own rules, but because each dorm is different, there may be different rules from dorm to dorm. This is mainly to help with the upkeep of the building. Terry says that if anyone disagrees with a dormitory policy they can report it to Residence Board and they will check into it.

Q - Is the policy towards alcohol in the dorms going to be reconsidered when 18-year-olds are given full adult rights? A.R.

A - Dr. Willett had anticipated that this rule would be passed in this meeting of the General Assembly and had already made the appropriate changes for next year's handbook, according to Mary Lou Glasheen, Chairman of Legislative Board. However, the legislature did not approve extending full citizenship rights to 18-year-olds, so the handbook was changed back. If the measure is ever passed, the handbook will be changed accordingly.

Q - Why do dorm rooms have to be inspected? D.S.

A - Dorm rooms must be checked occasionally to inspect for damages and fire hazards. It is also a precautionary method to maintain general health standards. Considering how some students keep their rooms, this is understandable.

Betty Ann Glasheen Wins May Queen Elections This Year

town the night the votes were tallied and was contacted long distance by her sister, Mary Lou, who thought Betty would be excited to find out that she had won.

When told the results, Betty approached it with mixed emotions. "Stop playing these practical jokes," she said, supposing that this was just another sisterly trick. It took some convincing to make her realize that it was not a joke.

Betty, a senior science major from Hampton, has been active in school activities. She has been on the May Court for the past two years, in addition to being a member of Orchestria, Kappa Delta sorority, and the Artist's Service Committee. She enjoys music and sports, especially softball and hockey, and plays the guitar for the Newman Folk Group. When talking about May Day week end, she's all smiles. "I'm really honored at being elected," she said.

By SANDY OLIVER, Chairman of Judicial Board, and KAY OLIVER, Vice Chairman

It is certainly regrettable that some members of our student body do not feel bound by the Honor Code. This minority has inconvenienced the majority of the student body and has incurred financial loss to others.

Stealing is an Honor Code offense and may be punishable by suspension. This semester many items, including money, clothing, and jewelry have been taken. Judicial Board is deeply concerned with the numerous thefts on campus and is making every effort to deter them.

Much of this stealing can be prevented. To protect yourself against thefts, the following procedures are recommended:

1. Lock your door whenever you will be out of your room for a length of time (classes, meals, etc.). Be sure to lock up when leaving for a week end.
2. Do not keep more money in your room than you can afford to have stolen. Conceal your money.
3. Try to use checks rather than cash for your transaction. If your checks are taken, report it immediately to your bank.

4. If you must have a large amount of money in your possession, do not keep it in your room. Have it locked up in the ARA-Slater safe in the dining room office. Some head residents will keep money overnight if not held responsible for its loss.

5. Record the serial number on your electrical appliances as well as brand and style for use as identification in the event that it is taken.

6. Mark your name on your clothing and other belongings (records, books, etc.)

7. Use drying racks in your room. However, if you use the laundry room, remove your clothes as soon as possible.

A new system of reporting thefts has been initiated this semester. If you have something taken, obtain a "Stolen Item Report Form" immediately from your hall president, dorm president, head resident, or any member of Judicial Board. Follow the directions on the form in reporting the theft.

It is important that every item be reported and that it be reported promptly. With a complete record, it is sometimes possible to trace patterns that aid in the discovery of the thief's identity. Sometimes, the stolen articles are found in various places on campus and can be returned to the owner if she has filed a report.

Another related problem involves those students that remove books from the library without following the proper checking-out procedure. As a result, these books (many of which are reserved) are not available to other students needing the books for research. This is an Honor Code offense and infractions should be reported.

Judicial Board cannot possibly do anything about a theft unless they are notified that it has taken place. Please report any missing articles or any information concerning a theft to Judicial Board immediately.

Our Honor Code is only as strong as you make it. Please do your part.

An Unnecessary Bond

During a conversation with some students last week, I had certain provisions in the Student Government Constitution impressed on me to which, although I was aware of them, I hadn't given a lot of thought. Specifically, they deal with the fact that the Publications Board is a committee of Legislative Board; therefore, in a sense, each of the publications, with a particular reference to The Rotunda, are subcommittees of Student Government.

The more I thought about this, the more ludicrous and dangerous it seemed. By having all of the publications under its control, theoretically the Board can dictate what should be printed. I wonder what the New York Times would say if it was told that President Nixon and his cabinet had this power over it. For those who have forgotten, the Times was the first paper to print the Pentagon Papers.

This situation doesn't disturb me because I think The Rotunda and Student Government should be opponents, I see no reason why the two can't work together with the same amount of cooperation which has existed so far for this semester. However, I would be very afraid of a government taking office that would use its authority to impose strict regulations on the publications.

The relationship between the Student Government and Publications Board, as explained to me by a Legislative Board member, is very tenuous and doubtful. There doesn't appear to be a good reason for a bond existing at all, so I suggest that it be cut before a dangerous situation arises.

Trouble Makers

Dear Editor,

We would like to publicly offer our sincerest apologies to our blue and white sisters, the waitresses, the dining hall staff, Mrs. Trout, and Mr. Carbone, for all the trouble we caused them this past Sunday. We innocently brought our dates in to Sunday dinner. Much to our distress and utter embarrassment, after we were seated, a polite, well-informed hostess reprimanded us with these words: "I'm sorry, you'll have to leave. Guests can't come into the dining hall until 12:45." (It was 12:41.) After I naughtily gave her a dirty look, she added, "And if you don't like it, you are welcome to talk to Mrs. Trout." I would have begged forgiveness right then and there, but rather than make a scene, we got up and left. Then we came back six minutes later (just to be safe).

Our hostesses are so congenial and conscientious. I think every dining hall should have some, just like ours. It's good to know that your dining hall is there for your welfare and enjoyment, and its employees enforce the rules to the fullest extent disregarding anyone's embarrassment or discomfort. Even though we were only four minutes early coming into the dining hall, we weren't just made aware of the regulation, we were asked to leave. We are seriously considering getting the Board of Visitors to commend this brave girl who did her job so well. Maybe next semester we can get a bouncer! Again we offer our regrets at this incident. We have tried so hard to be good Longwood Ladies. Thank you, Mr. Carbone and Mrs. Trout, for hiring such able employees.

Cell Block

Dear Editor:

I am writing in protest of the treatment girls receive, notably in Frazer, concerning curfew and signing in and out. Concerning the latter, two weekends ago two incidents occurred showing the triviality of the procedures.

Girl 24153, a Junior, was given a warning for "failure to sign out properly." Upon returning, it was learned that she hadn't put the date of her expected return on the OUTSIDE of her envelope. The Prison Guidebook implies the sign in and out bit is so you can be contacted in the event of an emergency, (or breakout). Otherwise NO ONE should even look at the cards. If girl 24153 was needed, the date of her return was on her blue slip. So obviously, this is a case of rules for rules sake, nit-picking. Furthermore, no one had any business checking her card in the first place since she wasn't late, missing or declared dead.

Girl 24335 was out on good behavior for the week end and was attempting to go by the letter of the law - she was signing out. Unsure of the address, she called in her date where he was promptly (but gently) chastised for standing beyond a certain point. Assuming this rule is to insure the privacy of the cards (see paragraph 1), it was obvious this guy was merely aiding a LC Lady - not snooping in the cards, so why publicly humiliate both the guy and the gal in this fashion?

Concerning curfew, which is ridiculous enough anyway, this weekend one of my cellmates had a guest from the outside - a perspective student. Due to external circumstances beyond her control, she was late. A sweeping grand total of four whole minutes. As she was entering, the assistant warden grabbed her by the arm and physically propelled her into the dorm, greeting her with date with "Young man, this girl is late!" Talk about disgusting, embarrassing, and humiliating behavior - the poor guest was terrified. She said being snatched LITERALLY away from her date and then being confronted with late forms and red tape "made (her) feel like a criminal!"

In another recent episode, a cellmate was already safe and sound on the porch with the door open and telling her date good night when she was practically tapped on the shoulder mid huggy-bear and kissy-face and told to fill out a 2 minute late slip! Positively degrading! No com'on, if the curfew bit is "for our safety and well being" there is absolutely no excuse for this awkward, embarrassing behavior on the part of the wardens. If we're in the lobby in the immediate vicinity of 2:00, it's obvious we're O.K. Most of the gals never had a curfew at home and the very nature of a curfew is ridiculous for upperclassmen; but to be subjected to this invasion of personal dignity for a matter of 120 or 240 seconds is absolutely absurd!

Furthermore, we are allowed 15 minutes leeway each semester. While I am not advocating deliberate lateness, if I chose on occasion to thank my date for 2 of my 15 minutes, I certainly do not expect to be yanked in the door or humiliated by some other assinine action on the part of the school officials.

Don't get me wrong, basically I'm a good inmate, I play it by the rules. (I personally have never been late). But this frequent pettishness of picky-une rules for rules sake, without any consideration of the girls' feelings, ESPECIALLY calling

Annual Invitational Exhibit Features Work Of Miss Leitch

By HOMER SPRINGER

The current show in the Bedford Gallery is the annual invitational exhibit sponsored by The Purchase Committee of Longwood College. For the past fifteen years, this committee has invited a Virginia artist to show his work. From each exhibit one or more pieces of art work have been purchased and are now exhibited at various locations on campus.

This year's show features the work of Nancy V. Leitch, Miss Leitch is a native of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. There, at age twelve, she began her formal art training under the Dean of Pittsburgh Artists, Christian J. Walter. Upon graduation from Peabody High School, she received a National Scholarship Award in Art for a full year's tuition at Carnegie Institute of Technology and a Pittsburgh Honor Scholarship for study. There, she majored in sculpture, was a member of Phi Kappa Phi, and was graduated with a B.F.A.

She later studied at Cranbrook Academy of Art under the internationally known sculptor, Carl Milles and ceramist, Majja Grottel. She was awarded an M.F.A. from Cranbrook.

In 1952, she moved to Virginia where she taught at Warwick High School and continued study at William and Mary, the University of Virginia, and Hampton Institute in art education, graphics, and history.

In 1961, she moved to Farmville and began teaching at Longwood where she established sculpture courses. She is an Associate Professor of Art and teaches sculpture and drawing courses.

In 1964, she received a Ford Foundation Faculty Fellowship in Asian Study with special concentration in Chinese Sculpture.

In addition to a long list of commissioned pieces she has created, she also has had one-man shows at The Studio, Randolph-Macon Woman's College, Hollins College, and Longwood. She won a double award at the National Ceramic Exhibition in Syracuse and has shown at various nationally known museums, including the Cincinnati Museum of Fine Arts, the Detroit Art Institute, The Michigan Artist Annual, The Toledo Museum of Art, Cornell University, The Flint Art Institute, The Carnegie Museum, and the Virginia Museum of Fine Arts.

In her latest show, Miss Leitch features drawings, paintings, weavings, ceramic pieces, and sculpture.

Her drawings range in size from a small 2" x 4" pencil drawing of a resting hippo done with a minimum of line to a large free active 30" x 40" ink wash drawing of a yak. Except for a few figures studies, landscapes and still life, animals dominate as subject matter for these drawings. Sleek thoroughbreds, sleeping cats, massive bulls and hippos, strolling elephants, fighting lions are but a few of the menagerie, both familiar and exotic that line the walls. The techniques used in the drawings are as varied as the choice of animal life. Quick action line sketches capture the form and action in a few skillful strokes. Contour lines surround and identify with sensitivity the form of a sedate camel, a frolicking horse, or a rather regal swine. Pencil, chalk, felt tip pen, ink and ink washes, pastels, conte, and charcoal are utilized. Each material seems particularly correct or suited for the subject matter or action suggested. Each drawing utilizes life and careful observation of living animals to create the intended effect.

Most of the oil paintings utilize the horse as their main or central figures. Tight, well-designed compositions utilizing strong verticals, horizontals, and diagonal movements are shown. Their color is rich, personal, and applied in a variety of techniques that include washes and glazes and use of the palette knife.

The ceramic pieces (pots, bowls, and platters) are thick, simple, and organic in shape. Glazes are freely applied to create an interesting contrast with the dull finish of the unglazed fired clay. All pieces are hand built. Some were formed by the slab method; others were formed at the beach in the sand or shaped around a stone. A beautiful rosewood trencher is shown with the ceramic pieces.

Weavings range in size from a few square feet to large panels. Color ranges from dark to light, but warm earth tones dominate. Skill in pattern design, color choice, and variation of materials and techniques is exhibited.

Honduras Mahogany, low-fire glazed pieces, stoneware, plaster, slate, walnut, oak, aluminum and terra cotta are some of the materials that are utilized with great skill and craftsmanship to create the sculpture that has made Miss Leitch well known.

A large bear, created from steel wire, coils and twists to enclose space and create line and volume. This piece seems an interesting bridge between the linear elements of her drawings and the form evident in her sculpture. This bear at once seems frozen in time, yet somehow ready to lumber off his pedestal. A sleeping rabbit, a delightful hippo family, and a bison successfully combine matte and gloss glazes to create interesting patterns of light and color. A small sensitive terra cotta portrait and a large unglazed panther based on strong planes playing against a diagonal thrust are also shown.

Don't overlook the two small plaster pieces, "The Vision of Saint Paul," which has a patina, and the lovely sensitive "Madonna" in white show a sedate style so free of excesses, yet moving.

This style of simplicity of form and emotional impact is evident in the carvings in wood and slate. A large geometric serpent of Honduras mahogany greets the visitor to the gallery. The simplicity of form and the rich surface texture combine to create a powerful three-dimensional form. Two standing figures at the east end of the gallery again show both restraint and richness. Their size makes them seem monumental and moving. Hands, faces, feet, and drapery are reduced to suggestion instead of photographic representation and thus unite as elements to create a form of exquisite beauty.

Four bas-reliefs are also exhibited. Three are religious in nature; the fourth portrays deer. The materials (walnut, slate, and oak) are all different materials to work with, but the pieces show no strain or effort or lack of skillful handling. The carving is beautifully stylized, and the panels are so well designed that even though small, they seem expansive, rich, and dazzling.

To summarize this show is not difficult. The small gallery is literally full of beauty. It is a large show, and it creates for the viewer a complete range of talent and skills. The skill of the artist is evident; whether she uses gesture line to suggest an animal or carves it in oak, the material never overpowers the artist or her art work. The artist also seems wise in her choice of subject matter which carries a theme of life, force, beauty, and sensitivity throughout. The animals she has chosen to draw from life are distinctive and maintain a regal appearance. It shames the viewer for lacking the perceptive qualities of the artist in portraying animals we have seen all our lives, yet never seen in the way Miss Leitch has perceived them. They are Leitch-animals; they contain great beauty and humor without seeming cute, trite, or quaint.

To pick favorites out of this show is difficult. On each visit to the show, the viewer sees something he missed the last time. Some favorites at the last visit include the small "Hippo" in the hall. Seldom has so much been drawn with so little. The abstracted gesture line work is stark and beautiful and contains great movement and depth. The carvings are truly magnificent and show skill and craftsmanship that set Miss Leitch apart as an artist. The two large standing figures are so monumental that they demand attention and respect. The bas-reliefs are so sensitive and well designed that they require careful attention and admiration. Two other pieces of sculpture show unusual insight and originality. The small plaster madonna is so sensitively designed and so void of trim or excess that she seems truly religious and timeless. The Stoneware "Hippo Family" is full of charm and humor. The form, the multitude of integrated parts, and the subtle coloration all work together to portray an Exceptional piece.

This show is a must for all the community. In fact, it is the sort of show that needs to be viewed often so that nothing will be overlooked. It's a show for the children too; children of all ages will be delighted with the subject matter and will be aware of the sensitivity, the quality and the skill of this remarkable artist.

Theresa Seaman To Perform An Original Composition

An original composition will highlight the senior piano recital of Theresa Seaman, to be presented Sunday, April 9, at 4 p.m. in Wygal.

In addition to her own work, entitled INFLECTION, Theresa will play four other pieces. They include PARTITA IN B FLAT MAJOR by Bach, FANTASY IN C MINOR by Mozart, RHAPSODY IN B MINOR by Brahms, and "BOSTON" FROM SUITE 1922 by Hindemith.

Theresa, a piano student of Dr. Robert Beach, hails from Virginia Beach. Following graduation, she will begin a job playing the piano, and she also plans to give piano lessons.

'Dangerous Jean Brodie Salvaged By Exceptional Acting'

By DEBI K. ABERNATHY
The recent production of "The Prime of Miss Jean Brodie" demonstrates that even mediocre scripts can be salvaged by exceptional acting.

Linda Burton's portrayal of the "dangerous" Jean Brodie was nothing less than superb. Her rhythmic voice contrasted sharply with the drawing of the interviewer, Mr. Perry, portrayed by Fred Herndon. Linda was both dynamic and graceful. Though her lines were sometimes cliché and precious, she colored them with fitting gestures, facial expressions, and convincing intonation. In showing

Jimmie Lu Null To Audition For The Wolf Trap Company

By VICKI BOWLING
Jimmie Lu Null, a junior music major from Norfolk, Virginia, has received an invitation to the final auditions for the Wolf Trap Company, a national college-oriented theatre ensemble.

Her accompanist, Nina Garrison, will attend the final competition with her. Auditions will be held in the auditorium of the U. S. Department of Commerce Building in Washington, D. C., the weekend of April 7-9. Approximately 100 performers will be chosen to compose the company.

Jimmie Lu first participated in the regional competition in Washington, one of 25 regionals held all over the country.

She had prepared five songs, one English, one German, one French, an Italian aria, and a selection from the musical, "Hello, Dolly."

"I only sang one song, though," she said, "and that was 'I've Heard an Organ Talk Sometimes' by Aaron Copeland. They'll probably want to hear more at the finals."

The atmosphere at the regional competition was very informal, Jimmie Lu recalled. She felt very confident because of the preparation she had received from her voice teacher, Mr. James McCombs.

"I've studied under him for almost three years," Jimmie Lu said. "He has been extremely interesting and encouraging. I've sung for him every day, and he's been vastly helpful."

The Filene Center for the Performing Arts, located at Wolf Trap Farm Park in Vienna, Virginia, was donated by Mrs. Catherine Filene Shouse. The Wolf Trap Company will perform musicals and operas, and it will organize a concert with full orchestra.

Colleges In The News

Residential College

CHARLOTTESVILLE — The Housing Committee at University of Virginia has issued a report announcing, "We have, at this moment in time, an obligation to be as startlingly innovative as the original concept of the University was in the early 1800's." The concept the committee proposes is the guidelines to be followed in planning a residential college. James L. Camp, the Medical School Dean and chairman of the committee, says the "planning and executive of the development of residential colleges affords us an opportunity to develop a model alternate to that of the campus as developed by Mr. Jefferson's report. The report said it would be mandatory to have a rapid transit system running at frequent intervals between the residential colleges and the central grounds. It also said student rooms will be of various sizes and shapes to "avoid a sense of repetition and uniformity" and have all modern conveniences. The committee proposed to intersperse among living units rooms that will be classrooms during the day and study, game and listening rooms at night. Some faculty housing including single, couple, and family units, will be interspersed with student quarters.

Curfew Ended At W&M

WILLIAMSBURG — The women's curfew at William and Mary will be abolished next fall, according to an announcement by Andy Purdy, president of the college's student association. Purdy released a letter from Dr. Thomas Graves, William and Mary's president, that accepted recommendations made by the student senate and approved by the board of student affairs. The college president said a voluntary register would be established for students to leave information about where they may be reached. A security system, using keys, electric cards or similar devices will be developed, Graves wrote, for installation in all residence halls. The college will also encourage the development, by the residence hall councils, of policies to ensure the individual's right of privacy and freedom of movement within the residence halls.

Student Lobby

WASHINGTON — The National Student Lobby scored its first success with the Senate passage of an amendment calling for at least one student member, chosen solely by the student body, on all college and university governing boards. NSL was set up last summer as a national organization by four students from the University of California. They established an office, registered as lobbyists and sent out membership invitations to student governments throughout the nation. The College is a member of the organization, whose purpose is "to make students a constituency to which Congressmen will listen." The NSL is concerned with the federal budget, environmental protection, equal rights for women, voter registration, and the war issue.

Tax Deductible Tuition

BLACKSBURG — The Student Government Association Senate at Virginia Polytechnic Institute passed a bill last week encouraging the U. S. Congress to classify tuition payment as tax-deductible.

happiness, anger, and the shock of having been betrayed, she was lifelike and versatile. Her almost guttural cry — "Assassin!" — climaxed an overall grand performance. To the viewer, Linda Burton and Jean Brodie were one.

Another acting plus was Jessie Reter as Sandy. She progressed from characterizations of tomboy and insightful mistress to the analyzing, logical, self-sufficient woman to whom "putting a stop to Miss Brodie" was a personal obligation. She was forceful and believable.

Other convincing characters include Belinda Brugh as Sister Helena and Helen Ball as Miss Mackay. Belinda spoke clearly, moved easily. Whereas Sister Helena could have been a static, rigid character, she was not. Helen Ball, too, was convincing. The contrast between Jean Brodie and Miss Mackay was great. The Erica Jong a noted American poetess residing in Manhattan will also be here for the Festival. She too has won a number of awards including POETRY'S Bess Hokin Prize in 1971 and a New York State Council of the Arts Award also in 1971.

She has recently published her first collection of poetry, FRUITS AND VEGETABLES, which will be on sale in the Bookstore, and is currently working on her second collection. She will also read and discuss her work on Wednesday and Thursday.

David Madden, writer-in-residence at Louisiana State University, is the author of two published novels THE BEAUTIFUL GREED and CASSANDRA SINGING and a third which will be released in August of this year, BROTHERS IN CONFIDENCE. He is also the author of several short stories and a collection of essays. Mr. Madden will read selections of his work on Thursday and discuss his craft on Friday of the Festival.

"We invited David Madden because we wanted to invite artists who can talk about their creative processes," Childrey commented.

Panel Discussion

All of the invited guests will also participate in a panel discussion of the arts on Thursday afternoon. Also participating in the panel will be Alexander Theroux, Douglas Young, and Allen Wier of the Longwood faculty. Dr. Theroux and Mr. Wier will also give informal readings of their works on Thursday afternoon. David Vest also of the faculty will participate in these informal readings as will several of the prize winners of the GYRE literary contest.

The Festival will begin on April 5 with the distribution of the 1972 GYRE. The GYRE will be in the mailboxes of all students and faculty and extra copies will be on sale at various spots on campus during the Festival for one dollar.

GYRE Features

Besides the student works featured in the GYRE will be an article by David Madden entitled "David Madden on Poetry," an interview with Erica Jong, and a handwritten critique of his own work by A. B. Jackson.

Two student poems which were recently finalists in state and national poetry contests will also be featured. Debbie Abernathy's poem was a finalist in competition at Madison College, and Childrey Farber's work was entered in competition at Hollins College.

The Festival of Arts is a new thing to Longwood but is not expected to be a one time thing.

The GYRE is hosting the affair this year and its editor says, "Were trying to make the GYRE a carryover of the Festival of Arts."

Southern Poet Will Read His Works On April 18

The distinguished young poet, James Seay, will present a reading from his own works at Longwood College on Tuesday, April 18, at 7:30 p.m. The location will be the ABC rooms of Lankford. Mr. Seay's appearance, co-sponsored by Lambda Iota Tau and the English department, will be open to the public.

Mr. Seay's first book of poems, LET NOT YOUR HART, was published in 1970 and received high praise from POETRY magazine. Mr. Seay's poems have won the Southern Literary Festival prize in 1964, the Academy of American Poets Poetry Prize in 1966, and the Emily Clark Balch Prize in 1968. He has given very successful readings across the United States. He is currently poet in residence at Vanderbilt University.

Mrs. Roberts is listed in Who's Who in American Universities and Colleges and has served as Assistant Dean of Women at Longwood during the middle 1940's. She has been active in church work and also has served on the Board of King's Daughters Hospital. Dr. Roberts has been active in the Longwood Alumnae Association since her graduation and is one of the three original members of the Longwood College Board of Visitors.

Music for the program was provided by Longwood's Madrigal Singers and Dr. Robert Blasch, and the processional and Recessional was played by Donna Hamilton. The Alumni Association held its annual business meeting immediately afterwards.

Afternoon Activities

Following the Alumnae Luncheon at 1 p. m. in the dining hall, guided tours of the campus were given again, and a symposium, "Issues and Answers," was held in the BC rooms at Lankford with Dr. Frank, Dr. Frances Brown, Dr. Gussett, Mr. Peele, Debbie Chapman and Debbie Hyatt. A reception was given for the alumni in Lankford's Gold Room between 4-5 p. m., a concert, honoring Miss Emily Clark in Wygal's Recital Hall, and an open house at 9:30 p. m. at the Alumni House.

Asked what they found had changed the most at Longwood over the years, the most common answer given by the alumni was "The size of Longwood — there are so many new buildings." Of particular interest were the new music and art buildings, and the campus school. Others felt the relaxation of rules was significant. Many of the alumnae commented on the relaxed dress code and the changed condition of dormitory life. Several of them commented that Longwood students seemed to be much more in contact with the "outside" world than they had been.

Q - Why do dorm doors have to be open during visitation on Sundays? D.S.

A - The Bateman Resolution which was passed by the General Assembly last year and which dealt with dormitory visitation in state supported schools is responsible for this. The resolution suggested to the presidents and governing boards of state colleges that visitation policies include proper regulations, supervision and control. Senator Bateman defined this to Mary Lou Glasheen to include a registration system, for the security of knowing who is in the building and where they are, and an open door policy. The Board of Visitors and Dr. Willett follow the suggestions made in the resolution.

Q - Is Sunday visitation ever going to be extended for the weekend? P.D.

A - An extension of visitation hours is under consideration by Residence Board at the moment. When they have reached a decision, they will make their proposal to Legislative Board and it will be voted on there.

Q - What effect will the food preference survey have on the menu? B.H.

A - The survey gives Mr. Carbone an idea of what the more popular items on the menu are. This does not mean that the menus will change drastically immediately, but it could have a definite influence over a period of a few years. The possibility of having meals for an entire week that everyone likes is very remote though.

Q - How much do the carnations in the dining hall cost each week? B.B.

A - The carnations cost approximately $62.40 each week. These flowers are paid for by Slater because they feel it adds something to the dining hall and makes it more attractive. The cost does not come out of money the students pay. Also students are reminded that they are not to take the flowers off of the table until after Thursday dinner in the downstairs dining hall and after Sunday lunch upstairs.

REACTION

In response to a question in the Catalyst a couple of weeks ago, Dr. Jackson has informed us through the library staff that the N.B.B.O. was a type of secret organization on campus. When anyone would ask what their purpose was, they would reply "Nobody's Business But Ours", which is where they got their name.

Southern Poet

POETRY discerned in Seay's work "a peculiarly Southern humor, with a sort of subterranean dark reach under its casual surface." The Wesleyan University Press, which published LET NOT YOUR HART, said, "He beautifully evokes in careful detail the land, the people, the language, and the traditions of the American South."

An uncommonly exciting reader of his own poems, Mr. Seay is a native of Mississippi. No stranger to these quarters, he took his M.A. from the University of Virginia in 1966.

The occasion of the poet's appearance is the initiation ceremony of Lambda Iota Tau, which will take place shortly after the reading.

The Heart Fund Basketball produced a lot of excitement, but the amount raised suffered from a small attendance.

her down for trivialities in front of a guy, really goes a bit too far. This type of rude, inconsiderate, over-dramatic behavior in the part of the dorm (and dining hall) officials DOES NOT generate respect. Nor does it personally the ideal of the "friendly campus where the officials and students work together." This whole business of curfew down to the second, racing to lock the door and turn off lights and invading the privacy of the parlors is detrimental to the student's attitudes on rules in general. Plus it defeats the whole purpose of the curfew, rather than belate and be subjected to the above behavior, many girls simply avoid the issue by not coming back.

All I ask is a little mutual consideration and respect—I mean the whole world won't come crashing down if Frazer Cell doesn't slam its gates til 2:03—WILL it?

Curfew

Dear Editor,

My motivation for writing this letter was a questionnaire I received (by random) from the Residence Board concerning changes of the curfew and visitation rules.

Seeing that our past prudence has not been appreciated by our so called friends in Richmond, I would certainly think that it is time for our L. C. guardians to grant us our long lost privileges and opportunities. In fact, we have been insulted for one would think going to college would mean learning how to become responsible. Surely one can become responsible in the academic sense, but one can only laugh in the face of someone who says, "You learn to become socially responsible, too." Longwood's social rules tend to restrict a number of girls more than they would be restricted at home!

Why can't Longwood students attempt to prove themselves by passing new curfew and visitation rules? Even if our attempts fail at the top level, we have at least proven that we are really intelligent enough to think for ourselves. Let's not remain stagnant, let's move on as we should.

Concert

Dear Editor,

This letter is to announce a concert here at the University of Virginia. We are very fortunate to have booked Ike and Tina Turner with the Ikeettes for a performance on Saturday, March 25, 1972. Certainly one of the most exciting stage performances in the music industry, the show promises to be special. I take this opportunity to invite all of you to attend the concert to be held in University Hall at 8:00 p.m., on the aforementioned date. Tickets are available for $3.50 in advance or $4.00 at the door, but I advise that all interested write in advance to Larry Wicker, PK-German Dance Society of the University Union, Newcomb Hall, University of Virginia, Charlottesville, Virginia 22901, with an enclosed check payable to University Union.

In the Virginia Fencing Tournament on March 11 at Madison College, Joyce Miller, a freshman, made it to the Top 6 Individual Competition and finished fourth. She won two out of five bouts in the final round of the Top Individual Fencer of the Tournament.

Longwood's first team composed of Joyce Miller, Robin Fekety and Jeris Fold came in third out of 12 teams represented. They were defeated only by Radford and Penn State.

The second team, composed of Karen McLeod, Chris Pruitt and Susie Purvis, beat Mary Baldwin 3-0, but lost to University of North Carolina, 2-1 and finally to Madison, 2-1.

Fencing coach, Sally Bush, in the Virginia Open Division won first place by winning seven out of eight of her bouts in the competition. She lost only to the coach at Penn State.

Miss Bush, commenting on the team, said, "I would say we have outstanding prospects for the next few years. Our program is building continuously. We are very pleased with the team's support."

"A Healthy Substitute For Co-ed Life"

By JOHN D. GUTHRIE
Hampden-Sydney Correspondent

This semester the exchange of students between Longwood College and Hampden-Sydney College has increased markedly. The 58 Longwood students in classes at Hampden-Sydney at present is almost twice the number that attended courses this time last year. There has also been an increase in Hampden-Sydney students attending courses at Longwood with 118 students now enrolled at Longwood this semester.

Increase Explained

The major factors that account for this increase of Longwood students at Hampden-Sydney seem to originate in the student dissatisfaction with courses offered at Longwood. Students objected to the fact that Longwood had one professor teaching courses in Government. For this reason, many girls wanting to take a course in Government have come to Hampden-Sydney which has three professors teaching Government courses.

Another factor is that in some of the departments at Longwood, courses are only offered during certain semesters. The Longwood students therefore enroll in similar courses at Hampden-Sydney to avoid this problem.

The Hampden-Sydney students enroll in courses at Longwood for much the same reasons. The marked increase in the enrollment this semester can be mostly attributed to the fact that the Hampden-Sydney College Registrar failed to publish a Spring semester schedule prior to registration. When the students received their class cards, many had schedule conflicts. For many, the only way to resolve the conflicts was to enroll in similar classes at Longwood.

Other Reasons

To avoid certain professors is another obvious reason for some students taking courses on the other campus. Whether for personal or academic reasons, the justification often heard is that a course at the other college is more relaxed or less academically demanding.

In general the exchange is praised by the students because in taking courses at the other college one has a larger and more varied menu of courses that the student can take.

Latin, Government, Bible, and Math are the courses that most of the Longwood students are taking at Hampden-Sydney College this semester. In interviewing some of the professors of these departments concerning the increase of Longwood students in their classes, all of them found that the presence of Longwood students was beneficial.

Girls Welcomed

Dr. Joseph Clower, Professor of Bible at Hampden-Sydney College, said that he was delighted to have Longwood students in his classes.

"I welcome them," he said, "I have seven girls in all in two of my courses. They are a real contribution; I really enjoy having them. I've been surprised that these girls have been willing to participate; they are not timid or shy. I really do like having them in classes; they just color the whole class."

"I find that they are usually very conscientious," Dr. Clower continued, "much more conscientious than the boys in doing their work well. I am not saying that they are any brighter than the boys, but they are more conscientious."

"I think that having girls in the class will eventually make our male students more alert to the work they are doing," Dr. Clower said, "where the girls participate in class discussions I think they contribute a great deal. I think it is a good program."

LC Reaction

From the Longwood professors much the same reaction to the program was received. Mrs. Helen Savage of the Philosophy Department of Longwood College said that in the course Philosophy 430 there were 16 Hampden-Sydney students enrolled.

"It is a pleasure to have these students in class," she said. "Their contributions in class discussion are very beneficial. A classroom seems to have a much more wholesome atmosphere when there are students of both sexes in attendance."

Mrs. Savage pointed out, "Since neither Longwood College nor Hampden-Sydney College have intentions of becoming co-ed, this exchange of students provides a healthy substitute for coed life."

Transportation Problem

One problem in this exchange student program that Longwood students have to contend with is that of transportation. Gayle Nicholas, a Longwood student taking five courses at Hampden-Sydney this semester, said that the main disadvantage in taking courses at Hampden-Sydney lies in the fact that the majority of the girls must depend on school transportation to get back and forth from Farmville to Hampden-Sydney.

"If a class ends early," she said, "I have to wait until the car pool arrives at the normal time before I can get back to Longwood."

She noted that she had two courses at Hampden-Sydney that required library research at the Hampden-Sydney Library.

"Longwood College does not provide transportation for a girl who needs to do research at the Library for the courses that she is enrolled in at Hampden-Sydney College," she said. "If there is a lecture at Hampden-Sydney that we are required to attend by a Hampden-Sydney professor, we have to make our own arrangements for transportation because Longwood will not furnish us with a car."

Hampden-Sydney students do not face this particular problem because most of the students taking courses at Longwood have cars of their own, or they can easily find a ride with someone who does have a class during the same period.

Good Substitute

The reactions to this exchange program between the two colleges were all positive. The feature that was stressed the most was the fact that today we live in a pluralistic society where the contact between the two sexes is greater and is encouraged. Most colleges are reacting to this movement by going co-ed. For this reason the exchange of students between Longwood College and Hampden-Sydney College is said to be a good program that should be promoted. Though it is not the same as co-ed life where the two sexes eat meals together and also study together, this program provides a good substitute for the students of the two colleges.

News Briefs

Wallace Wins Primary

Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama won Florida's Democratic presidential primary Tuesday night, a victory that he claimed made him a national candidate for the party's nomination. Placing second and third, but far behind Wallace, were Humphrey and Muskie respectively. President Nixon won a landslide victory in a Republican primary that never was a contest.

Canadian Visit

The White House announced Tuesday that President Nixon plans to visit Canada on April 13 for two days of talks on international and bilateral problems with Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau. The White House announced Wednesday that President Nixon would travel to Moscow on May 22.

General Assembly Adjourns

The Virginia General Assembly adjourned its 1972 session shortly after 3 a. m. Sunday morning after 60 days of debate. 18-year-olds were given new rights by the 1972 legislature. Persons 18 to 21 years old may now sign a contract to purchase a house or car, engage in numerous occupations previously closed to them, be liable for personal property taxes, and seek medical advice for drug problems and surgery, including abortions, without parental consent. However, they still may not buy liquor nor sit on juries.

Amendment Proposed

A constitutional amendment abolishing all state Presidential primaries and substitution instead a national primary to be held in August was introduced Monday by Sens. Mike Mansfield, D-Mont., and Robert Aiken, R-Vt. Mansfield said that he was disturbed by the circus-like atmosphere of the Florida primary.

William B. Spong, Jr., Virginia's junior Senator and an alumnus of Hampden-Sydney College, chose Wednesday to take the Democratic primary route in his quest for reelection this year. Spong, 51, won his senatorial position in 1966 and had served 12 years in the Virginia General Assembly before running for the U. S. Senate.

Dale Lynn Alther Wins Miss Culpeper Pageant March 10

By JANET LYNN TENNYSON

"It's wonderful, and I just don't believe it," was the reaction expressed by Dale Lynn Alther, as she was crowned Miss Culpeper, 1972-73. Dale was named winner from among 12 beauties in the local pageant, held March 10, in the Culpeper County High School auditorium. She was crowned by Sydney Lee Lewis, who is Miss Virginia, 1970.

A Longwood College sophomore, Dale is the 20-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John M. Alther of Culpeper. Dale is a home economics major and plans to teach after graduation.

For the talent presentation, Dale sang the selection, "A Wonderful Guy", and also demonstrated her sewing talent by making her attire for the evening gown competition. She is a mem-

Music, Poetry, And Slides Featured In Wygall Hall Recital

By VICKI BOWLING

Kay Johnson, senior music major and student of Mr. Paul Heselink, will present her senior organ recital tomorrow afternoon at 4 p. m. in Wygall Recital Hall.

Kay's recital will be unusual in that it consists of one number—THE STATIONS OF THE CROSS by Marcel Dupre.

Accompanying the music, slides of paintings depicting the 14 stations of the Cross will be shown, which Kay says are "scenes in the life of Christ from the time He is condemned until He is put in the tomb."

Dupre's music is based on 14 poems on the stations of the Cross written by Paul Claudel. He originally improvised the music while the poems were read, and later put it down on paper.

Before Kay plays the music for each station, the corresponding poem will be read by Mr. James McCombs.

Kay, a member of the Organ Guild and Sigma Alpha Iota, is currently the organist at Bainbridge Street Baptist Church in Richmond, and plans to continue working there after graduation.

Chemist Discusses "Trace Elements In Geochemistry"

By DEBBIE BASTEK

The Longwood/Hampden-Sydney Club of the Society of Sigma Xi, a national honorary research organization, featured Dr. Ralph O. Allen, a chemist from the University of Virginia, as guest speaker last Tuesday in Jeffers Auditorium. Dr. Allen spoke on "Trace Elements in Geochemistry," discussing some of the far-reaching conclusions based on current knowledge of trace elements distribution and behavior. Giving illustrations of the use of trace elements in describing the history of some of the moon rocks, he told how our understanding of the moon has changed, and also described how trace elements can be used as indicators of igneous processes, and as toxic pollutants of waterways and sediments.

The second in a series of guest lectures hosted by the Society of Sigma Xi, the lectures are presented on a level easily understood by the undergraduate. The public is cordially invited to attend all future lectures.

WANDA LEIGH EPPS

By PAM WATSON

Wanda Leigh Epps, a freshman elementary education major from South Boston, is a firm believer in the old saying "if at first you don't succeed try, try, again." Last weekend she was crowned Miss Halifax County 1972. When asked why she decided to run she said, "I was in the pageant last year and was very happy to come in first-runner up so I decided to give it another try."

For her talent, Wanda gave a dramatic reading that she had written herself entitled, "Live, Learn, and Love"—three words that she considers most important to students today.

"I'm very excited about the coming year," she says. In addition to competing in the Miss Virginia pageant in July, she will take part in the State Fair, the Tobacco Festival and various other parades and celebrations throughout the state.

REV. WILLIAM H. VASSEY

Reverend Vassey Resigns Position At Hampden-Sydney

By JOHN D. GUTHRIE
Hampden-Sydney Correspondent

The Rev. H. William Vassey, pastor of College Presbyterian Church and chaplain at Hampden-Sydney College for the last six years, has resigned both positions, effective March 31, to assume the pastorate of St. Giles Presbyterian Church in Raleigh, N. C.

In a joint statement on Mr. Vassey's resignation, College President W. Taylor Reveley and Dr. Graves H. Thompson, clerk of the session of the College Church, said, "We deeply regret losing Mr. and Mrs. Vassey. Their leadership on the campus and in the community has been strong and effective. The affection and good wishes of the church and the college follow them to their new work."

A native of Brevard, N. C., Rev. Vassey came to Hampden-Sydney in 1966 from Orange, Va., where he was pastor of the Orange Presbyterian Church, and has served in the dual capacity at Hampden-Sydney since that time.

Rev. Vassey was past president of the Prince Edward Council on Human Relations. Both he and his wife have been active in efforts to promote better community relations in the county. He has been active in encouraging student involvement in community projects both on the Hampden-Sydney and Longwood campuses.

Rev. Mr. Vassey is a graduate of Southwestern at Memphis and Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary, and has done work towards his Ph.D. degree in systematic theology at the University of St. Andrews in Scotland.

Commenting on his new pastorate, Rev. Vassey said, "We have enjoyed our stay at Hampden-Sydney, and are leaving with very mixed emotions."

"St. Giles is a new church, with some very exciting programs," he added, "and we look forward to being a part of its growth. While we regret leaving Hampden-Sydney, I feel that my work here, both with the church and the college, is at a point which will allow me to leave without inhibiting either ministry."

Students Voice Opinions On Women's Lib Title

By JANET LYNN TENNYSON

Many students on campus don't take the women's liberation movement seriously; either Longwood ladies don't care or they just don't have the time.

However, some student members of the current movement are trying to popularize the title "Ms" to replace the traditional "Miss" and "Mrs." concept. This would equalize women to have one title to cover all the categories, like the "Mr." does for men.

This may seem trite but the women's lib contingents strongly believe that the terms "Miss" and "Mrs." are just another way of keeping women on an unequalized level with men. They charge that their marital status has no bearing on how they, as individuals, should be addressed. A freshman social welfare major said, "In today's society, 'Ms' is better; it gives a woman a better chance — it liberates her."

But on the other side, non-liberalists prefer the current forms of address. "If I am married, I want everyone to know it and if I am single, I want to be known as available," said a junior math major. A senior English major noted, "I can see the point but when I get married I want to be known as 'Mrs.' I like the distinction."

Along with this, there is even a movement to have distinction made in the titles for males. Theodore M. Bustin, a noted linguist, has stated, "Instead of generalizing women's titles, we should adopt the term 'Master' for unmarried men and 'Mister' for married men. After all, women have the right to know whether the chap who is making a pass at her is married or single."

There is no solution to what may become a definite issue in time, but at least students are beginning to be concerned about the matter. As one student on campus, who is a senior elementary education major, put it, "Many people may not agree or think about the entire subject, but we are going to make students and citizens aware that there are some people working against male chauvinist oppression."

Maybe students will see and think about the matter. Maybe they just don't have time or they lack interest. As one sophomore Spanish major summed it up, "I really don't care either way."

Slater gave a banquet recently to thank all of the people who help in the kitchen.

The chosen members will be in residence for about ten weeks this summer. They will each receive a $1,000 cash fellowship. In addition, they will be able to see free of charge any other events at the Center. Among the performers booked for this summer are Ferrante and Teicher.

Of the auditions, Jimmie Lu says, "It's been worth it up to now. The atmosphere of the audition was very exciting! I'm looking forward to the final auditions!"

FSEE Scheduled

College seniors will have an opportunity to compete in the Federal Service Entrance Examination (FSEE) when it is given on a walk-in basis at Longwood on April 15, 1972. Complete details and FSEE announcements are now available at the Placement Office.

One test taken one time in one place opens the door to approximately 60 different and challenging career fields in many Federal agencies at locations all over the country. Open to seniors and graduates in any academic major, the program is appropriate for students in all curricula except Engineering, Physical Sciences, Accounting and a limited number of other technical fields.

Dr. Eugene Wilhelm To Speak April 10 On Southern Geography

By VALERIE BLANKS

On April 10 at 7:30, Dr. Eugene J. Wilhelm, Jr., will be speaking on "Folk Geography of the Upland South" in Bedford Auditorium. Mr. Wilhelm has conducted varied types of ecological research in both Anglo and Latin American geography. One example of his research was the six-year investigation of the ecological history and historical ecology of Shenandoah National Park and the Blue Ridge Parkway he conducted from 1963 to 1968.

He has published many articles, technical reports, and a paperback book entitled THE BLUE RIDGE (1968). Presently he is associate editor of PIONEER AMERICA and is preparing a hardback book on the mountain folk of the Shenandoah National Park region.

Mr. Wilhelm has lectured to a wide variety of audiences on an assortment of topics from bird migration to Blue Ridge peddlers. He has taught geography at St. Louis and McGill Universities and presently is on the staff of the School of General Studies at UVA and science teacher at Lane High School in Charlottesville.

Stop-Out Alternative Considered As Opposed To Complete Drop-Out

CONDENSED FROM

W&M "FLAT HAT"
An intelligent, middle-class high school graduate usually spends his summer anxiously counting the days until he attends the college of his choice in the fall. He looks forward to four glorious years of education, stimulation and enlightenment. What he doesn't know, however, is that there is a very good chance he won't graduate from that same school of his choice in four years. Along the way he may become what society disparagingly calls a drop-out.
For years a strong social stigma has been attached to the drop-out. The inflexibility of the time schedule of the American educational system has made a student appear unsuccessful unless he has spent four consecutive years on a single campus.

Accepted Alternative
Today college administrators, including a group at William and Mary, are recognizing dropping out as an acceptable alternative to continuance in college. They are realizing that, for some students, an interrupted education may be more beneficial than the traditional lockstep form.

Approximately 70 per cent of college drop-outs eventually return to an institution and earn their degrees. For those who return at a later date, educational specialists have coined a new term; stop-outs. Statistics can be misleading, such as in the case of a study done in 1970 at William and Mary which showed that, of the freshmen who entered the College in 1965 only 50 per cent of them graduated four years later. This 50 per cent did not include those who ultimately graduated in August or later, or those who transferred to other institutions.

Reasons
Most students who withdraw from college do so in the middle of the semester. The drop-out has many reasons for withdrawing, including personal, medical, academic difficulties, lack of incentive, financial and to transfer to another college.
Despite a rising rate in the amount of drop-outs at William and Mary, the rising drop-out rate doesn't necessarily represent a problem. In many cases the student doesn't need to be there. Students are confused about higher education and don't feel the pressure to stay in school that they did before. The decision of whether to stay in or drop out is also more flexible today because there is no longer a stigma attached to being of college age and college ability and not being in college.

Work or travel may lure the student away from the formal educational system for several years. New experiences may give the stop-out a different perspective on education so that in many cases he will return to school with an appreciation of the benefits of possessing a college degree. Stopping out is in most cases beneficial for the student. If a person is fed up with college, he needs a change in hopes that he will find himself and come back with some motivation.
Formal education requires a commitment which many are hesitant to make immediately after high school graduation. The informal education gained by spending a year or two as one wishes may serve as better preparation for a college education than twelve years of preparatory education could ever provide.

Legislative Board Discusses Possibility Of Book Exchange

By BECKY NICHOLSON
The pros and cons of having a second hand bookstore on campus were discussed by representatives of faculty, Student Union, and student body at last week's Legislative Board meeting, but no final decision was made.
Dragon Chandler said that the Student Union had considered a second hand bookstore, but larger schools had found it a great task, and the entire project would involve many people. Dr. Marvin Scott said that a student-operated bookstore would entail a great deal of bookkeeping, but to him the idea was feasible. Dr. Scott's idea included paying students who helped with the store, and books that weren't picked up would go into a fund.
Legislative Board members felt that many students would be willing to work on a voluntary basis. Bobbie Bannin suggested that the rooms in Lankford could serve as the center for the book exchange, and she said the organization could start as a committee under Legislative Board.

Other colleges such as Hampden-Sydney and VPI have successful student co-op bookstores, Hampden-Sydney's co-op bookstore, The Book Cellar, is entirely dependent on student support. Their college bookstore manager has said that he doesn't make a great deal of money from used books anyway, so the competition from the student co-op doesn't affect him greatly. In fact, since the co-op is successful, he isn't stuck with used books as he was in previous years. The students benefit, also, because they can sell books at their own price.
VPI's Student Book Exchange has been successful for the past two quarters, and it provides students with an economic means of selling books. It is nonprofit and works on a volunteer basis. The students of VPI have also instigated The Co-Op Store which had its origin as a committee of the Student Government Association. The leaders of the Student Co-Op have not received any hostility from business in town, and it has provided students with more benefits. Since book exchange centers have been successful at other colleges, then students feel it is possible for Longwood to establish a book exchange at the beginning of each semester with the same success.

Six Proposals Discussed By Legislative Board

By BECKY NICHOLSON
A mock presidential election for next fall and a new system of daily announcements were suggested at the Legislative Board meeting last Monday. The Board also continued its discussions of proposed changes in the Alma Mater, dating in hotels, a second hand bookstore, and Judicial Advisory Committee.
It was suggested that a mock election be held sometime in early fall next year, probably before Oktoberfest. This election would be handled by the Student Union, the Young Republicans Club, and Young Democrats Club. The clubs would initiate campaigns for the respective Presidential candidates. During this time, guest speakers could be invited, and students could become involved in debates, speeches, and poster-making.
The Board members felt that a project like this would cause students to become aware of and excited about the Presidential election. The Board also felt that debates and banners might aid in a final decision, and initiate voting when the "real" election comes around in November.
A change in procedure respecting daily announcements was suggested to the Legislative Board by Mr. Mitchell, the Director of Public Relations. Mr. Mitchell's idea was to have all committees and organizations get their announcements in by 2 p.m. so that the announcement sheets could be distributed at dinner. In this method, students would know about planned meetings for the next day. The Board members felt that students might forget about a meeting if announcements were given a day in advance. Since they thought the present procedure was best, they agreed to leave the announcement system as it is now.

Old business, such as dating in hotels and a second hand bookstore, was tabled again until further information could be obtained and discussed. Regarding the Alma Mater change, Board members agreed to submit a proposal to the Board of Visitors, and to make this proposal known to the respective classes. The proposal for a Judicial Advisory Committee was discussed again, and a motion was made and passed on to turn the matter back into the hands of the Judicial Board. The Legislative Board believed that the Judicial Board would know better how to handle this committee.

Work has been progressing on the new maintenance building beside Curry and should be completed soon.

Superintendent Of Prince Edward Resigns Job

By ROBERT H. SELLS
Hamden-Sydney Correspondent
Dr. Ronald J. Perry, Superintendent of Prince Edward County Public Schools, submitted his resignation unexpectedly to the school board at its regular monthly meeting on Monday, March 12.

A former Scranton, Pa., secondary school teacher and school superintendent of the Line Mountain District in Pennsylvania, Perry also served as Bryan Elementary School Principal in Hampton, and as an instructor at Hampton Institute, the College of William and Mary and the University of Virginia before coming to Prince Edward County.

Perry's resignation, which will be effective as of July 1, was approved by the school board without any discussion or comments. Perry has served the county since July 1, 1969.

Kenneth B. Worthy, school board chairman, said that Perry would be making "about twice" the salary as the school superintendent in Bergen County, N. J., the post that Perry reportedly plans to assume. Worthy also said that Dr. Perry plans to help the school board in its search for a new superintendent.

During its meeting the school board also approved new salary scales for teachers in the Prince Edward County school systems for the 1972-73 school year. The new minimum salary for first year teachers with a bachelor's degree will be $7,030. This starting salary increases in 16 steps to $8,925 for a teacher with 15 years of service. Teachers holding a Master's degree will start next year at a minimum of $9,655. Comparable increases were approved for all other school personnel.

The school board also approved the start of an experimental program in adult technical and industrial education. Initially, the program will be designed for 12 to 15 adults who will meet in three hour night classes meeting two nights a week. The board also agreed to provide additional funds to expand the program if the experimental program proves to be successful.

Brodie

latter's words were crisp and sharp, overenunciated as the role demanded. She was realistic in reading "the letter," when stricken in silence, when raging.

Contrasting the balance found in these characters was the pitifully overdone music teacher, Gordon Lowther, played by Lawrence Smith. He was at his best directing the Brodie girls in class, at the picnic, and standing behind Jean Brodie after being summoned to Miss MacKay's office. Too often he was histrionic. In attempts to be genuinely convincing, he lost control of his voice as well as the character. Fred Herndon, while not as melodramatic as Mr. Perry, did have some trouble with the Southern accent. He was obviously projecting his voice and sounded unnatural. Some lines were well done; others had a curiously combined Southern-English accent.

Rick Vaughn, the artist-of-sorts Teddy Lloyd, was a little stiff and remote from the part. Suzanne Curry, as the stuttering Mary McGregor, had a difficult role. The stuttering, when not overdone, was humorous; when overdone, it distracted from her performance. While the voice was not perfect, contorted facial expressions and spastic movements were well done and humorous in themselves.

The setting was exceptionally good, as were use of color, music, and sound effects. Combined with the quality of acting done, they helped make "The Prime of Miss Jean Brodie" a dynamic, enjoyable production.

H-S Students Present Grievances To The Administrators

By ROBERT H. SELLS
Hamden-Sydney Correspondent

Approximately four hundred H-S students attended a student body meeting Wednesday, March 8, to questions to Dr. W. Taylor Reveley, President of the college. Dr. Reveley appeared by request along with Dr. Lewis Drew, Dean of Students, and Dr. Frank Simes, Academic Dean and Administrative Vice President.

Student Body President Randy Laird opened the meeting by presenting a list of grievances that he felt were important to the students. The grievances which had been circulated among the students the day before appears below.

"The following is a list of some of the general grievances of the student body. These are examples of what we believe to be a present system of governance that is ineffective and detrimental to the well-being of Hamden-Sydney College."

- * Misallocation of college funds
- * Poor quality and quantity of outside assembly speakers
- * Lack of student control in Honor Council
- * Failure to keep student body aware of actions of higher governing bodies
- * Poor quality of food
- * No extension of visitation privilege

Honors Program Allows Free Study For Credit

By PAM WATSON

"I like working on my own outside of class and without the traditional classroom restrictions," states one student now participating in the Honors Program here at Longwood. The program, which dates as far back as 1930, has six students studying in their major fields this semester.

The independent study is done over a period of two semesters and students receive three credits each semester for the course. Only juniors and seniors with an overall of 2.7 and a 3.0 in their major are eligible. To enroll in the program, a student must first receive the permission from her sponsor, the chairman of her department, and the Honors Committee. Students must write a short summary stating the topic she wishes to study, the material and extent of the research, and an introductory bibliography which is then turned in to Miss Craft, assistant professor of English and the present chairman of the Honors Committee. Once a student's proposal is accepted, she can enroll in the course called Honors Research 498.

The first semester is spent doing independent study and research under the consultation of her sponsor, and during the second semester, Honors Research 499, the student writes a paper on the results of her research. If the student wishes she can then take an oral examination given by the committee. To graduate with honors, a student must make an A or B on her research work and her paper and pass the oral exam.

When asked why they chose the program, one student thought that it would be "a challenge." An English major added that she "wanted to find out more about an author that she particularly liked and you could not do this within the confines of a class." Most agreed that they liked working on their own on a subject that they were especially interested in.

Yes, there are a lot of good reasons for women to quit smoking.

Find yours.

- ( ) That "Smoke Pretty" ad makes me furious. Whoever made that up knows where the money is—fewer women than men are quitting. But they won't get rich over my dead body.
- ( ) My closet smells rotten, my clothes smell rotten; I'm sick of it.
- ( ) Lung cancer deaths are twice as high among women who smoke as among those who don't.
- ( ) I'm still young. The longer I smoke, the harder it will be to quit and my chances of becoming a real heavy smoker go up.
- ( ) It's one kind of air pollution I can do something about. People in the room with me shouldn't have to breathe dirty air.
- ( ) I want to be a teacher. How can I discourage kids from smoking when I smoke?
- ( ) I seem to be sick a lot. I also smoke a lot. Women who smoke like me have more chronic illness, lose more time from work, are sick more often than those who don't.
- ( ) I know my father's been trying to quit. How can he with me still puffing away?
- ( ) I want to wake up feeling fresh and clean again. I've had it with nicotine hang-over in the mornings.
- ( ) The thing that appeals to me most is: If I quit and stay quit, in most cases, it can be as if I never smoked. There's something about this that absolutely knocks me out. A clean slate; a real second chance. You just don't get many of those.

- ( ) I quit once for 10 days and, frankly, I felt pretty good about it. I like that feeling this time I'm quitting for good. Lord knows I've done a lot harder things in my life.
- ( ) So many people I know have quit, I'm beginning to feel stupid about smoking.
- ( ) There's something very cool and self assured about women who don't need cigarettes.
- ( ) I thought it was hopeless; I quit once and went back. But someone told me a lot of people had to quit over and over before it took. I'm trying again. It can't hurt.
- ( ) If I quit, I'll save 50¢ a day. That's $3.50 a week, $14.00 a month, $182.50 a year. That buys almost 2 gallons of gas a day. A record: week. Seven movies a month. After a year, can fly to _____ and back on cigarettes I didn't smoke.
- ( ) Somewhere in the back of my head I've been nursing the illusion that smoking is really dangerous for men. I've just seen the latest statistics. The death rate for women who smoke is more than 20% higher than women who don't. We've come a long way baby, but I'm not going any further.

Now all you need is help and encouragement. Send a postcard today to: Women an Smoking, Rockville, Md. 20852. And we send some booklets to help and encourage you

Close-Circuit Television System Located In Hiner

By VALERIE BLANKS
For the benefit of those who did not realize it, Longwood has a close-circuit television system with its center of controls located in Hiner Building.
Mr. Mike Silveira has been in charge of the production facilities for 6 1/2 of the 8 years that the facilities have been functioning. His assistant is Mr. Victor Esteve.
The center has facilities for making recordings at the Campus School, which they can send live or can tape. These recordings can be sent to monitors in fourteen classrooms of Hiner. There are also connections from the center to French gym and swimming pool, Lankford, Jarman Auditorium, Her Gym and the Board of Visitors room. Plans are being made for installations in Jeffers, Stevens and the library.

Their operations' equipment include two video tape recorders, three television cameras and one movie camera. Also located in Hiner is a studio for producing live programs.
Besides taping programs at the Campus School, they tape programs and movies which professors in different departments want to show their students.
During this school year alone, up to January, 230 programs have been recorded.

Members of Building and Grounds have been working for weeks to finish a new parking area across from Curry. Unfortunately, when it is finished it promises to be the same type of muddy swamp that the other lot is already.

Wednesday, March 22, 1972 THE ROTUNDA Page 11 Gyre, Literary Magazines Debuts April 5 With Quality

By JANET LYNN TENNYSON
"The quality of the magazine is stressed rather than the quantity of the material," said Childrey Farber, editor of the GYRE, "and I feel it is an exciting attempt this time." All this concerns the debut of the GYRE, the Longwood College literary magazine on Wednesday, April 5.
The magazine will contain prose, photography, poetry, art and a cover design. "There is not only the work by a student but also included is a written article, or interview with that student," noted Childrey. One selection was judged as a finalist in the Hollins College contest, in which schools from all over the nation were invited to participate. Two other pieces were entered and received finalist standing in the statewide Madison College Literary contest.

There are three distinguished figures featured in the magazine, who are prominent on the literary and art scenes today. A. B. Jackson is a teacher and artist at Old Dominion University and has three pieces of his art work hanging in the Lancaster Library. There will be one selection of his art work and a critique by Mr. Jackson in the GYRE. There is an article by David Madden, a writer at Louisiana State University, and an interview with poet Erica Jong, of New York.

"From all appearances our present statements on future plans are unrealistic and behind the times. First semester, the student leaders worked within the system and we came to the conclusion that we aren't even a part of the system," Laird said. Laird then asked President Reveley if it would be feasible for the students to work through the proper channels to obtain greater power in the governance of the college. Dr. Reveley said that he would be glad to appoint a committee of faculty members to meet with student leaders chosen by Laird. The committee would study the proposals and the grievances which the students felt were important, and then the committee would present a recommendation to the faculty for their vote on the matter.

Why is it so hard to discuss the POW question?

NOT only is the prisoner-of-war question a thorny problem at the peace talk sessions in Paris. It seems an explosive issue in homes around the world, even here in America.

Why?
Because we are in a complicated and baffling and frustrating war. Because it is an "unofficial" war and many people wonder what rules apply. Or possibly, if any rules apply. Because nobody wants the war but the two sides can't agree how to end it.

The prisoner-of-war issue is caught up in this maelstrom of intellectual confusion and emotional volatility.

It's a pity that it is.
It's a pity for the men who are being held prisoner. It's a pity for their families who live in fear and doubt. Indeed, it's a pity for the nations involved and those who only watch. They have allowed the multiplicity of issues to cloud the human issue.

This message speaks not of the political side of the prisoner-of-war issue but of the human side.

It speaks for the families of the prisoners and for all the peoples of the world whose conscience hasn't been covered over by the smog of confusion.

Of course, we all want the war to end and the prisoners of war to be released as soon as possible.

But meanwhile there is no need for Hanoi and its allies to delay even a day in answering this plea:

Open your prison camps in North Vietnam, South Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia to official neutral observers. Let the world know who the prisoners are, where they are and whether they are being humanely treated in accordance with the standard of civilized nations.

That's all. Certainly there can be agreement on that part of the POW question.

In fact, there is no need for consultations. Hanoi, unilaterally and without consultation, can solve the problem.

Then, at least, the minds of millions in America would rest easier.

And perhaps those in other parts of the world, too.

Open your prison camps to

Today's Young Couples Share Preparation for Parenthood

by Ralph W. Gause, M.D.
Senior Medical Consultant
The National Foundation-
March of Dimes

It used to be that having a baby was a function reserved for women only. Nowadays, however, the father of the yet-to-be born baby is being invited to participate if not in the actual pregnancy, at least in the emotional atmosphere that surrounds it. One might speak of a "pregnant family." The more the father-to-be is let in on what the pregnant woman is going through, the stronger the marriage can be and the happier the baby when he becomes aware of his parents. According to Max Deutscher, a psychologist, "it is pregnancy which makes parents out of spouses and a family out of a marriage."

Pregnancy is a natural process, not an illness. In most cases, the common-sense rules that a doctor will lay down are all the "special treatment" that will be necessary. What matters most is that the parents see a doctor just as soon as the woman thinks she is going to have a baby. Prenatal care is critically important from the beginning because it is during the first 56 days that the embryological side of fetal development is completed. Early and regular medical attention can mean the difference between a healthy pregnancy and delivery or one marked by complications. Both parents should demonstrate a greater sense of responsibility than commonly practiced during pregnancy. They are the custodians of a future person and their awareness of the size of the task is essential.

Nutrition Vital

The future father isn't going to go through physical changes, but his wife's pregnancy certainly is an emotionally charged time for him. Pregnancy is nine months of growing a baby. It is also nine months of growing together, of learning to know each other in new roles. It is a trial run for parenthood.

A mother begins feeding or underfeeding — her baby nine months before he is born. An expectant mother's diet is of particular importance. She must protect her own health to meet the nutritional needs of her developing child. Nutrition is a vital factor in helping to lower infant deaths and the serious problem of premature births.

Proper weight gain is necessary for a healthy pregnancy. Naturally, it should depend upon general health, height, age, build and normal weight. If a mother is quite thin when she becomes pregnant, she will need to gain more than a woman who is overweight. As for smoking, please cut it out — not just cut down. Out.

Nutrition and correct weight gain are always emphasized in prenatal care education programs sponsored by The National Foundation-March of Dimes.

An expectant mother's teeth may need extra attention. Gums have a tendency to bleed more at this time. She should make an appointment early in pregnancy and, above all, let the dentist know that she is pregnant.

Exercise is very important. Walking is the simplest form and available to all. There is a difference between walking for the fun of it and walking while working. Pregnancy is no time to take up a new sport. If a woman notices that her leg veins are enlarging, she should wear support stockings and put her feet up more often than a woman who is not troubled by varicose veins.

DR. CLARENCE J. YOUNG teaches young parents in Apple Valley, Calif., at childbirth education class co-sponsored by St. Mary's Hospital, the March of Dimes, and the Junior Women's Club.

New Roles

Drugs of any kind, unless they are prescribed by a doctor, are to be avoided. A certain amount of constipation may be expected, and the best way to treat it is to eat plenty of roughage foods — fruits, vegetables, especially salads, and cereals. Use laxatives only on the doctor's recommendation.

In more and more hospitals, fathers are welcome in labor and delivery rooms, provided they have attended childbirth education classes with their wives. With this kind of preparation, the father can give his wife helpful support during labor. Some doctors and hospitals do not approve of fathers attending the delivery, but most encourage childbirth education for a couple even if the father will not be present at birth. A couple who have learned what to expect at this time are far more likely to have a richly rewarding experience. The attending physician must give his approval for the father to be in the delivery room. Furthermore the decision, of course, is a matter of personal choice.

What a pity that having children is often more important than wanting them.

The pressures for having children are great.

Some are social.

Like a mother-in-law asking for the hundredth time when she's going to see grandchildren.

Or an aunt wondering out loud whether the couple is selfish.

Other pressures are personal.

Like the self-doubt in many men and women over whether they actually can "make" a baby.

Other pressures are less obvious.

Like not enough family planning services available for everyone who desires and needs them.

As we said, the pressures are great.

But as far as we're concerned, there's only one, repeat one, reason for a couple to have a child: because they really want it.

And are ready for it: emotionally, not just financially.

And there's only one time to have that child: when they want it. When it can be a welcome addition rather than an accidental burden.

Unfortunately, research has consistently shown that not enough Americans (from every walk of life) are aware of the benefits of family planning or how to go about it.

That's what we're all about.

And frankly, we can use all the help we can get.

Especially from thoughtful people who understand how unplanned pregnancies can intensify the already severe problems society has still to solve.

People who will, at the very least, help others understand that there's a difference between having children—and wanting them.

LONGWOOD COLLEGE, FARMVILLE, VIRGINIA WEDNESDAY, APRIL 12, 1972

NO. 20

Q - Why aren't students allowed to attend meetings of the Board of Visitors and the faculty? C. G. and D. B.

A - The following answer was given to us by Dr. Willett:

Meetings of the College Board of Visitors are closed by action of the General Assembly in exempting meetings of college boards of visitors from the freedom of information act. Exceptions to this may be made by the Board and frequently are. Student representatives have attended at least 50% of the recent Board meetings. It would be unfair for members of the Board to come in and discuss matters initially in an open meeting where their every thought and action would be a matter of public record. I believe it was with this thought in mind that the General Assembly took the action that it did.

The faculty, like many similar bodies, has the right to determine which persons, who do not hold membership in the faculty, may attend its meetings. Again, student representatives have attended approximately 50% of recent faculty meetings in order to present proposals, discuss matters of concern, etc.

It should also be noted that Longwood students have other avenues of communication not available on most campuses. These include serving on all major committees of the College, including the Longwood College Council; press conferences; student retreats; etc.

Q - When are we going to have a music library-lounge open to all students? N. M.

A - When asked about this question, Dr. Molnar, Chairman of the Music Department, replied:

The Music Department is not equipped nor does it have the funds to have a music library-lounge; all students are welcomed to use the record library under the restrictions and regulations to which music students are placed (no smoking, drinking, food, etc., taking proper care of records, etc.), but the music listening room is not intended to be a lounge - it is a place of study. The logical place to lounge is in the Lankford Building.

Carrol Kersh Named Head Colleague For 1972

By JANET LYNN TENNYSON

With the sounds from 75 rings from the CHI bell still resounding in her ears, Carrol Kersh was named head colleague for 1972. Donna Hicks, head colleague for 1971, made the announcement which was greeted with immediate and enthusiastic applause from the large audience gathered in the Rotunda.

"I can't believe it, it's a great honor," said Carrol, "I'll call my parents and tell them."

A freshman from Harrisonburg, Va., and a physical education major, Carrol is a member of Zeta Tau Alpha social sorority and the Longwood College tennis team. She is also a member of freshman commission.

The plans and goals for the coming year are now in the making. The colleagues for 1972 are Sue Goodwin, Nancy Minnick, Karen Smith, Sarah and Susan Smithy, Pat Saunders, D. A. Taylor, Karen Minyard,

New Room Registration Plan Passed By Legislative Board

By VICKI BOWLING

A new policy whereby students may keep their old rooms and not have to go through room draw will be in effect for room registration this spring.

According to Dean Margaret Nuckols, any roommates who wish to keep the same room for next year may do so, if the room is filled to capacity and is in an upperclassman dorm. A room is filled to capacity if two girls occupy it, or if three girls occupy the triple rooms in Curry and Frazer, those ending in 08, 22, 32, and 46.

Those girls wishing to stay in their present rooms will fill out a form indicating that the room will be unchanged for next year, said Dean Nuckols. Each girl must complete her own section on the form.

To be obtained from the head resident's office and returned to Dean Nuckols' office, the forms will be filled out between 7-10 p.m. on Monday, April 17, and Tuesday, April 18.

The idea for the new policy originated from the Dean's office. It was investigated by Residence Board and passed by Legislative Board.

Dean Nuckols Pleased

"I'm very pleased that this has passed both boards," Dean

Nuckols said, "It's a sign that Longwood is interested in progress and in innovation. It is a sign that we are flexible and will try new things."

This new policy does not apply to students who wish to change rooms or roommates. It also does not apply to those who don't have a full room.

Freshmen living in freshman dorms are not eligible for this. However, freshmen now living in upperclassman dorms are eligible.

Dean Nuckols reminds students that only those who have paid their $50 room reservation fee by April 15 are eligible for either room draw or the new policy.

Number draw for rooms will be held on April 19. Each class will draw separately, she said.

On the night of signing up for rooms, girls may sign up by rooms or by suites. Each class will sign up on a different night, with the rising seniors first on April 24, followed by the juniors on April 26, and the sophomores on May 1.

Signing up will progress from low numbers to high ones.

If a student withdraws from school after she has registered for a room, the remaining roommate has until July 1 to request a new roommate. This new roommate must let the Dean's

Mr. Sandidge has been given a grant to study in Germany next year.

Sandidge Receives Scholarship For Year Study In Germany

By LYNNE PIERCE

Mr. Ben Sandidge, an instructor of German and French in the Longwood Foreign Languages Department, has been named to receive a Fulbright Scholarship to study in Germany next year.

In order to receive his scholarship, Mr. Sandidge had to submit various forms and reports to the Fulbright Foundation which described a project of his choice. These forms had to be accompanied by recommendations and led to him receiving one of only seventy scholarships offered in the United States to study in Germany.

The project Mr. Sandidge chose was his dissertation on the teaching of literature in the German Gymnasium. A gymnasium is a type of college preparatory school. He will visit some of these schools and will gather information from conferences he will be attending and the school officials he talks to.

Mr. Sandidge will move to Germany with his family in order to be there at the start of the school term next October. The scholarship pays for travel and provides a dependents' allowance, but Mrs. Sandidge hopes to have a teaching job in order to help out with expenses. Mr. Sandidge hopes to be enrolled in the University of Goettingen by the time he arrives. He described the school as being centrally located and having several schools which will be beneficial to his research.

Mr. Sandidge plans to return to Longwood after his study in Germany in time for the fall semester of 1973. He will have to present a defense of his dissertation at Middleburg College in Middleburg, Vermont, and hopes to obtain his doctorate through this.

Nobody's Fault But Your Own

In my three years at Longwood, I have become convinced that the two favorite pastimes of the students here are boys and complaining. It's easy to understand why boys hold the first position since this is a girls' school, but I have always been interested in the second one.

Longwood students complain about everything from the food in the dining hall to the weather. Occasionally, when they run out of topics, they'll make up a rumor and complain about that. By far, the most popular and frequent complaint has to be: "I never stay on campus because there's nothing to do." I'll defend anyone's right to complain and I'll admit that most of them have a certain amount of justification behind them, but to those who say there's nothing to do, I can only say it's nobody's fault but your own! Because of the students' total indifference in this area, it is now also obvious that the future operations of one of the major organizations on campus are going to be severely crippled.

The Student Union has made a concentrated effort this year to provide quality entertainment that the students can enjoy at a minimum price. In an attempt to provide "something to do," it has presented a calendar of events that has included dances, movies, plays, concerts and fashion shows. The events have been varied in nature in order to provide something to meet the tastes of the majority of the students.

What has been the reward for the great amount of work Student Union members put out? They have seen project after project produce a less than minimum turnout among the students and the majority have resulted in a great financial loss. The object of these events isn't to make money, but neither is it to waste it.

The blame for this can only rest with the students. No one can say the programs are no good. The less than two hundred people who saw Gove and the bare two hundred who saw "The Fantastics," for example, will tell you you are wrong. Even if the shows were terrible, that again comes back to the students. The Student Union has pleaded numerous times for suggestions and help from the students. Too many of you have been too busy sitting in the dorms talking about boys, clothes or who-knows-what to care, though. (Don't try to hid behind studying, either. The majority of us know how much weight that carries. Besides, the girls who help have classes too.)

How can you expect anyone to provide entertainment for you when you refuse to support their efforts? Why should anyone make an effort when the only reaction they get is total indifference from the students? The thing that amazes me is that there are people willing to do this work and who have done an exceptional job in providing interesting events. Dragon Chandler, her officers and the students who help her deserve a lot of credit and THE ROTUNDA acknowledges this work as some of the most productive on campus.

The Student Union is in trouble, though. Due to constantly going in debt on programs, the union's budget has been severely depleted. Some of the plans for the rest of the year face cancellation or drastic alteration because of a lack of funds. The next time you say "there's nothing to do," think about how much you could have done if you had made a suggestion or attended some of the events!

U. Va. Concert

Dear Editor,

This letter is to announce a concert at the University of Virginia. Alice Cooper and newly emerging Redbone are scheduled to appear on Friday, April 14, 1972. Alice Cooper, one of the few American groups which complements its music with an extraordinary visual performance, has been a sell-out in major cities across the nation recently, and has drawn rave reviews from many critics. For this reason, I advise that all interested in attending the show, to be held in University Hall at 8:00 P. M. on the aforementioned date, write in advance to Larry Wicker, PK-German Dance Society of the University Union, Newcomb Hall, U.Va., Charlottesville, Virginia 22901, with a check enclosed payable to the University Union and a self-addressed return envelope. Tickets will be on sale, while they last, for $3.50 in advance or $4.00 at the door, and I take this opportunity to invite all of you to attend.

Food Theft

Dear Students,

"Stealing is defined as:

A. The stealing of personal property, items from the college stores, or items from the college stores, or items from dormitory refrigerators. (Longwood College Student Handbook, page 89.)

Last week, seven students were placed on special probation for the remainder of their time at Longwood for stealing food from the dining hall.

Only the food listed on page 76 may be removed from the dining hall during meals except when permission is obtained from ARA Slater management. Failure to abide by this rule is a Residence board offense.

However, it is considered stealing of college property to enter the dining hall after the Slater business hours are over at night and remove food or any other article from the dining hall. Indirectly, it is stealing from the entire student body since our fees paid for the food. Judicial Board was informed of the following:

1. Many members of the student body feel that paying their fees entitles them to get their food at anytime they so desire.
2. Some students have interpreted Mr. Carbone's statement at a Press Conference last year to mean they could get something to eat anytime they are hungry.

Both of the above statements are incorrect. Slater realizes that students do not come to every meal and board fees are charged accordingly. Therefore, missing a meal does NOT mean that Slater owes the student food, and therefore, does NOT entitle the student to take food without permission.

Mr. Carbone's statement at last year's Press Conference was to the effect that he does not want anyone to leave the dining hall hungry. If a student does not get enough to eat during the meal she should let him know and he will see to it that she will get something to eat. This is NOT permission to enter the dining hall at anytime you are hungry and get food. If 2000 girls enter the dining hall at night to get a snack, there would not be enough food for the meals on the following day.

This past week, one student was found guilty of the charge of lying during Judicial Board investigations and was suspended. The student body is reminded that it is an Honor Code offense to lie in either Judicial or Residence Board investigations.

Sandy Oliver
Chairman, Judicial Board

The Fantasticks Termed As "Funny & Sad" And Excellent

By VICKI BOWLING

It's getting to be routine at Longwood — a sparse crowd viewing an excellent performance. The few hundred spectators who sat in Jarman to watch THE FANTASTICKS on Monday, March 20, were treated to a funny and sad story of a Boy, a Girl, and their Fathers, all growing up. There was hardly a dull or unemotional moment from the time the play was introduced by a Mute rushing down the aisle and onto the stage, waving sparklers all the while, to the final tender strains of "Try to remember, and if you remember, then follow."

Characters And Roles

The characters were thoroughly charming, and the actors played their roles convincingly. Maureen Maloney and Richard Lincoln as the Girl and Boy were young, fresh, and innocent at the beginning, and perhaps a little worn once they had gained their knowledge of the world.

The Fathers, portrayed by Stephen Everett and Ken Parker, were typical fathers of young people, a bit baffled at times by their offspring, but confident that their way was the right way.

Dressed in black, the Narrator, John P. Lagiola, was a believable bandit and well-worn traveler of the world. Also in black was the Mute, played by Anthony Bruno, who filled in capably as the wall, snow, rain, and any other assorted parts which were needed. Particularly striking was the sensitivity of his face, which reflected the emotion of each particular scene.

Delightful Surprise

The two Actors, though seen only briefly, almost stole the show. Crawling out of a chest of costumes on stage, they surprised and delighted the audience. Edward Garabrandt as the Shakespeare-quoting octogenarian (who also directed the musical) wore red-faded-to-pink long underwear, and when he grinned showed one tooth and an abundance of wrinkles. As the Man Who Dies, Charles S. Bershatsky first appeared as a not-too-bright, pot-bellied Indian, who wore long white underwear under his Indian skins. The audience was treated to one of his death scenes.

The cast had a remarkable rapport with the audience and communicated beautifully. The audience was receptive to any idea or character put before it.

The Music Has Lasted

The music has been tried and tested for 12 years, and it was easy to understand why it has lasted. Most of the play was performed musically, and while all of the songs were well received, a few appealed more than the others. "Try to Remember" was perhaps the most famous, and served both to introduce and close the play. The Fathers sang "Never Say No," a treatise on raising children, and the mostly student audience seemed to agree with its principles wholeheartedly. Other songs included "It Depends on What You Pay," "Round and Round," and "They Were You."

Jackie Warner, producer of the musical, said that he thought this play would appeal to the students because of the vulnerable young people, the Fathers, and the songs.

The cast, he said, had "great communication with the audience," here and at other places.

"This is one of the best groups I've ever worked with," he said.

About The Producer

Warner, a vibrant and energetic personality, is producer of On the Aisle, Inc., the same company which presented "Stop the World, I Want to Get Off" at Longwood last year. Although he acted in that musical and said, "I'm primarily a performer," he believes that a producer can in his way be as creative as a performer.

THE FANTASTICKS, playing mostly at colleges, finished its three month run at the end of March, when Warner began to assemble a new cast and crew to start work on his next production.

LaDonna Bussard To Present Senior Piano Recital

By VICKI BOWLING

LaDonna Bussard will present her senior piano recital Sunday afternoon at 4 p.m. in Wygal Recital Hall.

A music education major from Hot Springs, Va., LaDonna is a student of Dr. Robert Blasch. When she graduates in June, she plans to teach music on the elementary level in either Lynchburg or Roanoke.

Included in the program are Fantasy in C minor, by Bach, Sonata in F major, K. 332, by Mozart, Ballade in G minor, by Chopin, La plus que Lente (Waltz), by Debussy, and Six Romanian Dances, by Bartok.

Actors Set For "Medea" To Be Presented In May

By KARIN DANIELEY

The Longwood Players have begun rehearsals for Euripides' fifth century tragedy, Medea, to be presented May 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6. Medea, a powerfully passionate play involving moral conflicts, has pertinence for the modern play-goer. The Longwood audience should especially enjoy a play which attacks the attitude that a woman, especially a passionate woman, is inferior and, therefore, does not deserve justice.

Mr. Douglas Young is directing a cast of veteran performers. Belinda Brugh will portray the passionate medea, while Robert MacIlwaine will create the character Jason, Medea's estranged husband. Another leading role, the nurse, will be played by Joyce Saunders. Other characters in the show are Cindy Baughn, Lotie Lawrence, Joanne Noseck, Bridget MacKillop and Janet Baker.

Art By Lemen On Display With Richmond Artists Association

Janice Lemen will have a five-piece oil painting, PETUNIA, on exhibit with The Richmond Artists Association in Miller and Rhoads' Old Dominion Room April 10 to 21.

Also, at the Ridge Road Cinema on Parham Road in Richmond, one of her Apple Pies, CHEERS FOR THE RED, WHITE AND X, a mixed media entry is on exhibit. This is a part of a Richmond Artists Association exhibition and will be on display through April 30.

Messiaen's Organ Recital Premiered In Washington, D. C.

By KAY BIGGS

An important musical event took place at the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception in Washington, D. C. on March 20. The event was the world premiere of the organ composition "Meditations sur le Mystere de la Sainte Trinite" (Meditations on the Mystery of the Holy Trinity) by the French composer and organist, Olivier Messiaen (b. 1908), in his first and only organ recital given in North America. The composition was commissioned in 1969 by the Shrine.

Joyce Morene, Carol Rooney, Kay Biggs, and Martha Bowe, all organ students at Longwood, and Mr. Paul Hesselink, professor of organ at Longwood, attended this historical occasion and were among the audience which represented thirty states, several foreign countries, and the European Press.

Messiaen as a composer has been termed "a harmonic colorist probably unequalled among living composers." Bird calls play an important role in his melodic outlines, combined with complex rhythms (based on his thorough studies of Indian music), and a rich harmonic structure. Though melody was "first and foremost" in his earlier works, now he emphasizes modal melodic transgressions. He composes to make his music "an iridescent music, one which will delight the auditory senses with delicate, voluptuous pleasures." Messiaen is a religious mystic for whom music is an act of faith. His music rarely fails to provoke strong reaction.

Sculptures By Howard Woody

On View In Bedford Building

By VALERIE BLANKS

A sculpture exhibition of Howard Woody, Associate Professor of Art, University of South Carolina, can now be seen on the lawn and in the first floor hallway of Bedford Building. This 22 piece exhibit will remain on view until April 28.

The sculpture in this exhibit illustrates the construction and assemblage processes rather than the traditional carved or modeled processes. The various cast bronze, aluminum, fiberglass and polyester resin works are physically created in several ways. The work in this exhibition can be subdivided into three stylistic types: organic, geometric and environmental.

Professor Woody's sculpture has been displayed in 20 states across the country and has exhibited in 45 one-man exhibitions in art museums, galleries, and colleges. His works have been selected and honored in numerous competitive and invitational exhibitions, as well as various traveling exhibitions.

Professor Woody was founding officer and President of the Southern Association of Sculptors, Inc., and has been an active board member of the National Sculpture Center since 1966. He is also listed in Who's Who in American Art.

The Afro-American Dance Ensemble proved very entertaining.

Role Of Blacks Presented By

Afro-American Dance Ensemble

By JO SMITH

The Arthur Hall Afro-American Dance Ensemble presented a fascinating program of cultural and American dances in Jarman on March 21. The color, rhythm and excitement had a spellbinding effect on the audience and created an appreciation for the cultural movements of Africa and the deep significance of each dance. Two outstanding dancers, Melvin Purnell and LaVern McBride, were perhaps the most expressive in their bodies, although all of the dancers were adept at portraying emotion.

The program consisted of ten presentations, seven of which were derived from different cultures and two were based on the blacks' role in American history. One number consisted solely of drumming on metallic bells of various sizes. The tones of the bells produced not only rhythm but an exchange of impressions.

Three of the cultural dances that were especially enthralling were Harvest, a dance from Guinea, Court Dance of the Royal Watusi, from Rwanda, and Obatala, from Nigeria. Each of these dances thrive on authenticity and true reproduction of the actual obtained from Dean Nuckols of office. We would also suggest that you read the article on the new room assignment policy.

Number drawing for rooms is the procedure by which students "get in line" for registration of a room for the next academic year. The procedure is basically as follows:

All classes will draw at the same time on Wednesday, April 19, at 6:45 p. m. in the BC Rooms. Each student will draw according to her class status in September 1972. Actual assignment of rooms will take place for the rising seniors on April 24, for rising juniors on April 26, and for rising sophomores on May 1. The students with low numbers within each class will be assigned before the ones with higher numbers. If a suite is to be composed of students from different classes, the highest in rank carries the lower classes on her number and signs up for the whole suite.

Exceptions to number drawing procedures are those upperclassmen who wish to remain in the same room, and those in Stubbs. Detailed information and instructions will be sent to every Head Resident this week.

A - CHI supplied us with the following answer through the mystery post:

Chi regrets that walks cannot be announced in advance because we do understand many spirited students miss them. Our apologies to those whose sleep has been interrupted.

Chi's identity cannot be revealed until Burning. If walks were announced, people in every dorm would be awake, jeopardizing our identity. This is a risk Chi cannot take.

Q - According to past statistics, what percentage of the freshmen will graduate from Longwood? S. S.

A - Col. Gilchrist, the registrar, referred this question to Mr. Hamilton, the assistant registrar who said:

The most recent statistics show that about 70 per cent of the students who matriculate at Longwood as freshmen will probably graduate from it or an allied institution. About 59 per cent of the students who entered Longwood in September 1967 graduated in June 1971. Another 4 per cent of this class will have graduated from Longwood between November 1971 and June 1972. About 5 per cent of the student who come here in 1967 graduated from programs at U. Va. in which Longwood cooperates, such as nursing.

Junior Ring Dance Concert Featured Jonathan Edwards

Jonathan Edwards (right) and his bass player, Stuart Schulman.

By LYNNE PIERCE

The trend seems to have been over the past few years for the Junior Ring Dance concerts to be an improvement over the preceding one. The concert held last Friday night, which featured Jonathan Edwards, certainly seems to prove this.

The concert was held in Jarman before an audience which was nearly at capacity despite a drenching rain which had been falling since that afternoon. Miller and Burton, a duo which featured guitarist Miller as the lead singer and Burton on bass, remarked later that they were surprised at the enthusiasm of the audience considering the weather.

Miller And Burton

The program was opened by Miller and Burton, whose music is in the same vein as Cat Stev-standing what they are doing.

The second was the lament of a "dirty-old-man" who had waited sixty-four years to start chasing women. The story ended with the man finding that when he found a woman willing to fulfill his desires, his body could not accomplish what his mind thought of.

The duo's final number was one written by Leadbelly on the sinking of the Titanic. It tells of Jack Johnson, the first black to win the heavyweight boxing title, being refused passage on the ship. Johnson is quite depressed until he learns that the ship has gone down after striking an iceberg. Johnson is so happy that he goes out and does "all kinds of bad things" to show his joy.

'Versatile' Edwards

After a brief intermission, ens, John Denver and the like. They performed for an hour, doing a variety of songs, including the Cat Stevens hits, "Peace Train" and "Fathers and Sons," several songs written by Gove, who visited this campus several weeks ago, and they had the audience join them in singing "American Pie."

Two songs were particularly enjoyed by the audience. The first was an antiwar song aimed at people who stick flag decals everywhere and proclaim themselves patriots and first class citizens without really under-

Jonathan Edwards strode on stage looking much taller than his well over six feet because of the shortness of his bass player, Stuart Schulman. This first two numbers were from his first album, "Jonathan Edwards." The first one, "Athens County," was a quick moving song about travel-

Edwards And Duo Talk About Themselves And Their Music

By LYNNE PIERCE

Getting backstage to interview Jonathan Edwards was almost as difficult as the interview itself was later to prove to be. Students and dates milled around behind the curtain adding to the confusion that already existed from the men trying to pack up the equipment.

Edwards finally appeared from his dressing room and was immediately seized by a student who identified himself as the one who had been shouting at him during the concert. Edwards' only comment was "good for you." They talked together for a few minutes, during which time the girl and her date persuaded him to drink from a gin bottle and a bottle of Schnapps. They explained that they wanted to be able to say "the" Jonathan Edwards had drunk from the bottles.

As Edwards moved on to another group of students, his equipment man ushered the staff photographer and me into the dressing room where we came face-to-face with Stuart Schulman, Edwards' bass player, and a huge white dog named Elvin. (Elvin, we later found out, belongs to a young lady traveling with the group and does not like flying.)

Strip Artist?

Stu was in the middle of a discussion with the photographer on the attributes of various airports around the country when Edwards ("call me Jon") walked in and sat on the table. He looked tall on stage, but sitting down he still towered over me while I stood to introduce myself. His biography says he is 6-foot-3, but when he stood to shake hands, I would have sworn he was at least seven feet. When he found out we wanted pictures, he began to change shirts. Suddenly, he turned to me and said "shoot," meaning ask a question, but the photographer, thinking he meant her, snapped his picture without a shirt on. "That's the kind of paper you run," he quipped.

His Background

One of the men in charge of equipment handed me a folder full of reviews, pictures and an autobiography so that we would not have to "waste time" discussing questions about his early career. Jon begins his story with:

Someone said they heard of me in Montana. That's great but I haven't been there yet.

I was born in Minnesota and that's two Dakotas away.

He goes on to say that he was put up for adoption shortly after he was born and lived in Minnesota, until his father moved to Virginia six years later.

Jon grew up in Alexandria so that his father could be close to Washington and his job with the FBI. He claims his favorite pastimes were burning down new houses and auditioning for the Icecapades. These quickly led to his enrollment in military school where he formed his first group, The Rivermen.

After military school, he went to college for a while in Athens, Ohio, and began singing in earnest. He and his roommate formed a group called St. James Door-knob, eventually quit school, changed their name to Headstone Circus and moved to Boston. After being "discovered" seven times, they recorded an album under the name Sugar Creek. After five years with the group, Jon says he was tired of playing music as loud as he could so he quit.

Prefers Gospel Rock

Jon picked up the interview from this point and explained that he had been a single performer for two years. He felt electric music was no longer "fulfilling" him any more and prefers what he calls gospel rock. He writes

Washington Concert

The work premiered consisted of nine pieces which were musically and theologically analysed in the program notes. In this composition, Messiaen introduced for the first time his "Communicable Language," a musical alphabet through which words could be transcribed; each letter is given a sound, a pitch, and a duration. Its purpose, as with all languages, is to communicate directly, rather than through the subconscious and emotions.

The premiere composition was performed on the Shrine's 119 rank, 100 stop "Grand Orgue" built by Moller Organ Company. The organ is located in the south gallery a city block away from the high altar!

Colleges In The News

Free Newspaper

BLACKSBURG — Student newspapers appear lately to be attracting attention in a good many places. The Virginia General Assembly has before it a proposal statute which would prohibit the use of funds from college student fees for the publication of student newspapers. Some schools have found their own solution to this problem. Virginia Tech's official student newspaper, The Collegiate Times, suddenly has a competitor, also published by students, The University Page and Advertiser. The latter publication is distributed free to students on the campus and in apartment complexes off campus, and is supported entirely by advertising. The difficulties of the Times are complex. Its student editors in recent years have tended to quarrel with about everything the University does. This has made the Blacksburg business community unhappy and advertising revenues have fallen off. The results should be interesting. Either the Page will succeed, and win the loyalty of the student community, or the Times will make peace with advertisers, and reassert its role as the basic student newspaper voice. Blacksburg is not large enough to support two student newspapers unless one of them is supported entirely by student fee funds.

Black Students Probe

CHARLOTTESVILLE — A black student group asked last week that state and federal civil rights officials institute a "formal investigation" into faculty hiring practices at the University of Virginia's law school. The university chapter of the Black American Law Students Association said that despite the efforts of black students and statements of concern by the law school council and faculty, the 44-member faculty has remained "segregated." BALSA says that although black lawyers have sought faculty positions, "such inquiries have been rejected based on reasons which are unclear and which we believe merit independent investigation." To remedy the law school's "negligence," the association asked that no further appointment be made until black lawyers are admitted to the faculty.

Voice In Hiring

WILLIAMSBURG — The Board of Student Affairs at William and Mary passed resolutions last week requesting the administration to allow the student body and faculty play a role in the selection of a new basketball coach to replace Warren Mitchell, who was fired last week after six years as head coach, and a new Vice President for Business Affairs. The board states that "students will be working under a coach for several years and should have some voice in his selection. Basketball could be a high revenue sport and if the team and coach were better and attracted more spectators the college could have more revenue."

Coeducation Rejected

LEXINGTON — Students at Washington and Lee University have defeated a resolution urging the university's board of trustees to adopt coeducation at the 223-year-old men's school. By a vote of 535 to 438 in a recent referendum, the students rejected the resolution.

office know that she agrees to the situation.

"Every attempt will be made to satisfy the request before July 1," Dean Nuckols said.

"After that date," she continued, "it will be the responsibility of this office to fill the vacancy."

No Storage In Rooms

She wants to remind students that all belongings must be removed for the summer, even if no room change is involved.

"This is for the girls' protection," Dean Nuckols stated.

She explained that material left in a room has a greater likelihood of being damaged or stolen. Also, the rooms are cleaned thoroughly during the summer, and belongings left in them can get in the way.

Students may store belongings in the main storage room.

An instruction sheet involving room draw and room registration, including the new policy, will be distributed this week. They will be available in the head resident's office. Dean Nuckols urges everyone to read this instruction sheet carefully.

ing with a girl named Maria, who was "never long gone." "Cold Snow," the second song, was a slower moving song which hinted at a setting in colder regions. These songs set the pattern for the rest of the concert in showing Edwards' versatility in being able to play a guitar, harmonica and sing a song with no apparent difficulty in switching from one to the other.

Between songs, Edwards kept up a running banter with the audience, which responded with shouting between and during the songs. He told of staying in the Hotel Weyanoke and becoming hungry. When he opened a drawer, he thought he had found a menu, but it turned out to be the phone book. "You have a lot to eat around here," he commented.

Songs From Albums

Edwards interspersed his performance with songs from his album, including "Shanty," "Emma" and "Sometimes," and new songs which will appear on his second album. One, "Honky Tonk Stardust Cowboy," is the tentative title for the record. During one break, he and Stuart were trying to tune the piano and he remarked, "leave it to a girls' school to have a flat piano."

After playing a song about going into a store and seeing himself on sale through his records, Edwards began to pick out "You Are My Sunshine." This naturally led to his first hit, "Sunshine," which the audience greeted with a roar. After this, he concluded the performance with another song from the album, "Train of Glory."

Water Show Numbers Accepted For Aquatic Festival At Wm. And Mary

By SHARON CURLING

Two numbers which were presented during the annual water show have been accepted to participate in the International Aquatic Art Festival to be held at the College of William and Mary on April 19-22. The numbers to be presented are "Hello Dolly" and "Camelot". Dolly is portrayed by Kathe Kutscher with Mary and Debby Ellenbrand participating. The girls in "Camelot" are Kathe Kutscher, Mary Moore, and Lois Hrubik.

The purpose of the festival is to instruct and to further the development of swimming as an art form. Throughout the four day period, various workshops and evaluation sessions are open to all members of the H2O Club. Some of the workshops to be presented are "Choreographic Ideas", "Use of Levels", "Creative Use of Props", and "Developing Movement in Aquatic Art."

According to Nancy Andrews, advisor of the H2O Club, "It is very unusual that the Festival is being held this close and we are most fortunate to be able to attend and especially participate."

On Saturday, April 8, Longwood beat Seven Hills School in Lynchburg by a score of 7-3. It was their first scrimmage match.

Yes, there are a lot of good reasons for women to quit smoking.

Find yours.

( ) That "Smoke Pretty" ad makes me furious. Whoever made that up knows where the money is—fewer women than men are quitting. But they won't get rich over my dead body.

( ) My closet smells rotten, my clothes smell rotten. I'm sick of it.

( ) Lung cancer deaths are twice as high among women who smoke as among those who don't.

( ) I'm still young. The longer I smoke, the harder it will be to quit and my chances of becoming a real heavy smoker go up.

( ) It's one kind of air pollution I can do something about. People in the room with me shouldn't have to breathe dirty air.

( ) I want to be a teacher. How can I discourage kids from smoking when I smoke?

( ) I seem to be sick a lot. I also smoke a lot. Women who smoke like me have more chronic illness, lose more time from work, are sick more often than those who don't.

( ) I know my father's been trying to quit. How can he with me still puffing away?

( ) I want to wake up feeling fresh and clean again. I've had it with nicotine hang-over in the mornings.

( ) The thing that appeals to me most is: If I quit and stay quit, in most cases, it can be as if I never smoked. There's something about this that absolutely knocks me out. A clean slate; a real second chance. You just don't get many of those.

( ) I quit once for 10 days and, frankly, I felt pretty good about it. I like that feeling; this time I'm quitting for good. Lord knows, I've done a lot harder things in my life.

( ) So many people I know have quit, I'm beginning to feel stupid about smoking.

( ) There's something very cool and self-assured about women who don't need cigarettes.

( ) I thought it was hopeless; I quit once and went back. But someone told me a lot of people had to quit over and over before it took. I'm trying again. It can't hurt.

( ) If I quit, I'll save 50¢ a day. That's $3.50 a week, $14.00 a month, $182.50 a year. That buys almost 2 gallons of gas a day. A record a week. Seven movies a month. After a year, I can fly to _____ and back on cigarettes I didn't smoke.

( ) Somewhere in the back of my head I've been nursing the illusion that smoking is really only dangerous for men. I've just seen the latest statistics. The death rate for women who smoke is more than 20% higher than women who don't. We've come a long way baby, but I'm not going any further.

Now all you need is help and encouragement.

Send a postcard today to: Women and Smoking, Rockville, Md. 20852. And we'll send some booklets to help and encourage you.

FESTIVAL OF THE ARTS

Editor's Note:

THE GYRE sponsored a festival of the arts last week which featured Erica Jong, A. B. Jackson and David Madden discussing their work. The general feeling of those who attended the functions was that the festival was a tremendous success and an outstanding accomplishment on the part of GYRE editor Childrey Farber and her staff. The following are the impressions gathered by members of the ROTUNDA staff as they followed the festival throughout the week.

Poet Erica Jong Reads About "Women, Marriage, And Divorce"

Erica Jong spoke with students following the discussion of her poetry.

By DEBBIE BASTEK

One of three featured artists on campus last week for Longwood's first annual Festival of the Arts was Erica Jong. Mrs. Jong, a poet from Manhattan, teaches a poetry workshop at the 92nd Street Y, and recently published her first collection of poetry, "Fruits and Vegetables." She was educated at Barnard College, Columbia Graduate Facilities, and Columbia School of Arts where she studied under Stanley Kunitz and Mark Strand. In addition to "Fruits and Vegetables," she has also published in a number of magazines, including "Poetry," "The Nation," "Epoch," "The Southern Review," and "Mademoiselle." She is currently working on a novel and her second book of poetry.

Reasons For Writing

Mrs. Jong read her poetry Wednesday evening in the ABC rooms of Lankford, including selections from "Fruits and Vegetables" as well as poems from her upcoming book about "women, marriage, and divorce."

She began her reading with "Climbing You," which she described as "One of a series of poems about women and the varieties of their experience. This is the first in that series." As she read her poetry she described her reasons for writing specific poems, and gave a little of the background of each. "In a lot of the poems in this book I take a fantastic idea and sort of carry it out to the limit." In describing the title poem to her book, also called "Fruits and Vegetables," she said it was the result of "a long meditation on the different fruits and vegetables in which the poet tries to get inside them and imagine what it is like to possess them entirely." Her last selection of the evening was the newest poem she had, "The Evidence."

Encourages Questions

Thursday morning Mrs. Jong discussed her poetry in the ABC room at Lankford. After having the chairs arranged in a semi-circle around the podium, she encouraged those present to ask questions about the essay she had written for the GYRE, the poems read the night before, and the craft of poetry.

Asked about the difference between poetry and prose, she answered that poetry was "sort of concentrated and very compact," and went on to say that "A lot of our ideas about poetry are culturally very, very narrow."

'It's Incredible Hogwash'

Childrey Farber mentioned a statement made by a man which said a woman could no longer write poetry once she had given birth to a child because she had then experienced the ultimate form of 'creation' for which art had been a substitute. Mrs. Jong replied, "I think it's incredible hogwash. To expect it (birth) to be that kind of fulfillment is to bring disaster on both the child and mother." She went on to say, "All women's views are dictated by men. Throughout history culture has been male culture. It takes a tremendous amount of imagination to view the world beyond this."

The Poetic Image

In describing her own poetry and style of writing she said, "It's hard to reveal yourself. It's terrifying. I don't have any set subject matter. I mean the poems just come as they come. It's not a matter of what subject matter you choose as much as the way you approach the subject matter."

Asked whether or not special people became poets or if anyone could develop the ability, she replied, "Part of what we consider the poetic image is common to everybody — others of them are not." Of poetry as a craft Mrs. Jong said, "One of the things I think an artist should be able to do is go inside our secret life, our fantasies. Art demonstrates our own terror and speaks out our dreams. A price is often paid for being in touch with that inner reality."

Mr. Wier, Erica Jong and Childrey Farber took part in the panel discussion held during the Festival of Arts.

Visiting Artists And Longwood Professors

Discuss The Artist As An Educator

By ROBERT H. SELLS

Judging from the audience participation and response to the panel discussion featuring visiting poetess Erica Jong and Painter A. B. Jackson Thursday, the second day of the Longwood Festival of the Arts began successfully.

Also on the panel were Dr. Alexander Theroux, Professor Allen Wier and Professor Douglas Young. Childrey Farber served as the moderator for the discussion which lasted over an hour.

The discussion was begun with a question concerning the artist's involvement in social issues in and through his work. All of the panelists responded to this issue and from there the discussion took a freer and less formal form. Students expressed their opinions and asked questions of the panelists spontaneously.

The issue of the artist as educator in the public school system was debated from several angles.

Mr. Jackson, who is Professor of Art at state supported Old Dominion University, said that one of the reasons that he taught was because he thought he could teach art better than some "professional educator". "I practice what I preach," he said. Jackson also said that universities and colleges are the only patrons of the arts to be found in American culture. He said that teaching was the only job that he could maintain that could feed him and yet leave him with time to pursue his painting. Jackson, who earned his B. F. A. and M. F. A. degrees from Yale University and who has taught at Southern University and Norfolk State College prior to coming to Old Dominion, also said that he enjoyed working with college students.

Erica Jong, whose first collection of poems has recently been published under the title FRUITS AND VEGETABLES, was asked if she thought that current writers measure up to the old masters. Agreeing with Dr. Theroux, she said that few popular writers today compare favorably with such masters as Swift or Pope and certainly none compare with Shakespeare or Milton. Miss Jong, along with the other panelists, did say that Vladimir Nabokov was probably the most outstanding writer alive today.

A. B. JACKSON

Jackson, Visiting Artist, Discusses "Porch People Series"

By BECKY NICHOLSON

"I like what I do, and I do it because of the need to do something I enjoy," says A. B. Jackson when asked what was his chief source of inspiration.

Mr. Jackson is an Art Professor at Old Dominion University, and he visited Longwood last week as a part of the Festival of Arts. He usually works in series, and his most popular is the "Porch People Series." Mr. Jackson believes that the porch is an integral part of living space while Contemporary Architecture tends to turn everything inward. He calls it "Bathroom Architecture."

Before beginning a painting Mr. Jackson sometimes sits for hours just thinking. Then he goes about painting in a nonobjective way, allowing the work to develop into something. He says

Writer, David Madden, Hypnotizes Audience With His Storytelling

By ROBERT H. SELLS

"I sometimes think of myself as the Ancient Mariner wanting to grab my readers by the arm and tell them my stories," said writer David Madden, visiting artist in the Longwood Festival of the Arts.

And Thursday night when Mr. Madden began his reading everyone in the room was captured by his ability to tell stories.

A Misadventure Story

"Did I ever tell you about the time that . . ." Madden began, and for an hour and a half the audience was hypnotized by the misadventures of three brothers, Cody, Traven, and Hollis. Humor and irony were abundant in the story as Hollis, the narrator, told us of his attempts to prevent his brother Cody from being sentenced to prison for "passin' checks". Hollis is a good man, but Traven is a better one, as he succeeds in getting the charges against Cody dropped by committing the same illegal acts charged against Cody.

Mr. Madden, The Actor

Besides being a first-rate novelist and short story writer, Mr. Madden is an actor and it was his ability as an actor that brought the printed page to life for us Thursday night. To many of us it seemed as if Mark Twain stood before us telling us captivating stories not just with a Tennessee mountain drawl, but with his whole body and his whole personality.

Writer-In-Residence

Mr. Madden is presently writer-in-residence at Louisiana State University where he taught Professor Allen Wier creative writing. He has taught writing at 6 colleges and universities and is the author of two novels, the BEAUTIFUL GREED and more recently CASSANDRA

After 59 hours of deliberation, the jury reported itself hopelessly deadlocked and was excused without reaching a verdict on the government's charge that the seven conspired to kidnap presidential adviser Henry A. Kissinger.

Primary

Sen. George S. McGovern said last Wednesday that he is an even-money bet to win the Democratic presidential nomination after his victory in the Wisconsin primary.

Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace, who wound up second in the primary, said his showing proved that "I am a viable candidate."

Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey surveyed his third-place finish and said that it really was not very significant.

Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, a poor fourth in the primary, said the national campaign is now a toss-up. "I think I'm a strong contender," he said.

Deans Wilson And Heintz Attend

Convention Dealing In Education

By VICKI BOWLING

Think of a meeting of 1,040 women in an elegant hotel in New York City. Add to this the fact that all of the women are educated and deal in education. The result is the convention of the National Association of Women Deans and Counselors (NAWDC).

Deans Ruth Wilson and Mary Heintz attended the national convention of the NAWDC, held at the Waldorf Astoria in New York, March 22-26.

The NAWDC is a professional organization to which any woman involved in student personnel or guidance may apply for membership, Dean Heintz explained. At the meetings, each member has the opportunity to discuss problems on her school's campus with women from comparable institutions, and to discover how others treat the same problems.

In speaking of this year's convention, Dr. Heintz dwelled on several highlights, one of which was the address of Dr. Margaret Mead, noted anthropologist and author.

The title of the speech was "The Dangers of Linear Projection," and Dr. Heintz explained that the talk concentrated on the qualifications of people for various types of responsible positions. Dr. Mead outlined dangers involved in selecting an applicant for a position solely on the basis of sex or race. Whether or not a person is qualified for a position must be based on aspects other than sex or race, she emphasized. Dr. Mead is a famous advocate of Women's Liberation.

Another key speaker was Rep. Shirley Chisholm of Brooklyn, New York, also a Women's Libber. Although Mrs. Chisholm mentioned her feelings on women in responsible positions, Dean Heintz said, she spoke mainly on individual responsibility — the responsibility of citizens to become involved and assume an active part in politics.

National representatives of social sororities were present at the convention. Dr. Heintz and Dean Wilson met with the representatives of nine of the 11 sororities at Longwood. Dr. Heintz termed these meetings "very important."

Various meetings called "zoom-ins" were held at the convention, covering many aspects of education. Dr. Heintz said that she and Dean Wilson attended one called "Procedural Concerns in Discipline."

Here the speaker was Willis E. Schug, assistant dean of Columbia University Law School, who explained the legal aspects of college discipline.

Dr. Heintz felt this program would be particularly interesting in the light of recent discussion at Longwood concerning the Judicial Board.

One particularly interesting feature of the convention which Dean Heintz mentioned was known as "Convention Without Walls," which afforded the women the opportunity of going out into the New York City area and observing such things as a drug treatment center, an abortion center, and schools representing various types of curriculums.

"We heard from other members that these programs were very interesting," Dr. Heintz said.

She added that this was her first NAWDC convention, while Dean Wilson tries to attend every year. They are both looking forward to next year's convention in Cleveland, Ohio.

Thirteen Students Vying For "Miss Longwood 1972"

By PAM WATSON

Thirteen students will be vying for the title of "Miss Longwood 1972" this Saturday at 7:30 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium. The girls have been working since early March under the leadership of Cindy Bradley, chairman of the pageant, to present their version of "Faraway Places."

The students competing for the title are: Deborah Barger, Brenda Bradley, Mary Sue Clayton, Elise Fusco, Jane Hoen, Janet Howard, Jessica Jenks, Cindy Louderback, Amy Minter, Martha Saunders, D. A. Taylor, Tomi Thibodeaux, and Kathy Webb.

Each will be judged on a talent presentation, and swimsuit and evening gown competition during the pageant. The girls are also interviewed separately by the judges Saturday morning which follows with a luncheon for the contestants and judges later in the afternoon. Judges for the pageant are: Barbara Matchia, Tom Morrison, Wayne Roberts, Corson Spenser, and Fay Christiansen.

The emcee for the program is Lowell Hill, a Roanoke native who has worked with many of the state pageants in the past. Mr. Hill will be singing two numbers during the show, "Around The World" and "Faraway Places." Later in the show, the girls will present a sing and dance number, choreographed by Kathe Kutscher, entitled "I'd Like To Teach The World To Sing." Entertainment will be provided by The Sebastian Singers and The Downbeats from Douglas Freeman High School in Richmond.

Mr. Bruce Montgomery, Director of Music at the Campus School, is sponsor of the pageant and Kathy Moffitt and Debbie Hyatt are serving as Producer and Director. According to the judges of the preliminaries, the quality of the talent is excellent. Most of the girls are talented in more than one area. Cindy Bradley added that the girls are most "enthusiastic and cooperative" and the pageant should prove to be a most entertaining evening. Tickets for the show are $1.00 for students and $2.00 for non-students.

Glee Clubs Present Concert At United Methodist Church

The Farmville United Methodist Church was the scene of a joint concert by the Hampden-Sydney College Glee Club and the Glee Club of the University of North Carolina at Greensboro on Saturday, April 8, at 7:30 p.m., according to an announcement by the Reverend George W. Jones, church pastor. The combined group presented Brahms' "A German Requiem," Opus 45.

The presentation was one of four given by the glee clubs in North Carolina and Virginia this Spring. Two previous programs were sung in Greensboro and Winston-Salem, N. C. The final program was presented in Richmond's Church of the Holy Comforter on Sunday.

The 85 voices were under the direction of Dr. T. Edward Crawley of Hampden-Sydney and Dr. William McIver of Greensboro, and accompanists for the performance were Ann Peele and Roger Stanley. Solo selections were sung by soprano Lorraine Carpenter and baritone Wayne Lail.

For his text of "A German Requiem," Brahms did not choose to use the traditional liturgical sequence. The work shows that he was not nearly so concerned with intercessory prayers for the departed dead as he was for the comfort of the remaining living. His unorthodoxy brought early criticism, to which Brahms replied, "I am writing for humanity as a whole . . ."

Both glee clubs have traveled widely throughout the Eastern United States. Later this month, the Hampden-Sydney singers will depart for a six-engagement tour covering five states.

Few Minor Changes In Registration For Fall Classes

By LYNDIA VAN HORN

Registration for next fall's classes will be held April 25 with a few changes over the last registration.

Approximately 1,500 students will be registering on this date as all Block I student teachers will register on April 13. "It should go pretty fast," said Col. Raymond Gilchrist.

It was suggested in the open registration meeting held March 21 that the list of waitresses for next year be made more accurate so that only those who will actually be working will be allowed to register early.

This year due to the recent budget crisis, Mr. Gary Grone-weg in financial aid said that he will not be able to have an accurate list of these waitresses until May. Because of this, waitresses will not be able to register early but will register with their respective classes.

Early Registration

Those people registered as pre-professionals will be able to register early, however. It was decided at the open meeting that since these students, who are all those in the nursing program, are here only two years, they should be allowed to register ahead of their regular classes.

Rising seniors will be the first to register on April 25 and the terminating preprofessionals are scheduled to register next.

Students planning to change their majors or make major changes in their programs are urged to do so before registration.

The add-drop will last only the first week after registration and this is for those people who encounter significant problems during registration.

There will be no add-drop period after that until the first week of classes in the fall. In order to cut down on the number of schedule changes at this time, a fee of five dollars plus two dollars per change will be charged not to exceed $20.

The only changes made without charge at this time will include those who fail a course and must repeat it, those who receive a D or an F under a professor and are scheduled for a class under the same professor, those whose schedules are incorrect due to machine error, and those who must change due to a requirement change in their major departments.

Advisory System Coordinator

This year in order to help with the advisory procedures, each department has appointed an advisory systems coordinator. These people are assigned to educate prospective advisors as to advising procedures and generally to preside over advising over their majors.

Registration will be run on the quartile system again this semester. It will begin at 8 a.m. and runs as follows: (See adjoining chart) dances as they are performed in their native countries.

The movement produced by the dancers cannot be categorized as modern or contemporary because they follow no line of technique or established norms. When I asked Arthur Hall about his techniques, his reply was that each dancer has his own way of moving, so why try to stereotype the movements and have all of his dancers look identical. Other than the instruction of the actual native dances and how they are done, Hall does not teach movement. He expounds on the individuality of each dancer.

Arthur Hall's attempt at American style was not without praise, but it seemed anti-climatic in comparison to the energy and exuberance of the native dances. It is unfortunate that there could not have been a lecture to accompany each number because it was a lack of understanding that made "Mourners' Bench" a disappointment.

The entire program was on the whole well worth the evening spent in Jarman and will remain a memorable event.

Editor's Note:

Dean Wilson's office has had a number of complaints about animals in the dorms lately. She suggests that all students read the following poems.

AMHERST COLLEGE CONFRONTATION

When Alan D. Maissen, a sophomore, complained in an unusual way last July to Robert A. Ward, dean of students, he received a reply in kind and both communications were recorded by the Amherst Alumni News.

My Dear Dean Ward,

Let me invade
The quiet of your summer shade,
The warm aromas of the trees,
The pine, the spruce, the scented breeze,
The taste of julep on your lip
As from your ice-cooled glass you sip,
To bust the idyll of your rest
And bother you with a request.

I realize that I intrude,
I realize that I am rude,
But, but and courtesy aside,
From certain things one cannot hide
And my dilemma's of that kind.
It isn't Amherst that I mind,
Nor Coolidge, where I shall reside
When Usa's foot turns Autumn's tide.
You see, sir, in my new-found room
These lurks a harbinger of doom.

And just what might this monster be?
This Frankenstein, this Si Legee?
This fiend that terrifies us all?
It is a dog, sir, well to wall.

Oh, not an ugly thing, be sure . . .
But not exactly clean and pure.
The last inhabitants, you see,
Kept dogs. (No special pedigree.)
And with most indiscriminate taste
They let the beasts command the place.
That carpet, once so fresh and clear,
Now bears the puppets' souvenir.
A piled carpet may be fine fare,
But piled with what? One must beware.

So there is Coolidge 102
It lies, all curled through and through.
It pockers with the summer heat
And festers under workmen's feet.
Its stains, like acne, blot its face;
Its odor permeates the place.
And though we are a tolerant lot
My roommates and I just cannot Support that rug all through next term,
That key-hole plain of gust and germ!

So, in the name of all that's chaste,
Please have the bloody thing replaced.
Or, if the school cannot afford
(Even with rising room and board)
To throw it out and start anew,
Could not it spring us some shampoo?
I would not ask, but my Hygiene

Demands that I must vent my spleen,
So if you might put in a word
To B & C, our payers are heard.
But if we have to keep the mess,
I promise to join SDS.

Yours sincerely,
Alan D. Maissen '72

Dear Alan:

Thank you for your metered missive;
Regarding pets we're too permissive.
You letter moved us yet once more
To face a fact I'd fought before:
That now this job of college cleaning
Also covers rugs and cleaning.

I welcome your poetic protest
And see no need for force or contest.
Please note, my friend, from my reaction
That words, these days, do lead to action.
The doggerel that we exchange
Will bring removal of that mang.

I'll ask our faithful B & C
To check Room 102 and see
If they can cleanse all doggy waste
And bring that rug up to your taste.
I vow to you that by September
No trace of dog will you remember.

From your verse, all grim and pained,
I note one lesson you have gained:
You see the reason for a rule.
Which some have said is mean and cruel.
Still most will think "it in" and classy
For every led to keep a Lassie.

The dogs have barked, the cats meowed
To mock the baw, "No Pets Allowed."
Your generation loud has spoken:
What rules exist, they must be broken.
So don't blame us for the mess you know;
Just blame your peers and Doctor Spock.

In witness of your great devotion
I hereby give you this proposition:
Next year you can make the rounds
As Warden of the campus hounds.
And see what thanks your effort gets,
As Assistant Dean in charge of pets.

Cordially,
Robert A. Ward

Term Papers By Mail Order Are Increasing

Condensed From
THE CHRONICLE
(Duke University)

The concept of writing a term-paper is rapidly becoming a thing of the past. A recent outgrowth causing the obsolescence is the increasing number of term-paper services available to the student.

The largest of these services, Termpapers, Unlimited, operates on a national scale, employing a staff of professional writers who cater to college students from coast to coast. Any student who is assigned a term-paper need only mail in the specified data (topic, word length, etc.); he is promised a professionally-written document suited to his needs, and he gets it, for a price.

The founder and president of this particular organization is a twenty-five-year-old graduate of San Francisco State University named Don Stinnett. Stinnett recalls that in his senior year he had one course where the grade for the entire year was based solely on two termpapers. The monstrous size of the class and the impersonal nature of it all contributed to his feeling that if a university has no more to offer than a diploma, a student is justified in doing as little as possible.

Stinnett's theory on education is based on recognition. If the professor fails to recognize the student, then the education is not worth the effort. One of Stinnett's strongest defenses of the term-paper services places the responsibility on the professor, and not the student.

In the first year of business, he encountered financial troubles: The demand for the papers was high, but the money low. Students at state schools rarely have the financial resources of those in private institutions. Thus Stinnett has now moved his business to Washington, D. C. "I'm looking for the student with money in his pockets," says Stinnett.

Termpapers, Inc., has a team of twenty-four writers, all students at area universities. These were hand-picked by Stinnett, and are paid $2.25 for each page they write and the needy student pays $3.50 per page. A fifty profit, Stinnett stresses that there is "absolutely no possibility of duplication" in the papers coming out of his office. The writer produces one copy of the original paper he is assigned according to the classifications given by the student. There are no files of duplicates kept by the firm.

Board Of Visitors Approves Increase Of $100 In Fees

By LYNDA VAN HORN

An increase in fees of $100 has been approved by the Board of Visitors for next year due to the state cutback in Longwood and other schools' funds.

Along with the increase student fees came an announced reduction in expenditures of approximately $150,000.

The reduction in expenditures will result in no cut in the actual faculty salaries, but will involve a ten per cent cut in the operational budget of every academic and administrative department.

Also, further cuts will result in a decrease in the amount of telephone service, travel time allotted each faculty and staff member, and educational leaves for faculty members.

Student services affected most will probably be the laundry and infirmary. There will be no funds available for an on-campus psychiatrist next year, and the possibilities of eliminating more of the services offered by the infirmary are being looked into. Details concerning limiting the services of the laundry have not been decided upon and will be announced later this spring.

How the state cut in funds will affect financial aid has not as yet been fully determined. The amount of actual dollars will be approximately equal to last year's sum, but the demand for more financial aid due to the increase in fees will increase.

Dr. Henry L. Willett, Jr., is on a committee looking into the possibility of giving State Teachers' Scholarships only to juniors and seniors. Dr. Willett said he sees the need for such an action but thought a transition period should go into effect for next year.

This plan would allow those freshmen who received the scholarship this year to receive the scholarship next year as sophomores. No sophomore would be able to receive the scholarship for the first time, however.

Nothing has been decided on this matter yet but Dr. Willett said, "I feel we'll know something before school closing this year."

Two Surveys Show That The Job Outlook For June Graduates Is Better This Year

Reprinted From
ACP NEWS ROUND-UP

Although the job outlook for next June's college graduates is far from bright, two of three national surveys have found it is likely to be better than last year's. The third survey concluded that jobs would be as hard to find as in 1971 — and perhaps even harder.

In the largest of the surveys, the College Placement Council has found that 835 employers in business, industry, and government expect to hire five per cent more graduates this year than last. A comparable survey last year showed a 26 per cent decrease in jobs since 1970, making the job market in 1971 the worst in at least two decades.

The greatest gains this year, according to the placement council's figures, will be made by Ph.D. recipients, who will find job openings have increased by 30 per cent. Holders of bachelor's degrees will find nine per cent more openings, but those with master's degrees will find the number of jobs down five per cent.

Comparable developments have been indicated in a survey by Frank S. Endicott, placement director at Northwestern University. Reports from 160 large and medium-sized corporations show they expect to hire 11 per cent more men with bachelor's degrees but three per cent fewer men with master's degrees. For women graduates, an overall increase of about 15 per cent is anticipated by 88 companies, Mr. Endicott says.

Better Business Outlook

He also sees cause for optimism in estimates by 54 per cent of 185 companies that the general business outlook is better than in 1971. A year ago, Mr. Endicott notes, only 28 per cent of a similar group of companies predicted a better year.

The third survey, compiled by placement officers at Michigan State University, provides a different picture of the job market. It predicts that job opportunities will drop 1.8 per cent for recipients of bachelor's degrees; 12.4 per cent for recipients of master's; and 26.8 per cent for recipients of doctorates.

The survey, covering 346 employers in business, industry, and government, was conducted by John D. Shingleton, the placement director, and L. Patrick Scheetz, the assistant director. According to Mr. Scheetz, the survey, the first of its kind at Michigan State, demonstrates that the job market will be equal to last year's, or worse.

Despite the more positive findings in the two other surveys, those who conducted them are not all that encouraged. The College Placement Council, a federation of regional placement associations, cautions prospective graduates not to get their hopes up too much. It notes that even with the increases in expected job openings, the total is still far below the peak figures of several years ago. Overall, the gains are not nearly enough to make up for last year's depressed situation.

Mr. Endicott observes, meanwhile, that the figures reported cannot be "very precise" for something as fluid as the job market.

Less Recruiting At Colleges

All three surveys indicate that companies' recruiting at colleges and universities is down this year, but this is attributed in part to an increase in the number of job applicants. In Mr. Endicott's survey, for example, only 20 of 185 companies said they planned to contact more colleges than last year.

Contrary to some other reports, the surveys by both the placement council and Mr. Endicott show increases in expected job openings for engineering graduates. The placement council shows an increase of about 10 per cent, including a 61 per cent rise for Ph.D. recipients, while the Endicott survey shows an increase of almost five per cent at the bachelor's level and a drop of about eight per cent at the master's level.

Mr. Endicott's survey also shows that there will be very little improvement in the average starting salaries of college graduates.

What does "Missing in Action" mean in the middle of the night?

ANY woman can understand one side of the prisoner-of-war question very easily.

All she has to do is imagine for a moment how another woman feels as the night hours drag slowly on and she wonders.

Wonders where and how her husband is. Wonders whether he's alive or dead. Whether....

Any woman, any human being, can understand that there is a human side as well as a political side to the prisoner-of-war issue.

This message is concerned with the human side.

Of course, we all want the war to end and the prisoners to be released as soon as possible.

But meantime there is no need for Hanoi and its allies to delay even a day in answering this plea:

Open the prison camps in North Vietnam, South Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos to official neutral observers.

Through these neutral observers, tell the wives and families of American prisoners where they are and how they are.

Is that too much for a wife to ask? Is that too much for Hanoi to give? Is that too much for the conscience of the world to demand?

SUPPORT
TO HANOI AND ITS ALLIES:

Clear away the doubts—
Open your prison camps to

Legislative Board Passes New Room Assignment Procedure

By BECKY NICHOLSON

Legislative Board members passed the Residence Board proposal to change the procedure of room assignments at their meeting last week. According to the new procedure if roommates want to remain in their present room next year, they may sign up for it again. Those people that want to change rooms will draw numbers and go through the same procedure as last year.

This new method will not affect rising sophomores or those students in Stubbs, which is already filled for next year. Dean Nuckols and Terry Jones, Chairman of Residence Board, were present at the meeting to explain the new method and to answer questions from Legislative Board members.

The Legislative Board also agreed last week to donate ten dollars to aid in initiating their project concerning the Meherrin Day Care Center. The Board is trying to raise enough money to buy a swing set for the Meherrin Center. Cotton candy sales were scheduled for April 6, 13, and 20 in order to raise funds for this project.

Dating in motels was also discussed again. Previously, students could not stay overnight in hotels if they were within a 15-mile radius of Farmville. The Board abolished this handbook rule since the hotels have their individual policies, and they don't usually report students, anyway.

The Board talked about the possibility of a secondhand bookstore. Tim Brown said that the YWCA room would be available, but Board members are checking on the sales tax concerning this project.

The Board also announced that library hours will be extended during exams this year. Library officials said that it was only a matter of finding girls who would stay during the extra hours.

Students Eligible For Financial Aid Increases In Fall

By LYNDA VAN HORN
The Academic Policies Committee approved two changes in their meeting of April 6 concerning the academic affairs for next school year.

They approved a proposal made by the Committee on Scholarships and Financial Assistance. The proposal stated that any student not on academic probation would be eligible for financial assistance. This does not include the State Teacher's Scholarship or any program with a required grade point average.

Currently the requirement for financial assistance is a 2.0 cumulative average. "This has caused some complications with freshmen who are in good standing with the college at the end of the first semester if they have a 1.60 average at the end of the first semester and a 1.80 at the end of the second semester," said Dean Herbert Blackwell.

The Committee also approved a change in the number of hours a student can take when taking block classes. Some students are now taking 18 hours including one block course.

It was decided by the committee that this load was too heavy. Next year a student not student teaching who signs up for a three hour block course will only be able to take a total of 15 hours.

what he's doing. Term papers, Inc., is something which Stinnett believes in. According to the self-assured owner, it satisfies a need which exists exclusive of moral judgments, and it is definitely a money maker. When asked how he feels about cashing in on other people's weaknesses, Stinnett replies, "I can't tell anyone whether it's right or wrong. I just know what goes on. It's that simple."

New Program For Teacher Evaluation Developed By ETS

A new program that allows students to evaluate the performance of their teachers has been developed by Educational Testing Service (ETS).

Besides allowing students a chance to express their views anonymously about courses and teachers, it also gives instructors an objective way to monitor their own performance and progress.

Called the Student Instructional Report (SIR), the program is an effort to improve instruction based on responses to an ETS-designed questionnaire supplied to students by the colleges themselves.

The questionnaire was developed by ETS researchers with the aid of college faculty members and students. It is composed of questions about specific teaching practices and more general topics including such queries as:

- Did the instructor encourage students to think for themselves?
  - Were the course objectives made clear?
  - How much effort did students put into the course?
  - Were students informed of how they would be evaluated?
- The ETS questionnaire also includes questions about a student's reasons for taking the course and the grade he expects to receive. In addition, an instructor is free to include questions of his own to learn more about factors unique to his particular class. The questionnaire results are reported for each class as a group, not for individual students.

Student evaluation of teachers is not a new concept. The procedure has been used for some time at various institutions, but ETS says SIR should provide an instructor with information to compare his performance with others in his discipline on a national scale. The program is available to institutions throughout the United States and Canada.

More information about SIR may be obtained by contacting: Institutional Research Program for Higher Education, Educational Testing Service, Princeton, New Jersey 08540.

Initiated by ETS in 1965, the Institutional Research Program provides colleges and universities with a variety of methods to use in evaluation and self-study programs.

Elegance In Gowns, Fun In Casual

Clothes Shown In Fashions

By PAM WATSON

Elegance remained the theme, from the casual pantsuits to the sophisticated wedding gowns, throughout the Bridal Fashion Show held Thursday night, March 23 in Jarman Auditorium. The show was sponsored by the Student Union in cooperation with Miller and Rhoads in Richmond who furnished the outfits for the seventy piece show. Longwood students who modeled included: Cindy Bradley, Kathy Boatwright, Dragon Chandler, Sandy Cordle, Charlotte Fugett, Janet Howard, and Debbie Hyatt. Also modeling were Paula Loh, Becky Moreland, Dana Newcomb, Sarah Smithy, Susan Smithy, Mrs. Mary Murphy, and Mrs. Mary Willett. Popular medleys as well as wedding music was provided by Mary Sue Clayton on theorgan and quickly set the mood for the variety of outfits.

Fashions included sports attire, going-away outfits, lingerie, bridesmaid and mother-of-the-bride dresses, and wedding gowns. Romantic, old-fashioned styles are most popular this spring. The newest trend in wedding dresses is the old-fashioned Victorian style complete with a high neck, tightly fitted bodice, straight skirt, and accented with a large wide-brimmed hat. When compared to the more traditional gowns in the show, this style was most feminine and flattering for the young college-aged girl. The latest in casual tops as well as formal wear is the no-back halter top. The fashions chosen were most appropriate for the young set and the show proved to be most enjoyable.

Radio Station At H-SC Nears Completion

By JOHN D. GUTHRIE
Hampden-Sydney Correspondent
The Hampden-Sydney community will soon have its first radio station. Present hopes are that the station WHSV will begin transmitting at 91.7 megahertz on the FM dial in September.

The construction of the studio by students on the third floor of Winston Hall on campus has been completed except for the installation of equipment. As soon as the students receive the license to operate this noncommercial education radio station from the Federal Communications Commission in Washington, the equipment will be installed and the station will start broadcasting.

In an interview with the Chairman of Board of Directors of the radio station concerning the broadcasting range of the station, Fletcher Fosque said, "Because of the installation of a Stereo Modulator and the surrounding terrain it is doubtful if our signal will reach Longwood consistently. He continued in saying, "We are hoping to overcome this problem in the future with more power or a higher antenna."

Fletcher Fosque also said that he encouraged Longwood students who were interested in any aspect of radio broadcasting to contact one of the following members of the board of directors in their respective fields: Pat Crawford—General Manager 223-8248; Tom Lumpkin—Public Relations and News 223-8248; Kipper Nottingham—Business Manager 223-8405; Skip Ravenhorst—Programming 223-8192; Fletcher Fosque—Chairman and Engineering 223-4494.

The Richmond Chapter of the Longwood College Alumnae Association will sponsor the movie "Nicholas and Alexandra" to be presented May 4 at the Westhampton Theater in Richmond.

The proceeds will go toward a scholarship to be given to a student to attend Longwood.

Dr. Henry Willett and Mr. George Bristol will attend and anyone interested should contact Mrs. Julie Moseley at 272-3640, or Mrs. Shirley Patten at 288-5710.

The price for tickets is $3.50 and Dr. Willett urges all students from Richmond, Henrico, and Chesterfield to contact their parents about the movie.

that it is very hard to decide when a painting is finished.

One of his problems recently is that his paintings are getting more like drawings and vice versa. This is awkward because in competition Mr. Jackson is required to label his work. In fact, once he won a prize in drawing for one of his paintings.

When asked if he used models, Mr. Jackson replied that models limited him. He uses composites of people he has known as faces in his paintings.

Several of his works which the audience viewed on slides included "Dust Beach," "Homage To The Nose," and his "Veronica's Veil Series." Mr. Jackson is very interested in light and shadows in his works, and he often hides the eyes in his painting which give them a mysterious effect. He also enjoys the challenge of capturing the strength and sensitivity in the head of Christ. In all of his paintings a single stroke can ruin it or make it a success. Mr. Jackson believes that this is intuitive, but that it can be developed over a period of time.

Performers Discuss Their Music

most of his own music and is very turned on by the fact that people will come to listen to him.

When asked why he thought single performers like Cat Stevens, John Denver, James Taylor and himself are enjoying great popularity right now, he had a quick answer. "People are listening more. They're listening to the words and realizing they'd rather see the tunes performed by the guy who wrote them," he said.

We talked a little about the audience and I asked Jon if he minded people yelling at him during the performance. He smirked and said this group had been a lot tamer than some he had been in front of. He added that people may as well act like that and enjoy the concert. If people are going to detach themselves from the music and mood of the concert, he feels they might as well stay home.

Future Plans

From Longwood, Edwards was to go to New York for a concert at Lincoln Center and one at New York City College. He plans another album for late spring, tentatively titled "Honky Tonk Stardust Cowboy." The final question was if Jon played concerts at many girls' schools. He cut his eyes at Stu and said with a grin, "That's all I'm doing from now on."

New Duo

"I was surprised at the audience. They were ready to go when we walked out. They really made the concert."

I had run into Miller and Burton after leaving Jonathan Edwards and was talking to Burton. (Miller is the lead singer with the non-electric guitar.) He told me that the duo had known each other for some time and played in three groups together. About six months ago, they evolved into their present act.

Their Music

They describe their music as varying from folk rock to country. Like Jonathan Edwards, they have developed a strong dislike for electric music and feel the meaning of the song is more important than making a lot of noise. Burton listed Gordon Lightfoot, Neil Young, and Cat Stevens as having the greatest influence on their music.

Several students had mentioned that the duo had done several of the same songs that Gove had performed in his concert here. Miller was excited that Longwood had had a chance to hear him. He said they knew Gove and liked to perform his songs.

After leaving Longwood, Miller and Burton were headed back to Atlanta, Georgia, where they are based. They hope to get a recording contract, but said they realize they have to get more people talking about them before that happens.

How many children should a couple have?

Photos by Menken/Seltzer

Three? Two? One? None? There's no right answer.

It depends on how many children they really want.

How many children they feel they're ready for—emotionally, and not just financially.

And when they feel they're ready for them.

(It could depend too on their concern for the effect population growth can have on society.)

The important thing is that the question of how many children is asked.

Because asking leads to thinking.

And thinking leads to planning.

And planning leads to us.

LONGWOOD COLLEGE, FARMVILLE, VIRGINIA WEDNESDAY, APRIL 19, 1972

NO. 21

Q - What procedure does Geist use for choosing new members? I heard there was a lot of arguing and disagreement over who should be tapped this time. A. G.

A - Dean Wells, who sponsors Geist, provided us with the following answer:

In addition to meeting the minimum grade point average of 2.8, candidates for Geist membership must have demonstrated leadership and/or service to Longwood College. Members make every effort to evaluate the quality of the candidate's contributions to the College.

There was absolutely no fighting over either procedure or nominees during the deliberations. Petty bickering of this nature is not productive, and therefore has no role in the process of choosing new Geist members. We did have one mixup in meeting time which caused a mild flurry, but it was quickly resolved. In order to authenticate these statements I might add that I attended every meeting, and would certainly have known about any exchange of blows.

Q - What is being done about the bicycles that have been taken from Lankford? S. C.

A - Tim Brown, Director of Student Activities, gave us this answer:

The bicycles which used to be stored in Lankford, adjacent to the office of the recreation managers, were under the control of the Athletic Association. This group became concerned about the fact that bicycles were checked out but never returned for the use of other students. During one 30 day period, for example, there were only two bicycles out of 18 which were returned to Lankford. Thus, there were not enough bicycles available for students to take out. The Athletic Association tried several methods of controlling this problem. Bicycles were collected from around the campus several times and returned to Lankford, but the problem persisted. Finally, it was suggested that a checkout system be instituted with the bicycles chained together in Lankford. The recreation manager on duty was to dispense bicycles as students presented them with ID cards. I rejected this system because the recreational managers would not be available when students wanted to use the bicycles due to their other duties. Finally,

Geist Taps Seniors, Juniors As Members

By DEBBIE BASTEK

"Geist is pleased and thrilled to have all of you here tonight." So opened the spring induction ceremony of Geist, whose purpose it is to "recognize and encourage leadership, promote college loyalty, preserve ideals and traditions of the college, and to foster high ideals of service and scholarship."

The sixteen new inductees honored Wednesday night were Joyce Saunders, Susan Lewis, Cindy Bradley, Brenda Griffin, Donna Edwards, Lynda Van Horn and Janet Howard.

Also tapped were Diane Derrick, Bonnie Drewery, Mary Tabb Johnston, Verona Leake, Gail Gossage, Fran Moran, Kathy Bozard, Mary Ann Bentley and Debbie Gilbert.

The ceremony began with the entrance of the Geist members and proceeded to the presentation of a plaque by Mrs. Adelaide Edwards from the local Red Cross to recognize Longwood's contribution to the bloodmobile. After accepting the award, Dean Wells then introduced Mrs. Caroline Roberts, who, besides possessing a long list of activities from her stay at Longwood, is also a member of the Board of Visitors.

Mrs. Roberts, a 1942 graduate of Longwood, has been associated with the college since childhood when her father was a biology teacher here. As a student at Longwood she was an active member of the Student Government, the Virginian staff, the YWCA, the Athletic Association, the Granddaughters Club, Alpha Sigma Alpha sorority, a member of Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities, and Alpha Kappa Gamma, the forerunner of Geist. She returned to Longwood for a short time after her graduation as Assistant Dean of Women, and was later one of the three original members of the Board of Visitors. On Founder's Day in March she was honored by the Alumni Association as a distinguished alumni.

"New Feminism"

After the introduction by Dean Wells, Mrs. Roberts quipped that everything about her had been covered "except that I found my husband right here in Farmville." She went on to deliver an address far more relevant and interesting than most speeches given at any assembly - "I want to talk to you about the subject of the American woman today." Citing facts from a recent issue of TIME magazine as to the role and position of women in today's society, Mrs. Roberts explained "the new feminism" as she saw it, and as it pertained to women today - "Another new woman has emerged, and she is very much a creation of her own." She closed with, "Work toward those goals which you have set for yourself."

New Members

The members of Geist then tapped the following students as new members:

Mary Ann Bentley is a Senior Art major and the former art editor and cartoonist for The Rotunda. She is a student assistant for the art department and does much of the photography work for groups connected with the college.

Kathy Bozard is a Junior and a member of Sigma Kappa sorority. Her activities include the Newman Club, Kappa Delta Pi, Colleagues and various class and college committees. Kathy served as the Head Student Assistant last fall.

Cindy Bradley is a member of Alpha Gamma Delta fraternity and Lychnos Society. She has played varsity basketball and hockey, is past treasurer of the Student Government, and has served on various class and college committees. Cindy, who is a Junior, was the Chairman of the 1972 Miss Longwood Pageant.

Junior Diane Derrick is president of Delta Psi Kappa and has played varsity hockey, LaCrosse and is on the varsity gymnastics team. She was president of her sophomore class, a Colleague, May Court representative, Student Assistant and is presently a member of the PeaPickers.

Bonnie Drewery is a resident counselor in South Cunningham and a member of the Junior Class. She is now the president of the Granddaughters' Club, a member of Lychnos and is past secretary of the Wesley Foundation.

Donna Edwards is a Senior who has served on the Honors and Handbook Committees, and was an Orientation leader. Donna was the president of Alpha Lambda Delta her Freshman year, and is now a member of Kappa Delta Pi.

Debbie Gilbert participates in the American Guild of Organists, the Concert Choir, Phi Beta Lambda and is a member of Alpha Phi sorority. Debbie, a Junior, has served on the Executive Council of the Baptist Student Union and has been the business manager of the Virginian for the last two years.

AMY MINTER, MISS LONGWOOD 1972

Minter Reigns As New Miss LC, Receives Most Talented Award

By PAM WATSON

As a full house of admirers looked on, Amy Minter was crowned Miss Longwood 1972, last Saturday in Jarman.

Under a United Nations symbol and flags from foreign countries adding to the "Far Away Places" theme, Amy was selected from among 13 contestants.

Those competing for the title were: Mary Sue Clayton, Cindy Louderback, Martha Saunders, Tomi Thibodeaux, Jessica Jenks, Cathy Webb, Elice Flusco, Brenda Bradley, Debra Barger, Amy Minter, Jane Hoen, Janet Howard, and Doris Anne Taylor.

The program opened with Mr. Lowell Hill, emcee for the night, singing "Around the World in 80 Days." The contestants were then presented with a short introduction while modeling street clothes.

The girls were judged on three main areas of competition. In addition to an individual talent presentation and the modeling of one-piece swimsuits and evening

A Curfew Change Is Coming?

The feature story on page 4, concerning the question of curfews, mentions that Residence Board is considering presenting a proposal to Legislative Board which will abolish curfews on Friday and Saturday nights. If the proposal passes Student Government, it will be sent to the Board of Visitors, hopefully at its May meeting.

The action is based on the information obtained from the recent Residence Board questionnaire and the speed with which the board is acting to represent the students' wishes is impressive. Frankly though, this is a move that should have been made long ago.

We have been told many times that the college is trying to move away from the concept of in loco parentis, which translates roughly as "in the place of parents." Yet, rules, such as curfew and others involving personal control, have been maintained in an even stricter fashion than most of us face at home. The college has in effect been telling us that we are not capable of governing our social lives. There seems to me to be several reasons why the college should cut the ties that our parents dropped when we left home.

Curfew isn't really getting us into the dorms at night or keeping us there. There are numerous ways that a girl can use to avoid this restriction, including signing out without going away, going out of locked doors after curfew and having a friend let her in by one of these doors.

In THE ROTUNDA for the last couple of weeks, I've printed letters concerning disagreements between officials and students over how dates should be treated in those last five minutes before curfew. Many girls have decided that since they are given 15 minutes, they can use them any way they want to instead of just for lateness. Dropping the curfew would seem to be the logical way to end the tension that seems to be developing between head residents and students.

The real "fly in the ointment," to use an old-fashioned term, is what parents, the administration and the Board of Visitors will probably term the moral side of the issue. Somehow, by requiring students to be in at a set time, they seem to think they are protecting our "virtue." Students understand the fact that anything that is "illegal" or "immoral" can be done just as easily before 2 a.m. as afterward; therefore, I can't believe this has escaped the comprehension of the people who support the rule. This argument carries little weight when held up to reality.

Longwood will not be the first college to demonstrate a progressive policy in regard to curfews, but I hope it won't be the last. It seems ridiculous that we have to do it hour-by-hour, day-by-day, but I suppose we should be happy for whatever we get.

Letters to the Editor

Dorm Incident

Dear Editor,

I would like to offer a few comments to the students concerning the recent article written in protest of several incidents which occurred in Frazer dormitory. The individual who wrote the letter cited these incidents without having been a witness to them and without having investigated them fully. In my opinion the individual has also slandered a person in a very unethical manner without due respect for her position. In this particular case I think the individual who wrote the letter should have shown more responsibility by at least checking with all the witnesses before making a public accusation.

The author of the letter indirectly and falsely accused a particular individual of "physically propelling" a late guest into the dorm. I was working in the Frazer office the night the incident occurred. The girl who was late was obviously upset about being late and afraid that she had caused a lot of trouble for her sister. I went to great lengths to reassure her that being only four minutes late was only a minor violation with no serious repercussions. Also, after reviewing the whole incident we found that it would have been almost impossible for the "assistant warden" to "physically propel" the late guest into the dorm. Is it possible that in the young lady's distraught condition she exaggerated what actually happened?

In the case where an individual was given a warning for failure to sign out properly it is obvious to see that without the expected date of return on the outside of her card we would have no way of knowing when she was supposed to be back and when to declare her missing.

The point is that all of our dormitory procedures, including signing in and out and counting late minutes are dictated by rules which have been made by the residence board. If a student thinks that the rules are petty, inhuman or ridiculous she should express these ideas to the residence board, not criticize those whose responsibility it is to enforce them. I would suggest that because these rules are student rules that they either be changed to suit all the students or be enforced by the students — not the head and assistant head residents.

Fire Drill

Dear Editor,

This letter is in reference to a fire drill for Stubbs Dorm on Thursday night at approximately 12:15 a.m. Is this not just a bit ridiculous? I understand the importance of the element of surprise for fire drills, but the one last Thursday was the second drill this semester after midnight held in Stubbs.

As an upperclassman, I feel that I know the procedures for fire drills and can't see how those after curfew accomplish any sharpening of my fire drill "reflexes." More, they are a source of amusement for dates leaving the building. Perhaps one drill after midnight is feasible in that it would include all residents, but two verges on stupidity. What's the use?

I don't enjoy being roused from bed, going out in the cold, rainy weather only to be rehearsed into the building 15 minutes later. Having my heart in my throat at the sound of that alarm is not my idea of rest.

Cheating: Two girls were found innocent of the charge of cheating.

Stealing: Three girls were found guilty of stealing from the dining hall and were placed on special probation.

Falsification of Records: Two girls were found guilty of the charge of falsification of records and were placed on special probation.

CATALYST

it was decided that no system would be very workable, and the AA was authorized to sell the bicycles to students at auction for a minimum price of $10.00.

Q - Why do they charge guests in the dining hall $1.10 per meal when it costs less than 42¢ per meal for us? B. R.

A - Mr. Carbone gave us the following answer:

Students' fees are based on a percentage of participation in meals. The average student does not eat 21 meals a week in the dining hall; therefore, each meal they eat is at a cost considerably higher than 42¢. A guest coming in the dining hall is paying for the meal and not the percentage.

As reported in The Rotunda some time last year, if student fees were based on allowing students to pay for each individual meal, the cost would be much higher. It could go as high as $1.05 to $1.25.

Academy Awards Becomes Mind-Boggling Experience For Viewers

By ROBERT H. SELLS
Hampden-Sydney Correspondent

The American language had another bad night last Monday. The 44th Annual Presentation of the Academy Awards lasted for some 2 1/2 hours and lexiconographers and old maid English teachers everywhere went to bed with heartburn and dyspepsia and a feeling of having failed disastrously.

"Boy, ain't that purdy," began one Texan's acceptance speech, and we were reminded of Dorothy Parker, the American poetess, who said: "You know, the sublimest thoughts in the English language can be reduced to utter idiocy by pronouncing them with a Southern accent."

"I'd like to mention some people that has made this all possible," the Texan drawled, and Daniel Webster grew restless in his grave.

The entire show was a rather mind-boggling experience, resplendent with curious juxtapositions (Joe Namath and Tennessee Williams both announced winners and Henry Mancini and Isaac Hayes both played the piano - "odd couples"), stunningly attractive actresses, a strange assortment of dialects, gaudy gowns, corny jokes in abundance, ("Love means never having to say you're Sicilian"), and faulty cue cards.

The cue cards caused an abnormal amount of trouble and perhaps they account for Red Butler's pronunciation of "Andromeda Strain" with a primary accent on "An." But, then, on second thought, maybe the cue cards were not responsible for this particular goof.

Tennessee Williams found it necessary to read the cue cards with one pair of glasses and the names of the winners with another pair of glasses.

The majority of those who gave acceptance speeches showed symptoms of the "What can I say?" syndrome. A typical case comes to mind. She beamed a 500 watt smile and blurted emotionally, "What can I say?" it could not possibly have been a serious question because she immediately began talking, and she talked, and she talked, for at least 5 minutes. She thanked the Academy for so honoring her, she thanked her mother, she thanked her father, she thanked her first piano teacher, she thanked those who had applauded so generously, and then miracle of miracles, she quit talking and left the stage, still asking innocently, "What can I say?"

Of course, Jane Fonda was the star of the show. Not merely because she was given the Best Actress Oscar for her superlative role in "Klute," but because she did not indulge in the verbiage that was rampant. She was very composed and dignified and serious when she gave her acceptance speech. She said, "There's a great deal to say, but I'm not going to say it tonight. I would just like to really thank you very much." George C. Scott would have been proud of her.

Longwood Dancers To Present Student's Original Choreography

By JANET LYNN TENNYSON

The Longwood College Company of Dancers will present an evening of choreography set to music tomorrow, April 20. The program will take place in Jarman Auditorium at 8:15 p.m.

"I am very pleased with the quality of work," said Miss Sandra Gustafson, who is the director of group, "and I feel it is a worthwhile concert."

There are four original dances on the agenda, including three selections which were composed by Longwood students. "Mind Sacrifice" is the title of one dance choreographed by Jo Smith. The essence of the dance is the truth about drugs. The interpreters of the dance are Linda Finkel, Mary Lou Glasheen, Suzanne Painter, Jo Smith and Lynn Wilson.

Another selection entitled "Galaxy" was composed by Karen Moot. It is an imaginative treatment of the earth and the stars with "The Three Fates", by Emerson, Lake and Palmer, as background music. The dancers for it are Dea Alexander, Cathy Ballowe, Nancy Frank, Betty Ann Glasheen and Karen Moot.

Jeffrey Hudson's work is the third dance, named "Cry Help". It is a modern ballet with racial overtones. Louise Crews, Vicki Hileman, Jeffrey Hudson, Martha Knoop, Nan Pace and Tomi Thibideaux are the dancers. The underlying music is "Ashes, the Rain and I", by the James Gang.

The final presentation is an original and long dance drama composed by Miss Gustafson. "It is an experiment in mixing different media," noted Miss Gustafson, "there is a speaking part, and lighting effects along with the dance".

The premise for this selection, entitled "Rural Route", is an old farmer talking about his life. This farmer is played by Rick Vaughn, a graduate of Hampden-Sydney College, and his dialogue and dreams motivate the dances.

The dancing during the farmer's dreams is done by Larry Smith, a Hampden-Sydney College senior, as the farmer and Nan Pace as the young wife. Representing the spirit of freedom are Sally Carson, Nancy Frank and Karen Moot.

The changes of the earth during the farmer's life are danced by Dea Dea Alexander, Sandra Bugg, Judith Church, Mary Lou Glasheen and Suzanne Painter. Jeffrey Hudson, Martha Knoop, Jo Smith and Tomi Thibideaux represent the four elements which are earth, air, fire and water.

This production is the first presented since the dance group changed the name from Orchestra to the Longwood College Company of Dancers. "We wanted to change the name so to identify with the college as a quality group," said Miss Gustafson.

The modern dance group's president is Jo Smith, the secretary-treasurer is Dea Dea Alexander, the publicity chairman is Mary Lou Glasheen and the wardrobe mistress is Jeffree Hudson. The organization tries to promote understanding of creative dance among students.

The culmination of the company's efforts is the evening of dance to be presented tomorrow night. There is no admission charge.

The Ruten Galleries sponsored a sale of art prints in Bedford last week.

LC's German Assistant And Sister Perform Songs And Instrumentals

By VALERIE BLANKS

Anne and Greipel, who is the German Assistant of the Foreign Language Department, and her sister, Eva-Maria, performed German songs and instrumental pieces in the Gold Room Tuesday night.

The first part of the program consisted of a concerto for the violin, played by Eva, and several other pieces, with Anne accompanying her sister on the piano.

Following the instrumental selections, Anne sang some German songs, while Deborah Arvin accompanied her on the piano. These pieces were composed by composers Schumann, Schubert, and Brahms.

Anne then performed a piano solo, "Valse Romantique," by Claude Debussy. To round out her performance, she sang "I Could Have Danced All Night" from the musical, MY FAIR LADY, in German.

Both girls have studied music since they were children and plan to pursue careers in music, as well as teaching. They will take part in a nine year program at the music university, Music-Hochschule-Detmold, in northwestern Germany. Eva, who has been visiting her sister for six weeks, has already started this program. Anne, who took a year out to act as German Assistant here at Longwood, will begin when she returns to Germany this year.

No Curfew At Longwood?

By VICKI BOWLING

Whether or not to curb a student's freedom has become a popular concern of colleges and universities not only in Virginia, but all over the country. More and more schools are abolishing curfew, and others are modifying it.

The current stand seems to be that a school should not have the right to place restrictive hours on a student. In all probability, the student has no set curfew at home, and in many cases he is over 21. Furthermore, most students feel that if they are old enough to leave home, they are old enough to say how long they should stay out.

Longwood Policy

Longwood has not been left behind in this quest for change. In a recent survey conducted by the Residence Board, Longwood Ladies revealed that they, too, would like to see some changes made in the present curfew policy.

Although the poll included 10% of the student body randomly selected, only 167 students returned their questionnaires. Of this 167, 30 said that they were not satisfied with the present curfew system, and 124 voted in favor of no curfew on Friday and Saturday, while only 84 supported no curfew on Sunday.

Residence Board Reaction

Most girls will complain about things they want changed," said Denise Morris, vice-chairman of Residence Board, "but here we have concrete evidence."

The suggestion that a change in curfew be made came from Legislative Board, which then turned the matter over to Residence Board to look into.

Terry Jones, chairman of Residence Board, said that they hope to have some definite suggestions about a change in curfew in approximately one month.

When asked if the students would have a chance to say anything more about the subject, Terry said, "Probably not. We know how the students feel, mostly, and we know what we have to do."

"It may not be as much as they want at first," she added.

No Curfew

Right now, the Board is considering only the abolishment of curfew on Friday and Saturday nights. The week night curfew would remain at 12 midnight, and that on Sunday night would still be 12:30 p.m.

Last year a change was made regarding the curfew for week nights, and Terry said that as far as she knew there had been no repercussions from it. The only difficulty involved, she said, was getting the time that was asked for. The change originally requested involved 12:30, but was trimmed to and passed at 12 midnight.

Residence Board is presently investigating two systems of girls getting into the dorms should there be no curfew. Money seems to be the major limitation in the number of paths open.

Alternatives

One system would involve a student going by the campus police office and signing out for a key to her dorm. When she had let herself in the dorm, she would place the key in a box provided for that purpose and call the campus police that she was in. She would be allowed approximately five minutes for this.

The second system would entail having the campus police patrol the areas around the dorms every 10-15 minutes. A student would have a schedule of when the police would be by, and she would wait outside the dorm until they came.

Right now the Board is leaning towards the first system, Terry said. No provision for a sign-out procedure has been discussed yet.

So far Dr. Willett has not voiced an opinion on a change in curfew.

"He knows that we are working on it," Terry said. "I think he is more or less waiting to see what kind of system we come up with."

The Board of Visitors, which will meet in May, will have the final voice in the matter.

"I think we have a good chance," offered Terry.

Co-Ed Policies

Other institutions in the state have already passed changes in their curfews.

At William and Mary, a no curfew policy will go into effect next year, and Student Government president Andy Purdy thinks that the students are behind the change 100%.

"We were seeking self-determination in entering and leaving the dorms," he said.

The secretary of Student Government explained that the change came about when a member of the American Civil Liberties Union threatened to take the College to court on a sex discrimination charge! It seems that men were not bound by a curfew, but women were.

To maintain security in the dorms and still allow students to come and go as they please, an electronic card system was decided on. This involves a student sliding a card into a door, with the card acting as a key.

Prudy said that this system will eventually save the school money.

Fred George, vice-president of the Civilian Dorm Council at VPI, said that while there is a curfew for women now, there will be no restriction next year.

"It interfered with the moral code of the students," he said.

He explained that they had been working on a curfew change for three or four years, and that this year the administration was rather receptive to the idea.

"It is just about a dead subject now," he summarized.

Radford Policies

The students at Radford College seem confident that the Board of Visitors will pass their bill abolishing curfew, according to Harriet Greene, vice-president of Student Government.

"We need a boost in student morale," she explained.

The Radford curfew system is currently the same as Longwood's. Harriet said that a system for locking up has not been decided on, and that money is the biggest problem.

The proposed abolishment of curfew has gone to the College Senate, she said, and from there will go to the Board of Visitors.

Proper Steps Taken

Students appear to be taking the proper steps and are going through channels to achieve the changes they want. They are firm in their belief that it is not the role of the school to decide what time they shall come in at night. They feel that the majority of students are young adults who can assume responsibility for their actions, be it after noon or after midnight.

Longwood, too, is trying to keep up with the times. The students have shown that they overwhelmingly favor a change in curfew and will try to arrive at it through the proper means. Longwood, too, wants to progress. It remains to be seen if it will.

Faculty Promotion Criticism

CHARLOTTESVILLE — A decision not to grant tenure to three members of the University of Virginia English faculty has brought criticism of the department's promotion policy, and charges that the department is more concerned about its national ranking than good teaching. Promotion in the department is based on an evaluation of an instructor's or professor's teaching a review of his writing—both published and unpublished—by the senior faculty members.

When the decision not to promote three professors was announced, there was considerable criticism by the students and from within the English department. Some students have accused the department of following the "publish or perish" practice in making promotions and of emphasizing scholarship at the expense of teaching.

Program Gaining Acceptance

RICHMOND — A program whereby a student entering a college or university and passing a standardized examination can receive academic credit for the knowledge he has acquired in or out of the classroom is gaining increased acceptance at institutions around the state. The program is already in use at the state's community colleges, Virginia Commonwealth University, University of Richmond, and Randolph-Macon Woman's College. Nationally, it is in use at about 1,000 institutions. The program was begun in 1965 "to serve not the traditional student who moves from secondary school to college, but the nontraditional student who has acquired knowledge through correspondence and university extension course, educational TV, adult education programs, on-the-job training and independent study."

Students Prosecuted

RADFORD — The Board of Directors of the Retail Merchants Association of Radford has recently passed that all Radford students caught shoplifting will now be prosecuted. A conviction becomes a matter of public record and precludes entrance to many jobs. Prices have become increasingly high because of the amount of money they lost from shoplifting and Radford has found it necessary to prosecute.

Three-Year Colleges

(CPS) — Although many gifted and hard working students have long been able to graduate from their undergraduate college careers in less than four years, efforts are now being made nationwide to shorten the average time a student spends in college. Several hundred schools already offer students ways to finish in less than four years, usually by taking summer courses and by "testing out" of courses for credit. During the past year several dozen schools have begun experimenting with a more radical alternative: redesigning the basic curriculum so that it lasts three years instead of four. College administrators cite two main reasons for going to three-year programs. Students coming from high school are better prepared for college than in the past, and by eliminating a year, both the college and the student save money.

By JANET LYNN TENNYSON
"Triality" means union of three and in this case, it is three guys who seriously are engaged in producing music. The group consists of Ron Anderson, Gordon Johnson and Cecil Hooker, and as I approached them for an interview, I found all three engaged in doodling on the blackboard.

"We term our music as adult rock and we are quite serious about it," said Gordon. This adult rock had every foot tapping along as two guitars and a violin competed with voices in Cat Stevens and Neil Young-style songs. Ron, who is a graduate of Virginia Commonwealth University with a major in drama, and Gordon, who is a freshman music major at VCU, sang and strummed steel-stringed guitars as Cecil, a junior psychology major at U. Va., played the violin. Cecil, formerly was a member of the Richmond Symphony Orchestra of Richmond, Va.

The group, which has been together about six months, visited Farmville to participate in the Wesley Foundation's Cactus Inn, a coffee house. The audience sang, clapped hands and danced in their seats as "Triality" performed and they burst into applause at the close of each song.

Another highlight of the evening had Mr. Ed Smith, a psychology teacher at Longwood and a black belt in karate, explaining and demonstrating the art of karate. "It is the art of empty hand fighting and it is primarily an art form," said Mr. Smith, "it is both a mental and a physical discipline." Mr. Smith performed several katas, which are movements against an imaginary attacker, and he used both his hands and two weapons in the demonstration. "I have never had to use it for defending myself", noted Mr. Smith, but he knows he has the power of the art if he ever does have to use it.

"Art and Andrea" composed another singing duo, that performed primarily Gordon Lightfoot-type songs. Art Lipcomb is a freshman commercial art major at VCU and Andrea Turner is a special education major and a junior at VCU. The two are from Lexington and have been singing together since before they became engaged, two weeks ago.

Longwood Defeated Roanoke, Madison And Sweet Briar In Golf

By SHARON CURLING

Last Friday, the Longwood Golf team traveled to Roanoke to compete against Roanoke College and Madison. Longwood soundly defeated them with a score of eight, while Madison and Roanoke both had two.

The girls playing in the tournament were Louise Moss, Ann Santore, Becky Bailey, and Penny Stallins. In this tournament each school played a separate match with the other schools.

After the tournament, Dr. Barbara Smith, faculty sponsor, commented on their victory and said, "I am well pleased with the way each of you is playing. You are all improving with each tournament."

The first tournament of the season was played on April 16 at Longwood's course. Although the match got off to a slow start, Longwood defeated the opposing team, Sweet Briar, by a score of 12-0. Those girls playing in the tournament were Penny Stallins, Becky Bailey and Ann Santore. Other members of the team include Louise Moss, Peggy Lynch, Carl Keene, Barbara Cridlin, Gail Gossage, Lisa Dixon and Susan Bonifant.

They used a steel-stringed guitar matched with the softness of nylon strings to create dissonance as they performed.

Longwood talent was also represented in single and group performers. Vicki Webster, a sophomore English major, played and sang several popular songs. Vicki also joined Marie Wiemer for some audience participation songs. Ty Campbell, associate pastor from the Farmville Baptist Church, came on stage to promote the singing.

One group from the campus, represented the Christian Fellowship and sang largely all songs with religious meaning. They included Petie Corell, a sophomore planning to go into special education, Marty Bowe, a freshman music education major, Brenda Griffin, who is a junior English, speech and drama major, and Nancy Staple, a freshman elementary major. Hope Vaughn, a junior English major also sang and accompanied the group on a sometimes out-of-tune-ukulele, named Edgar.

The whole affair was slow-paced and casual as a coffee should be. Ed Koffenberg, a senior at Hampden-Sydney College majoring in psychology, was master of ceremonies. Brenda Gibbons and Janice Jones were talent coordinators for the program.

As one student put it, "At last Longwood had something besides a program of high schoolish talent for college kids."

Field Day Events Include Pie Eating, Tug-Of-War

By SHARON CURLING
Field Day, sponsored by the Athletic Association, is scheduled for next Tuesday from 2:00-5:00 p.m.

According to Diane Amme, planning chairman, the events to participate in are a tug-of-war, football game, pie eating contest and bike rodeo. Participation in the pie eating contest and bike rodeo will be on an individual basis, while the tug-of-war and football game will be played in teams.

For the pie eating contest, Slater is making 20 blueberry pies. Miss Margaret Nuckols and Mr. Joseph Carbone will both compete in the contest with other faculty members and students. For the tug-of-war, the AA is hoping for enough faculty interest, so the tug-of-war can be between faculty and students.

Iran

An earthquake leveled up to 39 villages in southern Iran last Monday in the country's worst since 1968. Official estimates put the death toll at up to 4000 but an accurate death toll had not been tabulated as of last Thursday, due to the large number of villages destroyed. ## Hampden-Sydney To Present Strasbourg Madrigal Singers

By JOHN D. GUTHRIE

Hampden-Sydney Correspondent
The Choeur Madrigal of the University of Strasbourg will appear in concert at Hampden-Sydney College on April 19 in cooperation with the International University Choral Festival of New York.

The French singers, internationally known for their musical presentations, will appear at 8:00 p.m. in Johns Auditorium on campus. Their director is Jean-Paul von Eller. The performance is open to the public without charge.

The choir was formed by Professor von Eller and specializes in music of the 16th and present centuries. As its name suggests, the group has a particular affinity for the madrigals of the French Renaissance.

The Hampden - Sydney program, as is the group's entire university tour, will be devoted exclusively to French music from medieval times to the present.

Alpha Psi Omega Hosts College Theater Seminar

By BELINDA BRUGH

Alpha Psi Omega will host the second College Theatre Seminar in Virginia on Saturday, April 22. The seminar will be held on stage in Jarman Hall. The activities will begin at 10 a.m. with coffee and doughnuts and continue through 5 p.m.

In the morning session, guests from across the state will speak informally on various aspects of the theatre. James Jontz from Manchester High School will discuss the topic of "Creative Dramatics in the High School Extra-Curriculum." Una Harrison, actress and teacher, has chosen "A Personal View of Acting and Teaching" as the subject of her speech.

The Virginia Museum of Fine Arts will be represented at the Seminar by James R. Kirkland who will speak on "Actors Employment" and Frances Wessels who will conduct a session on "Movement for the Actor." Stan Fedyszyn will speak on "Happenings and Environments." Arthur C. Greene from the University of Virginia will conduct an actors' workshop. In the afternoon, the speakers will participate in a panel discussion.

Encouraged by the success of last year's College Theatre Seminar, Alpha Psi Omega has made efforts to ensure that the 1972 Seminar will be an even bigger event. All Virginia colleges have been invited to send their drama students as well as their sponsors and chairmen. The Longwood student body and faculty are cordially invited to attend.

New Signing Procedure For Reserved Books

By VALERIE BLANKS

The library has adopted a new policy for using books from the Reserve Room, located in the West Reading Room. All books on reserve, whether to be used in the library or checked out, must be signed out at the reserve desk.

"To better the controls so as to give the students the necessary service they deserve," was the reason given by Mrs. Martha LeSturgeon, Acting Library Director, for the new procedure.

She went on to say that some reserve books have been disappearing, and since these books are of necessary use by the students, it is hoped the new system will correct this.

The reserve section of the library contains books which are designated by the professors for reserve use. The professors also determine how long they can be used. Notebook containing the professors' book lists are in the Reserve Room for the students' use.

The books are divided into categories as to how long they can be used. One group can only be used in the library. A second group are day-reserve books which can be checked out for either three or seven days. Students also have the option of checking out books for overnight, but they must be in by 8 a.m. on the next day.

Also contained in this room are textbooks and curriculum guides for particular courses of study, which have their own card catalogues. Over Spring Break, over-size art books were also placed in the Reserve Room.

Freshman Honorary Initiates Twenty-Four New Members

By PAM WATSON

Alpha Lambda Delta, the honorary society for freshman women, initiated 24 new members last Sunday afternoon, April 9. The society is national and was founded in 1924 at the University of Illinois. Since then it has grown to 176 chapters. The local chapter here at Longwood was installed in the fall of 1966. To be eligible a freshman must have a 3.5 average at the end of her first semester, or a cumulative 3.5 at the end of her freshman year, and take a minimum of 15 hours.

Those initiated were: Kathy Ballowe, Carolyn Campbell, Peggy Childress, Carol Cummins, Debra Davidson, Mona DeHart, Patricia Dunn, Cathy Epps, Karen Gottlieb, Rose Hooper, Patricia Hudson, Sarah Hunter, and Donna Jacobs. Also initiated were: Candy Lilly, Christine Love, Judy McClellan, Susan Marks, Lucy Martin, Janet Pope, Deborah Potter, Sherrill Pulley, Kathleen Shank, Debra Short, and Sandra Smith.

The society also took in two honorary members who have shown interest in the program. They were Mrs. Eleanor Bobbitt and Dean Mary Heintz. After the initiation at which Mrs. Cade Parrish, Advisor, and Bobbie Bannin, President of last year's class, presided, the following newly elected officers were installed: Patricia Hudson, President; Deborah Potter, Vice President; and Candy Lilly, Secretary.

The Sophomore members this year have been active in promoting scholarship here on campus, especially the Honors Council Program. This past fall, the society sponsored a Geist booth to help raise money for their newly organized scholarship fund. The incoming freshmen are sent letters each year by the society informing them of the program and encouraging good grades. At the Awards Assembly in the spring, the society gives an award to the Senior Alpha Lambda Delta member who has the highest cumulative average in her class, and presents certificates to all seniors who have maintained their 3.5 average since their freshman year.

State Highway Safety Division Develops Hot Dots

In this day of sew-ons, iron-ons and glue-ons, another bit of decalomania may ordinarily elicit a yawn.

But in Virginia, some mod red and white, dime-size luminous stick-ons called Hot Dots are attracting both national and international attention.

Hot Dots have a new twist - safety. Developed by the Highway Safety Division in cooperation with the U. S. Department of Transportation, the decals bounce back auto beams making a pedestrian visible to motorists as far away as the length of two football fields when he wears them on clothing, books, hats, or on his bike.

Thirty-six states are exploring Virginia's new safety feature. The Army Headquarters in Korea requested Hot Dots for 7,000 Korean school children.

Since a story on Virginia's Hot Dots appeared in the January issues of a national children's publication, "My Weekly Reader," some 500 letters from boys and girls in almost every state have poured into the Division's office. One letter was written in Braille. Two came from schools for emotionally disturbed children.

In Virginia, four million Hot Dots have been handed out through major oil companies and their service stations, Boy Scout troops, local fire and police departments, and civic and safety organizations.

The cities of Danville, Roanoke and Lynchburg each proclaimed a Hot Dot Safety Weekend and promoted distribution of thousands of Hot Dots. The Arlington County school system provided every pupil and teacher with Hot Dots.

Law, Harvill, Lehman And Ely Publish Papers In Science Field

By DEBBIE BASTEK
Several members of the Department of Natural Sciences on campus have recently been publishing papers on various subjects within their related fields.

Mr. Joseph L. W., Assistant Professor of Chemistry, presented a paper entitled "Anthracene as a Suspended Scintillator for Counting the Nickel-63 Activity" on April 7 at the annual meeting of the West Virginia Academy of Science in Bluefield, West Virginia. Co-authored with Dr. Marvin Scott, Professor of Biology and Chairman of the Department of Natural Sciences, and Miss Judith Smith, a 1971 graduate of Longwood now pursuing her graduate work in pharmacology at the Medical University of South Carolina, the paper reported the findings of some research done in the department last year. "An innovative, rapid, and non-destructive method for assaying a nickel isotope, which is found in environmental samples, by means of liquid scintillation spectrometry" was devised during the course of the work. The work was done in part at the Medical College of Virginia and the U. S. Naval Hospital in Washington, D. C.

Dr. Alton M. Harvill, Professor of Biology, also presented a paper at the meeting of the West Virginia Academy, "Phytogeography of the Virginias and the Equilibrium Concept of Landscape."

Dr. Robert Lehman, Associate Professor of Biology, recently published a paper on "The Effect of Deficiencies of Nitrogen, Potassium, and Sulfur on Chlorogenic Acids and Scopulin in Sunflower," along with E. L. Rice of the Department of Botany-Micro-Biology at the University of Oklahoma. Printed in the AMERICAN MIDLAND NATURALIST, this work was supported in part by a National Science Foundation Grant.

Dr. Thomas Ely, Assistant Professor of Biology, published a paper along with W. H. Darden of the Department of Biology at the University of Alabama on the "Concentration and Purification of the Male-Inducing Substance from Volvox aureus M5." This work was partially supported by Grant 603 of the University of Alabama Research Committee.

The Department of Natural Sciences has been publishing approximately fourteen papers a year. Dr. Scott said of the work being done, "I think that speaks well for the school in that there is no stress for publication."

Several other members of the department plan to give papers at the annual meeting of the Virginia Academy of Sciences on May 4-5 in Lexington.

Dr. Ronald Dworkin Speaks On Liberty April 24, At W & M

By VALERIE BLANKS
Dr. Ronald Dworkin, professor of jurisprudence at University College, Oxford, will deliver the Third Annual Fitzroy Memorial Lecture at the College of William and Mary, April 24. The lecture will be entitled "Liberty and the Rights of Man." It will be given in the ballroom of the Student Center at 8:00 p.m., and is open to faculty members and students of all University Center institutions.

Dr. Dworkin taught for several years at Yale Law School and became Hofstad Professor of Jurisprudence in 1968. A former Rhodes Scholar at Oxford, he became professor of jurisprudence there in 1969. He is a well-known lecturer and author of numerous articles on legal and political philosophy.

The Fitzroy Lecture is a memorial to Colonel Herbert W.K. Fitzroy, who was president of the University Center in Virginia from 1948 until his death in 1967.

The University Center in Virginia, of which Longwood is a member, is the organization which makes it possible for guest lecturers to speak at the twenty-member colleges.

Freshman Commission Collected $50 For YWCA Fund

By BECKY NICHOLSON
The Freshman Commission collected $50.00 last week as a part of the YWCA Fund Drive. Part of the money will go to the Christian Children's Fund to support a child overseas. The remaining fraction will go to some organization such as the Red Cross or the American Cancer Society.

The Fund Drive is the last thing the Freshman Commission does as a group. Monday through Friday of last week each girl on the Commission placed a collection can and a poster in the office of each dormitory. In addition to this the girls campaigned during their free time. The Fund Drive this year was more successful than previous years.

Ms., A New Magazine, Views Women As Whole People

Condensed from the Cavalier Daily (U.Va.)
MS., the new woman's liberation magazine, is a welcome sight for women who are too old for SEVENTEEN, repulsed by GOOD HOUSEKEEPING, and bored with sex-saturated publications like COSMOPOLITAN. MS. attempts to view the women who read it as whole people, rather than just wives, mothers, or man-chasing secretaries.

The spring "preview issue" sets a fast and professional pace which hopefully succeeding issues will match. A few of the articles rehash overworked liberation issues but many more present novel ideas expressed in a lucid style of writing.

Some of the highlights of the preview edition include a well-documented article concerning men's biological cycles by Dr. Estelle Ramey, professor of physiology and biophysics at Georgetown University Medical School. She contends that all living things have cycles, and that men are no exception to the rule.

In an essay by Kate Miller and Casey Swift, a method for "De-Sexing the English Language" is proposed with the coining of three new words: "they," "ter," and "tem," for the nominative, possessive and objective of the singular common gender. It sounds a bit like baby talk, but at least it's a beginning.

Excerpted from a forthcoming children's book are four pages of pictures and stories stressing the break-down of male and female stereotypes. The narrator describes the children pictured on the page: "Marcia likes to climb. So does Marvin. Marcia likes to play the drums. Marvin is taking piano lessons. They both help their mother set the table. And they both help their fathers clear the dishes away."

An article titled "Rating the Candidates" offers an easy-to-read chart rating 11 major presidential candidates in four categories: Taking Women Seriously, Making Waves, Machismo Factor (concerning male and female equality), and Peace.

It must be conceded that the issues of women's liberation are not terribly complex or numerous. Thus MS. faces the problem of either being repetitious or running out of material unless they become a crusading periodical.

The power of the press, especially the MS. kind of press, can go a long way toward spotlighting female politicians, countering the "bad press" women's lib often suffers from, and bringing to homes and newstands the demands for women's rights which, until now, have most often been muffled cries voiced in underground papers.

Sophomore Projects Discussed: Song Contest, Show And Rings

By BECKY NICHOLSON
Donations to the Meherrin Day Care Center and Song Contest are topics which highlighted the Sophomore class meeting last week. The class agreed to donate $10 to the Meherrin Day Care Center. This center was an old Dance Hall which has been renovated. Most of their recreational equipment, such as seesaws, is homemade. This money will go into a fund to buy a swing set since the children need equipment in this area.

As a special treat at the class meeting, Debbie Martin and Sarah Todd Lewis sang a portion of the Sophomore song for Song Contest. The song isn't complete yet, but it's theme centers around Joan of Arc, our patron saint.

The Sophomores are going to be busy during the remaining school year. The Sophomore Road Show entitled "Snow White" will be presented April 27. The class is writing a script for a skit which is to be presented at Senior Banquet on May 11, and they will probably order rings the first week in May.

The Sophomores had a Red and White Party last Monday night to welcome back the Seniors, their sister class.

TV Commercials Sell People What They Don't Need

Today's TV Commercial--
"Try it--you'll like it!"
Condensed from
"THE APPALACHIAN"
(Appalachian State University)
The television commercial has been the subject of much controversy since its initial introduction to the American public. It has both irritated and delighted thousands of viewers in the United States, serving as both uncalled-for intrusion and necessary relief, depending upon the caliber of the program in question and the interest of the viewer.

Indeed, many approaches have been taken toward selling the American people what they don't necessarily need.

Who, for example, can argue with an automobile that has an entire computer hook-up for the purpose of diagnosing its various malfunctions?

And one cannot easily dispute the word of scientists who proclaim the extensive research they have conducted concerning the amazing dissolving capacities of Anacin, and the effectiveness of Pepto-Bismol's coating action in a glass stomach.

Not to be overlooked is the sympathetic approach. Anyone who would eat a stuffed dumpling deserves all the Alka-Seltzer he can drink for the rest of his life. What, in fact, could be more romantic than spending an entire afternoon with the mate of your choice, talking about a life insurance policy? or grooving on a glass Coke (the real thing)?

And one must express deepest admiration for the beautiful young housewives who mop and wax their floors and wash their clothes in virginal white evening gowns without disturbing so much as a fingernail. Commendable also are the efforts of the giant oil companies of American in the area of environmental control. While filming spacious skies, mountain majesties, and fruited plains, they somehow perform the constructive task of leaving greasy rings around the oceans of the world, rings which even Comet and Josephine can't remove.

There are other commercials, of course, which should receive honorable mention in this somewhat dubious Hall of Fame. The "ring around the collar" one, for example and the chuck wagon that zooms through the living room under a carpet and disappears into the kitchen cabinet should receive mention.

Surely, the TV commercial is necessary, its basic purpose, one could assume, is promoting the American principle of free enterprise, naturally, entertainment is only a sidelight.

One can't help but miss the people who ran into doors and got stuck in elevators all because of Benson and Hedges cigarettes, though. And the only time anyone views a bottle of mouthwash with ecstatic delight is at a party when all the booze ran out.

H-S Plans Unique Greek Week Festivities

By JOHN D. GUTHRIE
Hampden-Sydney Correspondent

This week is the Third Annual Greek Week at Hampden-Sydney College, and it looks like all of the fraternities are pitching in to make this week of festivities one that will be fun and enjoyable for everybody.

Tonight a "Greek Happy Hour" will be held from 7 p.m. to 11:30 p.m., at the Stag Room in Farmville. The cover charge of $1.00 per Longwood student and $1.50 per Hampden-Sydney student entitles everybody to all the beer they can drink.

Another "Happy Hour" will be held Thursday evening from 5-7 p.m., in the basement of Johns Auditorium. All are invited.

Friday there will be a free "Dinner on the Grounds" at Hampden-Sydney from 5:30-7:00 p.m., open to all Hampden-Sydney and Longwood students. Following the dinner, there will be a Friday night movie shown on Stubbs Mall starting at 7:30 p.m. The movie will be "PSYCHO."

The "Olympic Games" will begin Saturday after the Randolph-Macon vs. Hampden-Sydney baseball game. Kegs of free beer will be tapped at 3 p.m. The Fraternity Beer Chugging Contest will begin at 3:30 p.m. Each contestant must guzzle two 16 oz. cups of beer, and must turn the cups upside down. There will be two preliminaries with five men in each one giving two winners and two second place contestants who will try for four places. Female judges will officiate.

At 3:45 p.m., the Pan Hellenic Beer Chugging Contest will begin. The performance of the girls will be judged by male judges according to the same rules.

At 4:00 p.m., there will be the Pan Hellenic Tricycle Race in which the girls from different sororities will pedal tricycles 220 yards for best times.

At 4:15 p.m., the Hampden-Sydney fraternities will come to grips with a rope in the form of a Tug of War. The winning fraternity will win a keg of beer.

At 5:00 p.m., there will also be a Chariot Race in which four men will pull and one man will ride a chariot of any structure around Fraternity Circle. The winning fraternity will win a keg of beer.

Even the Fraternity houses themselves will be judged for originality and artistic display in decorations. The theme of decorations is "Anything Greek." Judging will be done by a Pan Hellenic representative.

After this long afternoon of excitement, there will be at 5:30 p.m., a "Steamboat Roast" on the Commons Lawn that is open to all.

To top off the day, MASON will play in concert outside of Gammon Gymnasium from 8:00 to 11:00 p.m., that night. Once again, free beer will be for all.

In talking to Joe Nelson, president of the Inter-Fraternity Council, and the director of Greek Week at Hampden-Sydney, he said that this year's Greek Week at Hampden-Sydney was probably going to be the most unique and most exciting Greek Week that we have had so far. He said that 40 kegs of beer were going to be bought for this year's festivities.

Joe also noted that if any Longwood student had transportation problems for Greek Week, she should contact Katy Dale in Curry for help.

It is hoped that a sober photographer will be on hand to record some of this week's exciting events as everybody festively pays tribute to fraternities and sororities during "Greek Week."

Board Discusses Award Nominations And New Bookstore

By BECKY NICHOLSON

The Legislative Board discussed nominations for the Dabney Lancaster Award and the Arc Award last Monday, April 10. The Student Government Association established the Dabney Lancaster Scholarship in 1955. It is awarded annually to an upper classman, and the winner is announced at the Honors Assembly in May.

The Legislative Board began the Arc Award last year for ten students (Juniors and Seniors) who contributed an outstanding service to the school. Officials of the various organizations, such as YWCA, the Athletic Association, and members of Geist are not eligible. Also, Chairmen and Vice-Chairmen of the Boards, and Presidents and Vice Presidents of the classes are not eligible for this award.

On April 21 and 22 there will be a Student Legislative Open Forum in Richmond. Students from different schools will meet there to discuss problems concerning their schools. Any member of Longwood's Legislative Board is eligible to participate in the Forum, if they want to go.

The secondhand bookstore and the Alma Mater change are still being looked into by Board members. The main obstacle regarding the bookstore is the question of a sales tax. After this problem is solved, the bookstore will probably go into operation.

The Alma Mater change is still being discussed at class meetings. As it stands now, the majority of the Freshmen want a change, but most Juniors oppose it.

Geist Tapping

Gail Gossage is a junior Physical Education major who has played varsity hockey and basketball. Gail is presently a member of Kappa Delta Pi, Delta Psi Kappa, Alpha Delta Pi sorority and was a member of Alpha Lambda Delta.

Brenda Griffin is presently Chairman of the YWCA and a member of the Longwood Players and the PeaPickers. She was also a Student Assistant and worked on the Oktoberfest and May Day skits. Brenda, who is a Junior, also has served on several committees of the class and college.

Janet Howard is a member of Sigma Kappa sorority and is that organization's representative to Panhellenic Council. Janet, who is a junior, is also a member of Lynchos and was the first runner-up in this year's Miss Longwood Pageant. She has served on the May Court and was on the Virginian staff last year. She is presently secretary of her class, and a member of Judicial Board.

The past Chairman of Residence Board, Mary Tabb Johnston, a Senior, is a member of Alpha Delta Pi sorority and was named to Who's Who in American Colleges this year. Mary Tabb is a member of Lynchos and has been a Student Assistant, Colleague and Orientation Leader. She has also participated in varsity and junior varsity tennis and Lankford Student Union.

Verona Leake is also a Senior, a member of Alpha Delta Pi and was named to Who's Who last fall. She was vice-president of her Junior class, vice chairman of Judicial Board, a Colleague and an Orientation leader. Last Oktoberfest, Verona was named Geistmeister by the members of Geist.

Susan Lewis, a Junior, is a member of Alpha Gamma Delta fraternity, Lambda Iota Tau, Kappa Delta Pi and the Longwood Players. Susan is also a resident counselor in French.

Fran Moran, a Junior, was named Geistmeister last Oktoberfest and is a member of Alpha Delta Pi. She has also been a member of the Colleagues, Alpha Lambda Delta and the fencing team.

The editor of this year's Virginian, Joyce Saunders, a Junior, is also a member of Lambda Iota Tau, the Longwood Players and Alpha Psi Omega. Joyce has also been a member of Residence Board, the fencing team and the Wesley Foundation.

Lynda Van Horn, a Senior English major, is a member of Lambda Iota Tau and is in the process of presenting an honors paper on an aspect of the writing of Charles Williams. Lynda is a veteran member of The Rotunda staff and is responsible for writing most of the large feature stories which appear in the paper.

gowns, they were also judged on poise and personality through previous interviews that day with the judges, as well as impromptu questions that were posed to the five finalists.

Entertainment for the evening was provided by The Sebastian Singers and The Downbeats. The Downbeats, a group of nine girls from Douglas Freeman High School, sang several popular folk music numbers by James Taylor and Simon and Garfunkel. The Sebastian Singers, the boys group equal to the Downbeats, stole the show as they sang "Watching All The Girls Go By" while the contestants did turns in their swimsuits for the judges.

As Dee Dee Arvin, Miss Longwood 1971, was introduced, she received a standing ovation. Later in the program she entertained on the piano with a medley of popular selections, including "Autumn Leaves" which she played as her talent in the pageant last year.

The girls had previously voted for two awards among themselves. Elise Fusco, a Freshman Elementary Education major from Richmond, was all smiles as she received the award of Miss Congeniality. The Most Talented award went to Amy Minter, who while reciting the lyrics, played her own arrangement of "The Impossible Dream."

After much deliberation by the five judges, the five finalists were announced. The five chosen were D.A. Taylor, a Freshman Elementary major from Chester; Amy Minter, a Freshman Business major from Mathews; Jane Hoen, a Sophomore from Richmond, majoring in English; Martha Saunders, also a freshman majoring in nursing from Williamsburg; and Janet Howard, a Junior Biology major from Roanoke.

Each finalist was then given a question to answer that pertained individually to each girl. The girls were judged on their poise and ability to answer an impromptu question.

From the five finalists, D.A. Taylor, who sang a medley of songs from STOP THE WORLD I WANT TO GET OFF, was selected second runner-up and Janet Howard, who did a modern dance interpretation of "Your Father's Young Chick," was chosen first runner-up. Dee Dee Arvin then crowned Amy as Miss Longwood 1972.

Among her other duties as the reigning Miss Longwood, Amy will compete in the Miss Virginia pageant held in Roanoke in July.

VOL. XLVII

LONGWOOD COLLEGE, FARMVILLE, VIRGINIA WEDNESDAY, APRIL 26, 1972

NO. 22

Q - What are the possibilities of having picnics every Friday until the end of school? C. G.

A - Mr. Carbone says that the added cost for food, labor and supplies that is incurred when a picnic is held makes it infeasible to have a picnic every Friday. The maintenance crew is involved whenever we have a picnic because they have to set the tables up and paper products are used for serving. Both of these add considerably to the cost. Mr. Carbone also pointed out that, as happened last week end, the weather is always something to contend with. When the weather prevents a picnic from occurring at the last minute, it involves extra time and money to have it inside.

Mr. Carbone also pointed out that there are several picnics planned between now and the end of school. Several sororities will also be having picnics, as will the Senior Class. He feels that "you can wear out a good thing".

Q - Are we going to have more picnics with bands? L. B.

A - The annual Slater Picnic, which will be held in May, always features a band and will do so again this year. The picnic which the Student Union has planned for May Day will feature entertainment by the Trinidad Tripoli Steel Band.

Q - Since we have to follow state rules, including no liquor under 21, why are we allowed to keep liquor bottles over the 24 hours rule? B. K.

A - We had a hard time understanding what your question meant before we could even answer it. We assumed that you were asking why students can keep empty bottles in their rooms. After checking in several areas, we couldn't find anyone who knew anything about a rule which prohibited the keeping of empty bottles in dormitory rooms. There is nothing listed in the handbook concerning this topic, therefore, it can't be a rule set up by Residence Board. The school is probably more concerned with where the bottle was emptied, but if anyone knows about such a rule The Catalyst would like to hear about it.

Curfew Changes Dominate Conference

By VICKI BOWLING
Discussion of proposed changes in both curfew procedure and State Teachers Scholarships dominated Dr. Willett's press conference, held last Thursday in the Gold Room.

Residence and Legislative Boards are currently investigating the possibility of eliminating a curfew on Friday and Saturday nights. Any resulting proposal will have to be passed by the Board of Visitors.

Dr. Willett said that the Board of Visitors will study proposals for rule changes "in toto." That is, the Board will study all aspects of a change in curfew concurrently, including how it would be handled.

"I do not believe that the Board will take any action on this at its May meeting. I think it will be discussed at that time and action taken in August," he said.

Dr. Willett compared the proposed change to last year's change in the alcohol rule. The Board will want time to check on details, and this will take time. Any change could still go into effect in September, he explained.

"I don't like the term 'curfew,'" Dr. Willett said, "if a change is made," he continued, "it is a lot more palatable to those who are opposed to it to refer to it as 'change in procedure' rather than 'abolishment of curfew.'"

Dorms Will Close

He further explained that the dorms will still close at 2 a.m., but students may come in later.

He mentioned the fact that presently if a student, for one reason or another, does not come in at 2 a.m., she is almost forced to stay out all night. "I feel that this is one of the strongest arguments you have for a change," he offered.

The main problem is a system of getting girls into the dorms after the doors are locked. There are insufficient funds to hire more campus policemen, and there are problems with extra keys. The Board will want to consider details like this, he said.

Dr. Willett then paused to commend Legislative and Residence Boards for "having done their homework." He appreciates the communication he has had with them, and said that he has tried to pose questions the Board will pose.

Dr. Willett declined to comment on how he feels personally about a change in curfew.

"I don't want to commit myself at this point," he explained, "I don't want to sway the Board one way or another. You will know how I stand on it well in advance." He doesn't feel that Longwood being a state-supported institution will have anything to do with a change, or that state funds would be reduced as a result.

In reply to a question of employers being less likely to hire Longwood students, he said, "I don't believe that this one proposal is so drastic that it would turn off a certain businessman."

Curfew Proposals Passed By Residence Board

By JANET LYNN TENNYSON

There will be no curfew on Friday and Saturday nights. Open house will be extended to include 7 p.m. until midnight on Friday, and 1 p.m. until 5 p.m., and 7 p.m. until midnight on Saturday.

These are some of the changes that have been proposed and passed by Residence Board. These changes are a direct result of a recent random sample poll taken with 10 per cent of the student body participating.

"After our approval," said board chairman Terry Jones, "the changes will have to pass Legislative Board, the administration and staff, and then go to Dr. Willett and the Board of Visitors for approval."

The all night curfew will entail locking the dorm doors at 2 a.m. but students staying out later than two, will have to go to the Campus Police to secure a key. Then this key must be deposited into a box in the dorm so the police may pick it up for its reuse.

The open house will have the same rulings that apply to Sunday afternoon: the guest must be signed in at the front desk in the dorm, he must be accompanied by a girl at all times, and the guest must leave the dorm during meal times.

Residence Board members were asked to attend a special meeting. At this time Mr. Jack Overton, who is the sheriff for the county of Prince Edward, gave a demonstration on the recognition of marijuana and the odor that it has when being burned. "To me it smells like burning broom-sage," noted Mr. Overton. Judicial Board, Dean Mary Heintz and Dr. Wayne Timnell also attended the meeting.

Editor's Note:

The Rotunda was informed Friday afternoon by Residence Board Chairman Terry Jones that the above proposals concerning curfew and visitation will not be presented to Legislative Board at its next meeting. Due to complications which have arisen, the board feels it should consult more with its advisors and Dr. Willett before presenting the proposals.

Deans Heintz and Nuckols, Col. Abrahams and Dean Blackwell listen as Dr. Willett answers students' questions.

On the question of State Teachers Scholarships, Dr. Willett said that there are many proposals in the state legislature concerning them, but at this point everything is "very indefinite."

A proposal of giving the scholarships only to juniors and seniors is being considered, he said, and there would probably be a transitional period if this is passed.

The amount of the scholarship could increase from $350 to $450 a year, he said, but this is still up in the air.

One measure proposes to limit the scholarship to certain subject areas, giving priority to areas of shortage. As it stands now, Dr. Willett explained, priority would first be given to kindergarten, then primary, followed by math, some sciences, and perhaps women's physical education. It would have to start out with new people and a new program, and not cut anybody off now on it.

Answering a question whether or not this is discrimination, Dr. Willett said that although he doesn't like it, the legislature might do away with scholarships altogether if some restriction isn't made on subject area.

"I think it's going to be difficult to enforce, to be honest with you," he admitted. "Who will do it?"

Mr. Groneweg, director of financial aid, said that he hopes to get applications for the scholarship in before summer. Their arrival will be announced in the daily bulletin. If they don't come in before summer, he will make arrangements to get in touch with those interested.

Financial need is not a factor in receiving the State Teachers Scholarships, Dr. Willett brought in.

Appropriations

In other areas of discussion, Dr. Willett said that regarding appropriations, he, Mr. Bristol, and Mr. Mitchell have already started working for the 30 day session of the state legislature.

They have asked why institutions with more in-state students, such as Longwood, shouldn't receive more money than institutions with more out-of-state students, as the latter receive more in tuition. Roy Smith of the Appropriations Committee has agreed that this is a valid point.

State Senator Walker of Norfolk has written Dr. Willett that he "has received more good comments of Longwood girls than of any other institution." Dr. Willett's reply is, "Why not let it show up in appropriations?"

Mary Lou Glasheen, chairman of Legislative Board, answered a question regarding visitation. She explained that Residence Board has sent to Legislative Board a recommendation that visitation be extended to 7-12 p.m. Friday, 1-5 p.m. and 7-12 p.m. Saturday, with the 2-5 p.m. visitation on Sunday remaining the same.

If Legislative Board passes the proposal, it must go through the same procedure as a change in curfew.

The New Spirit

CHI has burned for another year and students are checking the lists they prepared last September to see how many members they guessed correctly. Congratulations are extended to the members of CHI and the people and organizations they commended.

The feature story provides a good insight into the nature of the 1971-72 CHI. They appear to have been a group aware of its traditions and place in the college, but at the same time seeking new ways to implement itself into the college community. With these people rests the responsibility of selecting the members for next year and this can only make me wonder what they will be like.

Although the manifestations of this are not always obvious, Longwood is in a period of change. The image of the "Longwood Lady" is different today than when I first entered the school three years ago. Slowly we are beginning to catch up to the liberalization which is taking place all around

The night before CHI burned, Residence Board passed the visitation and curfew measures, which, if passed by the Board of Visitors, will be a tremendous step forward in demonstrating the college's confidence in the capability of the students to regulate their own lives. Legislative Board has also taken great strides in its occupation during the present semester with renovating the school construction and eliminating obsolete rules.

Like a young child, this infant movement to establish a relevant place in our society for Longwood must be nurtured and encouraged by a stronger force. The turn-out of students at the CHI scare and burning shows that CHI still holds much appeal for the girls here. If the new members of CHI are representative of this spirit, they can be a tremendous influence on the course of events at Longwood next year. If however, they allow themselves to be bound by tradition instead of using it as a measuring stick for progress, CHI will be nothing more than one more organization that once was something, but died with the passage of time.

Longwood must project itself into the future and march with the times or it will cripple itself into non-existence. CHI and its members must realize that they have the same future or those early morning walks will become nothing more than a convenient way to catch a cold.

LYNNE

Recently there have been a large number of stories turned in from people around the campus that I haven't received until late Saturday or Sunday. These articles are always accompanied by urgent pleas to "just squeeze" one more story in. So far this has been managed by pulling out less important stories and shortening others. However, this causes a definite hardship since the paper is usually completely laid out and then has to be pulled apart. I would like to remind everyone that the deadline for stories is 5 p.m. Friday. Exceptions can be made to this rule, but the decisions in this area are left up to me and I should be notified ahead of time. In the future, I can't guarantee that a story that doesn't meet these requirements will be printed. LP

Letters to the Editor

Dance Concert

Dear Editor,

I thought the performance given by the Longwood College Company of Dancers on Thursday night was excellent and that all who participated in making it such a success should be given credit for providing those present with an evening of true entertainment. Most of us do not realize how much time must go into such a performance.

The members of the Dance Company had spent four nights practicing from 7:00 until curfew to provide us with such a performance. This does not include the weeks before, which they spent in choreographing and practicing each dance.

Special recognition should be given to Miss Gustafson, the director of the Dance Company, who did the choreographing and script for her dance, and Jo Smith, who choreographed the dance entitled "Mind Sacrifice", which was on the use of drugs. The choreographers also deserve credit for the excellently designed costumes in all of the dances.

I also think that when we complain that we cannot go to a special program because we have a test, etc., we should remember that the members of the Dance Company, as well as other groups, also have tests, term papers and other assignments (and often other activities), because of this they have little time for homework after three and four hours of practice. It seems as if we should be willing to give up an hour to an hour and half of our time to enjoy what has taken them weeks to put together.

I believe that all who attended the concert completely enjoyed it and will be looking forward to next year's concert. I hope that at that time even more students will be present to enjoy the concert.

CHI Scare

An incident occurred on campus the other night which, although it didn't, could have had very serious results. I am referring to the CHI burning scare which occurred Monday night and the behavior of all of the people involved.

There was an obvious attempt to make the students believe that CHI would burn due to an announcement made at dinner, so it is not surprising that so many people showed up in their parking lot. What happened next though was frightening! People started racing around in cars at high speeds and appeared to pay no attention to the people who were milling around. Students started teasing the cars by jumping out in front of them to make them stop. They were very surprised when some of them gave no indication of slowing down and the girls had to scramble to the side of the street. I saw several girls who were almost run down because of their thoughtlessness and that of the drivers.

I guess CHI burning is a pretty big deal around here, but not at the risk of somebody's safety. There were not only the cars to contend with, but it was a damp night and several girls were quite chilled when they finally gave up waiting. Something should have been done to stop the madness once it got started, but instead the Campus Police sat in their cars and watched all of this happen without trying to at least stop the cars. Even some people who turned out to be CHI members were seen milling in the crowd.

CHI and its burning could be great traditions at Longwood, but not when they are used to see how big a crowd can be raised and not when they result in such dangerous actions.

Golf Course

Dear Editor,

I am currently taking Golf 108, a class offered for beginner golfers. This class meets Mon. and Wed. from 3-4:15 or one of the two days from 3-5:30. Class lessons are either learning the skills and techniques of the game or playing on the Longwood Golf course. But when it comes time for the class to play on the course or for a student to play or assigned number of holes on her own it is almost impossible.

The course as I have been told by a member of the faculty in our physical education dept. is owned and operated by Longwood College with finances coming only from our budget. The course is here supposedly for the use of Longwood College students and their guests (who must pay a small green fee). Why then is it when the Longwood classes go out to the course it is so crowded with students and adults from the surrounding communities? They are on the course without a Longwood student, not always observing the rules and etiquette of the game.

Is this a community course or one privately owned and taken care of by Longwood? It should be clearly stated who may play, when one may play, for what green fee and it seems that Longwood students should have priority.

Madrigal Singers Concert Slated For May 3 & 4

By VICKI BOWLING

The Madrigal Singers will present their annual spring concert next Wednesday, May 3, at 5:10 p.m. on Stubbs Mall.

They will repeat their concert the following night at 8 p.m. in the Sunken Garden. This time the girls will wear floor length black dresses and will sing by torchlight.

According to Madrigal member Nina Garrison, "We are trying to copy more of the madrigal style. The dresses are from that period in the 16th century.

"We haven't done anything like this before," she added.

Men such as Thomas Morely and Orlando di Lasso wrote several of the songs that will be presented. The songs are imitative of the madrigal period, and consist of a three or four part harmony, using imitation of voices.

Among the songs the Madrigal Singers will offer are three motets, which are religious madrigals, two groups of spring love songs in the madrigal style, and one round. With the exception of one French song, all numbers will be sung in English.

The Madrigal Singers include first sopranos Cathy Webb, Anne Lewis, Sharon Lee, and Wrengay Rawls; second sopranos Sue Satterwhite, Nancy Hardman, Ann Smith, Mary Porter, and Mary Hahn; first altos Jimmie Lu Null and Nina Garrison; and second altos Donna Hamilton and Valerie Sliuter.

Medea: A Play For Women

Will Be In Jarman May 2-6

By KARIN DANIELEY

The fifth Century B. C. tragedy, "Medea," has a modern Women's Liberation theme and Mr. Douglas Young is directing his cast from that view point.

Mr. Young commented, "The focus on women and what we say about women might not be acceptable to some women; this is for the audience to decide as it should be."

He went on to say, "I have a tremendous cast but have been somewhat handicapped by the inability to get Jarman Auditorium as much as I felt would be necessary and by a staggering amount of activities which have caused a hardship to this cast. In spite of this, it is going to be great."

Due to limited seating, the play will run for five consecutive nights. "Medea" will be presented at 7:30 p. m. in Jarman Auditorium from May 2 through May 6.

Boutique To Set Up In Lankford April 27

By PAM WATSON

Need a new casual outfit for that special week end coming up? Student Union is sponsoring a boutique that may provide just what you're looking for. The Chateaux Shop - House of Levi is closing up their clothes shop located near Sweet Briar College in Amherst, packing up their entire stock of merchandise in a bus, and coming to Longwood to set up a shop in the ABC room of Lankford from 12 to 6 p.m. on Thursday, April 27.

The type of clothes the shop carries includes levis, jeans, slacks, shirts and tops, body suits, hostess skirts and dresses, and tennis outfits. Items such as bandanas, notebooks, key chains, and other novelties will also be on sale. The shop will be selling both men's and women's wear as many of the men's shirts and jeans are popular with college girls.

Chantel Knight, manager of the boutique ship, has made many such trips to colleges in and around the Lynchburg area and they have been most successful. Dragon Chandler, Student Union President, said after visiting the shop that the prices are most reasonable and clothes include such brand names as White Stag, Crazy Horse, and Levi.

The Student Union will be receiving 10% of all the money made from purchases and Dragon added that prices will not be raised for the visit. No charges will be accepted. Students are asked to make all purchases in check or cash.

By VICKI BOWLING

Two groups of juniors will present spring voice and organ recitals this month.

Tonight at 8:00 p. m. Cathy Webb and Janet Gilliam will participate in a joint recital, and Sunday at 4:00 p. m. Jimmie Lu Null and Donna Hamilton will also give a joint recital. Both recitals will be held in Wygal.

Cathy, a voice major and student of Mr. James McCombs, is in the music education program. A member of Sigma Alpha Iota (SAI), she plans to teach following her graduation next year.

Accompanied by Kay Biggs, Cathy will sing three songs from Ecclesiastes, by Daniel Pinkham, "Herodiade", by Jules Massenet, and five songs by Johannes Brahms.

An organ major from Hopewell, Janet is a student of Mr. Paul Hesselink. Also a member of SAI and the music education program, she plans to play the organ in some capacity after graduation.

Janet will offer three selections: "Sonata II," by Paul Hindemith, "Le Jardin Suspendu," by Jehan Alain, and "Fugue in G Minor, BWV 578," by Johann Sebastian Bach.

Jimmie Lu hails from Norfolk and is a voice student of Mr. McCombs. She is a member of SAI, and although she will receive a B. M. Ed., she would like to sing professionally.

Among the songs Jimmie Lu will sing are an oratorio from the ELIJAH, by Mendelssohn, "I've Heard an Organ Talk Sometimes," by Aaron Copeland, and "Widmung," by Robert Schumann. She will be accompanied by Nina Garrison.

An organ major from Lynchburg, Donna is also a student of Mr. Hesselink. She is a member of SAI and is working towards a B. A. She plans on going into church work.

Donna will present "Prelude and Fugue in F Minor," by Bach, "Sehr langsam" (Sonata I), by Hindemith, and "Choral in E Major," by Franck.

All are invited to attend these recitals.

Longwood Company Presents Four Programs Of Dance

By JANET LYNN TENNYSON

A large audience gathered in Jarman Auditorium to view the Longwood College Company of Dancers' evening of choreography.

The dance entitled "Mind Sacrifice" showed that violence, confusion, and emptiness always come before ecstasy, in the use of drugs. The costumes were effective in this dance, particularly having violence dressed in red and black and the ice-blue color used for emptiness.

Jo Smith portrayed the central character and did a nice job of modern dance choreography. Ending with the death of mind and body, the dance movements expressed thoroughly that through drugs, "one must be willing to accept the fact that sacrifice is a costly one."

"Galaxy" was the second presentation and it centered on the earth and the stars. Karen Moot did a beautiful ballet-like choreography. There was also included a fine scene where the earth and stars turned, with out-reaching arms, to a rising sun. The lighting effects in this selection deserved high praise.

Jeffrey Hudson choreographed the third selection entitled "Cry Help." The essence of the dance was because "the world is made of different people of different races, this seems to cause problems." The simplicity in using white and black costumes sharply pointed out the racial problems we experience.

I expected the dance to end with white and black dancers exiting off stage, still segregated. However, it ended with black and white grasping each others' hand in an idealistic but exquisite pose.

The final selection was "Rural Route," written, choreographed and directed by Miss Sandra Gustafson, who is director of the company's dancers. The dance began with the words "I guess that's what is left for old men like me - dreams," expertly delivered by Rick Vaughn, who portrayed an old farmer recollecting his life.

Nan Pace who played the farmer's young wife, stole the entire dance whenever she glided on stage. Miss Pace danced an excellent performance.

The spirit of freedom, earth colors, and the elements deserve recognition for their organization. The earth colors seemed to add a rushed feeling, I suppose, showing the passing of the seasons.

Dr. Patton Lockwood, professor of drama and speech, should be commended for his simple front-porch design and the incline on the back part of the stage which added to the set.

Miss Gustafson must be praised for experimenting with a new idea - that of combining a script, choreography, music, and lighting effects. Her efforts for the dance culminated in an outstanding presentation of "Rural Route." There was one statement in the script that should be remembered: "It is being with others that lets us go beyond ourselves."

The evening, as a whole, in my opinion, was a delight. There were four interesting selections, each showing merit. I feel the stage, lighting and music crews should be commended for their promptness.

The concert moved along at a fast pace and was in no way boring. It was an extremely well done production.

Katharine Hepburn stars in "Long Day's Journey Into Night"

O'Neill's "Long Day's Journey Into Night",
To Be Presented
May 1, 7:30 p. m.

By STELLA SIMMONS

Cinema 71/72 will present the film version of Eugene O'Neill's LONG DAY'S JOURNEY INTO NIGHT on Monday night, May 1, at 7:30 p.m. in Bedford Auditorium.

Written in 1941, this autobiographical play carried with it the stipulation that it not be performed during O'Neill's lifetime since his own family served as a model for the play's Tyrone family. The father is an aging matinee idol whose fear of poverty has driven him to appearing in a second-rate but highly commercial play. The mother is a convent bred Irish Catholic with an addiction to narcotics; the eldest son, Jamie, is a shiftless character whose attempts to follow in his father's footsteps have led him into a life of alcoholism and utter cynicism; the younger son (with whom O'Neill is identified) is a 23-year-old would-be poet recently returned from a life at sea with the growing belief that he is suffering from consumption.

While O'Neill probes beneath the facade of family life to its warmth and monotony, its restorative and destructive powers which were a part of his own experience, a constant uncovering process occurs which reveals each character in the depth of his shallowness.

The dialogue is O'Neill's own; the acting is superb (The four principal actors—Katharine Hepburn, Sir Ralph Richardson, Jason Robards, Jr., and Dean Stockwell - shared the Cannes Best Acting Award of 1962 for their performance), and the only addition by the movie-makers has been the camera-work, and a quiet musical score by Andre Previn.

To help defray expenses a fifty-cent donation is requested.

CHI members Margaret Lowry (Torchbearer), Carolyn Simpson, Ellen Dunn and Cookie Howell lead the way to burning.

The Spirit Of CHI Supports Longwood

By LYNDA VAN HORN

They came under the light of the torch. Though the 1972 Chi had gone under many changes, the burning on April 18 was much like those of previous years.

Led by Margaret Lowry, the bearer of the torch, the 12 other members of Chi walked down from Bedford building to the waiting crowd in the Iler parking lot.

Other members of Chi included Carolyn Simpson, Ellen Dunn, Cookie Howell, Jody Mace, Sue Bonham, Verona Leake, and Joan Putney.

Also included were Pat Necessary, Bobbie Hope, Patti Coogan, Bev Aston, and Nancy Fowlkes.

Purpose Of CHI

In order to emphasize the importance of Chi and to explain its purpose, the organization sent out letters to each student in the fall of this year.

The purpose of the group as written in the bulletin sent out is to "promote and maintain a spirit of cooperation among students in every phase of college life."

"It is our aim to foster respect for Longwood and loyalty to its academic program and extracurricular activities."

Changes

Among the recent changes in the organization have been a change in the color of the robes, the song, and the symbol.

According to Chi the purpose of these changes is not to disregard the past, but to "utilize the valuable aspects of those experiences that have enabled Chi to promote and maintain a spirit of cooperation in every phase of college life."

Speaking of the new insignia of the Rotunda used on the robes of Chi, one member said, "We needed to project a positive image. The skull and crossbones does not denote respect to some people."

The Rotunda is something of the college and lasting," she said. "And, the blue and the white are more typical of Longwood than the red of before."

The CHI Song

Using the same tune as used in previous years, the words of the Chi song were changed "to express Chi's increasing role as guardians of the spirit and ideas of Longwood."

The new song tells of the purpose of the organization:

Through the dark of night
The spirit of Chi walks on Bearing the blue and white
The spirit of Chi walks on
Throughout the days of Longwood
Strong ties of blue

Although the years may pass by
Chi will be there too
Clad in robes of blue
The secret of Chi is kept
Hold the torch of spirit long
Keep it strong
Down the colonnade and
On the campus, too, we
Bind the sisterhood
The spirit of Chi walks on.

Other Projects

Besides the letters of explanation, Chi also had other projects for the year including sending letters of praise to students and faculty they felt deserving.

Among the projects sponsored or supported by Chi this year were the Pageant for Peace, collection of canned goods and toys for charity, and an all out campaign in support of major elections.

Chi also makes available an emergency scholarship fund which can be used by students who need financial aid in order to continue their education at Longwood.

Walks And Banners

The nightly walks and the Chi banners are also evidence of the organization's support of various functions of the college.

When asked about these evidences of the group, one Chi member said, "The walks are a part of our college support and spirit, and they are always planned."

But, when asked what they thought of the mad rush for possession that always accompanies the displaying of the Chi banner, two Chi members refused to comment.

The burning of Chi each year in the spring is always a highly anticipated event. Always coming after a series of Chi "scare" the burning is the time of year the identities of the members are revealed.

According to Chi the identities of the members are kept secret until this time since "if the identity were known to the entire student body, the members would be subject to numerous pressures regarding their program of commendations."

Coming Of CHI

As students from every class waited to see the torch light announcing the coming of Chi, the Chi members lined up in nervous excitement for their last walk.

One Chi member voiced her nervousness. "As we were coming to the burning, we didn't know what to expect with recent attitudes and viewing burning from the other side."

But, as the torch was lit and flared up, a roar went up from the crowd.

"When the torch was lit and blazed up, you just can't imagine the feeling I had," said one Chi member.

And, another agreed, "We'll never forget that sound in our lives," she said.

Each year at the burning besides revealing their identities, the Chi members also recognize members of the student body, faculty, administration, and community who have shown Longwood spirit and loyalty or who have provided an outstanding service to the college community.

Commendations

This year's CHI commended 22 students, as well as two faculty members, Mrs. Sue Clark of the Information Office, and the Longwood Foundation under the direction of Mr. George Bristol and Col. John Carr.

Among the seniors commended were Sissy Henshaw, Mary Tabb Johnston, Marty Repole, Charlene Rice, and Debbie Ellenbrand.

Juniors recognized were Susan

B. Lewis, Faye Poole, Joyce Saunders, and Bev Turner.

Along with the sophomore helpers, Becky Moreland and Ellen Morrison, two other sophomores were also commended. They were Donna Noblin and Wanda Wallace.

Debbie Martell, Janie Pritchard, and Mariette Zucchi were the three freshmen recognized. The two faculty members commended were Dr. Wayne Tinnell and Miss Diane Davis.

There were also six seniors who served as senior assistants who were recognized at the burning.

They included Donna Baker, Kathy Barclay, Easter Galloway, Brenda Hensley, Sandy Chortal, and Val Callis.

CHI Remains Secret

As the burning ended and the crowd began to disperse, the Chi members lined up as they had come in and left the smoldering fire and the Longwood campus. Where they went and what they did only the individual members know.

Of course there are many questions such as these that will remain secret. Only the Chi members to come will be able to share in the secret.

What can be seen in Chi to the average student is seen through the work and spirit of the organization. And, if the group is to perpetuate it will be only through the spirit of the student body. For as one Chi member put it, "Chi is a spirit; it's not individuals."

The proposal read: "Whereas SGA Senators are elected by their fellow students to represent them and work in their behalf and Whereas this requires each Senator to put in at least three hours a week in meetings and Whereas the officers of the SGA and the officers of the Union Board and others are paid, I move that every Senator be paid a salary of $25 per school month and that committee chairmen be paid an additional $10 per month." ## Newspaper Cutback

BLACKSBURG — The Collegiate Times, the official student newspaper at Virginia Tech, has been reduced from a bi-weekly to a weekly publication for the remainder of the current academic year. The Student Publications Board, at its meeting on Wednesday, voted to restrict the publication of the Times to a weekly six-page newspaper consisting of 8500 copies of a quality. The resolution was proposed in response to the financial difficulty which has affected the publications of the Collegiate Times.

Strike Proposal

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Student leaders of the National Student Association in Washington yesterday called for a nationwide campus strike last Friday to protest the war in Vietnam. NSA president Margery Tabankin said "We are asking that every campus shut down on Friday and devote its collective energy and skills to organizing sustained, intensive antiwar actions this spring." A joint editorial in the campus newspapers of eight Ivy League schools — Brown, Columbia, Cornell, Dartmouth, Harvard, Pennsylvania, Princeton, and Yale — was scheduled to endorse the strike in today's editions. A coalition of groups sponsored a rally at the University of Wisconsin yesterday at which more than 3,000 demonstrators marched in protest of the war.

Application Boom

CHARLOTTESVILLE — Because of what one official called "bargain" tuition, the University of Virginia has logged the second highest increase in out-of-state applications in the nation for the fall's freshman class. The survey also showed that the university had the fifth largest increase in the actual size of the entering class among the 82 participating institutions. The university was second only to the State University of New York in the number of applications for each available place in the freshman class. New York had 6.29 applications for each place, while Virginia had 4.48.

Control Shifted

WILLIAMSBURG — Student affairs at William and Mary will be moved within the purview of academic affairs under a reorganization made public last week. Dr. Graves, the college's president, said that the position of vice president for student affairs will be discontinued and a new post, dean of the undergraduate program, will be created.

By LINDA SUE ROBERTS

In the second game of the season on April 19 on Barlow Field, Longwood's lacrosse team defeated Randolph-Macon by a score of 8 to 5.

In the first half Karen Smith broke loose in a fast-paced game going in to score with Becky Jennings backing her up within a few minutes with another shot into the cage. The remainder of the first half, excluding the last five minutes, involved many patterns and plays, but no score for either team. Then Randolph Macon's Bobbi Shirley guided two shots into the cage for two points tying the score at half 2-2.

During the second half Longwood outscored the Randolph-Macon players 6-3 with points contributed by Terry Gadsby, Debbie Thomason, Karen Smith, Kay Harvey, and two by Diane Derrick. ### Spong

Sen William B. Spong, Jr., was officially declared the Virginia Democratic party's candidate for reelection last Monday due to the lack of any declared primary opposition.

"Sen. Spong's record of integrity and independence is a source of pride for every Virginian. I am confident that citizens of the Commonwealth will approve that record in November, as members of the Democratic party have in April," said state party chairman William G. Thomas of Alexandria.

Ping Pong

The amendment, which states that equality of rights under the law shall not be denied or abridged because of sex, won final Congressional approval on March 22, after having been introduced in every session of Congress since 1923. Thirteen state legislatures have already voted against approving the measure and opposition has developed in several other state legislatures. Supporters of the amendment claim that only two years will be needed to obtain the necessary 38 ratifications.

Anonymous Friend Gives Grant Of Unlimited Amount To HS-C

By ROBERT H. SELLS

An unlimited challenge grant by an anonymous friend of Hampden-Sydney College which will match increases in contributions to the College's Alumni Fund was announced Monday, April 17 by Dr. W. Taylor Reveley, president of the College.

According to Donald E. Dickson, Hampden-Sydney's director of development, it is the donor's intent to match any gift increase of $5.00 or more received by December 31, 1972, and designated for current operating expenses. Gifts to capital improvements will not be matched under the program.

Noting that any qualifying gift will be matched regardless of size, Dickson said, "Such a generous challenge program will have a profound effect on our efforts to increase alumni participation in the financial support of the College. The Alumni fund generated $136,000 in 1971, a record amount, and we are confident that this program will serve to make our current drive even more successful."

Based on the amount contributed by Hampden-Sydney alumni last year, the College ranked near the top of all colleges and universities in the country in average gift amount, $119. But like all colleges, Hampden-Sydney would like to see a larger proportion of its graduates participate in its giving program.

According to the terms of the matching grant, gifts from those who did not contribute to the fund in 1971 will be matched on the basis of the average annual gift over the last 3 years. Those who did not contribute during that period will have their full gift matched. The grant also provides that funds which have already been given during the current calendar year will be subject to the matching program.

Funds obtained from the donor's portion of the challenge grant will be used to establish an endowment fund for Eggleston Library.

Praising the establishment of the fund, President Reveley said, "The generosity of this loyal friend of the College has far-reaching implications. The new income it can bring to the College in these days of high educational costs is most welcome, but equally important is the involvement of more alumni in the life of the College and its educational aspirations."

State Social Scientists Meet At LC April 28-29

By DEBBIE BASTEK

The forty-fifth annual meeting of the Virginia Social Sciences Association (VSSA) will be held April 28 and 29 on Longwood's campus at the invitation of Dr. Charles Lane, professor of geography and geology, Chairman of the Department of History and Social Sciences at Longwood, and former member of the VSSA executive committee.

Founded in 1926, the VSSA is an association made up of all the history and social science areas. A state organization, it was formed to bring all those interested in these areas together to present papers on their research, and to allow them to meet others working within their field. The association publishes the VIRGINIA SOCIAL SCIENCE JOURNAL in cooperation with the School of Business at Virginia Commonwealth University semi-annually as well as a news letter a few times each month which covers the activities of its member colleges (27 throughout the state) and lists publications of various professors.

Several members of Longwood's History and Social Science Department are members, and have presented papers at annual meetings. Dr. Bruce Glascock, Associate Professor, has presented history papers for the past two years, in 1970, "New Spain and Its Role in the War for America, 1779-1783," and in 1971, "The Albanians: Sixteenth Century Mercenaries."

The committee for local arrangement for the annual meeting, which expects to host over one hundred social scientists, is made up of Dr. Helms, and Mrs. Cover from Longwood, and Ronald Heinemann and Robert Hubard, President of the association during 1965-66, from Hampden-Sydney.

Florence H. Stubbs, a sociologist here for many years, was the president during 1935-36.

Dangers Told By Infirmary

By JANET LYNN TENNYSON
About this time every year, there is a disease that breaks out in epidemic proportions on campus. It could be called "roofitis," however, the common term is sunburn.

With any exposure to sunlight, there is a thickening of the epidermis and the skin begins to lay down melanin at an increased rate. Many fair-haired individuals do not respond with an even distribution of melanin, resulting in a blotchy type of pigmentation, called freckles.

Individuals vary greatly in their reaction to sunlight. Only heavily pigmented Negroes are completely immune. Blondes and redheads are especially susceptible and should learn to avoid overexposure.

Overexposure

Ordinary sunburn results from overexposure of the skin to ultraviolet rays. Surprising amounts of sunburn-producing rays may filter through light overcast clouds and many people sustain severe reactions under these conditions.

Symptoms and signs appear in one to two hours and with prolonged exposure, pain, swelling and tenderness of the skin are noted. If a large portion of the body surface is affected, such things as fever, chills, weakness and shock can occur.

Most cases are unnecessary and are the result of failure to observe simple precautions. Even in individuals with dark skin, the initial summer exposure to bright midday sun (between 10 a. m. to 4 p. m.) should be not more than 30 minutes, all total. "This is the main thing that the girls do wrong - they insist on several hours for their first time", noted Dr. Lewis E. Wells, physician of the college.

Protection

A variety of creams and sun-screening lotions are available, but complete dependence for prolonged protection is not wise. Such preparations are washed away rapidly by perspiration and bathing. One of the best and most lasting sun protective creams is red petroleum.

Treatment

Treatment for sunburn is limited. Until the acute reaction has subsided, further exposure should be avoided. In most cases, the application of a soothing cream is all that is necessary. Cold compresses of whole milk or saline solutions may be helpful in relieving the symptoms. Sensitizing preparations, especially local anesthetic ointments or lotions, should be avoided.

"Girls will not be refused treatment by the Infirmary," said Mrs. Vivian Roop, R. N. and Head Nurse of the college, "there is a rumor to this effect but there is no truth to it". In fact girls are encouraged to seek help from the Infirmary at any time. However in the cases of sunburn, NO student will be excused from her class whether she is in the Infirmary or in her room.

Effects

"Many of the girls probably do not think about the serious aspect of sunburn", added Mrs. Ruth Carville, R. N. Chronic exposure to sunlight has a distinct aging effect on the skin. A more disturbing consequence of many years of overexposure is the frequent appearance of precancerous keratotic lesions. These usually occur in young people. Blondes and redheads are particularly susceptible.

The incidence of squamous and basal cell carcinoma (cancer) of the skin in the general population is directly related to the amount of yearly sunlight in the area in which the population lives. This is common in sportsmen, farmers and sunbathers. Anyone who makes a fetish of sun worship at every given opportunity through out a lifetime will almost certainly develop some type of lesions in their later years.

While I was researching this article in the Infirmary, a student entered for treatment of her sunburn. Diane Dennison, who is a freshman English major, said, "I stayed out about 30 to 45 minutes, and I used baby oil". However, from her association with the sun on last Wednesday afternoon, she sustained second degree burns on her upper back. When I asked her to say something to deter over-exposure by others, she said, "I don't know what to say, 'cause I know I will be fool enough to go out and do it again." All I can add is that I hope not!

Dr. Hitchcock To Speak On American Music

By VALERIE BLANKS

Dr. H. Wiley Hitchcock will speak on "American Music Swings: From Pop to Folk to Art and Back Again" Monday at 1 p.m.

Dr. Hitchcock is professor of music at Brooklyn College and director of its Institute for Studies in American Music.

He is the editor of several music books and author of "Music in the U. S.: A Historical Introduction."

Sophomore Group To Visit Childrens' Homes

By BECKY NICHOLSON

The Sophomore Roadshow will travel to the Meherrin Day Care Center, the Richmond Crippled Children's Home, and the Methodist Home on April 27 to perform their rendition of "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs". The Sophomore Roadshow is a traditional money-raising project for the Sophomore class.

The show is divided into three parts - the Castle, the Dwarfs' House, and the Forest. The scene in the forest will take place in the audience with the children. In this way the children can become involved in the play. Since the group is doing a great deal of traveling, they are using limited scenery.

The narrator of the play is the "Old Bunny" who tells the story in retrospect. Along with the regular cast there are four clowns with multi-colored balloons. Mrs. Anderson of the Speech Department is donating costumes for the show.

Southern Poet Held Reading At LIT Initiation Ceremonies

By ROBERT H. SELLS

James Seay, Poet in Residence at Vanderbilt University, was on campus Tuesday, April 18 for a poetry reading in conjunction with the initiation ceremonies of Lambda Iota Tau.

A very popular speaker at colleges and universities, Mr. Seay has given poetry readings as far away as the University of Utah.

Mr. Seay, who earned his M. A. degree from the University of Virginia, has had poems published in many literary magazines throughout the United States. He has taught previously at the University of Alabama, Virginia Military Institute and the University of Virginia.

During his reading Tuesday night Mr. Seay read several poems from his recently published collection entitled LET NOT YOUR HEART. He also read several unpublished poems which are now being collected for inclusion in a forthcoming book of poems. His new book will be "on women", Mr. Seay said. Many of Mr. Seay's poems are narrative poems, that is poems that tell a story. This fact, along with the fact that he uses many regional subjects and terms and nuances in his poetry, places him in the Southern tradition of American literature.

"Sweetbread and Wine", one of the poems Mr. Seay read and one that is included in Mr. Seay's first book, tells a story about Zannie Hayes. Zannie is a manual laborer who, in the course of the poem, changes his marital status, his address, his job and his salary. His humorous story is told in a brief 18 lines.

Legislative Board Must Cut Expenditures Next Year

By BECKY NICHOLSON

The Legislative Board received $1,100 in appropriations for the next school year. Mary Lou Glasheen, Chairman of the Board, said that that in order to cut expenditures next year, the Board will not give the usual birthday cards and Christmas gifts to the faculty.

Rosie Davis reminded the Board to think about nominations for the Dabney Lancaster Scholarship.

This scholarship includes $200 which is awarded to a Sophomore or Junior. In order to be eligible a student must have at least a 2.0 grade average, and financial need is also considered.

The Board was asked to consider the possibility of having a reception next year for all those students involved in orientation. In light of the budget situation, the Board hesitated to give a definite answer.

Seniors Discuss Upcoming Activities, Select Chairmen

By BECKY NICHOLSON

The seniors had a class meeting last week to discuss upcoming activities such as: Song Contest, Senior Assembly, Senior Banquet, Senior Sneak Day, Lantern Parade, and Graduation.

Cookie Howell is in charge of the senior song for Song Contest which is held on April 25. Pat Necessary is Chairman of affairs for Senior Assembly scheduled for May 10. During this assembly the seniors provide a synopsis of their four years at Longwood. As a Fund Raising Drive for the class the seniors are charging 25 cents for admission.

On the following night, May 11, the Sophomore class is providing a skit for Senior Banquet. Senior Barbara Moore is handling invitations to the faculty and administration.

Sally Foster is the Chairman for the traditional Lantern Parade. Seniors select a "little sister" who makes the lanterns. On the night of the parade the seniors walk across campus singing school songs.

On May 17 the seniors will have a "Sneak Day." The seniors cut their classes for the day, and most of them go to a nearby lake for the day. In the evening the girls will meet for dinner at the cabin on Longwood Estate.

The class also discussed ordering hoods for graduation. These hoods show the student's academic degree. Many girls felt that they weren't necessary, since they are recommended, but not required.

Class Presidents are taking a survey of their class' opinion of a change in the Alma Mater. The general feeling of the senior class was against a change.

The college is planning to tear down the houses across from The Rotunda and put in an unlandscaped parking lot. A story on this will appear in next week's ROTUNDA.

Dr. Bliss Of HS-C Talks On Shenandoah Valley

By JOHN D. GUTHRIE
Hamden-Sydney Correspondent

In a Society of the Cincinnati lecture at Hamden-Sydney College, Dr. Willard F. Bliss, Professor of History at the college, addressed a large audience concerning the settlement of the Shenandoah Valley in the 18th century.

According to Dr. Bliss, the search for fertile lands led Virginians from the Tidewater, across Piedmont, over the mountains to what became New Virginia: the Shenandoah Valley. In tracing the origins of the settlement of the Valley of Virginia, a three-fold answer is revealed.

First, the great planters of Tidewater Virginia, the "Golden Age" aristocrats, acquired large grants and adhered to the plantation economy based on slavery and a one-crop system. Known as the "Tuckahoes," they simply transposed their lowland civilization, principally in the Lower Valley.

Second, the Middle Valley was primarily settled and influenced by the Germans, or "Cohees." While Germanic stock was not entirely unknown to Virginia, the main influx of those who settled in the Valley was from the North, mostly Pennsylvania. They were small farmers who pursued a system of diversified farming and rotation of crops, with strong objections to slavery.

Third, the hardy Scotch-Irish penetrated the wilderness to the very fringe of settlement in the Upper Valley. These people were like the Germans in farming methods and distaste for slavery, but more active in government and the development of education.

The Valley, settled by people of such diverse origins, emerged as a product which would be duplicated in each new frontier. This amalgamation of cultures was to become "the American experience, the promise of American life."

Lions Club Encourages Donation Of Eyes For Others To See

By VALERIE BLANKS

Would you like to help someone to see? The Lions Club members would, and they are now giving the students, faculty, and staff of Longwood this opportunity also.

There are 100 men in Farmville, including Dean Blackwell, Col. Carr, Mr. Bristol, Dr. Patterson, Dr. Lane and Dr. Scott, who are members of this international, nonprofit organization which is dedicated to sight saving.

How can you help? Those of you who are 21 years or older can donate the cornea of your eyes upon your death to the Old Dominion Eye Bank in Richmond. They will then be transplanted to the eyes of someone who is blind or has only partial vision.

All the above named administration and faculty members have eye donor cards which a person must sign so that the donation is duly registered in Richmond.

Besides encouraging the eye donor program, the Lions support a Leader Dog school in Michigan which trains dogs for use by blind people. Besides their financial support, which includes providing examinations and eyeglasses for those who can't afford them, the members each have donated the cornea of their eyes.

Col. Carr gave his feelings about the donation, "For anybody who donates, at least one person can see better than he can now."

Discussions Held On Acting, Movement At Theater Seminar

By BECKY NICHOLSON

Jim Jontz, James Kirtland, and Frances Wessels held informal discussions about acting and movement last Saturday as a portion of the Theater Seminar. Jim Jontz, a Drama teacher from Manchester High School in Richmond, spoke on Experimental Drama in the High School. He tries to stay away from the traditional high school plays such as "Arsenic And Old Lace." And impresses the need for versatility upon his students.

Following Mr. Jontz's discussion, his students performed their original one-act play which they had initially written for the One-Act Festival. The students also did their version of "Henny Penny" from Storybook Theater.

Along with his discussion on acting and acting technique, James Kirtland asked his audience to participate in concentration exercises. He worked with the audience on the idea of sensory experience, such as conveying messages with the eyes. Mr. Kirtland is a professional actor and director who has studied in England, and is now teaching in the Conservatory in the Virginia Museum Theater. He also has an Equity Contract (Equity is a Union of Actors) which is one of the highest ambitions for an actor.

An actor or actress must have this contract before he can go on Broadway, and he must continually renew his contract.

Frances Wessels extended Mr. Kirtland's discussion on sensory experience into muscular reaction. Her discussion concerned "Movement for the Actor." The audience participated in this demonstration by walking across the stage and interacting with each other. One Drama student said that it's like life in the sense that we are all interacting with other people and being forced to make instant decisions.

LONGWOOD COLLEGE, FARMVILLE, VIRGINIA WEDNESDAY, MAY 3, 1972

NO. 23

Q - Is there any truth to the rumor that the police are going to make raids on the motels in the area? If so, what would be the consequences if a Longwood student was found in the room? What right do the police have to make sudden raids on a room which is supposedly private and paid for?
B. C.

A - Dr. Willett supplied us with the following answer to your question:

At a meeting held approximately ten days ago by Prince Edward County Sheriff, Jack Overton, with a number of our student leaders, he indicated to our student leaders that a number of law enforcement agencies were contemplating the possibility of "raiding" motels in several surrounding counties in light of suspected violations of the law. There was no indication on Sheriff Overton's part that he felt any of our students were involved in these violations in the law but he simply wanted student leaders to have this information. It was the feeling of several members of the staff that I should note this at the Press Conference held on April 20, 1972. In accordance with the staff's request, I did discuss this briefly. Involving the legal rights of the police to "raid" such motels, there are, of course, limitations as prescribed by law as to what law enforcement officers can do. I have a great confidence in the local law enforcement agencies and certainly feel that they are conforming with all aspects of the law.

Q - Why is the door on the left as you go into the snack bar always locked? It's embarrassing when you walk into a locked door.
S. O.

A - Mr. Hall, the manager of the snack bar, said this was purely unintentional. He said that whoever opens the doors in the morning apparently has been forgetting to unlock the door and that he would mention it to them.

Q - Why do the waitresses that serve the Head Residents' tables have to serve them their dessert and pour their coffee, tea and water? Why can't they also stack their own plates? This causes a lot of extra work for the waitresses and takes more time.
P. G.

A - Mr. Carbone, Director of Slater Services, said he could not give us a specific explanation.

May Day Features Trinidad Band Concert

By PAM WATSON

The annual May Day activities, the highlight of the spring week-ends here at Longwood, will take place Saturday afternoon, May 6, on Lankford Mall, followed by the Trinidad Tripoli Steel Band in concert that night. According to Anne Scott, Vice President of Student Union and Chairman of this year's festival, the theme of the program is "Past and Present."

Activities that have been planned have incorporated this theme to include some of the past traditions as well as some long overdue changes. On Saturday morning, tours will be provided for all incoming and perspective freshmen that will be visiting the campus for the week end. Open house in all dorms has been approved and will start at 12:30 and last until 6 p.m.

The festival will begin at 2:30 p.m. when the third and fourth grade children from the Campus School, fully decked out in colorful costumes and under the direction of Bruce Montgomery, will present the traditional May Pole Dance.

The presentation of the May Court attendants and queen will follow. Miller and Rhoads of Richmond is furnishing the girl's gowns. To get away from the traditional style dresses this year, the attendants have chosen a more casual print style and each will be carrying a single large daisy.

This year's representatives are: Sandy Cordle, Pat Necessary, Mary Verona Leake, Keshia Ames Gibb, Debbie Hyatt, Janet Howard, Mary Ann Boothe, Susan Lewis, Barbara Renick, Loretta Bunting, Jessica Jenks, Becky Moreland, Marsha Spear, Daryl Kay Driskill, Cydney Cherry, and Sarah Smithy. Betty Ann Glasheen is reigning as May Queen and Joan Putney will be Maid of Honor.

Afterwards there will be a reception for everyone in the Gold Room of Lankford followed by a buffet dinner on Wheeler Mall. Saturday night at 7:30 p.m., the Student Union will sponsor a free concert on Bedford Mall featuring the Trinidad Tripoli Steel Band. This 22 member band originated in the late 1940's after World War II when it was impossible to get either instruments or money to play Trinidad's famous calypso music. The natives of Trinidad discovered that old oil drums could be used to imitate this type of music. This began the original band, which has grown today into a world famous group, accompanying such top entertainers as Dionne Warwick and Liberace on concert tours and making guest appearances all over the world.

The Steel Band's repertoire of music ranges from the classical to popular show tunes to the most recent rock and roll—all played on oil drums. The concert occasionally turns into comedy acts for the group does imitations of celebrities, as well as telling jokes and singing.

This professional group offers superb entertainment that is totally different from any group that has appeared at Longwood. During the week, Student Union will play some of the band's records over the intercom at Lankford and in the dining hall.

The Student Government will present the Trinidad Tripoli Steel Band as part of the May Day Festivities.

Students Elect Class And Summer Officers

By JANET LYNN TENNYSON AND BECKY NICHOLSON

Last week students elected class officials for next Fall. The result of the elections were Debbie Hyatt, President of the rising Senior class, Robin Glascock, President of rising Junior class, and Susan Smithy, President of the rising Sophomore class.

Debbie Hyatt, an Elementary Education Major from Vienna, Virginia commented, "I was really excited. It's a real honor."

Planning ahead for next year's graduation, Debbie plans to investigate types of disposable and inexpensive robes for seniors to use during the year.

Robin Glascock, an Elementary Physical Education Major, says that Ring Dance will be a big project for the Juniors next year. She wants to encourage more class participation in this area.

Most of the officers for the upcoming year are considering the duties ahead of them. The other officers for the rising Seniors after the run-off elections are: Secretary, Janet Howard; Treasurer, Rosie Davis; and Historian, Jane Woolridge.

Rising Juniors elected Paula Williams as Vice President and Lucy Gresham as Secretary.

DEBBIE HYATT

ROBIN GLASCOCK

SUSAN SMITHEY

Cathy O'Donnell and Salli Robinson are Treasurer and Historian respectively, for next year.

Janie Pritchard is the Vice President of the rising Sophomore class with Cindy Parr as the class Secretary. Marsha Barker is the upcoming Treasurer and Lark Leonard is the Historian of the class.

Summer school elections also took place last week, under the direction of Diane Derrick.

The Legislative Board this summer will be headed by Jackie Hart, as chairman of the board and Janice Poole as vice chairman. Pat Watson will have the job of secretary-treasurer of the Legislative Board as well as serving at the same time as secretary for the summer session.

Chairman for Judicial Board is Judy Thorpe and vice chairman is Karen Ashwell.

Residence Board will be headed by Betty Watson and Judy McClintey will serve as vice chairman. The secretary for the board will be Charlene Wheeler.

Orientation for the summer is always a big job to be done in a small amount of time. This year's orientation leader for the freshman and transfer classes will be Rita Berryman.

Student Government Constitution In Need Of Review

Is our student government what it should be? Is it what it could be? Does it keep its promises?

Few questions are ever raised concerning the operation of the student government. We tend to sit back and accept the fact that it is functioning efficiently and properly as long as it meets every week. This is a serious syndrome to fall into. It allows conditions to develop gradually that escape the attention of the general student until there is a head-on collision between the students and their government. The Judicial Board furor last year is a perfect example of this.

The student government constitution is so full of loopholes that it may as well be a piece of Swiss cheese. For example, how many students realize that a student can be a class officer and an officer in the student government at the same time? A few perceptive young ladies have found this hole and crawled through for their own advantage. Imagine the advantages if the governor of this state could be the President at the same time.

A more serious deficiency concerns the establishment and maintenance of committees. These provisions are hard to evaluate because there aren't any! The only mention made of committees in the entire constitution is one clause which says that student government can establish any committees it deems necessary to fulfill its functions. Since the functions are only vaguely outlined, anything under the sun can be placed under the control of a committee. This little hole allows Legislative Board, among other things, to keep Publications Board under its control.

As a general rule student government constitutions list the committees to be set up every year. This is done to define the government's power if nothing else. I've been told this is unnecessary at Longwood, however. I suppose it is since the boards seem to have complete power.

The problems with the constitution could be much greater if the committees set up by the government were functioning as the chairman intended for them to. Her promise for them to meet regularly and to be working bodies means nothing when they are under the direction of inefficient and sluggish people. Class elections, for example, nearly slipped by unnoticed because of the haphazard way in which they were handled. If these committees functioned as they were told to, without having to be constantly prodded, the powers they could be given, because of the constitutional loopholes, are unbelievable. I suppose, for our own protection, we should be glad that the chairmen are the bumblerers that they seem to be.

The problems don't rest exclusively with Legislative Board, however. They're just more obvious because this board never closes its meetings to the students as Residence Board has developed a taste for doing. We all know the story behind Judicial Board meetings. Many problems can be hidden behind closed doors.

I have said in other editorials that the progress made by the present student government has been remarkable, but there is still room for improvement. It's time that a committee be set up to conduct a complete review of the government and the constitution. The functions and powers of each board should be thoroughly examined and evaluated. It may be necessary to make drastic changes or to draft an entirely new document, but these would be small measures to make the student government more effective and realistic.

A word of advice to present and future leaders of the government would be to not make promises that might not be kept because of the inefficiency of others. No excuse is adequate for a student who has been promised the smallest thing and doesn't receive it. The heroes of today often become the villains of next year's elections.

Letters to the Editor

Registration

Dear Editor,

It's room reservation time, again! After drawing my number, 76, for the Junior class, I found out that it was totally useless.

My 2 suitmates and I had planned to share a suite together next year. Because I didn't have a roommate I was not allowed to sign the 3 of us up. Now we have to wait for the sophomore allocation.

Of what use is the whole system of drawing numbers if you're not allowed to use them for your benefit. I could just as easily not have drawn at all. Supposedly being an upperclassman gives you added advantages of securing a room. In this case I have fewer advantages than the rising sophomores. Why should I be penalized because I want to suite with two people and don't want the 3 of us crowded into one room.

Having seen Dean Nuckols about the matter, I'm still not satisfied with her explanation of the system of saving whole suites for the sophomores.

I think that something should be done about the system since the purpose of choosing rooms is to allow you to live with people that you are compatible with. I might as well have been number 2,300.

Christine Sharpe

Annuals

Dear Editor:

I am a 1971 graduate of Longwood and I am writing this letter to express my disappointment in the 1971 VIRGINIAN. As a graduate, I was anxiously awaiting the arrival of my Senior annual. I tried to hide my impatience with the overdue annual by hoping that the delay meant that it would be a better annual.

However, when I received my annual just last week, I was shocked. I have seen high school annuals better prepared!

I was anxious to see my informal picture, as they had been returned in the fall of 1970, while half of the Senior class was student teaching, and did not see their pictures. To my chagrin, my picture, along with at least four of my friends' pictures were not in the annual. And some Seniors were lucky enough to have theirs in there twice!

Also, what happened to the club and sports pictures? I was president of two clubs. We paid to have a picture in the annual. The picture was never taken and the money was not returned.

The Freshman class was the only one lucky enough to have a heading. However, no class officers were listed for the classes.

Finally, an index usually means that page references accompany the names. What happened to the page numbers? Did they get lost with the rest of the annual?

I am writing this to the ROTUNDA as the editors of the annual were too ashamed to print the staff names.

The only good thing that I can say about the annual is that most of the pictures that are in the annual are good.

I am sure that I am not the only one disappointed in the 1971 VIRGINIAN.

Thank you,
Jacquelynn (Lynn) Giles

Concert

Dear Editor,

This letter is to announce a concert at the University of Virginia. PK-German is fortunate to present in its last concert of the 1971-1972 academic year two well-known, talented groups, Poco and Quicksilver Messenger Service. Both of these have long been very popular in rock music, and a single show with the two promises to be a great one. The performance begins at 8:00 p.m. at University Hall in Charlottesville, on Thursday, May 4, 1972. I advise that all interested in attending write in advance to Larry Wicker, PK-German Dance Society of the University Union, Newcomb Hall, UVA, Charlottesville, Va. 22901. Enclose a check made payable to the University Union for $3.50 per ticket, and a self-addressed, stamped return envelope. Tickets will be on sale for $3.50 in advance or $4.50 at the door, and I take this opportunity to invite all of you to attend.

Cordially,
Robert M. Murphy
Chairman of Publicity

Junior Invited To Become Member Of Musical Group

By VICKI BOWLING
"We are pleased to inform you that as a result of your fine work at our Final Auditions, we are inviting you to become a member of the 1972 Wolf Trap Company."

So reads the letter received by junior Jimmie Lu Null informing her of her acceptance as a singer for the musical company.

"I'm awed by it," she admitted, "also anxious and excited by the scope and possible experience."

Her elation has not dulled since she heard of her acceptance, despite the fact that she came down with the chicken pox a few days after the final auditions.

Jimmie Lu is one of 60 singers and 40 dancers selected from approximately 3,000 aspirants all over the country. The Wolf Trap

She gives credit to her voice instructor for her being selected. "I think we should be proud that we have a professor like James McCombs, who has the perception for knowing what his students are capable of and opening up opportunities," she said.

Presentations

Among the presentations the company will offer during its ten-week period this summer are THE KING AND I, a musical, and Gounod's ROMEO AND JULIET and the English version of THE MARRIAGE OF FIGARO, both operas.

In addition, members will be able to attend all other functions at the center free of charge. Artists scheduled for this summer include New York Opera soprano Beverly Sills, pianists Ferrante and Teicher, organist Virgil Fox, the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, and the Virsky Ukrainian Dance Company.

Jimmie Lu explained that the group will be working with nationally famous people. Alice Dutcher, the company manager, is a singer and has soloed with such groups as the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Seattle Opera, and the Teatro Nuovo in Milan. In addition, she is an accomplished violinist and violinist.

Music director Sherman Frank has conducted on Broadway productions such as BYE BYE BIRDIE, REDHEAD, and JAMAICA. He was also the music director for a company of JESUS CHRIST, SUPERSTAR.

Jimmie Lu, who would like to sing professionally, terms this "a definite starting point for my career."

"But," she added, "the experience will be beneficial in whatever I go into. I'm just going to enjoy the summer and see what comes."

Willie Ann Voyten To Play Selections For Senior Recital

By VICKI BOWLING

Willie Ann Voyten will present her senior piano recital next Sunday at 4 p.m. in Wygal.

'Medea' Employs New Seating For Audience Involvement

By KARIN DANIELEY

The Longwood Players gave their first performance of Euripides' "Medea" last night in Jarman auditorium, which featured a new seating arrangement for the audience. The approval is to have the audience sit on the stage on each side of a triangular shaped area. Mr. Douglas Young, the director, hopes to produce an involvement on the part of the audience with the powerfully passionate play.

The seating arrangement is employed because Euripides also sought audience involvement with his plays. He used drama as a medium through which he critically and constructively analyzed his world. He universalized his social comments through myth, chorus and ritual, thus making it possible for his audience to readily respond.

Euripides' message in "Medea" involves the injustices women receive as a result of the conventional attitudes which allow women to be considered inferior. He felt that women are human and by the laws of nature deserve equal consideration. He points out his philosophy in "Medea" by showing that things may end tragically if women are denied justice.

"Medea" will be presented four more nights this week, May 3-6. The play will begin at 7:30 p.m. each night on Jarman stage.

Sophomore Winner Of 'Starter Set' In Silver Contest

Reed & Barton Silversmiths of Taunton, Massachusetts, have announced that Cheryl Buhrman, a sophomore at Longwood, is a winner of one of their "starter set" prizes. Cheryl won her set, one of 100 offered, for her entry in the firm's 1972 Silver Opinion Competition. Approximately 20,000 university students entered the contest from all over the country.

Cheryl will receive approximately $85.00 in sterling, china and crystal. Her pattern selections were Reed & Barton's "Diamant" sterling silver, Royal Worcester's "Summer Morning" china and Lenox's "Reverie" crystal.

Reed & Barton also announced the winners of the ten scholarships which were offered in the competition. Cheryl was the only student from Virginia who was a prize winner.

Benefit Recital Sponsored By Fraternity To Feature Famous Violinist And Pianist

KEES KOOPER

By VICKI BOWLING
Internationally famous violinist Kees Kooper and pianist Mary Louise Boehm will be featured in a benefit recital next Monday at 7:30 p.m. in Wygal.

Sponsored by Sigma Alpha Iota (SAI), the recital is part of the honorary music fraternity's Music Therapy Project.

Mr. Kooper, a native of Holland, had his debut in Amsterdam result in a standing ovation, and he is one of the country's top ranking violinists. He has been called "outstanding" by the New York press.

Touring widely in the United States and Europe, Mr. Kooper plays a rare Guarnerius del Gesu' dated 1741.

Miss Boehm (Mrs. Kooper in private life), an honorary member of SAI, is the sister of Longwood music professor Pauline Boehm. She has performed in public since the age of ten and has toured throughout the United States, Europe, and South America.

Although Mr. Kooper and Miss Boehm primarily perform as soloists, they appear together as often as possible. At their home in New York, they have organized and directed the Concert Artists Repertoire Group and have sponsored several other musical events.

For this concert they will perform "Sonata in D Major" by Corelli, "Nocturne in C Minor" by Chopin, "Violin Concerto in E Minor" by Mendelssohn, "Clair de Lune" by Debussy, as well as many other selections.

The Music Therapy Project is part of the International Music Fund (IMF), to which proceeds from the recital will be donated. SAI is a member of the National Association for Music Therapy. In the past, funds from IMF have bought instruments to aid in music therapy work in Army, Navy, and Veterans' Administration hospitals, and city, county, and state hospitals and clinics.

Schools and homes for handicapped and mentally retarded children have also been recipients. Funds also go towards music scholarships.

Tickets for the recital are $1.50. They may be purchased at the door or from SAI members.

Helping Others Becomes Project For Students

By JANET LYNN TENNYSON

There is an old idea in this world known as helping people and many students have been doing just that in their spare time. However, in this community, there has taken place the birth of a whole new idea toward helping others. It is called Students for Community Service.

By being a social service clearinghouse for community service, the S.C.S. will permit people to do what they feel is needed. "Because we seek to do this in a rational framework, we can direct people in a carefully planned way to really help people," said Mr. George C. Stonikinis, Jr., instructor of sociology at Longwood. Although Mr. Stonikinis is the advisor to the organization, he prefers to be "just one of the group" working for others.

Began At H-S

The conception of the idea began in November, 1971, with several people from the Hampden-Sydney area being interested. Rev. William Vassey, Mike Crookshank, Tim Byrd and Howard Armistead instigated the idea and approached a student at Longwood, Sara Frederick, hoping she could drum up support for the idea from the LC campus.

"We then gathered to put the organization together, having a head coordinator and then sectional coordinators," noted Sara, a sophomore French major.

Basically the group has two aims. The instrumental goal is performing a service. The second objective is to be expressive—serving the student, giving an outlet to the student and providing the student with valuable learning opportunities. "We take the student to the real world," said Mr. Stonikinis.

Involves All Students

Any student can participate in the community service, regardless of backgrounds and majors.

For instance, an English major could read a story to a group of children, a math major could help a child with numbers and a physical education major could play a game with some kids.

The whole idea is for people to do what they feel is needed. The organization hopes to not make value statements, as "we are going to help just the poor whites and blacks," but rather to make the community realize itself. The group is for helping anyone in the community who needs and/or wants it.

College Supported

"We have received positive thinking from other colleges and professionals in the community organization feel it's good," said Mr. Stonikinis. "We have received 100 per cent support from the school's administration, particularly from the offices of the deans of the college," said Wendy Burkhardt, a sophomore science major and a member involved in the group.

Some of the social action to eventually be covered extends to many areas as recreation for children, housing improvements, tutoring, day care centers, and ecology. Other areas include companionship for the aged, drug rehabilitation and clothing and food programs.

Although there is a sectional coordinator for some of these areas, "we play down the leadership aspect," said Mr. Stonikinis. These are just some of the areas where thought has been placed. However, if there are other areas to be covered, the organization wants to hear of them.

Children's Recreation

The recreation for children is coordinated by Sara Frederick. She said, "The clearinghouse is a necessity for cooperation of interests with the needs of the community, and so far the group is going ho."

As for the recreational aspect, the section has already established a 8:30-10:30 Saturday morning basketball clinic. "It is for any boy, ages eight to 14, and it is held at Her Gym on campus," noted Sara. Chris Yeatts, a student at H-SC, is helping with the project, and "we have boys, both black and white and many come to us from the campus school," added Sara.

The next big project is to begin a big brother-sister program, so the people who are already doing this sort of thing can be together and coordinate their activities. "We want this for the fall," said Sara.

Housing Improvements

Robin Hill, a junior sociology major, is coordinator for the housing improvements. "The main thing about the S.C.S. is to get people interested in the community—we want to become part of it and supplement the services already available to the public," said Robin.

In the housing section, "We want to have a work day to take care of the houses and perpetually to be able to keep the housing improvements going during the week," said Robin.

Last Saturday the group went out to finish projects that were previously started. "Mrs. Carolyn DeWolfe, of human relations, has helped us a lot," said Robin. Saturday's activities included putting screens on doors and painting walls.

"First semester I was taking sociology for child development when Mrs. Young was looking for people to help with projects," said Barbara Radford, a junior English and speech major. "The program appealed to me and sounded like something this campus needed," said Barbara. The coordination for the day care center is Barbara's job.

Coordinates Activities

"To me, the S.C.S. is a loose organization meant to get together the activities on campus with needs of the community," said Barbara. The plans for the day care centers are to include making dolls and repairing games for constructive play at the centers. "We especially during the summer want to help Bright Hope Center in Cumberland County," added Barbara, "and I must say Dean Wilson has helped a lot with the centers."

Coordinating the tutoring program, "Moogie" Terrell is a junior sociology major at Longwood. "I am glad to see the S.C.S. started because there is a definite need on both sides—it is an outlet and the people need it," said Moogie.

Tutoring Program

There is a set up now where LC and H-SC students tutor the children from the surrounding area. "We had a hard time finding kids who need help," said Moogie. Lance Van der Castle is the coordinator at H-SC.

Now the system is for the child and the tutor to get together on a once a week basis. However, Moogie said, "We aren't allowed to go through the school systems and it has been difficult to find kids."

Kathy Axson, a sophomore sociology major, said, "I have been working in the S.C.S. for about a month but I began my Rubicon work three months ago." Rubicon West is a drug rehabilitation center, which first originated in Richmond. The first phase is the center. "Most of the residents are taken out of the jails for help but some people come right in off the streets," said Kathy. Kathy is the drug rehabilitation coordinator and she goes there to participate in encounter groups.

"These people are not hard core addicts but people," quoted Kathy, "we want to awaken people to the realities of life. Drugs are a symptom of the problem in the first place, so we need to get to the problem," ended Kathy.

Problems Encountered

The biggest problems the organization seems to encounter include finances, transportation and arousing the students to help. Financially, there are expenses for the improvements for houses, such as paint and hammers, etc. "Farmville has helped a lot—certain stores have given to us discounts and even donated paint for projects," said Wendy Burkhardt.

"U.Va. has an advanced program sanctioned with federal, state and local aid for the city of Charlottesville; I want to see the LC program to progress to the heights of U.Va.—we plan to expand the organization," said Wendy.

If the LC-H-SC organization can prove effective, appropriations can be made for the work to be done. However, there is still much that can be done which does not entail expenditures. As Mr. Stonikinis said, "It does not cost money to sit with an elderly person or to go out and pick up trash."

When asked when as a student, she finds time to participate, Sara Frederick said, "It doesn't interfere with studies, besides, everyone has at least one hour to give a week."

Monthly Meetings

The group meets on a monthly basis for films, speakers and discussions which will enhance the main work. "The turnout, we were pleased with, but it is the turnout for projects which really counts," said Mr. Stonikinis.

If a student is interested in doing something, a good place to begin is at one of these meetings. If you have a project that is needed, go to the meeting and get others to help you. The whole Students for Community Service is simply coordinating the people who want to do things for others.

Colleges In The News

Nationwide Protests

CPS — Students at over 175 colleges and universities matched President Nixon's escalation of the Indochina war last week with the largest wave of antiwar activities to sweep across the nation since the protests over the Cambodian invasion in 1970. Strikes, rallies, teach-ins, marches and scattered violence spread quickly following a call to action issued Monday, April 17, at an emergency weekend conference assembled by the National Student Association and the National Student Lobby. That same weekend the eight Ivy League student newspapers agreed to print a joint editorial Tuesday, April 18, criticizing the resumption of bombing and urging students to "voice their outrage" by striking on Friday, April 21. The strike gained immediate support from the NSA, the NSL and the Student Mobilization Committee.

Chinese Tour

WILLIAMSBURG — Three thousand fans flocked to William and Mary Hall last week to watch a special table tennis exhibition between the United States and representatives from the Republic of China. Despite the fact that the Americans could manage to win only one game out of seven, both the ping-pong exhibition and the tour of Colonial Williamsburg made for one of the most successful stops of the two-week tour. In contrast to the urban chaos the Chinese delegation faced in Detroit when they arrived in America, the quiet atmosphere of Williamsburg apparently enabled the team to relax for the first time. As one Chinese player said by way of an interpreter, "An hour in Williamsburg is better than two days in Michigan."

Toenail Contest

CHARLOTTESVILLE — The First Annual Dootumm Gah-lowekh Memorial Toenail Painting Contest was held last Saturday near University of Virginia's campus. There were trophies awarded in the different divisions (Best design; natural and unnatural toenails; longest natural with design; etc.). Pre-painted toenails are acceptable, but left toenails can be painted at the contest — this being another division. Everything is allowed, but keep 'em clean!

Davidson Goes Co-Ed

NORTH CAROLINA — Davidson College trustees will meet May 5 to discuss a coeducational plan calling for 100 women transfer students for this fall. The plan calls for an enrollment of 300 women by 1976 and 500 by 1981. The number of men would remain at 1,000. A report entitled "Co-education at Davidson College" outlined proposals drafted by members of the faculty's Educational Policy Committee.

Students Decide

RADFORD — The Radford College Board of Visitors, at their August 1971 meeting, approved of a Student Budget Board to have final authority in the allocation of the student activities fund. In addition to its regular duties the Student Life Committee was given the responsibility of serving as a temporary Budget Board and of deciding the composition and the policy of a permanent Budget Board.

Madison College Defeats LC Archery Team - 2472 To 2454

By LINDA BURGDOFF

Madison College, last year's State Champions, defeated the Longwood Archery Team on Tuesday, April 25, in a closely fought meet. The final score was 2472 to 2454.

Lisa Howard, Bev Rose, and Kris Ward of Madison took first, second, and third places with individual scores of 548, 532, and 520 out of a possible 648.

Longwood members shot well, with the following scores: Debbie Carneal 508, Dorothy Craig 494, Linda Burgdorf 487, Wanda Wallace 483, and June Beninghove 482.

Longwood's remaining meets are with Westhampton there on May 2, and the State Tournament hosted by Longwood on May 9 at 2 p. m. on Her Field. The Archery Team is coached by Miss Sarah Smith.

Golf Team Ends Season With 5-1 Record, At Tournament

By LOUISE MOSS

Longwood's golf team traveled to Williamsburg last Wednesday to play their final tournament of the season against William and Mary and Penn State in a three way tournament.

The tournament was played on the Newport News Golf Course as match play with the score of five team members counting. The team won its match against William and Mary by a score of 15.0. Each of the team members scored 3 points. In the match against Penn State, the team met its only defeat of the season by a score of 9-6.

Penny Stallins, Becky Bailey and Ann Santore each won 2 points for Longwood in this match.

Though the team was disappointed at losing their first match in over a year, Dr. Smith had nothing but praise for her golfers. Now the team will prepare for the Virginia Intercollegiate Tournament which will be held at Longwood Estates on May 6 and 7. At this tournament, the team will defend their title as the State Team Championship which they won last year.

The contestants discovered how messy a pie eating contest can be. Except for Dean Nuckols, who doesn't like blueberries, but loves pie crust.

AA Holds Field Day, Despite Rain; Pie-Eating Contest Was Highlight

By VICKI BOWLING

Bad weather coupled with registration apparently put a damper on Field Day, sponsored by the Athletic Association last Tuesday afternoon, April 25. According to AA president Terri Gadsby, "When it started to rain, a lot of people left."

Although the outdoor festivities were moved to French gymnasium, few followed, she said. A number of students either left campus after they had registered or were still involved in registration.

The highlight of the afternoon appeared to be the pie-eating contest. Participants include Mr. Joseph "Cutie-Pie" Carbone, Dean "Wipeout" Wilson, Dean "Knockout" Nuckols, physical education professors Miss Pam Oliver and Miss Anne Huffman, along with students Debbie Amme, Susan Wall, Chris Bailor, Dianne Minor, and Terri Gadsby.

"Mr. Carbone suggested blueberry pie because it was nice and messy," Terri laughed, "and then he found out he was in the contest."

"Most of the participants didn't even like blueberry pie!" she added.

Two groups of students staged a football game on Stubbs Mall. In addition, there was a scooter obstacle course consisting of bowling pins and hula hoops set up in French gym. A few students enjoyed maneuvering their scooters around it, Terri said.

"We need more events like the pie-eating contest that are more novel," Terri believes, "something that will get the interest of students."

"Next year with more ideas from the students, instead of the same events maybe we can really get something going," she concluded.

Sophomore Class Takes First Place In Song Contest

By LYNDIA VAN HORN

Despite the small turn-out, the annual song contest went on as planned on April 25.

"You have shown here tonight that the spirit of Longwood is not dead," said Terri Gadsby, President of the Athletic Association. Song Contest is held each year as part of the AA Field Day activities.

The contest gives the individual classes a chance to earn points for the color cup to be awarded later in the year. The competition was begun by the Freshmen singing their song, then proceeded to the other classes. After the Seniors sang their song, each class was given another opportunity to present its song.

While the judges were filling out their score sheets, the classes sang songs they had composed for previous song contests. The judges for this year's contest were Miss Pauline Boehm, Mrs. Lucille Bradshaw and Mr. Bruce Montgomery.

The Sophomore Class took first place in the competition this year, with the Juniors coming in second. The following are the lyrics to the winning song:

CHORUS:

Listen and you'll find it's true
Joan is here today
Be proud of her, stand up for her
Yes, Joan is here to stay
She fills our home with warmth
It needs and keeps our spirits high Oh hail dear Joan, our patron saint
Our love will never die.

It's Joan of Arc who stands for the colors we love
The blue and the white
And through her we've come to know the meaning of friendship
A special part of life

CHORUS:

She'll help you through your college years
Yes — all it takes is faith
And a little touch of hope
The memories of our Patron saint shall go onward with us
Her love, her faith her trust.
CHORUS:

Nixon

In a live speech televised from the White House last Wednesday night, President Nixon announced that 20,000 more troops would be withdrawn from Vietnam by July 1, cutting the total to 49,000. Nixon also said that the U. S. air and naval attacks on North Vietnam would continue until North Vietnam ends its "naked and unprovoked . . . invasion" of the south.

Muskie

In a special press conference last Thursday Senator Muskie "withdrew from active participation from the remaining presidential primaries." Muskie's withdrawal was prompted by advice from friends and supporters, but a lack of funds accounted for the final decision. Senator Muskie did not withdraw his candidacy for the democratic presidential nomination.

Parking Lot Across From Rotunda Somewhere In Future

By DEBBIE BASTEK

Due to misinformation from a variety of sources, rumors have been circulating around campus for the past few weeks about the proposed parking lot to be built across the street from the Rotunda.

According to Col. Carr, at the Board of Visitors meeting in February it was mentioned that the staff was proceeding with the study of the demolition of 300 and 302 Buffalo Street, two white frame houses owned by the college, to make space for the parking lot.

Part Of Plans

The Master Building Plan for Longwood, originally developed in 1964, has always contained plans for the proposed parking lot. The plan has since been revised four times, and each revision has been submitted to the Virginia State Art Commission for approval. Because the parking lot has been a part of the Master Plan for the past eight years, the college extended little or no money for the maintenance of the two houses. As a result the houses are in poor condition — a contractor who looked at them for the college estimated the cost of $28,000 to bring them up to living standards.

How Supported

Longwood has maintained the houses as an "auxiliary enterprise." That is, they are supported only by the rents charged the families living in them. The dining hall and dormitories are maintained on a similar basis — student fees. None can be supported by the state.

"We could find no reason to put thousands of dollars into maintenance when we knew we would just tear that money down," Col. Carr explained, "So we charged the families a rent that would let us break even every year and make minor repairs."

Still In Future

The Board of Visitors approved a projected construction request for 1974-76, which goes to the General Assembly next February. Included in this list, but low on the list of priorities, was money to build the 60-space parking lot. According to Col. Carr, "If it would be funded, it might be four to six years (before actual construction) because of priorities."

Col. Carr also pointed out that contrary to circulating misinformation, the parking lot will be landscaped. The landscaping plans were drawn up by the Chairman of the Department of Architecture at VPI, and have since been approved by the Virginia State Art Commission.

At the present time, seven families occupy quarters in the two houses, and six of them have leases that will expire this November, with no opportunity for renewal because of a maximum occupancy of three years. Another reason given for the request for funds was that at this time the houses will have the lowest occupancy rate, with only one family to give notice to. The houses could be demolished next winter, and Longwood's grounds crew could begin construction on a proposed "mini-park" in the spring, which would remain until the General Assembly appropriated funds for the parking lot.

Benefits Stated

Col. Carr explained that the proposed parking lot would be of benefit to the community as well as the college in helping to relieve congested traffic conditions at two near by churches on Sundays.

"When the Master Plan was presented to the Farmville Town Council, they and the Town Planning Committee wholeheartedly endorsed it because they could see the benefits of relieving traffic congestion."

There will be a meeting sometime this week in President Willett's office to discuss the situation. Whether or not final recommendation will be made at the May or August Board meeting has not yet been determined.

Students inspect the clothes displayed at the boutique.

Lankford ABC Rooms Transformed Into Cartees . . . House Of Levi's For Day

By PAM WATSON

The ABC room of Lankford was the scene last Thursday April 27 when the Cartees-House of Levi's brought its stock of ladies' apparel here to set up shop for Longwood students. From 12 to 6 p. m. students dropped in, trying on jeans, selecting matching tops, purchasing items, or just merely browsing.

Cartees is located one mile south of Sweet Briar College on Route 29 near Lynchburg. The shop consists of two large rooms in a small house that have been remodeled with antique furniture and other collector's items. Clothes are displayed in old cupboards, on coat and hat racks, and chests.

Chantel Knight, manager of the shop, says they opened only seven months ago. Being quite young herself, she realizes many college students in the area don't have transportation so she initiated the idea of putting on shows at the different colleges.

They have traveled to Sweet Briar, Randolph-Macon, and Lynchburg College. Longwood has been the first school visited outside the Lynchburg area but more visits are being planned.

Cartees carries a complete line of jeans and tops by Levi and Skyr. Besides hostess skirts and tennis outfits, they stock sweaters, belts, shoes, and various items such as key chains, bandanas, or handbags. In talking with Mrs. Knight, the visit to Longwood was fairly successful and she is looking forward to coming again in the near future.

Grades: Are They Evaluators Or Are They Classifiers?

(Condensed from THE SUNDIAL, Randolph-Macon Woman's College)

Grades: are they evaluators or are they classifiers?

The future of today's college students depends heavily on whether or not he "makes the grade."

He works (though not necessarily learns) for a mysterious set of coded letters to be assessed by potential employers and graduate schools, even insurance companies and creditors. "Grades offer few benefits to either the teacher or learner," contends Stanford Ericksen, director of The University of Michigan Center for Research on Learning and Teaching. "Their major function is to furnish information to sources completely removed from the classroom."

He challenges the responsibility or the right of a school to provide "encapsulated evaluations" of a student's achievement to outside institutions. If a graduate school or employer requires appraisals of students for their own specific purposes, they, not the colleges from which the students graduate, should be given the burden for establishing the criteria for these evaluations.

"Grades classify; they do not evaluate specific educational achievement, unfortunately the distinction between evaluation and grading is too often obscured in the administrative shuffle, and what is irretrievably lost is the criteria used to determine the grade in the first place."

A student may be graded against absolute standards or on his performance relative to his classmates. Some grades include penalties for weak character, inattentiveness or overdue assignments. The wide variations of standards from teacher to teacher and school to school has aroused growing interest in new approaches, such as pass/fail.

Often grades are justified as an incentive device that will motivate (or coerce) a student to study harder, or alert him to the danger of failing. However there is a crucial distinction between study effort and learning benefit, and research studies on this show the amount of time a student invest in a course to be unrelated to his final."

Using a low grade to punish a student is unlikely to yield any learning benefits. In fact, this approach often has the effect of reducing interest in a course and, in extreme cases, in an entire field of study.

"Nor can grades be justified as a predictor of success," Ericksen continued. Surprising studies conducted during the last decade reveal that college grades bear little or no relationship to any measure of adult accomplishment, he related.

"What students really seek are cues that enable them to evaluate their own progress as they work their way through a course. Instead, most grades indicate what they've accomplished in relation to their classmates."

"Grading procedures in higher education are brutally indifferent to the individual student." He concludes, "A teacher's descriptive evaluation of the student's achievement is far more significant."

Evaluation - which may take the form of a conference between student and teacher, or written comment on an exam paper - is indispensable to the learning process. Ericksen proposes that a student's transcript consist of a list of courses in which he has performed adequately, plus brief description by instructors, of the student's aptitudes, weaknesses, and progress.

Obviously there is no rapid solution to the problem of grading. It touches too many people and serves as a controlling criterion for too many education processes. But communicating what a student has accomplished to agencies beyond the classroom is not a legitimate educational purpose and does not serve the instructional (that is evaluative) needs of the students.

"Educational institutions must forsake their role as quality controller for society and devise alternative means for managing students. Then grading might not stand in the way of the university's more important function: education."

Professor Law Spoke As "Visiting Scholar" To Richmond Students

By DEBBIE BASTEK

Mr. Joseph Law, Assistant Professor of Chemistry in the Department of Natural Sciences, at LC spoke at Stonewall Jackson High School in Richmond as one of the participants in the "Visiting Scholars" program sponsored by the Virginia Academy of Science.

Mr. Law spoke to the students on the topics of "Applications of Nuclear Technique in Environmental Studies," and "Solving the Pollution Problems with Nuclear Power." The students were told of the use of nuclear spectroscopy for determining the trace amount of the harmful gases in the air. "Selenium, a highly toxic metal, found in cigarette smoke by means of neutron activation, is believed to be the cause of lung cancer. The mercury content in the fish living in the Atlantic Ocean was found by activation analysis to be no more than that found in an 18th century specimen kept in the Smithsonian Institution. This finding revealed the safety of seafood eating and reflects that the emotional public opinion, which has no scientific basis, is incorrect." Mr. Law went on to explain to the students how nuclear power is the answer to pollution - where it was condemned as destructive to sea life, the reproduction rate of fish in some nuclear power environments has increased.

The objectives of the Visiting Scholars program are to strengthen and stimulate the science curriculum in secondary schools, to transmit some up-to-date knowledge to students, to aid the motivation of the students for careers in science, and to provide school teachers with the opportunity to contact science specialists and professors.

Mr. Law was also recently elected to Sigma Xi, the national honorary society of scientific research in recognition of his "noteworthy achievement" in original investigation. He has had six publications since joining Longwood's faculty in 1966.

Hampden-Sydney Professor Receives Award For Research

By JOHN D. GUTHRIE

Dr. Ray A. Gaskins, assistant professor of Mathematics at Hampden-Sydney College, will be a co-recipient of the 1972 J. Shelton Horsley Award, the highest award the Virginia Academy of Science can bestow for original research.

Dr. Gaskins will receive the award with Dr. I. J. Good of Virginia Polytechnic Institute for their research paper entitled "Global Nonparametric Estimation of Probability Densities." The two will receive the award May 4 during the annual Academy Assembly at Virginia Military Institute.

Dr. Gaskins is author and/or co-author of ten other publications, and has received numerous honors in his field. He has been a delegate and speaker to national meetings of Phi Mu Epsilon professional honor society, and he currently serves as a statistical consultant to the VPI Computer Center.

Edward F. Turner, Jr., president of the Virginia Academy of Science said in announcing the recipients of the Horsley Award, "The award is the highest honor the Academy can bestow for original research, and its presentation is the highlight of the Academy Assembly at the annual meeting. This recognition to you and Dr. Good is richly deserved."

Debbie Abernathy Elected As Editor Of The '73 Gyré

By BECKY NICHOLSON

Donations to the Meherrin Day Care Center totaled to an amount of $85 last week. The Legislative Board announced that Dean Wilson donated $50 to the Meherrin Center. Both the Granddaughters Club and Alpha Sigma Alpha contributed $10, and $15 was collected from the jar in the snack bar.

An election for officials of the Gyré took place at the meeting last week. Board members elected Debbie Abernathy as the new editor of the Gyré, and Mary Orange as the Business Manager. Bobbie Bannin is drawing up definite proposals concerning a secondhand bookstore. This will be voted on by the Legislative Board at a later meeting, and the bookstore will probably become a committee under the Legislative Board.

For many weeks the Board discussed changing the Alma Mater to Joan of Arc. The Board members asked their respective classes for their opinions, but few people attended the class meetings. Members of the Board decided to postpone the matter until next year since student opinion was not strongly for or against a change in the Alma Mater. Also members of the Alumnae were consulted, and they were against changing the song.

Board Supports Meherrin Project

By BECKY NICHOLSON

The Meherrin Project, to buy a swing set for the Day Care Center, has $110 in funds now. Linda Gill, Chairman of the project on campus, says that our goal is to raise $200.

The Legislative Board chose to direct this project because it was local and therefore identified more with the students than, for example, the heart fund. Instead of contributing cash money, the Board decided to donate a swing set so that the students could know how their money was used. There will be a cotton candy sale at the Slater picnic in May in order to raise more funds. The project members want to install the swing set before the end of the year, if possible.

Center's Purpose

Linda says that many students on campus do not realize exactly what the Meherrin Day Care Center is. It is organized and administered by a nonprofit agency, the Central Piedmont Action Council. The Center is an ex-dance hall in southeastern Prince Edward County which is licensed as a Child Care Center for twenty-five children.

These children range in age from three to six years old, and their educational goal is to increase the child's self-confidence. The Center hopes to do this by showing the child that he can deal with new experiences. English will be stressed.

Reasons For Enrollment

Parents enroll their children in the Center for many reasons. Sometimes the mother is dissatisfied with previous baby sitting arrangements, or she may need a job but can not find a sitter for her children.

The Center has received contributions in the form of services such as teaching hours, equipment and labor. A great number of the services have come from Longwood girls. Besides donations the Center charges a fee of $15 per week for children whose mothers have jobs.

Future Plans

If the Meherrin Center receives additional funds, they will utilize it to secure a full day cook, to clear and fence outdoor acreage and to buy a piano and wading pool. They also want to provide a half day assistant teacher, provide transportation when it's required, and finally an institutional swing set. For those who are interested in visiting the Center, it is open to the public on week days from 8 a. m. to 5 p. m.

Students made it through registration last week, but not without problems. Even Seniors found themselves shut out of classes because of an imbalance in the sections of classes offered.

Betty Ann Glasheen Reigns As May Queen

Q - Will Longwood ever have, or is anything being done to set up a uniform grading system? P. W.

A - Dr. Blackwell, Academic Dean of the College, supplied us with the following answer:

A uniform grading system is impossible unless you have uniform instructors. One English teacher, for example, might interpret an essay to be at "C" level while another instructor might consider the same paper to merit an "A". We do review the grades of all instructors each semester. Where the grades of one seem out of line with those of his peers, the department chairman reviews grading procedures with the instructor.

Q - Why is the Rotunda decorated in green instead of blue? D. R.

A - The following answer was forwarded to us by Col. Carr, Vice-President for Administration for the College:

There are three basic reasons. First, when Ruffner was renovated several years ago, the Alumnae requested that the Rotunda decor remain the same as it was before the renovation. Second, a shortage of money for the renovation of Ruffner Hall required that we retain the green rug in the Rotunda and allow for an application of only one coat of paint on the walls. To have changed the color decor of the Rotunda to blue, would have required purchase of a new rug, application of two or more coats of paint to the walls and disregard for the Alumnae request.

It was impossible to obtain answers to two of the questions which were turned in last week because of Dr. Willett's busy schedule. For the people who submitted those questions, they will appear in next week's Catalyst.

Children from the Campus School presented this year's May Pole Dance.

By VICKI BOWLING

May Day 1972, held last Saturday, proved to be a busy day, with the May Pole dance, presentation of the court, reception, buffet dinner, and a concert by the Trinidad Tripoli Steel Band.

To begin the festivities on Stubbs Mall, Anne Scott, vice-chairman of Student Union, welcomed students and visitors, and introduced several members of the administration who were present.

Dr. Lee Land, director of the Wynne Campus School, acted as master of ceremonies for the fourth year. Following a special welcome to girls who will be attending Longwood for the first time next September, Dr. Land introduced the participants in the traditional May Pole dance.

Children from the second and third grades at the campus school served as the dancers, under the direction of Mr. Bruce Montgomery. They danced barefoot, the girls in green print dresses and white scarves, the boys in white suits and sashes which matched the dresses.

Despite a few mishaps, the dance proceeded as scheduled. The audience laughed in sympathy at the forlorn dancers who lost their streamers, and loudly applauded their appreciation and delight at the children's efforts. Dr. Land then presented the May Court.

Heading the court was senior Betty Ann Glasheen as May Queen. Dressed in flowing white, Betty Ann was crowned by her father, Mr. Gabriel J. Glasheen.

The crown consisted of multi-colored daisies, matching the daisies which the other court members carried.

Maid of honor Joan Putney assisted with the crowning. Other seniors on the court were Verona Leake, Pat Necessary, Ketsy Gibb and Sandy Cordle.

Juniors Susan Lewis, Mary Ann Boothe, Janet Howard, and Debbie Hyatt were also attendants.

Sophomores Barbara Renick, Loretta Bunting, Jessica Jenks, and Rebecca Moreland, and freshmen Marsha Spear, Daryl Kay Driskill, Cydney Cherry, and Sarah Smithy comprised the rest of the court.

The dresses which the attendants wore, splashed with large different colored daisies, added to the fresh feeling of spring. Hatless, the girls carried single daisies, a different color for each class.

This year's flower girl was Diana Catherine Stuart, daughter of English professor Dr. Donald Stuart. Diana smiled angelically in a long yellow dress as she sprinkled rose petals in the path of the May Queen.

Eric Land, Dr. Land's son, acted as crown bearer, and as Dr. Land said, Eric preferred to call himself "ring bearer." As he marched down the walk in his short white suit and red boutonniere, Eric seemed nonchalant about the whole affair. He stopped in shock at one point when a spectator snapped his picture!

A reception in the Gold Room followed the festivities.

At the buffet dinner that night, the Trinidad Tripoli Steel Band made a brief appearance to introduce themselves and their music. They were an immediate hit and induced many to come out to their concert that night who otherwise might not have attended.

Wearing silver and purple, the group played to an enthusiastic crowd at their concert on Wygal Mall. Viewers ranged from five to 65 years of age.

Sounding like a full symphony orchestra, the Trinidad Tripoli Steel Band achieves its sound on empty oil cans, each cut to a specific size. For example, one size sounds like a bass drum, while another sounds like a violin.

Their repertoire ranged from "The Saber Dance" to "Jesus Christ Superstar" to "Cecilia." It appeared as if they had something for everyone.

Still carrying paper flowers from the May Pole as souvenirs, several incoming freshmen voiced their opinions of Longwood and the day.

When asked if she enjoyed herself, one girl answered with an emphatic "very much!"

Another eager girl said, "I wasn't very excited about coming here in September until today." Her friends excitedly agreed.

Betty Ann Glasheen is crowned May Queen by her father and Joan Putney as the court watches.

The Trinidad Tripoli Steel Band was a great success among those who attended May Day.

May Day

For many people in the world, May Day has become a special day for demonstrating force and voicing beliefs in political ideologies. It marks an official day of celebration for Communists all over the world, for it is this day, along with the birthdays of Lenin and Mao, when the Western World is given glimpses of Communist might through the enormous military parades which are put on. It is also the day which has been frequently chosen by student activists in this country to demonstrate their feelings about the government.

Longwood, however, has chosen to celebrate the other side of May Day. Long before world crises could be set off with the touch of a button, the festivities celebrated the coming of warm days and the reawakening of nature. Although many students are beginning to look at this type of festivity as irrelevant and ridiculous, it would be a tragedy to see this type of event destroyed by the callousness of the world we live in. Amidst the darkness and doubt, it's good to know that there can be a point of light.

The Student Union certainly tried to spread some of this light on Saturday. It would have taken a heart hardened to the point of being petrified not to respond to the children as they danced around the May Pole. The excitement and happiness they were feeling should have been enough to make the day worthwhile.

If this spirit began to fade as the day progressed, it was more than revived by the performance of the Trinidad Tipoti Steel Band. If garbage cans begin disappearing from the campus, we'll know that a Longwood Steel Band is being formed.

By all standards, the presentation of the May Queen and her court was the crowning point of the day, in both a literal and figurative sense. Everyone expects the members of the court to look beautiful. It's the same idea that there's never been an ugly bride, but this court seems to have surpassed everyone's expectations judging from the comments. Even the once controversial and much-talked-about gowns for the court gave them a naturalness that suited the spirit of the day.

This spirit was personified to its finest capacity, however, in the May Queen. Betty Ann Glasheen must stand out as an exceptional choice for this position. She presented a figure of freshness, grace and a communion with nature that could in no better way sum up the real spirit behind the occasion. Betty Ann made a stunning symbol for the day.

The purpose of this euphoric rambling is to point out to those students who scoff at May Day that it has a real purpose. The Student Union, in particular Anne Scott, who as vice-chairman of the union, was chairman of the festivities, worked hard to make the festivities a success and would not have spent the time and money it did if there was no point behind it. Dealing with the realities and darkness of life is important and necessary. However, if we lose touch with the simple things, reality won't be worth dealing with.

An Open Letter To The Student Body

In the almost three years that I have been at Longwood, I can never recall having seen a retraction printed. I can't speak for the policies of past editors, but I can say that this has been true during the present semester because I have stressed to my staff the importance of reporting facts accurately and without bias. Now, because of my editorial last week concerning the Student Government Constitution and committees, the question has been raised as to whether I am capable of following the policy I have established for others.

The Right Words

Normally, an editorial is much easier to write than a news story because it is not bound in a journalistic straight-jacket that allows only facts to be printed. Yet this also has the peculiar effect of making an editorial comment that much harder to compose. An editorial is written with the idea of creating an emotion and stimulating a particular response. Each word has to be carefully chosen or the entire meaning of the passage becomes distorted. Apparently, I made several mistakes in choosing my words last week because the editorial has been interpreted completely differently from my intended meaning by a great number of people.

The comments I have received infer that: (1) I have formed gross misconceptions about the role of class officers and (2) I made an unjustified attack on the Student Government. These are obviously points which require some explanation on my part.

Class Officers

My conception of a class officer is a person who provides the leadership for a class and establishes policies that pertain to her class. She would be an active participant in the student government to promote the interests of her class and, hopefully, through these interests, those of the school. A person who is going to fulfill this role doesn't have the time or ability to also hold an office in the student government.

I was told after the editorial appeared however, that this concept in no way applies to Longwood. Class officers are only to be spirit leaders. Policies are to be established by the three boards only and in no way interfered in by class officers.

When I reflect on what class officers have been, it's obvious that they've never been better than cheerleaders. If this is what the students want, then there is no reason why an officer can't be a member of a board. That would be like telling the head cheerleader in a high school that she can't be a student government officer. My mistake was in seeing the position of a class officer as something more than this. However, if the students are satisfied in being led by cheerleaders, then there is no reason to change the system and I stand corrected.

"Unjustified" Attack

Soon after the editorial appeared, I was approached by a fellow student who wanted to know why I dislike the present student government so much that I would make a "completely unjustified" attack on it. She challenged the right of the ROTUNDA to try and destroy the student government. Apparently, she has bought the image of the newspaper that has been created on campus because it often makes critical statements.

I've been trying to fight this image since taking the office of editor and I had apparently deceived myself into believing that I had made some progress. I find it very disturbing that, because one editorial is critical of the Student Government, suddenly the ROTUNDA is lighting the fires that are going to bring down the system.

Present Government

I have a great deal of admiration for the present government officers. I can only echo the comments I have heard from other students, that this is probably the best Student Government Longwood has had in a long time. It has proven to be progressive and responsive to student desires. It has made a definite effort to implement itself into the campus life and to be a realistic and vigorous source of leadership. Each officer presents an image of dedication to her job and the students. The ROTUNDA would be the first one to stand in the path of anyone intent on destroying this system.

Because the Student Government has been so effective, one tends to forget that it has only been in office a bare three months. The shortness of the time span and the intense effort that was made to choose qualified people seem to explain why committees have been sluggish in getting started. A system of really effective committees is the goal of the president of this Student Government and getting this on its feet and working takes time - time which I admittedly haven't given it. The only solution is to take a wait-and-see attitude and make a judgement after the committees have gotten started. However, I feel another guide to measuring the success of an organization, besides the new programs it introduces, is also the speed and efficiency with which the programs are presented. I hope it will not be next January before the students can enjoy the benefits of effective committees.

Reason For Letter

This open letter to you is the result of demands from some students for an apology to the Student Government and a retraction of the editorial. I refuse to do either! Apologies are for when you say something you don't really believe or support. Retractions are for when false facts are presented. Neither of these applies in this case.

I still believe that the constitution needs reviewing. Ignoring the question as to the roles of class officers, there are still areas that need tending to and a review committee would be beneficial to the government in the long run. My information was neither incorrect nor un-researched. Some committees have existed since last semester and they are still sloppy. I will acknowledge that they perhaps need more time.

The purpose of this letter is not to change my editorial stand from one extreme to another. Rather I would hope that it shows how ideas can be moderated. As much as the student government officers, it is my desire to serve the students. If the students feel that more time is needed before a judgement is made, then my editorial was premature. However, to the students and government officers I can only say that criticism in the ROTUNDA is meant to be of a purely constructive nature and not destructive. The interpretation of this rests with each individual student, but the ROTUNDA will not cease to be an organization of critical examination because of anyone's interpretation.

Letters to the Editor

CHI

Dear Editor,

It has been our purpose "to promote and maintain a spirit of cooperation among students in every phase of college life." We have seen the "phases" of college life here at our institution alter and change in four years. It remains important, though, to be interested in activity, in learning, in participating - to believe in something, and make yourself a part of it.

CHI would like to take this opportunity to thank all those who have followed and supported the changes initiated this year. We have strived to "keep up with the times," in order to maintain an organization that is relevant and meaningful to members of this college community.

The spirit of work, of love, of life, is important to each of us. So let this organization be.

Sincerely,
CHI 1972

Tennis Courts

Dear Editor,

Now that the warm weather and Tennis season is here, there is a battle for the courts. We patiently wait for other Longwood students but when we find high school kids on the courts, we get upset! Don't they have courts at Prince Edward Academy to play on? If not, why doesn't the town of Farmville or Prince Edward County furnish some? We have paid as part of our tuition to be allowed to use the college facilities. When we were playing, five high school boys kept harassing us by throwing their tennis balls on the court and using obscene language because we played longer than they wanted to wait! Needless to say, my opponent and I were "a little upset." Can anything be done?

Medea watches Jason in his grief in learning she has killed their children.

'Stunning' Production Of 'Medea' Praised As Best Of The Season

By DAVID VEST
Longwood's theatrical season closed on a triumphant note last week with a stunning production of the MEDEA of Euripides, under the direction of Mr. Douglas Young.

This review is based upon the Wednesday performance, which had several technical flaws, but to anyone who saw MEDEA, quibbles over the lights that came on late once or twice and the sound effects that sounded unsure of themselves will seem as trivial as the feminist house-pocus that was used to publicize the play (after all, it is pity and fear that make tragedy "relevant," not issues).

To begin with, no one who saw Belinda Brugh and Robert McIlwaine play Medea and Jason is likely to forget it. Miss Brugh was simply overpowering. She WAS Medea, and the fullness of her characterization was a rare and distinct pleasure. Audiences will recall Mr. McIlwaine's fine performance as Prospero in THE TEMPEST; he was in complete command of the role of Jason. After first convincing us of a Jason who seemed indestructible, he made Jason's collapse more terrifying than the murder of Medea's children.

Although Medea and Jason dominate the play, the supporting cast deserves extensive praise. Joyce Saunders was exceptionally good as the Nurse. It was the best job of playing an elderly woman I have ever seen by a college actress. The Nurse and the chorus of Athenian women (played by Cindy Baugh, Lottie Lawrence, and Joanne Noseck) had the formidable task of remaining on stage, silent for long periods, during almost the entire play. They managed it well, and their gestures and expressions were nearly always interesting in exactly the right way.

Bridget MacKillop and Janet Baker played triple roles with efficiency and often striking effectiveness, especially in their male roles as Creon and Aegeus. Kate Young and Nash Tatum were just right as the children. Space does not permit the credit the costumes, make-up, and set deserve, but they were all very good.

It was a full measure of the power of tragedy and all-in-all the best production I have seen at Longwood. If there was anyone in the audience who went to Jarman under the illusion that Euripides is kept around as a sort of duty to Kulture, he was unburdened. Aristotle praised Euripides, in his POETICS, as "the most tragic of the poets," in spite of what he considered to be many stylistic flaws. It is uncanny that audiences living several centuries after the last time tragedy flourished can still be brought to agree. In our society most of the tragic flaws that caused the downfall of otherwise heroic men and women in Greek plays are not even considered defects of character.

I must also say that MEDEA was a fine finish to a semester that has been extraordinary for the arts in general at Longwood.

Young Receives Appointment To Maine Arts Center For Summer

Douglas M. Young, Assistant Professor of Speech and Dramatic Arts, has been appointed Guest Artist and Educator-in-Residence at the Ram Island Arts Center in Portland, Maine for the summer season, 1972. The Arts Center is growing rapidly and becoming known as a "living laboratory" for the performing arts, and an innovative force in the upper New England region. A Shubert Fellowship winner, Mr. Young is preparing an original script for production by the Ram Island Performing Arts Ensemble in mid-August. He will also serve as Script Consultant and Associate Director in producing the play, assisting the Arts Center's Managing Director. In addition, Mr. Young will conduct a seminar entitled THE DRAMATIC MEDIUM during the last four weeks of the Center's summer season.

Mr. Young received an M. A. in English from the University of North Carolina and an M. A. in Drama from the University of Virginia. Among his many original works produced are: WAITIN' FOR EDEN, A THIN LITTLE BOOK, ANGELS OF THE HALF MOON, and AMONG THE BRUTES AND THE TULIPS.

The script, now under the working title of WATERBUGS, is based on the theme, "America - Community or Chaos?" It will pace an ensemble cast through fragments of American life, from historical, sociological and contemporary viewpoints. In the DRAMATIC MEDIUM seminar particular stress will be placed on audience response to dramatic and communication media in terms of the varied appeals and life styles apparent in the continuum of audience composition and dramatic modes.

Faculty Organ Recital Features Mr. Hesselink Sunday Evening

The Music Department of Longwood College will present Paul S. Hesselink, Assistant Professor of Music, in a Faculty organ recital in Wygal Recital Hall on Sunday evening, May 14 at 8:00.

Mr. Hesselink's program will include selections from J. S. Bach's work, THE ART OF FUGUE, which the composer wrote as a veritable treatise on "how to compose fugues." About one-third of the work will be presented, which, in its entirety, takes approximately ninety minutes to perform. In the second portion of the program, Mr. Hesselink will present three compositions composed within the last two years by Richard Felciano, Daniel Pinkham, and Robert W. Jones. All three compositions are written for organ and electronic sound tape.

Following Mr. Hesselink's Longwood recital, portions of the program will be presented in three short recitals as part of Hope College's annual Tulip Time Organ Recital Series, May 18-20, 1972. This is the second year he has been invited to participate in the recital series which is a feature of Holland, Michigan's annual Tulip Festival. During the summer, Mr. Hesselink plans to play the Bach work, THE ART OF FUGUE, in its entirety at the University of Colorado.

David Dellinger addresses rally at Hampden-Sydney last week.

The War Is Far From Over

By ROBERT H. SELLS
Hampden-Sydney Correspondent

In the spring a young man's fancy turns to?

This spring is like several other previous springs to many college students. The dogwoods reappeared, if not exactly on schedule, at least in a profusion that was commensurate with our expectations. The grass that had become a lifeless brown during the long winter, is once again green. The robins, traditional heralds of spring, have made their presence known.

But, for many students, something else has returned this spring; something that many had hoped would not stare at us from this spring's headlines and obituaries.

The war is still with us. It is with the class of '72 as it was with the class of '68. It is with those who give brothers and boy friends and husbands and fathers, and it is with those who read about it in the RICHMOND TIMES-DEPARCH.

Protest Movements

This spring was inaugurated with antiwar protests. Two weeks ago students at over 175 colleges and universities matched President Nixon's escalation of the Indochina war with the largest wave of antiwar activities to sweep across the nation since the protests over the Cambodian invasion in 1970. Strikes, rallies, teach-ins and marches were held as students celebrated the return of spring and denounced the killings in Vietnam.

Maryland Violence

Maryland Gov. Marvin Mandel declared a state of emergency and called out the National Guard to maintain order at the University of Maryland at College Park, where three days of disturbances by as many as 2,000 students had involved rock and tear-gas battles with police and repeated blockades of traffic on crowded Route 1.

Peaceful

Demonstrations

Most of the campus demonstrations were comparatively peaceful. After a bitter meeting of the university senate, Columbia joined 100 other colleges in a one-day closedown. 50,000 marchers converged on New York City to demonstrate in the rain against the war.

Last week at Hampden-Sydney 300 peaceful students and faculty members for H-S and Longwood rallied for two hours in the mellow of a spring night. And during those two hours, 200 tons of bombs were dropped over Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia. That is what the rally was all about. No policemen were necessary, no tear-gas escaped and no buildings were rocked or burned or barricaded.

Two slide programs were shown, two doves spoke rather plainly against the war, petitions were signed and a poignant ballad expressed one girl's sentiments against war.

Guest Speakers

John "Dancing Bear" Leland and David Dellinger, a Chicago Eight defendant, were the featured speakers. Dellinger was a bit more persuasive and much more eloquent and sophisticated. The main thrust of his speech was that we Americans do not stop to realize what is really happening in Vietnam. We accept, for the most part, Nixon's alibis and his nominal withdrawals, but we fail to comprehend the fact that though there might be fewer ground forces (and who really knows how many are actually there?) the numbers of bombs and bombings increase.

Nixon's Address

This was demonstrated dramatically on April 26, President Nixon announced in a televised address to the nation that 20,000 more troops would be withdrawn from Indochina by July 1. But, President Nixon went on to say that the U. S. air and naval attacks on North Vietnam would continue. And they have continued. More than 150 fresh planes were rushed to the theater from bases as far away as North Carolina to assemble the strongest air and sea armada since 1968. The B-52 bomber fleet has been nearly doubled since the North Vietnamese offensive began.

U. S. Record

In the first three months of 1972, President Nixon has sent more bombing raids against North Vietnam than in all of 1971. Senator Harold Hughes summarized the findings of the Center for International Studies at Cornell University when he said: "The level of U. S. activity has declined in recent years, as measured by both sortie rates and bomb tonnage. The prolongation of the war, however, has meant that the Nixon administration has now dropped a larger tonnage of bombs in Indochina than did the Johnson administration. For the years 1965-68, the total was 3,141,000 tons of bombs. By the end of 1971, the total since 1969 was 3,304,000 tons. In all of World War II the U. S. dropped about two million tons; in Korea the total was about one million tons. We have subjected an area about the size of Texas to twice as much bombing as we did in both World War II and Korea."

Student Mobilization Committee

According to the Student Mobilization Committee "the government is not winding down the war; what it is attempting to wind down is the issue of the war and sentiment against it. However, sentiment against U. S. involvement continues to be the number one issue in the presidential race."

War Issue

The war thus becomes even more a political issue, rather than a military or pragmatic one. President Nixon's Democratic Congress has continually pushed for antiwar legislation. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee recently voted 9 to 1 to cut off all funds for U. S. hostilities in Indochina after the end of this year, provided North Vietnam and its allies agreed to release all U. S. prisoners of war.

This and similar legislative acts could feasibly pass in both the Senate and the House. Of course, President Nixon would almost certainly veto any such legislation, but the ensuing political embarrassment could become uncomfortable.

Democratic Candidates' Postitions

Sen. George McGovern is the most outspoken political critic of the war. Campaigning on a platform of complete withdrawal of U. S. troops, McGovern recently stated that if elected he would order an immediate withdrawal in his inauguration speech.

Sen. Muskie has pledged a similar withdrawal within 60 days of his inauguration in return for the release of all U. S. POW's.

Even Gov. George Wallace of Alabama has become outspoken against the war, much to the astonishment of voters everywhere. "I'm for gettin' out," Wallace said, "it will be tough, but I want us out."

What Can Students Do?

But, with all this rhetoric, the troops are still there. And the bombings continue and occasionally increase. What can we do? We can pledge, as many did who signed the petitions at the H-S rally, to vote only for the presidential candidate who promises an immediate and complete withdrawal.

We do have a weapon. It was not made by ITT or GE or Westinghouse, but we do have an important weapon. This year more than 25 million 18 to 24-year-olds will be eligible to vote for the first time. This is a potent and impressive weapon. As David Dellinger said at the rally, "If the government does not stop the war, then the people must stop the government."

Colleges In The News

Dorm Choice

BLACKSBURG — According to Roland Wheeler, director of housing, and Landrum Cross, counselor for student programs, the new housing situation, created by the change in open house policy, may cause problems for next year's Virginia Tech students. Students' open house privileges will be decided by parental permission slips which have been mailed to the parents. Parents must sign for the student to live in either a dormitory without open house, with closed-door open house, or open-door open house. All students, even if they are 21 and self-supporting must still obtain his parent's permission to live in an open house dorm. Wheeler said that the Housing Office is not opposed to students changing their open house classification during the year, but he also added that this might be difficult due to space limitations in the dormitories. Due to the large number of students, upperclassmen may be turned away from dormitory housing since this is guaranteed only to incoming freshmen.

VMI Film

LEXINGTON — Producer Frank McCarthy and writer Paul Casey have arrived in Lexington for research at Virginia Military Institute on the Civil War Battle of New Market, in which cadets from VMI played a major role. McCarthy plans to produce a motion picture based on the battle with Casey, a veteran television writer. McCarthy plans to remain in Lexington for about a week, with Casey remaining for six weeks preparing an outline for the script. Casey, who recently completed the production of the Academy Award-winning film, "Patton," is a Richmond native and a graduate of VMI.

Eliminating "F"

WILLIAMSBURG — The elimination of the F grade, is a proposed change in the academic regulations at a meeting of the Committee on Academic Regulations at William and Mary last week. In a report the committee asserts that "the present system of grading is geared too much to recording what the student did not do, and it does so in an ambiguous manner at that . . . The ad hoc Committee feels that the primary function of grades on a student's academic record should be to indicate what has been achieved." Therefore, the Committee has proposed that the grades F, X (absence from the final examination), WP (withdrawn passing), and WF (withdrawn failing) would no longer be used, substituting instead the notation NC (no credit) in all cases except medical ones.

Rotunda Restoration

CHARLOTTESVILLE — Edgar Shannon, president of University of Virginia, signed the contract completing the Rotunda restoration plans last week in ceremonies at Monticello. Tricia Nixon Cox, daughter of President Nixon, appeared at the ceremonies. In commenting on the project, Shannon said, "This is one of the most important moments of my life, to help bring about the restoration of one of Mr. Jefferson's finest architectural achievements." Shannon outlined the project's goals to restore the Rotunda to its original specifications and make it the "keystone" of the University.

Seven HSC Biology Majors Participate In Eight-Day Tour

By JOHN D. GUTHRIE
Hampden-Sydney Correspondent
Seven Hampden-Sydney College students, all biology majors, are participating in an eight-day tour of the Northeastern United States for the purpose of special study of the plant communities of that area.

According to Dr. Stanley Gembo, who is conducting the study tour, the objective of the trip is to encourage the student to become familiar with the ecology and geology of an area to which he has had no previous exposure. "The Northeastern United States provides a wide variety of habitats in a relatively small area and is, therefore, well-suited for study by groups like ours, which will be in the area for only a short time," he said.

Students participating in the tour, all of whom have completed a plant ecology course in preparation for the trip, are Joseph Nelson, Lynchburg; John Butzner III, Richmond; Philip Johnson III, Suffolk; Carl Foster, Wilmington, Del.; Vance Shields, Jacksonville, N. C.; David Taylor, Bluefield, W. Va.; and Leith Hartman III, Charleston, W. Va.

MRS. VIRGINIA KEMP ROWE

Teacher Of The Year Gives Talk On Methods

By PAM WATSON
Mrs. Virginia Rowe, a fourth grade teacher at William Walton Elementary School and Virginia's 1972 State Teacher of the Year, entertained last Thursday, May 4, in Wygal Auditorium with a talk on "Teaching in the 1970's."

She presented along with the use of an overhead projector and handouts for the audience, three different papers that she has compiled over her 29 years of teaching. The material was gathered from her own classroom teaching experiences.

Her first report was entitled "Accentuate the Positive; Eliminate the Negative." The different types of children were pointed out — such as the dishonest, the aggressive, or the slow learner, among others — and she then listed how to detect such symptoms for these types, the possible reasons for their behavior, and how to remedy or better the situation. She then discussed the problems of discipline and how to be an effective teacher.

She conducted the discussion much as she would her elementary classes, thereby making the discussion informal and everyone felt at ease to ask questions. From time to time, she added funny comments of students or some of her experiences in teaching, and also imitated types of students or traits of a 'bad' teacher.

Questions were raised by the audience on team teaching, the apathetic student, rules for the classroom, and seating arrangements and in each case she related how she had handled each situation.

Mrs. Rowe is a graduate of Longwood and Virginia Commonwealth University, where she is now presently enrolled in the graduate program. She was selected from 13 other nominees who were submitted by school divisions throughout Virginia to the State Board of Education. The award goes annually to a "skillful and dedicated teacher in kindergarten through grade 12."

Senior Assembly, Parade & Banquet Slated This Week

By JANET LYNN TENNYSON
The Senior Assembly, which takes place tonight, will be highlighted by the seniors giving a synopsis of their four years at Longwood. "The theme this year is Cramolot," said Pat Necessary, who is chairman of the affairs for the affairs of the assembly.

In the program, there will be different songs and events. The more serious side will include the tapping of Phi Kappa Phi and the presentation of the cherished Arc Award.

On the lighter side, Cahoots will give up their titles and hand them down to others who are worthy of Cahoots. CHI will also present a skit.

The Senior Class will sing a special song to the sister class and will also sing to each of the other classes. Finally, the senior assembly will end with the traditional songs and the arc will be formed by the seniors.

Betsy Craig is working as publicity chairman and Cookie Howell is in charge of the script for the senior assembly, which takes place in Jarman Auditorium at 7:30 p.m. There will be a 25 cent admission charge, which will go toward the senior class gift to the college.

Later on about 10 p.m., the campus will be brightened by the light and songs from the Lantern Parade. "The senior class will be led by the class president, Nancy Fowlkes, all about the campus," said Sally Foster, chairman for the parade.

Seniors will be dressed in academic attire with the underclassmen they have chosen as their little sisters, dressed in white. The big and little sisters will walk around campus, bearing the lanterns that the little sisters have made. A silhouette of "72" and "LC" will shine through the lanterns . . .

The parade will begin at the colonnade and proceed to each dorm on campus to sing songs and give a farewell to the school. Tomorrow night the class of 1972 will gather to have their last meal together. This is referred to as the Senior Banquet. Barbara Moore is chairman for the invitations. However, other plans were incomplete.

Inaccurate Count Poses Problem With Room Registration For Underclassmen

By VICKI BOWLING

An inaccurate count of the number of returning students was apparently the main problem in room registration, according to Dean Margaret Nuckols.

The cause of this inaccuracy was the late payment of the $50 room reservation fee by some students, Dean Nuckols said. There were well over 100 late payments.

The dean said that these students represented spaces which had been counted on as being vacant. Some girls paid the fee as late as the day on which they signed up for rooms. Everytime a student paid late, another student went lower on the list to sign up.

Next year the deadline for sending in the room reservation fee will be March 1. This should give the school plenty of time to get an accurate count of returning students, she said.

Most of the juniors and seniors were satisfied with their situation, she said. It was the rising sophomores who had most of the problems, as is the case every year.

Those sophomores who were left without rooms on the night they signed up were given the option of either being put on a waiting list or filling extra spaces in the dorms. There were 76 students who chose to go on the waiting list, Dean Nuckols explained.

On Thursday the 76 students on the waiting list were assigned rooms on first floor South Cunningham, normally a freshman dorm.

"We knew we were going to have to open up another dorm," Miss Nuckols said, "but we weren't sure which one. South Cunningham seemed to be the best choice."

Various problems had to be taken care of first, she said, such as reassigning the resident counselors for next year.

"When you house 1500 students, there are going to be problems," Dean Nuckols admitted.

The idea behind the housing philosophy, she explained, is not necessarily to keep friends together, but to have a compact situation concerning rooms and suites.

She gave several examples of problems faced. They didn't want three girls to sign up for a four-girl suite. The more this happened, the more roommates would have to be split up in the end to fill the vacancies. Also, any student who did not sign up for a room on her scheduled night forfeited her turn. Finally, a girl with a physical disability, such as asthma, had to be placed on a floor near the ground so that she wouldn't have to walk up ten flights of stairs after a fire drill.

One error she said she made was neglecting to find out when the seniors would graduate. She is in the process of getting this information now. Some seniors will graduate in January, resulting in more spaces.

She feels that the lottery system that Longwood uses is fair, as is the process of signing up according to class.

"This is one of the few class privileges we have left," she remarked.

She will work with students who are dissatisfied with their room situation from now until the end of school.

"If they come to me we'll take them on an individual basis, problem by problem," she said.

Norfolk Court Issues Order Halting Sale Of Term Papers

From News Reports
Richmond News Leader

A Norfolk court issued a temporary injunction last week which caused a halt to a Tidewater company's sales of term papers to college students.

The order was issued in the city court on a complaint that was issued by the board of visitors of Old Dominion University of Norfolk. The suit was filed against James P. Duffy, who is an agent for the Resume Service and Termpapers Unlimited, Inc., of Norfolk.

The suit claims that the company has advertised itself to the student public as a seller of term papers since last October. The suit contends that the company provides a catalog containing titles of term papers that a student may purchase and submit to his instructor as his own work.

The company has advertised its service in the university newspaper and distributed handbills on the campus. The advertisements say the company charges $2.50 per page for a term paper already in its library; $4.50 per page for an original term paper; and $1.00 per page extra for a "rush job."

The suit asserts that the company keeps a file card on each paper, saying which professors at a school have received it and what grade it received and that if a paper receives more than two "C's" it is removed from the catalog. The university reports that a number of such term papers have been purchased from the company and have been submitted either in whole or substantial part under the student purchaser's name for classwork assignments.

The suit contends that purchasing such term papers is "an intentional and unjustifiable interference with the relationship between the university and the student purchasing and submitting the paper, because it induces the student to break the rule of conduct he undertook to abide by when he entered the university."

One of these term papers, the suit said, "encourages, aids, and abets students in attempting to obtain a degree from the university by fraudulent means and seriously impairs the integrity of the university grading system."

The suit contends that the business activities of the company have directly "subverted the process of learning and encouraged plagiarism, academic misconduct, and intellectual dishonesty."

The court order will remain in effect until June 15 at which time a request for a hearing on the merits of the suit will be made on behalf of the university by Atty. Gen. Andrew P. Miller. The suit is seeking to have the temporary injunction made permanent.

Residence Board Discusses Banquet Room, Signing In

By JANET LYNN TENNYSON

"The colors for the dining room-banquet room have been approved," said Denise Morris, chairman for the dining hall committee, "and the colors are basically blue." The committee chairman presented the decisions to Residence Board at their meeting, held May 2.

The walls will be an off-white with blue trim on the woodwork. Carpeting in the new room will be dark blue and the drapes will be a blue and tan pattern. The chairs and tables will be walnut and the chair covers will coordinate with the room.

The board passed a change in the sign-in procedure. When returning to the dorm from an overnight stay, students are supposed to sign-in before curfew. As it is now, students failing to sign-in by curfew are given a warning for the first offense, and a campus for the second time.

The change will involve the following: for failure to sign-in by curfew, a student is considered late and will have two minutes taken from her late minutes each time the offense occurs. This change will be effective in the fall semester.

There was a lateness investigation report concerning a student who returned to the dorm one hour and 15 minutes after curfew. After consideration of the entire situation, Residence Board gave the student a one week campus.

Residence Board reminded students that late permission is only valid if the student attends the function for which the late permission was requested.

The proposals about no curfew and open house have been set aside for the time being. Board chairman Terry Jones said, "I have a meeting with Dr. Willett to discuss these." The main problem is that the proposals have not been discussed and considered for any length of time, so for now the proposals will have to wait until after the meeting.

Diversity In Higher Education Needed To Help Develop Individuals

Condensed from the Richmond Times-Dispatch

"What this country needs is a good woman's college."

Improbable as it may seem this statement might become entirely credible in years to come if diversity in higher education is not maintained, the president of Sweet Briar College warned at a talk he gave in Richmond to the Woman's Club.

"If all higher education is standardized, we are denying the whole purpose of the educational process," said Dr. Whiteman, "which is not to aim for life adjustment, but to develop the individual. Some women simply don't flourish well in a coed school."

Noting a new resurgence of women's colleges after some 70 to 80 closed over the past decade or so, Dr. Whiteman said there are 180 to 190 left in the United States. Schools like Sweet Briar; Radford; or Longwood which has admitted a limited number of male students, are "holding their own."

The question of preserving diversity is a vital one in regard to settling the financial crises that wrack most schools today. Noting that higher education is no longer the right of the few, he said that financial considerations must now take in an open admissions policy at most colleges. This can be manageable, if administrators can avoid making all institutions uniform.

Dr. H. B. Whiteman, who assumed his duties as the sixth president of Sweet Briar last July, reviewed the financial burden in the path of the course of education, and pointed out the dangers to of "too much management consultant efficiency" at colleges.

He related the story of the management consultant hired to reshuffle the business of a symphony orchestra. Pointing out that the orchestra had 12 violinists, the consultant suggested practice-ally, "Why not cut it down to one and amplify him?" For just such a reason, one can't cut out experience at an institution.

"INSTITUTIONAL MANAGEMENT MUST BE PRACTICAL BUT ONLY IN PART FOR THIS IS THE GREATEST DANGER TO LIBERAL ARTS," HE CONTINUED, "WE CAN'T AFFORD, EVEN IN THE INTEREST OF EFFICIENCY, TO ABANDON THEM."

A final major point to consider in facing up to current financial crises is the pressure on universities to be "social agents." In pointing out new policies announced by Wesleyan and Yale universities, Dr. Whiteman said the schools have stated their purposes to be "for socially desirable objectives."

This form of management which he said involves the use of economic power in terms of stock and voting rights, "puts the schools in a dangerous position."

7 wrong reasons for having a baby:

1. "You're married a year now. When are you going to give us grandchildren?"

2. "You want to have a kid, Evelyn? All right, we'll have a kid. Maybe that'll patch things up."

3. "Why knock myself out working when I can have a baby?"

4. "I bet my parents would send us money if we had a baby..."

5. "Heh-heh, hey Frankie, what are you and Margie waiting for?"

6. "We only want two kids. But if we don't have a boy we'll keep trying!"

7. "Sure I want babies. What else is a woman for?"

Photos by Leonard Nones

These are just seven of the many wrong reasons for having a baby.

There's only one right reason: because you really want one.

And the right time is when you want one. When the baby can be a welcome addition, not an accidental burden.

Unfortunately lots of people who think they know how to go about birth planning don't. (Research statistics show that more than half the pregnancies each year are accidental!)

That's not having babies for wrong reasons.

That's just being wrong.

Freshmen, Sophomores And Juniors Elect Chairmen

By BECKY NICHOLSON

Last week each class met and elected its respective Octoberfest Chairman and Class Party Chairman for next Fall.

The Freshman class elected Sarah Smithy to be their Octoberfest Chairman, and Beryl Dixon as the Green and White Party Chairman. During the meeting the class voted to donate $10 to the Meherrin Day Care Center, and they discussed the Wygal Scholarship. The Wygal Scholarship is a $50 scholarship based on financial need.

The Sophomore class elected Becky Bailey and Bobbie Bannum as the co-chairmen for Octoberfest next Fall. They also elected Janet Baker as the new Red and White Party Chairman.

At this meeting the Sophomores discussed nominations for the Fall and Spring Sport's Chairmen. In this election Ellen Adams became the new Fall Sport's Chairman, and Debbie Carneal became the Spring Sport's Chairman.

The Juniors elected Gail Gossage as the new Blue and White Party Chairman for the Fall. The class elected Rosie Davis as the 1972 Octoberfest Chairman, and they elected Sue Manahan as Winter Sport's Chairman.

The Juniors also discussed the possibility of having disposable caps and gowns to use next year. These gowns cost about $4.95. Debbie Hyatt, President of the class, showed one of the gowns to the class, and the Juniors were in favor of using the gowns.

Hampden-Sydney TIGER Editor Joins H-S Administrative Staff

By JOHN D. GUTHRIE

William W. Watson, a senior at Hampden-Sydney College this year, will join the College's administrative staff as admissions counselor this summer, according to an announcement by John H. Waters III, director of admissions at the college.

Bill Watson will assume his duties in July and will work in the college's admissions program with secondary schools throughout Virginia and other states. He will work directly with school guidance counselors in interpreting the educational program and opportunities offered by Hampden-Sydney, and will arrange admissions programs and interviews with prospective students both on and off campus. He will also work in the college's financial assistance program for students, which operates under the direction of the admissions office.

A native of Bedford, Va., Watson is a candidate for the B. A. degree with a major in English. While a student at Hampden-Sydney, he has been active in academic and extra-curricular life. ## Increase, Changes Made In State Teachers' Scholarship

By LYNDA VAN HORN

An increase of $100 in the State Teachers' Scholarship will go into effect for the next school year. The scholarship grant will be $450 for eligible students in four year colleges and universities and $225 for eligible students in community colleges.

Next year will be the first year students attending community colleges will be eligible to receive the scholarship.

Certain restrictions were placed on the acquisition of the scholarship, however. Only a limited number of freshmen and sophomores will be able to receive the scholarship. Students majoring in economics, health and physical education (girls), industrial arts, kindergarten, library science, mathematics, primary and elementary, sciences (exclusive of biology), and special education will be given priority in this classification.

First priority will be given to students already in the program, and juniors and seniors not previously in the program regardless of academic area will be given second priority.

In order to receive the scholarship a student must have a 2.0 average. Freshmen must have acquired an above rank in high school or above average score on standardized scholastic aptitude or achievement test. But, according to Gary Groneweg, Director of Financial Aid, "There will be very, very limited funds available to incoming freshmen."

Students wishing to receive the scholarship are urged to go to Mr. Groneweg's office before school closing to fill in an application.

Legislative Board Approves Second-Hand Book Store; Slated To Begin Fall, 1972

By BECKY NICHOLSON

Last week the Legislative Board approved the corrected draft of a secondhand bookstore which will begin next Fall. The bookstore managers are volunteers who are obtained by Legislative Board. The store will be located in the Honor's Council Room or the Y.W.C.A. Room.

The bookstore will operate for approximately one month. On the first week of its operation students will bring used books to the store, and the next two weeks will be spent in actually selling the books. On the fourth week students who have sold books will come to the store and pick up their money.

The managers issue two identically numbered cards when an individual brings a book into the store. The seller writes the following information on the card: her name, dormitory address, post office box number, title of the book, and the price. After the card is completed the price cannot be changed!

One of these cards goes into the book, and one goes on file. The card on file will have the policy of the bookstore on the back, which the student has read and signed. This policy will probably say that the bookstore will not be held responsible if books are stolen, although the managers will do everything in their power to deter possible stealing.

When a purchaser buys a book, she will bring the book to the desk, and she will place a check to the owner of the book or cash into an envelope. The managers of the bookstore will stamp the date on the book to signify that it is sold.

A list of the purchased books is then placed on the door of the bookstore so that the original owner of the purchased book may pick up his money at the bookstore. The original owner of the book must pay a 10 cent service charge if she sells the book. If her book is not purchased, then the girl must pick it up before the deadline which will be posted in the daily bulletin. All of those books, which are not picked up before the deadline, are forfeited to the bookstore.

If there is any money left over from the bookstore, the Legislative Board will decide what to do with it. At this time there is no way of calculating how much will be left, if any.

Also, at the Board meeting last week, Becky Bailey announced that the library hours could be extended on the Friday before exams on Saturday. Due to a lack of volunteers, the library hours cannot be extended over the entire week end.

"My husband, Eugene, is a Lieutenant-Commander in the Navy. He's been a prisoner in Vietnam for 4 years.

They're bargaining to get the prisoners released.

But what I want to know... is he still alive? Is he well?

I can't find out.

Hanoi won't tell our government.

Hanoi won't tell me!"

There need be no "bargaining table" when the plea is for humane treatment of prisoners of war.

THE prisoner-of-war issue is complex and confusing. It is loaded with political overtones and emotional tension.

But one side of the prisoner-of-war issue is simple. That's the part which deals with the condition of prisoners.

Who are they? Where are they? How are they?

Those are the questions the families of American prisoners want answered. Those are the questions the conscience of the world wants answered...now.

Of course, they want the war to end and the prisoners of war to be released as soon as possible.

But meanwhile there is no need for Hanoi and its allies to delay even a day in answering this plea:

Admit official neutral observers into the prison camps in North Vietnam, South Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos, where Americans are being held in secret captivity.

Assure the world, through these neutral observers, that American prisoners are being decently and humanely treated, according to the standards of civilized nations.

Hanoi can do this without bargaining, even without consultation.

By opening the prisons now to official neutral observers, Hanoi would earn the gratitude of millions of Americans and find new stature in the eyes of the world.

We ask and pray they will.

SUPPORT OUR PLEA TO HANOI AND ITS ALLIES:

Clear away the doubts—
Open your prison camps to neutral observers...
now!

We ask no more than we give. All American and South Vietnamese prison camps are inspected regularly by official neutral observers—The International Committee of the Red Cross.

The Rotunda

VOL. XLVII

LONGWOOD COLLEGE, FARMVILLE, VIRGINIA, WEDNESDAY, MAY 17, 1972

NO. 25

Q - Why with all of the financial cut backs are there appearing on campus so many extras like banisters at the steps of Lankford and Bedford, little white signs with the names of buildings and new drapes in the Rotunda?

J. T.

A - Dr. Willett supplied us with the following answer:

Banisters on the two buildings involved were necessary in order to eliminate safety hazards and are top priority items in my opinion. There have been several accidents on these steps.

We have received numerous complaints throughout the years for lack of identification of buildings. Funds for the signs identifying the buildings were allocated long before the budget cut-backs took place.

Q - Why were the state cars sent back to Richmond? Organizations are going to be put in a hardship when they want to take a trip. If we're going to save money, I can think of a lot of areas better than eliminating transportation. A. G.

A - Dr. Willett forwarded this question to Col. Carr, Vice President for Administration, who supplied us with this answer:

The justification for having the State cars is to provide transportation for members of the faculty who are involved in supervising student teachers and performing other official state travel. At the end of the student teaching period, we must send the cars used for that purpose back to the Central Garage. We have, when transportation is available, allowed student organizations to use them. All state agencies must submit a justification to the Central Garage when requisitioning and retaining state cars. Requisitioning and retention of these vehicles on the basis of student organization use is not sufficient justification to Central Garage.

To B. C. M., who asked the question about being able to study in Jeffers during the exam period, we've had some trouble getting an answer to your question. As of the time the Rotunda went to press, we had no answer. However, if the answer to your question has not appeared in the Daily Bulletin already, it will before the end of the week.

Curfew Changes Highlight Conference

By VICKI BOWLING
A change in curfew procedures dominated the discussion at Dr. Willett's last press conference of the year, held Thursday in the Gold Room.

Curfew Procedures

Dr. Willett began the discussion by explaining that a proposal for a change in the present procedure calls for a system in which a person can get back in the dorm after the doors have been locked.

He said that he and Dr. Gussett will soon meet with the chairmen of Legislative and Residence Boards to try to arrange a proposal to go before the Board of Visitors.

"I am optimistic in so far as our ability to work out a suitable plan," he said.

"My own preference," he continued, "leans towards one where you as a dormitory student would assume the responsibility to get into the dormitories."

A suggested plan entails having the campus police let the students in. Chuckling, Dr. Willett said he has visions of the night-ey-watch spending the entire night letting girls in.

But, he said, he does have misgivings of having a student waiting at a door until the campus police drive by. He remarked that he is also opposed to giving every student a key.

Several students took the opportunity to ask questions and give their opinions about a new curfew procedure.

Dr. Willett turned over the question of whether or not a student could leave at anytime as well as come in at anytime to Terry Jones, chairman of Residence Board. She replied that the Board really hadn't considered this aspect of a change, but that as it stands now, a student will not be able to leave between the hours of 2-6 a.m.

Dr. Willett added, "I'm certainly not agreeable to anything in which the dormitories are not locked for that period of time."

Dr. Willett and Dean Blackwell fielded questions during the press conference.

To the possibility of having a student in a job capacity letting other students in, he explained that there are no funds for this.

"Frankly, I think you're better off with some kind of voluntary system," he offered.

If a voluntary system is adopted, he said, the dormitories must work out something with their own volunteers.

Mary Lou Glasheen, chairman of Legislative Board, said that at VPI every student has to take a turn at manning the desk to let students in after the doors are locked. Each student does this about once a semester.

Some girls disagreed on being responsible for letting others in if they never stayed on campus on week ends.

One student remarked that it wouldn't hurt anybody to stay on campus one week end a semester in order to have the privilege of staying out later.

Dr. Willett told her, "You sum up my feelings exactly."

Terry answered many minor questions concerning a change.

She said that guests would be able to take advantage of a change, since they would have the same privileges as their Longwood hostess.

A change would apply to all students, including freshmen, she said.

With a change in curfew procedure, the sign-out system would be changed, she said. Possibilities for a change include having a student letting the dorm know where she is in case of an emergency, and having some kind of indication as to how many will not be in when the doors are locked.

Dates would still be asked to leave when the doors are locked.

As to the possibility of extending a change in curfew to week-nights, Terry explained that this might come about in the future but for the moment they are just trying to bring about the change for week ends.

In regards to this question, Dr. Willett remarked, "Theoretically, you're supposed to go to class the next day."

He also said that he would not have the head residents or more campus police stay up and be responsible for letting girls in. If the curfew is changed on week ends, the head residents will go off duty at the same time they do now.

Records Questioned

One student brought up the question of student records, asking what kind of records are kept and could a student see her records.

Dean Blackwell replied, "Students do not have the right to look at their own folders."

He said that physical, academic, and placement folders are kept on every student, and that these are strictly confidential. He explained that "total frankness" was desired on records, and that this would be impossible if students were allowed to read them.

People in the College see only those records which are applicable to them, he emphasized. Records are even more confidential to others. He said that they even have refused to let police officers see records.

Mr. Groneweg said that there is a financial record in his office for every student receiving financial aid.

Dean Wilson added that a folder on every student is kept in her office which is helpful in writing recommendations. One sheet in this folder is filled out by the student's head resident. While this sheet consists mainly of factual information, some remarks on citizenship and personal appearance are called for, she said.

Mrs. Ordeugh, head resident for French, Tabb, and South Ruffner, wished to assure students that head residents usually forget a disagreement with a student by the end of the year. If not, they have a conference with the student to discuss the matter.

Concern Over Theft

One of the main topics which Dr. Willett himself discussed concerned theft.

Board Of Visitors Commends Students, Faculty Member

Dr. Willett presents awards to Dr. Smith, Sandy Oliver and Dee Dee Arvin.

By DEBBIE BASTEK
The Longwood College Board of Visitors formally recognized two students and one faculty member last Friday for their 'distinguished service to the college.' Dr. Willett presented the awards to Dr. Barbara Smith of the P.E. Department, Sandy Oliver, Chairman of Judicial Board, and Dee Dee Arvin, Miss Longwood 1971 at noon in the Board room.

Dr. Smith has been involved in the many activities of the P.E. Department, and was commended for her "outstanding job" in coaching the Longwood golf team to the Virginia Women's Intercollegiate Golf Championship this year. She has been a member of Longwood's faculty since 1962. Dr. Smith received her B. S. from Limestone College, and her M.Ed. and Ed. D. in physical education from the University of North Carolina. She has been an area consultant for the National Golf Foundation, and often conducts seminars in the teaching of golf.

Sandy Oliver, a junior physical education major from Richmond, was recognized for her service as Chairman of the Judicial Board, which was described as "outstanding." She has been a member of the varsity hockey team, the Athletic Association, Korkettes, and Alpha Gamma Delta sorority.

Dee Dee Arvin was recognized for her service to the college during her reign as "Miss Longwood 1971." A music education major from Victoria, she represented Longwood at many special events during the past year. Dee Dee is also a member of Concert Choir and Sigma Alpha Iota honorary music fraternity.

The Trials Of Judicial Board

"Do you remember when you used to look up to the Judicial Board Chairman?"

Those of us who attended Senior Assembly and sat through the selection of the new members of Cahoots had this "remember when" hit us right between the eyes. There was a definite tensing in the audience, which grew more pronounced as the comments grew more biting and specific.

Frankly, I didn't find the comment surprising. Excluding the freshmen and transfers, there can hardly be a student on campus who doesn't remember the extreme criticism that Judicial Board came under last year. For those of you who weren't here, students took issue primarily with the closed trials, the wearing of black robes and the fact that the accuser doesn't have to face the accused. There was also a general demand for a counseling service to be set up and education for students in "college" law.

Judicial Board will have to face the fact that there is still much dissatisfaction among the student body as far as its operations are concerned. This was best evidenced by the opposition that was raised early this semester when the board wanted to extend its authority to cover incidents downtown. Changing the robes to blue and writing down procedures were hardly enough change to satisfy the anger that was manifested last year. Nothing has even been heard of the counseling service since the first of the year. If it exists, it's more secretive than the board.

However, the comment made by Cahoots was a very personal one and has its basis only in the side of the coin just presented. If you flip the proverbial coin over, you see a somewhat different picture of Judicial Board.

How many of us could sit on that board, knowing fully that it's a job that has to be done, but that whatever decision is reached will affect a student, certainly for the rest of her college career, if not for her life? Many of us tend to look at members of this board as just other students, who run for a position in Student Government for a little glory and maybe to have a little power. I've heard them compared to gods sitting on Olympus, hurling down decisions in thunderbolts.

It's odd that the girl sitting next to you in class can be your best friend until you or one of your closer friends has to appear before the board. Suddenly she becomes a student-eating monster. It especially hurts if she is a friend and won't give you special consideration because of that.

These girls don't change like that. They don't take the jobs for glory or power. There can't be a job on campus that's any more deficient in either. It's probably reasonable to say that they perceive a real need for the Honor Code and its enforcement. They're sincere in trying to implement the rules in the fairest way possible for all students, without playing favorites for anyone.

There are still many things that I find disturbing about the way this board functions. I also think many students overreacted ridiculously to the Cahoots' barb. We have here a case where both sides are right. Change is needed and quickly, before the board loses all of its respect among the students and ceases to be a viable organization. However, the students on the board deserve some admiration for what they're trying to do. The project for next year should be to change the board, not the caliber of students serving on it.

* * * * *

On behalf of the staff, I would like to take this opportunity to wish all of you a pleasant summer. To the Seniors, who are reading their last issue of THE ROTUNDA, we wish you good luck in your chosen futures. We will be prepared to serve the new and returning members of the faculty and student body next fall. We think THE ROTUNDA has had a good year and, with the same help and cooperation, we can have another one next year.

Letters to the Editor

Appreciation

Dear Editor,

As a graduating senior, I would like to express my appreciation to the Administration, Faculty, and all the many people who maintain the facilities and services provided to students here at Longwood.

I appreciate Dr. Willett and the Administration's attempts to build a communicative relationship with students and the efforts of the Faculty to uphold a high standard of education.

I particularly appreciate the thoughtfulness and services of such persons as Mr. Carbone and the ARA Slater staff, Tim Brown and the Student Union, the Campus Police, the Buildings and Grounds staff, the Public Relations Office, and most important, the Placement Office!

Thank you,
Brenda Allen

To The Seniors

To the 1972 college graduates:

When I think of what it means to be graduating from college in today's world, I reflect sometimes on the story that is told of an old and wise teacher in ancient Greece. It is said that there was no question which the teacher could not answer and nothing which he could not understand. Finally, one student thought of a way to discredit his teacher's wisdom.

The student planned to conceal a bird in his hands. He would ask the old man to guess what he was holding and, if he guessed a bird, the boy would ask whether it was dead or alive. Should the old man guess dead, the boy would let the bird fly away. But, if the wise man guessed the bird was alive, the boy would crush out its life and open his hands to reveal a dead bird. And so it happened, until the boy asked, "Is the bird alive or dead?" The old man replied, "My son, the answer to that question is in your hands."

Today the future of this Nation surely rests in your hands. Whether the promise of progress and prosperity will be realized, whether democracy and freedom will grow, whether men will continue to be governed by human wisdom — all this, and more, rests in your hands.

You are the best educated generation in our history. What will you do with your knowledge and ideas? How fully will you engage your mind and will and spirit in helping to make America an even better place to live?

I am hopeful that you will use your talents and knowledge to help make our Nation's ideals a reality. Now is the time for a future of peace, for more responsible government, for equal opportunity for all. I congratulate you on what you have finished and look forward with hope toward what you can now begin to accomplish.

Richard Nixon

Tennis Courts

Dear Editor:

I would like to take this opportunity to bring to light a situation that needs attention. This letter concerns the over-crowded conditions of the tennis courts, of which there are only six for over 2,000 students. Because of the limited court space (especially at night with only four lights) it seems that students and faculty would appreciate a reminder of the need for courtesy and consideration on the court. I feel that students and faculty should never occupy a court longer than one hour, and they should play doubles if possible. When others are waiting, (and this is usually the case), promptness between and during games is certainly desirable. I want to remind students that we do have priority over local residents, Hampden-Sydney students, and faculty. On several occasions I have waited over a half hour to play and at least one of the courts has been occupied by HS boys. The only time I am successful in getting a court is when I carry racket and balls to a meal, rush through, and leave ten minutes before the general outdoor flow. Last Wednesday night I was lucky enough to obtain a court by following this procedure. My partner and I had played a grand total of 25 minutes when we were graciously informed that he had to leave to give our courts to administrative members. Needless to say, the relaxation gained from a few games of tennis seems hardly worth the frustration which parallels getting or keeping a court. I think the need for more courts or at least more consideration is strongly evidenced by the fact that our president has to "run off" students.

Sincerely,
Lynn Woodlief

Paul Rouillard's Art Show At Ohio U. Reviewed By Katz

Mr. Paul Rouillard, Assistant Professor of Art at Longwood College, has exhibited his series of paintings on the Kent State tragedy of May 1970 at Ohio University. This is the same exhibit which was shown at Longwood earlier this year. Ohio University's College of Fine Arts ranks in the top four nationally and the following review is by Professor Barry Katz of the Comparative Arts Department.

The current show by Paul Rouillard in Baker Center consists of an eighteen-frame montage personalizing the human emotion and agony of the violent student-state confrontation of Kent State two years back. The vocabulary is that of the instantaneous as the action jumps in machine gun meter from soldier with raised rifle to shrieking student, wounded student, charging troops, failed student, cemetery scene, etc. And always with an economy of means: sparse color, largely relegated to patternistic flat bands of grey, black, white, and purple; sometimes border, sometimes sky, other times ground, but always expressionistic environment as well as closely composed geometrical composition. The human figures are largely delineated in sketchy black crayon: child-like and naive yet painfully direct, unpretty, and dirty.

The central work of the series may well be termed LIBERTY LEADING THE PEOPLE, for indeed it is an updated version of Delacroix's famous tribute to the Paris uprising of 1830. The haphazard troops simultaneously fire in all directions as an activist student seen from behind bravely stands off the horde monopolizing the foreground space. Again color serves qualitative ends as the troops huddle under a grey band of sky in contrast to the stalwart rebel gloriously bedecked in brilliant red headband and banner.

The key to the success of these paintings is the manner in which, while using the instantaneous particular to good effect, the artist clearly goes beyond it at times, freezing emotional directness into eternal icons. The means vary: at times it's done through formal manipulation, the aforementioned use of color as abstract space; at other times through recall of Old Masters, be it Delacroix turned inside-out or Manet's dead toreador. And the stench of Goya is ubiquitous.

It's a good show, by a fine, well disciplined, sensitive artist, the best this campus has seen in a long time.

JANET HOWARD

Janet Leigh Howard Receives Title: "Miss Longwood - 1972"

By JANET LYNN TENNYSON

The crown of "Miss Longwood 1972" now rests upon the head of Miss Janet Leigh Howard. "I had mixed emotions at first," said Janet, who received the title through the reigning queen's retirement.

Amy Minter, could not be reached for comment on her retirement.

A junior from Roanoke, Va., Janet is a biology major who is undecided about career plans. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph D. Howard, of Roanoke.

"I am excited now and I am a little scared, too," began Janet, as she talked about the duties and pleasures of being the title holder. She plans to work on the steps for her dance routine, between studies and appearances as Miss Longwood.

About her talent, "My main interest is in animals and in the dance I am trying to portray the innocence of a baby chick, and show the laughter that is part of nature," explained Janet. "I want to use the same basic routine with a few changes," said Janet. The talent presented also included the ability to create and sew the costume which she wore for the dance.

As a student at Longwood College, Janet is active in many organizations. She was honored by her class by representing them in freshman and junior years on the May Day court. She served on the Virginian staff, and is a member of Lynchos, the honorary for math and science majors. She served as secretary for the junior class and was recently elected as secretary to the rising senior class. A member of Judicial Board and Sigma Kappa social sorority, Janet serves as secretary of Geist. From her experience as a student assistant, Janet plans to be an orientation leader in the fall.

Janet was chosen Roanoke Valley's "Junior Miss" and went on to become "National Miss Breck of 1969." When asked why she entered the college pageant rather than the hometown one, she said, "I am proud and I want to represent Longwood College because I like it and really care for this school."

After finishing this semester, Janet will have five weeks to prepare for the Miss Virginia pageant. "I guess I'll rest up and work on my dance act try to get a tan," noted Janet.

Juniors are exhibiting their art work in Bedford.

Art, Art, Art By Class Of 1973 Is On Exhibit In Bedford

ART, ART, ART, BY THE CLASS OF 1973 is currently on exhibit in the Bedford Building Gallery of Longwood College. As the annual presentation of works by junior art majors, the show contains over 150 pieces including paintings, drawings, prints, photographs, wall hangings, jewelry, enamels, macrame, ceramics, and sculpture.

Silhouetted against a black background, a macrame hanging by Janie Mosby delicately dominates one corner of the gallery. White knotted cord supporting and being formed by two plexiglas planes creates a lacy pattern floating in space.

A six part painting by Elaine Ford is a real bright spot in the show. Cornered but flowing, the rhythms of lively color seem to run off the canvases and into the room. Rebecca Wicker has several enamels pieces but none so fine as her wood carving of a falcon. Only about six inches tall, the sculpture captures the power and might of the bird in a stylized fashion.

The wax-covered styrofoam snail by Jane Matthews and ceramics by Cindy Saulfy represent other notable examples of three-dimensional work. A very free ink and blue watercolor wash drawing by Gayle Anderson is contrasted to Cathy Heinrich's large print, "Two Faces Have I," which is a combination of the embossing technique and hardboard printing.

Many other works are a viewer's delight and many are for sale. The show continues through May 19 and may be seen during regular gallery hours.

SENIORS: RAIN TICKETS FOR COMMENCEMENT are available now in the office of the Associate Dean of Students. Each senior may have 2 rain tickets for Commencement. 1. D. cards must be presented. On the morning of June 3, if any tickets are left, they will be given to seniors at the Information Office beginning at 7 a. m. - limit 2 tickets per senior. In the event of rain, the Commencement program will be televised in Jeffers Auditorium and in Hiner Building for guests who cannot be accommodated in Jarman.

Radford Board Approves Changes In Social Rules

By PAM WATSON

The board of visitors at Radford college, concerned by faculty unrest, students' complaints, and a sharp enrollment decline, approved last Tuesday a top-to-bottom change in the school's social regulations.

The board also approved a reorganization of the college's structure that was set up by the former president, Charles Martin, Jr. A school of arts and sciences of the familiar outline will replace the "division" system Martin set up. A still-to-be appointed dean will replace half a dozen or so division heads.

Dr. Preston Durrill, currently head of the abolished division of natural sciences, was appointed by the board to become dean of the school of graduate studies. Dr. Robert J. Miller was appointed dean of the school of natural sciences.

The newly created school of arts and sciences will combine the present schools of the humanities, social sciences, and natural sciences.

In other action, the board approved changes in social regulations that include relaxation of curfew and dormitory visiting privileges and an end to the college's attempt to control the activities of students while they are off campus. These approvals conform to recent court rulings concerning in "loco parentis" and acknowledges the General Assembly's recognition of the majority status of the 18-year-olds.

If the college had continued to lay down social restrictions on its students, it would have found itself in the position of regulating the social habits of the town's 18-year-old registered voters.

According to Frannie Keys, president of the student body, a student committee began work about three and one half months ago on an 80-page report that included research done on rules of other colleges, results of surveys that had been sent out to students and parents, and students' feelings about present rules, and a list of proposed changes they wanted in social and academic areas.

This report had been approved by the college senate before being presented to the board of visitors. The approved changes that will take effect in September include no restriction on where students can spend overnights. For the first time Radford girls will be able to entertain visitors of the opposite sex in their rooms from six to 11:30 p.m. on Fridays, two to 11:30 p.m. on Saturdays, and from two to seven p.m. on Sundays if a dorm as a whole votes and approves it.

A change was also made in the curfew hours. Students will not be allowed to have self-regulated hours. Under this ruling dorms will remain open until 2 a.m. on weekends after which all students will be able to obtain keys to the dorm with which they can come in at any time after 2 a.m. A parental notification form will be sent to all parents asking whether they approve of their daughter having self-regulated hours. If a student's parents do not approve but she engages in self-regulated hours the college cannot punish her for staying out past two a.m. but will send a letter to her parents notifying them that she has done so.

Frannie Keys, when asked about the past enrollment decline, said she feels that these new changes will have a definite effect on an increase in enrollment. "I am very happy and pleased with the concern and hard work of students that went into researching the report that caused these changes."

According to Lynn Nystrom, editor of the college newspaper, students are "ecstatic" about the changes, and the final guidelines will be completed in the next week.

Library Considers Circulation Changes

By VALERIE BLANKS

The library staff is in the process of deciding whether a change is necessary in its present circulation system.

They are studying and evaluating other circulation systems to determine the one that will be the most suitable for our situation. If they decide a change is necessary, they will ask the State Legislature to make the necessary funds available.

As the system stands now, books can be checked out for an indefinite period. This means the student is guaranteed two weeks to keep the book, but after that it is subject to call. If, for instance, after this two week period another student wishes to check out the same book and he asks for it at the desk, it will be recalled for him.

The major problem that has been incurred by the library is that of students taking books out of the library without signing them out, and then keeping them for long periods of time before returning them or not returning them at all.

To make the present system more effective, two changes will be made before summer school starts. The staff plans to convert all the entrances to the library, except the front entrance, to fire exits so that students will enter and leave through one door. All periodicals will be put on the ground floor with an attendant present at all times.

Next year the library staff hopes to take a full scale inventory of the books to discover which ones are missing and replace the essential ones.

DINKI BURNER

Dinki Burner Represents Longwood At Festival

By JANET LYNN TENNYSON

Miss Lila LaMerle "Dinki" Burner represented Longwood College as princess in the Apple Blossom Festival. The annual weekend, this year on May 4, 5 and 6, was held in Winchester, Va.

A sophomore, English major, Dinki was one of the 27 princesses who was an attendant for Queen Shelly Moore, daughter of the West Virginia governor.

"It was hectic, but I loved the whole weekend," said Dinki whose home is Lurey, Va. "I met Billy Graham, Howard Kosel and Miss Virginia 1971."

Residence Board Considers Curfew Changes

By JANET LYNN TENNYSON

Residence Board is investigating several schools in Virginia where there is no curfew system for female students. "We have called Mary Washington, Madison and Radford so far," said Terry Jones, chairman of Residence Board. This involves the change that Residence Board has proposed and is considering concerning curfew and open house.

"I had the meeting with Dr. Willett to discuss curfew," said Terry Jones, "and he wants us to work on a system."

At Madison, there is a requirement that all girls have parental permission in order to stay out past the curfew time. "Longwood isn't even interested or considering this, we want no curfew rules for everyone, including first-semester freshmen," added Terry.

In its use at Madison, between 35-50 girls take advantage of the system on weekends. However, "It cost Mary Washington $400 to change the locks on the doors," noted Terry.

"We want to pass something by next meeting," said Terry, "so we can present a detailed system to the Board of Visitors in August."

The dining hall committee chairman, Denise Morris, read a letter of reply from CHI. "There has been a desire on the part of the students to have a flag placed in the dining hall," said Denise, "so organizations were contacted and CHI is considering the suggestion."

Mention was made at the Residence Board that bicycles are being placed in front of the fire escape doors at Curry. It was decided that a sign would be posted regarding the nonobstruction of these doors.

Paula Williams, fire warden, said, "There will be no more fire drills this semester."

By ROBERT H. SELLS

Hampden-Sydney Correspondent

Four prominent Southerners with varied career backgrounds will be awarded honorary degrees by Hampden-Sydney College when the Presbyterian-affiliated institution holds commencement exercises concluding its 196th session on May 29.

To be honored in the 9 a.m. ceremony are Mr. John B. Fuqua, of Atlanta, chairman of the board and chief executive officer of Fuqua Industries, Inc., who will be awarded the Doctor of Laws degree; Mr. Warren W. John Fuqua

Mr. Fuqua will give the principal address during the exercises at which some 135 students will be candidates for baccalaureate degrees.

Mr. Fuqua is a native of Prospect, Prince Edward County, who left home after completing high school to pursue a career in radio, an interest developed at age 13 when he ordered a self-instruction booklet on the subject. In 1965, after business ventures in Augusta, Ga., in finance, communications and manufacturing, he purchased the controlling interests in an unprofitable $14 million clay products firm, thus setting the stage for the creation of Fuqua Industries, a diversified company whose 18 subsidiaries are primarily involved in the manufacture of leisure products and services, with sales in excess of $350 million last year.

A former four-term member of the Georgia legislature and a former chairman of the Democratic Party of Georgia, Mr. Fuqua also founded and is majority stockholder of Gable Industries, Inc., which is listed back-to-back on the New York Stock Exchange with Fuqua Industries. A past president of the Augusta Exchange Club and the Augusta Chamber of Commerce, and a past director of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce, he is currently a member of the Board of Trustees of Emory University and the Advisory Council of Georgia State University, among others.

Warren Hobbie

Mr. Hobbie, a native of Roanoke, is well known for his civic and business endeavors in the Roanoke Valley area. In addition to his association with Webster Brick Co., which operates four plants in Virginia and North Carolina, he is president of the Webite Corporation, of Charlottesville, and Graves-Humphrey, Inc., of Roanoke.

A director of the Mountain Trust Bank, and an elder in the Second Presbyterian Church, he is a member of the Shenandoah Club, Roanoke Country Club and Botetourt Country Club. In 1971, he retired from membership on Hampden-Sydney's Board of Trustees after having served on that body for 10 years.

William Sengel

A native of Fort Smith, Ark., Sengel has served as minister of Old Presbyterian Meeting House since 1960. A graduate of Davidson College, he was awarded the Bachelor of Divinity degree and a Master's degree in social ethics by Yale University in 1949 and 1950 respectively. Prior to accepting his present pastorate, Mr. Sengel served as minister of churches in Radford, Va., and Fulton, Mo., where he was a member of the faculties of Radford and Westminster Colleges, respectively.

A veteran of WW II, U. S. Navy Service, he has traveled widely on ecumenical missions and has held a number of important religious posts, including membership in the Consultation on Church Union and the Committee on Inter-Church Relations, Presbyterian Church, U. S., which he has served as chairman. A frequent contributor to periodicals, he collaborated in the publication of the book APPALACHIA IN TRANSITION in 1970.

He is currently serving as moderator of the newly-formed National Capital Union Presbytery, the largest of the seven units of the Presbyterian Synod of Virginia.

Aubrey Heflin

Mr. Heflin is a native of Fredericksburg and is a graduate of the University of Richmond, the University of Virginia Law School of Banking of Rutgers University. He began his career as an associate attorney with the Richmond law firm of Parrish, Butcher, and Parrish in 1936, and joined the staff of the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond five years later as assistant to counsel.

A U. S. Naval officer during WW II, he rejoined the bank upon his release from active duty, and was promoted to vice president and general counsel in 1953 and to first vice president in 1961. ## Class Of 1972 Ends Year With 'Bang' At Assembly

By PAM WATSON

Seniors ended their year with a bang last Wednesday night in Jarman when they presented the annual senior assembly "Cramolot."

A presentation was made first by Mr. Blasch when he announced the charter members of Phi Kappa Phi for 1973. The requirements for membership is a 3.5 average for seniors and an average of 3.7 for juniors. Those honored were:

Phi Kappa Phi Chosen

Seniors Mary Susan Adams, Cora Diane Bottoms, Mrs. Sammy Burnette, Mrs. Suzanne Carter, Mrs. Thelma Dalmas, Mrs. Sandra Gee, Donna Marie Gibson, Cynthia Nan Hudgins, Barbara Lynn McCord, Bettina Ann Moody, Janice Ann Meyers, Margaret Ruth Pulley, Barbara Jean Patterson, Cynthia Lee Tyson and Mrs. Sue Bonham.

Also honored were Juniors Patricia Diane Alley, Jeanne Brinson Davis, Nancy Lee Goodman, Gladys Ariene Green and Viola Lynn Hines.

The show began as Pat Necessary, decked out in top hat and tails, led the "choir" in their theme song - "Cramolot." The skits during the assembly depicted the events which occurred during their years as underclassmen. Some of the more humorous memories showed a freshman physical education class playing hockey. As one student recalls, I used to think hockey was a dirty word, now it's required." And then there was naive Nancy trying to sign out on the 'who, what, when, where, and how' sign out forms to go to her first fraternity party with Joe Colledge.

Priceless Comments

Interspersed between scenes, Pat Grady added such priceless comments as "Support your local book store - cash a check; Support the infirmary - eat Slater food; Support class colors - go to class and take your coloring book; Support Willett - rally at the tennis courts; or Invest in the future - buy a yearbook." "Smiley Deany" Wilson interrupted the program to make two very important announcements. She announced that the college had contacted Jeanne Dixon and that Miss Dixon has denied her prediction that there will be a mass murder at a small girls' school; and students were asked not to use Steve McQueen's credit card number to call all over the U. S.!

Other scenes included a typical rainy registration and a roof scene complete with bathing beauties and a portable swimming pool.

Cahoots Remembers

Cahoots stole the show as they began with their traditional remarks annually bestowed upon administration, fellow classmates, rules, and school organizations. This year they tried to bring back "freedom of speech as a part of democracy" by selecting some of their choice memories about Longwood and relating them as "Remember when"...

Cahoots then tapped in 14 Juniors who they felt met the stiff qualifications for membership. Those tapped were: Diane French, Bobbie Crowell, Ella Becker, Joyce Page, Eleanor Challen, Kathy Kutscher, Kathy Simmons, Susan Hudgins, Cindy Dixon, Martha Ritchie, Jody McKeever, Kady Dale, Debbie Hyatt, and Brenda Gioninni.

ARC Awards

At the conclusion of the show Dr. Gussett presented the ARC Awards to those girls who have shown outstanding work "behind the scenes" and have not been recognized by CHI or Geist. The seven girls were:

Belinda Brugh, Nell Skinner, Kay Burcher, Rosie Davis, Nancy Reynolds, Kathy Hollins and Betty Raines.

Cahoots tapped their new members at the assembly.

L C Archery Team Meets Westhampton And Wins 2294 to 2094

The Longwood College Archery Team had its third meet of the year on May 2 at Westhampton College. Longwood won the meet with a total score of 2294 points over 2094 points for Westhampton.

Wanda Wallace of Longwood took first place with a score of 488, Diane Glascock and Judy White of Westhampton tied for second place with scores of 483. Third place went to June Benninghove of Longwood with a score of 468.

The team ends its season with a 2-1.

Longwood Tennis Team Defeats WH By Score 5-0

By SHARON CURLING

Longwood's Varsity Tennis team defeated Westhampton on May 10 by a score of 5-0. Those girls playing singles were Ellen Broderick, Charlotte Fugette and Bobbie Bannin. The double teams winning were Debby Ellin-Charlotte Fugette and Brenda Blackwell-Bobbi Ellin.

During the week of May 4, 5, 6, 7, members of the team attended the Alta Malta Tennis Intercollegiate Tournament at Mary Baldwin College. Those attending were Anne Ford, Bobbi Ellin, Charlotte Fugate and Debby Ellin. All four members played both singles and doubles. Anne and Bobbi represented one doubles team and Charlotte and Debby the other. Anne and Bobbi lost their first round of single matches. However, both played very well. Bobbi split sets with a girl from U. Va. and had to finish the match the following morning. She lost the third set to give the match to U. Va. Anne played and lost to a girl from Vanderbilt, who was seeded third, Charlotte and Debby won their first singles match. Bobbi proceeded in winning her first consolation match and losing the next one. Anne, Debby and Charlotte lost their consolation matches knocking them out of the second round matches.

In doubles, Bobbi and Anne were teamed up with a third seeded team from Vanderbilt. In spite of a good show, they lost the match putting them out of competition because there are no consolation matches in doubles.

Charlotte and Debby won their round doubles by beating two girls from Va. Intermont. In the second round they were teamed up with two girls from Vanderbilt. Vanderbilt took the first set 6-1 which involved some long volleys. In the second set Longwood was ahead 5-3 and it looked like they were going to take the set. However, Vanderbilt came back and took the set and the match.

Stallins Successfully Defends Champion Title In Golf

By LOUISE MOSS

At the Virginia Intercollegiate Golf Tournament, held a May 6 and 7 at Longwood Estates, Penny Stallins successfully defended her title as champion of the tournament. The Longwood Golf Team also retained its title as State Team Champions.

The Intercollegiate Tournament is based on stroke play. Any golfer who averages 110 or less and is on the team may participate in it. Longwood's team was composed of Coach Dr. Barbara Smith, Louise Moss, Ann Santore, Becky Bailey, Penny Stallins and Lisa Dixon.

On Friday, the golfers participated in a Team Best Ball Event. In this event, two golfers team together, and the score is determined by adding the lowest score on each hole. Penny and Becky teamed together to win this event with a score of four over par 39. Louise and Ann tied for the runner-up prize but lost to the VPIU team in a playoff on Saturday.

When the tournament was over and the scores were tallied on Sunday, Penny Stallins had won the tournament for a second time with a two day total of 165. Runner-up for the tournament went to Sandi Hadaway of Roanoke College who shot a total of 177.

The Longwood golfers also received a silver dish for winning the State Team Championship. In this event, the two day totals of all the team members are added together. Longwood had the lowest total with 742. Runner-up in this event was William and Mary with an 851. For the second year in a row, Longwood's name will be inscribed on the plaque at the clubhouse as being the State Team Champions.

Dr. Smith seemed to express the feelings of all the team members when she remarked, "It's been a wonderful season. I'm extremely proud of each and every one of you and will look forward to another great season next fall."

Colleges In The News

Students Set Own Hours

WILLIAMSBURG — New standards that allow dormitory students at the College of William and Mary to set their own hours for visits by members of the opposite sex have been approved by College President Thomas Graves. In a letter to student officials last week, Dr. Graves gave students living in college residence halls "self-determination in establishing the policies, procedures and administration of visitation for that hall." The new system will go into effect in the 1972-73 academic year.

Free Tuition

RICHMOND — Dependents of full time faculty members in Virginia's state-supported institutions of higher education should be given free tuition, according to a resolution passed by the Faculty Senate of Virginia last week. The resolution was aimed at providing additional incentive and compensation for the faculties. Another resolution dealing with faculty compensation called for the governor, for state-supported schools and for the board of trustees of private institutions to see that funds appropriated for salaries of teaching research positions shall be restricted to that purpose. As a sideline to a request for a limitation on the powers of the executive committee, Dr. Patton Lockwood said the idea of State assistance to private institutions of higher learning met with antagonism at his college, a state-supported institution.

Nonresident Tuition

RICHMOND — Out-of-state college students, who recently won the right to vote where they go to school may balk at paying non-resident tuition at Virginia colleges and universities next fall, college officials fear. State-supported schools charge substantially higher tuition rates for nonresidents, and the legality of the tuition differential is under court challenge in several states. Virginia's tuition law, provides that a student must be a legal state resident for one year before he is entitled to the lower resident tuition rates. Some college administrators fear that knowledge of the legal challenges to out-of-state tuition might bring a flood of requests by students who are registered voters now because of recent Supreme Court ruling striking down residency requirements for voting. The law which is based on the economic rationale that state residents whose parents pay state taxes would have lower tuition rates than that of out-of-state students. If such tuition laws are not upheld in the federal courts, the financial impact on state-supported college and universities would be enormous college officials say.

Enrollment Increase

CPS — Enrollment in the nation's colleges and universities will increase 55% during the 1970's and will reach a record 13.3 million by the fall of 1980, the U. S. Office of Education predicted last week. The projections, were developed by the National Center for Educational Statistics and assume that recent trends in enrollment, class size, per pupil expenditures and others will continue during the coming decade.

Sign-Out Procedure Approved During Legislative Meeting

By BECKY NICHOLSON
Last week at the Legislative Board meeting, members revised the secondhand bookstore policy, approved a new sign-out procedure for dormitories, and announced the editor of the VIRGINIAN for next year.

Bookstore

There is a possibility that the secondhand bookstore will not go into effect next Fall. Mr. Harper has a clause in his bookstore contract that gives him an exclusive franchise on the sale of all textbooks — secondhand or new books. Since this legal technicality has arisen, Colonel Carr, Mr. Paul of the Business Office, and Bobbie Bannin will meet with Mr. Harper this week to discuss this clause.

Although the Legislative Board approved the draft of the secondhand bookstore, portions of the policy were revised last week. The major revision was in the "price change" procedure. Now a student may change the price of her book, but it must be changed during the first three days the center is open. The student may change the price no more than two times for any one book.

Sign Out

Last week Residence Board submitted a new sign-out system to the Legislative Board which the Board approved. This change does not concern overnight trips, and turning your card to OUT when leaving campus until curfew will still remain the same.

The new system consists of a file cabinet containing boxes marked Monday — Sunday, one marked Indefinite, and one marked Infirmary. Each box has alphabetical dividers A-Z.

In order to sign-out a student fills out a blue slip stating her destination and puts this in her envelope. Then the student signs out on the sign-out envelope. Next, she places her sign-out envelope in the box labeled the day she is to return to school. For example, if she returns on Monday, she will place her envelope in the Monday box in alphabetical order according to the initial of her last name. If for instance, the students' last name begins with "C," she places it under the "C" section, but not necessarily in alphabetical order with the rest of the sign-out envelopes already in that section. The Head Resident does not look in these boxes until curfew on the night in which the box is marked.

The sign-in procedure is similar to the old method. The student takes her card from the file box and initials it. Then she removes the blue slip and places her card back in her space on the rack.

Finally, students must inform the Head Resident if they plan to use the Indefinite or the Infirmary box. This will give the Head Resident some idea as to where or how long the girl is going to be in case of an emergency. Frazer dormitory tried this system on an experimental basis, and it was successful as far as the students and Head Residents were concerned.

Committees

It was also announced at the meeting that Publications Board elected Mary Alice Noel as the Editor for the VIRGINIAN next year. Barbara Deford became the new Business Manager.

The Infirmary Committee reported on its meeting to the Legislative Board last week, and made two proposals. First, the committee proposed that all rising juniors have a complete physical before their junior year. Internal physicals would be considered optional for students.

The second proposal was that all participants in varsity sports should be given a physical every year. The Infirmary Committee wanted to get some opinions from Legislative Board before they presented their survey in the Fall.

Graduation June 3rd; Former Governor Godwin Will Speak

By DEBBIE BASTEK
The Class of 1972 will hold its graduation exercises at 9 a.m. June 3 on Wheeler Mall. Music for the ceremonies will be provided by the 392nd Army Band from Fort Lee, as over 400 seniors graduate.

Their first program will be the presentation of the Faculty Recognition Award during the graduation ceremonies. The student selected recipient will receive a bronze medallion inscribed "In Recognition of Professional Excellence and Devoted Service to Students," along with a financial gift.

Guest speaker at this year's graduation is former governor Mills E. Godwin. He attended the College of William and Mary, and later went on to the University of Virginia for his law degree. He was a member of the House of Delegates from 1948-52, the State Senate from 1952-60, Lieutenant Governor of Virginia 1962-66, and was inaugurated as the 66th Governor of Virginia in 1966.

Wallace Shot

Gov. George Wallace of Alabama, was shot Monday as he was campaigning at a shopping center in Laurel, Md. Wallace, who was hit by four bullets, was soliciting votes for the upcoming Maryland primary. A member of the body guard, a woman campaign worker and a Secret Service agent, were also wounded. Doctors say Wallace's condition is serious but stable and they fear that he has spinal injuries with some paralysis. One man has been arrested in the shooting.

Holton

Gov. Linwood Holton has been urged by Del. Warren David of Fairfax to call a special session of the General Assembly prior to July 1 to make the possession and sale of hashish illegal. Davis said the omission of hashish from a list of contraband drugs in recently approved legislation was a small mistake which could have enormous consequences. The Virginia Association of Commonwealth's Attorneys has also urged that a special session be called.

China

Senate leaders Mike Mansfield, D-Mont., and Hugh Scott, R-Pa., returned to Washington last Sunday night from a three week visit to the People's Republic of China. Neither senator would discuss details of their trip or talks with Chinese leaders until they had reported to President Nixon.

Kennedy

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., was quoted in a Boston Globe interview last Monday as saying "People understand where my sympathies are in this election. They are with Sen. George McGovern and the position he takes." Kennedy added however, that he didn't think a preconvention endorsement of McGovern "would make any difference anyway."

Muskie

In a special interview last Wednesday night, Sen. Edmund Muskie, who has withdrawn from active participation in the preferential primaries, said that he thought Sen. McGovern would have no trouble whatsoever in gaining the Democratic nomination, provided he won in the California primary. The California primary takes place on June 6, along with four other state primaries.

Byrd

Sen. Harry F. Byrd, Jr., Ind-Va., said last Tuesday that the U. S. decision to mine the harbors of North Vietnam and interdict Russian shipping was six years late. "The President has taken a serious step. Had such action been taken six years ago - four or five years ago - the United States would have been spared many casualties and much anguish."

Primaries

In last week's Democratic preferential primaries, Sen. Hubert Humphrey was declared the winner of the West Virginia primary by a 2-to-1 margin over Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace. Sen. George McGovern did not enter the West Virginia primary, but he did defeat Sen. Humphrey in the Nebraska primary, accumulating a surprising number of votes.

He said that there has been more theft on campus in the past three weeks than any time he could remember. He also said that in the past few weeks there have been two Judicial Board cases involving suspension for theft, and that there are many pending.

"Everyone of us is going to have to do something if we're going to eliminate it entirely," he said.

"The time has passed" he said, "that we can leave a wallet or billfold sitting on a desk for a sustained period of time."

He told borrowers to be very careful and let the owner know something of hers is being borrowed.

He wished to stress the legal point that, "Any situation which involves forgery of a check or involves a banking policy is a felony under the laws of Virginia."

Civil authorities will handle any such cases, he said.

"Let's all please try to work together on this," he asked.

Teachers' Scholarship

Several changes have been made in the State Teacher's Scholarship, he announced.

Certain priorities have also been set by the state. The first is anyone who already has the scholarship, regardless of class or major. Second is that juniors and seniors should receive it. Thirdly come sophomores in certain subject areas - economics, sciences except biology, math, library science, industrial arts, special education, physical education for girls, kindergarten, primary, and elementary.

Mrs. Groneweg reminded students that the scholarship must be applied for on a yearly basis. Need is not a factor he said.

Other Topics Discussed

Other areas touched upon include the promotion of the campus police.

In reply to why two of the policemen who have been at Longwood for only four months were promoted over those who have been at Longwood for up to 12 years, Dr. Willett answered, "Time on a job is not the only thing to be considered."

He said that other factors, such as education and previous experience, are also taken into consideration.

As for the tennis courts, Dr. Willett said, "When our people come to play, they should have priority."

He said that students have the right to ask nonstudents to leave, or that they can get a campus policeman or a member of the administration to ask.

In regards to the proposed parking lot on Buffalo Street, Dr. Willett explained that it would cost $28,000 to refurbish the college-owned houses located at 300 and 302 Buffalo Street. Rather than let the houses stand unused, they would like to construct something.

One suggestion, he said, is to tear down the houses and turn the land into a mini-park.

To cut down on taking unchecked books from the library, Dr. Willett said that this summer he anticipates having only one access to the library.

To close the press conference, Dr. Willett wished to announce that the following areas are being worked on: 1. a committee for the selection of Who's Who; 2. more activities on week end; and 3. more informal sessions in the dorms similar to press conferences.

Greeks Donate Gift Landscape Funds For Stubbs Mall

By PAM WATSON

Work began last week on the relandscaping of the mall between Stubbs and Lankford. The funds for the project were given by last year's and this year's Panhellenic Council.

A gift in the amount of $500 was raised from sorority dues and Rush fines and was presented to Col. Abrams two months ago for the purpose of landscaping Stubbs Mall. Col. Abrams consulted several nurseries for estimates and Bridgeman-Tyler Nursery in Crewe was hired to complete the project.

Shrubs, hedges, and approximately 35 pine, oak, fruit, magnolia, and crepe myrtle trees will be planted within the next week. The landscaping plans that are being used are part of an overall plan for the college that have been approved by the State Art Commission and that will gradually be completed as new buildings are built and funds are raised.

According to Col. Abrams, no other organization on campus has supported any such project like this before. "Thanks and appreciation should be extended to Panhel for their hard work in raising this money."

Rescue Squad Opens New House

By JOHN D. GUTHRIE

Hampden-Sydney Correspondent
The Prince Edward Volunteer Rescue Squad is now putting the finishing touches on their new building which is located on the corner of east Third and Bridge Streets in Farmville.

The building is designed to house six ambulances. As of now, the squad owns three ambulances, costing over $10,000 each, and also a Dodge crash truck and boat trailer which together cost $20,000.

Crash Truck

The function of the crash truck and boat trailer is worthy of a word of explanation since not all rescue squads have these two pieces of auxiliary equipment.

The name "crash truck" gives some idea of its use. This vehicle is driven to the scene of any serious auto accident. It is fully equipped to answer most any need.

It has its own self-contained power plant generator system which supplies electricity to large mercury-iodide flood lamps which are fixed to the roof of the vehicle. These bright lamps will provide all the light that is needed at the scene of a night time accident.

So often you hear someone say that he or she was pinned in a car involved in a serious accident. The crash truck carries all emergency equipment designed to free a pinned victim in a wreck.

Other features that make this vehicle so versatile are its having four-wheel drive and a truck-powered winch. If, for example, a farm tractor has turned over on operator, pinning him underneath, an 'A' frame can be put into operation in three minutes so that the winch can be used, like on a wrecker, to lift the tractor off the victim.

Boat Trailer

The boat trailer is used in the event of a water accident, flood, or drowning. On the trailer there are two boats fully equipped for rescue operations, and also for dragging the bottom for a body.

It is surprising to see so much sophisticated equipment and technique in a rescue squad that was started in January, 1969. In an interview with Mr. David Meinhard, president of the Rescue Squad, he said that the rescue squad is being called more and more each year. "In 1969 we had 490 calls; in 1970 we had 570 calls, and in 1971 we had over 600 calls." He projected that the squad would answer 700 calls this year since every month so far, they have answered over 60 calls.

Expenses

Mr. Meinhard, when asked

The Rescue Squad recently acquired a new ambulance which went into service on February 1 about the expenses of operating the rescue squad, said: "We are a nonprofit volunteer organization supported by community fund drives and donations. The average cost per call, including all overhead allowances, is $35." He also showed, using last month as an example, that the average time spent on each call was 3.6 man hours, and that the average mileage per call was 34.28 miles.

The rescue squad is staffed by 30 men, each having the state-required Emergency Medical Technician's Certificate. There is a review training session held each month to keep squadmen abreast of new techniques in emergency care.

Services

Mr. Meinhard said that the services of the rescue squad are here for the asking 24 hours a day, seven days a week. He made a special point concerning college students. "So often in the past,

Alpha Sigma Tau Members Perform Volunteer Services

Members of Alpha Sigma Tau social sorority have been working throughout the college year at the Meherrin Day Care Center. They volunteered their services by fixing up the center for its opening and have contributed since with articles of clothing, toys, and other items that will come in handy.

AST also helped the Lions on White Cane Day. The new initiatives have a social service project of their own volunteering for work in the offices of the Central Virginia Tuberculosis and Respiratory Disease Association.

The Alpha Sigma Tau national convention will be held at Virginia Beach at The Cavalier, August 14-18.

when we have been called to take a Longwood student involved in an accident to the hospital, the student is generally most concerned about contacting her parents." He continued in stating that it is the hospital's responsibility to contact the college and the parents. "Rescue squad policy is that we do ask for home phone numbers and the name of parent or guardian; this is for our own confidential files and records."

Mr. Meinhard said in closing that the night-time duty personnel are in the building from 7:30 p.m. to 9:30 p.m. each night, inspecting the vehicles. "We are real proud of our equipment and new building, and we welcome all visitors at this time to see what we have."
